BRITON COOPER BUSCH. Britain, India, and the Arabs, 1914-1921. Berkeley and Los Angeles: University of California Press. 1971. Pp. ix, 522. $14.50.

Amidst the complexities of the period of World War I, the question of British policy in the Middle East during those years is surely one of the most difficult to unravel. Scholars have tended to skip over this area with a few well-worn generalities, none of them major distortions, but none sufficiently examining or explaining the reasons behind British actions. It is only in recent years that the immense body of documentation necessary for such a study has become available, and in this book Professor Busch has given us the first full-scale attempt to present a detailed picture of the evolution of British policy. He has consulted not only British governmental records in England but in India as well, and he has also used a number of collections of private papers that are of extreme importance.

Professor Busch has restricted his examination to the conflict between British authorities in London and in India. It was a peculiarity of Britain's governmental structure that the Middle East fell into two separate spheres of control, the western half under the Foreign Office in London and the eastern half under the Government of India. Busch argues that Indian intervention and influence hampered the creation of a unified British policy toward the Middle East, and he demonstrates his thesis by illustrating the conflict between India and London at a number of crucial points during the war.

On the outbreak of war, the Government of India dispatched an expeditionary force to Mesopotamia, which lay within its area of responsibility. Almost immediately Indian political officials in Mesopotamia came into conflict with their opposite numbers in Cairo who held an altogether different view of what British policy should be. In London the views of Cairo and Mesopotamia were expressed respectively by the Foreign Office and the India Office (which served as the spokesman for the Government of India); thus local opinion was transferred to a much broader scale. Professor Busch has wisely not devoted a great deal of space to the well-known aspects of the question such as the Husain-McMahon correspondence or the Sykes-Picot Agreement, but has concentrated instead on the day-to-day developments in Cairo and Mesopotamia and the increasing divergence in their views. These views emerge clearly with Cairo supporting Arab nationalism and independence (but not necessarily, as Busch notes, unity), and the Indian officials opposing this policy and preferring to rely on traditional methods taken from their experience in India. The play of personalities was of major importance since decisions were often made by those on the spot, and Busch has provided excellent vignettes of British officialdom.

One's only regret is that, in emphasizing the British side, Professor Busch has given little attention to Arab questions: the nature and content of Arab nationalism or Arab objectives in terms of independence and unity, for example. These problems are perhaps outside the scope of the present work, but they might have provided a useful counterpoint. Nevertheless Professor Busch has given us an extremely valuable study, well written and researched with admirable thoroughness. His book will go far toward illuminating a hitherto dark corner of Middle Eastern history.

LINDA C. ROSE

*Herbert H. Lehman College,
City University of New York*

NICHOLAS BALABKINS. West German Reparations to Israel. New Brunswick: Rutgers University Press. 1971. Pp. 384. $12.50.

The Luxemburg Treaty by which the Federal German Republic paid 3 billion DM to Israel and 450 million DM for the rehabilitation of Jews throughout the world is an accord without precedent. Massacres and genocide took place in the past (if not on such a vast scale), but no compensation has ever been paid to the survivors by a government that was not itself a party to such brutality. Mr. Balabkins tells his story well: he analyzes not only the painful negotiations themselves, but also the economic background against which they took place and the effect that the payments had on the German and Israeli economies. At the time of the treaty in 1952 the Federal Republic had not yet experienced its economic revival, and German financiers feared that additional foreign commitments might make it impossible to pay outstanding obligations and restore German credit abroad. German resistance to the negotiations was based upon such fears. Israel, on the other hand, was in need of the money in order to solve a deepening economic crisis due largely to the rapid absorption of some 700,000 immigrants. Nominally, at least, the payment to Israel was supposed to help defray the expenses of their settlement: eventually, the expenditure had little effect on Germany itself, for it only constituted seven per cent of the billions paid out for the lost war. Israel, however, was able to build an economic infrastructure, though military considerations and some ill-considered planning produced considerable economic waste. It is a pity that Mr. Balabkins excludes the effect of individual restitution payments from his analysis, for they seem to be a part of the general economic picture.

The book is less convincing when it assesses the continuing popular reaction to the treaty in Germany and Israel. He finds hostility or indifference, but this is based on rather narrow evidence, mostly selections from the public debates on the issue. His introduction, which attempts to give the history of German anti-Semitism and the holocaust, suffers from compression. At the present stage of research these issues cannot be profitably discussed in some twenty pages without undue dogmatism and some factual errors.

Konrad Adenauer's predominant role in the conclusion of the treaty is rightly stressed, but the praise bestowed upon him seems more deserved in the subsequent generous interpretation of the treaty at a time when, thanks to the cold war, the moral rehabilitation of the Federal Republic was no longer a political issue. Ben Gurion's realism is given its due, while one of the most important motivations for his actions is omitted. Through leading the negotiations from the start Israel could validate its claim to represent all Jews throughout the world. The book assumes the correctness of a claim that was much disputed at the time. The Germans also accepted it, to the point of showing reluctance in compensating Jews living outside Israel. Here, for reasons that remain to be explained, the German government made nearly as great a contribution to Israel's status in the world as in the treaty itself.

GEORGE L. MOSSE
University of Wisconsin,
Madison

ANCIENT

SINCLAIR HOOD. The Minoans: The Story of Bronze Age Crete. (Ancient Peoples and Places, Volume 75.) New York: Praeger Publishers. 1971. Pp. 239. $9.50.

This excellent book expresses compactly and in an extremely readable manner the growth, maturity, and final collapse of the Minoan civilization of Crete, that "first high civilization on European soil" (p. 11). Although the text of this "popular" book is relatively short (140 pages) the author, with an ability shown earlier in his Home of the Heroes: The Aegean Before the Greeks (1967), produces a rich, detailed impression of the somewhat elusive character of the Minoans through a study of their material remains and environment. The variety of in-text line drawings (numbering 131), many made expressly for the book, and the 120 clear and attractively arranged plates in the back of the book display a good cross-section of Minoan architecture, sculpture, wall painting, pottery, and seals. The captions to the plates and figures (see pp. 217-32 for the former) are especially informative, and the notes (pp. 151-63) will prove useful to students and scholars.

The author is the former director of the British School of Archaeology in Athens and is the excavator at Knossos who recently verified in large part the much debated sequence of pottery styles established previously by Sir Arthur Evans. His approach to writing combines a praiseworthy tendency to stay as close as he can to archeological fact with an intimate knowledge of recent archeological discoveries. For instance, worthy of note is his analysis of the effect that the volcanic eruption of Thera may have had on Minoan Crete, an analysis partly based on what he learned at the Thera Conference (p. 55). He proposes that the effects of a Late Minoan (LM) IA destruction, caused by the eruption, can actually be found on Crete and that the later destruction in LM IB was caused by foreign invaders, the latter a theory originally proposed by early excavators. We can place this in direct contrast to the theory of a second eruption in 1450 B.C. (the end of LM IB), most recently reiterated by Nicolas Platon, the excavator of Kato Zakros (Zakros [1971], pp. 265-320). As additional bonuses in his book Hood includes descriptions of Early Minoan II Fournou Korifi (p. 61), excavated by Peter Warren, and the palace of Kato Zakros, the latter being given the courtesy of being considered before the other palaces (p. 65). There are also up-to-date discussions of the evolution of Minoan pottery styles (pp. 35-48), of objects of foreign origin found in Minoan contexts (pp. 123-26), as well as a clear restatement of his reasons for remaining skeptical about the generally accepted decipherment of Linear B (pp. 113-15).

For those wishing a congenial, scholarly text that compresses into a short space what we know about Minoan Crete, this book deserves the highest recommendation. In this respect it supersedes R. W. Hutchinson's Prehistoric Crete (1962). The editors of Thames and Hudson should be congratulated on the format, the attractive and well-placed illustrations, and a generally flawless job of printing.

JOSEPH W. SHAW
University of Toronto

A. W. H. ADKINS. From the Many to the One: A Study of Personality and Views of Human Nature in the Context of Ancient Greek Society, Values, and Beliefs. (The Society for the Humanities, Cornell University. Studies in the Humanities.) Ithaca: Cornell University Press. 1970. Pp. xv, 311. $8.50.

To a modern age earnestly asking what is the nature of man and his good life Adkins's subtitle promises much. But this is a book for the specialist, a close concentration on the evolving semantic values of certain Greek words (for example, phusis, psuche, agatha, arete, and eudai- monia) that indicated men's values, roles, and beliefs.

Homeric heroes, responsible for small oikoi, lived in a "results culture" that judged men's worth by lineage, wealth, and ability to protect their own. Failure in these external responsibilities shamed a man, and no good intentions or personally held moral standards restored his honor. Such external sanctions over which he had no judgment or control caused a disunited personality. Later developments perpetuated this disunity. Hesiod's tale of creation brought some core of personality to men but again stressed a class society and an afterlife brightened only by this world's fame. The emerging polis was small enough that each individual's birth and political and military successes were known. Religion only precariously balanced the limitations of human nature and the demands of success. In philosophy the Sophists stressed competitive excellences even against laws and customs. Plato lauded the virtues primarily as the monopoly of the few who controlled and conditioned the passions of lesser men. Aristotle judged that the war between men's desires and intellect could be won only by training the ablest men to desire what was good. Surprisingly Adkins finds integrated personality for the first time in the Hellenistic age. The polis had imposed psychological stresses of competition; the larger Hellenistic states, by lessening individual responsibility and prestige, permitted men of all classes to find inner harmony, self-sufficiency, and satisfactions—be they only Stoic apatheia and Epicurean ataraxia.

This book is a sequel to Adkins's earlier Merit and Responsibility (1960), which uses the same word analyses to trace historical development of other concepts. Both books are part of a valuable, growing literature analyzing the meaning and significance of Greek concepts as different from our own (for instance E. R. Dodds, The Greeks and the Irrational [1951]; Bruno Snell, The Discovery of the Mind [1953]; and Helen North, Sophrosyne [1966]).

Weaknesses, however, beset Adkins's book. The stress on only certain words throws much of the period out of proportion; the length of time covered and the variety of approaches used make for superficiality. Sometimes the theme distorts the facts; Aristotle, for example, says that the state exists to aid the good life of the citizen, not the reverse. Indeed Adkins's central theme remains unproven: that man suffers personality fragmentations when seeking successes for external approval, but that the many become the one when man retreats to his own internal solace.

ELEANOR G. HUZAR

Michigan State University

CHARLES W. FORNARA. Herodotus: An Interpretative Essay. New York: Oxford University Press. 1971. Pp. 98. $5.75.

Fornara's purpose is to show how Herodotus wrote his Histories, how he developed intellectually, how the book finally reached its present form. Chapter 1, "Unitarians, Separatists, and Book II," refers to the views of his predecessors, especially Jacoby (Herodotus passed from a series of independent studies to a Persian history to the history of the Persian War), and states his own: that Herodotus began with an ethnographical interest, in book 2 ("written to instruct and entertain"), and, adjusting his intentions as he matured and so constantly revising, gradually became the historian whom we honor. This conception, which I find sensible, is not far from Jacoby's, although less rigid in that it refuses to divide the Histories into easily separable parts.

Fornara then illustrates his announced thesis. In chapter 2, "The Persian Empire," Herodotus's ethnographical concern becomes a more sophisticated interest in Persian expansion, with emphasis on motive. Chapter 3, "Herodotus and Athens," brings us to 431, when Athens and Sparta were on the verge of war; Herodotus wrote books 7-9 as he did in response to this tragic crisis. Chapter 4, "Herodotus' Perspective," contrasts the eternal relevance of Thucydides' work with the more restricted public envisioned by Herodotus, who "directed himself exclusively to his own generation" (dated, too closely, 431 B.C.). "Herodotus considered the events of his own time an unmitigated but thoroughly unavoidable disaster. It was the truth of this proposition which his Histories intended to convey" (chapter 5, "The Archidamian War"). The epilogue sums up: "Herodotus developed as he wrote and shifted his intentions as he developed." A simple "Index of Names and Subjects" and an "Index of More Important Passages" complete the book.

This study (my summary is cruelly brief) is worth reading, and Fornara makes a good case. He has read the literature, although he keeps documentation to a minimum. He is at his weakest in his references to the Athenian empire, for he suffers from the contemporary uncritical attitude to imperialism. The editing and proofreading are not perfect, and he indulges in some unfortunate usage, but I am happy to see the correct form of the adjective in the title.

MALCOLM F. MCGREGOR

University of British Columbia

JOHN TRAVLOS. Pictorial Dictionary of Ancient Athens. (German Archaeological Institute.) New York: Praeger Publishers. 1971. Pp. xvi, 590. $70.00.

John Travlos has published a superb pictorial guide to ancient Athens consistent in quality and appearance with its distinguished predecessor on Rome by Ernest Nash. The scholarship is impeccable; the photographs and drawings sharply made, beautifully printed, and aptly chosen; and the intelligent entries crisply written and thoroughly up to date. Without question, Travlos has produced a masterful reference work on the topography and monuments of the classical city that will stimulate and inform every historian, classicist, and archeologist concerned with Athens and Greek civilization.

The encomiastic tone of this review applies equally to the individual entries, eighty in number and arranged alphabetically, through which the author has surveyed the active topography of Athens from 3000 B.C. to the late Roman Empire. Every element of textual, literary, historical, and physical evidence has been used comprehensively in the presentation of all major sites (for example, Agora, "Ilissos Area," or Panathenaic Way), monuments (for instance, of the Eponymous Heroes or Lysikrates), buildings (such as Erechtheion or the Library of Hadrian), and even private houses. Each entry begins with a textual introduction and descriptive analysis that sums up the present state of knowledge and frequently contributes to its advancement, since Travlos has participated in so many important excavations and programs of archeological restoration over the years. The entry is illustrated brilliantly to reveal what survives and to suggest through reconstruction what once existed, often established in context by the incorporation of related sculptures, inscriptions, or other ancillary materials. Each entry then concludes with a complete bibliography of the greatest breadth, usefulness, and precision. Because the entries are so comprehensive and the treatment so perceptive, Travlos's book is more than a categorical compilation of data about Athens, as the author reaches toward the systematic description of the life of the city as revealed in its discrete, constituent elements. The reader who is interested by the author's brief account of the urban history of Athens (pp. 158 ff.) and impressed by the scope of his knowledge and by the sensitivity of his judgments, will be grateful for Travlos's outstanding achievement but asks him now to give us a modern history of the ancient city. The auspices are very favorable.

RICHARD BRILLIANT

Columbia University

W. ROBERT CONNOR. The New Politicians of Fifth-Century Athens. Princeton: Princeton University Press. 1971. Pp. xii, 218. $8.50.

In the fifth century B.C. a conservative Athenian leader drew his political strength from many small groups of friends. Pericles, on the contrary, put himself deliberately at a distance from such friends in order to enhance his strength with the undifferentiated Athenian mass. Cleon went a step further for the same reason. He was not really a lower-class type, as Aristophanes makes him seem, but a rich and clever man who, while he could have taken—had he wanted—a place in the world of clubs and powerful, special friends, instead explicitly repudiated the so-called best people and identified himself with the "base" (poneroi). Pericles and Cleon were innovators, but the rise of rhetoric also had a part in these changes, as it did in a decline in the power of the generalship and a lowering of the age at which men became political leaders. Friendship, however, continued to be a principal way of getting the city's business done, in a city whose political life was ubiquitously and vigorously polycentric.

This rough summary of a lively and generally convincing book omits notice of a number of fine observations that enrich it throughout. One matter, however, needs comment. There is an evocation of a successful conservative politician's career, repeated at least once in the course of the book, in which the man is made to seem to float gracefully to power and eminence on washes of luck, good family, and easy benefactions. He is withal prudent. His "heart is captivated by a woman who happens to belong to a wealthy and influential family," and he shows himself "affable, sensible, reliable" at clubby meetings of the right people. But this amiable fantasy ignores certain assumptions that should underlie speculation about Athenian political life. Men were exiled and murdered, both outside the legal system and within, for being on the wrong side. A politically ambitious benefactor had dependent friends and supporters sitting near him at meetings of the ekklesia, and they made proper noises at useful times. Successful politicians have perfect memories for favors given and received and a clear understanding of how to enforce these obligations. One might consequently have felt in a book about Athenian politics more of a sense of their cold-eyed assessments of resources and their literally murderous competitiveness. There is no question, however, that Professor Connor has made a good contribution to our understanding of ways in which power could be acquired at Athens during a time of important change.

ALAN L. BOEGEHOLD
Brown University

F. E. PETERS. The Harvest of Hellenism: A History of the Near East from Alexander the Great to the Triumph of Christianity. New York: Simon and Schuster. 1970. Pp. 800. $15.00.

The book jacket of The Harvest of Hellenism calls it "historical writing at its most ambitious." The claim (with usual allowance for the beloved American superlative) is well justified. It is certainly a most ambitious synthesis. In a single volume the author, who is professor of classics and Near Eastern studies at New York University, has attempted to deal with the whole range of cultural and historical phenomena of "Eastern Hellenism" from the death of Alexander until the late fourth century A.D.

His purview includes not only the Near East strictly speaking but also pertinent developments elsewhere in the Mediterranean area and in adjacent territories as far as India and Turkestan; not only the immediate phenomena but also their background; not only political, economic, and military events but also philosophy, religion, art, science, and literature. One is reminded that the book covers much of the ground of the last seven volumes of the Cambridge Ancient History (from which its ten line maps are borrowed). Even the mode of presentation is similar in that chapter headings, like the volume titles of the History, indicate only the leading aspect of the contents: thus "Hellenes and Jews" covers, by a natural extension, the Seleucid successor states in the East and, as a kind of digression, the history of Greek-Indian connections down to the Kushan Empire (whose history and character are described in a later chapter entitled "Classic and Baroque"). In the whole work there is not a single exact reference to textual authority, the occasional footnotes giving added bits of information or more frequently cross-reference to another section of the book. An "Informal Guide to Some Further Reading" describes briefly some books and essays grouped by topics, with the odd omissions characteristic of such surveys—von Arnim for the Stoics, for example, but not Usener for Epicureanism, and no up-to-date guide like Lesky's for Greek literature. An eighteen-page chronology, especially useful for political figures and events, is in some respects equally idiosyncratic (for instance, dates of Varro, Luccretius, the poet Gallus but no mention of Virgil, Horace, Ovid, nor the vital dates of Cicero).

Despite all the pitfalls and the criticisms to which so personal, wide-ranging, and undocumented a work is naturally exposed, it is an extraordinarily successful venture—full in its factual coverage, readable in its style, and sane and accurate in most of its interpretations, which range from such matters as the nature of the Aetolian League or literary quarrels in Alexandria to explanations of the class system and its strains in the Empire, Plotinus and his philosophy, the history of Mithraism, and the origins of Christian monasticism. In a confident and continuous narrative of this sort there are many choices to be made amidst conflicting evidence. Sometimes one would wish for less assurance, as in dating Zoroaster so exactly ("c. B.C. 628-551"), in making Plutarch simply monotheistic, in accepting Cicero's view of Nigidius Figulus as the originator of a revived Pythagoreanism, and in following exclusively Eusebius's account of the events of A.D. 310-13. More often, however, the ambiguities in our present knowledge are met by sensible weighing of the probabilities, as for the life and background of Mani (where the new papyrus evidence was not yet available to the author), or by discreet silence, as for the chronology of the life of Christ. Sometimes wrong choices are made, as in following the Historia Augusta and placing figures of Abraham and Jesus in Severus Alexander's lararium, in making transcendent eide the essential feature of Plato's philosophy, and in following a somewhat antiquated view of Posidonius. Outright blunders, such as saying that Ashoka's edicts were written in Aramaic, are remarkably rare; and there are few mechanical errors like the misprints and inconsistency of dates that dog the account of Apollonius of Perga.

For some people surely the two greatest weaknesses of the book will be reflections of its greatest strengths. First, the extraordinarily wide coverage leads to unusual compression of statement. Sometimes the result is a confusing welter, as in the pages (154-65) given to the varying fortunes of Ptolemaic and Seleucid rivalry; sometimes the exposition jumps about so much in time and place that it appears confused as well as confusing, as in the three pages (526-28) on the classes in the Empire. When one considers that the essentials of Gnosticism, for example, are described quite clearly in a single page and the history of the Greek romance in a page-and-a-half digression in a discussion of Lucian, the usual success is far more remarkable than the occasional failure. Second, the lively style may well offend those whom it does not attract. It is self-consciously "mod"—one chapter is called "Life Styles and Life Sciences"—as well as sophisticated and ironic. At worst it may appear merely puckish, as in the footnote describing Antinoöpolis as "named for the Bithynian youth after whom Hadrian sighed, in the Greek style, for some years," or in the phrase describing enforced converts to Judaism as "those recently converted at and by the end of a Hasmonaean sword." Vividness and a distinctive tone give the work life and movement, but occasionally at a price.

All in all this book is a fascinating combination of a smooth-flowing narrative and a concise encyclopedia written with concern and judgment. An expert will feel that each page could stand some qualifications or addenda, but he should welcome the high standard of presentation; a layman may well find that too much is taken for granted and feel at sea in places, but he will recognize the intellectual integrity and breadth. One might make the single general criticism that the book dwells too exclusively in the world of intellectual and literary men. Amidst the talk of rulers and philosophers and schools there is almost no use of the materials showing what common men and women felt and thought, what participation in Greek and Roman religion really involved, for example, or how men faced death. In its emphases it reflects strongly the previous work and interests of its author. But where so much has been included in a book that can be warmly recommended for its soundness and readability, it is appropriate rather to congratulate the author for his achievement and the publishers for a very well-produced volume.

ZEPH STEWART

Harvard University

GEORGES DUMÉZIL. Archaic Roman Religion. With an appendix on the religion of the Etruscans. In two volumes. Translated by PHILIP KRAPP. Foreword by MIRCEA ELIADE. Chicago: University of Chicago Press. 1970. Pp. xxx, 394; vi, 397-715. $25.00 the set.

This is a translation of the author's one-volume work, La religion romain archaïque, avec un appendice sur la religion des Étrusques (1966). After some forty years of research on the origins of Roman religion by the comparative method, Georges Dumézil treats Rome and its religion "in themselves, for themselves, as a whole." "Without surrendering the advantages of the comparative method," he here adds "the other traditional ways of knowing."

The principal thesis of Dumézil's long and distinguished scholarly labors is that early Roman religious ritual and political history are the result of the transference to the human plane of the mythology common to the peoples of the Indo-European language groups, notably the Sanskrit, Vedic, Germanic, and Celtic. He rejects the primitivist mana-numen theory of Herbert J. Rose et al. and the "pontifical revolution" of Kurt Latte. The archaic triad, Jupiter-Mars-Quirinus, and their counterparts in the three Grabouic deities among the Umbrians at Iguvium find their correspondents in the Vedic Mitra-Varuna-Indra-Nasatya and Scandinavian Odinn-Thorr-Freyr triads. This religious structure divides the domain of life into the functional spheres of sovereignty, physical power, fertility, and prosperity. The origin and significance of the Capitoline Triad, Jupiter-Juno-Minerva "constitute a problem for which, in the present state of our knowledge, it is not possible to provide a final solution" (p. 291).

The basic thesis is outlined in part 1, the preliminary remarks. Part 2 deals with ancient theology and closes volume 1. In volume 2, part 3 discusses the extensions and mutations experienced by Roman religion, notably under the influence of foreign religions. Part 4 on the cults, sacra publica et privata, is followed by an appendix, "The Religion of the Etruscans," which has "enriched the structure of Roman religion without dislocating it."

For the historian the principal question that Dumézil's work poses is whether the accounts of the most ancient period are exclusively Indo-European myths transformed into history. Accepting the parallelisms—the war of Romulus and Tatius and the conflict of Aesir and Vanir in Scandinavian lore (pp. 66–75), Romulus and Remus and the divine twins of Indian mythology (pp. 252–55), and many others—is it possible to distinguish persons and events that have a certain historical value, as Mommsen does, in the legends that for him are projections into the past of names and events of early history? Does Dumézil leave any place for the historian in the earliest period of Rome when he writes (p. 252) that "the accounts of the earliest period of Rome are in large part humanized and historicized mythology"? (italics mine).

O. W. REINMUTH
University of Texas

JOACHIM SZIDAT. Caesars diplomatische Tätigkeit im Gallischen Krieg. (Historia: Einzelschriften Number 14.) Wiesbaden: Franz Steiner Verlag GmbH. 1970. Pp. 162. DM 28.

This book studies a neglected aspect of Caesar's Gallic campaigns, namely his diplomatic contacts with the various tribes and the manner in which these are presented to the reader. Only at the beginning and the end is the wider question of the trustworthiness of Caesar's narrative briefly raised, and here, after presenting a useful summary of views, the author steers a middle course, admitting the likelihood of bias for political ends, but stressing the extent to which actual misrepresentation would be limited by the existence of reports to the senate and those of numerous eyewitnesses.

Szidat systematically describes and analyzes all Caesar's accounts of diplomatic activity. The space allotted to dealings with the Helvetii, the Aedui, and Ariovistus reflects the emphasis Caesar himself gives to his first year in Gaul. Having presented his early diplomacy in extended form to set the tone, Caesar could thereafter be briefer: more important, it was crucial to represent the dubious actions of 58 B.C. in a favorable light. The arguments Caesar gives to Gauls and Germans are not always the same as he gives his readers, but Szidat shows that he was at pains to follow correct protocol, especially with Ariovistus, who, as friend and ally of the Roman people, presented a tricky problem: only when the latter had shown himself an arrogant barbarian who was impossible to deal with diplomatically did Caesar resort to armed force. The rest of Caesar's diplomacy broadly follows the lines initially laid down, and he is careful to show that the feckless legate Sabinus, victim of Ambiorix's ruses, failed to follow the proper practices in parleying with the foe.

Caesar's choice of material and his manner of literary representation are considered next, and the various typical arguments enumerated, the commonest being the duty of Rome to her allies (as interpreted by Caesar). One interesting general feature of Caesar's diplomacy is his close observance of traditional Roman customs, though never to the point of inflexibility: while emulating the eastern conquests of Pompey, Caesar wished to appear more truly in the Roman mold than his rival.

This useful piece of writing is of interest to students both of ancient diplomacy and of Caesar. Its main flaw is the lack of a wider, more imaginative approach: one is left with the suspicion that Caesar has once again outwitted his commentators.

E. M. WIGHTMAN
McMaster University

A. H. M. JONES. Augustus. (Ancient Culture and Society.) New York: W. W. Norton and Company. 1970. Pp. xi, 196. $6.00.

This is the fifth in the Ancient Culture and Society series. It is an excellent study for anyone wishing to learn about current scholarly opinion concerning Augustus and his age. The powers of the author in synthesizing vast amounts of information into a small book are positively Thucydidean.

After a very full and satisfactory survey of Augustus's life there are special chapters on the Augustan constitution, magistrates, senate, provinces, armed forces, finance, justice, social and religious policies, and literature and art. In an important final chapter the author carefully analyzes the ancient sources and concludes that the best full-length ancient account of Augustus's reign is found in Cassius Dio's History of Rome.

The work abounds in revealing insights. We learn that Augustus's power rested not on the nobles but on the lesser senators and the upper stratum of Equestrians. Velleius is cited to show that Egyptian revenues after Actium went directly into the Aerarium; thus Egypt was not a part of Augustus's household as some have inferred from remarks of Tacitus. More startling perhaps is the author's insistence that the standards of Augustus's provincial administration probably did not improve much on those of the Republic and that businessmen and financiers were always a minority in the Equestrian order: later under Augustus the equestres became a class of landed gentry.

Clearly Jones suggests a more favorable view of Augustus than did Syme in his Roman Revolution of 1939. But Jones uses the numismatic evidence very sparingly and does not seem to attach much significance to Augustan propaganda and the "selling of the principate." Despite the great Augustan achievement outlined here one is still suspicious that the price paid in freedom for the Augustan settlement by the Roman educated classes was much too high for Rome's future.

JAMES E. SEAVER
University of Kansas

SIR RONALD SYME. Emperors and Biography: Studies in the Historia Augusta. New York: Oxford University Press. 1971. Pp. vii, 306. $10.50.

With this volume, and with its recent predecessor, Ammianus and the Historia Augusta (1968), Sir Ronald Syme has made himself in just three years the leading authority in a controversy now more than eighty years old. No one but Ernst Hohl, the longtime proprietor of the Historia Augusta (HA) debate, has done so much to expose the personality of these round-heeled, winking biographies of second- and third-century emperors. Syme writes not to orient the uninitiated or the neutral, but as a partisan promoting controversy. Yet these two books are the most comprehensive guide to the HA that now exists. He has pronounced himself on virtually every problem—authorship, date, purpose, sources, and authenticity—and in so doing he has expertly arraigned and shaken out the several bibliographies that cluster around the text. At the same time he has investigated a number of more narrowly defined topics to which he is the first or largest contributor.

The eighteen essays of Emperors and Biography lead in many directions. Some continue and enlarge upon themes of the earlier book. Syme urges that researchers take a fresh start by recognizing the HA as a production unified by characteristic usages and structure. And with the admiration of one professional for another's knowing satirization of their discipline, he again calls attention to the perverse accomplishments of the writer responsible for the HA. In several chapters he attempts to deduce the character of certain sources employed in the earlier lives, the lost Marius Maximus and two postulated works, one a series of biographies, the other an extensive epitome; his exposition entails a skillful dissection of the biographies of Hadrian, Pius, Verus, and Macrinus. Seven of these studies are spent in an effort to transcend the suave harlotations of the HA. Attending to the heuristic categories that underlie all his work—strategic roads and lands, the origins and careers of persons, marital alliances and factions—Syme recovers portions, though miserably small portions, of the true history of the emperors from Severus Alexander to Diocletian. There are still other essays that escape this enumeration. Among them are two of the best in the book, an investigation of the patterns by which personal names have been faked and an exposé of the procedures by which the biographer concocted the first five lives of pretenders and heirs apparent.

The book is not so elegantly structured as Syme's earliest works. The essays overlap, though to some extent necessarily; it is a more serious objection that in some cases the component parts of an ideally coherent argument emerge in different connections through the book. These disadvantages, together with the restriction of the index to an index nominum and the choice of chapter titles that do little to disclose the breadth of topics treated in each study, make a valuable series of explorations less accessible than they should be.

PETER WHITE

University of Chicago

JOHN FERGUSON. The Religions of the Roman Empire. (Aspects of Greek and Roman Life.) Ithaca: Cornell University Press. 1970. Pp. 296. $8.50.

No proper understanding of life in the Roman Empire is really possible without some knowledge of the bewildering number of religions and religious philosophies that dominated the Roman scene from the first to the fourth centuries A.D. John Ferguson, whose decade of experience in Nigeria provided him with remarkable first-hand experience not only in exploration of the Roman Empire but also in comparative study of African religions with Roman religions, was motivated to write a new book that would supplement and update T. R. Glover's The Conflict of Religions in the Early Roman Empire (1920). Ferguson has gone beyond the literary evidence, which was Glover's principal focus, and made extensive use of the archeological evidence of the last half century in order to show how these various religions arose, conflicted, and sometimes fused with the traditional religions of Greece, Rome, and the northern countries and also how they interacted with Judaism and Christianity. Particularly noteworthy are examples generously drawn from British classical archeology to provide support for some of Professor Ferguson's observations.

The concentration of The Religions of the Roman Empire is on the third century, but the author does not limit himself to this century chronologically. He sweeps widely over a great deal of ground that the historian of religions would probably wish to have examined more slowly and more generously. Such topics as the Great Mother, the Sky Father, the Sun-God, divine functionaries, Tyche, the sacred figure of the emperor, personal religion, the afterlife, divination of the future, shamans and shams, philosophers and the gods, and syncretism and confrontation are brought before the reader with dazzling rapidity and forceful erudition and are backed up by a formidable chapter-by-chapter bibliography and notes and appropriately illustrated from the archeological evidence. We do not get in this book a theologically or religiously profound, synthetic view of the great variety of religions that permeated the Roman world but rather a kind of historical catalog or encyclopedic exposure to a great number of religious, semireligious, and even pseudoreligious phenomena that were important and are quite interesting. Almost any section of this book could be read independently and the astute student will perhaps wish the book had some kind of unity. The style is direct enough but this is hardly the kind of book that makes for smooth, uninterrupted reading.

Still, even though The Religions of the Roman Empire is not comparable to the work of an A. D. Nock, a Martin P. Nilsson, or an A. J. Festugière, it is competent, necessary, and welcome. Students of ancient history should especially consult it.

JOHN E. REXINE

Colgate University

JAROSLAV PELIKAN. The Christian Tradition: A History of the Development of Doctrine. Volume 1, The Emergence of the Catholic Tradition (100-600). Chicago: University of Chicago Press. 1971. Pp. xxiii, 394. $15.00.

This is the first of a projected five volumes that will present a history of the development of Christian doctrine from about A.D. 100 to the twentieth century. The author, who is professor of religious studies at Yale University, has undertaken the task with the special intention of providing a comprehensive history of the development of "what the Christian church believed, taught, and confessed." The analysis of the theological factors forms the sole purpose of the study, in contrast to other methods of exposition in which nontheological influences, such as political history, may tend to distract attention from the evolution of essential doctrine. The work is based on the primary sources, cited here in translation, and is addressed both to students of theology and church history and to students of intellectual history who are concerned with the influential ideas contained in Christian doctrine. Two of the author's preceding works, Development of Christian Doctrine: Some Historical Prolegomena (1969) and Historical Theology: Continuity and Change in Christian Doctrine (1971), provide the historical background for the present study and show the methodological assumptions on which the work is based (p. 361).

This volume will be of value to historians who are concerned to understand the doctrinal results of the activity of the church in the Greco-Roman world; the succeeding volumes may be expected to render like service. The writer's learning and his gift of clear exposition are evident on every page. Beginning with an account of the religious and intellectual background of the period of the origin of the church, Professor Pelikan treats systematically its sources of faith, the mystery of the Trinity, the person of the God-man, and nature and grace; and he closes with a summary of the achievement in the sixth century of what he terms "an orthodox consensus about what was to be regarded as normative" in doctrine (p. 332).

Scholars and students will welcome the present volume and look forward to those that are to follow.

GLANVILLE DOWNEY
Indiana University,
Bloomington

FRANK M. CLOVER. Flavius Merobaudes: A Translation and Historical Commentary. (Transactions of the American Philosophical Society,

New Series, Volume 61, Part 1.) Philadelphia: the Society. 1971. Pp. 78. $3.00.

Interest in late Roman panegyrists as sources for the history of their times has quickened in recent years. The best of them, Claudian, has been the subject of perceptive study. Now a lesser figure, the fifth-century poet Flavius Merobaudes, receives the attention of a monograph, which presents for the first time an English prose translation of, and a historical commentary on, the extant fragments of his work. An appendix includes the complete Latin text (without apparatus) as established by Vollmer.

Clover is obviously at home in his period, and his familiarity with the ancient sources and modern literature concerning Merobaudes is exemplary. He has produced a study, which, within limits, can be read profitably by historians of late antiquity. His translation conveys the sense of Merobaudes' allusive style and will be a serviceable aid to scholarship. The author has also reinterpreted the significance and dating of Merobaudes' panegyrics, but his new views will result in only minor changes in our conception of the period. Thus, he argues convincingly (pp. 32-41) that Panegyric I is not, as commonly supposed, a laudatio in honor of the general Aetius and composed in 437, but rather a gratiarum actio datable to 443-46. The author is aware of the difficulties inherent in drawing historical conclusions from a genre of literature that combines propaganda and poetic fancy. On this point the reader should consult Alan Cameron's Claudian: Poetry and Propaganda at the Court of Honorius (1970), which was published too recently for Clover to cite.

WILLIAM G. SINNIGEN
Hunter College,
City College of New York

MEDIEVAL

IOLE MAZZOLENI. Paleografia e diplomazia e scienze ausiliarie. Naples: Libreria Scientifica Editrice. 1970. Pp. 474, 53 plates. L. 10,000.

Full-fledged treatment of all of the medievalist's traditional auxiliary sciences within the covers of a single volume is an idea that has been somewhat out of fashion. The present volume, a revision of the author's Lezioni di

Paleografia e Diplomatica (1964), partially resurrects the old idea and in doing so shows that there were some good, if not conclusive, reasons for its earlier interment. Studies on each of these sciences have so proliferated that it is very difficult for any one scholar to keep up to date on all of them, and, even if he could, it would be almost impossible to compress his knowledge within a single manageable volume. Professor Mazzoleni has made a valiant and in some respects an admirable effort, but she has not entirely succeeded in overcoming the difficulties, even by having other specialists contribute brief and useful chapters on heraldry (Ferdinando Acton di Leporano), numismatics (Giovanni Bovi), weights and measures (Catello Salvati), and sigillography (Antonio Allocati), as well as a chapter on transcribing documents (Luigi Pescatore). The treatment accorded to paleography and diplomatics touches on all phases of these subjects. With respect to paleography, on which I prefer to concentrate, the generous attention paid to the often-neglected documentary scripts is particularly welcome. The author maintains an independent approach, but for the most part she follows the lead of Luigi Schiaparelli, Giulio Battelli, or Giorgio Cencetti. Although the work of these masters is inevitably aging and although the author makes some new contributions, her work does not replace either Battelli's Lezioni di Paleografia (3d ed., 1949) or Cencetti's Lineamenti di Storia della Scrittura Latina (1954). For an introductory survey, too much space is devoted to recounting past controversies, while important current views are completely neglected, for example, Bernhard Bischoff's opinions on the development of Caroline minuscule. Mention is made of the theories of Jean Mallon on the scripts of the Roman epoch, but neither his nor Robert Marichal's views are dealt with in adequate fashion. And a disproportionate amount of space is accorded to Italian, particularly south Italian, materials at the expense of other deserving subjects. Punctuation, for example, is dispatched in one page. In the bibliographies appended to each chapter even experts may find materials of whose existence they were unaware, but they will also be surprised by what is overlooked and dismayed by the number of works cited incorrectly.

Somewhat ironically, one of the features that detracts from the book's usefulness as a general introduction to the auxiliary sciences, namely its overemphasis on materials from Italy, turns out to constitute its special value. Any scholar interested in the medieval manuscripts and documents from this region will find here many rewards. The numerous plates in the volume, although many are unfortunately of very poor quality, will be welcomed for the same reason. They reproduce a large number of Italian documentary and humanistic scripts. Also welcome are the transcriptions provided for most of the facsimiles.

JAMES J. JOHN
Cornell University

JAMES A. BRUNDAGE. Medieval Canon Law and the Crusader. Madison: University of Wisconsin Press. 1969. Pp. xx, 244. $12.50.

Professor Brundage's stated purpose is to provide "a study of the crusades as a canonistic institution." What he has actually written is an important volume on a narrower topic, the crusader's vow and the web of privileges, spiritual and temporal, that it entailed. The most important legal question involving the crusader, the justice of the war in which he engaged—an important question in the canonistic literature—is not discussed in any detail.

Following Michel Villey, Brundage argues that "the mechanism of the vow made it possible for the Church to turn this enthusiasm [for the crusade] into a binding commitment" so that after the initial fervor evaporated a system of legally binding sanctions could be applied to the laggard. Brundage's major contribution is to describe in detail the development of canonistic thinking on the vow and what it entailed. Where Villey argued that crusade legislation was a new development within canon law to meet a new situation, Brundage is able to show clearly that in fact the canonists were adapting old regulations concerning pilgrims to meet the special needs of a special kind of pilgrim, a pilgrim bound also to engage in a holy war. Furthermore, he has benefited from a generation of interest in medieval canon law so that where Villey spoke of the legal status of the crusader in general terms, Brundage is able to cite a number of specific legal points concerning the vow and the opinions of the lawyers on these points. Where Villey had a small amount of canonistic material available to him, Brundage's bibliography contains six pages of printed and manuscript canonistic materials.

Finally, Brundage raises an interesting question about the canonists that deserves further study. Why, so far as we know, did no canonist write a full-length treatise on the crusade? So important a subject should have elicited a thorough treatment and, as he notes, Hostiensis, among others, mentioned the lack, but no one seems to have remedied it. Although Professor Brundage has not considered all the aspects of the crusader's status in canon law, he has paved the way for future studies in this model study.

JAMES MULDOON
Rutgers University,
Camden

CHARLES T. WOOD. The Age of Chivalry: Manners and Morals, 1000-1450. New York: Universe Books. 1970. Pp. 175. $10.00.

RICHARD BARBER. The Knight & Chivalry. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. 1970. Pp. x, 383. $12.50.

Despite the similarity of titles, these two books have little in common in their subject matter. They are both, however, written for the general reader or beginning student and share a certain amateurishness of approach—this in spite of the fact that Dr. Wood is the author of other highly professional books. While almost entirely lacking in originality, they will serve a highly useful purpose. Dr. Wood's book is an excellent introduction to social life in the high and later Middle Ages, while Mr. Barber has brought together material on chivalry hitherto only available in various monographs.

Dr. Wood's study of life and manners in the period 900-1450 is very readable. Economic and social relationships are his chief concern as he sets forth his views on the peasantry, the nobles, and the Church in three principal periods. These views tend to be traditional (that is, in the scholarly world) and at times would be considered outmoded by many. Curiously, although his specialized work has been on thirteenth-century themes, his opening pages on "The World of the Millennium" are perhaps the best. Of course he disposes of the notion that Europe awaited the year 1000 A.D. in terrified anticipation. His section on the "High Middle Ages" is adequate if uninspired. Most readers will be very hesitant to accept his gloomy view of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries as set forth in his epilogue. There are signs of haste here, and the overall picture of dire calamity and collapse is unacceptable—at least to me. Apt if conventional quotations and illustrations help the book along. Altogether a book well worth putting in the hands of a beginning student or an interested friend.

Mr. Barber's work is also a piece of generalized popularization. Here chivalry is the core of the book. By taking a more restricted topic than Dr. Wood he is able to assemble a mass of information that is simply unavailable in any other single volume, at least in English. A much bigger, more scholarly work is needed in this field. Yet in trying to bring together the literary tradition of chivalry and the practice of knighthood in a single volume, Mr. Barber has done yeoman service. There is a total absence of the gushing sentimentality and the acid skepticism that has marred so many writings on similar themes. Yet one is brought up short by such assertions as that knights draw their ideas of love from the romances. Such failures of insight could be cited many times over. But no one else has hitherto brought together the themes of military knighthood, knightly tenure, romance, chivalric orders, and the idea of the crusade. Mr. Barber may blur the lines between fact and fantasy at times, but it will take a formidable scholar to get the whole thing right. In the meantime his book is far the best yet written for the student who is interested in the codes, conduct, and imaginings of medieval knights.

MICHAEL R. POWICKE
University of Toronto

HILARY L. TURNER. Town Defences in England and Wales: An Architectural and Documentary Study, AD 900-1500. [Hamden, Conn.: Archon Books. 1971. Pp. 246. $9.00.

Miss Turner has aimed her book at dating surviving defenses, analyzing why they were built, how they were paid for, and what uses they served. Dividing her treatment of the subject into six all-too-short chapters, she uses some eighty pages to examine the historical context in which town wall building arose. The major part of the book is devoted to a gazetteer listing walled towns from seven sections of England and Wales.

The author must have had great fun visiting her sites, although envious beginners should know of dangers as well as joys—nettles flourish around ancient walls. A major nettle in architectural history seems to be linearity, the description of points along a wall. Towers of so-many feet (meters) in diameter are connected by curtain walls so-many feet (meters) long with mural bastions at intervals of so-many feet (meters). Miss Turner rounds her linearity with historical chapters in which she attempts to answer the questions that arise out of centuries of town wall building. But over a period of six hundred years, 900–1500, the treatment is necessarily thin. Conway and Caernarvon, for example, were military units in the Welsh wars of Edward I, as well as towns. Their form, siting, construction, and original planting reflected the needs for security, advance base depots, and supply that Edward met in his conquest of Wales. Berwick, unlike Conway and Caernarvon, has not been treated in detail. Its fortifications were indeed begun before 1313 (p. 78), as the documents describe. In fact Edward started on them immediately after his forces stormed Berwick's earthworks in 1296. These new fortifications protected a reformed town that became the major port and advance base depot for Edward's Scottish wars. Similar considerations could be made for Carlisle and perhaps nearly as much for other towns.

This book raises the question of whether the history of building, to be made fully useful, requires structures to be placed as parts of a wider framework than themselves. Miss Turner has range and sweep to her book, certainly; what is wanting are the circumstances underlying the construction and maintenance of those walls. She applies her historical imagination admirably in analyzing details of construction. Some parts of the book provide information not to be found elsewhere, and her long gazetteer sections on such towns as Newcastle, Yarmouth, and Tenby are invaluable. Overall, it is a useful survey.

A. Z. FREEMAN

College of William and Mary

ELISABETH G. KIMBALL, editor. Records of Some Sessions of the Peace in the City of Lincoln, 1351–1354, and the Borough of Stamford, 1351. (Publications of the Lincoln Record Society, Volume 65.) Lincoln: J. W. Ruddock and Sons, for the Society. 1971. Pp. xxx, 67. £4.00.

This Peace Roll concerns history, law, and genealogy, and it is the sixth such volume that Elisabeth Kimball has edited. Her professional skill makes it a model of economy, for instead of translating each Latin entry verbatim, she gives a neat, compact précis of its main points. An illuminating introduction describes the way the courts did their business, how the clerks put the rolls together from notes taken in court on scraps of parchment (as were the early Year Books), the qualifications of the justices, and the dates (outside the law terms) of the sessions. The cases are common felonies and a variety of trespasses by wrongdoers called "common malefactors," "disturbers of the peace," "nightwalkers," and "night peepers through doors and windows." The penalties imposed, from fines to hanging, seem disproportionate to the offenses and to one another but perhaps not to the convict's status or repute. For the genealogist, there are many names and next of kin (well indexed), but his clients may not like to learn about their Lincoln progenitors' crimes and punishments. Clearly, Elisabeth Kimball has succeeded to Bertha Putnam's position as scholarly authority on medieval crime and justice in shire and city.

WILLIAM HUSE DUNHAM, JR.
Yale University

YVES RENOUD. The Avignon Papacy, 1305–1403. Translated by DENIS BETHELL. [Hamden, Conn.:] Archon Books. 1970. Pp. 157. $7.50.

With the English translation in 1963 of G. Mollat's standard work The Popes at Avignon 1305–1378 and with the appearance in the last decade or so of a number of major studies (e.g., by Zacour, Guillemin, Favier, and Esch) that both demand and permit the construction of a new synthesis, Renouard's compendium seems rather out of date. Originally a modest and cheap little paperback in the Que sais-je? series (1954), it now appears in English as an expensive hardback, aimed at "pupils who do not read French" and who, presumably, do not have enough time to read Mollat. In any case the book exists, and we must now consider its merits. First, Renouard, unlike Mollat, covered the Avignon popes of the Schism (at least until 1403), and rightly—even though the translator has imposed his personal belief that Clement VII and Benedict XIII were antipopes by putting their names in single quotes. Second, since Renouard had no interest in Mollat's apologetic intention to refute the idea that France dominated the Avignon papacy, he could give due emphasis to more important matters—like the geopolitical significance of Avignon in relation to papal concern with France, England, and the North generally, the remarkable effect of the papal stay in making Avignon a major economic center of the South, the cultural importance of the papal court, and the alleged relationship between the institutionalization of papal government and the insensitivity of the Church to the vital spiritual currents of the time. Everything is too brief, and sometimes what seems to be novelty is merely a manipulation of stereotyped categories of late-medieval history (such as the nation-state, secularization, or humanism), but often enough Renouard's socioeconomic orientation suggests the lines along which the new synthesis will probably emerge. If, as suggested above, his book is out of date, it is also prophetic. It has the quota of errors and bad generalizations usual in such works, and the translator has noted two or three of them; he has also, more conscientiously, provided an up-to-date bibliography.

HOWARD KAMINSKY
University of Washington

MICHAEL JONES. Ducal Brittany, 1364-1399: Relations with England and France during the Reign of Duke John IV. (Oxford Historical Monographs.) New York: Oxford University Press. 1970. Pp. xxi, 250. $11.25.

In the middle of the fourteenth century John de Montfort, nephew of the late Duke John III of Brittany, and Joan de Penthievre, niece of the same duke, engaged in civil war over succession to the duchy. With the defeat and death of Joan's husband in 1364 Charles V of France recognized Montfort, who became Duke John IV. Brought up at the court of Edward III who gave him indispensable aid in the civil war, John was caught for the remainder of his life between the French king, who expected him to be either a faithful vassal or a neutral magnate, and the English king, who required grateful compensation for past assistance and cooperation in his dynastic struggle against France. The Hundred Years' War contributed much significance and complexity to this topic.

This is not, therefore, a social and economic history of a French province, as a first glance at the title may lead some to infer. The subtitle suggests the content of the book, for it is a study in medieval diplomacy and political relationships, a closely argued thesis that John IV of Brittany did not wish to side with either his English patron or his French lord but to establish and maintain an autonomous duchy. In the process, Mr. Jones disputes and seeks to revise the opinions of La Borderie, Pocquet du Haut-Jussé, and Planiol, who insisted that John's household was an English fifth column in France and that the duke himself was politically inept and an Anglophile for most of his life. So persistently does the author defend his thesis that a chapter on ducal government is not a study of bureaucracy and administration but a demonstration that John's council was not dominated by Englishmen and that his governmental organization was not inspired by English procedures but was modeled on, or similar to, that of other French duchies.

The English honor of Richmond and the Breton nobility were important factors in John's maneuvering with the two monarchs. Perhaps if John could have divested himself of the desire or need for the former, his search for independence would have been easier. While the author recognizes the Breton seigneurs as an influence in the duke's policy, they may well have been the most important, and the duke's inability to secure and retain their support may have been his greatest failure. One wishes that Mr. Jones had given more detailed treatment to this group. And genealogical tables would have been helpful in a study that concerns ducal dynasties.

FRANKLIN J. PEGUES
Ohio State University

SALVATORE TRAMONTANA. I Normanni in Italia: Linee di ricerca sui primi insediamenti. Volume 1, Aspetti politici e militari. (Università degli Studi di Messina, Facoltà di Magistero. Pubblicazioni dell'Istituto di Storia "Vittorio de Caprariis," Number 2.) Messina: Peloritana Editrice. 1970. Pp. 215. L. 4,000.

This study represents the first of a series of volumes that the author is projecting dealing with the establishment of a Norman Kingdom of Two Sicilies in southern Italy. It covers in four chapters the period down to 1046 when the three Norman principalities had appeared there. The first chapter deals with southern Italy on the eve of the Norman arrival in the late tenth century. The second summarizes the Normans' Scandinavian past and their establishment in Normandy itself. The third tells of Viking incursions that reached Italy and the first contacts of Normans with the region. The fourth is a detailed political study of their establishment in this part of Italy down to 1046. Extensive use is made throughout of Italian, Western European, and Byzantine sources that mention Scandinavian Viking and later Norman contacts and activities in southern Italy during the period covered. These sources are critically examined and the information they contain correlated to produce a coherent story.

Unfortunately this book suffers from two major deficiencies. In the first place the author wrongly assumes more relationship between the Normans and a Scandinavian past than he has any right to do. By the time the Normans arrived in southern Italy they were Norman French in language, culture, and military and political organization. Except for vague memories the Normans had no links with their Scandinavian ancestral home or with earlier Viking expeditions into the Mediterranean.

Second, the narrative the author presents is lacking in any understanding of the military realities of the time. We find nothing about fortresses and no sense of how the Byzantines organized their southern Italian lands with which Helene Ahrweiler and others have dealt extensively. We learn nothing about how Lombard dukes prepared themselves and their realms for war and no understanding of the way Norman military forces were able to operate. One misses the insights of David Douglas's Norman Achievement (1969) or what Whaley has told us of their military practices on the southern Italian scene after 1060. In short the historian is advised to look elsewhere for a coherent explanation of the political and military side of the first Norman establishment in this part of Europe.

ARCHIBALD R. LEWIS
University of Massachusetts,
Amherst

GIOACCHINO VOLPE. Studi sulle istituzioni comunali a Pisa: Città e contado, consoli e podestà, secoli XII-XIII. New edition with an introduction by CINZIO VIOLANTE. (Biblioteca storica Sansoni, New Series, Number 48.) [Florence:] G. C. Sansoni Editore. 1970. Pp. lxvii, 523. L. 6,000.

Late in 1971, having long passed his ninetieth birthday, Gioacchino Volpe died. His influence on medieval Italian historiography has remained remarkably strong, particularly if one considers that his last monograph dealing with medieval history was published in 1913. In the course of the past decade many of his works have been reprinted. First published in 1902, his Studi sulle istituzioni comunali a Pisa, one of the earliest and weightier of his monographs, presented Volpe's long-debated theories regarding the origins of the Italian communes and the social composition of the Italian urban elites during the communal and late medieval periods. In the course of the past thirty or more years many of Volpe's ideas—those dealing with the general process by which urban centers grew in Italy, as well as those concerned more directly with Pisan history—have been subjected to a series of often damaging criticisms. The work of Ottokar, Sestan, Cristiani, and Herlihy make it possible for us to examine the historical questions that Volpe addressed from a more interesting perspective and to reach subtler and more satisfactory conclusions about the course of Italian history.

But one of the real gifts of Gioacchino Volpe, an attribute that Cinzio Violante rightly stresses in his sympathetic and judicious introduction to the reprint of this work, was Volpe's concern with capturing the dynamism of history, his attempt to penetrate behind the façade of things, and by drawing together a variety of disparate factors to write what today we describe as histoire totale. For this reason, even seventy years after its first publication, a rereading of this work can still prove instructive to students of medieval history.

ANTHONY MOLHO
Brown University

ARMANDO SAPORI, editor. Libro Giallo della Compagnia dei Covoni. With a study by GIULIO MANDICH. (Pubblicazioni della Direzione degli "Studi Medievali," Number 4.) Milan: Istituto Editoriale Cisalpino. 1970. Pp. ccxxiii, 381. L. 35,000.

Among the mercantile families of Florence in the trecento, the Covoni were of middling importance. The Libro Giallo is an account book that records their operations, chiefly transfers of funds between Florence and Venice or Padua, over the years 1336 to 1340. Armando Saponi, to whom we owe the publication of several similar accounts, has given the Libro Giallo a truly magnificent edition. Saponi himself provides a historical introduction to the Covoni family, and Giulio Mandich contributes a long and technical analysis of the varied transactions recorded in the book. Brief biographies of all Covoni who appear in the accounts, family trees, and a thorough analytical index add to the utility of the edition. This type of source will probably most fruitfully be used in conjunction with the other extant account books of the period, as together they provide a unique insight into the commerce and commercial practices of Florentine banks in the fourteenth century.

DAVID HERLIHY
University of Wisconsin,
Madison

Dumbarton Oaks Papers. Numbers 23 and 24. Washington: Dumbarton Oaks Center for Byzantine Studies, Trustees for Harvard University; distrib. by J. J. Augustin, Publisher, Locust Valley, N. Y. 1969-1970. Pp. xiii, 393. $15.00.

The latest Dumbarton Oaks Papers, a double number for the price of one, is of excellent value. From the 1967 symposium on Justinian and Eastern Christendom (largely published in Dumbarton Oaks Papers, 22 [1968]) comes an intriguing paper by Professor Antoine Guillaumont on imperial dealings with the Persian Nestorians, who have been somewhat overlooked in considerations of Justinian's often ham-handed religious policies. Guillaumont publishes a supposed dialogue between the emperor and Paul, the Nestorian bishop of Nisibis (in BM Add. MS 14535), from a Syrian Monophysite source, apparently dating from after 561. Information on the actual beliefs of the Nestorians is rare and the document is therefore of great interest, but it should surely not be regarded as an actual procès-verbal, any more than are the published discussions between Manuel II Palaiologos and a Muslim teacher. Dr. Averil Cameron's paper on Agathias's two excursuses on the Sasanians also falls into the scope of the 1967 symposium. Virtually no Sasanian literature survives, but the royal annals can be partly reconstructed from later Persian and Arab sources. The most direct and contemporary source for the tradition, however, is in Agathias, and Dr. Cameron's substantial contribution skillfully demonstrates how far the Byzantine chronicler can be relied upon for it.

The 1968 symposium, from which three papers are included, was on after the fall of Constantinople. Professor Halil Inalcik brings much recently available Ottoman material to bear on his study of Mehmed II's treatment of the Greeks of Istanbul. The traditional view of a policy to favor the Greeks and repopulate the city is largely substantiated, although in 1477, Istanbul and Galata numbered only 3,743 Greek and 3,095 "other" families against 9,486 Muslim. There are notable examples of continuity—for example, part of the endowment of Hagia Sophia passed to the vaqf of the new mosque (there are parallels in the Pontus). Professor Speros Vryonis's contribution, "The Byzantine Legacy and Ottoman Forms," is a fascinating and wide-ranging preview of his forthcoming book. This field, although of the highest importance, has not been attempted since the more limited research of F. Hasluck and M. Köprülü; now substantially more Ottoman archives can be used, and the real nature and stages of the de-Hellenization of Anatolia are becoming a little clearer. The role of the Turkomans is, surely correctly, emphasized, and the swiftness of the process before the tide turned, demographically, in favor of the Greeks again in the late eighteenth century is revealed. Even so, it is hard to believe Ömer Barkan's figure of only eight per cent for the Christian element of Anatolia as early as ca. 1500. Professor Vryonis concludes that by decapitating Byzantine Hochkultur, the Turks drove the Greeks to defend a folk culture from which they themselves inherited much. Professor Vryonis has a keen eye for significant detail, but it is perhaps unnecessary to suggest that the Turks are indebted to the Byzantines alone for such Middle Eastern commonplaces as the threshing sledge.

The third paper, on Theophanes the Cretan (fl. 1527–59), the leading artist of what was near to being a Byzantine Hochkultur that survived, is by Dr. Manolis Chatzidakis, the doyen of Byzantine art historians in Greece. This monograph includes biographical documents on the painter of the Meteora and Athos and what amounts to a corpus of his work in 132 black-and-white plates. In the stance of Adam naming the animals in St. Nicholas, Meteora, one wonders if there is not a final echo of the classical statuary in Constantinople, which earlier artists had used in mimesis when depicting Adam.

In other articles Professor Herbert Hunger examines the Byzantine imitation (mimesis) of antique literature in their own. The author is expository and necessarily sympathetic to the discipline—even to the dreadful assemblage of the Christ story in a patchwork of Homer-centos: “the naive and moving attempt to clothe the history of salvation, . . . in that linguistic garb which was most venerable to every Greek. . . .” Professor Ihor Ševčenko publishes and comments, with characteristic skill and thoroughness, on three poems on the death of Leo VI (probably dating before 913) and one on the death of Constantine VII (probably of 959) in the margins of the Madrid Skylitzes. The poems tell the historian little, but, although perhaps derived from formal epitaphs, they are comparatively early examples of the political verse that was to link the two cultures of Byzantium.

Mr. Rowland Mainstone’s investigation into the tympanums of Hagia Sophia could be disconcerting. Three carbon-14 dates have a mean of ca. 700 A.D. ( $\pm 120-30$ ), which, together with examination of the masonry, suggests that the tympanums were reconstructed after the earthquake of 869. This fits in with the probable date of the mosaics, but it makes one wonder about the condition of the dome, if the reconstruction was as extensive as the author presumes. Professors James Morganstern and Richard Stone have a carbon-14 date of 794 A.D. ( $\pm 44$ ) associated with the mosaics in the diakonikon of Dereagzi in their latest report on the church. This suggests that the mosaics and the church must probably be dated soon after 843—that is, if the iconoclast ban really was complete in the provinces. Three tiny fragments of mosaic, which the unwary visitor to the Antalya museum will trip over in a darker corner, are described exhaustively; they seem to add up to a theophany. Professor Cyril Mango provides most useful details on the hitherto botched publication of the graffiti in the dome of Hagia Sophia, Trebizond, on the Palaiologan Infant Cycle in the Chalkoprateia, and on the Stone of Deposition in the Pantokrator, whose iambic inscription he resurrects.

The double volume begins with obituaries of two Dumbarton Oaks professors: Paul Underwood, whose monument is the work in the Kariye Camii and elsewhere in Istanbul, and Romilly Jenkins, its former director of studies and the author of a number of brilliant papers in DOP. All Byzantinists and members of Dumbarton Oaks will feel their loss.

ANTHONY BRYER

University of Birmingham

Travaux et mémoires. Volume 4. (Centre de Recherches d'Histoire et Civilisation Byzantines.) Paris: Éditions E. de Boccard. 1970. Pp. 526.

Following the pattern set by its three predecessors volume 4 of Travaux et mémoires, published by the Centre de Recherches d'Histoire et Civilisation Byzantines under the direction of Professor Paul Lemerle, continues to be subdivided into several main sections.

The initial mémoire presents a critical edition and translation, by the group of scholars associated with Professor Lemerle, of the major part, albeit not all, of the Greek sources pertaining to the Paulician heresy. The subsequent dossier is entirely devoted to Gilbert Dagron’s investigation of “Les moines et la ville. Le monachisme à Constantinople jusqu’au concile de Chalcédoine (451)” in which he traces the urban, social, and often marginally orthodox character of the beginnings of Con-stantinopolitan monasticism, its opposition to the ecclesiastical hierarchy of the capital, its political role in cooperation with the Alexandrian patriarchs in the Christological controversies of the fifth century, and the ultimate victory of the patriarch of Constantinople over this dissident element through its institutionalization by the middle of the century.

Considerably expanded, the études et documents include a larger number of relatively shorter articles on a variety of subjects than did the earlier volumes: J. Grosdidier de Matons's extensive study of a pseudohagiographic moral treatise, "Les thèmes d'édification dans la Vie d'André Salos"; the prosopographic clarifications of W. Wolska-Conus, "De quibusdam Ignatiis," and D. Papachryssanthou, "Hiérissos, métropole éphémère au XIV<sup>e</sup> s."; the systematic analysis by Ch. Astruc of the Codex Parisinus Graecus 180, "Le livre III retrouvé du Commentaire de Théodore Méliénienotes sur les Évangiles," which he identifies as a compilation of earlier patristic material rather than the original exegetical treatise it purports to be; and P. Schreiner's "Note sur la fondation de Monembasie en 582-583," confirming the early existence of the city. As in the past, considerable space has been devoted to the publication, translation, and study of hitherto unfamiliar sources: J. Lefort's "Prooimion de Michel, neveu de l'archevêque de Thessalonique, didascale de l'Évangile," one of a group of Prooimia of which a general study is planned; J. Gouillard's valuable identification of the Letter of the patriarch of Constantinople to the bishop of Larissa, "Une source grecque du Sinodik de Boril: la lettre inédite du patriarche Cosmas," as both a new link between the Byzantine and Bulgarian worlds and a source on Neo-Paulician-Bogomil theology; and finally, M. Balard's detailed account of the disappointing Genoese campaign of 1351-52, "À propos de la bataille du Bosphore: l'expédition génoise de Paganino Doria à Constantinople," to which he appends the log of one of the Genoese galleys, as well as other records, and in which he stresses the support received by the Genoese from the Turkish emirs and the incommensurate expense of the expedition in lost ships and lives, as well as in extraordinary taxation at home.

The usual bibliographical survey, I. Sorlin's useful "Bulletin des publications en langues slaves: recherches soviétiques sur l'histoire byzantine," begun in volume 2 of this series, has now been extended to 1968. To these familiar divisions, the present volume adds the new rubrics: epigraphica, containing J.-P. Soldini's brief "Notes sur quelques inscriptions de Chypre," and Informations, with G. Dagron and J. Lefort's still briefer but valuable "Missions au Mont-Athos" concerning the communities of Esphigmenou and Russikon and attesting once again the alarming state of the latter foundation.

The excellence of the specialists responsible for Travaux et mémoires, under the leadership of Professor Lemerle, is beyond enhancement, and the present volume continues the now firmly established tradition of scrupulous and original scholarship characterizing this series. The critical edition of the Greek Paulician sources with their multiple problems fills a long-standing lacuna, as does their translation into a Western language, albeit Russian versions of the so-called Histories of Peter of Sicily and the Patriarch Photius had been made by H. Bartikyan in his Istochniki dlia izucheniiia istorii pavlikianskogo dvizheniia (Erevan, 1961). Of particular interest are the various versions of Paulician Abjuration Formulae given by Jean Gouillard, and, in general, future studies must unquestionably base themselves on all of these texts.

Until the announced publication of Professor Lemerle's more extensive commentary on these sources in his forthcoming history of Paulicianism in Asia Minor (see page 2), the present work must be considered in some sense preliminary. Certain questions remain still: for example, the reason for the acceptance of the much attacked Histories attributed to Peter of Sicily and the Patriarch Photius, despite their contradictions and inaccuracies, as authentic sources rather than as compilations (see page 94). Despite the editor's statement that only the "fundamental" Greek sources on the Paulicians are included (p. 1), the selective nature of the present edition might have been made clearer, and some discussion of the basis for the selection would be welcome. Are the Logoi that follow the Histories to be eliminated as irrelevant? What of the notices in the Chronicles, not only the debated passages in the alternate versions of George the Monk (which are discussed though not published) but the complementary historical notices found in the Basileia of Genesius and the Continuator of Theophanes? Should there not be some mention of the existence of the Letter of the Patriarch Theophylakt to Tsar Peter of Bulgaria even though the excellent edition of I. Dujčev, "L'epistole sui Bogomili del Patriarca Constantinopolitano Teofilatto," in volume 2 of Mélanges Eugène Tisserant (Vatican City, 1964) is available? It is to be hoped also that a parallel edition of the Armenian sources without which any study of Paulicianism must remain dangerously distorted will complete the present publication. Even at this preliminary stage, however, a major contribution to Paulician history has been made through the final establishment of the manuscript histories and the texts of a number of crucial sources. This solid beginning makes us await with all the more impatience the complementary appearance of Professor Lemerle's promised synthesis.

NINA G. GARSOÏAN
Columbia University

ROBERT BROWNING. Justinian and Theodora. New York: Praeger Publishers. 1971. Pp. 272. $15.00.

Although there are already many books for the general reader on the reign of Justinian and Theodora, Robert Browning's biography is a valuable addition to the list. The general outlines of this portrait of Justinian and his consort are not new, but here the sources for the reign are analyzed thoughtfully to provide a detailed narrative written in a compelling style. The author has attempted "to depict the events as they may have appeared to the emperor himself," and it is the personalities of Justinian, Theodora, and the men who served them that interest Browning rather than the institutions of the sixth century.

Any student of Justinian must deal with the fact that the fullest contemporary description of the emperor's reign comes from the vitriolic Secret History of Procopius. Like other modern scholars, Browning has used the information given by Procopius without adopting his viewpoint. In this biography Justinian emerges as a flexible and effective autocrat, and Theodora as an intelligent and loyal partner to the emperor. In one of the most interesting sections of the book the various officials appointed by Justinian are vividly portrayed, and the choice of men as unexpected and talented as Narses and John the Cappadocian is shown as one indication of Justinian's skill as a ruler. Browning's final assessment of Justinian's reign is a favorable one. As other historians have concluded, the emperor's program of reconquest and his attempts to bring about Church unity must be viewed as a single plan for restoration that grew out of concepts shared by Justinian's contemporaries. These ideas made the continuity of the Christian empire a central part of the pattern of history, in which its divine mission could hardly be accomplished if the empire itself no longer existed or if Christianity remained divided. Thus Justinian's wars were not grandiose schemes, but part of a theory that was always central to the empire. Nor could Justinian have foreseen the new invasions that were to destroy his restored empire. The greatest weakness in the book is its exclusion of the study of the institutions with which Justinian had to work. The difficulties of the Italian campaign, as recent scholars have shown, cannot be understood without a consideration of Justinian's armies themselves. Similarly, can financial and domestic policy be explained without a more thorough analysis of the economic and social structure of the time? In spite of these limitations, this is a fine narrative. It would make a good introduction to the study of Justinian's reign. The many illustrations from sixth-century art are a real addition to the work.

DOROTHY DE F. ABRAHAMSE
California State College, Long Beach

MODERN EUROPE

FRANK D. PRAGER and GUSTINA SCAGLIA. Brunelleschi: Studies of His Technology and Inventions. Cambridge, Mass.: MIT Press. 1970. Pp. xiii, 152. $10.00.

PAOLO ROSSI. Philosophy, Technology, and the Arts in the Early Modern Era. Translated by SALVATOR ATTANASIO. Edited by BENJAMIN NELSON. (Torchbook Library Edition.) New York: Harper and Row. 1970. Pp. xii, 194. Cloth $6.00, paper $2.95.

The two books under consideration have as their common theme the role of technology in early modern Europe. Aside from this similarity of theme they are quite different in focus and content. Prager and Scaglia write about Filippo Brunelleschi, a Florentine who contributed to the development of technology in the quattrocento through his machines and his triumphs in structural engineering achieved in the Duomo. Rossi's book, translated into English by Salvatore Attanasio, approaches the question of the changing relationship between science as contemplation and science as action in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. He concludes that men who combined thought and action, from Bernard Palissy to Galileo Galilei, helped to elevate the workshop to an important and dignified position in scientific advancement.

The first book contains some useful and illuminating material on the quarrel between the Gothic architects and the classical artists in Florence concerning the style of the cathedral, which was moving ponderously toward completion in the late trecento. There is also a chapter on Brunelleschi as patentee and contractor that discloses an early attempt to protect an invention for personal profit. One wishes that these carefully researched and well-written insights had been presented in the context of a more objective evaluation of the subject. Brunelleschi's position in Renaissance art and technology is probably secure enough without gratuitous assertions claiming him to be "one of the great developers of Gothic building, the principal founder of the Renaissance, and an important forerunner of modern structural design and analysis." The authors, at their best in relating Brunelleschi's technical contributions, are less convincing when they move into analysis of the merits and authenticity of their subject's achievements.

Rossi's book is a thoughtful appraisal of one aspect of the quarrel of the ancients and moderns that exercised so many minds in early modern times. He is successful in suggesting that sixteenth-century figures such as Robert Norman, Luis Vives, Rabelais, and Vesalius brought observation and practical knowledge to an elevation that allowed for a fruitful conjunction of the theoretical and empirical in the advancement of science. The author also does creditable work in a chapter on the seventeenth century in which he suggests that the battle had by then been won by the spiritual descendants of the great sixteenth-century intellectual warriors.

In a chapter devoted to "The Idea of Scientific Progress" Rossi makes a significant contribution when he asserts that theories of science acquired the concepts of accumulation of knowledge and collaboration in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. He is not entirely successful, however, in his attempt to establish a logical connection between these two ideas and the notion of the inevitability of progress. The author should not be blamed for the fact that a generally adequate translation falters at certain points in this chapter and in a related appendix. Thus passages that seemed to be insightful in the 1962 Italian edition appear confusing and even misleading in the English version. This is particularly true where Rossi is dealing with ideas that cannot properly be rendered as "progress," "pragmatism," or "utility."

Both of these books make a contribution to knowledge—the one because it elaborates the inventiveness of a Renaissance artist, the other because it reminds us again that reflection without observation and action is sterile.

LARRY D. HYBERTSON
Pasadena College

NICOLE PEREMANS. Érasme et Bucer d'après leur correspondance. (Bibliothèque de la Faculté de Philosophie et Lettres de l'Université de Liège, Number 194.) Paris: Société d'Éditions "Les Belles Lettres." 1970. Pp. 162.

There has been, as Nicole Peremans observes, a need for study of the relations between Erasmus and the Strasbourg reformer Martin Bucer. As often happens in such cases, her study of Erasmus's conflicts with Bucer and the Strasbourg Protestants appeared in the same year as Friedhelm Kruger's Bucer and Erasmus (1970), a study of Erasmus's influence on Bucer's intellectual development. Peremans's conclusions are sound if not novel; readers will not be surprised to find that the old Erasmus was irritable and that personal grievances intruded in his controversial writings. On points of detail she has fresh observations. That Bucer was the author of the Epistola Apologetica (1530), a reply to Erasmus's Epistola contra Pseudoevangelicos (1529), has long been suspected but can now be affirmed with some confidence. She notes, as no one else has, that Bucer virtually admits that the reformer Konrad Pellican had sought to have pressure exerted on Erasmus by the city council of Basel. This circumstance might shed new light on Erasmus's important letter to that body during the Eucharistic controversy. But the principal defect of Peremans's work is that she does not pause for analysis of the issues raised in her narration. One wonders, for example, whether Bucer was correct in maintaining that Erasmus had at one time argued against the death penalty for heresy. Elsewhere Bucer replies to Erasmus's charge that Protestants quoted his writings out of context: did not St. Paul quote an inscription out of context for his sermon on the Areopagus? The interesting thing about this passage, which Peremans fails to observe, is that Erasmus himself frequently used the same argument to justify "dissimulation" for a good purpose. What Bucer learned from Erasmus is perhaps a more fruitful topic than their manifest disagreement.

JAMES D. TRACY
University of Minnesota,
Minneapolis

KARL JOSEF SEIDEL, Frankreich und die deutschen Protestanten: Die Bemühungen um eine religiöse Konkordie und die französische Bündnispolitik in den Jahren 1534/35. (Reformationsgeschichtliche Studien und Texte, Number 102.) Münster: Aschendorffsche Verlagsbuchhandlung. 1970. Pp. 191. DM 34.

Karl Josef Seidel has produced a valuable study of relations between German Protestants and France in 1534-35. The specific focus is announced in the subtitle, Die Bemühungen um eine religiöse Konkordie und die französische Bündnispolitik in den Jahren 1534/35.

The stage is set by a description of France's international position between 1529 and 1534 and the growing receptivity to the possibility of improved relations with the German Protestant states. If a colloquy could lead to some modus vivendi on the religious question, political and military alliance against the emperor seemed at least a possibility. Various position papers were exchanged, most important of which was Melancthon's Consilium ad Gallos, moderate in tone and optimistic in its hopes for an irenic agreement on essentials.

In letters and memoranda from Melancthon, Bucer, Bullinger, Hedios, Chelius, Myconius, Zwick, Blarer, Luther, and the Du Bellay brothers we discover not only different opinions but also the importance of differing emphases, of how a statement is understood and summarized, and of the havoc created by distortion. Taking full advantage of the printed sources, Seidel has provided an instructive account of a complex interchange of ideas during a brief period of "thaw."

Repeatedly he illustrates the interplay between the discussion of theological questions and the surrounding political realities. The "affaire des placards" in 1534 had regrettable effects on the mind of Francis I. And John Frederick of Saxony's refusal to allow Melancthon to go to Paris for face-to-face discussions well-nigh destroyed all possibility of successful negotiations.

Earlier treatments of the story tended to treat the matter very briefly or to discuss only one aspect of it. What Seidel has now done is to re-examine the topic, pull the relevant material together, and set the whole complex series of exchanges within the necessary political and diplomatic context. In many respects it is a model study—manageable yet significant. It will be of interest not only to modern ecumenists but also to anyone wishing to understand the international currents and crosscurrents of the Reformation.

DAVIS BITTON
University of Utah

JACOB KATZ, Jews and Freemasons in Europe, 1723-1939. Translated from the Hebrew by LEONARD OSCHRY. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press. 1970. Pp. viii, 293. $11.00.

Jacob Katz's study of Freemasons and European Jews is important in its own right. It is important as well, however, for the knowledge it brings to our understanding of the development of religious toleration, anti-Semitism, and Western European assimilation of Jews, who enjoyed formal equality in the eyes of the law after the French Revolution.

Almost from their start in England in the early eighteenth century, the Freemasons incorporated elements of natural religion and religious toleration into their constitution. Influenced by deism they held that "a Mason is obliged [only] to obey the moral Law . . . , that religion in which all Men agree" (quoted in Katz, p. 14). In 1736, however, only four years after the first Jew was initiated into the London lodge, the Freemasons qualified their mandate of universal religion. Members, they now maintained, must henceforth conform to "the Christian usages of each Country." For all that—or possibly because of that—Masonic lodges spread to the Continent, first to Holland, then to France.

To participate in Christian lodges Jews often had to compromise their religious traditions. Nonetheless, the number of Jewish members increased, Katz suggests, because membership in the lodges brought tangible advantages and because many Jews felt that they should emulate their Christian neighbors. "Wie es Christelt sich, asoy yidelt sich," they argued. ("As things go among the Christians, so they also must go among the Jews.") It should be noted, however, that some Jews sought to retain their own religious principles within the framework of the lodges. (They were least successful in England, ironically enough, where religious toleration for Masons was first affirmed.) Others, unable to reconcile participation in Christian lodges, formed lodges of their own. In any case the increase of Jewish members suggests that in Western Europe barriers between Jews and Christians were softening before 1789.

But only up to a point. The readiness to accept Jews into Western European society was not universal. Even Freemasons imposed restrictions upon Jews and, at times, were hostile to them—especially in Germany, where Jews were systematically excluded, perhaps because of völkisch ideas. In general, as legal barriers to assimilation broke down, social barriers hardened.

In an important way, then, Jews and Freemasons suggests the limitations of assimilation in Germany and France, that is, it suggests the persistence of anti-Semitism. Paradoxically the myth that Jews and Freemasons were plotting to control the world continued to persist, especially in the incredible Protocols of the Elders of Zion.

Freemasons and Jews, I have already suggested, is an important study. It suffers, however, from an apparent lack of understanding of the relations between Jews and Freemasons in nineteenth-century France. For it is here, as Norman Cohn reminds us, that the myth of Jewish conspiracy gained credibility and was first popularized.

LEON APT

Iowa State University

FEDERICO CURATO, editor. Gran Bretagna e Italia nei documenti della missione Minto. Second Series: 1830-1848. Volume 1 (21 agosto 1847-4 febbraio 1848); Volume 2 (5 febbraio-12 maggio 1848). (Fonti per la storia d'Italia. Documenti per la storia delle relazioni diplomatiche fra le grandi potenze europee e gli Stati italiani, 1814-1860. Part 3, Rapporti tra Stati europei.) Rome: Istituto Storico Italiano per l'Età Moderna e Contemporanea. 1970. Pp. xvii, 374; 336. L. 5,500 each.

These two volumes, well edited by Federico Curato, have the unique distinction of covering the diplomatic roving mission of one man and of giving the historian a detailed description of persons and situations throughout Italy on the eve of its revolutions of 1848 and 1849. The man with the mission was Gilbert Elliot, second earl of Minto, Lord Privy Seal in the Russell cabinet. In 1847 and early 1848 he was sent to Switzerland, Austria, and then through the entire length of Italy down to Palermo in Sicily and was instructed to send back his observations on the Italian political scene. He was likewise to discourage an impending Swiss civil war, an Austrian intervention in Italy, and the achievement of Italian unity. On the positive side he was to encourage in Italy moderate monarchical parliamentary reforms and civil liberties, obtain the pope's help in quieting the Irish clergy, and mediate a conflict between Sicily and Naples. His observations were of inestimable value to his government and are now to historians of 1848; but nearly all the other purposes of his mission failed by the end of the year. Count de Bresson had had a similar French mission throughout all Italy, and he committed suicide in Naples. Minto, however, was made of sterner stuff and returned home a sadder but a wiser man.

This two-volume collection contains 365 pieces of official and private correspondence, in the English original text, to and from Lord Minto and ninety pages of his diary, which links together the events in the correspondence. There are letters to and/or from Victoria, Prince Albert, Russell, Palmerston, Charles Albert, and other British diplomats in Italy. The selection was made from the Minto papers and diary in the National Library of Scotland, from the official Foreign Office dispatches and the Russell private papers in the Public Record Office, from the Palmerston incoming letters in the National Register of Archives, and from the Royal Archives in Windsor. However, the Palmerston outgoing letter copies, in his letter-books in the British Museum, were not used. An indication of Professor Curato's careful preparation is the very small number of typographical errors in the English texts. As usual, there are excellent inventories and summaries at the beginning, helpful explanatory footnotes throughout, and an identifying index of persons at the end.

LYNN M. CASE

University of Pennsylvania

KARL KAUTSKY, JR. August Bebels Briefwechsel mit Karl Kautsky. (Quellen und Untersuchungen zur Geschichte der deutschen und österreichischen Arbeiterbewegung, New Series, Number 2.) Assen: Van Gorcum & Comp. N.V. 1971. Pp. lx, 394. 60.50 gls.

ROSA LUXEMBURG. Lettres à Karl et Luise Kautsky. Translated from the German by NADINE STCHOUPAK and A. M. BRACKE-DESROUSSEAUX. Preceded by L'œuvre et la vie de Rosa Luxemburg, by DOMINIQUE DESANTI. ("Collection Hier.") Paris: Presses Universitaires de France. 1970. Pp. lxiii, 145. 24 fr.

The correspondence between German Social Democracy's leading political practitioner, August Bebel, and its most prolific Marxist theoretician, Karl Kautsky, covering the exciting and decisive period from 1879 to 1913, could hardly fail to be an intriguing and valuable source for the history of European socialism. How Bebel acted and what Kautsky wrote in those years often proved to be of crucial significance. Their published correspondence, of which more than eighty per cent comes from the years following the death of Friedrich Engels in 1895, complements chronologically the prior publication in individual volumes of the intense exchange of letters between Engels and the inner group of German Social Democrats—Bebel, Kautsky, Wilhelm Liebknecht, and Eduard Bernstein. Unfortunately, while Kautsky faithfully preserved nearly every piece of paper he received from Bebel, the latter was apparently much less careful, and so of the 306 items included in this volume only 26 come from the pen of Karl Kautsky, to which have been added a few written by his wife Luise. As a result of the imbalance many nuances of the relationship between the skillful political tactician and the earnest editor of the Neue Zeit remain partially hidden. But we can discover many details about Bebel—his adept guidance of the campaign against Bernstein's revisionism, the care he took in setting the stage for the party congresses, the frequency and the nature of his advice on the policies of the Neue Zeit, and his frank and sometimes piercing evaluations of fellow socialists. (How deeply he and Kautsky distrusted the brilliant and irascible Franz Mehring is documented in some piquant phrases.) The letters of the last years turn to personal matters as Bebel faced tragedy in his own family—the death of his wife in 1910 and then the severe and prolonged nervous collapse of his daughter following the unexpected death of her husband early in 1912. "I had imagined that the end would be different," Bebel confided sadly to his Marxist comrade in October 1912, though subsequent letters show that he soon regained the optimistic spirit so characteristic of his active life.

The edition itself meets the high standards set by the previous source publications of the International Institute for Social History in Amsterdam. Although not an academic scholar, Karl Kautsky, Jr. has an intimate knowledge of the Social Democratic movement, and he has compensated to some degree for the missing letters of Karl Kautsky through informative notes and the use of direct quotations from other sources. In a few instances, noticeably in the introduction, Kautsky's solicitude for his father's reputation is evident but not to the detriment of accuracy or balance. For other reasons, however, the introduction is disappointing. The editor has chosen to remain close to the texts published in the volume and passes over an excellent opportunity to present a comparative analysis of Bebel and Kautsky.

The volume of Rosa Luxemburg's Lettres à

Karl et Luise Kautsky is a French translation from the original German edition of 1923. Except for the competent introductory essay on Luxemburg's life and work by Dominique Desanti, the publication adds little of scholarly value to the original edition, an English translation of which also appeared in 1923. Although some new annotations have been included, others from the original have been omitted, and neither a complete list of the letters nor an index has been supplied.

VERNON L. LIDTKE

Johns Hopkins University

GÉRARD CHOLVY. Géographie religieuse de l'Hérault contemporain. Preface by GABRIEL LE BRAS. (Publications de la Faculté des Lettres et Sciences humaines de l'Université de Montpellier, Number 32.) Paris: Presses Universitaires de France. 1968. Pp. 513. 39 fr.

It would be hard to disagree with Gabriel Le Bras, the founder of "sociologie religieuse," that of all the works in the genre Cholvy's is one of the finest. Using hard quantitative data he maps out the contemporary patterns of religious practice in the department of Hérault and then places them convincingly in their changing environment—geographic, demographic, economic, social, political, and ecclesiastical. While concerned primarily with the twentieth century he also ranges over the nineteenth century and even into the ancien régime, thereby giving the book an unusually deep historical perspective.

The department of Hérault, comprising Mediterranean coastal plains and upland fragments of the Massif Central, belongs mostly to the "pays indifférents à traditions chrétiennes" on Boulard's map (though not to the "pays de mission"). The centerpiece of the book is an analysis of church attendance based on data from over 100,000 questionnaires returned by those attending Catholic churches on Sunday, December 2, 1962. They amounted to only a quarter of the eligible Catholic population, but the proportion varied according to age, sex, marital status, occupation, education, milieu (rural or urban), and region. Many of these findings are not surprising but are valuable for their precision and comprehensiveness. Other data—from baptisms, ordinations, communicants, voting patterns—enrich and qualify the picture. In explaining the generally low level of religious practice Cholvy underlines economic and social factors in this largely rural area, minimizing the adverse effects of the anticlerical press, state schools, and Protestantism; he also blames a reactionary, slow-moving ecclesiastical establishment. In his discussion of regional patterns he is especially instructive on the western coastal plains, relating religious practice to the evolution of large-scale capitalist viticulture, its class conflicts and successive waves of immigrants (including many from Spain). But with the advance of urbanization in recent years, regional influences on religious practice appear to be yielding to national ones, while religion itself withdraws from the public to the private sphere.

Altogether this is one of the most impressive studies of a modern French diocese. Its limitations, which Cholvy acknowledges but does not overcome, are chiefly those of the genre. His book therefore suffers from a certain lack of inwardness, a neglect of the psychological and nonquantifiable dimensions of religion, including superstition and other phenomena of popular devotion. Both the merits and the limitations of the book reflect the present state of the social history of religion as it advances from the sociographic stage to the truly sociological and psychological.

JAMES OBELKEVICH

Princeton University

DAVID MITCHELL. 1919: Red Mirage. [New York:] Macmillan Company. 1970. Pp. 385. $7.50.

This volume demonstrates both the strengths and weaknesses of popular history. It is superbly written, successfully capturing the hysteria and emotions of a highly emotional time. As Mr. Mitchell quite aptly demonstrates, the panorama of rebellion and counterrebellion that spread across Europe in 1919 literally boggles the imagination. The task in describing this panorama, in relating events across Europe—and briefly in the United States and Canada—is awesome, and the author is indeed to be complimented on his ability to organize the incredible diversity of activity into an intelligible account. The extensive bibliography is annotated with insight and clarity, often giving as much of a clue to the author's interpretations as does the text itself. The illustrations are quite well chosen and serve to illuminate further the passions of revolutionary activity.

Then what is wrong? For one thing Mr. Mitchell's publisher has apparently served him badly. The total omission of documentation in a work full of personal judgments, quotations, and many debatable conclusions is unacceptable. Perhaps it is the publisher rather than the author who is also to blame for such cliché-ridden chapter titles as "Don't Count your Soviets." More seriously, Mr. Mitchell's research is almost entirely limited to English-language sources. While his work in this language has been reasonably exhaustive, especially as regards memoirs, he has nevertheless accepted a limitation that forces him to deal with the tip of the iceberg rather than the entire movement. Thus in dealing with the founding of the Communist party of Germany, for example, he must draw his conclusions on excerpts from English-language works, and these are not necessarily the conclusions that might be drawn had he access to all of the extant materials. The same holds for the founding of the Comintern and other critical events of 1919.

This is, in a sum, an extraordinarily well-written and intelligently presented book. It is, however, by no means definitive history.

WARREN LERNER
Duke University

JAMES BARROS. The League of Nations and the Great Powers: The Greek-Bulgarian Incident, 1925. New York: Oxford University Press. 1970. Pp. 143. $6.50.

This work by Mr. Barros on the Greek-Bulgarian incident of 1925 is based mainly on research in British, Greek, Italian, American, and League of Nations archives. Most of the book deals with a description of the day-by-day development of the crisis and its solution. The concluding chapter discusses not only why the intervention of the League was "successful" in this case, but it also generally and rather quickly considers how the 1925 incident shows the limitations of using international organizations like the League and the United Nations for the peaceful settlement of disputes.

Mr. Barros is at his very best when he blends together materials from the various archives to indicate how the powers, particularly Britain and France, became involved in settling the crisis. His treatment of the roles of the Greek and Bulgarian governments is a little less successful, primarily because he really fails to give enough background information on the internal issues that were helping determine the foreign policies of the two countries. Thus, while we are told that Greece under the rule of the dictator Pangalos may have needed some outside diversion to turn attention away from internal matters, we never fully understand why Pangalos persisted so long in following a course that obviously alienated foreign statesmen who could have been friendly to Greece. Nor are we adequately informed about Bulgaria. We learn correctly that the Macedonian Revolutionary Organization (IMRO) had great power over the Bulgarian government; but, we do not find out sufficiently how IMRO may have helped influence Bulgaria's foreign policy. There is one particularly intriguing question raised about Bulgarian reaction to the clash with Greece. Mr. Barros mentions that in October 1925, as the crisis was in its very first stages, the Bulgarian government proposed that Yugoslavia join in "an immediate military alliance, with a view to combined action against the Greeks, the joint spoils to be the port cities of Salonika, Kavala, and Alexandroupolis" (p. 17). The reader may well ask how the Bulgarian leaders, whose country was heavily demilitarized by terms of the Treaty of Neuilly, could feel able to make any offer with a view toward wresting from Greece three of its most important northern centers.

The above observations are not meant to detract from the general usefulness of this study; they are indications of areas that still need elucidation. Mr. Barros has in the main presented a very competent account of an event in history that heretofore had not received enough attention from scholars.

GEORGE J. MARCOPOULOS
Tufts University

RICHARD GLEN EAVES. Henry VIII's Scottish Diplomacy, 1513-1524: England's Relations with the Regency Government of James V. (Exposition-University Book.) New York: Exposition Press. 1971. Pp. 197. $6.50.

In spite of its title the focus of this book is on Scotland and its international relationships during the period when John Stuart, duke of Albany, a Frenchman in all but descent, was regent for the young James V. Dr. Eaves is especially interested in describing "the complicated diplomacy by which Scotland preserved her independence," and he has presented his gleanings from the available printed sources with great thoroughness. This is undoubtedly the definitive account of the subject, yet it is flawed by several of the deficiencies frequently attending dissertations. While the style is straightforward, it is nevertheless dull, often repetitious, heavily footnoted, and very detailed, and it contains a minimum of interpretation. One wishes for more elucidation of the basic motives and goals, as opposed to the moves, of the principals; one looks in vain for some discussion of Scotland's real position in international affairs or an evaluation of the extent to which the Scots themselves actually controlled their situation. Perhaps the most fundamental unexamined issue is whether Scotland's continuing independence at this time was the result of Scottish (or French) diplomacy at all. Was Henry VIII ever prepared to pay the price in men, money, and attention necessary for a successful "annexation" of Scotland? It seems to be at least an open question. One can agree that the documents tell "an ugly story of English aggression and meddling in Scotland's domestic affairs," but was the French record substantially better? Dr. Eaves's findings do not significantly alter the picture of the period given in such standard general accounts as Gordon Donaldson's Scotland: James V to James VII (1965).

J. WILSON FERGUSON
Russell Sage College

ROY STRONG. Tudor & Jacobean Portraits. Volume 1, Text; Volume 2, Plates. (National Portrait Gallery.) London: H.M. Stationery Office; distrib. by Pendragon House, Redwood City, Calif. 1969. Pp. xiv, 390; 693 plates. $48.00 the set, postpaid.

KATHERINE S. VAN EERDE. Wenceslaus Hollar: Delineator of His Time. Charlottesville: University Press of Virginia for the Folger Shakespeare Library. 1970. Pp. ix, 122. $15.00.

Both of these works should encourage historians of Tudor and Stuart England to use art and the evidence associated with it in their research and lectures. Unlike treatises on attribution and other technical problems and unlike many of the tributes to great country houses and their contents, these books help make the artistic evidence of these reigns accessible and pertinent to general history.

Tudor & Jacobean Portraits catalogs all the portraits in the National Portrait Gallery down to 1625, where Piper's catalog of 1963 takes up (the Gallery's portraits of pre-Tudor subjects are included; for example, a silver penny ca. 887 depicting Ælfred). Designing the work "primarily as a working tool for students of the period regardless of the field in which they are active," Strong has made it "an index of faces," with the portraits arranged alphabetically by names of the sitters. Strong refers those concerned with developments in painting during the period to his own work, This Time's Pencil (apparently this is a projected but abandoned title for his The English Icon: Elizabethan and Jacobean Portraiture [London, 1969]).

Volume 1, the text, contains more than the usual data about the portraits in the Gallery. Biographies of the sitters are reprinted from the Concise Dictionary of National Biography; up-to-date biographies might have been worth the extensive space these reprints take. Contemporary descriptions of the appearance of the sitters are given, too. Strong also discusses the portraits in relation to the total iconography of the sitter, and he considers not only the portraits in the Gallery but those elsewhere. A section on groups appears after the last main entry and then two appendixes on recent acquisitions. All of this data (with the bibliography), arranged by sitter, make this volume, in conjunction with volume 2, the excellent "working tool" that Strong planned.

Volume 2 contains black-and-white plates, at least one for each of the Gallery's portraits entered in volume 1, and also reproductions of the principal portraits in other collections discussed in the iconography paragraphs mentioned above. There are, in addition, eight attractive plates in color, seven of them in volume 1 and one as frontispiece to volume 2; not referred to in the text, they duplicate the black-and-white reproductions. Although this "index" shows primarily faces, the background often depicts much else of importance in Tudor and Stuart history.

Hollar (1607-77), a Bohemian topographical etcher and draftsman, traveled extensively on the Continent, joined the suite of the earl of Arundel, the great collector, in 1636, and thereafter lived most of his life in England. Working for noblemen and gentlemen, the royal family, and publishers, Hollar produced a wide range of attractive work, much of it still surviving. Those wanting information about buildings, landscapes, important men, costume of persons of high and low degree, ships, and famous events are likely to find at least part of what they want in Hollar. Van Eerde, weaving together "the scanty facts concerning the artist and the information given us by his works," has not notably advanced our knowledge of him, but she has produced an attractive guide to his works. By placing reproductions alongside her narrative of his life and of the great events of his time, she makes evident to teachers and students the resources that Hollar brings to us for study of seventeenth-century England and the Continent and especially how such an artist was patronized. Except for the inconvenient placing of the notes at the end of each chapter, the book is very handsomely produced.

Historians of Tudor and Stuart England can get great pleasure and much help in their teaching, perhaps also in their research, from these volumes.

WALTER L. WOODFILL
University of California,
Davis

DAVID UNDERDOWN. Pride's Purge: Politics in the Puritan Revolution. New York: Oxford University Press. 1971. Pp. viii, 424. $15.25.

This study of Pride's Purge contains an original interpretation of the manner in which that historic episode took place and its meaning in relationship to the Puritan revolution as a whole. Underdown has sought to demonstrate that it was less a deliberate act of policy on the part of Puritan idealists than the result of a shift in party alignment in the Long Parliament that permitted the radicalism in the New Model Army, the Levellers, and the sects to find vent in December 1648 and January 1649. Working from J. H. Hexter's and Valerie Pearl's findings he insists that there existed in parliament after 1645 a middle group whose members cooperated with a small number of radicals to form the Independent party. The role of the middle group was pivotal. Its decision to go with the Presbyterians at the time of the Treaty of Newport broke up the Independent party, and with its collapse went the last hope of parliamentary control of the New Model Army. The sequel was revolution in the form of Pride's Purge and the death of Charles I.

If the purge is to be explained in these terms it is no surprise that the Rump government that followed is described as lacking the revolutionary impetus to carry out a thoroughgoing revolution. An essentially conservative body, so Underdown believes, its members had little interest in further change after the King's death and the destruction of the House of Lords. In four main areas of policy—religion, law, social reform, and parliamentary reform—little was accomplished unless the army applied pressure. In these years Cromwell was thinking in terms reminiscent of the middle group in the Long Parliament that foreshadowed the main lines of the Protectorate. "In the end," Underdown concludes, "the typical Rumper was not the determined Commonwealthsman, not Edmund Ludlow or Henry Ireton. It was not even Oliver Cromwell. It was Bulstrode Whitelocke."

This estimate of Pride's Purge is likely to dominate historical scholarship during the foreseeable future. But some questions are bound to arise about Underdown's treatment of political ideology, which in turn has influenced his description of the political complexion of the Long Parliament. It has shaped in key places the tone of his commentary. What he has failed to do is to consider the importance of the theory of mixed monarchy, which was prevalent in the late years of the Puritan revolution. It had grown out of Charles I's highly influential answer to the Nineteen Propositions, and among its advocates were Nathaniel Fiennes, William Prynne, and Whitelocke—all of them conspicuous in Underdown's account. Since the theory subverted the idea of kingship that prevailed before the Puritan revolution, it is difficult to view its advocates as conservative in the way that Underdown does. This is not to deny that Leveller doctrine was more radical if a greater degree of democracy is the test but rather to insist that the advocates of mixed monarchy were themselves the product of a far-reaching ideological revolution actually more dangerous to the Stuart kingship than Leveller teachings. It had penetrated the establishment in a fashion simply not true of Leveller ideology. The failure to recognize that this was the case lessens the value of this important book.

CORINNE COMSTOCK WESTON
Herbert H. Lehman College,
City University of New York

SHEILA LAMBERT, Bills and Acts: Legislative Procedure in Eighteenth-Century England. New York: Cambridge University Press. 1971. Pp. ix, 246. $13.00.

Historians of eighteenth-century England have good reason to be grateful to Miss Sheila Lambert. Several years ago she compiled a valuable list of House of Commons sessional papers for the first half of the century. And in this book, which complements the recent fine study of the House of Commons by P. D. G. Thomas, she provides further expert help with another tangled problem: how legislation was prepared and passed in the eighteenth-century parliament. The book springs from and centers on the work of Robert Harper, an attorney who for thirty years after 1732 was a leading draftsman of and agent for private legislation. Miss Lambert has discovered (the kind of discovery that only comes with long familiarity with the source material) that his working papers formed the basis of the British Museum's collection of private bills before 1767; her further discovery of Harper's own manuscript indexes to these papers in Lincoln's Inn makes the Museum's collection much more accessible than hitherto. Miss Lambert uses Harper's career as a springboard from which to discuss changes in parliamentary procedure over the course of the century, the role of private draftsmen and agents in getting legislation through parliament, and the work of the clerks of the House of Commons and of government departments like the Treasury. Though Robert Harper specialized in estate bills—the unsettling of settled estates—Miss Lambert ranges far outside this area and describes the procedures involved in the preparation and passage of other legislation, including enclosure and local bills of all kinds. Her careful discussion of the stages of procedure, the changes in the printing of legislation over the century, the dangers of using printed bills as though they invariably represent the legislation as passed, and many other cognate matters will be of the very greatest benefit—not least to those whom the book encourages to exploit the vast amount of social and economic material in parliamentary sources.

J. M. BEATTIE
University of Toronto

J. P. P. HIGGINS and SIDNEY POLLARD, editors, with the assistance of J. E. GINARLIS. Aspects of Capital Investment in Great Britain, 1750-1850: A Preliminary Survey. (Report of a conference held at the University of Sheffield, 5-7 January 1969.) London: Methuen and Company; distrib. by Barnes and Noble, New York. 1971. Pp. 200. $9.50.

With support from the Social Science Research Council, Professor Pollard has recruited a team of assistants to sift through public accounts and business records relating to every sector of the economy in order to measure capital formation in Britain during the Industrial Revolution. To achieve "better co-ordination among all the participants" and to ensure by "consensus rather than by fiat" that the results of the separate studies can ultimately be combined into a single series, a conference of work in progress was held at the University of Sheffield in January 1969. The six papers presented on that occasion together with edited summaries of the discussions form the contents of this volume.

In their introduction the editors conservatively assess the benefits derived from such workshop sessions as a form of quality control. The first two contributors discuss appropriate theoretical guidelines for the project; Mr. J. Hibbert reviews modern national accounting practices, and Dr. C. H. Feinstein describes his recently published estimates of gross capital formation for the period 1856-1913, to which Pollard's series will be related. The remaining papers contain accounts of research actually done or planned for different sectors of the economy. Most of Dr. S. D. Chapman's paper on investment in the cotton industry has already appeared in the Economic History Re- view ("Fixed Capital Formation in the British Cotton Industry, 1770-1815," 23 [1970]: 235-66). Using insurance company records and the concept of the representative firm he concludes that "the cost of fixed capital investment in the initial period of 'take-off' in cotton was very modest." Because their research is less advanced the contributions of Mr. J. E. Ginarris on roads and canals, Mr. Robert Craig on shipping, and Dr. B. A. Holderness on agriculture center on the pitfalls of interpreting sources, the scarcity of evidence, and the consequent problems of constructing long-run time series. Most of the discussion concentrates on the difficulties of sampling, using proxy figures, allowing for obsolescence, constructing index numbers, and defining capital assets. And since the estimates of the dominant agricultural sector are expected to be "among the weakest and most doubtful series in the project," additional complications are bound to occur at a later stage in moving to larger aggregates. Yet despite such obstacles and notwithstanding the fact that housing and industries other than cotton receive only passing mention, these progress reports offer grounds for cautious optimism about the outcome, providing the team can agree on accounting categories and procedures appropriate to the evidence.

GORDON RIMMER

University of New South Wales

W. S. LEWIS et al., editors. Horace Walpole's Correspondence with Sir Horace Mann and Sir Horace Mann the Younger. Volumes 9-11. (The Yale Edition of Horace Walpole's Correspondence, Volumes 25-27.) New Haven: Yale University Press. 1971. Pp. 685; lxii, 546; 547-1113. $17.50 each.

With these three volumes the Yale edition of the correspondence between Horace Walpole and Sir Horace Mann is now complete. For good measure there are a few letters to Walpole from Mann's nephew, several appendixes, and finally the index to all their letters and the appendixes.

The availability of both sides of a correspondence, always desirable, is especially advantageous in this case, for the two principal correspondents were, geographically and in their immediate concerns, far removed from each other. Until his death in 1786 Mann remained as diplomatic representative at the court of the grand duke of Tuscany. His view encompassed the affairs of Europe. Walpole observed the world from London or Strawberry Hill. Yet their mutual understanding and sympathy and their interest in each other's letters never failed.

The subjects of the later correspondence are essentially the same as earlier: politics, diplomacy, culture, friends, and society in the narrow sense. But times had changed. New topics absorbed the correspondents' attention. These were the closing years of the American war and the conflicts stemming from it. There was unrest at home and in other parts of the Empire. Walpole had long since abandoned his seat in Parliament and he went about less often, but his home in Berkeley Square was, in his words, "a little coffee-house" where his visitors brought the latest news, which he relayed to his friend in Florence (9:371).

With the war came additional responsibilities for Mann. Both correspondents longed for peace. Walpole frankly deplored the policies that had plunged England into war and ever heavier debt. He often recalled his father's motto, Quieta non movere. He distrusted the influence of the Crown and in 1782 hoped that changes in the administration would result in "the recovery of the constitution" (9:262). He saw no need for electoral or civil service reform.

The style of the correspondence changed somewhat. Both men grew philosophical. Walpole's letters are marked by an even greater wealth of anecdotes, historical and literary allusions, and a charming ability to poke fun at himself as well as others. Whom is he mocking when he writes: "At first I thought myself grown deaf when with young people, but perceived that I understood my contemporaries though they whispered" (9: 22)?

This edition permits posterity, whom Walpole never forgot, to appreciate more fully the historical value of the letters and to savor their unique flavor. Anyone interested in the eighteenth century must be grateful to Mr. W. S. Lewis and his associates who, as these three volumes with their wealth of notes and detailed index testify, have maintained unflaggingly the highest editorial standards.

DORA MAE CLARK
Wilson College

RICHARD W. DAVIS. Dissent in Politics, 1780-1830: The Political Life of William Smith, MP. London: Epworth Press. 1971. Pp. xv, 268. £5.00.

William Smith (1736-1835) was member of Parliament, with some intervals, between 1784 and 1830 for Sudbury, Camelford, and Norwich; and from 1805 to 1832 he was chairman of the Protestant Dissenting Deputies. A wholesale grocer in the City of London, he lived in the days of his prosperity as an opulent gentleman, given to good causes. He was a friend and for a time a neighbor of the Clapham sect and worked with them against the slave trade and slavery. His education had been under Dissenting auspices, but he had sons at Cambridge. He became a theological liberal and joined the fashionable congregation started by Theophilus Lindsey in Essex Street. Dr. Davis says that he had the "catholicity of eighteenth-century dissent," rather than the sect spirit of nineteenth-century Nonconformity. From being a follower of Pitt, he became a disciple of Fox, as Dr. Davis shows, not because of difference about religious tests for public office but because of the French Revolution and the war. Like Fox, Smith was one of the friends of the people, not one of the people. His view of instructions by constituents to members of Parliament was anything but radical. Dr. Davis says that his attitude to the electors of Norwich was like that of a headmaster to unruly schoolboys. Smith, moreover, always preferred behind-the-scenes negotiation and management in the House to outside demagoguery and piecemeal progress—by accepting half-loaves—to losing one great campaign for a whole loaf unlikely of attainment. In this again Smith was at variance with some of his coreligionists. In the nineteenth century Aspland and Southwood Smith disliked Smith's eighteenth-century Whiggism. Smith entered into prominence in the agitations of the 1780s for the repeal of the test and corporation acts, and as chairman of the Dissenting Deputies had an important part in the repeal of 1828. Dr. Davis also gives interesting accounts of Smith's part in the opposition to Sidmouth's bill of 1811, in the repeal of the five mile and conventicle acts in 1812, and in the Unitarians' toleration act of 1813.

The Epworth Press is to be praised for putting the footnotes at the foot of each page and for permitting an ordered and useful bibliography, easy to use. The index could be better. Dr. Davis would have found some useful material in the William Smith Papers in the Spencer Research Library of the University of Kansas.

This book, well produced, well documented, and readably written, supplements most usefully, and occasionally corrects, the work already done in this field by Barlow, Machin, Manning, and others.

R. W. GREAVES

University of Kansas

A. S. WOHL et al. The History of Working-Class Housing: A Symposium. Edited by STANLEY D. CHAPMAN. [Totowa, N. J.:] Rowman and Littlefield. 1971. Pp. 307. $16.50.

This is a difficult book to review. It is in no sense a history of working-class housing in Great Britain. Rather it is a collection of essays of varying length, coverage, and focus, dealing with some aspects of working-class housing in London, Glasgow, Leeds, Nottingham, Liverpool, Birmingham, southeast Lancashire, and Ebbw Vale. These essays reflect the authors' interests and research pursuits, and with the exception of perhaps the last, on Ebbw Vale, they are of uniformly high quality; but, put together, they do not represent a balanced description of housing in Britain at any period, much less a history. In reality they are a collection of journal articles.

Certainly it is unfair to criticize a scholarly work for not being something else, but one could wish to have found rather more vigorous editorial supervision of this book. A reader, hoping to find an answer to some question of his own, may be disappointed. Even within the general topic of housing the choice of subjects is haphazard: some deal with the economic circumstances of housebuilding, some deal with working-class architecture, and one, Anthony Wohl's, traces the history of the growing public interest in lower-class living accommodations in London.

As a piece of historical scholarship, Wohl's article on the housing of the working classes in London between 1815 and 1914 has perhaps the greatest general interest. Although he deals almost exclusively with the last half of this period and is expanding upon his previous work concerning the impact of Andrew Mearns's pamphlet of 1883, The Bitter Cry of Outcast

London, he shows, with careful statistical detail, the exploding public interest in the domestic conditions of the laboring classes and makes clear again that, despite repeated expressions of concern and interest from politicians, government activity in the field before the First World War in fact amounted to nothing.

The other articles, although useful, are of such narrow scope that one would have expected to find them in county historical journals. The economics of lodginghouse keeping in Glasgow or the origins of back-to-back house-building in Leeds—deriving not from the search for economy but from the configuration of fields and footpaths—are of important but parochial interest. Perhaps the most unfortunate result of this excessive concentration, besides the breakdown in parallel coverage in the essays, is the practical absence of any reference to the more general national movements concerned with working-class housing. Octavia Hill is scarcely mentioned, nor are the Health of Towns Commission, the General Board of Health, the Medical Officers of Health, or the establishment of the Local Government Board. The entire topic of the growing interest in sanitary legislation, which affected housing more than any other field, is hardly noticed. Only Wohl, dealing with London, has much to say about urban transportation.

These remarks are criticisms only in the sense that a book of this sort, reflecting a large amount of careful work, might have become much more than it is. The impact of the Industrial Revolution on the ordinary people of England has grown in the last few years to be a major preoccupation of many historians and, within this, housing is a central topic. A medium-sized general history of nineteenth-century housing would be of great use. In such a volume the monographic work contained in the present book would be of significant value, but these studies themselves are not such a history. Indeed, they demonstrate how much remains to be done.

BENTLEY B. GILBERT
University of Illinois,
Chicago

JOHN HURT. Education in Evolution: Church, State, Society and Popular Education, 1800-1870. London: Rupert Hart-Davis. 1971. Pp. 286. £2.50.

Historians accept the importance of general elementary education in the formation of national states but neglect its history, while those who write on the subject too often are untrained in historical research. John Hurt is a political scientist, and he has credentials in education as well, which may explain why he has produced one of the few studies of elementary education in Britain before the Forster Act of 1870 that both historians and educators will approve.

The basic assumptions are uncontroversial. The parliamentary decision to support a voluntary system of elementary education for working-class children reflected a growing belief that a minimum of schooling under religious auspices was a better assurance of social stability than ignorance. The ultimate compromise of small matching grants to church schools, including nonconformist and Roman Catholic, which accepted inspection, reflected political realities. Leaving control with local school managers while London officials pressed for improvement along uniform lines through grants that might be reduced by adverse reports of inspectors was in the Victorian administrative tradition.

The special value of this study grows out of research in little-used official papers and minutes, including the reports of inspectors and examiners. These civil servants appear as an exceptionally well-educated and hard-working group, even though appointed under the old patronage system. R. R. W. Lingen, who succeeded Sir James Kay-Shuttleworth as secretary of the Education Department, is revealed as a significant influence even though he did not appear in the public eye. The arrangements by which schoolmasters for working-class children were drawn from the working class while inspectors and examiners came from Oxford and Cambridge are considered. The effort to raise standards through training colleges and the certification of teachers is described as well as the effect of "pupil-teachers"—in effect apprentices—who provided much cheap instruction. The circumstances under which women came to outnumber men as teachers are examined. Finally, much evidence is produced to support the author's belief that it was the development of the voluntary system before 1870 that made the Forster Act workable and fastened on Britain the system of class education that lasted into the twentieth century.

FRANCIS H. HERRICK
Mills College

NICHOLAS C. EDSALL. The Anti-Poor Law Movement, 1834-44. Totowa, N. J.: Rowman and Littlefield, 1971. Pp. viii, 285. $12.00.

Mr. Edsall has a sound grasp of the complexities of political society in the North of England in his chosen period and a shrewd eye for the realities beneath the rhetoric of political conflict. He is an able and perceptive historian and writes clearly and succinctly; nevertheless his book is less satisfying in its conception than in its generally admirable execution.

The anti-Poor Law "movement" was scarcely an entity worthy of extended study in isolation. For a couple of years, in 1837-38, resistance to the introduction of the New Poor Law became the chief focus of radical discontent in the North, but it was an issue chosen by those already discontented. In the kaleidoscopic history of Northern radicalism its place between the campaign for factory regulation and for the charter is modest enough. Edsall's careful account shows that the agitation against the New Poor Law in 1837 gained its apparent strength through the coincidence of inept haste on the part of the commissioners (lulled in part by their equally accidental easy success in the south), of economic recession, and of a temporary confluence of various Northern suspicions of "London" government and its alleged machinations against traditional local rights. The propaganda against the New Poor Law—which Edsall rightly finds "very mediocre stuff"—had scarcely more relevance to the real problems of poor relief than had the inanities of Cobbett in 1834. It is entirely understandable that the 1834 act should provide fuel for the fire in radical bellies, but even in the North no one died to preserve the Old Poor Law. Edsall's analysis of local reactions to the commissioners and their aggressive assistants reveals the ultimate weakness of a movement that might paralyze Poor-Law affairs in Huddersfield for a few months but could muster only seventeen votes for Fielden's repeal motion at Westminster. It remains astonishing that so revolutionary a piece of legislation should meet so little active resistance.

In later chapters Edsall gives a brief account of affairs in the Northern unions after 1838, when active resistance became passive, and old and new systems were alike found wanting in the face of industrial unemployment. He rightly remarks that the opposition "had no more idea than the Poor-Law commissioners of how to cope with really severe distress." Unfortunately his own assessment of the dilemmas inherent in the problem of providing a viable system of relief in England at this time is scarcely adequate either: his opening chapter on "The Debate on the New Poor Law" is—by his standards—superficial, and it is surely anachronistic and pointless to nominate a system of insurance as the "obvious alternative" to the New Poor Law that nobody had the wit or will to adopt. Even if so, why not? His useful account of the Northern opponents of the New Poor Law must remain only partially satisfying without a sharper sense of the significance of the innovations against which they were reacting. What were the commissioners in fact about, if not to poison paupers and destroy the social compact? Edsall shows signs of finding the champions of the new law rather more interesting than his ostensible objects of study, and it is a pity he did not widen his canvas further. Reality, not radicalism, defeated the ideologues of 1834 and taught the commission to compromise. This book is a good critical study of the critics, but what of the work itself?

J. R. POYNTER
University of Melbourne

ROBERT STEWART. The Politics of Protection: Lord Derby and the Protectionist Party, 1841-1852. New York: Cambridge University Press, 1971. Pp. viii, 240. $12.50.

W. D. Jones published his biography of the fourteenth earl of Derby in 1956, without access to Derby's papers. In the early 1960s, however, the papers came into Robert Blake's possession, where they still remain on loan from the present earl. Blake's Disraeli (1966) used only the Disraeli letters in the collection, and his Ford Lectures used a few of Derby's copied letters. In the meantime Blake permitted Robert Stewart to consult the papers for the years 1841-52—having himself begun to prepare the definitive biography of Derby.

Stewart's subtitle, Lord Derby and the Protectionist Party, 1841-52, is misleading: the book is less a biography of Derby in these years than it is a detailed, chronological account of top-level party politics. Accordingly Peel tends to eclipse Derby, and later Derby shares the stage with Bentinck and Disraeli: at the end we still know Derby less well than we do the others. This is disappointing. At some point in the book, a thorough examination of Derby's personality and ideas would have been welcome. He was a puzzling, many-sided, fascinating man. As for his ideas Mr. Stewart at one point (p. 102) describes him as "intellectually a protectionist," at another (p. 220) remarks on his "deep attachment to the landed class." But nowhere is Derby's case for protection carefully analyzed, nor is his devotion to the countryside—beyond a partiality for bowling over rabbits—specifically demonstrated. Some account of the great Stanley estates in Lancashire where they bestrode both the worlds of corn and cotton would have been helpful: how much of the Stanley gross income by 1845 was nonagricultural? how much of it went back into agricultural improvements? what were the relations between the Stanleys and their tenants?

Generally Mr. Stewart does less well with the social and economic context of his political narrative than he does with the narrative itself. We are told, for example, that "there was a deep-seated repugnance to improvement among large landowners" (p. 39), which presumably helped to shape their protectionist outlook. But how many estate accounts have been examined in support of this statement? The unhappy answer is: very few. One might guess that further research will reveal that from 1830 onward large landowners were increasingly ready to pay the cost of estate improvements, keeping the nominal rental fairly stable but turning more and more of it back into the farming of the estate. After all, English farming was the best in the world. It is not likely to have got that way through neglect. Even a protectionist like Derby, far from being a slovenly farmer, was a conspicuous improver on a large scale before 1845.

It would be unfitting, however, to end this review on a querulous note. Mr. Stewart's chief object is to tell the story of the breakdown of Peel's party and of the ditherings and fumbings of what was in fact a new party, that of Disraeli, Bentinck, and Derby. The relations among these three remarkable men are now clearly worked out once and for all. No one can now mistake the oddities of Derby's politics—nor the acute discomfort he suffered in restraining Bentinck so as not to frighten the Peelites whom he eventually decided were Radicals. Last but not least, Mr. Stewart has produced an attractively written book, surprisingly so, in view of its origins as a doctoral dissertation.

DAVID SPRING

Johns Hopkins University

ROY DOUGLAS. The History of the Liberal Party, 1895-1970. With a foreword by JEREMY THORPE. Madison, N. J.: Fairleigh Dickinson University Press. 1971. Pp. xx, 331. $15.00.

Dr. Roy Douglas has written a book that is as much a symptom as a chronicle of the Liberal party's distress. Like its subject, it staggers onward from general election to general election, losing steam and becoming more and more peripheral to the times. Replete with a foreword by Jeremy Thorpe, who leads a half dozen Liberal M.P.'s in the present House of Commons, the work is very much an exhortation to the party faithful to keep the faith. Perhaps not surprisingly, when it is most eloquent as a political tract it proves least satisfactory in its historical judgments.

Without making altogether clear the significance of the dates that frame his study the author attributes his party's repeated misfortunes not to Liberalism, but to Liberals. One may recall that G. K. Chesterton reached precisely the same conclusion early in the century. Curiously enough, those whom Douglas deems responsible for the "avoidable mistakes" and other inadvertencies that, time and again, nearly extinguished the party were not the official leaders—who get off very lightly indeed—but usually their parliamentary whips: T. E. Ellis died before he could reconcile the Liberal Imperialists to the leadership of Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman; Herbert Gladstone, guilty of a "squeamish refusal to strangle the Labour Party in its cradle," made possible the emergence of a rival to the left; Percy Illingworth ate an oyster that proved fatal, thereby bringing to the whipship John Gulland, whose failure to mend the ensuing breach between H. H. Asquith and David Lloyd George was fatal in its own right. In the years that followed, a succession of whips further embittered relations between feuding party leaders.

By emphasizing the strategic importance of the men who ran the party machine Douglas helps to restore a balance in Liberal historiography. But, at the same time, he manages the dubious feat of reducing Asquith and Lloyd George, among others, to two-dimensional figures. Lloyd George is blamed essentially for conveying an impression of instability and shiftiness: there is little attempt to evaluate the extent to which this reputation was justified. Asquith, more seriously, is faulted for his tenderheartedness toward Labour: in 1913 he piloted through the Trade Union Act, which allegedly filled Labour coffers; eleven years later he stepped aside ("Why he did so must remain a mystery") and allowed Ramsay MacDonald to form the first Labour government. This, "the most disastrous single action ever performed by a Liberal towards his Party," accelerated the drift from Liberalism, which, for all its intellectual dynamism, had forfeited the chance to be taken seriously as a political force.

Having once taken Lady Violet Bonham Carter to task (wrongly, he now concedes) for coquetting with the Tory enemy, Douglas criticizes Jo Grimond, Thorpe's predecessor, for attempting to come to terms with the Socialists. There can be no accommodation with other parties. Liberals of previous generations, by their indulgence toward Labour, served not the British worker, certainly not the cause of socialism, but only the Conservative party. It is an interesting thesis, but one that would require quite a different book to prove.

STEPHEN E. KOSS
Barnard College

NEVILLE THOMPSON. The Anti-Appeasers: Conservative Opposition to Appeasement in the 1930s. New York: Oxford University Press, 1971. Pp. 256. $7.25.

In most conventional histories of Great Britain in the 1930s, a special place is given those few members of the Conservative party who were alive to the dangers of nazism at an early date and who sought to alert the nation to the dangers represented by Hitler. The Conservative "opposition" is generally thought to have been led by men like Churchill, Eden, Amery, and Macmillan. The band, while never large, is usually represented as having been rather deliberate in its efforts to correct the mistaken policies of Stanley Baldwin and Neville Chamberlain.

Not the least of the accomplishments of Neville Thompson's book is to cast doubt on this traditional portrayal of the period. Thompson demonstrates conclusively that antiappeasement developed late in the decade and that few of the so-called antiappeasers were either consistent or bold in their opposition. Neville Chamberlain, with the passage of time, may appear to have been a rather ineffectual leader. While he was in office there were very few in his party who were prepared to tangle with him. The insufficiencies of Stanley Baldwin are now amply known; this did not mean that Conservative party backbenchers saw the Rhineland issue with much greater clarity than he did. Churchill is supposed to have had a sleepless night when Eden resigned from the Foreign Office; Neville Thompson suggests that Eden was never the strong man some of his friends thought him to be and that even after his resignation he was most deliberate in his efforts to dissociate himself from any effort that included Churchill.

In short what Thompson has done is to remind us how difficult it was in the 1930s to be a member of the Conservative party with ambitions for office and a readiness to risk one's career by overtly opposing the prime minister. Moreover, the issues were sufficiently complex that any simple policy of antifascism or antiappeasement seemed excluded. There was massive confusion at the time of the Manchurian and Ethiopian crises. What certain political men were prepared to say in 1938 and 1939 they were not saying at an earlier date. It was only the fact that they were right in the end that made their friends believe that they had been right all along. This is an admirable book. No new textbook on the period can afford to ignore its findings.

STEPHEN R. GRAUBARD
Brown University

F. S. L. LYONS. Ireland since the Famine. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1971. Pp. xiii, 852. $17.50.

Let us say at the outset that this new book by Professor Lyons covering the period 1850 to the present should become an indispensable work of reference. Whether it is the last word as a general history of Ireland for the period it covers is a different question. Comparing Irish historians who attempt surveys of their country's history to the ancient Israelites condemned to "make bricks without straw," Professor Lyons indicates the many gaps that remain in Irish history despite the monographic work of the last thirty years. For the nineteenth century scholarly preoccupation with the making and breaking of the Union has meant that other themes, quite as important, have been neglected. Economic, social, and cultural, as well as administrative and constitutional history are waiting for deeper attention. To fill the gaps in the narrative Professor Lyons has had to do a considerable stretch of fresh work himself. Commenting on the paucity of materials for twentieth-century Irish history, he suggests that the last third of his book, called "The Partitioned Island," be regarded as a pioneering enterprise that will have served its purpose if it stimulates others to study more deeply the contemporary history of Ireland. It is, I think, fair to say that the result is a scholar's book, where the questions and problems are argued with unwavering impartiality. But some quality—the sense of a nation's life—does not emerge with the clarity one would wish for in a general history. Perhaps the book's very impartiality deprives it of focus. In the face of Professor Lyons's modesty and thoroughness one hesitates to criticize, but books, whatever their merits, are also useful and significant if they suggest questions that they do not themselves answer. Irish history has suffered from parochialism, and one remedy for this is more comparative history. To raise a few questions: Is Pearse's cult of blood and violence to be seen solely in an Irish context? The New Cambridge Modern History, which covers the period 1898–1945, is called The Age of Violence. Where and how does Ireland fit in? Also, and here the new psychoanalytic history might suggest lines of enquiry, what kinds of people become patriots of violence, beating their heads against the walls of empire everywhere? What of the problems of religious and ethnic majorities or minorities in European states—the "little Ulsters" of Central and Eastern Europe, to use a phrase of Sir Lewis Namier's? Both English and Irish history would benefit from these comparisons. As for Ireland itself, is the nature of its constitutional tradition sufficiently explored? Beginning as he does in 1850 Lyons deals only with the latter part of O'Connell's career, but O'Connell's searchings for the right relations between Britain and Ireland as well as his philosophy of nonviolence are worthy of more attention by way of introduction. As for Ulster, why after 1886, when opposition to even a limited Home Rule had become so clear, was so little attention given to conciliating the North and to structures that might have overcome problems rather than complicating them? Lyons's account of the six counties from 1920 is admirably thorough, but its very thoroughness suggests the need for a separate history that will focus more directly on the North from the inside as well as on the problem it is for both Britain and the republic.

But comments on general history and on perspectives must not detract from the work Lyons has done. All scholars will be grateful for the superb bibliography, the thorough and informative footnotes, and for the chapters that, in some instances, bring scattered knowledge together for the first time, filling gaps in cultural, social, and economic history. His chapter, "The Battle of Two Civilizations" is especially valuable—pulling together as it does so much of the thinking about Ireland from Thomas Davis to Patrick Pearse. Finally, for those who come fresh to the field, Lyons's work should be read in conjunction with Oliver MacDonagh's brief Ireland (1966), which because of its very brevity focuses sharply on so many significant questions. Another recent helpful work brings to the Northern Ireland question the perspectives of political science: Richard Rose, Governing Without Consensus: An Irish Perspective (1971). It opens up comparisons both with European and non-European states that have faced the intractable problems of different historical developments within confined boundaries and to which unitary nationalism seems to be no final answer.

HELEN F. MULVEY
Connecticut College

C. THELLIEZ. Marie de Luxembourg, duchesse douairière de Vendôme, comtesse douairière de St.-Pol, comtesse douairière d'Enghien, dame de La Fère, et son temps. (Anciens pays et assem-blées d'états, Number 52.) Louvain: Éditions Nauwelaerts. 1970. Pp. xx, 150. 360 fr. B.

Marie de Luxembourg (d. 1546) was called Mother of the Poor by some of her contemporaries and is named Mother of Kings by Cyrille Thelliez (Marie's great-grandchildren included Mary Stuart and Henry IV of France), but she remains an obscure figure. To give substance to this small book, Canon Thelliez has had to devote most of the text first to tracing Marie's ancestry and then to following through three or four generations the many progeny of her marriage to François de Bourbon-Vendôme (no genealogical table is provided). Even so, half of the pages are given to plates. His very informal bibliography and documentation do not inspire confidence, but it does seem likely that Thelliez, the diocesan archivist of Cambrai, simply had too few sources to construct a satisfying account of the early life and long widowhood of Marie de Luxembourg.

This is volume 52 in the series Anciens pays et assemblées d'états published by the Belgian section of the International Commission for the History of Assemblies of States. The series was launched in 1950 in order to reclaim the history of pays or provinces and their institutions, subjects generally neglected for the history of cities and nations. The series has been of mixed quality, with no apparent attempt even to maintain uniform editorial standards. Its purpose is modestly served in this volume, especially in the few pages on Marie's administration of her estates and in the plates showing scenes of Cambrai and La Fère.

JOHN C. MOORE
Hofstra University

MYRIAM YARDENI, La conscience nationale en France pendant les guerres de religion (1559-1598). (Publications de la Faculté des Lettres et Sciences humaines de Paris-Sorbonne. Series "Recherches," Number 59. Travaux du Centre de Recherches sur la Civilisation de l'Europe moderne, Number 8.) Louvain: Éditions Nauwelaerts. 1971. Pp. 392. 735 fr.

This ambitious study, which presents a conceptual synthesis whose elements are derived from a wide range of opinions, confirms the critical position of the sixteenth century in French history. The author first delineates the essentials of national consciousness at the time: (1) the kingdom is equal to the king in the mystique of French unity (p. 92); (2) the French conceive of themselves as God's chosen people and have "extreme confidence in their own powers... to surmount all obstacles" (pp. 35, 42); (3) Gallicanism is central to the conception the French have of themselves (p. 39); (4) the linguistic criterion is important ("it is the language and not the fact of being the king's subject that makes a Frenchman," (pp. 47-48); (5) the determining factor is the leadership of the parlementaires, whose juridical conceptions dominate the national history they created, and to be familiar with this history is a patriotic duty (pp. 62-67).

The case is argued in twelve chapters whose titles show national consciousness developing through a virtually dialectical process involving the entire spectrum of thought from absolutism to constitutionalism. Chapter 1 ("Etat et tolérance, 1559-1572") interprets the policy of Catherine de' Medici and Hôpital as the search for a modus vivendi sur le plan civique between the rival factions (p. 92). Chapter 2 ("Positions catholiques, 1559-1584") shows how the difficulty for Catholics of separating the notion of "France" from Roman Catholicism led to the claim by some that "heretics are not Frenchmen" (p. 109). It is doubtful, however, that the statement "the new reality of France as a political entity independent of religion had not yet achieved even the least place in Catholic thinking" (p. 119) is accurate as late as 1580.

In chapter 3 ("Positions protestants, 1559-1572"), we are reminded that the resort to arms was justified as a patriotic duty to rescue the king and the country from the "foreign" Guises (pp. 126-27). The question of whether the nobles' argument that they have the special function of defending the kingdom can be construed as a manifestation of national consciousness is answered affirmatively, given sixteenth-century ideas of the "nation" (p. 128). I would agree, adding that the point needs further development to convince readers unfamiliar with the period.

St. Bartholomew marks a revolution (ch. 4) because the liaison mystique between the king and the people was broken for the first time. But the claim that national consciousness was stripped of the centuries-old ties to the Crown and was based "exclusively on concrete and real factors [données]" (p. 148), even temporary ily, seems exaggerated. Chapters 5, 6, and 7 ("Politiques, raison d'état et patriotisme, 1572-1589"; "Le Patriotisme protestant, 1585-1589"; "Catholiques, ligueurs et la chute du Roi, 1585-1589") analyze the growing polarization of the country and the various positions assumed toward the relative priority of the Salic Law and the other "fundamental law," that the king must be Catholic, including nuances of thought within each religious camp. Yardeni's treatment of the League (chs. 8 and 9, "Propagande de la Ligue, 1589-1593" and "Le Débat sur l'ordre social, 1589-1595") follows the traditional politique line, but also includes discussion of the class issue, when the nobles ironically lost prestige just as they rallied to a Crown that was resuming its central place in national consciousness.

The accession of Henri IV was the clinching factor in the emergence of a new and strengthened national feeling in all classes and ideological groups (chs. 10-12, "La Lutte pour l'unité national, 1589-1593"; "La Naissance d'une légende, Henri IV et la France, 1589-1595"; and "Le Dénouement de la crise et les redditions, 1593-1595").

One wishes, however, that the author had either made some attempt to distinguish among sentiment national, conscience nationale, and patriotisme or frankly conceded that whatever the earlier divergences they became inextricable with the rising threat to the very existence of France as a nation—whatever that term may connote. Although at moments she seems about to be carried away—the euphoria arising from the documents is contagious—the author realizes that the snowballing ralliement tends to smother the few dissident voices and that "history is written by the survivors" (p. 298).

The author's concentration on her thesis sometimes distorts the emphasis of the sixteenth-century writers themselves, as is the case with Bodin and Beza, for instance, but her contention that all groups (some unwittingly) contributed to the refinement and redefinition of national consciousness during the civil wars is clearly demonstrated. The scholarly apparatus is excellent, and there are few typographical errors—for example, the siege of Rouen (p. 61) should be 1562, and L'Apologie de la Paix, 1585 (p. 175 n. 35). Probably no single reader will agree with every statement, but everyone interested in French "national character" should read this useful and provocative book, which makes the history of France in the last four hundred years (in some respects) a seamless web and enlarges our understanding of what General de Gaulle called une certaine idée de la France.

NANCY L. ROELKER
Boston University

MICHAEL PRAWDIN. Marie de Rohan, Duchesse de Chevreuse. London: George Allen and Unwin. 1971. Pp. 200. £3.00.

This book reads well. Unfortunately there is not much more that can be said for it. It is better than Victor Cousin's century-old book, excepting the extensive appendix of the latter. But it comes nowhere near surpassing Louis Battifol's sixty-year-old study. Mr. Prawdin has made life easier for the reader by excising many of Battifol's details, but he has substituted a series of general statements about the France of the early seventeenth century that are, to say the least, outmoded.

Beyond doubt there is ample room for books that are sympathetic to the opponents of Richelieu. The great nobility of seventeenth-century France deserve closer study by historians. As has been realized for a long time, the study of the role of women in the early modern period is a rewarding field. But none of these topics, which form the base on which Mr. Prawdin's book is built, is adequately handled by the author.

The bibliography is almost nonexistent. Primary sources are mostly limited to inferior editions of memoirs and letters. Technical errors, such as confusing parlements with provincial estates, are too numerous to mention. Marie de Rohan deserves something more than a pleasant tale.

J. MICHAEL HAYDEN
University of Saskatchewan,
Saskatoon

ROGER HAHN. The Anatomy of a Scientific Institution: The Paris Academy of Sciences, 1666-1803. Berkeley and Los Angeles: University of California Press. 1971. Pp. xiv, 433. $12.00.

Throughout the Enlightenment the Royal Academy of Sciences in Paris dominated the world of science to a degree that no other national institution has since done or had ever done. Professor Hahn has now devoted to it the most sophisticated history of a scientific institution to have been written since the famous Geschichte der königlich preussischen Akademie der Wissenschaften zu Berlin (1900). Unlike Harnack, who, in the classic tradition of Ideengeschichte, organized his account around the scientific and scholarly work produced in the Berlin Academy, Hahn writes in the current mode of social history and tells of the Paris Academy relative to the society around it rather than to the content of science, of which he says little. In retrospect it seems natural that the academy should have embodied in miniature the structural characteristics of the regime that created it: monarchical, hierarchical, prescriptive, and privileged. Hahn is at his best on the process by which the original project for a Baconian body, collaborating selflessly for the advancement of knowledge, became a forum for the play of individual ambition, where the goal was status in a tribunal ruling the affairs of science through control of publication, patronage, and the technical policies of government. He analyzes the failure of the academy to accommodate civic, educational, literary, and industrial aspirations in the latter years of the Old Regime; traces its suppression at the hands of the Jacobin Convention to its inability to adjust itself to radical political change in the Revolution; and exhibits the combination of more specialized professionalism with bourgeois belief in a meritocracy in the reorganization of science under the Institut de France in 1795.

All these matters are admirably worked out, and only in one respect might it be thought that the exclusion of science itself deprives Hahn of the opportunity to be fully convincing about a point equally important for the social and for the intellectual history of science. The point is that the pre-eminence of French science in the eighteenth century was almost certainly a function of the selectivity of the Paris Academy and its consequent ability to enforce standards. For lack of that authority the Royal Society degenerated into amateurism. The sociological discourse with which Hahn concludes his book does not seem to me to work very well. Never mind that, however. Like many another history, this one is better than its theoretical argument, and no historian working in this field can feel anything but gratitude and admiration for the ingenuity and generosity with which the bibliographical apparatus gives access to the literature.

CHARLES C. GILLISPIE
Princeton University

HENRY J. MERRY. Montesquieu's System of Natural Government. West Lafayette, Ind.: Purdue University Studies. 1970. Pp. xvi, 414. $8.50.

Marx once said that Sir James Steuart had a deeper historical and a generally more sophisticated social outlook than most eighteenth-century economists because he was an aristocrat. The same remark could be made with even greater justice about Montesquieu. A sense of history is, indeed, often grafted upon the psyche of the nobility, and in Montesquieu's case it gave rise to a profound understanding of political psychology and sociology. He has not always received his due, and it is only in recent years that his originality and profundity are gaining the attention they deserve. Mr. Merry's book is a contribution to this task. It shows that the American tendency to concentrate on Montesquieu's constitutional theory, with its liberal doctrine of the separation of powers, slights the many far more interesting aspects of his thought. The central conflict for Montesquieu, according to Mr. Merry, was not the usual one between the individual and the state, but that between civil society and the political apparatus of the modern state. His second great concern was the dangers of religion. Mr. Merry says rather little about that, but he does show how the exclusion of the supernatural led Montesquieu to emphasize natural causes in his analysis of social formations. Wisely, Mr. Merry reminds us also that this did not make Montesquieu forget the unique character and importance of "moral causes." It is these, as they manifest themselves in the civil sphere, that Montesquieu set out to picture in all their complex interrelationships. Law, education, commerce, all received a detailed examination. Nor does Mr. Merry forget the radical cutting edge of Montesquieu's thought, especially in his ideas on criminal punishment.

Though there is little effort made to put Montesquieu in any sort of setting, social or intellectual, his influence on Hegel is very capably explained. There is some mention of the influence of the Roman historians upon Montesquieu, but not enough; and his deeper debt to Aristotle, a debt he and Hegel shared, is not brought out at all. Nothing much is said about the contemporary climate of ideas. The new psychology, the general spirit of libertinage and skepticism, and the reappraisals of the past are not discussed. Lastly, little is said about Montesquieu's historical theory and its bearing upon Europe's past and present.

This is, in short, an adequate work, but it has no audience in mind at all. It is neither original nor scholarly enough to interest serious students of the Enlightenment or of political theory in general. For the more elementary student it is too incoherent and selective. It has neither a central theme nor a set of worked-out interpretive lines of argument. Mr. Merry has obviously read Montesquieu thoroughly and has enjoyed it. One finds many sound remarks in his commentary, but it does not add up to a complete study of its subject.

JUDITH N. SHKLAR
Harvard University

THOMAS F. SHEPPARD. Lourmarin in the Eighteenth Century: A Study of a French Village. (The Johns Hopkins University Studies in Historical and Political Science, 88th Series (1970), Number 2.) Baltimore: Johns Hopkins Press. 1971. Pp. xiv, 248. $11.00.

The themes of continuity, stability, and responsible leadership provided by pragmatic and humanitarian notables run throughout this study of eighteenth-century Lourmarin, a village of about 1,500 inhabitants located twenty miles north of Aix-en-Provence. There was little social or religious conflict, despite the fact that eighty per cent of the inhabitants were of Protestant background, and there were only two major crises—the plague of 1720–22 and the Revolution. Professor Sheppard's monograph compares favorably with many of the local and provincial studies undertaken in France. The author draws upon the disciplines of demography, sociology, and economics, and he uses municipal, departmental, and notarial archives. About forty per cent of his citations refer to the minutes of the village council's deliberations, which constitute the basis for his highly favorable appraisal of the village leaders. Separate chapters are devoted to the land, the people, government, finance, poor relief, the seigneur, and religion. The concluding chapter discusses the effects of the Revolution on the village. Twenty-six tables and five appendixes supplement the text.

Among the particularly important chapters is the one on "The People." Using techniques of historical demography and family reconstruction, the author analyzes population trends and mortality rates, calculates the frequency of illegitimate births, and argues that birth control, probably in the form of coitus interruptus, was practiced in Lourmarin before the Revolution. This chapter is stronger on statistics than it is on such subjects as the villagers' diet, dress, attitudes, and social life. The chapters on government and finance offer a clear picture of the socioeconomic background of the village officials, and they describe in detail the community's financial responsibilities and sources of revenue. However, the limited attention that the author gives to the importance of intendants and subdelegates in village government weakens his argument about increased centralization during the century.

Sheppard is more convincing about the limited effects of the Revolution on Lourmarin. Although the villagers "quickly adopted the verbiage and forms of the Revolution" (p. 208), they were only slightly affected by revolutionary laws concerning religion and property and by changes of regimes. This book is an important addition to the growing number of local and provincial studies that will provide a more balanced evaluation of the Old Regime and of the effects of the Revolution on France.

THADD E. HALL
State University of New York,
Binghamton

THADD E. HALL. France and the Eighteenth-Century Corsican Question. New York: New York University Press. 1971. Pp. xxx, 255. $10.00.

The eighteenth-century Corsican question is a likely topic for a monograph, since the topic has not been investigated by many scholars and yet illuminates worthwhile aspects of the period. The grand theme of balance of power politics in the Mediterranean sphere, the struggle of a faction-torn but determined people against a hated state (Corsica versus Genoa), and the formulation of policy by a major power involved in both themes (France)—these are dramatic focal points vying for the attention of the author and his audience. Professor Hall has the linguistic, archival, and detective skills to uncover these themes, and he alludes to the broader situation throughout. Yet he has missed an opportunity to turn his capable study into a major work by focusing his attention on the chronology of French responses to the Corsican revolt against Genoa, 1729–68. Hall makes his point that there was no long-term, secret French plan to seize Corsica, and in the process he shows how even Genoese mis-handling of the Corsicans and the danger of an English occupation failed to turn the French from a cautious and complex diplomatic-military handling of Genoese-Corsican relations until French sovereignty in the island loomed as the only solution. What I miss in all this is the precise connection with the European and Italian situations. The Wars of the Polish and the Austrian Succession, the Seven Years' War, and the changing nature and titles of important Italian powers like Piedmont-Sardinia are somehow lost in the details of French diplomatic correspondence. Eighteenth-century French court politics is another neglected subject. Since Professor Hall knows all the relevant persons from Choiseul down, as well as all the diplomatic, military, and political agents sent from Versailles to Genoa and Corsica, it does not seem sufficient simply to pass names in review, alluding to an official only when he happened to say something and alternating between such individual pronouncements and the general category "Versailles." Skillful editorial work could have helped immeasurably here by identifying individuals more fully (rather than only at first mention, and then incompletely), just as better editing could have made the wars, the alleged Genoese "misgovernment," and the Corsicans' own squabbles more integrated and fuller parts of the book. The author's fine tangential work on French rule in Corsica after 1768, "Thought and Practice of Enlightenment Government in French Corsica" (AHR, 74 [1968–69]: 880–905), that the broad questions attract his attention as well as those that demand the technical skills demonstrated in this monograph.

A. LLOYD MOOTE

University of Southern California

WALTER MARKOV. Exkurse zu Jacques Roux. (Abhandlungen der Deutschen Akademie der Wissenschaften zu Berlin, Jahrgang 1970.) Berlin: Akademie-Verlag. 1970. Pp. xiv, 371. DM 72.

Historians in the German Democratic Republic have for some time been producing able studies on various aspects of the popular movement in France and Germany during the Revolutionary era. Hedwig Voegt's book on the radical publicist Rebmann, the work on the peasants and townsmen of Electoral Saxony by Percy Stulz and Alfred Opitz, and Heinrich Scheel's recent book on the South German Jacobins reflect the growing scholarly interest in those revolutionary militants who tried to voice the demands of the common people.

Long a recognized expert on the popular movement, Professor Walter Markov has already produced three volumes devoted to the life and works of the radical cleric Jacques Roux. The first volume examines the historiography of the enragé movement in general and Roux's particular place in it. The second is a biography of Roux covering his formative years and tracing his political career up to the point where he began to challenge Robespierre's leadership and the Jacobin definition of the Revolution. The third book presents an extensive collection of Roux's speeches, letters, and articles from Le Publiciste de la République française (1793).

In his fourth volume Professor Markov seeks to expand and explain the wide range of materials available for studies of Roux and his political activity. The book, organized into sixty chapters, covers all aspects of the red abbé's life. Markov devotes sections to Roux's family background, education, early career, role in the early phases of the Revolution, development as a radical spokesman, the growing conflict with the Mountain, and his final arrest, trial, and death. Markov also supplies detailed information on individuals and groups, some of them quite obscure, with whom Roux came into contact at important periods in his life.

In each chapter Professor Markov offers extensive bibliographical information. He em-plays a wide range of unpublished sources including documents from the National Archives, departmental archives, and Parisian police reports. Printed sources include excerpts from local journals, the Parisian radical press, the Moniteur, and the Archives parlementaires. He also provides an impressive list of secondary works on the French popular revolutionaries.

Although there seems to be a lack of continuity between the chapters and much seemingly peripheral material unrelated to broader political, social, and economic trends, it must be kept in mind that the author is not seeking to write a full history of the Revolution or the popular movement. Moreover, Markov has succeeded in illuminating many aspects of Roux's life, and the wealth of bibliographical detail will be a valuable aid to those students and scholars who wish to investigate the complex story of the enragés and their leaders.

STEVEN T. ROSS
University of Texas,
Austin

MAURICE AGULHON. La vie sociale en Provence intérieure au lendemain de la Révolution. (Bibliothèque d'histoire révolutionnaire, Third Series, Number 12.) Paris: Société des Études Robespierriennes; distrib. by Librairie Clavreuil, Paris. 1970. Pp. viii, 531.

With this book Professor Agulhon completes the publication of his excellent doctoral thesis. Thanks to him Var must be the most elaborately studied department of France between the 1790s and 1851, and this volume, although the last to appear, deals with the earlier time period. Its title is somewhat too restrictive; half of the book concentrates on prerevolutionary society. On the other hand, its geographic limits of study are not those of all the interior of Provence but mainly that part which became the department of Var. What is lacking for this area is the revolutionary decade.

M. Agulhon is mainly concerned with structure rather than process. Postrevolutionary society hardly differed from its previous form, and this was especially true in regard to social structure, communal organization, and economic activity—the three aspects of Var that most attract his interest. In his descriptive analysis of them he is at his best, and his best is of a very high order. His minute study of social stratification is based on an exhaustive investigation of printed and archival sources. Although he is not as strong when dealing with styles of life among the strata, he provides us with a skillfully drawn picture of Provençal society at two critical periods. There is also an equally elaborate description of social role and power relations among the strata within several towns and villages. It was the village, he feels, with its concentrated population, hierarchical structure, and urban characteristics, which gave a special quality to Provence. Although the local economy was chiefly agricultural with an adjunct of artisan industry, there was not only a society as complex as that of a true town, but there was also a fairly well-defined and intricate class struggle between the commercial and industrial stratum and the large landowning classes, as well as between the nearly impoverished agrarian workers and the rich, whether mercantile or agricultural. Sporadic acts of violence were therefore part of a larger struggle—for more power, on the part of merchants; for more land and economic rights, on the part of village workers.

This argument is persuasive. It would be even more so if M. Agulhon had found a more effective means of presenting his data, especially his quantitative data. There are too few tables to summarize the immense detail, and in the section on landed property the text refers by number to tables that are not numbered. The weakness of graphic presentation is, happily, compensated for by his maps, but even here the value of maps 3 to 7 would have been enhanced by the use of place names.

These are relatively minor faults in a big book that is an important contribution to the growing volume of local history. It is contributions of this depth and merit that will soon make possible some new interpretations of French national history.

LEO A. LOUBÈRE
State University of New York,
Buffalo

THEODORE ZELDIN, editor. Conflicts in French Society: Anticlericalism, Education and Morals in the Nineteenth Century. Essays. (St. Antony's College, Oxford, Publications, Number 1.) London: George Allen and Unwin; distrib. by Humanities Press, New York. 1970. Pp. 236. $6.50.

The great merit of Theodore Zeldin's book is to make concrete the psychological, sociological, political, human, and local tensions that sustained and made inevitable in nineteenth-century France the struggles between curé and instituteur, bishop and prefect, municipal council and parish. Zeldin in his examination of "The Conflict of Moralities" finds that both the curé and his secular antagonist alike sought a morality of prudence and pudency. They both desired a world of conventional habit; a place free of sin and deviation. On different paths the confessor and his critic were seeking a society protected from disturbances that challenged the wisdom of their separate sciences.

Robert Anderson's analysis of "The Conflict in Education" during his Second Empire concludes that the Falloux Law had to fail. The supporters of the University and those who trusted in the superior merits of Catholic secondary education fought to monopolize the educational control of the few privileged heirs of an inequitable society. Secular and clerical educators shared a common preference for the classics and similar views of pedagogy and discipline. The heart of their quarrel was their belief that only one of them could best serve a bourgeois world.

The ambivalence of moralists and educators was not experienced by those who possessed power. Austin Gough's discussion of "The Conflict in Politics" as that battle was waged by Monseigneur Louis-Edward Pie, the bishop of Poitiers from 1849 to 1880, makes clear how intransigent and destructive of the interests of those he served a bishop could be. Bishop Pie adamantly and unsuccessfully attempted to crush all who challenged his theology, his pastoral counsel, his politics. Gough convincingly demonstrates that Pie's struggles against the prefect and other secular authorities in his diocese alienated and aroused the repugnance of all prudent men. His conduct assured the contempt of all who desired some harmony and civil peace for France.

Malformed giants capable of the harm Bishop Pie inflicted on his people did not exist at the local level of French society. But Roger Magraw in his consideration of "The Conflict in the Villages," by concentrating on the communal strife in Isère during the Second Empire, demonstrates that smaller men could injure one another as mortally as did their grand superiors. Magraw's essay is a subtle and beautifully documented account of the legendary struggle between curé and mayor in the communes of France. This human, petty, and daily conflict has nowhere been better described or understood. The rich, original, and extensive archival documentation of the four essays in this slim volume makes it indispensable for all who would understand the social history of France in the nineteenth century. The historian is encouraged by these essays to shift his attention from the philosophical differences between believers and unbelievers to the social encounters and conflicts that touched the unborn, the infant, school children, young lovers, husbands and wives, the dead and the dying.

EDWARD T. GARGAN
University of Wisconsin,
Madison

ALISTAIR HORNE. The Terrible Year: The Paris Commune, 1871. New York: Viking Press. 1971. Pp. 172. $12.50.

ÉDITH THOMAS. Louise Michel: Ou la Velléda de l'anarchie. (Leurs figures.) [Paris:] Gallimard. 1971. Pp. 475. 33 frs.

"At first sight," confides Mr. Horne, "the Commune might seem a somber subject for a coffee table book." He is, of course, correct. Nevertheless, for the centenary he condensed and rewrote chapters from his successful The Fall of Paris (1965), to which Richard Garnett then ably matched illustrations drawn principally from English sources. The result is an attractive and appealing volume—sic transit the Commune.

It remains to the author's credit that he writes well and respects historical fact. Hence, while the capitalist system exacts its price in the format this professional writer has chosen, The Terrible Year tells a more accurate story than many books on the Commune derived from party doctrine. But one should recognize that a certain distortion is part of the price. Strive for relevancy and interest, compress an already popularized text, and the nuances that define reality disappear. Under such pressures an analysis of the Commune's failure to seize the Bank of France becomes an amusing instance of personal intimidation, and a brief portrait of Charles Delescluze determines the Commune's character in its final period. What detailed appreciation of Parisian republican sentiment on March 18 could survive such a chapter heading as "Red Coup at Montmartre"?

Édith Thomas's biography of Louise Michel admirably demonstrates that, within a different format, the professional writer can contribute to scholarship. A graduate of the Ecole des Chartes, the late Mlle. Thomas held an advantage over Mr. Horne. As a librarian at the Archives Nationales she enjoyed ready access to the mound of documents with which France memorializes its politically suspect. Archival press clippings and police reports, supplemented by material from other depositories, enable the reader to follow closely the anarchist trail of the black-draped, mournful Commune who preached revolt—and occasionally practiced it—long after the Commune's demise. It is clearly the finest study available on this enigmatic saint of the Left, a well-documented narrative graced with bibliography, an index to proper names, and several appended, though poorly selected, illustrations. Here again, however, reservations follow from the writer's choice of format.

Although Édith Thomas drew extensively upon archival sources her purpose and perspective were those of the biographer rather than the historian. The author neglects secondary literature as she lets Louise Michel tell much of her own story up through the fall of the Commune. This dependence upon Michel's Mémoires and other writings appears uncritical in view of Mlle. Thomas's recognition that veracity was a weaker virtue of "la bonne Louise." While the treatment of her heroine's later years proves that the "red virgin" was more anarchist than red, and more probably a virgin than not, the historian would have welcomed further enlightenment regarding Michel's relations with the French Left. But for an avowed Marxist, Édith Thomas seems partial to the cult of personality and reluctant to discuss the implications for either socialism or society of a message that even Marxists found impractical and simplistic.

Future historians and biographers trained in psychology will undoubtedly have the last word concerning Louise Michel. How could they resist this ugly, illegitimate woman whose poems, prose, and heroic life expressed a passion for mankind, mother, and cats, but an obsession with blood, fire, and the cataclysm of world revolution. Édith Thomas hints at an analysis of Michel's ambiguous personality, though she hesitates to go further. Perhaps this is simply an intelligent biographer's prudent refusal to venture beyond her competence. Even so, the reader senses the author's relief at having spared from analytical assault the revolutionary mystique of her priestess of liberty, the ex-pétroleuse who faithfully tended what Mr. Horne cites as "that little flame which never dies."

LOUIS M. GREENBERG

University of Maryland

GUY ROSSI-LANDI. La drôle de guerre: La vie politique en France, 2 septembre 1939-10 mai 1940. Preface by RENÉ RÉMOND. (Fondation nationale des sciences politiques. Travaux et recherches de science politique, Number 14.) Paris: Armand Colin. 1971. Pp. ix, 247. 37 fr.

Utilizing a familiar title, Guy Rossi-Landi has written a thorough and perceptive study of the political and parliamentary confusions that characterized France during the first eight months of World War II. Although the causes of military defeat in 1940 are not ignored, they remain an issue subsidiary to the author's objective of clarifying the political scene. The thesis advanced is that the wartime Vichy governmental experiment can be explained by a history of the Third Republic but that the last months of the republic cannot be understood or explained by Vichy. Subthemes explore the role of the Communists, charges of rightist plots to destroy the republic, and accusations of pacifism directed against the Left before and during the Phony War. Rossi-Landi concludes that most of the blame for a military disaster in 1940 falls on French military leaders; the political contribution to defeat was indecision and the inability of the Daladier and Reynaud ministries to disavow their familiar world of parliamentary crisis in time to face a national crisis.

La drôle de guerre has most of the merits and some of the defects of its original form as a doctoral thesis. The usual research materials on the period have been fully utilized and skillfully supplemented by personal interviews with some three dozen political veterans. The appendixes are a useful reference tool with a detailed political chronology and the vote of every deputy on six key parliamentary issues. The reader is well advised, however, to have a thorough background in twentieth-century French politics, for a steady stream of minor political figures rush through the book's two hundred pages only to disappear into the obscurity that marked their political careers. Among the major politicians, Édouard Daladier most clearly reflects the unhappy meeting in 1939-40 between tumultuous events and indecisive leaders.

The number of books by scholars and popularizers on the critical months before the German invasion of France in 1940 grows steadily. Rossi-Landi has made a solid contribution to that body of literature. But if his study is not the last word on the politics of the dying Third Republic, one hopes that it will be the last with the same not so drôle title.

W. E. ADAMS

Arizona State University

ANTHONY HARTLEY. Gaullism: The Rise and Fall of a Political Movement. New York: Outerbridge and Dienstfrey; distrib. by E. P. Dutton and Company, New York. 1971. Pp. xv, 373. $10.00.

FRANK L. WILSON. The French Democratic Left, 1963-1969: Toward a Modern Party System. Stanford: Stanford University Press. 1971. Pp. 258. $8.95.

These two very different works are studies in political failure. In approach and methodology they have little in common. Yet they complement one another in throwing light on the very recent past. They tend to show that it is still true that "the new France," however transformed economically and socially since 1940, is far from having found a moderate democratic politics through which to express its aspirations and resolve its conflicts.

Anthony Hartley's well-written history of Charles de Gaulle and his politics is based on wide reading in the general literature. Disclaiming originality he nevertheless has the advantage of being able to survey the whole career and make some estimate of the immediate legacy at least. His picture of de Gaulle is that of a man whose basic thought had crystallized long before he emerged from obscurity (allowing, all the same, that the general altered his views on the colonial problem considerably after 1946). To this rather rigid and Manichaean thought was added the guile and political skill learned in the great adventure of the war. "By 1946 it can be said that the main elements of what Gaullism was later to be under the Fifth Republic had been assembled, though the proportions in which they were to be present at any one time were to change considerably over the years." The RPF experience and the years of exile sharpened his cunning before the return to power in 1958. By 1962 this "prince of equivocation" (the phrase is Robert Buron's) finally brought the Algerian war to an end, but not without ending also the ambiguity of the presidential role, revealing that in the new circumstances of the Evian peace he intended to maintain his exceptional powers, to be not the "arbitrator" but the "guide" of the nation, and to find his support in popular election, in plebiscites, and, however reluctantly, in the leadership of a great electoral party. Ultimately of course the nation tired of him. The gap between foreign policy objectives and achievements widened, the proposals for domestic reform ran into massive opposition, and the common taint of scandal sullied the movement. What survived the wreck of the May 1968 events was in fact this large conservative party, increasingly remote from the original Gaullist mystique, devoted to "bread and butter politics," as Hartley says. In sum, he sees "the Gaullism of de Gaulle" as having been no more than "an episode" and judges it good that it will remain only as "a current of intellectual intransigence." The lingering moroseness of the durs des durs may be viewed as the highest compliment to the permanence and flexibility of the Fifth Republic's institutions, freed at last from the personality that shaped them.

It would be something quite different, however, to suggest that the politics of the Right has been reformed. Hartley alludes to "exemplary drama" yielding now to "the moneyed radicalism of the Third Republic." It is precisely France's failure to have the politics of her modernized institutions that concerns Frank Wilson. His is a clear and thoughtful book on the collapse of the attempt of the non-Communist Left to break with the traditionalist, fragmented tyrannies of the past. Whatever the possibilities for the UDR to become a great modern "catchall party" (Otto Kirchheimer's notion, which Wilson adopts and considers to be both the prevailing model in West Europe and the real hope for France), the democratic Left evidently destroyed its chances to do as much. So unyielding in their parochial natures were the Socialist and Radical parties, so powerful was the pull of ideology, so jealous were the relationships between rival leaders, so intransigent was the position of communism and so serious its appeal, that the hopeful phenomenon of the political clubs (which emerged in the 1960s to renew the old parties) found itself swallowed up in the rivalries and doctrinaire inflexibilities of those it sought to reform. This is spelled out at length in illuminating chapters on the abortive presidential campaign of Gaston Defferre in 1965 and the fate of François Mitterrand's Fédération de la Gauche Démocrate et Socialiste, which, unlike the mayor of Marseilles, took the road to leftist unity by way of the shrines of the past and so naturally succumbed to the old priesthood whose disastrous archetypal figure is Guy Mollet. On this reading, Mitterrand's fundamental error was to seek to remake the Left by uniting old factions, observing ideological imperatives, and rejecting "the new institutions, techniques and styles" of the Fifth Republic. The consequence was defeat in the 1968 elections and, in Wilson's judgment, a non-Communist Left more divided than before the general's return in 1958. The Left had failed to adapt to the changed social and economic situation of postwar France and Europe; its ineffectiveness was made more profound by refusal to accept political change as well. All this is admirably laid out here. Wilson's conclusions follow of course from acceptance of the Kirchheimer "catchall party" model as being the most valid for the reshaping of French politics. He makes a convincing case in his useful, concise, and agreeably written study of an instructive episode.

JOHN C. CAIRNS
University of Toronto

C. G. AMINOFF. Nyuppsatta truppförband i Finland 1770-1808: Administrativ historia och personal [The Newly Established Military Units in Finland 1770-1808: Administrative History and the Personnel]. (Historiallisia Tutkimuksia, Number 82.) Helsingfors: Suomen Historiallinen Seura. 1971. Pp. 319.

This study examines the administrative organization and the social composition of the officer and noncommissioned officer corps of the new military units established in Finland during the last forty years of Swedish rule. There exists a fairly extensive literature on the eighteenth-century military history of Finland, but C. G. Aminoff has broken some new ground and his work complements, in particular, Kaarlo Wirilander's studies of the military hierarchy. He makes some interesting observations concerning the changing distribution of officer vacancies between members of the nobility and the non-nobles, on different age groups, and on the nature and extent of nepotism. It appears, though, that the rather extensive data he has diligently assembled would have allowed for a more systematic analysis of these matters. Such an analysis and a concluding chapter, tying together several threads that remain disconnected, would have enhanced the value of the work. Its present value lies mainly in the sketches on military organization and in the compiled data for social historians.

PEKKA KALEVI HAMALAINEN
University of Wisconsin,
Madison

VOLKER PRESS. Calvinismus und Territorialstaat: Regierung und Zentralbehörden der Kurpfalz 1559-1619. (Kieler historische Studien, Number 7.) Stuttgart: Ernst Klett Verlag. 1970. Pp. 543. DM 84.

Based on a dissertation of 1966 this study relates in great detail the political and religious institutions of the Palatinate in the sixteenth century and the activities of the rulers and the court officials who gave life and meaning to the offices they held. The author thus extends the earlier works of Max Steinmetz, Gretl Vogelgesang, and Henry J. Cohn on the government of the Palatinate in the fifteenth and early sixteenth centuries. Manuscript materials from family and state archives were extensively used in the collection of numerous details about the administration and policies of the Palatinate during the period 1508-1619. Primary attention is given to the administrations between the Religious Peace of Augsburg (1555) and the outbreak of the Thirty Years' War, catastrophic for the Palatinate, for it was during this period that the electorate played an important political and religious role in German and European affairs.

The personalities and functions of scores of secular and church officials and the groupings and factions in the administration are described. The impact on the rulers and policies of such officials, ranging from the Grosshofmeister, the chancellors, marshals, and justices to appraisers and customs clerks, is fully told. The author plans to extend the research for the present work and publish an alphabetical-prosopographical catalog of all officials in the central administration of the Palatinate during the period 1544-1622.

With the changing religious scene, which of course not only had political overtones but also meant changes in officials, these were exciting and important years in the Palatinate. Under the reigns of Ludwig V and his brother, Friedrich II, the country, and therefore also the officials, gradually became Lutheran with reforms instituted in church and university administration. At first this form of Protestantism was quite moderate, but in the reign of Ottheinrich (1556-59) a bitter controversy arose at the University of Heidelberg where Tilemann Heshusen, general-superintendent, professor of theology, and member of the consistory, pushed for a rigorous Lutheranism. Disturbed by this quarrel the next elector, Friedrich III, led the territory to the adoption of a Calvinism in which the spirit of Melancthon was noticeable. The ruler strengthened his own personal inclination to Calvinism by calling to Heidelberg the young scholars Zacharius Ursinus and Kaspar Olevian. These men worked with the elector in producing in 1563 the important and widely adopted Heidelberg Catechism.

Since Calvinism was not one of the official religions authorized by the Peace of Augsburg, the publication of the catechism and the growing Calvinism of the Palatinate created an issue in the Empire. However, Friedrich withstood the pressures exerted upon him and proceeded to introduce a firm church discipline.

The opposing views of the theologian and physician Thomas Erastus, who favored a system in which the civil government exercised church discipline, were later to give rise to the term "Erastianism." When Ludwig VI succeeded his father in 1576, a Lutheran reaction occurred and the Calvinistic professors, preachers, and officials were expelled—to spread their Calvinism elsewhere. A similar change-over of officials occurred after the accession of Johann Casimir in 1583 when the Reformed religion was restored.

A bibliography of unpublished and printed sources and an extensive index of persons and places complete this lengthy and interesting study of the officials, many of whom had been previously little known, who worked with and influenced the policies of the rulers of the Palatinate during an important period in the history of this state.

KARL H. DANNENFELDT

Arizona State University

FRITZ WOLFF, editor, with the assistance of HILDBURG SCHMIDT-VON ESSEN. Acta Pacis Westphalicae. Series III-A, Protokolle. Volume 4, Die Beratungen der katholischen Stände. Part 1, 1645-1647. Münster: Aschendorffsche Verlagsbuchhandlung. 1970. Pp. lxxvii, 585. DM 112.

In 1957 a number of German historians founded the Vereinigung zur Erforschung der Neueren Geschichte to facilitate the publication of documentary material and studies dealing with sixteenth- to twentieth-century history. As one of its major projects this society decided on the publication, under the general editorship of Max Braubach and Konrad Repgen, of documentary material of the Peace of Westphalia. At first sight it might appear surprising that so much money, effort, and talent would be devoted to the publication of purely political material of the seventeenth century—an undertaking more characteristic of nineteenth-century historiography than modern historical interests. But there is no doubt that the Peace of Westphalia not only profoundly influenced the European state system and the future course of German history; it was also the first example of a major European peace conference. Older incomplete collections of documentary material, published in the eighteenth century, are hard to get and, in any case, do not meet modern scholarly standards. A modern and complete edition of the relevant material will prove a boon to seventeenth-century historians. The publication is divided into three series, each of which will have several volumes: first, instructions; second, correspondence; third, transcripts, diaries, and documents. The present volume, the fifth that has appeared so far, is devoted to the transcripts of discussions in the Corpus Catholicorum.

For the purpose of solving the divisive religious problems that had helped turn the empire into a battle field, the Estates met in 1645 not as the three houses of the Imperial Diet where the Catholics had the majority, but divided along religious lines into the Corpus Evangelicorum and the Corpus Catholicorum. The subject of the negotiations was the gravamina, the grievances, that the Protestants had last presented to the Imperial Diet in 1640. The grievances mainly dealt with the disputed provisions of the Peace of Augsburg of 1555 and, therefore, with the political structure of the empire and the future of Catholicism and Protestantism in Central Europe. As it turned out, the Catholic Estates were quite intransigent, forcing the emperor to negotiate on his own the religious questions with Sweden and the Protestants.

An official transcript of the deliberations in the Corpus Catholicorum was not kept. But the twenty ambassadors of the fifty-five Catholic Estates were free to take notes of the discussions and decisions. Fritz Wolff, the editor of the present volume, has collected transcripts of the various ambassadors in twenty-three archives and identified with much skill their dependence upon each other. He based his edition upon the most complete and detailed manuscript, the transcript kept by the ambassador of the city of Cologne. Historians will be grateful that he published, apart from repetitions and minor points, the entire original text of the transcript. The text of the Cologne manuscript was supplemented by the transcripts of other ambassadors whenever the latter contained additional or more detailed information. The editor is thus able to offer a text that, by and large, records verbatim the entire discussions, revealing in fascinating detail the position taken by individual ambassadors. Altogether seventy-eight transcripts appear in this volume, covering the period from October 1, 1646, to April 2, 1647. The editor also provides an extremely useful scholarly apparatus. In short, this volume is a fine example of intelligent scholarship. I look forward to the appearance of future volumes of this excellent publication.

CLAUS-PETER CLASEN
University of California,
Los Angeles

DIETRICH GERHARD, editor. Ständische Vertretungen in Europa im 17. und 18. Jahrhundert. (Veröffentlichungen des Max-Planck-Instituts für Geschichte, Number 27. Studies Presented to the International Commission for the History of Representative and Parliamentary Institutions, Number 37.) Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht. 1969. Pp. 437. DM 44.

The history of parliamentary institutions, so well explored in France and in England, had not attracted the attention of German scholars until after World War II. Perhaps the main reason for the rather late flowering of revisionistic studies of this problem was the dominance of the schematic and typological theory of political development elaborated by Gustav Schmoller and modified by Otto Hintze and his students. According to the article by Sven Palme that is included here, in Sweden as well as in Germany historians friendly to the cause of state building and absolutism long denigrated representative assemblies. Consequently, the study of the parliamentary bodies of the Old Regime became the study of institutions that were weak and that failed or, more charitably, the study of a vanished form of political life. This collection of articles, however, incorporates new interpretations and fresh evidence in an overall survey of the Stände at national and provincial levels for Central, Northern, and Eastern Europe. No specific articles on France, Holland, or Russia have been included. The contributions, mostly by German scholars, are of high quality.

In his valuable introduction to the collection Gerhard indicates that the work of Roland Mousnier, L. B. Namier, R. R. Palmer, and Franklin L. Ford has enabled German specialists to revise their views on the Estates. The Stände were not always rivals of monarchical or princely power; they sometimes were associates of it. In fact in Sweden, Bavaria, and Poland the deputies of the Estates sometimes obtained the upper hand over the ruler for a period only to be subordinated later; periods of absolutism alternated with periods of the Ständestaat. Particularly influential in developing this revisionist position, so evident in most of the contributions, was the pioneering work of O. Brunner, Land und Herrschaft (1965).

Foreign policy and war played a very large role in allowing particular rulers to achieve a short-term dominance over their Estates. The Thirty Years' War and the wars of Louis XIV enabled the rulers of Bavaria, Sweden, Poland, Hanover, and Hesse to secure control of their Estates because the latter feared military invasion. In Hesse, as Karl Demandt indicates, the practice of renting out of soldiers was instituted by the ruler after 1677 partly to escape financial bondage to the Estates. During the relatively peaceful years of the eighteenth century the Estates were able to recoup their ancient authority. Hanover fell more and more under the dominance of its Estates following the departure of the elector to become king of England. As Rudolf Vierhaus indicates, the Hanoverian Elector had to negotiate with six different Estates and could not, perhaps, maintain his grasp while in England. John Sobieski was never an absolute monarch, only a very popular leader of the multitude of Polish nobles; when his work was finished his successors could never obtain wholehearted support from the Diet. The eighteenth-century "renaissance" of the Estates throughout Europe may have been due to generally more peaceful conditions on the international scene than had previously existed.

Hintze did not always adhere to his earliest interpretation of the development of the Ständestaat to the Gesamtstaat, as Gerhard Oestreich indicates in his excellent discussion. Primarily in the later, post-World War I years Hintze saw the Estates as forerunners of modern constitutional and representative governments. Thus he modified his earlier view that the Territorial State was "dualistic" and consisted of a stalemate between its two component parts: Stände and ruler. This latter-day interpretation has led many of the contributors to this collection to maintain that there was indeed a continuity between the Old Regime Estates and nineteenth- and twentieth-century parliamentary bodies. Gerhard in fact maintains that one cannot understand the latter without examination of their Ständestaat predecessors. Palme reveals that a number of contemporary Swedish historians have re-examined the "Freedom Period" of the Swedish parliamentary supremacy of certain decades of the eighteenth century in order to clarify the rise of Social Democracy and representative government later. The Estates of Württemberg were preludes to modern constitutional assemblies because they were closer in outlook to the common people, despite their unrepresentative character, than was the ruler. Gerhard A. Ritter sees a similar continuity in the "balance of power" in the English governmental system.

But most of the contributors remain dubious about the validity of this concept. Hartmut Lehmann sees the dependence of the Württemberg Estates on legal precedent their greatest strength, but also their greatest weakness. While old rights and concessions were zealously guarded by Ständestaat lawyers, nothing was done to institute new legislation or a new political relationship. This extremely important conclusion must be kept in mind in regard to all of the other states covered in this survey. Perhaps the Estates everywhere, except in England and possibly Sweden, were really antiquated strongholds of petty local privilege, as much captives of the Old Regime as the rulers.

On a less ambitious level many of these articles provide useful information on the actual workings of the Estates. Hans Roos claims that the Polish aristocracy, eight per cent of the total population, erected a kind of "gentleman's democracy" and influenced political radicalism in Europe; this is provocative but exaggerated. Palme's "party system" in Sweden may have been nothing more than the usual battle of cliques or cabals that characterized the life of most small and large Estates in Europe. How did the Swedish parliament, for example, reflect the desires of the majority of Swedes? György Bonis condemns the Hungarian Estates for their "baroque sterility." Peter Baumgart shows that the Electoral Mark Landschaft remained important during the eighteenth century in Prussia: this is a valuable contribution. Herbert Hassinger provides information on the important local administrative services maintained by the German Austrian Estates until 1848. Generally, the Estates throughout Europe were occupied, routinely, with a multitude of small complaints and petitions, "private members' bills" as Bonis aptly calls them.

These articles not only pinpoint some of the central issues of the history of the European Estates, they also introduce the student of comparative history to the local literature. Palme, for example, gives a valuable introduction to the sources for Sweden. The shadow of Hintze, while still covering much of the work of these scholars, is beginning to retreat. Günter Birtsch recommends more intensive and extensive research, particularly on social and economic factors. The paucity of information has doubtless persuaded most of these writers to follow the known road of constitutional and political history rather than to embark on the trail provided by Fernand Braudel and his followers.

HUBERT C. JOHNSON
University of Saskatchewan,
Saskatoon

INGRID BÁTORI. Die Reichsstadt Augsburg im 18. Jahrhundert: Verfassung, Finanzen und Reformversuche. (Veröffentlichungen des Max-Planck-Instituts für Geschichte, Number 22.) Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht. 1969. Pp. 210. DM 21.

By the eighteenth century the Free Imperial City of Augsburg had lost much of its former glory. In a thoroughly documented and extremely detailed study, Dr. Bátori tries to refute the commonly accepted view that it was without historical interest. Unlike other recent historians of European cities, the author devotes little attention to social and cultural affairs. Instead she concentrates on the interaction between Augsburg's constitutional arrangements and its financial practices. She is intrigued by the contrast between the prosperity of its private citizens and the disarray of its public finances. Much of the latter she ascribes to an antiquated constitution. Based on the Regiment imposed upon the city by Charles V in 1548, the government was hierarchical, exclusive, overwhelmingly patrician, and rife with nepotism. Public offices were too numerous for a city that had lost half of its population since the sixteenth century. Because of the necessity for religious parity between Catholics and Protestants in higher positions, public offices were also often overstuffed.

A final decline began with the harvest failure of 1770-71, which cut off Augsburg's usual sources of supply and forced the magistrates to spend vast sums buying grain abroad. From then until the end of the century increasing expenditures were financed by borrowing at high interest rates, while attempts at internal financial changes were frustrated by the cumbersome political structure. Various reform commissions came to nothing and efforts to broaden the constitutional base were rejected by the imperial authorities. After 1795 opposition to the magistrates came most prominently from the merchants, who were still largely excluded from the government. This opposition, in the author's opinion, was nonrevolutionary and constructive. It was also ineffective, as was one last vast expenditure by the magistrates, a bribe to the French to preserve Augsburg's independence. The government had become isolated. Even many patricians no longer supported it. "Voulez-vous être de la Bavière?" Napoleon asked a delegation of patricians and merchants. The financial problems of an independent Augsburg were at an end.

EDITH M. LINK
Hunter College,
City University of New York

HEDWIG BEHRENS. Mechanikus Franz Dinnendahl (1775-1826), Erbauer der ersten Dampfmaschinen an der Ruhr: Leben und Wirken aus zeitgenössischen Quellen. (Schriften zur rheinisch-westfälischen Wirtschaftsgeschichte, Number 22.) Cologne: Rheinisch-Westfälischen Wirtschaftsarchiv zu Köln. 1970. Pp. xvii, 579.

Unlike the other volumes in this series of studies on Rhine-Ruhr industrial history published by the Rhenish-Westphalian Economic Archive in Cologne, Miss Behrens's well-edited book is not a monograph at all but a compilation of documents relevant to the activities of Franz Dinnendahl, machinist. The son of a miller, educated only in rural grade schools, at first a miner's helper before he learned the mechanist's trade, Dinnendahl was one of the founders of the Rhenish machine tool industry as well as a leading mining entrepreneur. The cohort of other Rhineland founder families, for example the Krupps, Stinneses and Springorums, he belonged to an artisan class that learned and applied a new industrial technology and laid the foundations of West Germany's later industrial revolution. Capital was scarce—most of it was borrowed from wealthy aristocrats who played a banker's role. Manufacture of steam engines (as good as those of Boulton and Watt, Dinnendahl thought) led him into metallurgy and mining enterprises. The boom of the Napoleonic period ended in a depression that proved disastrous, and as he had overextended himself while coal markets collapsed after 1815, Dinnendahl went bankrupt. Yet his businessman's vision was not wrong. The speculative extension of deep mining failed in 1815–22 because capital was scarce, government regulation was excessive, market conditions were poor, and the machines available could not yet prevent flooding in deep shafts.

The author used Dinnendahl's interesting autobiography (from the family firm's archives), and sources from local town and mining company archives. There is also a useful technical glossary and a good introduction by Hermann Kellenbenz. As the history of early industrialization is often fragmentary, further studies of this sort for other parts of Germany ought to be encouraged.

HELEN P. LIEBEL
University of Alberta

SIEGFRIED SCHMIDT. Robert Blum: Vom Leipziger Liberalen zum Märtyrer der deutschen Demokratie. Weimar: Hermann Böhlhaus Nachfolger. 1971. Pp. 336. DM 24.

Robert Blum is remembered more for his death before the muzzles of Field-Marshal Windischgrätz's firing squad than for his life as a leader of Saxon and German democratic forces before 1848. His martyrdom for the German revolutionary cause has assured him a firm place in the authorized pantheon of German working-class heroes: a recent collection of workers' songs recorded in East Germany, for example, begins with a Robert-Blum-Lied. The undeniable national popularity of Robert Blum led to a spate of literature and song after his death (including a standard biography by his son) followed by decades of comparative neglect.

Now Siegfried Schmidt of Jena seeks to rescue Blum from the "shadow of falsifying bourgeois interpretation" (p. 7). The preface, which acknowledges Franz Mehring's biographical canon of mixing admiration with criticism, awakens hope that this new work might qualify or overturn the widely held impression among nonsocialist historians that Blum was overrated as a politician and confused or vacillating as a political and social analyst.

Such a hope is not rewarded. The author clearly admires Blum greatly, too often gliding over failings of character and tactics. In really serious cases he attributes such failings to the impersonal force of petit-bourgeois false consciousness. Following Engels (but not improving on him) Schmidt emphasizes Blum's transcendence of his milieu rather than the milieu itself. As a surrogate he presents an excessive amount of general background material already available in East German textbooks. Despite references to widespread archival work, the author leaves the impression that he was unable to unearth much new information, for he sometimes resorts to undocumented speculation. Blum's childhood and youth flash by in a handful of pages, while 1848 consumes a good half of this biography. Psychologically Blum emerges flat and one-dimensional.

Despite Schmidt's somewhat repetitive style, he must be credited for rendering his uncomplicated explanations in uncomplicated language. To add unnecessarily to the woes of this book, the publisher has provided no index but has allowed many technical errors to slip into print. With all these faults Robert Blum is a pedestrian but readable political biography centered heavily on the background of 1848. It could have been done better; but unless more information can be discovered, it is doubtful whether it must be done over.

CHARLES E. MCCLELLAND
University of Pennsylvania

WALTER WAGNER. Geschichte des K. K. Kriegsministeriums. Volume 2, 1866–1888. (Studien zur Geschichte der österreichisch-ungarischen Monarchie, Number 10.) Vienna: Hermann Böhlhaus Nachf. 1971. Pp. 287. DM 56.

This second volume of a projected three-volume history of the Austrian War Ministry from 1848 to 1918 covers the twenty-odd years following upon the Prusso-Austrian War of 1866. It deals with the reorganization of the army after Austria's defeat in that war and the establishment of an autonomous Hungary within the Empire. The resulting administrative, organizational, and linguistic difficulties and their solutions are covered with expertise and thoroughness. Dr. Wagner also discusses at great length the troubled relations between army commanders and civilian authorities, with Emperor Francis Joseph serving as a rather unpredictable arbiter of their quarrels. Specialists in Austrian military history will find the book a rich source of information on the period in question.

ANDREAS DORPALEN
Ohio State University

HANSGEORG LOEBEL, editor. 100 Jahre deutsche Geschichte. (Niedersächsischen Landeszentrale für Politische Bildung.) Leer: Verlag Gerhard Rautenberg. 1971. Pp. 179.

The centenary of the proclamation of the German Empire on January 18, 1871, has produced a flood of books, pamphlets, and articles in the German Federal Republic seeking to interpret the significance of national unification in the light of the historical experience of the last hundred years. Some of this literature is of interest primarily for the world of scholarship, but most of it was intended for the general reading public. Hansgeorg Loebel has collected eight articles in the latter category for inclusion in a thin volume dealing not only with the Bismarckian era but with the history of Germany since then as well. Although the authors are trained scholars their purpose is to summarize and popularize the conclusions of professional historiography rather than to present the findings of original research. The result has some of the quality of a Sunday supplement, yet it is a superior example of that genre. Avoiding the quaint and sensational it attempts to enlighten not to titillate. Its interest for the historian, nevertheless, lies in what it reveals regarding the view of the past offered by the popular press to the educated public in Germany.

The articles themselves, though they are all interpretive rather than investigative, vary considerably in quality. The one by Theodor Schieder analyzing the changing concepts of the German nation from the eighteenth century to the present is a fine example of popular history. Sound and thoughtful, it seeks to familiarize the intelligent layman with the judgments of scholarship. Ingomar Bog presents a solid yet readable account of economic developments since 1871 that successfully avoids the extremes of simplification and complexity. Carl Jantke describes with skill the relations between employers and employees during the last hundred years and their shifting attitudes toward one another. On the other hand, the article by Friedrich Klemm depicting technological progress is little more than a lengthy catalog of names and inventions unencumbered by any ties to political, economic, or social history. Richard Nürnberger offers a familiar and pedestrian summary of German foreign policy, especially since 1918, popular in tone but undistinguished in style. And Hansgeorg Loebel himself, while entitling his contribution "Germans on the Other Side of Our Borders," deals exclusively with the Teutonic minority in Latvia, Estonia, and Romania. Many historians will want to leaf through these pages for their flavor, but only a few will consider it worthwhile to read them with intensive care.

THEODORE S. HAMEROW
University of Wisconsin,
Madison

BRADLEY F. SMITH. Heinrich Himmler: A Nazi in the Making, 1900-1926. (Hoover Institution Publication 93.) Stanford: Hoover Institution Press, Stanford University. 1971. Pp. ix, 211. $6.95.

Each of us, when reflecting upon the formation of his conscious personality, is aware of the complexity, ambiguity, and even chanciness of the steps. Few modern men seem to believe that they "made themselves" or even that they just "unfolded" out of innate tendencies. Yet when many scholars, even historians, confront the lives of leading national socialists, attempts are made to establish uniformities, integrities, continuities, and causal sequences based almost exclusively on individuals' personal choices. Although Bradley Smith's subtitle might suggest a rather preconceived outcome for his study of Heinrich Himmler's childhood and youth, his book is truly a milestone on the road to scientific biography applied to those normally stereotyped as "Nazis." Working carefully from the Himmler family's personal papers, which Himmler's personal staff had assembled, as well as from Himmler's boyhood diaries and from correspondence scattered in party, SS, and other captured German records, Smith reconstructs a believable human being with whom one can sympathize and occasionally identify. There is more contour and contrast in the portrait of this awkward, talkative, eager boy than in the earlier sketch Smith did with Werner Angress in 1959 (Journal of Modern History, 31 [1959]: 206-24).

Compared with Peter Loewenberg's intensely interpretive (but highly schematic) essay on Himmler's "unsuccessful adolescence" (AHR, 76 [1971]: 612-41), Smith's narrative is richer with data and evidence and more restrained in generalization. Smith has no need to succumb to tempting allusions and analogies with the career of the Reichsführer SS; he has adequate factual material to describe a twenty-one year old or an eighteen year old, and that is what he writes about. While Smith is very effective in bringing out what Himmler's parents "did to" him, the art of the book lies in our ability to watch the youth "try on" alternative roles and behaviors offered by the kaleidoscopic processes of 1918-22. His effort to integrate for himself the contradictory values and tendencies of his background and his expanding horizons is extremely well portrayed. Gradually (1923 is sketchy due to missing diary sections) Himmler builds himself a niche in the Hitler movement and as he does so becomes more self-assured and competent. Without a doubt, as he becomes more mature he becomes more comfortable. The needs he was able to meet in the fascist political milieu made it worth his while to follow and serve Hitler. Yet his personality was no carbon copy of Hitler, Strasser, or Roehm. He was on his own. Smith gives us just enough glimpses of the man in his mid-twenties to enable us to acquire a distaste for this busybody, prude, and intrigue artist. But now he is a real live, three-dimensional participant in history.

ROBERT KOEHL

*University of Wisconsin,
Madison*

WILHELM DEIST, editor. Militär und Innenpolitik im Weltkrieg 1914-1918. In two volumes. (Kommission für Geschichte des Parlamentarismus und der politischen Parteien Bad Godesberg; Militärgeschichtliches Forschungsamt Freiburg im Breisgau. Quellen zur Geschichte des Parlamentarismus und der politischen Parteien. Second Series, Militär und Politik, Number 1, parts 1 and 2.) Düsseldorf: Droste Verlag. 1970. Pp. clxxiii, 647; 651-1530. DM 184 the set.

Although many military records of Imperial Germany, including practically all files of the Prussian army authorities, were lost when the Potsdam Heeresarchiv burned down in 1945, meaningful research on the army's role in the Second Reich is nevertheless still possible. In addition to the archives of the imperial navy, which survived the last war almost intact and constitute a fair source of information on some army matters, the private papers of many prominent Prussian officers have lately become accessible as well—most of them now being in the custody of the Bundesarchiv-Militärarchiv at Freiburg. Moreover, since some Bundesstaaten of the Second Reich had war ministries and certain other semi-autonomous army institutions of their own, valuable evidence, including many reports and directives from the "central" army authorities in Berlin and, during the war, also from the field headquarters of the general staff, was preserved in various regional archives.

In preparing this edition of documents on the German military and domestic policy during the First World War, Dr. Deist has made thorough use of all West German archival holdings. The privately controlled Hindenburg Nachlass as well as documents in the DDR were unfortunately not accessible to him. Expertly introduced and annotated, the material he has assembled—official papers, private letters, diary entries, etc.—offers much fresh information on the activities of the German military authorities on the home front, particularly as regards their attitude toward the civilian branches of the government and their role in the maintenance of public order, in censorship and propaganda, and in the economic mobilization of the country. On certain issues that transcended the realm of Innenpolitik, such as the submarine controversy, the debate on war aims, or developments in Alsace-Lorraine, the documentation has been deliberately kept to a minimum, but these space-saving limitations do not materially affect the value of the collection.

Recent studies, notably Gerald D. Feldman's Army, Industry, and Labor in Germany, 1914-1918 (Princeton, 1966), have already shown that some German army officers in positions of influence during the war were relatively "progressive" in their approach to economic and social problems. Numerous documents in Deist's collection not only reinforce these findings but also indicate that there were a good many "deputy commanding generals" and other military functionaries who carried out their administrative responsibilities on the home front with far more political acumen and sensitivity to the mood of the civilian population than they have usually been given credit for. That many other officers were reactionary in outlook or inept in handling domestic affairs is, of course, well known—and amply documented here as well.

The collection is rounded off by several useful charts on organizational matters and a map of the corps command areas. The Register, prepared by Hans Umbreit, is over a hundred pages long, but many entries are rather imprecise. General von Bissing, for example, is listed as governor general of Belgium until 1918 (he died in April 1917), and General Wild von Hohenborn is identified as deputy war minister during a period when he was actually commanding a division at the front or serving as quartermaster general in the OHL. It is to be hoped that in a new edition these and many similar slips in the index will be eliminated from what is otherwise a meticulously edited and informative work.

ULRICH TRUMPENER
University of Alberta

CLAUS GUSKE. Das politische Denken des Generals von Seeckt: Ein Beitrag zur Diskussion des Verhältnisses Seeckt-Reichswehr-Republik. (Historische Studien, Number 422.) Lübeck: Matthiesen Verlag, 1971. Pp. 283. DM 45.

Mr. Guske has written a thorough, complex, and organic presentation and analysis of the political thought of General Hans von Seeckt and of the relationship of his political thought to his actions in the major crises of the Weimar Republic's early years. After a brief sketch of Seeckt's background and early life, the author turns to a careful consideration of the development of Seeckt's political ideas and conceptions during the course of World War I, providing a survey both of the enduring skeleton of his political frame of reference and the variations upon this theme that indicated the influence upon the general of contemporary events and currents of thought. His third chapter is devoted to a systematic exposition of Seeckt's political thought, with primary emphasis upon its constant elements. The fourth and final chapter considers and presents the thought and actions of Seeckt during his period of activity as a senior officer or the de facto commander in chief of the Reichswehr. A short summary concludes the book.

In general, Guske has achieved his purpose. His presentation is well organized, clear, and effective, and his arguments are generally compelling. He has used the available sources and the secondary literature in the field in an exemplary manner, exploiting it for evidence and examining it for coherence, accuracy, and contradictions. His second and third chapters, however, suffer to some extent from unnecessary repetition both of Seeckt's ideas and of Guske's commentary on these ideas. Had these chapters been pruned the book would be easier to read and have a sharper impact.

The book is valuable because it pulls together Seeckt's ideas regarding politics and examines them for consistency, for applicability, and for their influence upon his actions. The analysis is fair and balanced, even though it is clear at times that the author is not at one with Seeckt in his beliefs, which must have made his task sometimes difficult. Guske corrects errors and refutes allegations regarding Seeckt's ideas, attitudes, and actions in the work of such historians as F. L. Carsten, Walther Goerlitz, and Wolfgang Sauer on the basis of factual evidence and Seeckt's turn of mind and political concepts.

On the debit side, aside from repetition, some of the author's points seem to be heavily belabored. And in viewing the factors leading Seeckt to take a conservative viewpoint and to see life in terms of a continual struggle, Mr. Guske might well have considered more specifically the impact of the military life and professional values, along with those he presents. He might also have given more consideration to the years after 1924 in Seeckt's active career and particularly to the circumstances of his departure from office. Finally, in a book dealing with the general's political thought one misses any mention of his specific reactions to National Socialism in the later years of the republic and the early years of the Third Reich.

In sum, Mr. Guske has provided the historian of Weimar Germany and the student of political science and political thought with a valuable compendium and appraisal of Hans von Seeckt as a political thinker.

HAROLD J. GORDON, JR.
University of Massachusetts,
Amherst

DAVID FELIX. Walther Rathenau and the Weimar Republic: The Politics of Reparations. Baltimore: Johns Hopkins Press. 1971. Pp. xii, 210. $9.00.

The tortuous history of reparations has often been told; but this study, concentrating on the early period (1921 and 1922) when Rathenau became a key figure and a symbol for the politics of fulfillment, makes a valuable contribution to the subject. The slender volume is based on very thorough research in the various archives, including the German Central Archive in Potsdam, and hence enriches our knowledge at several points. The Stinnes-Rathenau dispute at Spa, for example, appears less black and white; we learn more about Rathenau's important negotiations with the British government late in 1921; the character and the issues of the German Cabinet crisis late in May 1922 over the Paris agreement of Finance Minister Hermes become clearer. The book thus fills a gap in the literature in English since Ernst Laubach's Die Politik der Kabinette Wirth 1921-1922 (1968) has not been translated.

The book, in spite of dealing with heavy technical material, reads exceedingly well. As to the inner contradictions of the reparation story and reparation politics, they are only too well known: the key role—not yet assumed—of the United States; the unwillingness of the Allies to let Germany earn, by way of foreign trade, the cash to pay reparations; the insoluble transfer problem; the contradiction in the French position of wanting a Germany rich enough to pay indemnities and at the same time one that was ruined; the gap between economic reality and public expectations that forced every official to lie or at least to obscure the truth. Most important is the point made by the author—that any drastic attempt by the German government through radical taxation or confiscation of property to pay the quantities of wealth the Allies demanded would have meant revolution in Germany, that is, violent resistance, and this was something the Allies did not want either.

As for Rathenau himself, the picture that emerges, while drawn critically, is well balanced, full of psychological insight, and the appraisal altogether judicious. Where it remains ambiguous this is due less to the author than to the person he portrays. However, Felix does Rathenau less than justice in not stressing enough his awareness that he was merely one of the first, or the first, who had to jump over the hurdle; that the Ruhr occupation was unavoidable; and that he was simply a sacrifice, not necessarily the last one, which had to be offered for the sake of his country. To describe as simply "morbid vanity" Rathenau's expressed expectation that he sooner or later would be assassinated, underrates the tragic element of his fate.

Where I have to register dissent is in the last two chapters of Mr. Felix's otherwise valuable study. In the first of these, "Tendency to Acts of Violence," the author finds no pattern and tries to discredit the findings of E. J. Gumbel on rather flimsy evidence, while at the same time interpreting Helfferich and his political attitude and activities in too harmless a fashion. Helfferich was much too shrewd not to know what he was doing. Also, anybody who (like me) experienced the mass demonstrations on the occasion of Rathenau's assassination is aware that the workers too knew what the murder meant—that "the enemy stood on the Right" and that "the great tramping of boots and shoes and their heavy marching" was unfortunately the only way they could express their concern for democracy and freedom. Finally the attempt, in only two and a half pages, to "use the present day as starting point . . . and suggest Rathenau's importance in the Republic's life and death and in the world's progress from one great war to the next" (p. 175) is somewhat forced, tenuous, and inadequate. But the book can stand on its own merits, which are considerable, without its "conclusion."

ERIC C. KOLLMAN
Cornell College

MARTIN VOGT, edited and with an introduction by. Die Entstehung des Youngplans, dargestellt vom Reichsarchiv 1931-1933. (Schriften des Bundesarchivs, Number 15.) Boppard am Rhein: Harald Boldt Verlag, 1970. Pp. 396. DM 30.

This book on the genesis of the Young Plan is entangled in the crooked history it seeks to put straight. It began as a rebuttal of the penultimate liar and greatest survivor of German modern times, Hjalmar Schacht, who was skillfully dissociating himself from the Young Plan. He was so successful, although he had been the leading German negotiator, that Hitler reinstalled him in office and then promoted him to a higher level of nefariousness. The rebuttal, in the form of a résumé of the government documents, was ordered by the Brüning cabinet in March 1931, completed in the beginning of 1933, and tactfully forgotten until recently.

Die Entstehung des Youngplans achieves its original purpose honestly. Indeed, the archivist editor, armed as he is with irrefutable documents, cannot quite avoid overkill despite his professional dispassion. Beyond that, the book, assisted by Vogt's fifty-eight-page introduction, is useful as a supplementary account of the later developments in reparations.

The character of the dispute and its wider implications derive from the inherent insolubility of the interwar problem of international indebtedness. The United States was demanding war debt payments without permitting the Allies to build up trade surpluses. The Allies, for their part, were protecting their economies by passing the burden on to Germany in the form of reparations. Germany, similarly inhibited in its foreign trade, had only fiction as defense. Without being called to order, Schacht could alternatively pose as the exponent of purity in economic policy and as an economic statesman authorized to overrule his chancellor on political issues. He had his opportunity because no German cabinet could bear the full responsibility for forcing a hopeless sacrifice upon the German people. The Müller cabinet, too unsteady to risk a confidence vote when it was formed in June 1928, hoped that Schacht would divert upon himself part of the disgrace for dealing with the Allies, but he redirected the disgrace back to the government. The depression, itself partially a product of the situation created by war debts and reparations, buried the Weimar Republic along with all such payments.

Use of the book must be accompanied by reference to other data. The researcher should read his own selection of the documents rather than trusting to the archivist's summaries, however conscientious. The Young Plan, furthermore, was an international bastard, and most of its origins are to be sought outside Germany. Besides the documents of the other governments concerned, the expressions of public opinion are important, while pointed economic statistics are needed to prick the swollen political nonsense.

DAVID FELIX

Bronx Community College,
City University of New York

HANS GÜNTHER HOCKERTS. Die Sittlichkeitsprozesse gegen katholische Ordensangehörige und Priester, 1936/1937: Eine Studie zur nationalsozialistischen Herrschaftstechnik und zum Kirchenkampf. (Veröffentlichungen der Kommission für Zeitgeschichte bei der Katholischen Akademie in Bayern. Series B: Forschungen, Number 6.) Mainz: Matthias-Grünwald-Verlag, 1971. Pp. xxv, 224. DM 35.

This monograph deals with the approximately 250 lawsuits initiated in 1936 and 1937 by the National Socialist regime against Catholic priests and lay brothers on charges of homosexuality. The proceedings were given all the publicity that Joseph Goebbels's propaganda machinery could bring to bear; they were and still are on that account widely dismissed as false and have been compared in style and content to the contemporaneous Moscow "show trials." The charges were in fact substantially true, particularly in the case of the lay brotherhoods. The problem is the more subtle one of the uses to which law may be put. Utilizing a wide variety of sources, including the oral and written testimony of participants in the legal processes, the author has produced a fine case study of justice in the National Socialist state and a valuable addition to the growing body of literature on the Kirchenkampf.

The motives behind the decision to prosecute religious congregations were in part a matter of National Socialist biopolitical quackery, especially Heinrich Himmler's obsession with racial cleanliness. More important considerations were Nazi impatience with the developing stalemate in Church-state relations and a growing unwillingness to tolerate independent sources of authority. In using morals charges to discredit the Church in the eyes of the faithful the Nazis were prepared to take some very considerable risks, including the danger that the regime might itself be discredited at home and abroad. Traditional legal authorities and civil servants, attempting to cling to the pathetic shreds of the Rechtsstaat concept of objective apolitical neutrality, were caught and then compromised in what became a massive, systematic, and lurid propaganda campaign. All too typical was a statement of Justice Minister Franz Gürtner in 1937: "All material from the morals lawsuits is at the unconditional disposal of any party authority. How it shall be used is the concern of the Propaganda Ministry."

The propaganda campaign backfired and did not lead to an "inner crisis of loyalty" in the Church. Most Catholics on the contrary remained steadfast, and Church membership, which had been falling off in the Weimar Republic, actually increased. The test of 1936-37 also demonstrated just how much the hierarchy and faithful needed the support of each other if the Church were to be successful in its principal aim vis-à-vis the regime: preservation of its autonomy. Both the limits of National Socialist control as well as the strengths and limitations of Catholicism's resistance to the regime had thereby become quite plain.

THOMAS A. KNAPP
Loyola University, Chicago

JAMES DOUGLAS-HAMILTON. Motive for a Mission: The Story behind Hess's Flight to Britain. With a foreword by ALAN BULLOCK. [New York:] St. Martin's Press. 1971. Pp. 290. $8.95.

J. BERNARD HUTTON. Hess: The Man and His Mission. Introduction by AIREY NEAVE. New York: Macmillan Company. 1971. Pp. xv, 262. $6.95.

Of these books dealing with one of the more bizarre incidents of World War II, only Douglas-Hamilton's needs to be taken seriously. The author is the second son of the duke of Hamilton, the man Rudolph Hess came to England to visit one Saturday evening in May 1941 during the height of the battle of Britain. Since childhood young Hamilton had been fascinated by the story and after graduating from Oxford set out to discover what had actually happened. The result is an impressive first book. As Alan Bullock, who helped guide the research, has noted in his foreword the study would have been of value even if it did little more than give the English side of the story and present documents made available by the duke of Hamilton.

There is, however, a great deal more. This is, in effect, a dual biography, for inquiry into Hess's motives inevitably led back to Albrecht Haushofer, son of the famous professor and Hess's personal adviser. Unwittingly he planted the idea in the Nazi's simple and fanatic mind that Hess could gain a separate peace with England by approaching Haushofer's English friend, the duke of Hamilton.

Albrecht Haushofer's life, pictured here for the first time with sensitivity and understanding, reveals one of the more tragic aspects of Hitler's Germany. Like many of his contemporaries, young Haushofer was torn by the conflicting demands of patriotism and humanity. He found himself, for mixed motives, serving on diplomatic missions for Ribbentrop and Hitler, while telling himself—as so many others had—that he could mitigate tyranny by working against the system from within. Distrusted and despised by both the Resistance and the Nazis he became his own most bitter critic and welcomed death at the hands of the Gestapo as escape from a life he felt to be hypocritical and base.

There are no major surprises in the chapters on Hess, but the author has given the first authoritative and richly detailed account of a story known previously only in outline form. Hess emerges as a devout Nazi of limited capacity whose loyalty to his Führer was canine. He hoped to recoup his own declining influence by fulfilling what he took to be his master's desire for a separate peace with England. Hitler had not known of Hess's flight, was appalled by it, and understandably discomfited by his own official explanation that his trusted deputy had been off his head for years.

The author draws on his father's papers for a valuable discussion of Britain's reaction to the Hess mission. Englishmen were bemused by his abysmal ignorance of their temperament and his puerile efforts at a separate peace. The government quite wisely decided that Britain could profit most from the incident by letting the Nazis stew in the juices of their own embarrassment. Hess could never understand why his frenetic demands to see the king and the prime minister remained unanswered. Winston Churchill received the startling news over after-dinner brandy and cigars that Hitler's personal deputy had arrived in England. In a latter-day version of Drake and his game of bowls, the great man observed, "Well, Hess or no Hess, I'm going to see the Marx Brothers."

Hutton's regrettable book contains a good chapter on Hess's trial and makes an effective plea for the release of the addled old prisoner of Spandau, but generally this is less history than it is second-rate thriller. The plot is thickened by invented incident and manufactured conversation. The author imagines, for example, that Hitler knew about Hess's flight all along and had plotted it with him. This assertion, like many others drawn from the rumor mills of the time and the not disinterested memories of Frau Ilsa Hess, is given without benefit of evidence, documentation, or bibliography. Mr. Hutton's book, however, is not lacking in an element of suspense: one keeps wondering how wrong he's going to be and why a distinguished house should wish to publish such a manuscript.

R. G. L. WAITE
Williams College

H. G. KOENIGSBERGER. The Habsburgs and Europe, 1516-1660. Ithaca: Cornell University Press, 1971. Pp. xv, 304. $8.50.

PHILIPPE ERLANGER, with the assistance of ERIC NEWEKLOWSKY. L'empereur insolite: Rodolphe II de Habsbourg (1552-1612). Paris: Éditions Albin Michel, 1971. Pp. 262. 24 fr.

Readers who have referred to Koenigsberger's concise and judicious chapters on the Habsburgs in the volumes of the New Cambridge Modern History will find it helpful to have them collected under separate cover, along with his extended essay on the European civil war of the seventeenth century, reprinted from H. R. Trevor-Roper's The Age of Expansion (1968). The author skillfully synthesizes modern work on the dynastic and political events of the period, taking into account pressures from aristocratic estates and popular religious and social movements and culminating in the genuine crisis of societies and their political constitutions that resulted from the Thirty Years' War.

Although the author states that he wrote the three separate essays for a single work, the book is awkwardly organized and tends to neglect the Austrian Habsburgs in the first two parts, and the Spanish in the third. Inevitably the account of the far-flung activities of the dynasty merges into a retelling of the diplomatic history of two centuries. Though this is done with great selectivity and balance one misses the coherent sense of the Casa d'Austria itself, its inner sense of mission, more effectively portrayed in Wandruzka's The House of Habsburg (1956). Koenigsberger's work is useful rather than definitive. It lacks notes or bibliographic references, which may limit its utility to nonspecialists consulting what is otherwise a valuable and sophisticated introduction to the subject.

Erlanger's biography of Rudolf II, the work of a distinguished French literary craftsman who has done perceptive studies of Louis XIV, Richelieu, and other seventeenth-century figures, is a readable essay aimed at deciphering that monarch's enigmatic personality, though essentially directed toward a popular audience. As a popular biography it does not surpass Gertrud von Schwarzenfeld's 1961 account but may be of some interest because of the real dearth of any modern scholarly treatment. For particulars of the reign the serious student must still rely on the 1868 biography by Anton Gindely, and in some instances, on Ranke. Unlike the older works Erlanger's book devotes considerable space to Rudolf's artistic and scientific activities, though the Emperor's importance as a patron of modern science in supporting Tycho Brahe and Johannes Kepler is exaggerated. Erlanger's treatment of the role of Melchior Khlesl in the Bruderzwist is superficial. The book lacks footnotes and a bibliography.

ROGER WINES
Fordham University

GRETE KLINGENSTEIN. Staatsverwaltung und kirchliche Autorität im 18. Jahrhundert: Das Problem der Zensur in der thesesianischen Reform. (Österreich Archiv. Schriftenreihe des Instituts für Österreichkunde.) Vienna: Verlag für Geschichte und Politik, 1970. Pp. 234. Sch. 140.

We tend to view censorship in terms of the struggle to mitigate it, but that perspective can do violence to the historical setting in which censorship systems have functioned. Grete Klingenstein, a promising Austrian scholar, here firmly implants the problem in its context, thus transforming the issue. In eighteenth-century Austria the critical question concerned control over censorship, not its existence. Censorship, then, was an aspect of Josephinism, and the nature of Josephinism provides the key to understanding its role.

Though erudite, Klingenstein does not provide just another specialized monograph. Blending a striking command of both archival and interpretive sources with a keenly developed historical consciousness, she offers an incisive view of eighteenth-century Austrian political and religious development. In treating Josephinism, for example, she recognizes the false dichotomy between Staatskirchentum and Reform Catholicism: Josephinism was both, and the balance between these elements resulted from changes within the Church as well as within the government. Klingenstein argues that the institutionalization of censorship, partially an anti-Jesuit campaign and partially a secularizing of ecclesiastical functions, generated increasing Church-state tensions. Thus Staatskirchentum and Reform Catholicism both combined and conflicted to produce more carefully defined structures and jurisdictions in Church and state. She does not entirely eschew the advantages of a modern perspective, however, for she indicates that the erosion of Van Swieten's influence after 1767 altered the character of censorship by making it utterly a decision of state, thus less liberal than that exercised by Van Swieten and the other "bourgeois intellectuals" (for example, Martini) who had initially formalized the censorship procedures.

Klingenstein's resolution of the puzzler, "How could the devout Maria Theresa approve policies inimical to the state?"—that the empress separated her religious concerns, which were ultimately private, from her monarchical concerns—seems simplistic in light of her emphasis on the complexities of the historical process. Furthermore, her discussion of Jansenism, particularly in connection with Van Swieten, is thin (she did not have available Frank Brechka's recent work on Maria Theresa's physician-adviser, Gerard van Swieten and His world, 1700-1772 [1970]). But these are minor flaws in a work notably well done.

WILLIAM J. MCGILL
Alma College

FRIEDRICH PRINZ. Prag und Wien 1848: Probleme der nationalen und sozialen Revolution im Spiegel der Wiener Ministerratsprotokolle. (Veröffentlichungen des Collegium Carolinum, Number 21.) Munich: Verlag Robert Lerche. 1968. Pp. 180. DM 19.

This book delivers exactly what it promises in the title: a re-evaluation of the relations between the authorities in Prague and Vienna in 1848 based on the hitherto little-used protocols of the Vienna Council of Ministers. Since the protocols naturally offer only a one-sided image, the author has attached to his essay some twenty-five documents drawn mainly from the archives of the Austrian Ministry of Interior and the papers of Alexander Bach. The documents are highly relevant, as is the entire study. It is clear, precise, brief, persuasive, and without pretensions. It is in the best tradition of German political historiography. The point is to show why, in all of revolutionary Europe, the counterrevolution first triumphed in Prague. The author finds the reasons in the forceful personality of Prince Windischgrätz and in the conservatives' skillful exploitation of the clashes between liberal-democratic and nationalist ideologies and interests. These clashes allowed the return of the conservatives and postponed the Central European revolutions by three generations. Professor Prinz turns with equal indignation against historians of the old school, who had seen only the struggle of nationalities in 1848, and against the new, mainly Marxist historians, who see only the supranational class struggle. What these historians have generally neglected, and what the author energetically emphasizes, is the dominant conflict between centralist and federalist forces. While the liberal Vienna government, composed mainly of imperial bureaucrats, fought for Josephinian centralism, the new liberal Prague authority, coalescing around Count Leo Thun and František Palacký and composed mainly of Bohemian aristocrats and Czech grands bourgeois, wished to set up an autonomous Bohemia and thus return to a pre-Maria Theresan state of affairs. Unfortunately for both governments, neither was able to cope with its domestic radical opposition. The military, which came to the aid of the embattled authorities in Prague in June and in Vienna in October 1848, replaced both liberal centralism and liberal federalism with reactionary neo-absolutism. The activities of Windischgrätz, Thun, Pillersdorf, Doblhoff, and Bach are clearly described; the court and the camarilla remain somewhat obscure. The Czech-Moravian-Silesian problem is masterfully explained; the Hungarian question—ultimately more important—was strangely neglected by the Vienna Council of Ministers and could have been enlarged upon by the otherwise most conscientious author.

ISTVAN DEAK
Columbia University

RONALD FLORENCE. Fritz: The Story of a Political Assassin. New York: Dial Press. 1971. Pp. viii, 337. $8.95.

The growth of antiwar sentiment in the United States during the Vietnam conflict lends an air of topicality to this biography of Dr. Friedrich (Fritz) Adler, the assassin of the Austrian prime minister, Count Karl Stürgkh, during World War I. Fritz was an intellectual and a radical, the son of the founder of the Austrian Social Democratic party, and a man more activist than his patient father. Stürgkh was the bureaucratic despot who guided Austria from parliamentary paralysis into dictatorial fortwursteln, unruffled by the outbreak of war.

Such initial enthusiasm for war as existed in the Austrian half of the Dual Monarchy dissipated rapidly, but Stürgkh would not summon parliament into session. The "Imperial and Royal Social Democrats," writes Ronald Florence, were afraid of political repression and unwilling to harass the Stürgkh regime. Loyally, they waited for an end to the war. Fritz Adler, a doctor of physics despairing of the timidity of his father's associates, finally decided that a violent act was necessary. On October 21, 1916, in an act of revolutionary defiance he shot Stürgkh. Fritz turned his public trial into a forum for the indictment of Austria-Hungary and the war, but events passed him by, and the path of revolution was traveled by others. He died in 1960.

Using published and unpublished sources Florence has probed the intellectual and emotional life story of Friedrich Adler in search of the background and motives for the assassination. He weaves his narrative through a thin description of the last years of Austria-Hungary. The lack of footnotes presents a problem, especially when whole phrases from Robert Musil's Man Without Qualities keep turning up in some of the early chapters. The author has smooth prose of his own, however, and has researched his subject well. Despite occasional instances when enthusiasm has led Florence into an inaccurate observation Fritz is an interesting and thoughtful study.

GERALD R. KLEINFELD
Arizona State University

ERWIN BUCHER. Die Geschichte des Sonderbundskrieges. Zurich: Verlag Berichthaus. 1966. Pp. 595.

Bucher's massive book presents a detailed day-to-day account of the critical months in 1847 when a majority of Swiss cantons took up arms to prevent seven Catholic members, who had formed a special alliance (Sonderbund), from seceding from the confederation.

"The last of the Swiss civil wars" had its origins in the archaic and rigid structure of the confederation, which dated back to 1815 and had no built-in mechanism for change. The efforts of the liberals to modernize the make-up of Switzerland became increasingly bitter and violent as religious issues, foremost among them the activities of the Jesuits in Lucerne, began to poison the political conflict. The unyielding and at the same time provocative stance of the conservative Catholic cantons, united in their alliance, led the liberal leaders into actively preparing a military intervention.

War broke out late in October 1847 and came to an end barely a month later when Lucerne surrendered to the federal army. The commander of the federal troops, General William Henri Dufour, making superb use of his strategic advantages and material superiority, had devised a war plan that allowed him to defeat the enemy after a small number of skirmishes and a minimum of losses in human lives and property. His humanitarian and generous treatment of the defeated and occupied cantons led to a rapid healing of the wounds and prepared the ground for the reconciliation between the two parties. Within a year after the end of the war the country underwent the fundamental change that created modern Switzerland when it adopted the constitution of 1848, "the most fortunate and most significant deed" in Swiss history.

Bucher writes political and military history, concentrating on the debates of the delegates to the Federal Diet on the one hand and on the description of the campaigns and skirmishes on the other. The story is frequently interrupted by critical evaluation of the sources, and many documents are quoted at length in their German or French original. Except for Dufour, Ulrich Ochsenbein (president of the Diet and federal colonel), and Constantin Siegwart-Müller (leader of the Sonderbund), few personalities are treated in enough detail to achieve plasticity.

Bucher's interpretations and evaluations are well balanced and noncontroversial. The special value of his work lies in its depth of research, revealed not only in the text itself but also in the extensive bibliography. Bucher has made use of all available source materials and has written the definitive history of this important episode in Swiss history. Numerous illustrations, mainly photographs of leading personalities, enhance the appeal of this beautifully manufactured book.

HEINZ K. MEIER

Old Dominion University

ERICH GRUNER, with the collaboration of ANDREA BAECHTOLD et al. Die schweizerische Bundesversammlung 1920-1968: L'Assemblée fédérale suisse 1920-1968. Bern: Francke Verlag. 1970. Pp. 287; tables A-LL, 13 charts. 80 fr. S.

ERICH GRUNER, editor. Die Schweiz seit 1945: Beiträge zur Zeitgeschichte. (Helvetia Politica, Series B, Volume 6.) Bern: Francke Verlag. 1971. Pp. 401. 28 fr. S.

Both of these books on the recent history of Switzerland were edited by Erich Gruner, who is in charge of the research center for history and sociology of Swiss politics at the University of Bern. They contain selections in German and in French and fill important lacunae in Swiss studies. The volume on the Swiss parliament since 1920 has each article in both languages, but the volume on Swiss development since 1945 contains no translations.

Die schweizerische Bundesversammlung 1920-1968, a much more formal study, treats a longer period of time and focuses on a single topic—the composition of the Swiss parliament. In it Professor Gruner and his four collaborators have produced a successful example of teamwork. They have deliberately avoided a multiple biography approach in favor of a statistical study that includes tables and graphs appended to the volume in a separate folder. The work reflects the current interest of European scholars in quantification as a technique. Modern in its methodology, the volume is also up to date in the kind of questions it asks. Various selections deal with the social origins of parliamentarians, their geographical origins, their level of education, and their professional achievements. In addition the matter of membership of these parliamentarians in student societies and other associations such as interest groups or lobbies is explored. Readers who accept the notion that a technocratic or politically professional elite dominates the parliamentary life of a technologically advanced nation may be startled by some of the results reported in this work.

The second book is quite different. In the winter of 1969-70 the Volkshochschulen of Zürich and Bern celebrated their fiftieth anniversary with a series of lectures on the theme of Swiss development since 1945. Seventeen authors collaborated on the project. Besides university professors, they included experts on various topics, as well as public figures. For example, Max Petitpierre, a former president of Switzerland, contributed a thorough examination of the complex problem of Swiss neutrality and its implications for foreign relations. Two major theologians, one Protestant and the other Catholic, discuss the role of religion in their country. In another vein, Hanspeter Matter, a Bernese lawyer and an author-performer of satirical songs, examines recent developments in Swiss society as seen by the younger generation. Other contributions deal with the whole gamut of contemporary concerns, including education, ecology, national defense, and economic questions.

The two books provide a well-integrated survey of present-day Switzerland. The quality of these useful and informative books appears to be in large part due to the skill of the editor, Erich Gruner, who provides a most thoughtful analysis of the directions of the societal problems in a period of rapid change in the final essay in the work on Switzerland since 1945. Both volumes should be of interest to those concerned with current problems of a small, highly developed, densely populated country with a truly multinational system. They will be useful to any student of modern Europe and are invaluable for the specialized student of modern Switzerland.

SABINE JESSNER

Indiana University—Purdue University, Indianapolis

BEAT GLAUS. Die Nationale Front: Eine schweizer faschistische Bewegung, 1930-1940. [Einsiedeln:] Benziger Verlag, 1969. Pp. 503.

A number of authors have dispelled the popular myth that the bastions of Western European democracies were immune to the virus of fascism in the interwar era. Most were infected by the contagious malady but were able to ward it off, since it did not represent a significant political force.

The present study deals with a fascist movement in one of these countries—Switzerland. The author, a Swiss sociologist, has painstakingly perused the available literature, primarily the fascist press and pamphlets, and conducted a number of interviews with veterans of the period. The result is a detailed account of the rise and fall of the National Front, a movement spawned in 1930 at the University of Zurich, gaining bourgeois support primarily in the German area of Switzerland, and playing a vocal role in public affairs until its demise a decade later.

Glaus views the rise of the National Front, as well as the short-lived New Front (1930-33), which he also dissects thoroughly, as symptomatic of the malaise sweeping across Europe at that time. The democratic systems were on the defensive as they struggled with a major economic crisis and with the fissure dividing Marxists and the bourgeoisie. Switzerland was not spared the rash of competing fascist groups arising in its midst.

The failure of these groups to mobilize mass support speaks well for the democratic ethos of the Swiss polity. The National Front, with perhaps ten thousand members, generally did not receive more than two to three per cent electoral support, although it had pockets of strength in a number of conservative communities. Its fascist ideology, rallies, demonstrations, anti-Semitism, and pro-German stance did not endear it to important segments of Swiss society, especially the workers. It was beset by leadership struggles, factionalism, secessions, and the competition of powerful conservative movements. Thus it could not survive the outbreak of the war and the neutralist policy of the government.

This volume, based on the author's doctoral dissertation, has its weaknesses. Glaus, so immersed in his subject matter, fails to put the National Front into the wider perspective of the Swiss party system or European fascist movements.<sup>6</sup> He fails to assess the impact of the Front on the Swiss body politic. He clogs the narrative with too many minutiae. But to the specialist on European fascist movements, the work represents a valuable addition to a topic of historical and contemporary significance.

GERARD BRAUNTHAL

*University of Massachusetts,
Amherst*

GIUSEPPE LO GIUDICE. Comunità rurali della Sicilia moderna: Bronte (1747-1853). Istituto di Storia Economica, Collana di studi e ricerche, Number 3.) Catania: Università degli Studi, Facoltà di Economia. 1969. Pp. 337. L. 4,000.

Bronte in Sicily is primarily identified by the English-speaking peoples as the dukedom and domain on the western slopes of Mount Etna that, along with a diamond-hilted sword once owned by his father, a grateful monarch of the Bourbon Sicilies (Ferdinand IV) pressed on a reluctant Horatio Nelson in October of 1799. The admiral, who had gained the endowment for his aid in reducing the French-sponsored Parthenopean Republic, estimated for hypothecation purposes Bronte's annual revenue at three thousand pounds sterling.

Economic historian Giuseppe Lo Giudice chooses to study Bronte's land system and cultivation in the years from 1747 to 1853 "to offer a suitable analysis of some important aspects of the island's agriculture and in particular of the pertinent changes that unfolded in its structure." It is a difficult subject, he confesses, but by investigating closely this farm and pasture district and by matching it with other districts, evidence may be assembled for meaningful new interpretations of Sicily's social, economic, and political history since the seventeenth century. The author did research at Bronte, Catania, Palermo, Florence, and in the Nelson archives; he displays numerous maps, charts, graphs, statistical tables, and a suitable bibliography. To aid the reader the old-fashioned terms of area, bulk, and coinage—from an age when news of winning numbers in the lottery still outdistanced reports of public events—are rendered into the metric system. What Lo Giudice concludes is that alodial or free property practically vanished and steady private usurpation of ancient communal rights discouraged growth and stifled initiative. The latifundia controlled by the nobility and especially by the new land-purchasing bourgeoisie increased, grain farming reduced grazing areas, mulberry trees yielded somewhat to garden vegetables, and the peasantry steadily became more miserable. The decade and a half from Nelson to the collapse of the liberal Sicilian constitution of 1812 allowed hope of serious land reform; this aborted, however, and small proprietorships never materialized. Pietro Burgarella, whose review of this book appeared in Il Risorgimento in Sicilia (6 [1970]: 224–25), hailed it as "a real contribution to knowledge of the economic and social life of the entire island." The undersigned concurs.

DUANE KOENIG
University of Miami,
Coral Gables

HOWARD R. MARRARO, editor. L'unificazione italiana vista dai diplomatici statunitensi. Volume 4 (1861–1866). (Istituto per la Storia del Risorgimento Italiano. Biblioteca scientifica. Second Series: Fonti, Volume 62.) Rome: the Istituto. 1971. Pp. 411.

For over forty years the late Professor Marraro faithfully and successfully delved into Italo-American relations. A prolific pioneer in this field, he contributed to it many excellent studies, monographs, and editions of documents.

Under the title above he published the diplomatic dispatches of the American envoys accredited to the court of the king of Sardinia, later of Italy, in Turin from 1838 on.

The present volume, the fourth, covers the period between 1861 and 1866, a perilous time for both the United States and Italy, when both countries were struggling to preserve their national unity against domestic strife and foreign intrigues. The dispatches, mostly from George P. Marsh, ambassador to Italy from 1861 to his death in 1882, reflect the concern of American diplomats in Europe: the unfriendly neutrality of the great powers, the dangers to American trade from Confederate privateers, and the questionable fidelity of many American agents to the Union.

Marsh felt remarkably free from most of these worries in his official post. Both people and government in Italy were unequivocally in favor of the Union, with the exception of a few clericals and reactionaries who were opposed to Italian unity as well. In contrast with the prejudices encountered in most European politicians, Marsh wrote of meeting several "Italian gentlemen, in and out of public life, who show a comprehension of our condition quite surprising in persons who never trod our soil" (p. 108). A comprehension, we may add, most likely due to a conscious or subconscious equation they must have made of the economical, social, and political differences between North and South in both countries—liberal equalitarian, industrial, better-educated masses in the North, in contrast with conservative, stratified, agricultural, unschooled masses in the South. This understanding through identification gave Marsh, too, a keen comprehension of Italian political temper, events, and prospects of the day. His analyses of the Roman question, the completion of Italian unification, and the widespread resentment at French tutelage of Italian life are remarkably sharp and clear.

The editorial lapses in this volume are few. One occurs on page 35 where Marsh writes of the "doubtful fidelity" of many "appointees of the late and Gen. Peirce [sic] administration," in obvious reference to the administrations of James Buchanan and Franklin Pierce. The editorial footnote on "Gen. Peirce" gives a biographical sketch of General Ebenezer Weaver

Pierce instead of Franklin Pierce; President Pierce, too, had attained the rank of general during the Mexican War. Another lapse is the erroneous insertion of the word sic after spellings that were common a century ago and are still sanctioned in the latest editions of Webster's International Dictionary: amical, apprise, colours, commonalty, connexion, diplomate, enrolment, guaranties, kilogramme, and visaed. Needless to say, these are minor, negligible flaws, mentioned here only for the sake of completeness. We only hope that the next and, presumably, the last volume of the series will be edited as accurately as the first four.

JOSEPH ROSSI
University of Arizona

SERGIO I. MINERBI. L'Italie et la Palestine, 1914-1920. (Publications de la Faculté des Lettres et Sciences humaines de Paris-Sorbonne. Series "Recherches," Number 60.) Paris: Presses Universitaires de France. 1970. Pp. 297. 50 fr.

Italy evinced no political interest in Palestine until 1916 when the prospect of dismembering the Turkish Empire raised appetites everywhere. Even so, Palestine always remained subsidiary to Asia Minor as a sphere of Italian ambitions in the Near East. Nevertheless, after World I Rome worked consciously for an Italian presence in Palestine. Italian policy to achieve this was muddled, settling belatedly on internationalization—just in time to be thwarted by British insistence on a Palestinian mandate. Italy inevitably had to consider Zionism, although distrusting it as "a pawn in the British game." The most interesting contacts were made by Commander Levi-Bianchini, whose biography Minerbi terms "a side-product" of his research. The Zionists, understandably, were not captivated by sophisticated Italian overtures; nor were the Pan-Arabs who could not overlook the Libyan conquest. Italy's strongest card in Palestine was a claim to share in the administration of the Holy Places; in this she had Vatican support, although Minerbi suggests that it was less than others have maintained. But here, too, Italian hopes were frustrated, not by Britain but by France. All in all, Italy's role in Palestine was, perforce, marginal. Consequently, Minerbi sheds as much light on Allied disparagement of Italy, a cause of the "mutilated victory" syndrome, as on Palestine itself.

Minerbi's account is based on thorough research, principally among unpublished records of the Italian foreign ministry. He also employs material from the British Public Record Office, Zionist archives, and private papers including those of Levi-Bianchini. There are abundant historiographical footnotes and a good bibliographical essay marred only by a list of secondary works apparently not proof-read; how else may one explain the citations D. Mac (sic) Smith and P. (sic) Chabod, and the dating of Frank Manuel's important article as 1938 (although given correctly in the text as 1955)?

Minerbi traces Italian policy toward aspects of the Palestinian issue in turn—Zionism, Pan-Arabism, the Holy Places, and so on. While not without intellectual validity, this organization involves backtracking and repetition and, more important, obscures the interplay between one factor and another. The continuity of argument suffers from too many one-sentence paragraphs. The book, in short, possesses the merits and demerits of most doctoral theses: solid research and sound information presented in somewhat indigestible form.

ALAN CASSELS
McMaster University

La Toscana nel regime fascista (1922-1939): Convegno di studi promosso dall'Unione Regionale delle Province Toscane, dalla Provincia di Firenze e dall'Istituto Storico per la Resistenza in Toscana, Firenze, Palazzo Riccardi, 23-24 maggio 1969. In two volumes. (Unione Regionale delle Province Toscane, Biblioteca di storia toscana moderna e contemporanea, Studi e documenti, Number 8.) Florence: Leo S. Olschki Editore. 1971. Pp. xvi, 411; 416-787. L. 8,000 the set.

As Ernesto Ragionieri said in his closing remarks at this symposium on fascism in Tuscany held in May 1969 in Florence, Italian historians are beginning to be objective about fascism and are moving from a political to a historical judgment of it (2:476). The papers presented at this meeting and now made available in book form seem to support this. Partisan controversy is muted. The tone of both speakers and discussants, among whom were Stuart Woolf, Adrian Lyttelton, and Max Gallo, exhibits little political bias. What emerges is a thoughtful and thought-provoking analysis of many aspects of fascism studied at the regional, rather than the national, level. With few exceptions, historians of Italian fascism have tended to look at it from a much broader perspective. Yet much may be learned from a close analysis of local developments. In this instance Tuscany was chosen for a number of reasons, primarily because, like Emilia, it played a key role during the important years 1919-22. In May 1922, for example, twenty per cent of all fasci and eighteen per cent of all fascists in Italy were concentrated in Tuscany.

As in any collection the contributions are of different caliber and scope. Some, like Giorgio Luti's overview of Florentine periodical literature, Mario G. Rossi's analysis of the Church's position, and Carlo Francovich's profile of militant Tuscan antifascists, indeed limit themselves to illustrating fascism in Tuscany. Others, like Giorgio Mori's informed study of industrial developments in this region and Emilio Sereni's somewhat polemical discussion of Arrigo Serpieri's views on agriculture and mezadria, tend to embrace Italy as a whole.

Two points emerge from a careful reading of these two volumes: that, despite the spate of books and articles on fascism that have emerged in the last twenty-five years, much still remains to be done; that now the most rewarding approach may very well be to study fascism in its local manifestations. While the shortcomings of such a type of investigation are well illustrated in some of the contributions to these volumes, the value of studies focusing on local or regional developments is also clearly shown by the total impact of the various papers. Taken together they represent an informative addition to the historiography of fascism.

EMILIANA P. NOETHER
University of Connecticut

HARRY FORNARI. Mussolini's Gadfly: Roberto Farinacci. Nashville: Vanderbilt University Press. 1971. Pp. xiv, 237. $8.95.

There is general agreement among students of modern Italian history that fascism failed to achieve the totalitarian control of the state envisaged by some of its leaders. What is less well known, especially among the English-reading world, is that within the Fascist party itself Mussolini's authority was not always, if ever, completely total. Among those who challenged it successfully on occasion and who, even when forced formally to submit to the Duce, ever remained refractory was Roberto Farinacci, Fascist "boss" of Cremona, self-appointed custodian of a "pure" Fascist faith, and proponent of an ever-continuing totalitarian revolution. Mussolini's reputation for violence is based more on his rhetoric than on his personal acts; Farinacci was violent in words and deeds; and if such a combination be essential to fascism, the author is justified in calling the hierarch of Cremona the "archetypal Fascist."

That Farinacci was Mussolini's veritable gadfly for more than two decades is proved superabundantly by Fornari in a work based mainly on a wealth of archival and other primary sources. From this mass of material, well digested and clearly presented, there emerges a Farinacci more Fascist than the Duce, the most violent of the squadristi, and perhaps the chief protagonist of a totalitarian dictatorship. But with the regime well entrenched by 1926—in large part because of Farinacci's activities—and aspiring to respectability at home and abroad, there was less use for the goader who preached incessantly for more vigilance and violence. Hence Farinacci's relegation to his provincial fiefdom of Cremona where he could play the role of Duce on a reduced scale, but forever importuning Mussolini to proceed with a permanent revolution, to be answered by peremptory orders to behave alternating with affectionate letters of gentle persuasion.

All this is presented with exceptional clarity by the author, whose pioneer work suffers from one significant defect: in his account of the general background to the actions of his protagonist, Fornari relies excessively on two works, Luigi Salvatorelli and Giovanni Mira, Storia d'Italia nel periodo fascista (1964), and Renzo De Felice, Mussolini il fascista (1966-68). This criticism notwithstanding, Fornari's work may well serve as a model for future studies on other Fascist chieftains, such as Italo Balbo and Dino Grandi, whose autonomous power in their respective fiefdoms was one of the many checks on Mussolini's allegedly absolute personal dictatorship.

SALVATORE SALADINO

Queens College,

City University of New York

LEO VALIANI et al. Azionisti, cattolici e comunisti nella Resistenza. (Istituto Nazionale per la Storia del Movimento di Liberazione in Italia.) [Milan:] Franco Angeli Editore. 1971. Pp. 449. L. 6,000.

This informative book is the product of a conference held in Milan in November 1968 under the auspices of the Istituto Nazionale per la Storia del Movimento di Liberazione in Italia. Earlier conferences had dealt with methods of studying the Italian Resistance and its historiography. The 1968 conclave focused on the theme of the political parties in the Resistance. The authors of the essays have illuminated numerous hitherto somewhat obscure aspects of the internal development of three of the five parties that made up the Committee of National Liberation (CLN) and played an important role in Italy's Armed Resistance of 1943-45. These three currents were the newly formed Action party (Partito d'Azione), intransigently republican and liberal-socialist in its orientation; the nascent Catholic party (Democrazia Cristiana), successor to the defunct Italian Popular party that had emerged after World War I; and the greatly revitalized Partito Comunista Italiano, about to become the strongest Marxist force in Western Europe. The other two parties in the CLN were the Socialists, whose strength lay chiefly in the cities, and the Liberals, whose appeal was greatest in the south and who were the most conservative and monarchist-minded political force in opposition to fascism. It is regrettable that the planners of the conference did not include discussions of these parties as well.

The contributors to this volume were members of the parties listed respectively above. Moreover, they are professional historians. As such, they have generally tried to look back on the period with as much detachment as can be reasonably expected of "engaged" scholars after the passage of a quarter of a century. Although all the essays make contributions to our knowledge of the subject, that of Leo Valiani, who was northern secretary of the Action party during the war, is the most satisfactory. He is the eldest and most versatile writer of the three. His essay emphasizes that the story of the origins of the Action party was also the story of the politicization of a large number of Italian intellectuals under fascism. The party had an important antecedent in the "Giustizia e Libertà" movement founded by Carlo Rosselli in 1929. Even more influential was the "Liberal-socialismo" movement founded by Guido Calogero a decade later, for it represented anti-fascism of a new style—one that side-stepped the problem of the Concordat and that broke ranks with Benedetto Croce in its willingness to advocate some degree of socialism. Indeed, nationalization was to be the issue that aroused most debate within the Action party after its birth in 1942. Valiani gives much credit to Ugo LaMalfa, the party's leader in Rome, for preserving a flexible stance on this issue. Valiani also has much to say on the party's opposition to the House of Savoy, as well as its sharp criticism of the about face of Palmiro Togliatti, who in March 1944 led the Communist party into Marshal Badoglio's government for the purpose not only of gaining prestige for the party but of promoting national unity. Though the Action party continued to play a role in the Armed Resistance that was second only to that of the Communists, internecine strife and inability to attract lasting support from working-class groups brought about its quick collapse as soon as the war came to an end.

Gianfranco Bianchi, a professor at the Catholic University of the Sacred Heart in Milan, does not write as persuasively as Valiani, but he sets forth considerable useful information regarding the various currents that coalesced into the Christian Democratic party.

Ernesto Ragionieri, youngest of the contributors, was still in his teens at the time of the Armed Resistance. Now a professor of history at the University of Florence and a specialist on Marxian socialism, he is editing the collected works of Palmiro Togliatti. He is also a member of the Central Committee of the Communist party and responsible for its review, Critica marxista. As might be expected, Ragionieri contends that the Communist party was a partito nuovo and the prime advocate of national unity in the Resistance. He strongly defends Togliatti's twists and turns.

The book is handsomely printed and contains a helpful index of everyone mentioned.

CHARLES F. DELZELL
Vanderbilt University

F. ROY WILLIS. Italy Chooses Europe. New York: Oxford University Press. 1971. Pp. xiii, 373. $8.50.

Professor Willis has written a first-rate volume on Italy's integration into the West European economic and political community. The author has wisely divided the book into two parts. The first ("The Process of Choice") is a lucid chronological review of early Italian ideas on European unity, Italy's postwar problems, alternative prescriptions, and the decisions to adhere to the Marshall Plan, NATO, WEU, and the European Communities. It is capped by a compelling evaluation of the results of the integration process. The topically organized second part ("The Choice Determined") explores the many internal factors that shaped the substance and consequences of those decisions. Here the writer skillfully relates such problems as Italian industrial and agricultural conditions, overpopulation, unemployment, migration, and the south to both the larger integration issue and the perspectives and goals of Italy's principal pressure groups and political parties.

This format permits Willis to achieve an enviable breadth of scope, though at the inevitable price of occasional redundancy. There is a great wealth of both primary and secondary documentation, but the inclusion of a larger portion of the statistical data in table form might have enhanced the book's readability. Also, by grouping most of his conclusions at the end of each part rather than in a final summary chapter, the author conforms to his stated objective of rendering each complete in itself but at the cost of disjunction. Nevertheless, Willis's convincing style and his meticulous concern for tightly organized chapters more than offset these structural deficiencies.

According to Willis there was a powerful and continuous interaction between the process of joining Europe and the ongoing domestic political struggle in Italy, one that mainly concerned the issue of economic and social reform. As he correctly points out, the creation of a reformist-oriented Center-Left coalition in Italy owes much to the incontestable achievements of integration. Although the goals of the former have not been met entirely, Europeanism has ceased to be a political issue.

While Willis might have speculated further on the several unresolved economic and social questions he raises and refrained from unfairly castigating the Nenni Socialists for delaying internal reforms, the book must certainly rank as one of the really thorough and competent studies on contemporary Italy. As such, it will undoubtedly appeal to European generalists and Italian specialists alike.

WILLIAM R. FEENEY
Southern Illinois University, Edwardsville

CONSTANTINE CAVARNOS. Modern Greek Thought: Three Essays Dealing with Philosophy, Critique of Science, and Views of Man's Nature and Destiny. Belmont, Mass.: Institute for Byzantine and Modern Greek Studies. 1969. Pp. vii, 10-115. Cloth $3.50, paper $1.95.

The author of this brief history of modern Greek thought, Constantine Cavarinos, is a distinguished philosopher-scholar, who traveled and studied in Greece and who published reviews, articles, and books covering a wide spectrum of Greek religious art, life, and thought. In the present volume, which introduces the reader to Greek thought from the middle of the eighteenth century to the present, Professor Cavarinos describes the philosophy of modern Greece (pp. 9-38), the role of the positive sciences in solving the problems of man (pp. 39-56), and the modern Greek view of man's nature and destiny (pp. 57-85). The book ends with seven pages of notes (pp. 87-93), thirteen pages of a selected bibliography of philosophical works (pp. 95-107), and two indexes—one of names (pp. 109-12) and one of subjects (pp. 113-15).

Chapter 1 begins with an analysis of the nine characteristics of modern Greek philosophy: existential orientation, personalism, idealism, primacy of philosophy over science, primacy of Christian teaching over philosophy, Christian eclecticism, relation to ancient Greek philosophy, independence from medieval Western philosophy, and independence of the philosophies of the Middle and Far East. These sections, which could fill nine volumes, provide a valuable study of the relation of modern Greek philosophy to Byzantine, ancient, Western, and Oriental philosophy. Chapters 2 and 3 synthesize the attitudes of the Greek intellectuals to the value of the positive sciences and the nature and destiny of man.

The unique quality of modern Greek intellectual life is that in contradistinction to the West, which has divorced philosophy from religion, Greek thinkers have kept both and have allowed their Orthodox faith to guide philosophical inquiry. Professor Cavarinos makes this clear when he asserts that "modern Greek philosophy can best be understood as a continuation of Byzantine philosophy in modern times."

Although there was a continuous cultural life during the Ottoman occupation, it was not until the middle of the eighteenth century that the Greek Renaissance reached its apex in the Neo-Hellenic Enlightenment, which preceded the Greek War of Independence. This period witnessed an outburst of scholarship, education, intellectual inquiry, and professional philosophy. In this regard Eugenios Voulgaris (1716-1806), a notable intellectual figure and the "father of modern Greek philosophy," and Athanasios Psalidas (1767-1829), one of the foremost intellectuals of the Greek Enlightenment, were trained outside of Greece and transmitted the new spirit of rational inquiry, secularism, and the scientific method to their students. Voulgaris, in the tradition of Leibniz and Wolff, believed that truth could be attained by the scientific experimental method, but this did not prevent him from preaching that ideas are innate because of divine revelation. Psalidas likewise adhered to rationalistic doctrines; yet in his book on True Happiness or the Basis of All Religion (1791), he defends effectively the existence of God, the immortality of the soul, reparation after death, and human freedom.

Despite its brevity and at times somewhat challenging assertions, this book is not only thought-provoking but should become a fundamental part of present and future research on modern Greek thought.

WILLIAM PETER KALDIS
Ohio University

VLADIMIR DEDIJER. The Battle Stalin Lost: Memoirs of Yugoslavia, 1948-1953. New York: Viking Press. 1971. Pp. x, 341. $8.50.

Since the Yugoslav expulsion from the Cominform on June 28, 1948, millions of words and countless numbers of articles and books have flowed from presses round the world. In spite of all the verbiage, however, the story of the celebrated Tito-Stalin feud has remained incomplete. Dedijs's new volume helps to close at least a few of the gaps.

The Battle Stalin Lost is a warm, moving, and captivating drama, in which the playwright is also one of the leading actors—to paraphrase a characterization from the brightly colored book jacket. It is as much a chapter from the life of Vladimir Dedijs as it is an account of the Russo-Yugoslav struggle of 1948-53. The life of the author, as revealed in the pages of this fascinating volume, has been one of both tragedy and triumph. He lost his first wife on a Partisan battlefield and a son to suicide. As a member of the Yugoslav Communist Party (YCP) he rose to the ranks of the elite and was entrusted with important posts in the party and the party-controlled state, including that of director of information, which he held at the time of the war of nerves that he so graphically describes.

In his narrative of the memorable conflict between Tito and Stalin, Dedijs points the accusing finger at the Soviet party boss. He feels that the leading role played by Russia in World War II went to Stalin's head and led him to formulate an ambitious plan in which all of Eastern Europe was to be brought under the Soviet yoke. Yugoslavia occupied a special place in those plans, and Stalin anticipated an easy victory. Once Yugoslavia was subdued, it would not be difficult to bring the other Eastern European countries under the hegemony of Moscow.

After a bit of preliminary shadowboxing Stalin launched his open attack on Yugoslavia with the Cominform resolution of expulsion. Out of his bottomless bag of tricks the Soviet leader pulled a number that he was certain would not miss. Included among those were "silent strangulation" through direct pressure, provocation of conflict within the Central Committee of the YCP; ideological excommunication of the YCP; public anathema through the Cominform; an all-out economic blockade; and infiltration of the key positions in the Yugoslav army, security forces, YCP itself, and major ministries.

Though the odds were stacked against her, deserted as she was by the communist states and parties everywhere, Yugoslavia did not capitulate. Her success Dedijer attributes partially to the regional defense pacts and international assistance, especially the economic and military aid provided by the United States, England, and France; but "the decisive factor," he says, "was the unity of the peoples of Yugoslavia and the readiness of the Yugoslav army." However important all of those forces might have been in saving Tito's homeland, the critical observer of the international scene cannot help but call attention to the remarkable recovery of Western Europe and the possibility of the escalation of the local conflict into another global war as influences on Stalin's decision not to attack Yugoslavia.

Although Dedijer's effort is a distinct contribution to the fund of knowledge regarding this historic controversy, it must be noted that it is based solely on Yugoslav evidence, since Soviet sources remain inaccessible. The author incorporated a great variety of primary and secondary materials into his work. His use of diaries, memoirs, interviews, government reports, and archival materials lends considerable authenticity to the volume, but the absence of footnotes and bibliography often leave the curious reader hanging.

GERALD GILBERT GOVORCHIN
University of Miami,
Coral Gables

VLADIMÍR V. KUŠÍN. The Intellectual Origins of the Prague Spring: The Development of Reformist Ideas in Czechoslovakia 1956-1967. (Soviet and East European Studies.) New York: Cambridge University Press. 1971. Pp. v, 153. $8.95.

IVAN SVITÁK. The Czechoslovak Experiment: 1968-1969. New York: Columbia University Press. 1971. Pp. 243. $10.95.

In contemporary Czech and Slovak thought the events of 1968 have acquired the status of a turning point comparable in importance with the Communist takeover of 1948, the dismemberment of the first Czechoslovak Republic in 1938, and, indeed, the foundation of the state itself in 1918. On August 20-21, 1968, literally overnight the Czechoslovak experiment was transformed from living reality into history, and some of its makers became its historians. As a collection of articles, speeches, and statements composed before August 1968 Ivan Sviták's book is a document in the intellectual history of the period; the part written after August attempts to explain what happened. Vladimír V. Kušín, like Sviták, lived in Czechoslovakia throughout the period he describes and interprets and, like Sviták, is one of the protagonists of his own narrative.

Kušín argues that there has existed "incongruence" between communism and the Czech "national disposition," which includes, he writes, national, democratic, and "heretically socialist" values. According to Kušín the takeover of 1948 and the introduction of the Stalinist system destroyed democratic political structures in Czechoslovakia but failed to eradicate those less tangible but nonetheless real elements of political life, such as traditions, national character, and personal and public attitudes. The Twentieth Soviet Party Congress (1956) provided a stimulus for the reassertion of the national tradition in a new environment. Kušín reviews the gradual emancipation from Stalinism that took place after 1956 among the jurists, philosophers, writers, literary scholars, and historians.

When it became evident, in the early 1960s, that the Czechoslovak economy was in serious trouble, the party was forced to emancipate the economists. The "rehabilitation" of sociology (a discipline suppressed under Stalin) and the birth of political science soon followed. Before long, fundamental questions of national purpose and existence were debated, in accord with the tradition established by the earlier generations. When Karel Kosík analyzed "The Czech Question" in a series of articles on "Our Present Crisis"—thus reviving the titles of two famous books written seventy years earlier by T. G. Masaryk—it seemed that the broken link with the past had been restored. In effect two programs for change emerged in Czechoslovakia. One, the subject of Kušín's book, was the broad intellectual movement seeking a synthesis of socialism, democracy, and European cultural tradition. (Kušín views Stalinism as a product of Russian tradition and to him the Czech reform signified a move away from Russia and back to Europe.) The other was the more limited trend within the party itself. With the elevation of Dubcek to party leadership in January 1968 these two trends merged into a single movement aimed toward a new model of socialism.

Kusín is lucid and well informed, but he idealizes the reformers and their predecessors. His treatment of the Communist problem in prewar Czechoslovakia and the Slovak question in general is rather superficial. He never considers the possible inner flaws or weaknesses in the Czech political "disposition."

Sviták, taking a broader view of the Czech experiment, sees in it a challenge not only to Soviet supremacy in East Europe but also to the Russian position in the multinational Soviet Union, which he compares with the tsarist empire. The suppression of the Czechoslovak experiment, he says, will further aggravate the nationality question in the USSR. And yet, though he is so disillusioned with the Soviet policies, Sviták asks if the intervention could have been avoided. He wonders if the reform movement should not have been more concerned with power and more moderate and self-restrained in its proposals for internal change. Citing the cases of Finland, Romania, and Yugoslavia he also asks if the intervention might have been prevented had the Czechoslovaks been ready to defend themselves. Ruling out "armed struggle against the aggressor was fatally wrong . . . what are armies for, if not to fight when their country is attacked by an enemy?"

The question of resistance brings us back to the Czech political tradition. The spiritual and moral character of the pre-August movement reminded Kusín of the "moral sincerity and genuineness" in the outlook of T. G. Masaryk. But this is a rather one-sided view of the founder of Czechoslovakia. Masaryk's decision in 1914 to organize armed struggle against Austria from abroad was fully consistent with his previous career and with his teaching that evil should be resisted with force. When Masaryk and his legions returned to an independent Czechoslovakia it seemed that his activism (if not "adventurism") was vindicated as an element of the Czechoslovak political tradition.

Subsequent events in 1938 and in 1948 did not conform with the Masaryk style of political action. The reader of Kusín and Sviták may wonder whether the Masaryk of 1914 or the Beneš of 1938 was closer to the Czechoslovak leaders in 1968. It is impossible to imagine a form of political protest more at variance with the moral precepts and personal example of Masaryk than the suicide of Jan Palach in 1969.

ROMAN SZPORLUK
University of Michigan,
Ann Arbor

RICHARD PIPES. Struve: Liberal on the Left, 1870-1905. (Russian Research Center Studies, Number 64.) Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press. 1970. Pp. xiii, 415. $10.00.

With the exception of the Bolsheviks, the pre-1917 generation of Russian leaders has been cheated of historical recognition and evaluation; the efforts of emigré and Western scholars have hardly been able to offset the Soviet scorn. Professor Pipes's two-volume biography of Peter Struve, one of the greatest Russian intellectuals of that period, is therefore all the more welcome.

Drawing the dividing line at the point of Struve's return to Russia in the wake of the October Manifesto, the first volume (the second, one gathers, is well charted) covers Struve's intellectual pilgrimage as a publicist, scholar, and political thinker from the vague liberal patriotism of a precocious and largely German-educated youngster to Marxism and hence to radical liberalism. Professor Pipes has taken great pains to reconstruct the details of Struve's personality, his style of life and work, and above all his thought, faithfully plowing through the complex and abstract arguments—so exciting at the time and so musty and dated now—by which Struve established his reputation. He has done so with admirable command of the relevant schools of philosophy as well as of the shifting ties and alliances among the revolutionary intelligentsia. As an act of scholarly loyalty to a great Russian liberal, written in an eminently knowledgeable style with an occasional touch of iconoclasm, this volume is highly successful. There is available now to Western scholars a statement, as precise as they will ever get, of Struve's continuously evolving thought, with page after page of direct quotation in readable translation with appropriate commentary—all based on the most thorough compilation of Struve's writing (listed in the bibliography).

From a methodological point of view the volume represents the self-consciously nominalist (or positivist) scholarship so prevalent in Russian studies. Its attention is brilliantly focused on the documentable foreground. Yet for that very reason it lacks depth; it does not cover with similar perception the various backgrounds that complete the historical portrait. Backgrounds intrude, but in the blurred form of generalizations that smack of one-sidedness or bias. Marx's attitude toward a separate path for Russia, for instance, would seem to be more hesitant and complex than one gathers from the author's account (pp. 46-47). Did, furthermore, in the perspective of a hundred years the course of Soviet development follow the pattern predicted by Chuprov and Vorontsov or rather that of the Social Democrats (p. 43)? In the Russian setting of those times—viewed in totality and not from the Struve perspective—did Lenin's offhand remark that Struve "ought to be killed," justify the author's stricture, in a quotation from Santayana, that Lenin had forgotten his vision of a better society (p. 279)? The four-page introduction to the chapter on "The Philosophy and Politics of Liberalism" likewise seems too facile; it does not, incidentally, do justice to Bernard Pares.

Why, above all, should the present generation of students and scholars be content with viewing Russian reality through the eyes of Struve? If proof were still needed, this volume supplies it: the Russian intelligentsia, even in as alert and learned a thinker as Struve, had very little sense of the problems confronting the men in charge of governing the Russian Empire in a competitive world order. The Russian intelligentsia lived in fragile, forever redesigned glass houses of illusions derived from Western European experience—a fact that a strictly nominalist approach will not catch. Should we not first realistically assess the condition of the Russian Empire before proceeding to sort out the factual minutiae?

THEODORE H. VON LAUE
Clark University

NEAR EAST

GEORGE M. HADDAD. Revolutions and Military Rule in the Middle East. Volume 2, The Arab States. Part 1, Iraq, Syria, Lebanon and Jordan. New York: Robert Speller and Sons. 1971. Pp. 587. $12.50.

This is the second of a three-volume series by Professor Haddad on this subject. Volume 1, The Northern Tier, gives a general background of the role of the military in the Middle East throughout history and then deals in detail with Turkey, Iran, Afghanistan, and Pakistan. A planned volume 3 will cover Egypt, the Sudan, Yemen, and Libya.

This volume begins with a general background chapter in which the author brings out several important facts often forgotten or overlooked. Of particular importance is his explanation that since Jordan and Iraq were British creations and continued their strong ties with London after World War II they were constantly at odds with their Arab neighbors. While never forgiving the British and French for fragmenting geographical Syria, the foes of the Hashemite monarchy (especially Egypt) could not bring themselves to allow any realistic union of the Fertile Crescent states because they believed it would have been Hashemite and British-dominated. Also, Syrian leaders feared that they would lose their positions.

Haddad brings out the long history of alliances between the politicians and the military in nearly all Arab countries, except the Muslim Brotherhood in Egypt. Of interest is the fact the first modern Arab state to become independent (Iraq in 1932) was the first in which the army officers entered into politics and carried out a coup (1936). The author makes a comparison of conditions in Iraq under the royal regime in 1958 and after nearly five years of Kassem's rule. By the time Kassem was overthrown in 1963 the country was more disunited, economically stagnant, diplomatically isolated, and more authoritarian than under the monarchy. Since then under Ba'thist rule little has changed. There have been nine coups since the 1958 revolution, with each coup leader accusing his predecessor of tyranny but none daring to establish democratic rule where the people could have a voice.

In his treatment of Syria, which he knows thoroughly, Professor Haddad emphasizes the fact that Syria's political instability stems in large part from its geographical location, which has made it an arena for contending Arab nationalist forces. This situation was further complicated by Nasser and other Arab nationalists portraying the Syrian leadership as the enemy of reform. It is the author's contention that the common ideas—that since Syria is a mosaic of nationalities and religions it lacks national unity—is wrong. He stresses that the country's ethnic minorities are too dispersed and too small to cause disunity. He rightly points out that since the Ba'thist takeover in 1963 sectarianism, especially Alawite and Druze, has become more intense. An important point that Haddad brings out is that army officers in the Arab states did not participate in the struggle for independence in the period between the two world wars. Of particular note is that the Syrian army did not form a cast by itself and that army intervention in civilian affairs in large part was brought on by civilian politicians seeking the support of army officers. Many coups reflected the struggle for power between contending military factions supported by civilian personalities and parties or by other Arab states.

Lebanon's army, on the other hand, has played the role of guardian of the constitution. It was the determining factor in the ouster in 1952 of President Khouri, who misruled the country. The army forestalled an unpopular second term for President Chamoun by refusing to give him backing in the Civil War in 1958. The Commanding General, Chehab, then succeeded Chamoun not by a coup but by vote of a parliament whose majority had been favorable to Chamoun.

The turbulent Jordanian monarchy has long been supported by its army. Buffeted by outside influences, particularly Nasserism, Jordan has had its share of army conspiracies, but the Hashemite dynasty has managed to survive, largely because of its strong ties to the Bedouin tribes whose members compose the backbone of the army. The regime's victory over the fedayeen in 1970-71 was due almost entirely to the army's loyalty and its antagonism toward the radical Palestinians.

Professor Haddad, former chairman of the department of history at the Syrian University in Damascus, was an on-the-scene observer during Syria's most turbulent era, and he gives a number of valuable insights into that period. His sympathies lie with those Arab leaders who fought for their country's independence. He gives them greater benefit of doubt than may be their due. It is my belief that they failed to meet the test of their time. That is certainly not to say that their military successors in Syria and Iraq have done better; they have failed miserably. Certainly neither country is better off for all the repression and killings that these military leaders have brought with their coups. The author has utilized a wide span of sources. However, in my opinion, a number of statements extracted from these sources are inaccurate, and many are hearsay.

GORDON H. TORREY
Washington, D. C.

AFRICA

Colonialism in Africa, 1870-1960. Volume 2, The History and Politics of Colonialism, 1914-1960, edited by L. H. GANN and PETER DUIGNAN; Volume 3, Profiles of Change: African Society and Colonial Rule, edited by VICTOR TURNER. New York: Cambridge University Press. 1970; 1971. Pp. x, 563; viii, 455. $17.50 each.

With these volumes we find an ambitious publishing enterprise at midstream; Colonialism in Africa will eventually run to five volumes. The first two deal with history and politics (1870-1914 and 1914-60), the third with social change throughout the colonial period. The fourth is to treat economic development, and the last will be a guide to documentation. At this juncture, in reviewing volumes 2 and 3, we are afforded the opportunity of comparing the perspectives of authors of varied backgrounds, although predominantly from the disciplines of history and anthropology. Each of the twenty-six contributors has his own understanding of colonialism and the colonial experience, and the editors, Lewis Gann and Peter Duignan in one case and Victor Turner in the other, acknowledge that general conclusions cannot be drawn from these collections.

While there are some stimulating syntheses and a few polemics all too many contributions are complacent summaries of dated materials and interpretations, and too few exemplify the liveliness of contemporary scholarship about the colonial epoch. Victor Turner in his introduction to the social change volume reflects disappointment at the disarray of his volume and makes some stimulating remarks about history and anthropology as distinct disciplines in need of exchanging insights and data. His contributors are almost without exception eminent names in their fields, but they lack the appreciation of many younger anthropologists that the use of historical documents may afford valuable insights not available through oral data or static models. Historians will be disappointed, too, with the continued vagueness of citation; we are more often referred to other anthropological works than to the empirical sources.

Whereas Victor Turner obviously regrets the conventional methodology and the particularistic effect of his volume, it is to a degree inevitable, he suggests, that anthropologists would take the part of local societies, which are often at odds in their priorities and sensibilities with the central institutions of the state. Gann and Duignan, who are the editors of volume 2 and also the general editors of the series, have as their focus the center. History and politics from 1914 to 1960 is presented in terms of administration and constitutional development, elite formation, and institutionalization of colonial premises. Colonialism, as mediated through the central organs of government and guaranteeing a certain order and dominance in social, economic, and political terms, begs for definition and for a more dynamic approach to historical processes than this volume affords. The editors have a manifest political commitment to view colonialism and white societies as culturally heroic in goading, coaxing, and engineering Africa toward modernity. This commitment assumes the dimensions of counterinsurgency. The very succession of the volumes, from history and politics to social change and economics, seems to be calculated to forestall rival syntheses. The record of colonizers and the experience of the colonized, it is implied, may be understood without economic and social analysis.

Elite formation and the institutionalization of colonial premises are topics treated in both volumes. Elites in Africa have an especially ambiguous history, growing up as they did relatively alienated from indigenous cultures and frequently rejected, on racial grounds, by the European community. The raised and dashed expectations of the évolué group in the Congo is Roger Anstey's main theme, which he treats with the guiding assumptions that European policy alone determined the fortunes of these aspirants.

Two chapters in the second volume make useful and stimulating general statements about elites. Martin Kilson distinguishes the upper echelon from the subelites, drawing mainly upon West African examples, with Ghana as the archetype. Immanuel Wallerstein, a political sociologist, is unique less for his fine and original synthesis on changes in social structure than for the fact that he alone of the authors in either volume has read and absorbed recent historical writing. The issue is not merely one of perspective. Neglect of this literature by others means that they do not benefit from the range of new sources that have been consulted in the preparation of many recent historical works.

Elite formation is one indicator of the institutionalization of colonial premises and class differentiation in the colonial context. Other ways of approaching social structure are also represented. Michael Banton describes the patterns of occupational discrimination and race correlations in urban South Africa, while Hilda Kuper points out the variations in color perception among the Swazi. The Swazi, she argues, did not originally see white and black in oppositional terms. The closer the person to Western culture and patterns of thought, the greater the tendency to racist thinking, both reactive and submissive. A third position is taken by Max Gluckman, who in a very personal essay relates and elaborates his theory of social interdependence in Southern Africa where, in his view, the values of the dominant minority are so internalized by the majority that radical action becomes virtually impossible. Whether or not one agrees with Gluckman, he has been an important contributor to the literature of Central and Southern Africa for some four decades. He is now busy defending and to a lesser extent moderating his views, and it is valuable to have such an explicit statement of conviction.

Something has already been said about the stance of Gann and Duignan. They contribute extensively to volume 2, with an introduction, a chapter on the white elite of Rhodesia, and an epilogue. Students of colonial Africa will find much stimulation and incitement in these pieces. Nowhere is the attack upon African political talent so blatant as in the opening paragraph of the introduction, where in the guise of summarizing the period from 1885 to 1914, the editors condemn blacks as political incompetents. Clearly Africa was partitioned and claimed by European powers, but a more suggestive and objective thesis would consider as contributing factors the economic invasions of the immediate precolonial period and the technical insufficiency, to use Yves Person's phrase, rather than the political inability of Africans. We need to raise questions of politics in the light of such economic penetration and postcolonial perpetuation before evaluating the importance of the colonial experience in the total history of Africa. In their epilogue, Gann and Duignan point out a seeming difference of opinion between Jacob Ajayi, the African scholar who summed up the period to 1914 in volume 1, and Adu Boahen, who carries out a similar commission in volume 2. Whereas Ajayi saw colonialism as but an interlude in African history, Boahen emphasizes its importance. Adu Boahen's tempered but critical comments cannot be taken, however, as condoning the preoccupation of many chapters with the colonialists, and he deserves to be carefully read, preferably as an introduction rather than conclusion.

An example of a polemic from the Left is to be found in volume 3, where Aidan Southall sets out to show that old cities in Africa were undermined by imperialism. His thesis is illustrated by examples from early Portuguese contact with Kongo and Monomotapa, by some cities of Yorubaland, and by certain cities of North Africa in the premodern period. Southall has done fine work in rural and urban anthropology in Uganda, and the modern portions of his chapter are not so questionable, but in general his sweeping statement that "western imperialism had a negative and destructive impact upon many of those lines of development in African society that could have led towards the foundation of urban living properly rooted in African culture" serves emotions more than scholarship. The interpretation of Kongo takes us no further than the work of Georges Balandier and does not benefit from the valuable critique of that work by Jan Vansina. The treatment of Monomotapa is based upon an altogether false association of the Great Zimbabwe with the dynasty that became puppets of the Portuguese. The Monomotapas had moved northward to the Zambezi in the century before Portuguese contact, and the history of Zimbabwe in the time of the Changamire Dynasty in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries was only indirectly affected by the Portuguese. Fuller reference to archeological, architectural, ethnohistorical, and sociological data will make possible the kind of discussion that early urban history deserves. Meanwhile we are warned by the failures of this essay that on the basis of presently completed research, the topic does not lend itself to the demonstration of African-imperial confrontations.

A reviewer of such a varied collection is bound to dwell upon its shortcomings and striking demonstrations of commitment. Some very valuable and solid synthetic essays must also be mentioned in brief. They include James Duffy's beautifully composed review of Portuguese Africa, 1930-60, and Crawford Young's summary of (political) decolonization. An interesting contrast exists between C. G. Baeta's positive attitude toward missionary and humanitarian interests, 1914 to 1960 (vol. 2) and F. D. Welbourn's sharp attack upon missionaries as colonial collaborators (vol. 3). Readers will find rewards, according to their special interests, throughout the social change volume and each will react to the case studies on land, education, chiefship, or modern local party leadership according to his own needs and background.

Colonialism in Africa will certainly become a standard library reference series, but it falls short of being a classic in the sense of achieving balanced proportions. Classic syntheses will not be reached in the study of the colonial period in Africa as long as the major themes are too closely tied to alien dominance and research adheres to narrow understandings.

MARCIA WRIGHT

Columbia University

ASIA AND THE EAST

A. I. CHEREPANOV, Severnnyi pokhod Natsional'no-revoliutsionnoi armii Kitaia (Zapiski voennogo sovetnika) [The March to the North of the National Revolutionary Army of China (Notes of a Military Adviser)]. (Akademiia Nauk SSSR, Institut Narodov Azii.) Moscow: Izdatel'stvo "Nauka." 1968. Pp. 303.

This book, the second volume of General Cherepanov's memoirs, is one among a number of solid reflections on China in the 1920s that have been published in the Soviet Union in the last decade. Cherepanov himself implies (p. 298) that the Stalinist strait jacket no longer need be worn by people who write on China, and the book as a whole is good evidence of this change.

It deals in firsthand and secondhand accounts with the progress of the Northern Expedition until shortly after the coup of Chiang Kai-shek in Shanghai in 1927, when the author, who had been a military adviser to the National Revolutionary Army, sailed home to Russia, wondering with his comrades what they had wrought in so ably building up the military arm of the Kuomintang. Apart from its value as military history it should be noted that the book carries on the posthumous rehabilitation of M. M. Borodin (at the expense, of course, of J. V. Stalin). Unlike Stalin, Cherepanov does not pretend to be a great political theoretician (his favorite word for the events he is trying to describe is "complicated"); but the fact that he was an eyewitness in China gives his interpretation great appeal, all the more so because many Comintern agents were lost in the purges of the 1930s.

In this respect the memoir of Cherepanov does much in contributing faces and feelings to that group of Bolsheviks who were, in their way, going out to save China quite as much as any American missionary. I suppose that its greatest value in the Soviet Union is its revival of that sense of "Leninist internationalism" so profoundly felt by these Russians. Today it may be of incidental regret that the mission in China miscarried (although the Russians can take heart that the Methodist and capitalist sides of Chiang Kai-shek have also been rather disillusioning); the more important reflection is that the effort was made, that the Soviet Union gave more encouragement to the Chinese revolution than any other foreign power.

It should be noted, finally, that some of the Soviet works on China of this period have been translated into English and make fascinating reading for anyone wishing to compare the Russian involvement in China with our own. An informal translation of this book has already been done at Columbia University.

ERIC WIDMER
Brown University

JAMES CHIEH HSIUNG, Ideology and Practice: The Evolution of Chinese Communism. New York: Praeger Publishers. 1970. Pp. viii, 359. $11.00.

JOHN WILSON LEWIS, editor, Party Leadership and Revolutionary Power in China. (Contemporary China Institute Publications.) New York: Cambridge University Press. 1970. Pp. viii, 422. Cloth $9.50, paper $2.95.

FRANK H. TRAGER and WILLIAM HENDERSON, editors, Communist China, 1949-1969: A Twenty-Year Appraisal. [New York:] New York University Press for the American-Asian Educational Exchange. 1970. Pp. xii, 356. $7.95.

The ascendancy of communism in China, aside from disturbing the placidity of many minds, has given rise to the curious exercise of what is commonly called "China-watching," invariably from a distance. While the "China-watchers" presumably watch the same object, what emerges from their perceptions seems to vary greatly both in general pattern and in minute detail. Two principal factors have been responsible for this baffling phenomenon. On the one hand, the isolation of China for close to two decades has rendered an intelligent reading of the breathtakingly fast pace of change in China exceedingly difficult, for even carefully considered opinions have often been overtaken by the unfolding of new events. On the other, American response to a China in the throes of revolutionary frenzy has rarely been free from some form of emotionalism that tends to make a "watcher" see what he chooses to see.

The passage of time, however, has provided a clearer picture of the salient features of China in the Maoist phase. It has also had a sobering effect on those who saw in the emergence of the New China either the beginning of the Communist millennium or immanent doom. The dramatic turn of events since mid-1971 has, among other things, opened the doors of China a crack, through which a steady trickle of Americans, admittedly selected, has gone in and out. Thus the exercise of "China-watching" is now complemented by "China-witnessing," which promises to bring the field of Chinese studies to a more sophisticated level.

Except for the recency of their publication (all three appeared in 1970) these books represent major different approaches to the study of China and Chinese affairs since 1949—a single author dealing with the crucial matter of ideology and practice, tracing the evolution of Chinese communism; a group of eleven scholars writing monographs for a conference in 1968 on various aspects of the equally crucial problem of Communist party leadership and mutations of power; and fifteen scholars and experts seeking to sum up their findings on a wide range of major subjects concerning China in the two decades of Communist rule.

In Professor James Hsiung's delightfully readable treatment of what is essentially the Maoist ideology and practice one sees the happy combination of political science expertise and an admirable degree of historical insight. Though divided into three parts, nearly half of the volume is devoted to the highlighting of major events since 1949, leading to the remaking of the party in the wake of the Cultural Revolution. His is a dispassionate examination of the key factor of ideology and the inner workings of political practice in consonance with that ideology. Through his analysis the tortuous path of zigs and zags along which China under Mao advanced and retreated has been traced and clarified. Historians will be most interested in the first two parts, dealing with historical and ideological perspectives respectively. Here Hsiung has subjected some of the earlier and more thought-provoking works in intellectual history and political sociology to closer scrutiny and has come up with ideas and observations that have the virtue of placing modern China against a balanced perspective. In other words he has succeeded in identifying the unique historical experiences of China in modern times without losing sight of either her long traditional legacy or the impact upon her of such alien ideologies as Marxism-Leninism.

Consequently, the very baffling events since the early 1950s through the Great Leap leading up to the Cultural Revolution and its aftermath can now be better understood, while Mao, the central figure, has emerged as neither a prophet nor a demon.

The work Party Leadership and Revolutionary Power in China grew out of collective labor under the sponsorship of the Contemporary China Institute in London. The eleven monographs are selected from the papers presented at a conference in 1968. Obviously a good deal of discussion must have gone on at this conference, presumably resulting in some consensus with respect to the general themes of this publication. Edited by Professor John W. Lewis, the book is divided into four parts, with three chapters in each of the first three parts and two in the fourth. The major problems investigated include the changing role of the Communist party, the power elite in theory and practice, party and Chinese society since 1949, and the new view of power in the Cultural Revolution. The topics cover a rather wide range spanning chronologically from the introduction of Marxism in China to the aftermath of the Cultural Revolution and topically from broad theoretical inquiries into legitimacy and the concept of power to specific institutional and operational analyses. One outstanding feature of this volume seems to be the unity within diversity. Each contributor has developed his thesis on his chosen aspect of the larger problem of leadership and power, and yet there is a thematic thread, as expressed in the title, that ties everything neatly together. This perhaps is partly attributable to the success of the conference format of joint scholarly endeavor but certainly to the rare ability of its editor, who provides a well reasoned and eloquently presented synthesis in the form of an introduction. Indeed, thanks to this group's efforts, those in the contemporary Chinese studies field are now "better prepared to grasp the full implications of how the Chinese Communist Party came into being in the first place and how Communist leadership and revolutionary power will develop in the future."

Communist China, 1949-1969, as its title indicates, is a twenty-year appraisal. Beginning with a historical overview under the chapter heading of "Communist China in the Light of Chinese History," the ten chapters that follow deal with ideology, administration and control, party politics, the military, economy, agriculture, education, literature and art, the intellectuals, and the national minorities. The last three chapters discuss China and the Communist world, China's approach to the outside world, and United States-China relations. Each represents the considered opinion and judgment of a scholar whose competence is recognized by the editors, and each contribution stands by itself. In the absence of both an introduction and a conclusion one is inclined to believe that all thirteen chapters serve to provide the necessary background for the final one, which is essentially a policy position paper on United States-China relations. Although the editors are not primarily identified with the China field, most of the contributors are known for their sustained interest in the special subjects on which they write—Yuan-li Wu on economy, C. T. Hsia on literature, and Theodore Chen on education, to mention a few. There is a wealth of information and factual data, which may prove particularly useful to nonspecialists. Professor Rupen's chapter on the national minorities is perhaps the only comprehensive study on a long-neglected aspect of contemporary Chinese affairs.

The chapters dealing with the historical background, the ideology of Mao, the role of the army, and party politics form interesting parallels to parts of the Hsiung and Lewis volumes. They testify not only to the wide divergence of views regarding China but also to the variety of theoretical and methodological approaches adopted. As for the appraisal of the Communist record, the overall impression one receives from the Trager and Henderson volume is largely negative. It suggests that the ideological "baggage," the vast population, the sociopolitical instability, and the arbitrariness of party rule combine to pose insurmountable problems to the Communist leadership, which itself is suffering from acute disunity. Somewhat paradoxically the editors warn us: "Communist China today is not yet strong enough to challenge the world. But Peking does have the capacity to endanger the world with ruin."

C. T. HU
Teachers College,
Columbia University

DAVID BERGAMINI. Japan's Imperial Conspiracy. New York: William Morrow and Company. 1971. Pp. xxxviii, 1239. $14.95.

A Chinese general once told David Bergamini that "Japan was governed by an unworthy emperor who hoped to conquer the world." Resurrecting wartime passions and fanning embers of the Tokyo trials, Imperial Conspiracy might gratify that general. It is fitting that Sir William Webb, the Australian chief justice of the international military tribunal, provides an introduction. Bergamini's thesis, simply put, implies that high policy subverted justice by saving the emperor from trial as a major war criminal. "Hirohito," the author insists, "was a formidable war leader: tireless, dedicated, meticulous, clever, and patient. He had inherited from his great-grandfather a mission . . . to rid Asia of white men." The emperor "had not only led his nation into war by stamping military orders but, through his coterie, had also intimidated those who opposed him by conniving in bizarre Oriental intrigues, including religious frauds, blackmails, and assassinations." A Byzantine vocabulary stresses cabals, plots, and brotherhoods; 1,100 pages of text and 125 pages of notes and bibliography exude the smell of smoke.

First, to identify the author of this "strange" and "ugly" story (the adjectives are his): Bergamini was born in Tokyo and brought to China at the age of eight; he spent 1941-45 in a Japanese prison camp in the Philippines and afterwards attended Dartmouth, won a Rhodes scholarship, and joined Time, Inc. He has written a novel and books on Australia, the universe, and mathematics. Having "learned how to speak Japanese again, still badly, and for the first time how to read it—slowly," he returned to Japan in 1965. In Kyoto he enlisted an M.A. candidate and "an army of research assistants." The exposé was written in America.

How did scholars miss Bergamini's "disclosures" for decades? First, a "heavy halo of taboo" protects the throne. Second, perplexed by language and culture, foreigners miss things not called to their attention. Third, the emperor, courtiers, and army counterintelligence obfuscated or destroyed the record when doom approached. Bergamini admits reliance on circumstantial evidence in part; "in most parts of the Orient," he avers unconvincingly, "the idea of a public record does not exist." He disdains gray economics and demography, savors genealogy and black-or-white biography. Many informants are privileged, supposedly because danger "still exists for those who speak too freely in modern Japan." Bergamini nevertheless maintains that he has "invented nothing but . . . put together much."

Spasmodically organized and crammed with gossip, the book plunges into the era of Sato and Mishima, far beyond the prospectus. The countless nicknames are unnecessary and vulgar; for example, "Peerless Pimp" Tatekawa and "Mad Dog" Cho. The text abounds with non-negotiable errors. In one segment on which I am an expert (Changkufeng, pp. 691-96), twenty-one factual mistakes appeared. Numerous references sampled throughout the book were erroneous, and the otherwise excellent and up-to-date bibliography contains considerable padding. It is surprising that the declassification of General MacArthur's histories eluded the author.

Most upsetting is the selective, misleading use of sources to buttress a tortured thesis wherein accidents are inconceivable, honest mistakes improbable. The object is to incriminate the emperor personally in every crime and aggression, from long before the rape of Nanking, by the technique Charles Elliott calls "the flypaper gambit." A particularly flagrant instance derives from the Sugiyama [Gen] Memo-randa (Tokyo, 1967), incorrectly characterized as the general's own daybook jottings. This source, Bergamini claims, revealed that about a year before Pearl Harbor the emperor "personally ordered" Onishi to conduct "a secret evaluation . . . of the feasibility of a surprise attack." The ungrammatical original mentions Admirals Yamamoto and Onishi but not the emperor and not an imperial order. Bergamini, however, consulted a translator of the Tale of Genji who "states flatly that the expression . . . is absolutely unambiguous in this context and means 'the Emperor ordered.'" This forced interpretation misunderstands the chain of command. The emperor would not send personal orders to Onishi, a junior rear admiral, down the ladder. Navy sources confirm it was Yamamoto who in January 1941 dispatched a very private communication (shiteki shokan) to Onishi. The flypaper does not smudge the emperor but, having deduced a "major historical revelation," Bergamini erects upon it an edifice of imperial culpability and prevarication. Was it not Alice who stamped her foot three times and made it so?

For each source called upon to indict the emperor's cruel power, another could have been invoked to depict the circumscribed monarch's mildness and lifelong devotion to constitutionality. He could act to stop the war in 1945, the emperor has said, only because Prime Minister Suzuki formally requested his opinion. The only other time the emperor acted in his own right was during the 1936 mutiny, when he feared the premier was dead. The monarch freely admits that things occurred about which "I really do not know personally."

The author thinks he has uncovered a vast scoop; Morrow should have known better. Still, it would be wrong to suspect a hoax; Bergamini, I am convinced, believes fanatically in his theory. Nor is crowd-pleasing popularization at issue; what distresses is that the author did not aspire more modestly. Endowed with energy, imagination, and time, he has collected immense amounts of detail. Presented objectively, without overstatement, they might have convinced us that the emperor was better informed, more industrious, and more influential than believed. Instead, Bergamini has brewed a concoction that is extremely disturbing, but not for the reasons intended.

ALVIN D. COOX
California State University,
San Diego

J. P. SHARMA. Republics in Ancient India: C. 1500 B.C.-500 B.C. With a foreword by A. L. BASHAM. Leiden: E. J. Brill. 1968. Pp. xvi, 278. 51 gls.

In the wake of a strong nationalist movement in India K. P. Jayaswal wrote his magnum opus, Hindu Polity (1924), in which he emphasized the importance of republics in ancient Indian history, implicitly arguing thereby that the Indian people, as in their past history, were capable of ruling themselves democratically without the British imperial tutelage. Several monographs with variations on Jayaswal's theme have been written since 1924 by eminent scholars such as D. R. Bhandarkar, R. C. Majumdar, B. K. Sarkar, A. S. Altekar, and U. N.

Ghosal. All these authors, however, treated the subject of republican institutions as a subdivision of their main study of the political institutions in ancient India. Dr. J. P. Sharma in his book mainly concerns himself with the study of northeastern republics that existed in the age of the Buddha. Fortunately, Dr. Sharma has no "nationalist" axe to grind, as was the case with the previous authors dealing with republics in ancient India.

By thoroughly examining the terms, such as sabhā, saṃiti, and vidatha, having political connotations, Dr. Sharma sees the origin of Indian republics in the Vedic age. He conceives of four types of republics. Although monarchy was the usual form of government in the Vedic period, Dr. Sharma attempts to construe sabhā and saṃiti as de facto political communities, occasionally acting independently of a monarch and at other times having an effective voice in the decision making of a monarch. While convincingly refuting the view of Professor R. S. Sharma that vidatha was the earliest folk assembly, the author appropriately states that it was merely a local congregation convened for religious activities.

Having discussed the Vedic origin of Indian republics, the author examines in detail the northeastern republican tribes such as the Licchavis of Vesali, the Videhas, the Sakyas, Nayas, Mallas, and Koliyas. Each of the republics is described in terms of their name and etymology, geographical location, origin, forms of government, and so forth. The author gives the Licchavis and Indo-aryan origin, deriving their etymology from the Sanskrit word Ṛkṣa, meaning bear. The migratory routes of the Licchavis, before they settled down in Vesali, have been outlined. In dealing with the Videhas the author objects to the generally held view that the king Ajātasattu was born of the Kosalan princes. However, in the Pali text itself, of which the author seems to be unaware, the king Pasenadi of Kosala acknowledges Ajātasattu as his sister's son. In the absence of any evidence whatsoever I must take objection to Dr. Sharma's rather otiose suggestion that "the Licchavis seized Videha from some weak king after Janaka without much conflict and established a republic on the ruins of the old monarchy" (p. 149). Despite the overwhelming textual evidence that the Sakyas were the tributaries of Pasenadi, the king of Kosala, Dr. Sharma, disagreeing with it, says that they were independent political communities during Kosalan's regime. On page 92 of his book the author makes a sweeping statement that "there is no clear evidence of true totemism anywhere in the whole Vedic and Buddhist literature," while on page 220, contradicting his own statement, the author says that the Moriyas "looked on the peacock as their totem."

Dr. Sharma's book at its best is a useful and detailed collation of available materials on the republics at the time of the Buddha. However, he is a bit overzealous in sharply criticizing the views of the other scholars (see pages 6, 9, 11, 14, 81, 102, 119); some of his own suggestions, too, based as they are on the same insufficient and fragmentary evidence used by the other scholars, are wide open for different interpretations. Certainly a final word as to the nature of republican institutions in ancient India has yet to be written; Dr. Sharma's book has made us aware of the difficulties inherent in studying them during the period from ca. 1500 B.C. to 500 B.C.

N. K. WAGLE
University of Toronto

STEPHEN P. COHEN. The Indian Army: Its Contribution to the Development of a Nation. Berkeley and Los Angeles: University of California Press. 1971. Pp. x, 216. $7.50.

Professor Cohen emphasizes in his introduction that this book is not a history of the Indian military. It is "a study of the development of a modern army in South Asia, and its relationship to its own political and social environment." Historical data are employed from a perspective "informed by contemporary theories of military organization and nation-building." Fair enough; but for many historians Cohen's distinctions about what is and is not history are perhaps too subtle. This is clearly not a conventional military history, but it is just as clearly an exceptionally fine piece of historical scholarship. In its discussion of the army's role as an instrument of British power and its new role as the military arm of a secular democratic state, this book makes a major contribution to the South Asia literature. The contribution is twofold: it provides for the first time a consideration over time of the changing social character of the army; second, and perhaps more important, it clearly spells out the relationships between the military and politics in South Asia and thereby acts as a corrective to much modern political history, which has seriously failed to account for the important influences of the army in the subcontinent. (If the book helps lay to rest the myth that the idea of nonviolence has been the dominant operating factor in modern Indian politics, its contribution will be even more profound.)

The author organizes his ideas around several basic themes, but he emphasizes the changing perceptions of the character and role of the army in the British Indian period and in the new India. For me, five of the seven chapters in this concise volume are especially revealing. Chapter 2 on recruitment and ideology examines the organizational integrity of the British Indian army, the development of an able officer corps and an effective army of soldiers, and the idea of the "martial races" that bound the army into a loyal and committed whole. Chapter 4 touches all too briefly on defense problems and the nationalist movement, defining precisely the points at which personalities and ideologies in the recent nationalist period responded to the military. The reactions of Tilak, Subhas Chandra Bose, Gandhi, and Nehru and the impact of these reactions on subsequent attitudes and policies require more than the twenty-six pages Cohen has given us; they require another book. But this is true of most of the chapters in this volume and it indicates the richness and importance of Professor Cohen's work. My informal check list of research problems suggested in these pages has a dozen notations.

Taken together, chapters 5, 6, and 7, dealing with the professional officer, World War II, and the army after independence, provide the book's major statement on the training and quality of the growing number of Indian officers before and during the war, their significance as a leadership pool during and after the war, and their function as a force for national integration in the years of independence.

This integrative role of the army derives from two sources. First, since 1962 the Indian army has doubled in size and has perforce become more egalitarian, reflecting thereby the democratic sentiments of India's political leadership (though the army also continues to recruit from those classes, castes, and regions on which it has traditionally drawn, a procedure Cohen aptly identifies as the "secular theory of the martial races"). The second factor contributing to the integrative role of the military is its function in free India as the nation's defender against external enemies. The shock of the 1962 China war contributed drastically to this new Indian conception of its army, and it is fair to say that the success of the army in the 1971 December war against Pakistan is for India the culmination of this process. Military might has become for India a symbol of nationhood, a perception that Mrs. Gandhi articulated in specific terms vis-à-vis the United States and the Soviet Union following the December war.

The creation of Bangla Desh and the restructuring of power relationships in South Asia which that event has effected involve the military in a profound way. Something of the extent and nature of the impact of India's involvement has been suggested. For Pakistan the consequences for the military and for the nation must be even deeper. Professor Cohen's excellent book helps us understand some of these new circumstances. For an explanation of others we await his further scholarship.

WALTER HAUSER

University of Virginia

AMERICAS

PAUL A. ROSSI and DAVID C. HUNT. The Art of the Old West: From the Collection of the Gilcrease Institute. New York: Alfred A. Knopf. 1971. Pp. 335. $30.00.

This lavishly illustrated volume was envisioned as a descriptive social commentary that "would offer the reader a broad spectrum of activities concerning the development of the Old West." The themes around which the paintings, sketches, and sculptures are clustered are obvious ones: the wilderness, Indians of the Plains, life on the Missouri, trappers and traders, troopers, the cowboy, and others. Even so, the artists themselves dominate the book. While the illustrations were selected primarily for their value as a historical record rather than for esthetic reasons, most of the artists included here saw the West through European eyes and training. The result is a near-legendary golden West. The authors feel that since the majority of those "who documented life on the American frontier at whatever time and for whatever purpose, perpetuated a romance . . .," the artists were therefore being "realistic" by painting in a romantic vein those subjects that interested the public most. They have a point, for the paintings reveal a recurrent theme of violence in the form of Indian warfare, cowboys and guns, and the slaughter of wild game.

Beyond this the paintings prove to be limited social documents, for although the authors analyze weapons, clothing, saddles, and other items described in the more accurate illustrations, there are almost no paintings of Indian society (Catlin's are the great exception), frontier family life, railroading, towns, and women, omissions that the authors themselves lament. Ironically the twentieth-century paintings of Indians by Woodrow Crumbo and of the Old West by W. R. Leigh, a Gilcrease favorite, add the qualities of nostalgia and sentiment to that of romance.

Many of the selections from the five thousand works of art housed in the impressive Gilcrease Institute collection at Tulsa are by such well-known artists as Catlin, Bodmer, Miller, Bierstadt, Remington, Russell, and Seltzer. Of the sixty artists included at least two who are relatively unknown stand out as valuable rediscoveries. The first, Charles Bécard de Granville, was a seventeenth-century French-Canadian cartographer whose unique sketches of animals anticipate some of Audubon's humorous drawings, while Granville's renditions of people demonstrate a primitive style that almost seems to reflect the influence of Indian skin drawings. The second, William de la Montagne Cary of Tappan, New York, toured and painted the nineteenth-century West for the fun of it. Nevertheless his sketches capture a more sober and mundane West of sleeping roustabouts on riverboats, Mormon haymakers, a lonely campsite, towns, and ordinary people.

Rossi and Hunt have tried to place the illustrations in context by providing a running narrative of Western history in each section. But the artists' emphases on Indian warfare, buffalo, cowboys, and dramatic events force the narrative to be lopsided and often superficial. Still the authors never lose sight of the fact that the "painter's West" was neither the real nor complete West but rather "as much a state of mind as Boston." They also explicitly reject the Turner frontier hypothesis in their account, although the revelation that the artist has romanticized wilderness and frontier America for four centuries tells us much about the profound impact of Rousseau and romanticism on European and American culture, and even helps explain the origin and perennial success of the Turner thesis itself.

Less complete in terms of biographical information than Robert Taft's Artists and Illustrators of the Old West, 1850-1900 (1953) and less focused than Pauline A. Pinckney's fine Painting in Texas in the Nineteenth Century (1967), this volume is a valuable addition to the growing list of good art books concerned with the Western scene. Except for the fact that the pictures of sculptures did not reproduce well on slick paper the book is a visual feast, and the Gilcrease Institute deserves every praise for publishing such a representative cross-section of their rich holdings.

HOWARD R. LAMAR
Yale University

BEN B. SELIGMAN, The Potentates: Business and Businessmen in American History. (Two Centuries of American Life: A Bicentennial History.) Reprint; New York: Dial Press. 1971. Pp. 402. $3.95.

Whether or not the bicentennial celebration of the nation's independence pulls itself together and "comes to earth I know not where," it has already stimulated publishers and authors. One such response plans a bicentennial series of thirty volumes on a topical basis and here presents Mr. Seligman's history of American business and businessmen. His primary strategy has been to assemble a roster of approximately 525 businessmen and to divide into four time periods their "antics" and those of the governments with which they worked and which they corruptly controlled. The lines between these eras are not sharply drawn, for history is a "seamless web" (p. 4). The first era extends from colonial days to the Civil War; the last three periods extend from Reconstruction to the present day. This organization inevitably caters to ad hominem analysis and to anecdotal history. Perhaps without design, it enables the last chapter, on the period since World War I, to differ somewhat from those that have gone before. The rhetoric becomes less relentless, and, if I understand a generally opaque style, "managerial interest appeared to focus on maximizing size rather than profit" (pp. 329-30). Perhaps the change in tone is due to a reliance on a different bibliography. Hitherto, though reluctant to be a muckraker, Seligman apparently based his analysis upon Gustavus Myers, Henry D. Lloyd, and Matthew Josephson. More recently, as a labor-union bureaucrat, he seems to have come in contact with more sophisticated sources, like Fortune, the Wall Street Journal, and John Kenneth Galbraith.

Be that as it may, Seligman's preface states his fundamental convictions: "Business cannot survive without profit. . . . The search for profit is axiomatic." Though the author has argued the matter with friends he still stubbornly believes that "America is predominantly an acquisitive society" (p. 4). At no time does he define "profits" or show any appreciation as to how variously they operate within our culture. To him profit is greed, it is self-interest. "Wealth was equated to virtue" (p. 66). Profits were the more censurable because they "came easy" and were usually "enormous" or "handsome." Finally, save the mark, he writes, without a touch of humor, a man "could pick a fortune from the branches of trees" (p. 115).

For one thing, to take a concrete example, the presence and practice of business philanthropy challenges this framework. The author resorts to the stereotype that philanthropy was a penance for a guilty conscience. When he comes to a subtle case like Carnegie his explanation is an awful mixture of twisted chronology and omits relevant considerations. Above all he pays no attention to what businessmen or their captive journalists and politicians said, for they were all hypocrites and deceivers. Much better to fall back upon the language of the demagogues. By and large the traction interest was dominated by financial syndicates who "for twenty-five years behaved like fabled vampires living on human blood" (p. 158), or when workers died in Guggenheim's enterprises, "the Moloch of capital accumulation demanded their sacrifice" (p. 193).

Inflexible in its determination to make a case at all costs, enmeshed in clichés and con-traditions, omitting or treating shallowly whole areas of business experience, more at ease in the rhetoric and ideology of yellow journalism than with the thinking and moderation of scholarship, this book lacks the urbanity, the insights, or the balanced judgment to cope with its complicated subject. It is a work of little merit.

EDWARD C. KIRKLAND
Thetford, Vermont

VIRGINIUS DABNEY. Virginia: The New Dominion. Garden City, N. Y.: Doubleday and Company. 1971. Pp. xvi, 629. $12.50.

In the tradition of Douglas Southall Freeman and David J. Mays, Virginus Dabney belongs to a sizable group of Virginians who combine an interest in the past with active participation in the present, to whom the study of history is an avocation, and to whom historical perspectives are natural, important, and assumed to be within the consciousness of others. As editor of the Richmond Times-Dispatch for thirty-three years, Mr. Dabney has been a close observer of the Virginia scene over the past four decades and a serious student of the state's history. In this book these interests and skills have merged, and it is important to the appreciation of the work to understand both Mr. Dabney's involvement in recent events and his scholarly interest in the Old Dominion's long past. So ingrained are historical perspectives in his patterns of thought that Mr. Dabney changes in this work almost imperceptibly from a narrator of the historical record to an observer of the contemporary scene. But this transition takes place as the narrative approaches the present, and assessments and evaluations become more common in relation to recent developments.

Mr. Dabney has aimed at providing a comprehensive survey of Virginia history, but the emphasis remains on traditional political history. There are important departures to introduce economic, social, cultural, and intellectual developments, and the author has made a conscious effort to avoid neglecting the role and contributions of blacks in Virginia history. But the account is basically political, and it is mainly chronological. Governorships, whether colonial or contemporary, provide the principal organizational framework. The narrative is factual, informative, and, while sympathetic, is not a glorification of the Virginia past. The author clearly takes pride in his Virginia heritage, but he makes evident the deficiencies in that past, describes the backwardness of the state in the post-Civil War decades and the early twentieth century, and reports false turns in recent years.

In view of the great disparities in historical literature about Virginia, Mr. Dabney, who largely relies on secondary accounts except for the recent period, has produced a remarkably well-balanced survey with respect to chronological coverage. Historians have extensively examined colonial Virginia and the Civil War in Virginia, but they have given much less attention to other periods, especially the late nineteenth and the twentieth centuries. Mr. Dabney compresses Virginia's 169-year colonial experience into about 150 pages; his Civil War survey moves from Manassas to Appomattox in fifty pages; two hundred pages are devoted to the period since Reconstruction. In this last segment of the work the author has combined reliable scholarly studies with his own knowledge of the immediate past to provide a fresh summary. On the other hand, for the colonial period, though the accomplishment of synthesis and summation is commendable, the interpretations of leading historians are cited in an eclectic way, and there is no sustained interpretive evaluation of the colonial experience. Richard Morton's two-volume study of Colonial Virginia (1960) will be preferred by scholars interested in that early period. The coverage of the years since Reconstruction provides the most useful portion of the book, and Dabney is at his best writing about the period that he has observed at first hand. He is basically a political reporter and analyst, and the recent coverage is almost entirely focused on state politics and issues. Here he adds his editorial judgments and assessments.

Mr. Dabney has chosen the subtitle "The New Dominion" to display his conviction that "in almost every area—political, racial, educational, industrial, and cultural—Virginia has entered a new era." "The Byrd machine is defunct," he writes, "and the state's politics have become fluid and uncertain. The racial situation has been totally transformed" (pp. 580-81). He cites great progress in higher education, rapid industrial development, and an urban population explosion. While he recognizes the achievements of Harry Byrd as governor in the 1920s, he reserves his highest praise for Mills Godwin, governor from 1966 to 1970, whose term Dabney sees as "one of a handful of truly exceptional gubernatorial administrations in the long history of Virginia, and second to none in modern times" (p. 575). Godwin, by abandoning Byrd's pay-as-you-go philosophy, getting a sales tax enacted, promoting constitutional revision, revitalizing education, and pressing other reforms, led Virginia "out of the rut in which she had been wallowing for decades" (p. 563).

The sparsely documented book is obviously designed for a wide audience, who will find an informative, interesting, and sympathetic survey of the history of the colony and commonwealth of Virginia and a knowledgeable assessment of its recent past.

NOBLE E. CUNNINGHAM, JR.
University of Missouri,
Columbia

T. H. BREEN. The Character of the Good Ruler: A Study of Puritan Political Ideas in New England, 1630-1730. (Yale Historical Publications. Miscellany, Number 92.) New Haven: Yale University Press. 1970. Pp. xx, 301. $10.00.

T. H. Breen's subject is the transformation of political ideas in early New England. His method is Bailynesque: pamphlets (including printed election sermons) are his major source, and, as he stipulates in the preface, he eschews "hidden desires" and presumes always that his authors meant exactly "what they said, no matter how outrageous their words might now appear" (p. xv). Expressed ideas are, moreover, directly related to events, for to Breen (commendably) ideas jog along behind action. The method dictates style. In narrative form Breen recounts events from the Winthrop migration through the political battling of Governors Dudley and Shute, interspersing in the narrative, through extensive quotations, the intellectual adjustments that follow upon events: the steady movement of the mind from a Winthropian unity, albeit marked by "family quarrels," to an unbridgeable division between "court" and "country," from a monolithic view of the magistrate as the Lord's vicegerent on earth once properly chosen by a covenanted people, to dichotomous views of good rulers preserving the people's liberty and estates on the one hand, and, on the other, as gentlemen of culture and purse, wielding legitimate (that is, royal) power in the face of "democraticall anarkie" (p. 213).

The volume has its faults, certainly. Conscious of the difficulties of the "weasel word," "Puritan," Breen attempts to sidestep: "Puritan" in England, he stipulates, refers to the ministers of Haller's "spiritual brotherhood"; in the New England context "almost all Congregationalists" are to be considered Puritan (p. xviii). But the inadequacies of the sidestep are regularly apparent, as when he writes that "many of the men who supported Country views were not Puritans in a strictly religious sense" (p. 273). If Puritan equals Congregationalist and Congregationalism is to be taken in a religious sense, these "many" by definition were not Congregationalists, ergo they were Baptists or Anglicans or what-have-you with Congregational political ideas. One cannot help but wonder if the word is really worth such contortion. And there is an air of thinness to the volume. On one level it is merely irritating—half-errors of logic and fact that a bit more work would have erased. On another it provokes major disappointment. Shifts in the progression of ideas are too abrupt. The roots of a new twist in the view of the good ruler—roots both in New England and in an ever-changing old England—are unexplored. The tie to events is too often a pronouncement rather than a demonstration, as is Breen's statement in the epilogue that court and country appealed "to different ideas, sources, and traditions" (p. 271); he had already confessed ignorance of the sources of both.

Nevertheless, the volume is a decided contribution. The very consideration of ideas in New England as vital, dynamic, a product rather than determinative of a historical process, is refreshing. The historian of early New England, reading quickly for the mass and order of Breen's quotations, will find much to ponder.

DARRETT B. RUTMAN

University of New Hampshire

ROBERT J. TAYLOR, editor. The Susquehannah Company Papers. Volume 10, 1789-1800; Volume 11, 1801-1808. (Sheldon Reynolds Memorial Publications.) Ithaca: Cornell University Press for Wyoming Historical and Geological Society. 1971. Pp. xlii, 606; xxxvii, 565. $20.00 each.

These two volumes mark the completion of a labor begun over forty years ago, and, in the words of the chairman of the present Susquehannah Company Papers Publications Committee, "a dream has come true." The story of eighteenth-century land claims that resulted from the loosely worded colonial charters is an important chapter in American history. It reveals aspects of politics of the time and the growth of land speculation not obtained easily from the readily available history of the early colonies and states. Following the Revolution it became a vital part of the early westward expansion of the new nation. The eleven volumes of The Susquehannah Company Papers published for the Wyoming Historical and Geological Society document this segment of American history more fully by far than any other single collected source. Historians are in the debt of this ambitious and persevering local historical society. They are further in debt to Julian P. Boyd for editing the first four volumes and to Robert J. Taylor for his very capable work on volumes 5 through 11. Both the record of this land company and land speculation are covered from 1750 to 1808. The National Publications Commission and the Pennsylvania Historical and Museum Commission deserve credit for financial support of this venture through the final volumes.

The tenth volume highlights the famous law suit Van Horne's Lessee v. Dorrance, a key court case in the continued dispute over private land ownership in this northeastern Pennsylvania area, even though the usual historical treatment of the period implies that the issue was settled by the famous Trenton Decree in 1782. This ruling validated the Pennsylvania claim to the territory in dispute with Connecticut but did not settle private ownership problems. The Susquehannah Company continued to sell land well into the 1790s and to authorize townships within Pennsylvania. Pennsylvania also became excited when the issue of Connecticut's cession of its Western Reserve land claims to the United States came to the front in 1799. Some Pennsylvanians thought acceptance of Connecticut's cession implied a validity to Connecticut's total original boundary claims with a consequent threat to the Trenton decision's validity.

The last volume represents a wise editorial decision to drop the initial plan to publish twelve volumes by eliminating repetitious material such as newspaper extracts and some letters and documents reviewing the previous history of the controversy. Volume 11 is concerned mainly with the roles of Thomas Cooper and Tench Coxe in implementing the Compromise Act that enabled Connecticut claimants to establish title to their lands within the fifteen Connecticut towns along the Susquehanna. It records also Pennsylvania's efforts to force other Connecticut settlers outside these towns to buy their lands. Each of the volumes includes an excellent introductory essay summarizing the significant developments of the period each covers. These are then illustrated by the documentary selections.

S. K. STEVENS

Pennsylvania Historical and Museum Commission

FREDERICK MERK, with the collaboration of LOIS BANNISTER MERK. Fruits of Propaganda in the Tyler Administration. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press. 1971. Pp. x, 259. $9.00.

Students of Professor Frederick Merk's brilliant monographs on manifest destiny, the Monroe Doctrine, and the Oregon question will be disappointed in this loosely argued collection of essays. In it Merk attempts to demonstrate that John Tyler used bribery and propaganda to effect the peaceful settlement of the Maine boundary dispute in 1841-42, and that to advance the cause of Texas annexation in 1844-45 he employed Senator Robert J. Walker's ingenious "safety-valve" thesis as administration propaganda.

It is not news that Tyler and Webster engaged at least five paid undercover agents to swing Maine opinion toward a boundary settlement. Tyler candidly admitted his own complicity in the scheme in May 1846. What is new is Professor Merk's imaginative detective work in reconstructing just how the settlement was managed. It is a fascinating story although the author fails to see that Tyler's devotion to states' rights (which he clearly compromised in Maine) was entirely negotiable when the President's political ambitions and his egocentric concerns with his role in history were involved in his decision making.

More controversial is Merk's attempt to link Tyler to the Walker thesis that Texas annexation would eventually solve the racial and slavery questions in America. Few students of Texas annexation would deny that the "safety-valve" argument played an important propaganda role in the annexation debate. But there is no persuasive evidence that Tyler embraced the thesis in 1844, or that he actively worked to popularize it at the time. Merk's case for a Tyler-Walker propaganda alliance is based almost entirely on his contention that Tyler and Walker were close personal friends, that Tyler endorsed the Walker thesis in 1847, and that two members of Tyler's Cabinet, William Wilkins and David Henshaw, supported it in 1844-45.

The fact of the matter is that Tyler skillfully argued Texas annexation in a British-encirclement context and as a national economic desideratum—not in the sectional or slavery terms he knew would defeat an annexation treaty, as indeed it initially did in June 1844. His passing remark in September 1847 that Walker's thesis had "unveiled the true merits of the question" was little more than a political gesture toward the moderate Southern Democracy whose support he sought for the presidential nomination in 1848. Nor were Tyler and Walker personal friends. Henshaw was no longer in Tyler's cabinet during the annexation debate; Wilkins was related to Senator Walker by marriage. Their support of the Walker thesis says nothing very convincing about Tyler's view or utilization of it. And to suggest, as Professor Merk does, that John Tyler introduced the Monroe Doctrine into the annexation debate because he "was clearly seeking a bond to unite the country in support of his policy of acquiring slave territory" is near nonsense. The allegation demonstrates little grasp of Tyler's complex and often contradictory views of race, slavery, and slavery extension.

In sum, this book fails in its attempt to sustain an interpretive overview of Tyler's diplomatic methodology in propaganda terms. Perhaps this is because Tyler's Anglophilia in Maine cannot easily be harmonized with his Anglophobia in Texas or his Anglo-ambivalence in Oregon. Unfortunately for Tyler-administration hypothesis makers, the tenth president was not a consistent person in his public life. He was, after all, the states' rights theoretician who eagerly accomplished Texas annexation in March 1845 by joint resolution—hardly a strict constructionist concept.

ROBERT SEAGER II
University of Baltimore

ZANE ALLEN MASON. Frontiersmen of the Faith: A History of Baptist Pioneer Work in Texas 1865-1885. San Antonio: Naylor Company. 1970. Pp. ix, 219. $7.95.

Writers of religious history are sometimes so secularly oriented as to have scant regard for religious concerns, while others are activist churchmen who seek acceptance of their personal views. Professor Mason is obviously dedicated to religious values but approaches his data objectively. His task is made easier by the terminal date for his study (1885), before the impact of the new geology, evolution, and Biblical criticism caused sharp tensions in conservative church circles.

The author identifies five basic Baptist principles: (1) separation of church and state, (2) individual responsibility to God, (3) conversion as a condition to church membership, (4) congregational church government, and (5) baptism by immersion. The volume parallels somewhat the study of Texas Disciples of Christ (Carter E. Boren, Religion on the Texas Frontier [1968]), although the latter carries the story well beyond 1885. Both religious groups held similar viewpoints, the Baptists stressing immersion while the Disciples emphasized a creedless adherence to Christ as the cornerstone of faith. In each group some opposed Sunday schools and missionary societies as not grounded in Scripture, but lack of support for missionary activity among the Baptists seems to have been due largely to financial problems.

The author summarizes Baptist beginnings before 1865 and then discusses the Texas frontier, northwestern, western, and southwestern. He has consulted many sources including secular and religious newspapers, church records, and secondary works. The average reader may find little interest in individuals and small congregations that made contributions to the Baptist enterprise, but the author attempts a thorough presentation. He supports historians such as William W. Sweet, asserting that pioneer churches moderated the frightful loneliness of frontier life and both by example and by disciplinary action aided law, order, and decency.

The difficulties encountered included a lack of financial resources and of a trained ministry, Indian depredations, droughts, grasshopper invasions, the prominence of the Catholic tradition among Mexican settlers and of the Lutheran faith among Germans, and splintering divisions among the Baptists. At times relations between white and black Baptists and widespread intemperance also presented real problems. Restricted basically to a twenty-year period and to one denomination the book makes a limited but significant contribution to American religious history.

FRANCIS PHELPS WEISENBURGER
Ohio State University

BEVERLEY BOWEN MOELLER. Phil Swing and Boulder Dam. Berkeley and Los Angeles: University of California Press. 1971. Pp. xii, 199. $8.50.

Although the history of the American West is a much tilled field the record of Western growth in the twentieth century is still sketchy and obscure. And yet it is a vital part of the national experience. Hence this well-written monograph is especially welcome, for it illuminates not only an important aspect of Western development but presidential politics and public power policies during the twenties as well.

Mrs. Moeller's compact volume is mainly concerned with the efforts of California's Congressman Phil Swing to secure congressional approval for the building of Boulder Dam. Beginning in 1921 Swing fought singlemindedly for establishment of this project. Arrayed against him were private utility interests, large-scale real-estate developers like the Hearsts, and uninterested Easterners. The author carefully traces the tortuous path of Boulder Dam legislation during more than seven years of bitter struggle. Only in 1928 did congress finally authorize construction of what was then the biggest dam on earth. Mrs. Moeller concludes that the redesignated Hoover Dam was grossly misnamed since throughout the twenties Herbert Hoover had shown himself to be an inveterate opponent of public power and consistently opposed the project. Nevertheless, many historians have associated Hoover Dam with the Hoover administration. To correct such distortions, Mrs. Moeller feels quite rightly, Congressman Phil Swing should be accorded his due right to be considered as the father of Hoover Dam. This carefully researched and objective monograph should provide an effective antidote for recent efforts to revitalize the fictitious myth of Herbert Hoover as the true progenitor of the New Deal.

Assiduously grounded in exhaustive research, mostly in primary materials, this erstwhile dissertation is a model of careful historical scholarship. It should be of interest not only to those concerned with the West but to all students of twentieth-century America.

GERALD D. NASH

University of New Mexico

NATHAN IRVIN HUGGINS. Harlem Renaissance. New York: Oxford University Press. 1971. Pp. xi, 343. $8.95.

Rather than being a formal history of the Negro literary and artistic flowering in the 1920s, Huggins's Harlem Renaissance is a series of explorations of black identity and the problems of being a black artist in a white, racist society.

The reader of this long-awaited volume is going to be disappointed if he expects a study taking advantage of the wealth of hitherto unused manuscript sources available. Instead Huggins bases his study on a few interviews and the existing published literature, chiefly the writings of the Renaissance authors. This fact necessarily limits Huggins's analysis of the dynamics and personalities, white and black, involved in the development of the Renaissance and even makes his discussion of certain key topics, central to his book, less rich than they should have been. Thus, to cite just one example of materials Huggins should have consulted, James Weldon Johnson's notebooks contain materials that shed considerable illumination on the whole question of cultural nationalism and ethnic identity as viewed by a leading figure in the movement.

On the other hand when Huggins, in his opening chapter, seriously attempts a historical treatment, he commits a number of obvious factual errors and digresses into irrelevant topics such as Du Bois's support of Wilson in 1912 and the World War I campaign, led by NAACP board chairman Joel Spingarn, for a black officers' training camp. (Curiously, however, Huggins fails to discuss Spingarn's role in encouraging the Harlem Renaissance, both through the literary prizes given in his wife's name and through his activities as a founder of Harcourt, Brace.) Unfortunately while irrelevancies are discussed, Huggins fails to provide an adequate treatment of the intellectual origins of the Renaissance, nor does he make some of the relevant background data he does present functional to his later analysis.

The heart of the book—dealing with the cultural and ethnic ambivalences of the Renaissance artists and writers and the dilemmas they found in attempting to achieve artistic integrity in a milieu where, with their interests in the "primitive" and exotic, white patrons and readers determined "success"—is handled with great sensitivity and insight. The problem is that most of the ground has been pretty well covered before. Thoughtful as his somewhat discursive essays are, the author's failure to use manuscript materials or to attempt a more comprehensive treatment of the movement means that he has not brought us very much further than what we can learn from earlier works like James Weldon Johnson's Black Manhattan (1930), Alain Locke's The New Negro (1925), Langston Hughes's The Big Sea (1946), Gilbert Osofsky's Harlem (1966), and Robert Bone's The Negro Novel in America (1965).

An adequate history of the Harlem Renaissance is still to be written.

AUGUST MEIER

Kent State University

ROSS RUSSELL. Jazz Style in Kansas City and the Southwest. Berkeley and Los Angeles: University of California Press. 1971. Pp. xviii, 292. $12.50.

Popular myth would have it that jazz was "born" in New Orleans and traveled "up de ribber" to Chicago (which required a bit of doing, inasmuch as de ribber doesn't go to Chicago). A revisionist interpretation emphasizes the independent evolution of jazz in various geographic areas.

Ross Russell rather inclines toward the latter view. He makes much of the cultural isolation of Kansas City and of the "Pendergast prosperity" that lured musicians to Kansas City during the depression—two factors that permitted the development of a distinctive jazz style. Unfortunately the average reader will be hard pressed to know just what this jazz style was—other than the suggestions that it was peculiarly influenced by folk song and that it emphasized the “riff” as a musical device. Jazz cognoscenti will understand what is meant by Kansas City style, but will object that Russell goes beyond mere style to make Kansas City jazz virtually sui generis!

Most valuable are the chapters describing the early jazz bands of the region. The author displays an unparalleled knowledge of Coy’s Happy Black Aces, Alphonso Trent, Troy Floyd, Peck’s Bad Boys, Art Bronson’s Bostonians (out of Salina, Kansas!), The Blues Syncopaters, Lloyd Hunter’s Serenaders, Buster Smith’s Blue Devils, and many other little-known musicians and organizations. There are excellent chapters on others that became nationally prominent: Bennie Moten, Count Basie, Andy Kirk’s Clouds of Joy, Harlan Leonard’s Rockets, and Jay McShann.

Saxophonists Lester Young and Charlie Parker are singled out for extended analysis. The latter was the central figure in the Kansas City inspired Bebop revolution and subsequent developments in modern jazz. Ironically Lester Young could be cited as a refutation of Russell’s thesis that Kansas City jazz was essentially uninfluenced by other styles. Young was raised and began playing music in New Orleans and was most influenced by the recordings of Frankie Trumbauer and Bix Beiderbecke. Indeed the existence of the phonograph record makes nonsense of Russell’s “cultural isolation” ideas.

Despite the vulnerability of some of his enthusiasms, Ross Russell’s book is the best that we have on the subject of Southwestern jazz and probably will remain so. It is well documented, with a modicum of errors, and includes a discography, a bibliography, and excellent photographs.

GEORGE A. BOECK

University of Northern Colorado

R. SERGE DENISOFF. Great Day Coming: Folk Music and the American Left. (Music in American Life.) Urbana: University of Illinois Press. 1971. Pp. 219. $7.50.

This book tells the story of the cultivation of folk music by the Old Left of the 1930s and the

New Left of the 1960s. In the 1930s radical interest in folk music grew at first from unforced encounter with native tradition. During the Gastonia strike of 1929 and again in bloody Harlan County a few years later Ella May Wiggins and Aunt Molly Jackson made up songs for the struggle. Prompted by such experience, at Brookwood Labor College near New York City, Commonwealth College in Arkansas, and the Highlander Folk School in Tennessee new political words were set to traditional hymns and spirituals such as “We Shall Overcome.”

In the late 1930s this cultural style became party doctrine. Denisoff suggests several reasons. The Communist party had a high percentage of recent immigrants and wished to overcome its cultural separation from mainstream America. A prestigious model in the international Communist movement was the peasant art that did service as proletarian culture in the Soviet Union. And after the adoption of the “popular front” perspective in 1935 Communist parties sought alliances with groups less radical than themselves. Folk music helped to answer each of these political needs.

The results are familiar to those who grew up in New York City at this time and frequented Left gatherings. A Leadbelly or Woody Guthrie was brought to the big city, lionized in the party subculture, and imitated by countless college dropouts with guitars as well as groups like the Almanac Singers. The political folk song and the hootenany became the cultural side of the Communist party’s effort to represent “twentieth-century Americanism.”

The twists and turns of the party line after 1939, together with the blacklisting of individuals like Pete Seeger and the repression of radicalism generally, prevented these songs and their singers from winning wide acceptance, even in the trade-union movement. Yet in 1949–52, when repression was most intense, the commercial success of the Weavers with songs like Leadbelly’s “Good Night, Irene” and Guthrie’s “So Long, It’s Been Good To Know You” foreshadowed what was to come. Along with the revival of the political Left in the 1960s the folk song finally conquered Tin Pan Alley.

Victory came at a price. The Almanac Singers had understood their work as a collective process: the song was ideally derived from anonymous folk tradition, the singer was often an unidentified member of a group that would draw its audience into the performance. In contrast Dylan, Baez, or Ochs composed songs that expressed their personal feelings, sold them on records, and did not shrink from the focus on themselves that followed. If the folk music of the 1930s at its worst produced a labored straining toward imagined sentiments of "the people," the folk music of the 1960s at its worst produced an equally artificial commercialized star system.

In his concern to call attention to these features of the truth Denisoff draws a caricature rather than a portrait. At its best the tradition of political folk song has been very good indeed. In their different ways Pete Seeger and Joan Baez have shown that musicians can enrich rather than cheapen their craft by plunging into politics; that the professional and the amateur have complementary contributions to make to a total art; that a performer can relate to an audience as equals without false deference or arrogance. They have created a model from which all professionals and craftsmen, not least historians, can learn.

STAUGHTON LYND
Chicago, Illinois

WILLIAM C. BERMAN. The Politics of Civil Rights in the Truman Administration. Columbus: Ohio State University Press. 1970. Pp. xi, 261. $8.00.

Professor Berman observes that Harry Truman was in deep trouble in his 1940 senatorial campaign. The Pendergast machine was out of power and his opponent in the primary was preferred by FDR. However, the "organized" black vote pulled Truman through. Ironically, four years later, he had the enthusiastic support of the South in its successful effort to dump "nigger-loving" Henry Wallace as Roosevelt's running mate. As Berman points out, Truman's appeal lay in his "centrist" links to both the liberal and conservative wings of the Democratic party. He believed in "fair play" and "equal justice" for Negroes, but not if that meant incurring serious opposition from Southern congressmen. As president he sought to avoid a major rupture between the party's two factions and to call upon the Southern congressional bloc for support of his foreign policy and welfare programs. But the Republican landslide in the 1946 congressional elections convinced Truman that for 1948 he needed a civil rights record to appeal to the Democrats' Northern liberal wing—especially to black voters in key industrial states. Accordingly, while he still could not bring himself to fight for civil rights legislation, he willingly delivered important presidential statements and used his executive power on behalf of Negro aspirations. Truman issued an executive order creating a commission that studied race relations in America and called for the full integration of blacks. Another Truman order provided for the desegregation of the armed forces. But a third one, issued later, in 1951, which required corporations holding federal contracts to pursue a nondiscriminatory employment policy, was ineffectively enforced. Indeed, having won the 1948 election with overwhelming black support despite a torn-up Democratic party, Truman, as a true "centrist," thereupon gave top priority to healing the North-South breach in the party and in Congress. That task, of course, ended hope for civil rights legislation. Yet as Berman shows, Truman had done more for civil rights than any previous president and had used his office to help create a new climate of opinion. But frightened of the political dangers Truman refused to go further.

Berman has produced a highly competent study, carefully researched in the archival materials relevant to Truman and to Negroes. Berman correctly emphasizes the black vote in affecting Truman's actions. However, while the author also mentions the role of the black man's "white allies," the book could have been improved by an analysis of just how these whites actually functioned in the "politics of civil rights."

This volume is a welcome addition to the literature.

ELLIOTT RUDWICK
Kent State University

JOSEPH BRUCE GORMAN. Kefauver: A Political Biography. New York: Oxford University Press. 1971. Pp. viii, 434. $10.00.

It was highly unlikely that a man whose campaign emblem was a coonskin cap should be elected president in the industrial, urban society that the United States had become by the 1950s. The fate of Bryan's aspirations a half century earlier should have taught that lesson. Moreover, most Americans enjoyed a complacent mood during the period of the Eisenhower equilibrium, and in many circles there existed little sympathy with a boat-rocking populist of the sort that Senator Estes Kefauver seemed to be. In addition, Kefauver of Tennessee labored under the misfortune of sowing his presidential oats at the time that Lyndon B. Johnson of Texas began working the same field, thus presenting a rare occasion in modern history when not just one, but two Southerners offered themselves as contenders for the White House. In the end Johnson proved to be the "slicker" of the two men.

Nevertheless it appears that the quest for the nation's highest office governed, in large part, Estes Kefauver's career; he had contracted, as Professor Frederick Merk used to put it, "the presidential fever." Almost from the beginning of his service as a congressman in 1939, and then as a senator after 1949, Kefauver had a knack for latching on to issues that were headline catchers: reform of congressional procedures, concentration of control in big business, juvenile delinquency, and, of course, the famous televised hearings on organized crime in the early 1950s. (One is reminded of Senator Joe McCarthy's thrashing about for a viable issue until he stumbled upon "the Communist menace.") Kefauver's name became well enough known so that twice, in 1952 and 1956, he could score impressive victories along the "primary route" to the executive mansion. Although he carried off his party's vice-presidential nomination in 1956, during the next few years he ran afoul of the complex maneuverings of the Johnson and Kennedy forces to such an extent that by late 1959 the public opinion polls no longer listed him among the Democrats' presidential hopefuls. Thereafter Kefauver settled down to become a Senate workhorse, especially in the field of consumer protection, until death unexpectedly claimed him in 1963.

Kefauver's biographer, Joseph Bruce Gorman, does not push the "presidential fever" theme as relentlessly as I have done in the above summary. It may well be, as he suggests, that unselfish concern for the public interest motivated Kefauver's behavior more than I have allowed. In any event an "emotional moat" surrounded the man, according to the author, and consequently it is difficult to tell just why Kefauver followed the paths he did. As one who is skeptical about the reliability of biographical "psychoanalysis," I will not quarrel over the point. Gorman has written an interesting and competent account of Kefauver's public life, one that is about as thorough as available evidence allows. If Kefauver was a headline hunter he, unlike McCarthy, at least exploited causes that contributed to the general welfare. And if the New Republic in its 1963 obituary could feel that Kefauver's populism was "a legacy from the past" possessing "neither the intellectual style nor the restrained manner valued on the New Frontier or elsewhere in an increasingly technocratic society," there are perhaps today a growing number of Americans who are not quite so sure that "his faith is . . . largely discredited."

J. JOSEPH HUTHMACHER
University of Delaware

ROBERT L. BRANYAN and LAWRENCE H. LARSEN. The Eisenhower Administration, 1953-1961: A Documentary History. In two volumes. New York: Random House. 1971. Pp. xi, 686; vi, 687-1414. $55.00 the set.

The editors of these two large volumes appear to have defined their objectives as, first, the compilation of an interior documentary history of the Eisenhower administration during its years of power; second, the presentation of administration viewpoints rather than lengthy editorial analysis; and third, the maximum usage of manuscripts from the Dwight D. Eisenhower Library. Their most important contribution is the publication of many significant documents not already in print. Their chronological-topical organization imparts a good sense of the political structure of the 1950s.

This collection nevertheless seems to pass over some important problems. There is no section on the 1952 campaign, although a few 1952 documents are included under other topical headings. The book does not have a single speech or statement by Eisenhower's influential first secretary of the treasury, William Humphrey; the equally important second holder of the office, Robert Anderson, is never even mentioned. A section on "the McCarthy problem" in 1953-54 fails to illustrate that part of the administration's difficulty in dealing with Senator Joe McCarthy stemmed from its own use of McCarthyism in Attorney General Brownell's revival of the Harry Dexter White controversy and Vice-President Nixon's congressional campaign speeches.

These omissions may indicate an absence of such material at the Eisenhower Library; if so, the editors have relied too heavily upon the papers there. Commendable though it is, their aim of reproducing as many unpublished documents as possible appears at times to have led them into the trivial. The book contains far too many unsubstantive communications of gratitude, personal friendship, or condolence—largely, no doubt, because Eisenhower's private personal correspondence remains closed. The illness and death of John Foster Dulles, for example, is covered by eight pages consisting mostly of Eisenhower's expressions of confidence in and affection for his secretary of state; the topic might have been better served by the selection of some published contemporary analyses of Dulles's accomplishments and the consequences of his passing.

Other subjects, apparently because of the availability of manuscripts, receive treatment disproportionate to their importance, among them the teapot tempest accompanying the trial of the American soldier William Girard by a Japanese court, the petty partisan maneuverings that delayed statehood for Alaska and Hawaii, and the flap over distribution of the Salk polio vaccine. A section on the interstate highway program, although interesting and informative, receives twice as much space as the Dixon-Yates controversy.

In their attempt to present administration perspectives the editors seem to suspend their critical faculties on some issues. Their comments and selections on McCarthyism, the Dixon-Yates fight, and civil rights treat the Eisenhower government much more gently than most accounts. In some cases the documents fail to convey the political dialogue; sections on agricultural problems and the 1958 recession contain no statements of opposition alternatives or criticisms. Nor is there any skeptical analysis of the fuzzy and muddled concept of "modern Republicanism."

Errors are relatively few and usually obvious, but some readers may be unaware that it was not Walton, but Edwin Walker who commanded the troops sent to Little Rock (p. 1140). Perhaps because of space limitations, the bibliographical essay is disappointingly brief and incomplete.

Most of these criticisms involve matters of editorial judgment, and even the most carping reviewer should beware of making his conception of editorial priorities an absolute standard. Many of the sections of this book are informative and thoroughly satisfactory from any vantage point. The coverage of the organization of the executive branch, for example, is quite illuminating, and most of the diplomatic-military sections are very well done. Branyan and Larsen probably give Eisenhower the benefit of a doubt too often, but their mild revisionism may serve as a corrective to the biases of liberal historians. Far more complete and valuable than most documentary collections, this book will become a standard reference source.

Until now historians interested in the Eisenhower administration have had to make do with memoirs, journalistic accounts, and a few scholarly works by political scientists. This collection, along with Herbert Parmet's forthcoming study of the Eisenhower years, should mark the opening of a new era to serious historical inquiry.

ALONZO L. HAMBY
Ohio University

WILLIAM L. O'NEILL. Coming Apart: An Informal History of America in the 1960's. Chicago: Quadrangle Books. 1971. Pp. ix, 442, xxvi. $12.50.

Coming Apart, which lurches from the eloquent to the colloquial and from the shrewd to the commonplace, is a fiercely opinionated study of the sixties. Subtitled An Informal History this volume is an often impressive—and sometimes irritating—combination of personal journalism, cultural criticism, and historical appraisal that eschews interviews and archives and rests largely on the journalism of the past decade. Coming Apart is perceptive and derivative, thoughtful and careless, full of judgments and often without enough analysis. It is a bold, ambitious, personal book that expresses the author's conclusions and prejudices but is weakened by the absence of any extended statement of his political and cultural philosophy.

In this richly informed survey O'Neill, building upon the essays of Murray Kempton and others, contributes to the emerging favorable reassessment of Eisenhower, though noting that the president's achievements were largely negative: Ike ended the Korean War, stayed out of new ones, and kept military spending down. John Foster Dulles, however, was "laughable when not sinister." O'Neill also joins the fun in puncturing some of the myths of Camelot and John F. Kennedy. Contending that the Kennedy of 1960 "was mostly blind to what would dominate American life in the sixties," O'Neill scolds the administration for the space race, regrets Kennedy's "obsession" with NATO, criticizes his support of the Bay of Pigs invasion and his handling of the missile crisis, and concludes that his government's commitment to civil rights was "real and misleading." Still Kennedy, "the existential hero," was "midwife" to the "new order struggling to be born." O'Neill stresses Johnson's "fakery" and deceit in foreign policy, contends that Johnson did not want peace without victory in South Vietnam, laments the President's failures in domestic policy, but finds (questionably) that he "never wavered" in his hatred of racism. Even the much-heralded Alliance For Progress, O'Neill charges, was a complete failure; he adds that United States policy in Latin America was "always exploitive." Most of these judgments seem sound (though controversial), are based upon stated assumptions, and undoubtedly express the notions of many who are reinterpreting the recent past.

More troubling, however, are some of the author's other views. For example he finds conservatives "more demented" than radicals in the early sixties, views the ghetto uprisings as "a kind of madness," stresses the achievements of Eugene McCarthy's candidacy, concludes that "radicalism does not work" in America, and believes that if the country is saved it will be by people like Ralph Nader. O'Neill also dislikes the counterculture of drugs and hippies, castigates those radicals who use violence in America, and defends the universities on the grounds that their "evil" ("military research, officer training") could be done anywhere, but their existence is essential for disinterested inquiry and the search for truth and beauty. Underlying these beliefs, which have their echoes throughout much of the book, is a set of fundamental values or a philosophy that remains vague, dim, often implicit—yet central to understanding and evaluating much of the volume. O'Neill seems to be a liberal who, lamenting much of the self-laceration of other liberals, endorses the politics represented by Eugene McCarthy, opposes the war and racism, regards much black militancy as foolish and self-destructive, and hopes (perhaps uneasily) for change through the electoral process. America's postwar foreign policy has often been misguided, O'Neill emphasizes, and the domino theory is simple-minded and usually wrong. In these views he stays within the new liberal framework. Presumably O'Neill regards radical analyses of American imperialism and of the concentration of power as wrong, for these theories are not at the root of his judgments and do not receive more than a few acknowledgments, certainly not a rebuttal.

Even those who disagree with many of O'Neill's judgments and lament his decision to avoid a sustained dialogue with radicals will have to be impressed by his capacity to survey the sixties and to recapture much of their faith, fervor, and fear. Because Coming Apart pulls together so much and offers a critical perspective on the last decade, this lively book will be widely used in courses and is likely to provoke in less extreme forms the passions and antagonisms that have so often divided students from teachers, and colleagues from one another, in the past few years. Perhaps, in the last analysis, this will also be a testimonial to the author's courage, candor, and commitment.

BARTON J. BERNSTEIN
Stanford University

MIGUEL JORRÍN and JOHN D. MARTZ. Latin-American Political Thought and Ideology. Chapel Hill: University of North Carolina Press. 1970. Pp. xiii, 453. $12.50.

The welcome deserved by this long-needed work on Latin American political thought and ideologies must be tempered by the realization that what Professor Martz has done is to complete a manuscript that the late Miguel Jorrín left unfinished at his death. This dual authorship also makes it difficult to tell how much of the book is the work of Professor Jorrín and how much comes from the mind and pen of Professor Martz, despite the latter's indication of the general lines of division in the preface (p. xii). The first half of the book, the historical background through the nineteenth century, is basically the work of Jorrín; the second half, dealing with the thought and ideologies of the twentieth century, is largely, if not entirely, the work of Martz. Considered together, their contributions constitute a pioneer work on a too much neglected area of modern political thought. The historian may find it less than satisfactory, however, particularly in respect to the transition from the nineteenth to the twentieth century, while the political scientist may find it too "historical." But both should find it highly useful.

Since previous studies of Latin American thought have come largely from historians, sociologists, and philosophers, it is appropriate, in connection with this work by two political scientists, to ask some general questions as to what a book of this kind, intended as a general guide to students of the subject, should be like. Should it be chiefly addressed to questions of political philosophy and theory, such as the nature and functions of the state, philosophy of law, and the nature of political behavior? Should it, rather, concentrate on political ideologies, and if so how should they be analyzed? How much attention should be given to the theoretical and philosophical search for norms and values and how much should be directed toward more situational, relativist, and "existentialist" questions? To what extent should it be historical? Neither Professor Martz nor Professor Jorrín seems to have addressed such questions directly, preferring an uncomplicated account of what Latin Americans have written and thought. But I am inclined to conclude that, despite the historical approach they have adopted and their ideological conceptualization, their preference is for a relativist-existentialist analysis that looks primarily at ideologies and at the political events and circumstances that give them meaning or lack of meaning.

Several chapters make outstanding contributions to our understanding of the subject. Among these are a short but enlightening chapter (6) on anarchism in Latin America, a chapter (5) on "Idealism," which will disturb philosophers by its rather loose use of the term, but which brings out one of the outstanding characteristics of Latin American thought, and a very useful chapter (9) on "Marxism in Theory and Practice." One might wish that the section on Cuban revolutionary thought in this last chapter were less taken up with political events and devoted more to an analysis of the thought and ideology, especially that of Ernesto "Che" Guevara. There is a good chapter (13) on Christian Democratic thought.

While noting the many excellent qualities of this book, I must express regret that the authors have given very little attention to the important streams of traditionalism and conservative thought, to legal philosophy, to the considerable literature on the theory of the state, and to economic and sociological theory, in which Latin American writing also abounds. The index, limited to names, would have been more useful if it had included at least a few of the subject headings not covered adequately in the contents.

HAROLD EUGENE DAVIS
American University

ERIC WILLIAMS. From Columbus to Castro: The History of the Caribbean, 1492-1969. New York: Harper and Row. 1970. Pp. 576. $10.95.

The author's avowed purpose in writing this book was to cope with the fact that "there is no history of the Caribbean area as a whole." This fact is true despite the inclusion of Caribbean events within the histories of the metropolitan powers who colonized the area and the production of good national histories by a few of the republics. The term "Caribbean" has remained a geographical expression without definite political or cultural content. Even in the geographical sense there are differences of meaning as some scholars include the mainland countries that border the Caribbean Sea as well as the islands within it. The author includes only the islands but adds to them the Guianas as areas with a political and institutional background linking them to the Caribbean.

The question of focus is important because if the large mainland republics of Spanish origin are included the small states of non-Spanish background become only quaint aberrants in the general picture of the region. A true Caribbean history requires also a prior analysis of the common factors in the various states if a comprehensive and meaningful history is to be constructed.

The author's contributions in this respect are impressive. His consistent study may be traced back to his doctoral dissertation in history at Oxford and the syntheses he presented in his book Capitalism and Slavery (1944). As prime minister of Trinidad and Tobago since 1956, Eric Williams's statements acquire value not only for what they are but for who he is. The factors he finds that give unity to the Caribbean include slavery; the black and his culture; sugar and the plantation system; and colonialism, mercantilism, and capitalism as applied by colonial powers in the area. The present book presents a notable advance from that of 1944. A principal part of this advance is the real effort Williams has expended to bring the non-Spanish islands more understandingly into his study.

His work on Cuba is especially good, and he generously makes the statement that "Nineteenth century Cuba produced more great men than the rest of the Caribbean territories combined throughout their entire history." There are some errors that appear to be more than typographical, but on the whole this is a provocative, useful book that should stimulate further development in the direction the author has taken. There are numerous controversial statements, as is only natural in such a trail breaker. The most serious objection the reviewer must make is the absence of footnotes to make available the many sources quoted in the texts. Since the book must be considered a scholarly book and not a popular one the omission of footnotes and marginal comments is unfortunate. It is true that there is a large bibliography with comments, but immediate page reference to quoted material would have been most useful.

In summary, a work indispensable to the student of the Caribbean—in any definition of the term.

ROBERT E. MCNICOLL
*University of Miami,
Coral Gables*

ROBERT I. ROTBERG, with CHRISTOPHER K. CLAGUE. Haiti: The Politics of Squalor. (Twentieth Century Fund Study.) Boston: Houghton Mifflin Company. 1971. Pp. xvi, 456. $10.00.

This work can be conveniently divided into three parts. In the first the author reviews Haitian history. Emphasizing the nineteenth century and United States occupation Rotberg pays close attention to factors in Haiti's troubled past that may seem causal when one is forced to explain the reign of Dr. François Duvalier. Rotberg emphatically finds such factors, and a central thesis of the book is that the Duvalier regime was a result, almost an inevitable result, of Haiti's history and "social and political matrix." The big question likely to be raised is whether one can be this much of a historical determinist, even in backward, relatively "uncomplicated" societies such as Haiti.

The author then turns to the Duvalier years, and although this section offers more narrative than analysis, it remains by far the best and most sober account to date, pace Diederich and Burt, Graham Greene, Gingras, and others.

Finally the author turns to a most detailed analysis of present-day Haiti, its health conditions, educational system, agriculture, and economy. Judiciously but scathingly he examines and demolishes many of the plans and campaigns that have been suggested or mounted to solve one or all of the country's multitude of problems. To replace such chimera Rotberg admits that he has little to offer. Small, pragmatic, local schemes may be of some help. Massive outside interventions or invasions have proved that they are not. Rotberg concludes, realistically, that if there is indeed a set of solutions to Haiti's appalling situation—and that in itself is doubtful—then it must be a slow, painful, and mostly Haitian one.

Much of the literature on Haiti is partisan, strident, and inferior in quality. It is difficult, therefore, to place this book—a serious, well-researched account—in its proper context. Attempts to claim that Haitians suffer from a national paranoia related to child-rearing practices leave me skeptical, as do the fortunately brief attempts to introduce magno-political concepts such as "the predatory state." At times the style, perhaps even the vocabulary, is needlessly journalistic. These reservations apart, there is little doubt that, faute de mieux, this is the best book on present-day Haiti to appear in recent years.

The appendixes on exports in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries should be of use to historians, and the long bibliography of printed works is comprehensive.

MURDO J. MACLEOD
University of Pittsburgh

HARRY LEONARD SAWATZKY. They Sought a Country: Mennonite Colonization in Mexico. With an appendix on Mennonite colonization in British Honduras. Berkeley and Los Angeles: University of California Press. 1971. Pp. xi, 387. $11.50.

In four centuries of preserving their Anabaptist beliefs Mennonites have migrated many times while searching for a country and rural environment willing to accept them. Progressive members have made adjustments to urban life; the more conservative had formed closed colonies successively in Prussia, south Russia, and Canada by 1870. The Privilegium under which they maintained their private schools and exemption from military service was weakened in Canada during World War I. Migration to Mexico began in the 1920s, under new Privilegia from President Obregon in 1921. Seeking the wastelands of the interior, some 7,800 Mennonites were settled in Durango and Chihuahua colonies by 1950. All but a few hundred were from the Canadian prairie provinces.

Most of Professor Sawatzky's book details the manner in which these migrants adjusted to the barren highlands and the evolving life of post-Revolutionary Mexico. By 1950 their hardships seemed to have assured them of permanence. However, Mexican nationalists, especially in Chihuahua, attacked their aloofness from Mexican society, failure to upgrade educational ideas, and resistance to changes arising from the national revolution. Pressures to abrogate parts of the Privilegia have increased yearly. Attempts to force Mennonites into the national social security system alarmed them. In the mid-1950s a migration of 3,500 to British Honduras—with a new Privilegium—gave them another country and new challenges. It seems likely to Sawatzky, a Mennonite geographer at the University of Manitoba, that the bulk of the conservatives in Mexico will soon be moving out, probably to Paraguay and eastern Bolivia. Though their half-century struggle in Mexico seems to have left them with the old alternatives of adapting or moving, they have made a durable impact on the interior of northern Mexico. Pioneering agriculture in former grazing lands, they led Mexicans to adopt their methods. While modern Mexican practices have passed the Mennonites in many ways in recent years, it is unlikely that the Mennonite beginnings will be forgotten wherever they might go.

The account is difficult to follow, largely because it has no map to show the colony sites, which are described textually with precision but not clarity. The map for British Honduras does what one or two could do for Chihuahua and Durango: pinpoint locations so the goings and comings of the fragmented Mennonites might be more readily followed.

EUGENE K. CHAMBERLIN
San Diego City College

ANDRÉ SAINT-LU. Condition coloniale et conscience créole au Guatemala (1524-1821). (Publications de la Faculté des Lettres et Sciences humaines de Poitiers, Number 8.) Paris: Presses Universitaires de France. 1970. Pp. 219. 25 fr.

Criollismo, the theme of Professor Saint-Lu's work, is the expression by the so-called criollos (Americans of Spanish descent born in the New World) of a growing regional self-consciousness. In his case study of Guatemala, the author situates this feeling initially in the pride of conquest by the conquistadors, in their zeal in defending Guatemala from Spanish rivals or foreign buccaneers, and in their insistence on the right for themselves and their descendants to hold local political office, to receive income from Indian labor, and to enjoy various other privileges associated with the nobiliary class of Spain. Zealous in defending their privileges against immigrant Spaniards, the criollos nurtured and expanded criollismo during the seventeenth century to include an esthetic appreciation of their native land and an admiration for the ancient Maya, both subjects expressed by the Creole historian, Francisco Fuentes y Guzman (1642?-1690?) in his history, Recordacion Florida.

The theme is less well sustained during the eighteenth century and the independence period, owing to the complexity of cultural influences and political ideas coming from Europe, but the author shows that the Creole class, better educated and wealthier, retained sufficient unity of feeling by a matured criollismo to accomplish a bloodless independence in 1821. Although the work clearly establishes the continuity of criollismo as a feeling shared by the Guatemalan criollo class during the colonial period, the theme could have been further illuminated by attention to Mayan passivism and limited miscegenation in Guatemala, for the class feeling on which criollismo rested was less solid in such racially mixed regions as El Salvador and south-central Mexico.

TROY S. FLOYD

University of New Mexico

RICHARD NEWBOLD ADAMS. Crucifixion by Power: Essays on Guatemalan National Social Structure, 1944-1966. With chapters by BRIAN MURPHY and BRYAN ROBERTS. Austin: University of Texas Press. 1970. Pp. xiv, 553. $10.00.

This study, a combined effort by some of Richard Adams's graduate students and colleagues during 1963-65, is really an attempt (1) to explain how limited access to centers of power prevents many Guatemalans from improving their social and economic position and (2) to explore whether or not Guatemalans have the capacity to improve their situation. The work provisionally demonstrates that Guatemalan society is so restricted by its internal structure as well as by the strong influence of the United States that there is little likelihood that broad changes will occur.

Historians may find the theoretical disputation in the first chapter somewhat tedious. Adams has his own views and challenges the approach of several of his fellow anthropologists, but the chapter contains important sections on the structure, organization, and concentration of power. The bulk of the book consists of case studies by graduate students. Adams has analyzed their efforts and presented their finds, some of which challenge more traditional interpretations. Historians of Latin America or United States diplomacy might do well to take note of them. Diplomatic historians should consider that, the United Fruit Company notwithstanding, the United States really became deeply involved in Guatemala only in the period after 1941.

The overthrow of the controversial reform government of President Arbenz in 1954 led to a significant increase in U.S. industrial activity. Scores of American representatives of military, technical, and voluntary organizations also entered the country. This broadening of American activity placed increased strictures on the Guatemalans' ability to control many aspects of their own destiny.

Adams's study rightly shows that interests controlled by a minority of Guatemalans also inhibited diversification of power. One such interest group is the military. The officers liked the perquisites introduced by the United States, but they recognized that they did not want the United States to control them. The officers reacted by resolving internal differences, and, as the 1960s demonstrated, they achieved more say in the governance of their country.

There are several other chapters interesting to historians. These include insights into the Church's attempts to reassert itself, the role of interest groups, and the ecological and economic impact of cotton.

It is necessary to stress again that this study is only a preliminary one. No matter how small or willing the nation, a handful of investigators can only accomplish so much. But one has to begin somewhere, and for that reason Adams's look at the uses and abuses of power merits serious consideration.

J. C. M. OGELSBY

University of Western Ontario

G. A. MELLANDER. The United States in Panamanian Politics: The Intriguing Formative Years. Danville, Ill.: Interstate Printers and Publishers. 1971. Pp. 215. $7.95.

The subtitle of the volume, The Intriguing Formative Years, supplies the theme for this engaging study of the intimate United States involvement in Panamanian politics from the months just prior to her independence through the administration of her first president (1904-08). The author's many years of residence in Panama and his opportunity for thorough investigation of Panamanian source materials provide another perspective for subject matter that has heretofore been examined mainly in terms of United States foreign policy. His interpretation presents the United States as reacting to events rather than calculating a strategy. United States involvement in Panama's independence originated not in Washington but in Panama itself: Panamanian revolutionists, aided and abetted by non-isthmians, sought United States assistance. Although the United States was scarcely a reluctant partner it did not initiate the separatists' plans. Again, John Hay was not the architect of the 1903 treaty that transformed Panama into a protectorate of the United States, but Philippe Bunau-Varilla—although Hay did not hesitate to take full advantage of the opportunity presented. Dr. Mellander reminds us of a "soulfully painful" truth: not a single Panamanian was present during any of the treaty discussions. Bunau-Varilla virtually forced the treaty upon the hapless Panamanian Junta, which promised to ratify it five days before receiving it.

The author discerns two continuing threads during the period discussed. The Roosevelt administration became increasingly concerned that Panamanian internal politics might degenerate into an anarchy that could endanger the building of the canal and gravitated toward secret but active involvement in these politics. Notwithstanding, Washington became intimately involved in the internal affairs of Panama only after insistent and numerous pleas from the Panamanian Liberal party. The inordinate desire of the party for power led it into actions that seriously compromised the nation's sovereignty. "It may not be stretching a point too far to state that the United States, certainly not interested in becoming embroiled in local affairs, was the naive handmaiden of the Liberals. For they, preying on Washington's myopic phobia of danger to the canal-building project, induced the United States to intervene in Panama's political arena" (p. 194).

MAURY BAKER

Kent State University

ROBERT W. SHIRLEY. The End of a Tradition: Culture Change and Development in the Município of Cunha, São Paulo, Brazil. (Institute of Latin American Studies, Columbia University.) New York: Columbia University Press. 1971. Pp. xi, 304. $10.00.

Cunha is perhaps the most thoroughly researched community of small-town Brazil. Shirley, an anthropologist, is the seventh scholar to work there, and his study uses Emílio Willems's Cunha (1947) as a point of departure. The new book, however, is not a restudy stricto sensu, but an examination of "disorganization of an old agrarian society . . . and the multifold effect which an industrial center has on its dependent zones" (p. ix). Thus the analytical framework is not the community as such, but the transformation of a semirural município by an expanding metropolis—São Paulo city—for which Cunha's main economic function in recent decades has been to supply foodstuffs and unskilled workers.

A major change since 1945 has been the tremendous increase in land values owing to Cunha's new satellite status. Consequently many peasants have lost their land (for want of legal title) but so have traditional latifundiários, and a rural bourgeoisie is rising. As the author demonstrates, social status in this urbanizing community is increasingly ambiguous, as the power of state institutions (more than federal ones) undercuts traditional authority.

This study contributes signally to a refutation of sociological dualism, a thesis explicit, for example, in Lambert's Os dois Brasis. Yet Shirley rejects an internal colonialism model. To the contrary he states, "The future of . . . rural Brazil lies in the continued development of its industrial cities" (p. 255). To me, however, it is not obvious that the beneficial aspects of Cunha's transformation would necessarily accrue to communities beyond the staging area of the metropolis. A holistic approach might lead to different conclusions and even raise doubts whether "other São Paulos" can arise.

The author's demonstration of the federal government's weakness relative to the state in Cunha—both fiscally and politically—is an intriguing finding, in view of the centralization of power after the 1964 “revolution.” São Paulo state is doubtless sui generis, but the historian is led to ask how important the central government could have been at the local level during the Estado Novo (1937–45), when São Paulo and Brazil were far less industrialized. Furthermore, if in Cunha allegiance to the state is still stronger than that to the nation (p. 108), we may ask whether economic development even now is strengthening state loyalties that will only be superseded by national ones later.

Students of modern Brazil should read this book for the issues it raises, directly and implicitly.

JOSEPH L. LOVE
University of Illinois,
Urbana-Champaign

FREDERICK M. NUNN. Chilean Politics, 1920–1931: The Honorable Mission of the Armed Forces. Albuquerque: University of New Mexico Press. 1970. Pp. x, 219. $10.00.

This work escapes being a simple coup by coup account of military intervention yet is without pretentious conceptual capers. Chile may not have had “participatory democracy before the military came to power,” but, for Latin America, it has an enviable record of military subordination to civilian authority. However, the Honorable Mission's intrusion into politics was not unwarranted. The Honorable Mission's personnel, including Carlos Ibáñez del Campo, were sincerely reluctant to tamper with Chile's political apparatus. Economic debility, political irresponsibility, and corruption created an irresistible urge among young officers to act. The consequences were beyond their capacity to control.

Ibáñez was initially supported by a broad spectrum of the nation. Communists and conservative elements were exceptions. The military men accepted socialism but rejected Marxism. If this seemed paradoxical, it did not bother them, and since the Chilean Socialist party was then nascent it was no problem. When the time came in 1931 for Ibáñez and his cohorts to stack their political arms, the same consensus that had approved their thrust to power opposed its continuance. The middle sectors had become disillusioned with the military regime. It should also have been noted that the young officers of 1924–31 were themselves of middle-sector antecedents. Their intra-service opponents were the senior officers of more aristocratic antecedents. This was indicated by the struggle within the army and the navy.

This book is no crystal ball in which the fate of other “problem oriented military regimes” is projected. Still, Chile's Honorable Mission was something more than a mere cuartelazo. True, it failed to achieve its ends, and that may be the lesson to be learned. The Honorable Mission and subsequent governments certainly prepared the way for the incumbent Chilean government. It would have been relevant if this had been dwelled on a bit by the author, but this work was well worth reading even without any prognostications.

PHILIP J. HOUSEMAN
California State University, Humboldt

---

Communications

---

A communication will be considered only if it relates to an article or review published in this journal; publication of such a communication or of any part of it is solely at the editors' discretion. Limitations of space require that a communication concerning a review be no longer than the review to which it refers and in no case longer than 500 words. Communications concerning articles or review articles may be no more than 1,000 words, and the editors reserve the right to impose a lower limit. The schedule of publication and the time needed to send a communication to the author of the article or review in question for such reply as he may care to make virtually preclude the possibility of publication in the issue following that in which the original article or review appeared. Unless, in the editors' judgment, some major scholarly purpose is served, rejoinders will not be published.

TO THE EDITOR:

Peter Loewenberg's "The Psychohistorical Origins of the Nazi Youth Cohort" (AHR, 76 [1971]: 1457-1502) fails in its attempt to profile an entire generation. Although the judgments expressed with regard to the emotional impact of a shared national experience are valid to a considerable extent, the many variables relating to home conditions, sibling rivalry, and the personality structure and genetic quality of individuals would have precluded anything like a scientifically confirmable result, even if scientific methodology rather than psychoanalytic and sociological theory had guided the author's work. But apart from such a self-evident and general critique, I deplore, as a historian, Loewenberg's failure to take into account certain basic political, psychological, and social considerations central to or touching upon his thesis.

Having described at some length conditions in wartime and early postwar Germany, Loewenberg suddenly brings in Austria. It seems he belatedly became aware that his analytical material and technique applied also to Germany's partner in defeat. Loewenberg concedes that the youth of all the belligerent nations suffered from absent parents, but he stresses that the absence of "German and Austrian parents" was coupled with extreme hunger and that when the German or Austrian father returned "he came in defeat and was unable to protect his family in the postwar period of unemployment and inflation. Not only was the nation defeated, but the whole political-social world was overturned. The Kaiser of Germany had fled, and the Kaiser of Austria had been deposed. . . . These national factors unique to Central Europe exacerbated the familial crisis of the absence of the parents and made of this wartime experience a generational crisis" (p. 1480). Eliciting the views of Paul Federn, Loewenberg tells us that "the Kaisers of Germany and Austria were deprived of land, throne, power, and the ability to offer a feeling of security. Thus a fatherless society was created that no longer stood in awe of the state" (p. 1489). Loewenberg, in general, lumps Austria together with Germany as sharers of a common Central European destiny, although he omits all mention of Hungary, which also lost a Kaiser (or king) and the war, as well as a far greater percentage of her ethnic territory than did either Germany or Austria.

But Hungary aside, Loewenberg made no attempt to analyze postwar events in Austria.

Had he done so, he would have discovered that, despite some obvious parallels, Austria experienced a substantially different pattern of development as compared with Germany and, most especially, with regard to the roles played by the Nazi movement in each country. Very instructive as to the differences between political developments in Germany and Austria are the following comments of Ernst von Salomon made in reference to his stay in Vienna in 1932: "The situation in Austria was indeed singular. . . . It has been said that the Weimar Republic collapsed in 1932 because of a multiplicity of political parties scrambling for shreds of power. . . . In Austria . . . since 1918, the division had been clear-cut, black and red [clerical and socialist]. There was no doubt that Vienna was on the brink of civil war." Having spoken to an Austrian Catholic about the impending Anschluss, Salomon "was in despair. He [the Austrian] would not see what was coming and I could not explain it to him. He didn't know National-Socialism, nobody in Austria did; the little [Nazi] groups which had up till then formed were scarcely noticeable and had certainly no effect on Austria's internal struggle for power. How could I, a Prussian, make it clear to Spann, an Austrian, that apart from the few Austrian National-Socialists no group in Austria, no matter how much it might welcome the Anschluss, could possibly welcome it in this form?" (Ernst von Salomon, The Answers [London, 1954], 93, 101).

Loewenberg presents through the words of Harold D. Lasswell the idea that Hitler's "imagery of cleanliness and pollution of the anal phase" became a source of ersatz parental security for the youth of Germany (pp. 1484-85). This is a highly eclectic way of bolstering his thesis because it underrates the traditionally anal orientation in German psychohistory and hence its function in the psyche of persons of all ages before, during, and after the period under discussion. Hitler's "anal" rages appear to have had a great deal in common with the emotional tone of Germany's other major prophets, as indicated by Luther's constipation and Marx's hemorrhoids. One is tempted even to suggest that but for Freud's auto-erotic fantasies, Loewenberg's own article could never have been penned.

What effect did alcoholism have upon the Nazi movement? Konrad Heiden's eyewitness account of Hitler's abortive 1924 coup in Munich's Bürgerbräu Keller is instructive, especially with regard to olfactory detail. "With his storm troops at their posts, Hitler . . . stood amid the beer fumes in the crowded vestibule. . . . The crowd in the hall was not so docile. Hitler left the hall with his prisoners [Kahr, Lossow, and Seisser]. The mood grew menacing. 'Don't worry,' Göring shouted . . . 'we have the friendliest intentions, and anyway, you can be happy, you have your beer.' Meanwhile, in the adjoining room—a cold dismal place, full of beer fumes—Hitler spoke to his three prisoners in confused, jumbled snatches. [Hitler threatened them with his pistol.] They had but one choice: to fight by his side and conquer, or to die. Lossow and Seisser later testified that he staggered around the room half drunk, though he certainly had taken no alcohol." Drenched in beer fumes Hitler needed no oral intake to have been inebriated. In any case, he soon "roared at Graf: 'Get me a stein!' He wanted beer" (Konrad Heiden, Der Fuehrer [Cambridge, Mass., 1944], 186-88).

Despite the economic crisis of Germany, statistics for the year 1929-30 reveal that the average male over fifteen had consumed the staggering amount of 263 liters of beer (Reinhard Kraut, Tatsachen. Alkoholnot auch heute noch [Berlin, 1933], 3). "In contrast to other European and non-European countries," writes a contemporary researcher of the treatment of alcoholics, "Germany remains shamelessly indifferent to the problems of drunkenness. Indeed, it seems we place a premium upon drunkenness, when our laws make it a justification for lesser penalties and even of acquittal" (Hans Clausen, Die Behandlung der Trunkenheit nach geltendem Reichsrecht . . . [Coburg, 1928], 1). It seems to me that the huge amounts of alcohol consumed in the "capital of drunkenness," as Weimar Germany was so aptly named, should have been taken into account in any attempt to evaluate the actions of German youth. Imagine a future U.S. historian overlooking marijuana, heroin, and other drugs, as well as alcohol, in attempting to understand the young people of the current era.

STANLEY W. PAGE

City College,

City University of New York

MR. LOEWENBERG REPLIES:

Professor Stanley W. Page is correct in saying that my work focuses on Germany, deals less with Austria, and does not engage with the problems of Hungary. I never presumed to do a comparative study, although a series of studies of comparative civilian deprivations in World War I and their aftereffects would be most welcome. Page is mistaken when he equates the political effects of a lost war and a toppled regime in Hungary with the meaning of the demise of the Kaiserreich for Germany. The relationship of the Hungarian nation to Kaiser Franz Josef and his Habsburg heirs is not comparable to that of the German nation to the Hohenzollerns. See, for example, the memoirs of the Austro-German centralist, Arthur Count Polzer-Hoditz, of March 6, 1915, in which he proposes to the heir apparent, Archduke Charles, the shifting of the "center of gravity" of the Empire to Budapest "to gain the political force of Hungary for the Empire" (as quoted in Robert A. Kann, The Multinational Empire: Nationalism and National Reform in the Habsburg Monarchy, 1848-1918 [New York, 1950], 1: 391 n.86). "The Hungarian problem" was, in the words of Oscar Jaszi, "the cornerstone of the whole system" (The Dissolution of the Habsburg Monarchy [Chicago, 1961], 450). The differences in attachments to the prewar system between Germany and Hungary are so numerous that the two cases defy facile comparison.

Other parts of Page's letter are very difficult to take seriously. I have the feeling that he is "putting us on" when he takes me to task for underrating "the traditionally anal orientation in German psychohistory." To talk this way is very bad psychology and impossible history. All humans have oral, anal, and genital as well as other drives and drive derivatives, defenses, and sublimations at all times. What is important is how these drives are handled, how and in what form these character structures and personality modes are activated. How are they adapted to the reality demands of a historical situation? And what evidence does Page present? Not a modal personality study nor an anthropological study such as Rodnick's, which found that shortly after World War II in Germany "among all classes, toilet training begins when the infant is about five months old" (David Rodnick, Postwar Germans: An Anthropologist's Account [New Haven, 1948], 18). We get, instead, Luther's constipation, Marx's hemorrhoids, Freud's auto-erotic fantasies (whatever Page may mean by that), and Hitler's "anal rages." Page makes no attempt to move from the individual to the social level and from a static to a temporal historical process. The critical question in history as well as in psychology is: why now? Why this combination of events at this particular time?

Could Page possibly be serious in asking the "effect" of alcoholism upon the Nazi movement? Again, this reads like a bad joke. The massive and habitual use of alcohol, just as with the abuse of narcotics, is a defense against anxiety, a means of coping with inner stress and tension. The appropriate historical question is: what were people so anxious about that they drank so much?

Page's questions leave out the entire historical dimensions of actions and events that are time specific. To say that a nation is oral or anal will not take one far. All peoples have always been subject to phase specific developmental drives. But to work at showing a relationship between when a culture historically became sadistic due to a time specific regression to an early period of oral deprivation may begin to get us somewhere.

PETER LOEWENBERG
University of California,
Los Angeles

TO THE EDITOR:

Alas. In his review of Carl Binger's Thomas Jefferson: A Well-Tempered Mind (AHR, 77 [1972]: 204-05), Mr. James L. Bugg, Jr. wrote that Jefferson's "well-balanced personality was a fortunate blend of masculine and feminine traits." Masculine traits accounted for Jefferson's "aggressive characteristics, his executive ability, the remarkable precision of his mind," while feminine traits "determined his esthetic and artistic temperament, his tenderness and concern for others [!], his sensitivity and shyness, and his love of solitude."

Now really, this is ridiculous. One need not be a "women's libber" to be pulled up short by the sexual ascription of these "traits," most ludicrously the type-casting of females for tenderness, sensitivity, shyness, and (the most universal nonmale characteristic of all, I am sure) love of solitude.

If these are Mr. Binger's views, Mr. Bugg does his readers a disservice in not probing a historical work based upon such assumptions. If the views are Mr. Bugg's, then he has done a disservice not only to shy men and precision-minded women, but, indeed, to all.

FREDERICK H. SCHMIDT
College of William and Mary

MR. BUGG REPLIES:

As I have already indicated in my review, the "views" to which Mr. Schmidt refers are those of the author. My assignment as the reviewer was to summarize, insofar as I could within a seven-hundred-word limitation, the principal theses of the two authors. Rather than devote the allocated space to a critique of the positions of the authors, with whom I have disagreements, I chose to state their respective positions, point to their common characteristics, and leave it to the reader to decide whether he wished to read the books. If so, he can make up his own mind on their validity. To have done otherwise would have been, in my judgment, a "disservice" to both the authors and to the reader.

I do not concur with the particular thesis of Mr. Binger, but to have developed rationally and fully the reasons for my disagreements would have required a longer review than I was requested to write unless, like Mr. Schmidt, I had chosen to indulge in such meaningless and unscholarly adjectives as "ridiculous" and ludicrous. To have adopted such a procedure might have been clever but hardly equitable or rational and would have represented, in my judgment, the real "disservice."

JAMES L. BUGG, JR.
Old Dominion University

The following letters have been received in connection with the publication of Jacques Barzun's article, "History: The Muse and Her Doctors," AHR, 77 (1972): 36-64.

TO THE EDITOR:

Jacques Barzun's article does scant justice to recent developments in the field of psychohistory. Although he expresses solicitude for the methodological problems of psychohistory, he sheds very little light on this important subject. He has consulted the wrong sources. How he could consider David Donald, Stanley Elkins, and Harry Barnard psychohistorians is beyond my understanding. Their work neither reflects the methodology of psychohistory nor the progress that has been made in this discipline over the past few years. In order to understand the nature of psychohistory one must read, for example, the contributions of Peter Loewenberg, Robert G. L. Waite, John Demos, and Fred Weinstein. Contrary to Mr. Barzun's introductory remarks (pp. 36-39), psychohistory is a new discipline. While it is true that many methodological issues remain unresolved, his assertion that no "methodological procedure" is apparent in psychohistory is without foundation. Such an assertion rests on a cursory, selective, and jaundiced appraisal of the available literature.

Barzun maintains that the "technical jargon [of psychohistory] does not add to understanding" (p. 63). He contends that psychohistory merely restates in technical language what historians have always known. This objection is invalid. Concepts such as sublimation, reaction-formation, identification, the self, character defense, etc., have specialized meanings that incorporate new insights into personality functioning. It is time for historians to understand this.

Even though Barzun does raise some fundamental questions concerning psychohistory, problems related to the historian's choice of psychological theory, and his selection and evaluation of evidence, Barzun's treatment of these issues is fragmentary, superficial, and obscurantist. If we are to strive for simplicity, stability, and consensus in the writing of history, as Barzun suggests that we should, then we necessarily lose sight of important dimensions of human life that cannot be encompassed within this innocent philosophy of history. Instead of writing for a book-of-the-month-club audience, we should strive to communicate our insights, in their full complexity, to whomever will listen. Life is full of ambivalence, complexity, and irresolution; unless we come to grips with this reality we fail in our essential task as historians.

JOHN J. FITZPATRICK
University of California,
Berkeley

TO THE EDITOR:

My long-standing concern with the bearings of modern psychology on the treatment of historical subjects led me to read Mr. Barzun's lengthy analysis twice over and with considerable care. Yet I am still not clear as to the cause or causes of the author's unhappiness. His objective seems to be to deflate the notion of "psycho-history." He does not like the term. Neither do I. More important, he denounces all efforts to establish it as "a new discipline," a "new genre." He ridicules the effort to apply "new methods rejuvenating history" and "to create new fields by using new methods." He obviously considers me the prime mover in this nefarious enterprise, despite the fact that I never contemplated any such effort. On the contrary, I would deplore any further fragmentation of history, and I have long preached the need for greater synthesis. I cannot, of course, speak for the many scholars, mostly younger men and women, who are now taking an active interest in the application of modern psychological concepts to the elucidation of historical characters and situations, that is, in "psycho-history." But I do not recall having ever heard any of them advance such extravagant notions as Mr. Barzun attributes to them.

Mr. Barzun, while constantly talking about "history," actually devotes most of his essay to biography, a form of literature in which, as we all know, the usefulness of the psychological approach has long since been recognized and demonstrated. His attention to really historical problems is almost completely confined to the modest attempt I made, some fifteen years ago, to determine the possible psychological and spiritual impact of a major human catastrophe such as the Black Death of the fourteenth century. He quickly comes to the startling conclusion that all I had to say had long been known and that the use of psychoanalytic concepts amounted to little more than the substitution of a newfangled terminology for good old English words. Had I only known how easy the solution of the problem was, I would certainly have appealed to Mr. Barzun for help before spending time and effort on it. It may interest Mr. Barzun to know, if he is not already aware of it, that European scholars are still wrestling with such questions as that of the influence of the Black Death on the development of religious dissent and protest through Wyclif and Hus to Luther and the Reformation.

Mr. Barzun underlines and emphasizes what most of us have known for a long time, namely that from the beginnings of historiography among the Greeks to the present day there have been men with a keen intuitive understanding of the strengths and weaknesses of human nature. He makes great play with the fact that a major historian such as Karl Lamprecht urged in the early years of the century that more attention should be paid to psychology by historians. He might well have added that Eduard Bernheim, in his great Lehrbuch der historischen Methode (8th ed., 1908), discussed the importance of the psychological factor in history at considerable length.

These men, naturally, were talking in terms of the psychology of their day. They knew nothing of the Freudian doctrine and the variants that derived from it, that is, nothing of the theories that have revealed much of the unconscious and irrational forces of history. Mr. Barzun objects to the fact that the "psycho-historians" tend to put all their eggs into the Freudian basket, although I made a point in my address that historians need have no commitment to any particular brand of history, but should use whatever promised to help them in solving their problems. If the Freudian doctrine is still preferred, it is chiefly because it alone provides a coherent theory of personality development. It does not advance formulas or attempt conclusions, but it tries to show the wide variety of unconsciously determined reactions to external events and the many defense mechanisms to which human nature resorts.

It is generally recognized, I think, that over the past decades psychoanalysis has influenced profoundly not only psychiatry, but the entire field of the arts and many of the social sciences, notably anthropology. In short, it has forced a revision of traditional views of man and society. The historians alone, among the social scientists, have until recently been loath to take into account unconscious and irrational forces. Many now recognize that the application of psychoanalytic (or related) concepts may throw light not only on individuals of historical importance, but on major mass movements and changing attitudes. Admittedly all these efforts are only in the beginning; admittedly they bristle with difficulties; admittedly they have as yet produced no resounding success. There is no question here of establishing a new discipline but simply of exploring a new approach to problems, many of which have long puzzled the historian. After all, there is no reason why, where the sources and the evidence permit, the student should not weigh the psychological as well as the economic, military, religious, or other components of a historical problem. It is regrettable, to put it mildly, that a scholar of Mr. Barzun's standing should devote a long essay to the effort to disparage the experiment and that he should becloud the issue by constantly confusing biography and history.

The most baffling part of Mr. Barzun's essay comes in the concluding paragraphs, where he seems to be prepared to eat his own words. "I would close," he writes, "by suggesting that no one should prejudge the results of psycho-history and its siblings. Nothing I have said or implied about them is such a prejudgment or goes to the matter of the potential usefulness of their projected gains." If these are indeed Mr. Barzun's real sentiments, the reader is entitled to ask why it was necessary to plow through twenty-eight pages of platitudes, insinuations, and charges. However, if Mr. Barzun is prepared to reverse himself, I for one will raise no objection.

WILLIAM L. LANGER
Harvard University

TO THE EDITOR:

It is difficult to reason with those, like Professor Barzun, who presume to tell the rest of the profession what is and what is not history. I will limit myself to two questions.

William James was a profound observer of human phenomena, including religious experience, habit, and many others. However, to tell us, as Barzun does, that James's work of 1890, Principles of Psychology, is "the classic of psychology perhaps most useful to the historian and biographer" (p. 51 n.31), is quite another matter. Are we to infer that all that has been developed in the clinical practice and theory of psychology in the last eight decades is of less value to the modern historian than the work of James? This may be so for Barzun, but it is not so for many of us who wish to live in the twentieth century. Novelty is certainly no criterion of value. It is equally faddish to cling only to the "classics." Some new things have been learned in human psychology since 1890, including of course the insights of Sigmund Freud, who developed the initial theories of psychoanalysis from 1895 to 1899, theories that William James treated with respect. "The future of psychology belongs to your work" James told Ernest Jones in 1909 (Ernest Jones, The Life and Work of Sigmund Freud, vol. 2: Years of Maturity, 1901-1919 [New York, 1955], 57). Much has developed in both clinical technique and theory since those early decades. Historians are obviously free to neglect these developments. But I wonder whether Barzun would also use the anthropology or the linguistics of 1890 as his research models? Or, more to the point, would he select for his family a surgeon, a pediatrician, or a gynecologist whose thought had not developed in eighty-two years?

Barzun concludes his essay with the injunction, with which I concur, that "histories and biographies should always be rewritten. Each viewer remakes a past in keeping with his powers of search and vision, whose defects readily disclose themselves in his work" (p. 61). If this is so for history, why does Barzun not allow for the same relativism and evolution in psychology? Just as we are now in a different world, with its own psychological and historical perspectives, than were the men and women of 1890, so those who write history and psychology in the year 2050 will have their own position in history and accompanying unique perspectives on it. They will also have other psychological theories than we do. We cannot know what kinds of synthetic history they will write. Why then is Barzun so concerned with the "permanence" of history and the "vogue" of psychology? The nature of both science and history is that the researcher commits himself to what appears to be the most probable hypothesis at the time. The test is whether the theory indeed leads him to new relationships and data. If it does—and not even Barzun will deny that depth psychology has illuminated institutional life and personal biography with new richness, complexity, and insight—can one reasonably ask for more?

PETER LOEWENBERG
*University of California,
Los Angeles*

---

Recent Deaths

---

GERAINT N. D. EVANS, associate professor of history at Richmond College of the City University of New York, died in an automobile accident on December 29, 1971, near Laguna Beach, California. Only thirty-six years old at the time of his death, Evans had already compiled a remarkable record as a student of the old British Empire and in the process had become a striking symbol of Anglo-American scholarship.

Born in Wales, educated at Trinity College, London, and at Cambridge University (B.A., M.A.), Geraint Evans early developed an interest in the history of North America and thus came to the United States to further his studies under Lawrence Henry Gipson at Lehigh (M.A.) and under Robin W. Winks at Yale, where he earned his third master's degree and his Ph.D. In the course of his studies he held fellowships from Great Britain, Canada, and the United States. His teaching career proved equally Anglo-American: Malvern College in England, McGill University in Canada, and Lafayette College, Southern Illinois University, Chapman College, and Richmond College in this country—thus spanning the nation from coast to coast. At each campus his restless enthusiasm, exacting standards, and uncompromising candor awed his students and colleagues but also earned their respect and in most cases their affection. In his first and only year at Southern Illinois the senior class voted him one of three outstanding teachers. At Chapman College in California, where he served as visiting professor in 1970-71, Evans so impressed his fellow historians that they sought to keep him as a permanent member of the staff. At Richmond College, his longest and last post, Evans specialized in American colonial and revolutionary history and American Studies, served as deputy chairman of the division of social sciences, and was elected the first secretary of the college faculty. He also found time to participate in innumerable professional organizations, including the Canadian Association for American Studies (president, 1964-66), the American Studies Association (he was president of the New York City branch from 1969 to 1970), and the Columbia University Seminar on Early American History and Culture. He published several books and articles, perhaps the most significant being Uncommon Obdurate: The Public Careers of J. F. W. DesBarres (1969). He had recently begun work on a history of Canada, to be aimed at American readers, and an edition of a newly uncovered diary of an American loyalist.

With the death of Geraint Evans the profession lost an accomplished scholar, an inspiring teacher, a warm friend, and a young man of awesome energy.

ALDEN T. VAUGHAN
Columbia University

GUSTAVE EDMUND VON GRUNEBaum, professor of Near Eastern history and director of the UCLA Near Eastern Center, died in Los Angeles on February 27, 1972, after a two-month illness. The wide-ranging interests, accomplishments, and intelligence of Professor von Grunebaum were matched by his human sympathy and understanding, and his departure leaves a gap that is impossible to fill.

Professor von Grunebaum was born in Vienna on September 1, 1909. He received his doctorate with honors from the University of Vienna in 1931, and then did postdoctoral work at the University of Berlin. To a childhood mastery of English and French he later added a command of Italian, Spanish, Latin, Greek, and classical culture, and a university-acquired knowledge of the Arabic, Persian, Turkish, and other Near Eastern languages and cultures. To his linguistic and literary knowledge he joined a broad understanding of human society that encompassed many of the usual academic disciplines, including history, anthropology, philosophy, and religion. The originality of his mind combined with indefatigable scholarship and an almost photographic memory to lay the foundation for an outstanding series of scholarly books and articles. His scholarly production was equaled by his teaching excellence, his human wit and warmth, and his unparalleled abilities as an organizer and administrator.

Professor von Grunebaum's first book, on early Arabic poetry, was published in German in 1937. Leaving Vienna when the Nazis came in 1938 he taught at the Asia Institute in New York as assistant professor from 1938 to 1942 and as chairman of the department of Arabic in 1942-43. From there he went to the University of Chicago, where he served as assistant professor of Arabic (1943-46), associate professor (1946-49), and professor (1949-57). He came to UCLA as professor of history and director of the newly-formed Near Eastern Center in the fall of 1957.

At UCLA Professor von Grunebaum carried out a multifaceted activity that was the envy of his colleagues. With the encouragement of the UCLA administration he built up a large Near Eastern Center that soon came to rank among the very best in the world. With his wide reading and frequent far-flung travels he came to meet or know about talented individuals in all parts of the world and in all stages of their careers. Free of prejudices regarding nationality, intellectual approach, university origin, or sex, he was able to recommend to the various departments that ultimately made employment decisions a multitalented group of individuals, the vast majority of whom came to and stayed at UCLA. For the UCLA history department he was also able to discover scholars of various nationalities outside the Near Eastern field, and his presence helped attract noted scholars to the department.

To the UCLA Near Eastern Center Professor

von Grunebaum was able to bring visiting professors and lecturers of distinction and an increasing number of talented students, both groups coming from many lands. Always ready to listen to the problems and advice of others he could reserve final decisions to himself, confident of the general validity of his own judgments. He created a center free of factions and personal animosities and characterized by a spirit of mutual cooperation, friendship, and respect. He sponsored a series of international conferences and created the Levi Della Vida Conference and award in Islamic Studies given biannually at UCLA, the papers of which he also edited (1970, 1971).

After a full day at the university, promptly answering a voluminous correspondence, teaching, seeing students and colleagues, and doing more than his share of committee work, Professor von Grunebaum turned at night and on weekends to the scholarly production that never let up in quantity or quality. Having already written Medieval Islam (1946), Islam (1955), and several other books before coming to UCLA, he went on to write Modern Islam (1962), Classical Islam (1970), and others after arriving here. Taking a total cultural approach to the civilization of medieval and modern Islam he was able to elucidate the interaction of various elements in Islamic society and to compare them with classical antiquity, medieval Byzantium and Europe, and the modern West. Always full of original ideas, his books, like his knowledge, transcend the usual academic disciplines and fall into no easily definable categories. While centering on his lifelong interest in medieval Islamic civilization, his writings sometimes ranged far afield into such topics as African literature and, in his last years, the history of the human imagination, on which he was organizing a conference in 1972. He was especially the master of the short idea-centered essay, and many of his books consist of such interrelated essays. In his last years, on the other hand, he was working on a full-scale survey of Islam as a religion. His works reflect his knowledge of all the subfields of Islamic studies and his rich imagination. Several of his books have been translated into various languages, and his scholarly reputation is worldwide. In addition to his own books and articles he edited a series of books based primarily on the multidisciplinary international conferences he sponsored, of which Unity and Variety in Muslim Civilization (1955) and The Dream and Human Societies (1966) may be mentioned as representative examples.

Serving on the boards of numerous national and international organizations and journals, he was president of the American Research Center in Egypt since 1966, editor in chief of the Bibliothek des Morgenlandes (Switzerland), and coeditor of Studia Islamica since 1971. His academic honors, like his other activities, are too numerous to mention here, where it will only be noted that he was a fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences and a member of the American Philosophical Society. He was Faculty Research Lecturer at UCLA, and he received honorary doctorates from the University of Frankfurt and Hebrew Union College as well as being elected to the Institut d'Egypte in Cairo. He was also one of the few non-Italian fellows of the Accademia Nazionale dei Lincei.

In personal relationships, after an initial shyness and reserve, he showed himself to be warm and friendly, ever willing to listen to personal or academic problems and to offer sympathy and advice. His sparkling wit and humor surfaced in the most casual, as well as the most serious, conversation, but was rarely exercised at the expense of others, however distant they might be. He liked to keep his own counsel about his personal and academic plans and activities and to make his own decisions, but he sought out and carefully considered the advice of those whose opinions he respected.

He was able to turn his full attention from one activity to another, from a complex and tiring international trip to a minor problem, from administration to teaching and scholarship, and from serious affairs to light banter, without missing a beat. Very rarely manifesting worry or anger, he scarcely discussed his own problems or achievements, while reacting with support and interest to those of others. An unfailingly interesting conversationalist and lecturer, his talk ranged from the mundane and particular to the most esoteric and abstract of subjects.

Professor von Grunebaum leaves behind his devoted and extraordinary wife Giselle, his two daughters, Claudia and Tessa, and his grieving students and colleagues both at UCLA and throughout the scholarly world. He was a man of genius, warmth, optimism, multifaceted talents, indefatigable energy, and unparalleled achievements.

NIKKI R. KEDDIE
*University of California,
Los Angeles*

ALBERT DENNIS KIRWAN, scholar, university administrator, and former football coach, died suddenly on November 30, 1971. He was born in Louisville, Kentucky, on December 22, 1904, attended the public schools of that city, and in 1926 received the bachelor's degree at the University of Kentucky, where he was a star football player. Returning to Louisville as a teacher and a coach, he attained such outstanding success in the latter capacity that he was made head football coach at the University of Kentucky in 1938, a position he held for a half-dozen years.

An invitation, during World War II, to teach part time in the department of history of the University of Kentucky led him to a decision to abandon his career as coach and commit himself to historical scholarship. After receiving his M.A. in 1945 at the University of Louisville and his Ph.D. at Duke University in 1947, he returned once again to the University of Kentucky as associate professor of history and dean of men. Two years later he became dean of students, a position he held until 1955, when he resigned in order to devote full time to history.

His first book, Revolt of the Rednecks, had been published in 1951, and now, freed from administrative duties, he plunged enthusiastically into research and teaching. He edited two volumes, Johnny Green of the Orphan Brigade (1956) and The Confederacy (1959), while he worked on his prize-winning biography, John J. Crittenden: The Struggle for the Union (1962).

His reputation as a scholar and an administrator made him a logical choice for the position of dean of the graduate school, a position to which he was appointed in 1960. For six highly successful years he presided over the most marked period of improvement in quality and expansion of programs, enrollment, and support that has been known in graduate education at the University of Kentucky. His return to full-time teaching in 1966 was short lived, for in 1968 he agreed to become acting president of the university. His administrative ability, his good judgment, his calmness, and his solid reputation for fairness were never more needed than during the months he filled this office, months when the institution was the subject of attack from within and without. In 1969, when a president was chosen and the acting presidency came to an end, the board of trustees paid tribute to Dr. Kirwan by designating him, retroactively, as the seventh president of the university.

Once again in the history department Dr. Kirwan looked forward to devoting the remainder of his active life to scholarship and teaching. He had published, with Thomas D. Clark, The South Since Appomattox (1967), and in the following year he was editor of The Civilization of the Old South: Excerpts from the Writings of Clement Eaton. His last writing to appear in print is a section on the Civil War in Kentucky: A Pictorial History (1971), edited by J. Winston Coleman, Jr. At the time of his death Professor Kirwan had completed research for a biography of Henry Clay.

No mere listing of publications and positions can reveal the services Professor Kirwan rendered to his profession and to his university, community, and state. He was the recipient of numerous honors and awards, including a Guggenheim fellowship, 1960-61; a Fulbright lectureship at the University of Vienna, 1966-67; and the Charles S. Sydnor Prize of the Southern Historical Association for his biography of Crittenden. On his own campus he won an alumni award for teaching and another for research, he was elected Hallam Professor of History (1967-69), and he was chosen by his colleagues in the College of Arts and Sciences as Distinguished Professor for the academic year 1967-68.

He was a diligent scholar, a gifted teacher, a wise administrator, and a considerate friend. All who knew him will long recall his warm personality, his kindness, and his deep enjoyment of life.

To perpetuate his memory, the Albert D. Kirwan Memorial Fund has been established at the University of Kentucky under the care of the University Development Office. A decision as to the nature of the memorial has not yet been reached.

JAMES F. HOPKINS
University of Kentucky

MACY J. MARGOLIS, the coordinator of research services at the Boston Public Library, died suddenly on January 28, 1972, at the age of forty. A graduate of Boston University, from which he also received a master's degree in 1952, Mr. Margolis served in the United States Army as a Russian language specialist from 1952 to 1955. He then returned to the Boston Public Library, where he had begun working as a page in 1945. Mr. Margolis combined his career in the library's history department with advanced study, receiving a master's degree in library science from Simmons College in 1959. In 1967 he was promoted to the position of coordinator of research services, a position in which he gave invaluable service in plans being made for the development and strengthening of the collections of the research library services. Mr. Margolis is survived by his wife Esther and their three sons.

ROBERT L. MELKA died in a fishing accident on Lake Michigan on December 29, 1971. Dr. Melka was born in Chicago on July 1, 1932, and spent his early years in Minnesota. He pursued a deep interest in history and diplomacy with training at the College of St. Thomas, the Université de Grenoble, and Georgetown University. He received his M.A. from the latter in 1958. Dr. Melka interrupted his studies to serve with the U.S. Army in Germany. He returned to the United States to continue his academic career at the University of Minnesota, where he earned the Ph.D. degree in 1966. Dr. Melka taught at Wisconsin State University, Oshkosh, from 1965 to 1970. He joined the department of history at Hope College in September 1970. He had only begun to publish his extensive research on World War II at the time of his death.

The editors of Societas have established a national award in Dr. Melka's name. The department of history of Hope College has created a Robert L. Melka Memorial Fund.

HENRY BAMFORD PARKES died in New York on January 7, 1972, after a protracted illness. A few months earlier he had retired from New York University, where he had been on the faculty since 1930. Born in Sheffield, England, on November 13, 1904, the son of a Methodist minister, Parkes attended Oxford on a scholarship and received his B.A. in 1927. In that year he came to the United States, where he completed his Ph.D. at the University of Michigan in 1929. His dissertation on Jonathan Edwards, published in 1930, testified to an interest in intellectual history and the special qualities of American evolution that would occupy him for the rest of his life.

Parkes's second major publication, however, represented something of a diversion. An opportunity to visit Mexico at a time when he was deeply interested in radicalism resulted in A History of Mexico (1938), which, despite criticisms for its leftist tone, was praised for its readability and accuracy. Although it has been revised only slightly, it remains the most satisfactory popular history of Mexico in English.

Marxism, an Autopsy (1939) signified for Parkes a partial renunciation of radical solutions as he offered a realistic appraisal of Marx that was regarded as seminal and distinctive. A textbook, Recent America (1941), received compliments for its soundness and its mordant and witty style.

In The American Experience (1947) Parkes emphasized the agrarian tradition as fostering freedom and equality, in contrast to the degrading effects of industrialization. A few historians who disagreed with his thesis acknowledged that his views were often original and penetrating. David M. Potter praised the 1955 revision as an outstanding interpretive work by a richly informed mind, a trenchant and most important book. Parkes's textbook, The United States of America (1953), was comprehensive but also primarily interpretive, favoring the Democrats, and it was widely used. Reinhold Niebuhr described it as "a masterpiece of scholarship and wisdom."

Always reaching for new meanings, Parkes turned to the history of Western thought and culture. Two books of his projected series, Gods and Men (1959) and The Divine Order (1969), became best sellers. His third volume on the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries was not completed at the time he was stricken. Parkes stressed the connection between freedom and creativity and the social significance of art. He held that mankind was happiest while developing and accepting myths or ideologies, and that it suffered chaos, war, and tyranny when consensus was undermined. His interpretations, bold but not smug, rested on enormous learning, and his style, always lively, was at its most stimulating in these final works.

Henry Parkes was always a popular teacher at New York University, whether he presented intellectual history, United States foreign policy, or the development of Latin America. He enjoyed lecturing to huge classes. After Parkinson's disease weakened his voice he offered only seminars. Here he also excelled, with his gentle and probing manner drawing the best out of his students. In the last course he gave the students accorded him in an evaluation the highest rating. A speed reader of prodigious skill, he supervised countless theses, caring little for pedantry but demanding that the writers show a grasp of the larger implications of their topics. He was exacting and yet infinitely patient.

As author of numerous articles, often on topical subjects, visiting lecturer in various institutions, and editor of a formidable list of books, Parkes also exerted wide influence. Among his achievements was his founding and direction of the American Civilization Program at New York University, in which he united his historical and literary interests. A deceptively casual administrator with an offhand manner who threw out his files at the end of the year, he nonetheless provided the essentials of his responsibility: a sound curriculum, high standards, rigorous examination, and placement. A shy and immensely attractive personality, he leaves many grateful friends and an impressive legacy as a historian.

JOHN EDWIN FAGG
New York University

RAYMOND DE ROOVER, professor of history at Brooklyn College and the Graduate Center of the City University of New York, suffered a fatal cerebral hemorrhage at his home in Brooklyn on Tuesday morning, March 14, 1972. His sudden death brought to a premature close a career of outstanding merit in his chosen fields of economic history. He had concerned himself largely with the history of money, banking, and price controls, and with industrial, commercial, and business enterprises and organizations, which he had carefully traced back to their medieval development.

De Roover was born on August 28, 1904, in Antwerp, Belgium, where he completed his early training at the École Supérieure de Commerce. He came to the United States and continued his studies at the Harvard University Graduate School of Business Administration and at the University of Chicago, where he received his Ph.D. in 1943. He began his teaching career at Wells College and later went on to Illinois College and Boston College. He held visiting professorships at Oberlin College and the University of California at Berkeley. In 1961 he came to Brooklyn as professor of history both in the college and in the Graduate Center of the City University of New York. At the latter he was in charge of a colloquium in medieval economic history and, at the time of his death, was directing several doctoral candidates.

Raymond de Roover was an unusually productive scholar. Among his most significant works were The Medici Bank (1948), Money, Banking, and Credit in Mediaeval Bruges (1948), and The Rise and Decline of the Medici Bank, 1397-1494 (1963). In addition he contributed to numerous scholarly journals, books, and works of reference in America, Belgium, England, and France, and he served as advisory editor for Studies in Medieval and Renaissance History. He further served locally as president of the Medieval Club of New York and he participated in the Columbia University Seminars on the Middle Ages, the Renaissance, and Legal and Political Thought. He also participated in various international economic congresses, the most recent of which were the International Economic Congresses held at Munich in 1965 and at Leningrad in 1970.

Throughout the entire span of his academic career Raymond de Roover's zealous application to his studies won almost immediate recognition and continuing support in the form of grants and fellowships. Among these were a Fulbright fellowship and fellowships and grants from the Belgian Fonds National de la Recherche Scientifique, the Guggenheim Foundation, the Penrose Fund of the American Philosophical Society, the Social Science Research Council, the City University of New York, and the National Foundation on the Arts and Humanities. The prizes and honors he received were numerous and varied. Beginning with the James Bowdoin Graduate Prize for his essay on "The Florentine Woolen Industry" in 1938, he went on to garner the Herbert Baxter Adams Prize awarded by the American Historical Association in 1948 for his Medici Bank, the Charles Homer Haskins Gold Medal, granted to him in 1950 by the Mediaeval Academy of America for his book Money, Banking, and Credit in Mediaeval Bruges, and the Robert Troup Paine Prize, given by the Harvard University Press, for his Rise and Decline of the Medici Bank, 1397-1494. Moreover, in fitting tribute to his contributions to scholarship he was elected honorary member of Phi Beta Kappa by the Wells College chapter and, in 1952, a foreign member of the Royal Flemish Academy of Sciences, Letters, and Fine Arts. In 1969, in what he considered his crowning achievement, he was knighted by royal decree of H. M. King Baudouin I of Belgium as Knight-Officer of the Order of the Crown. His most recent honor was that of election in 1970 as Fellow of the Mediaeval Academy of America. At every stage of his remarkably successful career Raymond de Roover never failed to acknowledge his indebtedness to his wife, Florence Edler, a scholar of merit in her own right, who survives him.

For his colleagues, friends, and students, to whom he endeared himself by the contagion of his ebullient spirit, his enthusiastic concern for scholarly excellence, and his friendly, open, and kindly nature, Raymond de Roover's sudden departure leaves a void that cannot soon be filled. Yet none of them can say that he is not the richer because Raymond de Roover was once nearby.

PEARL KIBRE

Graduate Center,
City University of New York

When RICHARD HARRISON SHRYOCK expressed the wish nearly fifty years ago to study the history of American public health for his doctoral dissertation he was told firmly that the subject, though interesting, was not "history." When he died this winter, the history of medicine was a recognized academic discipline with university departments and chairs, a national association, two journals, and other evidences of acceptance. In that development none played a larger part than he or made more distinguished and permanent contributions to both the content and the institutions of the subject.

Born in Philadelphia on March 29, 1893, Shryock attended Philadelphia Central High School, the Philadelphia School of Pedagogy, and the University of Pennsylvania School of Education, graduating in 1917. After war service in the Army Medical School he commenced graduate work at the University of Pennsylvania. He was John Bach McMaster's last assistant in 1919-20, but it was Edward P. Cheyney who encouraged his interest in the history of public health and social aspects of medicine. But Shryock was "in" American history, and, instead of public health, he wrote on Georgia and the federal union in 1350, for which he received his doctorate in 1924.

One of the sources for his dissertation was the letters of Dr. Richard D. Arnold of Savannah. These sustained Shryock's interest in medicine; he edited and published them in 1929 and in the next few years published several articles on medical history. In 1936 appeared The Development of Modern Medicine, a work of deep and original scholarship but so unconventional that its publisher hazarded only a small printing and the American Historical Review passed it over. Five years later, however, when the book had appeared in a German translation, the Review noticed it. Declaring it "high time to call attention to this notable work," the reviewer pronounced it "an invaluable contribution to social history, drawing together, correlating, and clarifying in masterly fashion a complicated and difficult body of material" (AHR, 46 [1940-41]: 605). Most of that material was European. In all his subsequent writing, most of it on American history, Shryock never failed to set his story against a broader, European background.

Shryock taught at Duke University from 1925 to 1938 and at Pennsylvania until 1949, when he became director of the Institute of the History of Medicine at the Johns Hopkins University. Retiring in 1958 he returned to Philadelphia as professor at the University of Pennsylvania and librarian of the American Philosophical Society. In the latter position his influence was imaginative and liberating. In addition he served on many professional boards and committees—the National Historical Publications Commission, the National Portrait Gallery Commission, the Institute of Early American History, and the History of Medicine Study Section of the National Institutes of Health, among others. He was president of the History of Science Society and the American Association for the History of Medicine, and he received the principal award of each. He served as president of both the American and International Associations of University Professors. He retired from the University of Pennsylvania in 1963 and from the American Philosophical Society in 1965; it gave him a quiet pleasure to reflect that he was thrice an emeritus—of Johns Hopkins, Pennsylvania, and the Society.

All the while he was writing steadily. He was the author of American Medical Research (1947), Cotton Mather, First Significant Figure in American Medicine (1953), The Unique Influence of The Johns Hopkins University on American Medicine (1953), Medicine and Society in America (1960), as well as of scores of articles. The January 1968 issue of the Journal of the History of Medicine contains his bibliography to that date. He corrected the proofs of "The Medical Reputation of Benjamin Rush: Contrasts over Two Centuries" for the Bulletin of the History of Medicine (45 [1971]: 507-52) shortly before his death, which occurred while he was on vacation at Fort Lauderdale, Florida, on January 30, 1972.

As a historian of medicine and science, Shryock addressed himself to questions of their interrelations with politics, society, and economics. The subtitle of The Development of Modern Medicine was An Interpretation of the Social and Scientific Factors Involved. Knowing more medicine than historians or sociologists and having better historical training than any physician, Shryock saw the past in all its variety and complexity, illuminated contemporary problems with historical insights, and asked more questions than he answered. Tolerant by nature and skeptical by training, he constantly explored and probed. He had enough ideas to have founded several "schools," but he suspected that all schools perpetuate half-truths; and, though he had many students, he had no "disciples."

He used statistics from the days of his earliest research, and in 1960 he organized and conducted a conference on the history of quantification. He sought the company of sociologists and psychologists, and he enriched his own work with understandings drawn from their disciplines. Though not a "revisionist," he held many unorthodox views: he examined every cliché, whether the influence of the frontier, the flowering of New England, or the benefits of federal union; he could write, for example, that "we should guard against the assumption that all major outcomes in the American past must have been for the best." The quality of Shryock's mind and the nature of his contribution are perhaps best revealed in the essays collected and published in Medicine in America (1966).

WHITFIELD J. BELL, JR.

American Philosophical Society

DALE ALAN SOMERS (1939-72), associate professor of urban history at Georgia State University, died of cancer in Houston, Texas, on March 27. He had begun to make his mark in historical scholarship with articles in the Southwestern Historical Quarterly, the Journal of Popular Culture, and Louisiana History. His first book, The Rise of Sports in New Orleans, 1850-1900 (1972), was published on the eve of his death. Professor Somers was a very popular teacher who enjoyed great respect from his colleagues for his personal integrity and high standards of scholarship. As president of the local chapter of the American Association of University Professors, he worked fearlessly for faculty rights and was known and appreciated by the faculty and administration for his humor, wit, and forthrightness. Born in Galveston, Texas, he attended Southwest Texas State College and Trinity University. In 1966 he received his Ph.D. from Tulane University. He taught at the University of Kentucky and East Texas State University before joining the faculty at Georgia State University in 1968.

Other members of the association who have died recently include: W. W. Bailey of Alexandria, Virginia; George A. Boyd of Middletown, New York; Eugene P. Chase of Hebron, Connecticut; M. D. Condon of Rolling Hills, California; M. Contopoulos of Jackson Heights, New York; L. Corning, Jr., of San Antonio, Texas; J. A. Fiorentino of Trenton, New Jersey; C. Warren Griffiths of Wilmington College in Wilmington, Ohio; Colonel Edward P. Hamilton of Milton, Massachusetts; E. H. Heintzen of Springfield, Illinois; E. S. Hoyt of Montreat, North Carolina; Donald R. McVeigh of Hyattsville, Maryland; Félix Martí-Ibáñez of New York, New York; Frank S. Meyer of Woodstock, New York; Ludwell L. Montague of Ware Neck, Virginia; Robert Cornelius Murray, former senior master at the Riverdale Country School, Riverdale, New York; Coen Gallatin Pierson of Illinois State University in Normal; Robert G. Ramsay of Orange, California; J. H. Rubenstein, an instructor at Kalamazoo Valley Community College in Kalamazoo, Michigan; Cortland V. Smith of Louisburg, North Carolina; and F. S. Wise of Bolivar, Missouri.

---

Association Notes

---

Dr. Charlotte Alison Quinn has been appointed special assistant to the AHA's Committee on Women Historians for the year 1972-73. A specialist in African history, Dr. Quinn, author of Mandingo Kingdoms of the Senegambia (1972), received the Ph.D. from the University of California, Los Angeles, in 1967. In her new post Dr. Quinn succeeds Dr. Dorothy Rabin Ross, who has joined the department of history at Princeton as assistant professor.

Mrs. Janet Croly Hayman, assistant editor of the AHA Newsletter for the past year, has now been appointed as an assistant editor of the AHR as well.

Festschriften and Miscellanies

These volumes, recently received in the AHR office, do not lend themselves readily to unified reviews; the contents are therefore listed. Other Festschriften and similar volumes that are amenable to reviewing will be found in the review section.

BERLIN, CHARLES, editor. Studies in Jewish Bibliography, History, and Literature in honor of I. Edward Kiev. New York: Ktav Publishing House, Inc. 1971. Pp. 587. $25.00.

SALO W. BARON, A Collection of Hebrew-Latin Aphorisms by a Christian Hebraist. ABRAHAM BERGER, Approaches to Rabbi Nachman and His Tales. CHARLES BERLIN, A Sixteenth-Century Hebrew Chronicle of the Ottoman Empire: The Seder Eliyahu Zuta of Elijah Capsali and Its Message. GEORGE L. BERLIN, The Jewish Labor Committee and American Immigration Policy in the 1930's. WILLIAM G. BRAUDE, Maimonides' Attitude to Midrash. ARTHUR A. CHIEL, Ezra Stiles and the Polish Rabbi. MARTIN A. COHEN, The Rebellions during the Reign of David: An Inquiry into Social Dynamics in Ancient Israel. PHILIP GOODMAN, Jewish Bookplate Literature: An Annotated Bibliography. ALFRED GOTTSCHALK, Ahad Ha-Am as Biblical Critic—A Profile. Y. KANTOR, translated and annotated by A. A. GREENBAUM, Some Notes and Conclusions about the Published Totals of the Soviet Census of January 15, 1959. JOSEPH GUTMANN, Jewish Ceremonial Art: A Basic Bibliography. JACOB KABAKOFF, S. B. Schwarzberg (1865–1929)—Hebrew Publisher and Bibliographer. NATHAN M. KAGANOFF, Supplement III: Judaica Americana Printed before 1851. GUIDO KISCH, An Innovator of Haggadah Illustration—Cyril Kutlik. MOSES MARK, A Bibliography of Hebrew Printing in Dyhernfurth, 1689–1718. ISIDORE S. MEYER, The Hebrew Exercises of Governor William Bradford. MICHAEL A. MEYER, Christian Influence on Early German Reform Judaism. LEON NEMOV, Studies in the History of the Early Karaite Liturgy: The Liturgy of Al-Qirqisāni. JACOB NEUSNER, Some Early Traditions concerning Yohanan ben Zakkai. SHLOMO NOBLE, The Jewish Woman in Medieval Martyrology. HERBERT PARZEN, Observations on Maimonides' Guide for the Perplexed. MOSHE PERLMANN, "Talmudic Human Sacrifices": Egypt 1890. MOSHE PELLI, The Methodology Employed by the Hebrew Reformers in the First Reform Temple Controversy (1818–1819). ISAAC RABINOWITZ, A Rectification of the Date of Judah Messer Leon's Death. NAHUM M. SARNA, The Order of the Books. A. SCHEIBER, Bibliographisches aus der Genisa. MENAHEM SCHMELZER, Rashi's Commentary on the Pentateuch and on the Five Scrolls, Venice, Bomberg, 1538. EISIG SILBERSCHLAG, Contemporary Hebrew Literature: Source of Untapped Values. FRANK TALMAGE, David Kimhi and the Rationalist Tradition II: Literary Sources. CARL HERMANN VOSS, Letters from Stephen S. Wise to a friend and Colleague: Morton Mayer Berman. MYRON M. WEINSTEIN, A Putative Ceylon Rite. THEODORE WIENER, compiler, Addenda to Yaari's Bibliography of the Passover Haggadah from the Library of Congress Hebraica Collection. YOSEF HAYIM YERUSHALMI, Privilegios del Poderoso Rey Karlo (1740): A Neapolitan Call for the Return of the Jews, and Its Ladino Translation. HERBERT C. ZAFREN, Dyhernfurth and Shabtai Bass: A Typographic Profile. FRANK ZIMMERMANN, A Suggested Source for Some of the Substitute Names for YHWH.

JÜRGENSEN, KURT, and HANSEN, REIMER, editors. Historisch-politische Streiflichter: Geschichtliche Beiträge zur Gegenwart. Preface by KARL DIETRICH ERDMANN. Neumünster: Karl Wachholtz Verlag. 1971. Pp. 295. DM 29.80.

Einleitung: KURT JÜRGENSEN and REIMER HANSEN.

Zur Ideen- und Verfassungsgeschichte: TILMAN KOOPS, Gehorsam und Widerstandsrecht in der Theologie des orthodoxen Luthertums. KURT JÜRGENSEN, Zur Entstehungsgeschichte des belgischen Königreiches: Lamennais und Belgien. HANS PETER MENSING, Die Entwicklung der schwedischen Sozialpolitik im ausgehenden 19. Jahrhundert. DIETER PUST, Die ersten Flensburger Kommunalwahlen auf der Grundlage des "Normativs" von 1833. GERTRUD JUNG, Das schleswig-holsteinische Kommunalwahlrecht 1867–1914.

Zur Geschichte der Parteien und Verbände: HEINZ JOSEF VARAIN, Zur Geschichte und Theorie der Interessenverbände. GERHARD BEIER, Gruppenspezifische Sozialgeschichte am Beispiel der Buchdrucker-gewerkschaft. GERD SCHWIEGER, Der "Verrat" der deutschen Sozialdemokratie: Überlegungen zur Kriegspolitik der SPD im Ersten Weltkrieg. ERASMUS JONAS, Brüning und die Konservativen.

Zur innen- und aussenpolitischen Entwicklung in der Zeit der Weltkriege: ERICH-WOLFGANG HUBRICH, Zur amerikanischen Intervention in Europa 1914-1919: Aussenminister Robert Lansing und Präsident Woodrow Wilson im Spiegel der Lansing Papers. HELMUT GRIESER, Die Rapallo-Politik in sowjetischer Sicht: Zur Beurteilung der deutschen Aussenpolitik 1922-1932 in der zeitgenössischen sowjetischen Presse. JÜRGEN BLUNCK, Der Gedanke der Grossen Koalition in den Jahren 1923-1928. KARL-HEINZ HARBECK, Zur Geschichte der "Zeitschrift für Geopolitik" 1924-1944. HANS-JÜRGEN KRÜGER, Zum Verhältnis von Faschismus und Ständestaat. JENS PETERSEN, Italien in der aussenpolitischen Konzeption Hitlers. KARL-HEINZ MINUTH, Britische Balkanstrategie 1942/43: Betrachtungen zu Churchills "The Second World War." REIMER HANSEN, Die deutsche Kapitulation 1945.

Zur afro-asiatischen Geschichte: ERNST KOHL, Die christlichen Kirchen und die Rassenfrage in Südafrika. JOHANNES H. VOIGT, Nationalismus in der indischen Geschichtsschreibung. BERNHARD DAHM, Werdegang und politische Ideen Sukarnos.

Papers Presented at the Second Annual New Jersey History Symposium Held December 5, 1970 at the State Museum, Trenton under the Auspices of the New Jersey Historical Commission. Newark, N. J.: The New Jersey Historical Society. 1971. Pp. 80. $3.00.

Political Party Systems of New Jersey in the Early National Period: CARL E. PRINCE, The Leadership of New Jersey's First Party System. HERBERT ERSHKOWITZ, The Origins of the Whig and Democratic Parties in New Jersey, 1820-1837. JAMES M. BANNER, JR., Comments.

The Historical Geography of New Jersey: PETER O. WACKER, New Jersey's Cultural Landscape before 1800. THEODORE W. KURY, Iron as a Factor in New Jersey Settlement. A. PHILIP MUNTZ, Comments.

Other Books Received

Books listed were received by the AHR between February 1 and May 1, 1972. Books that will be reviewed are not listed, but listing does not preclude subsequent review.

GENERAL

- ARBORE, VIRGIL, et al. Atlas istoric. Ed. by VASILICA NEAGU. Bucharest: Editura Didactică și Pedagogică. 1971. Pp. 197.
- BEN-SASSON, H. H., and ETTINGER, S. (eds.). Jewish Society through the Ages. New York: Schocken Books. 1971. Pp. 352. $12.50.
- BESTERMAN, THEODORE. History and Geography: A Bibliography of Bibliographies. In 4 vols. The Besterman World Bibliographies. Totowa, N. J.: Rowman and Littlefield. 1972. Pp. 408; 409-802; 803-1196; 1197-1587. $60.00 the set.
- BLACK, C. E., and HELMREICH, E. C. Twentieth Century Europe: A History. 4th ed.; New York: Alfred A. Knopf. 1972. Pp. xxiv, 1008, xxviii. $15.95.
- BOULDING, KENNETH E., and MUKERJEE, TAPAN (eds.). Economic Imperialism: A Book of Readings. Ann Arbor: University of Michigan Press. 1972. Pp. xviii, 338. $10.00.
- BRIGGS, ROBIN. The Scientific Revolution of the Seventeenth Century. Seminar Studies in History. New York: Harper and Row. 1969. Pp. x, 121. $2.95.
- CARDWELL, D. S. L. Turning Points in Western Technology: A Study of Technology, Science and History. New York: Science History Publications. 1972. Pp. xi, 244. Cloth $10.50, paper $5.00.
- CHEIN, ISIDOR. The Science of Behavior and the Image of Man. New York: Basic Books. 1972. Pp. xii, 347. $12.50.
- CLAYTON, G. D. Britain and the Eastern Question: Missolonghi to Gallipoli. The London History Studies, No. 8. [London:] University of London Press; distrib. by Rowman and Littlefield, Totowa, N. J. 1971. Pp. 256. $3.00.
- CONSTANTINESCU, MIRON, and LIVEANU, VASILE. Problems of History and of Social Theory. Tr. by MARY LĂZĂRESCU. Bibliotheca Historica Romaniae, Studies, No. 30. Bucharest: Publishing House of the Academy of the Socialist Republic of Romania. 1970. Pp. 170. Lei 6.50.
- CORNEHLS, JAMES V. (ed. with an introd.). Economic Development and Economic Growth. New York Times Book. Chicago: Quadrangle Books. 1972. Pp. ix, 286. Cloth $8.95, paper $2.65.
- DANIELS ROBERT V. Studying History: How and Why. 2d ed.; Englewood Cliffs, N. J.: Prentice-Hall. 1972. Pp. viii, 120. $1.95.
- DORN, GEORGETTE M. (comp.). Latin America, Spain, and Portugal: An Annotated Bibliography of Paperback Books. Hispanic Foundation Bibliographical Ser., No. 13. Washington: Library of Congress. 1971. Pp. 180. 75 cents.
- DRENNEN, D. A. Karl Marx's Communist Manifesto: A Full Textual Explication. Woodbury, N. Y.: Barron's Educational Ser. 1972. Pp. v, 202. $1.95.
- ENGELS, FREDERICK. The Origin of the Family, Private Property, and the State: In the Light of the Researches of Lewis H. Morgan. With an introd. and notes by ELEANOR BURKE LEACOCK. New York: International Publishers. 1972. Pp. 285. $7.50.
- EPSTEIN, FRITZ T., et al. (eds.). The American Bibliography of Russian and East European Studies for 1966. Russian and East European Ser., Russian and East European Institute, Indiana University, vol. 40. Bloomington: Indiana University Press for International Affairs Center. 1972. Pp. xxiii, 148. $3.50.
- FLATHMAN, RICHARD E. Political Obligation. Studies in Political Theory. New York: Atheneum. 1972. Pp. xxvii, 334. $12.95.
- German Polish Dialogue: Letters of the Polish and German Bishops and International Statements*. Bonn: Edition Atlantic-Forum. 1966. Pp. 127.
- GRIMM, HAROLD J. The Reformation. AHA Pamphlets 403. Washington: American Historical Association. 1972. Pp. 33. $1.00.
- HACOHEN, JOSEPH, and the ANONYMOUS CORRECTOR. The Vale of Tears (Emek Habacha). Tr. and with a critical commentary by HARRY S. MAY. The Hague: Martinus Nijhoff. 1971. Pp. xiii, 146. 18 gls.
- HERMANN, WILLIAM. The Holocaust: From a Survivor of Verdun. New York: Harper and Row. 1972. Pp. xii, 141. $5.95.

Humboldt, Trabajos de. Ser. Historica, No. 8. Bicentenario de Humboldt. Havana: Academia de Ciencias de Cuba, Museo Histórico de las Ciencias "Carlos J. Finlay." 1969. Pp. 31.

Humboldt, Trabajos sobre. In 2 pts. Ser. Historica, Nos. 9 and 10. Bicentenario de Humboldt. Havana: Academia de Ciencias de Cuba, Museo Histórico de las Ciencias "Carlos J. Finlay." 1969. Pp. 38; 31.

INNIS, HAROLD A. Empire and Communications. Rev. by MARY Q. INNIS. Foreword by MARSHALL McLuhan. [Toronto:] University of Toronto Press. 1972. Pp. xii, 184. $2.75.

JORDAN, ROBERT S. (ed.). Multinational Cooperation: Economic, Social, and Scientific Development. New York: Oxford University Press. 1972. Pp. xiii, 392. $4.95.

Keynes, John Maynard, The Collected Writings of Vol. 2, The Economic Consequences of the Peace. [New York:] St. Martin's Press for the Royal Economic Society. 1971. Pp. xxv, 191. $9.50.

LAGO, MARY M. (ed., with an introd. and notes). Imperfect Encounter: Letters of William Rothenstein and Rabindranath Tagore, 1911-1941. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press. 1972. Pp. xiii, 402. $15.00.

LANGER, WILLIAM L. (ed.). Perspectives in Western Civilization: Essays from Horizon. In 2 vols. New York: American Heritage; Harper and Row. 1972. Pp. 287; 286. $3.25 each.

LIDDEL HART, B. H. Why Don't We Learn from History? Rev. ed.; New York: Hawthorn Books. 1971. Pp. 95. $3.95.

LÓPEZ SÁNCHEZ, JOSÉ. Humboldt y su época. Ser. Historica, No. 13. Bicentenario de Humboldt. Havana: Academia de Ciencias de Cuba, Museo Histórico de las Ciencias "Carlos J. Finlay." 1970. Pp. 151.

LOUCA, ANOUAR. Henry Dunant et les origines chevaleresques de la Croix-Rouge. Geneva: Association Suisse-Arabe. 1971. Pp. 26.

LUZA, RADOMIR. History of the International Socialist Youth Movement. European Aspects: A Collection of Studies Relating to European Integration Published under the Auspices of the Council of Europe. Ser. C: Politics, No. 20. Leyden: A. W. Sijthoff. 1970. Pp. 336. 25 gls.

MALLIN, JAY (ed. and with an introd.). Terror and Urban Guerrillas: A Study of Tactics and Documents. Coral Gables, Fla.: University of Miami Press. 1971. Pp. 176. $7.95.

MERLIN, MARK DAVID. Man and Marijuana: Some Aspects of Their Ancient Relationship. Rutherford, N. J.: Fairleigh Dickinson University Press. 1972. Pp. 120. $8.00.

MEUVRET, JEAN. Études d'histoire économique: Recueil d'articles. Cahiers des Annales, 32. Paris: Librairie Armand Colin. 1971. Pp. 344. 35 fr.

MICHEL, HENRI. La seconde guerre mondiale. "Que sais-je?" No. 265. Paris: Presses Universitaires de France. 1971. Pp. 126.

NEIDER, CHARLES (ed. with an introd. and notes). Antarctica: Authentic Accounts of Life and Exploration in the World's Highest, Driest, Windiest, Coldest and Most Remote Continent. New York: Random House, 1972. Pp. x, 464. $10.00.

NÚÑEZ JIMÉNEZ, ANTONIO. Humboldt, espeleólogo precursor. Ser. Historica, No. 11. Bicentenario de Humboldt. Havana: Academia de Ciencias de Cuba. 1969. Pp. 29.

NÚÑEZ JIMÉNEZ, ANTONIO, and CERMAK, JOSEPH. Discursos. Ser. Historica, No. 12. Bicentenario de Humboldt. Havana: Academia de Ciencias de Cuba. 1969. Pp. 12.

O'CONNOR, RAYMOND G. Force & Diplomacy: Essays Military and Diplomatic. Coral Gables, Fla.: University of Miami Press. 1972. Pp. 167. $10.00.

PAYNE, ROBERT (ed. with an introd.). The Unknown Karl Marx: Documents Concerning Karl Marx. New York: New York University Press. 1971. Pp. viii, 337. $8.75.

PESCH, OTTO HERMANN, O.P. The God Question in Thomas Aquinas and Martin Luther. Tr. by GOTTFRIED G. KRODEL. Facet Books. Historical Ser., 21 (Reformation). Philadelphia: Fortress Press. 1972. Pp. ix, 38. $1.00.

PIEL, GERARD. The Acceleration of History. New York: Alfred A. Knopf. 1972. Pp. 369. $8.95.

POULTON, HELEN J., with the assistance of MARGUERITE S. HOWLAND. The Historian's Handbook: A Descriptive Guide to Reference Works. Foreword by WILBUR S. SHEPPERSON. Norman: University of Oklahoma Press. 1972. Pp. xi, 304. $4.95.

PROKOSCH, ERICH (tr., ed., and with an introd.). Molla und Diplomat: Der Bericht des Ebû Sehil Nu'mân Efendi über die österreichisch-osmanische Grenzziehung nach dem Belgrader Frieden 1740/41. Osmanische Geschichtsschreiber, No. 7. Graz: Verlag Styria. 1972. Pp. 250. Sch. 160.

ROBERTS, J. M. (ed.). Europe in the 20th Century: Readings in 20th Century History. Vol. 2, 1914-25. New York: Taplinger. 1971. Pp. 362. $7.95.

SALVADORI, MASSIMO (ed.). European Liberalism. Major Issues in History. New York: John Wiley and Sons. 1972. Pp. 189. Cloth $6.95, paper $3.50.

SHEEHAN, JAMES J., et al. Modern European Social History: Selections. Ed. by ROBERT J. BEZUCHA. Lexington, Mass.: D. C. Heath. 1972. Pp. xix, 386.

STADLER, PETER. Karl Marx: Ideologie und Politik. Persönlichkeit und Geschichte, No. 40/41. 2d rev. ed.; Göttingen: Musterschmidt. 1971. Pp. 146. DM 7.80.

STIPP, JOHN L., et al. The Rise and Development of Western Civilization. Vol. 1. 2d ed.; New York: John Wiley and Sons. 1972. Pp. xix, 748. Cloth $10.95, paper $7.95.

TIERNEY, BRIAN, et al. (eds.). Great Issues in Western Civilization. In 2 vols. 2d ed.; New York: Random House. 1972. Pp. xv, 581; xv, 677.

TURNER, ARTHUR CAMPBELL. The Unique Partnership: Britain and the United States. "America's Involvement with the World" Ser. New York: Pegasus. 1971. Pp. vii, 216. $6.95.

VALLIER, IVAN (ed.). Comparative Methods in Sociology: Essays on Trends and Applications. Published under the auspices of the Institute of International Studies, University of California (Berkeley). Berkeley and Los Angeles: University of California Press. 1971. Pp. viii, 474. $14.50.

VERLINDEN, CHARLES. Christophe Colomb. "Que sais-je?" No. 1457. Paris: Presses Universitaires de France. 1972. Pp. 126.

WARD, PAUL L. Elements of Historical Thinking. Discussions on Teaching 1. Washington: American Historical Association. 1971. Pp. 41. $1.00.

WHITROW, MAGDA (ed.). ISIS Cumulative Bibliography: A Bibliography of the History of Science, Formed from ISIS Critical Bibliographies 1-90, 1913-65. Vol. 1, pt. 1, Personalities A-J; vol. 2, pt. 1, Personalities K-Z, pt. 2, Institutions. [London:] Mansell, in conjunction with the History of Science Society. 1971. Pp. lxxviii, 664; 789. $67.20 the set.

WILLIAMS, ETHEL L., and BROWN, CLIFTON L. (comps.). Afro-American Religious Studies: A Comprehensive Bibliography with Locations in American Libraries. Metuchen, N. J.: Scarecrow Press. 1972. Pp. x, 11-454. $12.50.

WILSON, CHARLES. Europa im Spiegel russischer Geschichte: Wie Alexander Gerschenkron es sieht. Kölner Vorträge zur Sozial- und Wirtschaftsgeschichte, 16. Cologne: Forschungsinstitut für Sozial- und Wirtschaftsgeschichte an der Universität zu Köln. 1971. Pp. 20.

WOLF, JOHN B. Early Modern Europe, 1500/1789. World Civilization Ser., Vol. 4. Glenview, Ill.: Scott, Foresman. 1972. Pp. 237.

MEDIEVAL

BUJNOCH, JOSEF (tr. with introd. and notes). Zwischen Rom und Byzanz: Leben und Wirken der Slavenapostel Kyrillos und Methodios nach den Pannonischen Legenden und der Klemensvita. Bericht von der Taufe Russlands nach der Laurentiuschronik. Slavische Geschichtsschreiber, No. 1. 2d rev. ed.; Graz: Verlag Styria. 1972. Pp. 254. Sch. 160.

CATONI, GIULIANO (ed.). Libri dell'entrata e dell'uscita del comune di Siena detti della Biccherna: Registro 30° (1259, secondo semestre). Ministero dell'Interno, Pubblicazioni degli archivi di stato. Fonti e sussidi, 2. Rome: the Ministero. 1970. Pp. xl, 169. L. 4,000.

CHIBNALL, MARJORIE (ed. and tr.). The Ecclesiastical History of Orderic Vitalis. Vol. 3, Books V and VI. Oxford Medieval Texts. New York: Oxford University Press. 1972. Pp. xxviii, 408. $34.00.

CUTTINO, C. P. English Diplomatic Administration, 1259-1339. Oxford Historical Monographs. 2d rev. ed.; New York: Oxford University Press. 1971. Pp.

280. $13.00. See rev. of 1st ed. (1940), AHR, 46 (1940-41): 386.

DARBY, H. C. The Domesday Geography of Eastern England. 3d ed.; New York: Cambridge University Press. 1971. Pp. xiv, 400. $32.50. See rev. of 1st ed. (1952), AHR, 58 (1952-53): 971.

DEMOLON, PIERRE. Le village mérovingien de Brebières (VI<sup>e</sup>-VII<sup>e</sup> siècles). With a study of the fauna by TH. POULAIN-JOSIEN. Foreword by ERNEST WILL. Mémoires de la Commission Départementale des Monuments Historiques du Pas-de-Calais, No. 21(1). Arras: Archives du Pas-de-Calais. 1972. Pp. 338. 50 fr.

GEIGER, HANS-ULRICH. Der Beginn der Gold- und Dickmünzenprägung in Bern: Ein Beitrag zur Bernischen Münz- und Geldgeschichte des 15. Jahrhunderts. Archiv des Historischen Vereins des Kantons Bern, No. 52. [Bern: the Verein.] 1968. Pp. 265.

JACKSON, KENNETH. The Gaelic Notes in the Book of Deer. The Osborn Bergin Memorial Lecture 1970. New York: Cambridge University Press. 1972. Pp. xv, 164. $10.00.

KNOWLES, DAVID, and HADCOCK, R. NEVILLE. Medieval Religious Houses: England and Wales. Rev. ed.; New York: St. Martin's Press. 1972. Pp. xv, 565, 6 maps. $29.95. See rev. of 1st ed. (1953), AHR, 59 (1953-54): 678.

MARCHAL-VERDOODT, MONIQUE. Tables des noms de personnes et de lieux mentionnés dans les plus anciens comptes de la recette générale de Philippe le Hardi, duc de Bourgogne (1383-1389). Brussels: Académie Royale de Belgique, Commission Royale d'Histoire. 1971. Pp. 400.

PÁLSSON, HERMANN, and EDWARDS, PAUL (trs.). Hrólfr Gautreksson: A Viking Romance. The New Saga Library. [Toronto:] University of Toronto Press. 1972. Pp. 148. $5.00.

PREVENIER, W. De oorkonden der graven van Vlaanderen (1191-aanvang 1206). Vol. 3, Documentatie en indices. Verzameling van de akten der belgische vorsten. Brussels: Koninklijke Academie van België, Koninklijke Commissie voor Geschiedenis. 1972. Pp. 308. See revs. of vol. 1 (1966), AHR, 73 (1967-68): 791, and 2 (1964), AHR, 71 (1965-66): 1311.

QUILLET, JEANNINE. Les clefs du pouvoir au Moyen Âge. Questions d'histoire. [Paris:] Flammarion. 1972. Pp. 190.

ROSS, JAMES F. (ed.). Inquiries into Medieval Philosophy: A Collection in Honor of Francis P. Clarke. Contributions in Philosophy, 4. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood. 1971. Pp. xii, 329. $15.00.

SAWYER, P. H. The Age of the Vikings. 2d ed.; New York: St. Martin's. 1972. Pp. vi, 275. $10.95. See rev. of 1st ed. (1962), AHR, 69 (1963-64): 95.

TREHARNE, R. F. The Baronial Plan of Reform, 1258-1263. Including the Raleigh Lecture on History delivered to the British Academy, 1954. Publications of the University of Manchester, No. 221. Historical Ser. No. 62. The Ward Bequest, vol. 6 [2d ed.]; New York: Barnes and Noble. 1971. Pp. xv, 478. $15.00. See rev. of 1st ed. (1932), AHR, 39 (1933-34): 502.

WYFFELS, C. De rekeningen van de Stad Brugge (1280-1319). Vol. 1 (1280-1302) Pt. 2: Indices. Verzameling van onuitgegeven Belgische Kronieken en van onuitgegeven Documenten betreffende de Geschiedenis van België. Brussels: Koninklijke Academie van België, Koninklijke Commissie voor Geschiedenis. 1971. Pp. 223.

BRITISH COMMONWEALTH AND IRELAND

ALEXANDER, H. G. Religion in England, 1558-1662. The London History Studies, No. 4. [London:] University of London Press; distrib. by Rowman and Littlefield, Totowa, N. J. 1968. Pp. 233. $2.50.

BACON, FRANCIS. The History of the Reign of King Henry the Seventh. Ed. by F. J. LEVY. Indianapolis: Bobbs-Merrill. 1972. Pp. vii, 319. Cloth $10.00, paper $4.75.

BEALES, D. E. D. The Political Parties of Nineteenth-Century Britain. Appreciations in History No. 2. London: Historical Association. 1971. Pp. 23. 20p.

BREWER, J. G. Enclosures and the Open Fields: A Bibliography. [Reading:] British Agricultural History Society. 1972. Pp. 32. 50p.

CROSSMAN, RICHARD H. S. The Myths of Cabinet Government. The Godkin Lectures at Harvard University, 1970. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press. 1972. Pp. xxix, 126. $5.95.

DEMOLEN, RICHARD L. (abridged and ed.). Richard Mulcaster's Positions. Classics in Education, No. 44. New York: Teachers College Press, Teachers College, Columbia University. 1971. Pp. xii, 284. Cloth $6.95, paper $3.50.

DIETZ, BRIAN (ed.). The Port and Trade of Early Elizabethan London: Documents. London Record Society Publications, vol. 8. [London:] the Society. 1972. Pp. xxiii, 196. £4.50.

HARTWELL, R. M. The Industrial Revolution and Economic Growth. London: Methuen and Company; distrib. by Harper and Row. 1971. Pp. xxi, 423. Cloth $12.75, paper $6.50.

HORN, MICHEL (ed.). The Dirty Thirties: Canadians in the Great Depression. [Toronto: Copp Clark.] 1972. Pp. xxx, 728. Cloth $10.95, paper $5.95.

HUGGETT, FRANK E. How It Happened. [New York:] Barnes and Noble. 1972. Pp. 100. $6.50.

JARVIS, RUPERT C. Collected Papers on the Jacobite Risings. Vol. 2. New York: Barnes and Noble. 1972. Pp. xvii, 342. $11.50.

LAVOIE, YOLANDE. L'émigration des Canadiens aux États-Unis avant 1930: Mesure du phénomène. Collection "Démographie canadienne," 1. Montreal: Presses de l'Université de Montréal. 1972. Pp. 87. $3.00.

LOCKYER, ROGER. Henry VII. Seminar Studies in History. New York: Harper and Row. 1968. Pp. vii, 160. $2.95.

MACAULAY, THOMAS BABINGTON. Selected Writings. Ed. and with an introd. by JOHN CLIVE and THOMAS PINNEY. Classics of British Historical Literature.

Chicago: University of Chicago Press. 1972. Pp. xxxvi, 453. $15.00.

MCELWEE, WILLIAM. History of England. 2d. rev. ed.; New York: Barnes and Noble. 1971. Pp. 202. $2.25.

MASEFIELD, JOHN. Sea Life in Nelson's Time. With an introd. by C. C. LLOYD. 3d ed.; [Annapolis:] United States Naval Institute. 1971. Pp. xii, 108. $8.00.

MIDWINTER, ERIC. Victorian Social Reform. Seminar Studies in History. New York: Harper and Row. 1968. Pp. vii, 112. $2.95.

MINCHINTON, W. E. (ed. and introd.). Wage Regulation in Pre-Industrial England. Comprising works by R. H. TAWNEY and R. KEITH KELSALL. New York: Barnes and Noble. 1972. Pp. 263. $12.00.

MUSSON, A. E. (ed. with an introd.). Science, Technology, and Economic Growth in the Eighteenth Century. Debates in Economic History. London: Methuen; distrib. by Barnes and Noble, New York. 1972. Pp. 211. Cloth $7.25, paper $3.50.

READ, DONALD. Edwardian England. General Ser., No. 79. London: Historical Association. 1972. Pp. 56. 36p.

REEVE, ROBIN M. The Industrial Revolution, 1750-1850. The London History Studies, No. 7. [London:] University of London Press; distrib. by Rowman and Littlefield, Totowa, N. J. 1971. Pp. 271. $3.25.

SAINTY, J. C. (comp.). Officers of the House of Lords, 1485 to 1971: A List. Memorandum No. 45. [London:] House of Lords Record Office. 1971. Pp. v, 22.

SEABROOK, JEREMY. City Close-Up. Indianapolis: Bobbs-Merrill. 1971. Pp. viii, 283. $7.95.

SHAW, HOWARD. The Levellers. Seminar Studies in History. New York: Harper and Row. 1968. Pp. vi, 124. $2.95.

WARNER, OLIVER (ed.). Nelson's Last Diary: A Facsimile. [Kent:] Kent State University Press. 1971. Pp. 80. $6.00.

WILLIS, ARTHUR J. (comp.). Portsmouth Record Series: Borough Sessions Papers 1653-1688. A Calendar. Ed. by MARGARET J. HOAD. With an introd. by MARGARET J. HOAD and ROBERT P. CRIME. Chichester: Phillimore, with and for the City of Portsmouth. 1971. Pp. xxxiv, 212. £4.25.

WINCHESTER, BARRY. Beyond the Tumult. With a foreword by DOUGLAS BADER and an introd. by L. C. NIXON. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. 1971. Pp. xv, 207. $6.95.

FRANCE

Archives parlementaires de 1787 à 1860: Recueil complet des débats législatifs et politiques des Chambres françaises. 1st ser. (1787 à 1799), vol. 89, Du 29 germinal au 13 floréal an II (18 avril au 2 mai 1794). Paris: Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique. 1971. Pp. 609. 80.60 fr.

BERTAUD, JEAN-PAUL. Les origines de la Révolution française. Dossiers Clio. [Paris:] Presses Universitaires de France. 1971. Pp. 95.

BROWN, W. E. The First Bourbon Century in France. The London History Studies, No. 6. [London:] University of London Press; distrib. by Rowman and Littlefield, Totowa, N. J. 1971. Pp. 240. $3.00.

FOSTER, JOHN T. The Hundred Days: Napoleon Returns from Elba to Meet Defeat at Waterloo. World Focus Book. New York: Franklin Watts. 1972. Pp. 66. $3.95. Grades 7 up.

France. OECD Economic Surveys. [Washington:] Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development. 1972. Pp. 83. $1.00.

GUTWIRTH, MADELYN, et al. (eds.). Sources et reflets de l'histoire de France. New York: Oxford University Press. 1972. Pp. x, 405. $4.95.

HUTT, MAURICE (ed.). Napoleon. Great Lives Observed. Englewood Cliffs, N. J.: Prentice-Hall. 1972. Pp. ix, 180. Cloth $5.95, paper $2.45.

KRIEGER, ANNIE. The French Communists: Profile of a People. Tr. by ELAINE P. HALPERIN. Foreword by ARISTIDE R. ZOLBERG. Chicago: University of Chicago Press. 1972. Pp. xxiv, 408. $12.50. See rev. of French ed. (1968), AHR, 75 (1969-70): 862.

LIVERSIDGE, DOUGLAS. The Day the Bastille Fell, July 14, 1789: The Beginning of the End of the French Monarchy. World Focus Book. New York: Franklin Watts. 1972. Pp. 88. $3.95. Grades 7 up.

PALMADE, GUY P. French Capitalism in the Nineteenth Century. Tr., with an introd., by GRAEME M. HOLMES. New York: Barnes and Noble. 1972. Pp. 256. $12.00. See rev. of French ed. (1961), AHR, 67 (1961-62): 1101.

Recueil des actes du Comité de salut public, avec la correspondance officielle des représentants en mission et le registre du Conseil Exécutif provisoire. Supplément, vol. 2 (16 août 1793-25 ventôse an II [15 mars 1794]). Prepared by the Institut d'Histoire de la Révolution française, under the direction of Marc Bouloiseau. Collection of documents inédits sur l'histoire de France. Comité des Travaux historiques et scientifiques, Section d'Histoire moderne et contemporaine. Paris: Bibliothèque Nationale. 1971. Pp. 542.

SCHULKIND, EUGENE. The Paris Commune of 1871. General Ser. No. 78. [London:] Historical Association. 1971. Pp. 38. 25p.

SPOONER, FRANK C. The International Economy and Monetary Movements in France, 1493-1725. Harvard Economic Studies, vol. 138. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press. 1972. Pp. vii, 354. $17.50. See rev. of French ed. (1956), AHR, 63 (1957-58): 483.

THE LOW COUNTRIES

COHN, ANGELO. The First Book of the Netherlands. Rev. ed.; New York: Franklin Watts. 1971. Pp. 80. $3.75. Grades 4 up.

MARIËN, FABIENNE. Table chronologique des chartes et diplômes imprimés concernant l'histoire de la Belgique. Vol. 11, pts. 3 and 4, Corrections et tables. Brussels: Académie royale de Belgique, Commission royale d'Histoire. 1971. Pp. x, 208.

MEULENBROEK, B. L. (ed.). Briefwisseling van Hugo Grotius. Vol. 8, 1637. Rijks Geschiedkundige Publicatiën, Major Ser., No. 136. The Hague: Martinus Nijhoff. 1971. Pp. xi, 922.

Netherlands. OECD Economic Surveys. [Washington:] Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development. 1971. Pp. 75. $1.00.

GERMANY, AUSTRIA, AND SWITZERLAND

BLANNING, T. C. W. Joseph II and Enlightened Despotism. Seminar Studies in History. New York: Harper and Row. 1970. Pp. vii, 168. $2.95.

BOYERS, ROBERT (ed.). The Legacy of the German Refugee Intellectuals. New York: Schocken Books. 1972. Pp. 306. $10.00. (Reprint of the Fall 1969-Winter 1970 issue of Salmagundi.)

BRAMSTED, ERNEST K. Germany. The Modern Nations in Historical Perspective. Englewood Cliffs, N. J.: Prentice-Hall, 1972. Pp. x, 278. $6.95.

EKKEHARD VON KNORRING. Die Berechnung makroökonomischer Konsumfunktionen für Deutschland, 1851-1913. Schriften zur angewandten Wirtschaftsforschung, No. 29. Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr (Paul Siebeck). 1970. Pp. xii, 154, 19 tables. DM 32.

EYLL, KLARA VAN. Die Kupfermeister im Stolberger Tal: Zur wirtschaftlichen Aktivität einer religiösen Minderheit. Kölner Vorträge zur Sozial- und Wirtschaftsgeschichte, 17. Cologne: Forschungsinstitut für Sozial- und Wirtschaftsgeschichte an der Universität zu Köln. 1971. Pp. 24.

GAY, PETER. The Berlin-Jewish Spirit: A Dogma in Search of Some Doubts. The Leo Baeck Memorial Lecture, 15. New York: Leo Baeck Institute. 1972. Pp. 19. $1.00.

HOLBORN, HAJO (ed. and with an introd.). Republic to Reich: The Making of the Nazi Revolution. Ten Essays. Tr. from the German by RALPH MANHEIM. New York: Pantheon Books. 1972. Pp. xx, 491. $12.95.

KIRCHNER, HUBERT. Luther and the Peasants' War. Tr. by DARRELL JODOCK. Facet Books. Historical Ser., 22 (Reformation). Philadelphia: Fortress Press. 1972. Pp. vii, 40. $1.00.

MCKENZIE, JOHN R. P. Weimar Germany, 1918-1933. Blandford History Ser. Totowa, N. J.: Rowman and Littlefield. 1971. Pp. ix, 269. $9.50.

Switzerland. OECD Economic Surveys. [Washington:] Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development. 1972. Pp. 78. $1.00.

ITALY

CAMERANI, SERGIO (ed.). Carteggi di Bettino Ricasoli. Vol. 25 (1 gennaio 1867-11 aprile 1867). Fonti per la storia d'Italia. Rome: Istituto Storico Italiano per l'Età Moderna e Contemporanea. 1971. Pp. 556. L. 5,500.

CATONI, GIULIANO (ed.). Archivi del governo francese nel dipartimento dell'Ombone: Inventario. Ministero dell'Interno, Pubblicazioni degli archivi di stato, 76. Archivio di stato di Siena. Rome: the Ministero. 1971. Pp. 227. L. 1,500.

CATONI, GIULIANO, and FINESCHI, SONIA (eds.). L'archivio arcivescovile di Siena: Inventario. Ministero dell'Interno, Pubblicazioni degli archivi di stato, 70. Rome: the Ministero. 1970. Pp. xxvii, 400. L. 6,000.

FAEL, VITTORIO (ed.). Più secoli di storia dell'Accademia di Scienze, Lettere e Arti di Udine (1606-1969). Udine: Arti Grafiche Friulane. 1970. Pp. 564.

FILANGIERI, RICCARDO. Scritti di paleografia e diplomatica, di archivistica e di erudizione. Ministero dell'Interno, Pubblicazioni degli archivi di stato, 69. Rome: the Ministero. 1970. Pp. xxvii, 457. L. 5,000.

FIRPO, LUIGI (ed.). Bibliografia degli scritti di Luigi Einaudi (dal 1893 al 1970). Turin: Fondazione Luigi Einaudi. 1971. Pp. 909. L. 18,000.

GUËZE, RAOUL, and PAPA, ANTONIO (eds.). Gli archivi del IV corpo d'esercito e di Roma capitale: Inventario. Ministero dell'Interno, Pubblicazioni degli archivi di stato, 71. Archivio centrale dello stato. Rome: the Ministero. 1970. Pp. xxiv, 277. L. 1,700.

HAINES, CHARLES. Florence: City of the Renaissance. First Book. New York: Franklin Watts. 1972. Pp. 89. $3.75. Grades 5-9.

NICOLINI, FAUSTO. Scritti di archivistica e di ricerca storica. Ed. by BENEDETTO NICOLINI. Ministero dell'Interno, Pubblicazioni degli archivi di stato, 75. Rome: the Ministero. 1971. Pp. xix, 391. L. 3,000.

EASTERN EUROPE

CIHODARU, C., et al. (eds.). Documenta Romaniae Historica. Ser. A, Moldova. Vol. 21 (1632-1633). Academia de Ştiinţe Sociale şi Politice a Republicii Socialiste România, Institutul de Istorie şi Arheologie "A. D. Xenopol" Iaşi. Bucharest: Editura Academiei Republicii Socialiste România. 1971. Pp. lxxv, 734. Lei 39.

CONSTANTINESCU, MIRON, et al. Études d'histoire contemporaine de la Roumanie. Vols. 1 and 2. (Bibliotheca Historica Romaniae, Nos. 29 and 38. Bucharest: Éditions de l'Académie de la République Socialiste de Roumanie. 1970; 1971. Pp. 168; 213. Lei 7; Lei 8.50.

LIEHM, ANTONÍN J. The Politics of Culture. Tr. by PETER KUSI. With "The Socialism That Came In from the Cold," by JEAN-PAUL SARTRE, tr. by HELEN R. LANE. New York: Grove Press; distrib. by Random House, New York. [1972.] Pp. 412. $10.00.

MARCINIAK, RYSZARD, et al. (comps.). Katalog rękopisów staropolskich Biblioteki Kórnickiej XVI-XVIII W. [Catalog of the Manuscript Codices of the 16th-18th Century in the Kornik Library]. Vol. 1. Polska Akademia Nauk, Biblioteka Kórnicka. Wrocław: Zakład Narodowy Imienia Ossolińskich Wydawnictwo Polskiej Akademii Nauk. 1971. Pp. xi, 604. Zł. 130.

SZEPLAKI, JOSEPH. "The Nation's Guest": Bibliography on Louis Kossuth, Governor of Hungary, with Special Reference to His Trip in the United States,

December 4, 1851-July 14, 1852. Available in the Ohio University Library, Athens, Ohio. 1972. Pp. 57.

WARREN, RUTH. The First Book of Modern Greece. Rev. ed.; New York: Franklin Watts. 1972. Pp. 81. $3.75. Grades 6-9.

SOVIET UNION

BLANC, ANDRÉ, and CHAMBRE, HENRI. L'U.R.S.S. Magellan: La géographie et ses problèmes, 18. Paris: Presses Universitaires de France. 1971. Pp. 286. 29 fr.

BOYD, ROBERT S. The Decline—But Not Yet the Fall—of the Russian Empire. The Lewis Cass Lectures. [Detroit: Detroit Historical Society Guild.] n.d. Pp. 24.

HARRISON, JOHN A. The Founding of the Russian Empire in Asia and America. Coral Gables, Fla.: University of Miami Press. 1971. Pp. 156. $7.95.

HEALD, EDWARD T. Witness to Revolution: Letters from Russia, 1916-1919. Ed. by JAMES B. GIDNEY. [Kent:] Kent State University Press. 1972. Pp. xx, 367. $10.00.

PIDHAINY, OLEH SEMENOVYCH, and PIDHAINY, OLEXANDRA IVANIVNA. The Ukrainian Republic in the Great East-European Revolution: A Bibliography. Vol. 5. Preface by M. MLADENOVIC. Toronto: New Review Books. 1971. Pp. xv, 376. $22.50.

PLATONOV, S. F. Moscow and the West. Tr. and ed. by JOSEPH L. WIECZYNSKI. Introd. by SERGE A. ZENKOVSKY. Russian Ser., vol. 9. [Hattiesburg, Miss.:] Academic International. 1972. Pp. xx, 171.

RAEFF, MARC (ed.). Catherine the Great: A Profile. World Profiles. New York: Hill and Wang. 1972. Pp. xiii, 331. Cloth $6.50, paper $2.45.

SETON-WATSON, HUGH. The New Imperialism: A Background Book. 2d ed.; Totowa, N. J.: Rowman and Littlefield. 1971. Pp. 144. $4.50.

SNYDER, LOUIS L. The First Book of the Soviet Union. A First Book. Rev. ed.; New York: Franklin Watts. 1972. Pp. 84. $3.75. Grades 6-9.

WALTER, GÉRARD. La Révolution russe. Le mémorial des siècles: Les événements, vingtième siècle. Paris: Albin Michel. 1972. Pp. 622. Cloth 49 fr., paper 39 fr.

NEAR EAST

GRUNEBaum, G. E. VON (ed.). Der Islam. Vol. 2, Die islamischen Reiche nach dem Fall von Konstantinopel. Fischer Weltgeschichte, No. 15. [Frankfurt am Main:] Fischer Taschenbuch Verlag. 1971. Pp. 486. DM 6.80.

HAWLEY, DONALD. The Trucial States. New York: Humanities Press. 1970. Pp. 379. $13.00.

LENGYEL, EMIL. Iran. A First Book. New York: Franklin Watts. 1972. Pp. 85. $3.75. Grades 6-9.

RUBIN, JACOB A. True/False about Israel. New York: Herzl Press for the American Zionist Federation. 1972. Pp. 147. $2.50.

SHIMONI, YAACOV, and LEVINE, EVYATAR (eds.). Political Dictionary of the Middle East in the 20th Century. [Jerusalem:] Jerusalem Publishing House; distrib. by the Library Services Division of the New York Times. 1972. Pp. 434. $13.75.

AFRICA

ADE AJAYI, J. F., and SMITH, ROBERT. Yoruba Warfare in the Nineteenth Century. 2d ed.; New York: Cambridge University Press, in association with the Institute of African Studies, University of Ibadan. 1971. Pp. xi, 172. $11.95. See rev. of 1st ed. (1964), AHR, 70 (1964-65): 1215.

Africa Independent: A Survey of Political Developments. Keesing's Research Report, No. 6. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. 1972. Pp. ix, 317. Cloth $10.00, paper $3.95.

BRUNSCHWIG, HENRI. Le partage de l'Afrique Noire. Questions d'histoire. [Paris:] Flammarion. 1971. Pp. 186.

GAILEY, HARRY A., JR. History of Africa: From 1800 to the Present. New York: Holt, Rinehart and Winston. 1972. Pp. xvii, 453.

HULL, RICHARD W. Munyakare: African Civilization before the Batauere. New York: John Wiley and Sons. 1972. Pp. x, 232.

KARIS, THOMAS, and CARTER, GWENDOLYN M. (eds.). From Protest to Challenge: A Documentary History of African Politics in South Africa, 1882-1964. Vol. 1, Protest and Hope, 1882-1934, by SHERIDAN JOHNS, III. Hoover Institution Publications 89. Stanford: Hoover Institution Press, Stanford University. 1972. Pp. xxi, 378. $14.50.

LA GUMA, ALEX (ed.). Apartheid: A Collection of Writings on South African Racism by South Africans. New York: International Publishers. 1971. Pp. 245. $1.65.

MCKOWN, ROBIN. The Colonial Conquest of Africa. First Book. New York: Franklin Watts. 1971. Pp. 88. $3.75. Grades 4-6.

NACHTIGAL, GUSTAV. Sahara and Sudan. Vol. 4, Wadai and Darfur. Tr. from the original German with new introd. and notes by ALLAN G. B. FISHER and HUMPHREY J. FISHER, with REX S. O'FAHEY. Berkeley and Los Angeles: University of California Press. 1971. Pp. xxi, 439. $22.50.

OLE SANKAN, S. S. The Maasai. Nairobi: East African Literature Bureau; distrib. by Rowman and Littlefield, Totowa, N. J. [1972.] Pp. xxxiii, 101. $3.50.

TURIN, YVONNE. Affrontements culturels dans l'Algérie coloniale: Écoles, médecines, religion, 1830-1880. "Textes à l'appui." Paris: François Maspero. 1971. Pp. 434.

ASIA

BANERJEE, A. C. (ed.). Fort William-India House Correspondence and Other Contemporary Papers Relating Thereto. (Military Ser.). Vol. 20: 1792-1796. Indian Records Ser. Delhi: Manager of Publications, Government of India, for the National Archives of India. 1969. Pp. 1, 686. $10.80.

BRANDT, VINCENT S. R. A Korean Village: Between Farm and Sea. Harvard East Asian Ser. 65. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press. 1971. Pp. 252. $8.95.

CH'EN, JEROME. Yuan Shih-k'ai. 2d ed.; Stanford: Stanford University Press. 1972. Pp. 258. $8.95. See rev. of 1st ed. (1961), AHR, 67 (1961-62): 792.

CRAWFURD, JOHN. A Descriptive Dictionary of the Indian Islands & Adjacent Countries. With an introd. by M. C. RICKLEFS. Oxford in Asia Historical Reprints. New York: Oxford University Press. 1971. Pp. vii, 459. $19.00.

EMMERSON, JOHN K. Arms, Yen & Power: The Japanese Dilemma. Foreword by EDWIN O. REISCHAUER. New York: Dunellen. 1971. Pp. xiv, 420. $15.00.

GORDON, LEONARD H. D., and SHULMAN, FRANK J. (comps. and eds.). Doctoral Dissertations on China: A Bibliography of Studies in Western Languages, 1945-1970. Association for Asian Studies, Reference Ser., No. 1. Seattle: University of Washington Press for the Association. 1972. Pp. xviii, 317. Cloth $12.50, paper $3.95.

HERSH, SEYMOUR M. Cover-Up: The Army's Secret Investigation of the Massacre at My Lai 4. New York: Random House. 1972. Pp. xii, 305. $6.95.

JAMES, HAROLD, and SHEIL-SMALL, DENIS. The Undeclared War: The Story of the Indonesian Confrontation, 1962-1966. Totowa, N. J.: Rowman and Littlefield. 1971. Pp. xviii, 201. $9.50.

JHA, MANORANJAN. Katherine Mayo and India. Bombay: People's Publishing House; distrib. by South Asia Books, Columbia, Mo. 1971. Pp. xii, 128. $4.25.

UNITED STATES

ABRAHAM, HENRY J. Freedom and the Court: Civil Rights and Liberties in the United States. 2d ed.; New York: Oxford University Press. 1972. Pp. xii, 397. $12.50.

ALBRIGHT, JOSEPH. What Makes Spiro Run: The Life and Times of Spiro Agnew. New York: Dodd, Mead. 1972. Pp. xiii, 295. $6.95.

ALLYN, PAUL. The Picture Life of Herman Badillo. New York: Franklin Watts. 1972. Pp. 48. $3.50. Grades K-3.

AMBROSE, STEPHEN E., and BARBER, JAMES A., JR. (eds.). The Military and American Society: Essays & Readings. New York: Free Press. 1972. Pp. xi, 322. $10.00.

BARRY, JAMES P. Bloody Kansas, 1854-65: Guerrilla Warfare Delays Peaceful American Settlement. A Focus Book. New York: Franklin Watts. 1972. Pp. 86. $3.95. Grades 7 up.

BARRY, JAMES P. The Noble Experiment 1919-23: The Eighteenth Amendment Prohibits Liquor in America. Focus Book. New York: Franklin Watts. 1972. Pp. 85. $3.95. Grades 7 up.

- BARRY, LOUISE. The Beginning of the West: Annals of the Kansas Gateway to the American West, 1540-1854. Topeka: Kansas State Historical Society. 1972. Pp. viii, 1295. $14.75.
- BASLER, ROY P. (comp.). Lincoln's Gettysburg Address in Translation. Washington: Library of Congress. 1972. Pp. not numbered. $1.25.
- BEDFORD, HENRY F., and COLBOURN, TREVOR. The Americans: A Brief History. New York: Harcourt Brace Jovanovich. 1972. Pp. xii, 556. $6.50.
- BENNETT, LERONE, JR. The Challenge of Blackness. Chicago: Johnson Publishing Co. 1972. Pp. 312. $6.95.
- BLISS, HOWARD, and JOHNSON, M. GLEN (ed. with commentary). Consensus at the Crossroads: Dialogues in American Foreign Policy. New York: Dodd, Mead. 1972. Pp. x, 326. $4.95.
- BORDEN, MORTEN (ed.). Voices of the American Past: Readings in American History. Lexington, Mass.: D. C. Heath. 1972. Pp. 372.
- BORDEN, MORTON, and BORDEN, PENN (eds.). The American Tory. Great Lives Observed. Englewood Cliffs, N. J.: Prentice-Hall. 1972. Pp. xii, 141. Cloth $5.95, paper $2.45.
- BRACEY, JOHN H., JR., et al. (eds.). The Afro-Americans: Selected Documents. Boston: Allyn and Bacon. 1972. Pp. xii, 751. $6.25.
- BRAIDER, DONALD. The Niagara. Rivers of America. New York: Holt, Rinehart and Winston. 1972. Pp. xvii, 294. $8.95.
- BRIEGER, GERT H. (ed.). Medical America in the Nineteenth Century: Readings from the Literature. Baltimore: Johns Hopkins Press. 1972. Pp. x, 338. $12.50.
- BRODER, DAVID S. The Party's Over: The Failure of Politics in America. New York: Harper and Row. 1972. Pp. xxv, 280. $7.95.
- BROOKS, PAUL. The House of Life: Rachel Carson at Work. With selections from her writings, published and unpublished. Boston: Houghton Mifflin. 1972. Pp. xvi, 350. $8.95.
- BUCK, POLLY STONE. Adopted Son of Salem: Dominick Lake Marsins, 1827-1859. Peterborough, N. H.: William L. Bauhan. 1971. Pp. xii, 124. $5.95.
- BURNS, JAMES MACGREGOR. Uncommon Sense. New York: Harper and Row. 1972. Pp. xi, 196. $6.95.
- BUTCHER, MARGARET JUST. The Negro in American Culture. Based on materials left by ALAIN LOCKE. 2d ed.; New York: Alfred A. Knopf. 1972. Pp. x, 313, xiv. $7.95.
- CARLSON, LEWIS H., and COLBURN, GEORGE A. In Their Place: White America Defines Her Minorities, 1850-1950. Introd. by GEORGE MCGOVERN. New York: John Wiley and Sons. 1972. Pp. xx, 353. Cloth $8.95, paper $4.95.
- CARTER, HARVEY L. Far Western Frontiers. AHA Pamphlets 222. Washington: American Historical Association. 1972. Pp. 64. $1.00.
- CHAMBERS, WILLIAM NISBET (ed.). The First Party System: Federalists and Republicans. Problems in American History. New York: John Wiley and Sons. 1972. Pp. 201. Cloth $6.95, paper $3.50.
- COHEN, HENNIG (ed. and with a preface). Articles in American Studies, 1954-1968: A Cumulation of the Annual Bibliographies from American Quarterly. In 2 vols. Cumulated Bibliography Ser., No. 2. Ann Arbor: Pierian Press. 1972. Pp. x, 446; x, 447-898. $24.00 the set.
- COMBS, JERALD A. Nationalist, Realist, and Radical: Three Views of American Diplomacy. New York: Harper and Row. 1972. Pp. xi, 526. $4.95.
- COX, EDWARD FRANKLIN. State and National Voting in Federal Elections, 1910-1970. [Hamden, Conn.:] Archon Books. 1972. Pp. xv, 280. $15.00.
- CROW, HERMAN L., and TURNBULL, WILLIAM L. American History: A Problems Approach. Vol. 2, From 1865. New York: Holt, Rinehart and Winston. 1972. Pp. xi, 500.
- CURRY, RICHARD O., and COWDEN, JOANNA DUNLAP. Slavery in America: Theodore Weld's American Slavery as It Is. Primary Sources in American History. Itasca, Ill.: F. E. Peacock. 1972. Pp. xxv, 248. Cloth $6.00, paper $3.50.
- DANIELS, ROGER, and OLIN, SPENCER C., JR. Racism in California: A Reader in the History of Oppression. New York: Macmillan. 1972. Pp. xii, 345. $3.95.
- DAVID, ALLEN F., and WOODMAN, HAROLD D. (eds. with introds.). Conflict and Consensus in Early American History. 3d ed.; Lexington, Mass.: D. C. Heath. 1972. Pp. xxvi, 492.
- DAVIS, ALLEN F., and WOODMAN, HAROLD D. (eds. with introds.). Conflict and Consensus in Modern American History. 3d ed.; Lexington, Mass.: D. C. Heath. 1972. Pp. xxiv, 562.
- DAVID, JAY (ed.). The American Indian: The First Victim. New York: William Morrow. 1972. Pp. 192. Cloth $6.95, paper $2.25.
- DICKINSON, DONALD C. A Bio-bibliography of Langston Hughes, 1902-1967. With a preface by ARNA BONTemps. 2d rev. ed.; [Hamden, Conn.:] Archon Books. 1972. Pp. xiii, 273. $12.50.
- EDWARDS, CHARLES THOMAS. A Blue Ridge Mountain Boy. New York: Exposition Press. 1972. Pp. 61. $3.50.
- EDWARDS, JONATHAN. The Great Awakening: A Faithful Narrative; The Distinguishing Marks; Some Thoughts Concerning the Revival; Letters Relating to the Revival; Preface to True Religion by JOSEPH BELLAMY. Ed. by C. C. GOEN. The Works of Jonathan Edwards, vol. 4. New Haven: Yale University Press. 1972. Pp. ix, 595. $18.50.
- ELAZAR, DANIEL J. The Politics of Belleville: A Profile of the Civil Community. Philadelphia: Temple University Press. 1971. Pp. ix, 165. $8.50.
- Emerson, Ralph Waldo. The Collected Works of. Vol. 1, Nature, Addresses, and Lectures. Introds. and notes by ROBERT E. SPILLER. Text established by ALFRED R. FERGUSON. Center for Editions of American Authors, Modern Language Association of America. Cambridge, Mass.: Belknap Press of Harvard University Press. 1971. Pp. xxxviii, 333. $15.00.

ENGLEMAN, ROSE C. (ed.). A Decade of Progress: The United States Army Medical Department, 1959-1969. Historical United, United States Army Medical Department. Washington: Office of the Surgeon General, Department of the Army. 1971. Pp. xvii, 214. $2.25.

The Face of Courage: The Indian Photographs of Frank A. Rinehart. Introd. by ROYAL SUTTON. [Fort Collins, Colo.:] Old Army Press. 1972. Pp. not numbered.

FEIN, LEONARD J. The Ecology of the Public Schools: An Inquiry into Community Control. Pegasus Ser. on Decentralization and the Urban Crisis, vol. 2. New York: Pegasus. 1971. Pp. vii, 170. $6.00.

FELLOWS, MYRTIE. Maple-Sugaring: The Way We Do It. A Family Album. With further comment from FLOYD FELLOWS. Brattleboro, Vt.: Stephen Greene Press. 1972. Pp. 48. $2.95.

FERRIS, ROBERT G. (ser. ed.). Soldier and Brave: Historic Places Associated with Indian Affairs and the Indian Wars in the Trans-Mississippi West. The National Survey of Historic Sites and Buildings, Vol. 12. 2d ed.; Washington: United States Department of the Interior, National Park Service. 1971. Pp. xvi, 453. $4.00.

FOGARTY, ROBERT S. American Utopianism. Primary Sources in American History. Itasca, Ill.: F. E. Peacock. 1972. Pp. xi, 175. Cloth $5.00, paper $2.95.

FONER, PHILIP S. (ed., and with commentary). The Voice of Black America: Major Speeches by Negroes in the United States, 1797-1971. New York: Simon and Schuster. 1972. Pp. xv, 1215. Cloth $19.95, paper $5.95.

FOSTER, GENEVIEVE W., et al. Child Care Work with Emotionally Disturbed Children. Contemporary Community Health Ser. [Pittsburgh:] University of Pittsburgh Press. 1972. Pp. xx, 271. $8.50.

FOULKE, ROY A. (comp.). Foulke Family: One Branch Descended from James Ffookes, Who Was Already Settled in Accomack County, Virginia, by the Year 1663. Bronxville, N. Y.: [the Author.] 1972. Pp. xviii, 205.

FREIDEL, FRANK, et al. (eds.). Builders of American Institutions: Readings in United States History. Vol. 1, Seventeenth Century through Reconstruction; Vol. 2, Reconstruction to the Present. Rand McNally History Ser. 2d ed.; Chicago: Rand McNally. 1972. Pp. 359; 350. $4.50 each.

FREIMARCK, VINCENT, and ROSENTHAL, BERNARD (eds.). Race and the American Romantics. Sourcebooks in Negro History. New York: Schocken Books. 1971. Pp. xi, 328. $12.50.

GATELL, FRANK OTTO, et al. (eds.). The Growth of American Politics: A Modern Reader. Vol. 1, Through Reconstruction; vol. 2, Since the Civil War. New York: Oxford University Press. 1972. Pp. xvi, 544; xvi, 569. Cloth $12.50 each, paper $3.95 each.

GATELL, FRANK OTTO, and GOODMAN, PAUL. Democracy and Union: The United States, 1815-1877. New York: Holt, Rinehart and Winston. 1972. Pp. vii, 198.

GLASRUDE, BRUCE A., and SMITH, ALAN M. Promises to Keep: A Portrayal of Nonwhites in the United States. Chicago: Rand McNally. 1972. Pp. ix, 398. $4.00.

GRAY, FRANCINE DU PLESSIX. Hawaii: The Sugar-Coated Fortress. New York: Random House. 1972. Pp. xiii, 146. $5.95.

GUNTER, PETE. The Big Thicket: A Challenge for Conservation. Austin: Jenkins Publishing Co.; Riverside, Conn.: Chatham Press; distrib. by Viking Press, New York. 1971. Pp. xvii, 172. $12.50.

HAGAN, WILLIAM T. The Indian in American History. AHA Pamphlets 240. Washington: American Historical Association. 1971. Pp. 34. $1.00.

HAKLUYT, RICHARD. Hakluyt's Voyages to the New World: A Selection. Ed. by DAVID FREEMAN HAWKE. American History Landmarks. Indianapolis: Bobbs-Merrill. 1972. Pp. xx, 201.

HOFSTADTER, RICHARD, et al. The United States. 3d ed.; Englewood Cliffs, N. J.: Prentice-Hall. 1972. Pp. xvi, 879, xvi(a)-lxiii. Cloth $10.95, paper, 2 vols., $5.95 each.

HOOVER, DWIGHT W., and VANDER HILL, C. WARREN (eds.). American Society in the Twentieth Century: Selected Readings. New York: John Wiley and Sons. 1972. Pp. xiv, 247. Cloth $9.95, paper $4.95.

HURST, CHARLES G., JR. Passport to Freedom: Education, Humanism, & Malcolm X. Hamden, Conn.: Linnet Books. 1972. Pp. 242. $7.95.

JAMES, THEODORE, JR. Fifth Avenue. New York: Walker and Co. 1971. Pp. 310. $25.00.

KAPLAN, LAWRENCE S. Recent American Foreign Policy: Conflicting Interpretations. The Dorsey Ser. in American History. Rev. ed.; Homewood, Ill.: Dorsey Press. 1972. Pp. xiv, 368. $4.95.

KAUFFMAN, HENRY J. American Axes: A Survey of Their Development and Their Makers. Brattleboro, Vt.: Stephen Greene Press. 1972. Pp. 151. $12.50.

KENNEALLY, FINBAR, O.F.M. (ed.). United States Documents in the Propaganda Fide Archives: A Calendar. 1st ser., vol. 3. Washington: Academy of American Franciscan History. 1971. Pp. 403. $20.00.

KNAPP, PAUL. The Berengaria Exchange. New York: Dial Press. 1972. Pp. 239. $5.95.

Knight, Madam, The Journal of. Including an introd. note by MALCOLM FREIBERG. Reprint; Boston: David R. Godine. 1972. Pp. 39. $10.00.

KRISTOL, IRVING. On the Democratic Idea in America. New York: Harper and Row. 1972. Pp. ix, 149. $5.00.

KURTZ, STEPHEN G. (ed.). The Federalists—Creators and Critics of the Union, 1780-1801. Problems in American History. New York: John Wiley and Sons. 1972. Pp. 212. Cloth $6.95, paper $3.50.

- LACY, DAN. The Lost Colony. First Book. New York: Franklin Watts. 1972. Pp. 87. $3.75. Grades 4 up.
- LATHAM, FRANK B. FDR and the Supreme Court Fight, 1937: A President Tries to Reorganize the Federal Judiciary. A Focus Book. New York: Franklin Watts. 1972. Pp. 84. $3.95. Grades 7 up.
- LEMAY, J. A. LEO. A Calendar of American Poetry in the Colonial Newspapers and Magazines and in the Major English Magazines through 1765. Worcester, Mass.: American Antiquarian Society; distrib. by Barre Publishers, Barre, Mass. 1972. Pp. xxxi, 353.
- LENER, GERDA (ed.). Black Women in White America: A Documentary History. New York: Pantheon Books. 1972. Pp. xxxvi, 630. $12.95.
- LEWIS, FAYE C. Nothing to Make a Shadow. Ames: Iowa State University Press. 1971. Pp. viii, 155.
- LOGAN, RAYFORD W., and WINSTON, MICHAEL R. The Negro in the United States. Vol. 2, The Ordeal of Democracy. Anvil Original. New York: Van Nostrand Reinhold. 1971. Pp. x, 202. $3.50.
- LOWE, JEANNE R. The Near Side of Federalism: Improving State and Local Government. New York: Ford Foundation. 1972. Pp. 47.
- MCCARTHY, MAX. Elections for Sale. Boston: Houghton Mifflin. 1972. Pp. xvi, 205. $5.95.
- MAHER, JOHN E. Ideas about Taxes. New York: Franklin Watts. 1972. Pp. 31. $3.75. Grades 1-3.
- MALONE, EDWARD E., O.S.B. Conception: A History of the First Century of the Conception Colony, 1858-1958; A History of the First Century of Conception Abbey, 1873-1973; A History of New Engelberg College, Conception College, and the Immaculate Conception Seminary, 1886-1971. Benedictine Studies. Omaha: Interstate Printing Co.; distrib. by Michaelen Press, Elkhorn, Nebr. 1971. Pp. 223. $8.50.
- MANNERS, ANDE. Poor Cousins. New York: Coward, McCann and Geoghegan. 1972. Pp. 318. $8.95.
- MARCUS, JACOB R. (ed.). An Index to Scientific Articles on American Jewish History. Publications of the American Jewish Archives, No. 7. New York: Ktav Publishing House. 1971. Pp. 240. $17.50.
- [MARIAS, JULIÁN.] America in the Fifties and Sixties: Julián Marias on the United States. Tr. from the Spanish by BLANCHE DE PUY and HAROLD C. RALEY. Ed. and with an introd. by MICHAEL AARON ROCKLAND. University Park: Pennsylvania State University Press. 1972. Pp. ix, 444. $12.50.
- MARTY, MYRON A., and FINKELSTON, H. THEODORE. Retracing Our Steps: Studies in Documents from the American Past. Vol. 1. San Francisco: Canfield Press. 1972. Pp. xii, 403. $4.95.
- MATHEWS, DONALD G. (ed.). Agitation for Freedom: The Abolitionist Movement. Problems in American History. New York: John Wiley and Sons. 1972. Pp. 193. Cloth $6.95, paper $3.50.
- MAZLISH, BRUCE. In Search of Nixon: A Psychohistorical Inquiry. New York: Basic Books. 1972. Pp. x, 187. $6.95.
- MEAD, HOWARD, et al. Portrait of the Past: A Photographic Journey through Wisconsin. Madison: Wisconsin Tales and Trails. 1971. Pp. 176. $12.50.
- MEISTER, RICHARD J. (ed. and with an introd.). The Black Ghetto: Promised Land or Colony? Problems in American Civilization. Lexington, Mass.: D. C. Heath. 1972. Pp. xvi, 219.
- MERK, FRÉDÉRIC. Economic History of Wisconsin during the Civil War Decade. 2d ed.; Madison: State Historical Society of Wisconsin. 1971. Pp. 414. $10.00. See rev. of 1st ed. (1916), AHR, 23 (1917-18): 421.
- MILLER, DOUGLAS T. (ed.). The Nature of Jacksonian America. Problems in American History. New York: John Wiley and Sons. 1972. Pp. 152. Cloth $6.95, paper $3.50.
- MILLER, JOHN C. The Emergence of the Nation, 1783-1815. The Scott, Foresman American History Ser. Glenview, Ill.: Scott, Foresman. 1972. Pp. 190.
- MILLS, GEORGE. Rogues and Heroes from Iowa's Amazing Past. [Ames:] Iowa State University Press. 1972. Pp. xii, 252. $5.95.
- NASH, GERALD D. (ed.). Issues in American Economic History: Selected Readings. 2d ed.; Lexington, Mass.: D. C. Heath. 1972. Pp. xii, 591.
- NEUSNER, JACOB. American Judaism: Adventure in Modernity. Englewood Cliffs, N. J.: Prentice-Hall. 1972. Pp. xv, 170. Cloth $10.00, paper $5.95.
- O'CONNOR, THOMAS H. The Disunited States: The Era of Civil War and Reconstruction. New York: Dodd, Mead. 1972. Pp. xi, 272. $3.95.
- OKADA, YASUO. Public Lands and Pioneer Farmers: Gage County, Nebraska, 1850-1900. Tokyo: Keio Economic Society, Keio University. 1971. Pp. ii, 188.
- O'NEILL, WILLIAM L. (ed. with an introd.). Women at Work. Including The Long Day: The Story of a New York Working Girl, by DOROTHY RICHARDSON, & Inside the New York Telephone Company, by ELINOR LANGER. Chicago: Quadrangle Books. 1972. Pp. xix, 360. $10.00.
- ORTH, RALPH H., and FERGUSON, ALFRED R. (eds.). The Journals and Miscellaneous Notebooks of Ralph Waldo Emerson. Vol. 9, 1843-1847. Center for Editions of American Authors, Modern Language Association of America. Cambridge, Mass.: Belknap Press of Harvard University Press. 1971. Pp. xxiii, 500. $17.00.
- OSTRANDER, GILMAN M. A Profile History of the United States. 2d ed.; New York: McGraw-Hill. 1972. Pp. vii, 375. $5.50.
- PAHL, THOMAS L. The Minnesota Republican Neighbor-to-Neighbor Drive: Successful Small Gift Solicitation. Study No. 19. Princeton: Citizens' Research Foundation. [1971.] Pp. 28. $1.00.
- PARTON, MARY FIELD (ed.). The Autobiography of Mother Jones. Foreword by CLARENCE DARROW. Introd. and bibliography by FRED THOMPSON. Chicago: Charles H. Kerr for the Illinois Labor History Society. 1972. Pp. xxiii, 242. Cloth $7.50, paper $2.95.

- PETERS, CHARLES, and BRANCH, TAYLOR. Blowing the Whistle: Dissent in the Public Interest. New York: Praeger. 1972. Pp. xii, 305. Cloth $8.95, paper $3.95.
- PORTER, KENNETH WIGGINS. The Negro on the American Frontier. With a preface by WILLIAM LOREN KATZ. The American Negro: His History and Literature. An Arno Press/New York Times Collection. New York: Arno Press and the New York Times. 1971. Pp. xvi, 529. $15.00.
- RAMIREZ, NORA. The Southwestern International Livestock Show and Rodeo. Southwestern Studies, Monograph No. 32. El Paso: Texas Western Press, University of Texas. 1972. Pp. 40. $2.00.
- RASMUSSEN, JOHN P. (ed.). The New American Revolution: The Dawning of the Technetronic Era. New York: John Wiley and Sons. 1972. Pp. viii, 250. Cloth $8.95, paper $4.95.
- RATNER, LORMAN. Dialogue in American History. New York: Holt, Rinehart and Winston. 1972. Pp. xiv, 224.
- RAY, GRACE ERNESTINE. Wily Women of the West. San Antonio: Naylor. 1972. Pp. xviii, 158. $5.95.
- Report for Action: An Investigation into the Causes and Events of the 1967 Newark Race Riots*. State of New Jersey, Governor's Select Commission on Civil Disorder. New York: Lemma Publishing Corp. 1972. Pp. xii, 201. $15.00.
- RICH, LOUISE DICKINSON. King Philip's War, 1675-76: The New England Indians Fight the Colonists. Focus Book. New York: Franklin Watts. 1972. Pp. 64. $3.95. Grades 7 up.
- ROCKWELL, ANNE. Paintbrush & Peacepipe: The Story of George Catlin. New York: Atheneum. 1971. Pp. 86. $5.25.
- ROSENTHAL, ALBERT J. Federal Regulation of Campaign Finance: Some Constitutional Questions. With commentaries by ALEXANDER M. BICKEL et al. Ed. by MILTON KATZ. Study No. 18. Princeton: Citizens' Research Foundation. [1972.] Pp. 83. $1.00.
- ROTHMAN, JACK (ed.). Promoting Social Justice in the Multigroup Society: A Casebook for Group Relations Practitioners. New York: Association Press, in cooperation with Council on Social Work Education. 1971. Pp. 253. $6.50.
- RUSSEL, ROBERT R. Critical Studies in Antebellum Sectionalism: Essays in American Political and Economic History. Contributions in American History, No. 7. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood. 1972. Pp. xix, 223. $10.00.
- SETTLE, MARY LEE. The Scopes Trial: The State of Tennessee v. John Thomas Scopes. New York: Franklin Watts. 1972. Pp. vi, 121. $4.95. Grades 7 up.
- SILBEY, JOEL H., and MCSEVENNEY, SAMUEL T. Voters, Parties, and Elections: Quantitative Essays in the History of American Popular Voting Behavior. Lexington, Mass.: Xerox College Publishing. 1972. Pp. x, 434.
- SIMKINS, FRANCIS BUTLER, and ROLAND, CHARLES PIERCE. A History of the South. 4th ed.; New York: Alfred A. Knopf. 1972. Pp. xii, 703, xxiv. See revs. of 1st ed. (The South Old and New, 1947), AHR, 54 (1948-49): 157, and 2d ed. (1953), AHR, 59 (1953-54): 465.
- SIMMONS, GLORIA M., and HUTCHINSON, HELENE D. Black Culture: Reading and Writing Black. New York: Holt, Rinehart and Winston. 1972. Pp. xix, 328.
- SMITH, DANIEL M. The American Diplomatic Experience. Boston: Houghton Mifflin. 1972. Pp. vi, 491. $5.95.
- SMITH, WILLIAM, JR. The History of the Province of New-York. Vol. 1, From the First Discovery to the Year 1732; vol. 2, A Continuation, 1732-1762. Ed. by MICHAEL KAMMEN. The John Harvard Library. Cambridge, Mass.: Belknap Press of Harvard University Press. 1972. Pp. lxxxii, 366; viii, 331. $25.00 the set.
- SPILLER, ROBERT E., et al. (eds.). Literary History of the United States. Bibliography Supplement II. New York: Macmillan. 1972. Pp. xxiii, 366. $14.95.
- STAVE, BRUCE M. (ed. and with an introd.). Urban Bosses, Machines, and Progressive Reformers. Problems in American Civilization. Lexington, Mass.: D. C. Heath. 1972. Pp. xviii, 158.
- STEARNS, GERALD EMANUEL (selected and ed. with notes and introd.). Broken Image: Foreign Critiques of America. New York: Random House. 1972. Pp. xx, 298. $8.95.
- STEVENSON, JANET. Women's Rights. A First Book. New York: Franklin Watts. 1972. Pp. 90. $3.75. Grades 5-7.
- STRAUSS, W. PATRICK. Isolation and Involvement: An Interpretive History of American Diplomacy. Waltham, Mass.: Xerox College Publishing. 1972. Pp. viii, 343.
- TERRELL, JOHN UPTON. Apache Chronicle. New York: World Publishing. 1972. Pp. xv, 411. $12.50.
- TREFOUSSE, HANS L. Reconstruction: America's First Effort at Racial Democracy. Anvil Original. New York: Van Nostrand Reinhold. 1971. Pp. viii, 225. $3.50.
- United States Foreign Policy, 1971: A Report of the Secretary of State*. Department of State Publication 8634. General Foreign Policy Ser. 260. [Washington: Government Printing Office.] 1972. Pp. xvii, 604. $2.75.
- VAUGHAN, HAROLD CECIL. The Hayes-Tilden Election of 1876: A Disputed Presidential Election in the Gilded Age. A Focus Book. New York: Franklin Watts. 1972. Pp. 89. $3.95. Grades 7 up.
- WALTON, ROBERT C. Over There: European Reaction to Americans in World War I. Primary Sources in American History. Itasca, Ill.: F. E. Peacock. 1971. Pp. xxviii, 210. Cloth $6.00, paper $3.50.
- WEAVER, HERBERT, and BERGERON, PAUL H. (eds.). Correspondence of James K. Polk. Vol. 2, 1833-1834. Sponsored by Vanderbilt University, the National Historical Publications Commission, the Tennessee Historical Commission, the Polk Memorial Association. Nashville: Vanderbilt University Press. 1972. Pp. xxxvi, 645. $15.00. See rev. of vol. 1 (1969), AHR, 75 (1969-70): 2131.

WEBER, FRANCIS J. Francisco García Diego: California's Transition Bishop. Los Angeles: Dawson's Book Shop. 1972. Pp. x, 63. $8.50.

WELCH, RICHARD E., JR. Imperialists vs Anti-Imperialists: The Debate over Expansionism in the 1890's. Primary Sources in American History. Itasca, Ill.: F. E. Peacock. 1972. Pp. ix, 133. Cloth $5.00, paper $2.95.

WHITE MORTON (ed. with commentary). Documents in the History of American Philosophy: From Jonathan Edwards to John Dewey. New York: Oxford University Press. 1972. Pp. xiii, 479. Cloth $8.50, paper $4.95.

WHITE, ROBERT H. Messages of the Governors of Tennessee. Vol. 8, 1899-1907. Nashville: Tennessee Historical Commission; distrib. by University of Tennessee Press, Knoxville. 1972. Pp. 431. $12.50.

WIGGINTON, ELIOT (ed. with an introd.). The Fox-fire Book: Hog Dressing; Log Cabin Building; Mountain Crafts and Foods; Planting by the Signs; Snake Lore, Hunting Tales, Faith Healing; Moon-shining; and Other Affairs of Plain Living. Garden City, N. Y.: Doubleday. 1972. Pp. 384. $8.95.

WITCOVER, JULES. White Knight: The Rise of Spiro Agnew. New York: Random House. 1972. Pp. xii, 465. $10.00.

WOODRUFF, JAMES. Race War in America. Indianapolis: Bobbs-Merrill. 1972. Pp. xii, 92. $4.95.

WOODWARD, CARL R. Plantation in Yankeeland: The Story of Cocumscussoc, Mirror of Colonial Rhode Island. Publication of the Cocumscussoc Association, Wickford, Rhode Island. Chester, Conn.: Pequot Press. 1971. Pp. ix, 198. $10.00.

YOUNG, JAMES P. (ed.). Consensus and Conflict: Readings in American Politics. New York: Dodd, Mead. 1972. Pp. viii, 397. $3.95.

ZIELONKA, DAVID M., and WECHMAN, ROBERT J. The Eager Immigrants: A Survey of the Life and Americanization of Jewish Immigrants to the United States. Champaign, Ill.: Stipes Publishing Co., 1972. Pp. iii, 103. $3.80.

LATIN AMERICA

BURNS, E. BRADFORD. Latin America: A Concise Interpretive History. Englewood Cliffs, N. J.: Prentice-Hall. 1972. Pp. xv, 272. Cloth $8.95, paper $4.95.

COHEN, MARTIN A. (ed. with an introd.). The Jewish Experience in Latin America: Selected Studies from the Publications of the American Jewish Historical Society. In 2 vols. Waltham, Mass.: American Jewish Historical Society; New York: Ktav Publishing House. 1971. Pp. lxxxiii, 497; vi, 374. $29.50 the set.

COLORADO, ANTONIO J. The First Book of Puerto Rico. Rev. ed.; New York: Franklin Watts. 1972. Pp. 75. $3.75. Grades 5-8.

DEGUZMÁN, DANIEL. Carlos Fuentes. Twayne's World Author Ser.: A Survey of the World's Literature, No. 151. Mexico. New York: Twayne Publishers. 1972. Pp. 171.

GRIFFIN, CHARLES C., and WARREN, J. BENEDICT (eds.). Latin America: A Guide to the Historical Literature. Publication No. 4, Conference on Latin American History. Austin: University of Texas Press for the Conference. 1971. Pp. xxx, 700. $25.00.

LEACOCK, SETH and RUTH. Spirits of the Deep: A Study of an Afro-Brazilian Cult. Garden City, N. Y.: Doubleday Natural History Press for the American Museum of Natural History. 1972. Pp. x, 404. $9.95.

LISS, SHELDON B., and LISS, PEGGY K. (eds.). Man, State, and Society in Latin American History. Man, State, and Society. New York: Praeger. 1972. Pp. xvi, 456. $12.50.

LOWENTHAL, DAVID. West Indian Societies. American Geographical Society Research Ser., No. 26. New York: Oxford University Press for the Institute of Race Relations, London, in collaboration with the American Geographical Society, New York. 1972. Pp. xvii, 385. Cloth $15.25, paper $3.95.

ORTIZ, FERNANDO. Introducción bibliográfica al libro "Ensayo político sobre la Isla de Cuba" de Alejandro de Humboldt. Foreword by JULIO LE RIVEREND. Ser. Historica, No. 7. Bicentenario de Humboldt. Havana: Academia de Ciencias de Cuba, Museo Histórico de las Ciencias Médicas "Carlos J. Finlay." 1969. Pp. 61.

PARRY, J. H., and SHERLOCK, P. M. A Short History of the West Indies. 3d ed.; [New York:] St. Martin's Press. 1971. Pp. xiii, 337. Cloth $10.95, paper $5.95. See rev. of 1st ed. (1956), AHR, 62 (1956-57): 649.

RICHARDSON, PATRICK. Empire & Slavery. Seminar Studies in History. New York: Harper and Row. 1968. Pp. x, 158. $2.95.

ROMANO, RUGGIERO. Les mécanismes de la conquête coloniale: Les conquistadores. Questions d'histoire. [Paris:] Flammarion. 1972. Pp. 180.

SMITH, T. LYNN. Brazil: People and Institutions. 4th ed.; Baton Rouge: Louisiana State University Press. 1972. Pp. xx, 778. $15.00. See rev. of 1st ed. (1946), AHR, 51 (1945-46): 739.

WESTPHALEN, CECILIA MARIA. Schiffe und Waren im Hafen von Paranaguá. Kölner Vorträge zur Sozial- und Wirtschaftsgeschichte, 18. Cologne: Forschungsinstitut für Sozial- und Wirtschaftsgeschichte an der Universität zu Köln. 1971. Pp. 16.

WOLF, ERIC R., and HANSEN, EDWARD C. The Human Condition in Latin America. New York: Oxford University Press. 1972. Pp. x, 369. Cloth $12.50, paper $3.95.

Recently Published Articles

GENERAL

ANNERSTEDT, JAN, and DENCİK, LARS. Kolonisering av framtiden. Ord och bild, no. 6, 1971. [7784]

BAIROCH, PAUL. Structure de la population active mondiale de 1700 à 1970. An.: Ec., Soc., Civil., Sept.-Oct. 1971. [7785]

BERNSTEIN, SAMUEL J., and ALPERT, EUGENE J. Foreign Aid and Voting Behavior in the United Nations: The Admission of Communist China. Orbis, no. 3, 1971. [7786]

BLAIR, LEON BORDEN. The Impact of Franco-American Military Agreements on Moroccan Nationalism, 1940-1956. Rocky Mt. Soc. Sci. J., Jan. 1972. [7787]

BOLTANSKI, LUC. Les usages sociaux du corps. An.: Ec., Soc., Civil., Jan.-Feb. 1971. [7788]

BURNS, RICHARD DEAN. Supervision, Control and Inspection of Armaments: 1919-1941 Perspective. Orbis, no. 3, 1971. [7789]

CANTOR, DON. A Computer Program that Accepts Common Musical Notation. Computers and Humanities, no. 2, 1971. [7790]

CHATELAIN, ABEL. Progrès et difficultés de la démographie historique au carrefour des sciences humaines. R. Hist. éc. soc., no. 1, 1971. [7791]

CIORANESCU, ALEXANDRE. Utopia: Land of Cocaigne and Golden Age. Diogenes, no. 75, 1971. [7792]

COHEN, JACOB. Copeland's Moneyflows After Twenty-Five Years: A Survey. J. Ec. Lit., no. 1, 1972. [7793]

COHEN, STANLEY. Directions for Research on Adolescent Group Violence and Vandalism. Brit. J. Criminology, Oct. 1971. [7794]

COLE, GAROLD. The Historical Development of the Title Page. J. Lib. Hist., Oct. 1971. [7795]

DHONDT, JAN. Recurrent History. Diogenes, no. 75, 1971. [7796]

DUBY, GEORGES. L'Histoire des systèmes de valeurs. Hist. and Theory, no. 1, 1972. [7797]

EVANS, HOWARD V. Current Trends in American and European Historiography. Mich. Academician, no. 2, 1971. [7798]

FACKENHEIM, EMIL. The Human Condition after Auschwitz: A Jewish Testimony a Generation After. B. G. Rudolph Lectures Judaic Stud., Apr. 1971. [7799]

FELD, WERNER. Nongovernmental Entities and the International System: A Preliminary Quantitative Overview. Orbis, no. 3, 1971. [7800]

FISHBEIN, MEYER H. Appraising Information in Machine Language Form. Am. Archivist, no. 1, 1972. [7801]

FLUECKIGER, GERALD E. Observation and Measurement of Technological Change. EEH, no. 2, 1971-72. [7802]

GEORGE, A. RAYMOND. Christian Initiation [r. art.]. J. Eccles. Hist., no. 1, 1972. [7803]

GERSCHENKRON, ALEXANDER. Mercator Gloriosus [essay, no. 69]. Ec. Hist. R., no. 4, 1971. [7804]

GRAFF, HARVEY J. Notes on Methods for Studying Literacy from the Manuscript Census. Hist. Methods Newslett., no. 1, 1971. [7805]

GROSSMAN, HERSCHEL I. Was Keynes a "Keynesian"? A Review Article. J. Ec. Lit., no. 1, 1972. [7806]

HAIGHT, GORDON S. Male Chastity in the Nineteenth Century. Contemp. R., Nov. 1971. [7807]

HAMMEN, OSCAR J. Marx and the Agrarian Question. AHR, June 1972. [7808]

HARPER, GLENN TERRY. The German Navy and the Spanish Federalist Insurrection of 1873. S. Q., July 1971. [7809]

HARRISON, GORDON SCOTT. The Hanseatic League in Historical Interpretation. Historian, May 1971. [7810]

HEATER, DEREK. History Teaching and Political Education. History, Feb. 1972. [7811]

JARCHO, SAUL. The Animadversiones of Ippolito Francesco Albertini (1748) on Cardiac and Precordial Diseases which cause Dyspnea. Proc. Am. Phil. Soc., no. 2, 1972. [7812]

JEANNIN, PIERRE. Une histoire planétaire de la civilisation matérielle. An.: Ec., Soc., Civil., Jan.-Feb. 1972. [7813]

JONES, W. R. Abracadabra—Sorcery and Witchcraft in European History. Hist. Teacher, Nov. 1971. [7814]

KRAMNICK, ISAAC. Reflections on Revolution: Definition and Explanation in Recent Scholarship. Hist. and Theory, no. 1, 1972. [7815]

- LAPIE, PIERRE OLIVIER. La compétitivité française et les institutions européennes: Communauté européenne du charbon et de l'acier et Communauté économique européenne. R. Trav. Acad. Sci. morales pol., no. 1, 1969. [7816]
- LASCH, CHRISTOPHER. De intellektuella och kulturens frihet. Ord och bild, no. 4, 1971. [7817]
- MEY, JACOB L. Computational Linguistics and the Study of Linguistic Performance. Computers and Humanities, no. 3, 1972. [7818]
- MILLER, ALYCE SANDS (comp.). Annual Bibliography for 1971. Computers and Humanities, no. 4, 1972. [7819]
- MITCHELL, DONALD W. A Forgotten Naval War in the Pacific [Crimean War], 1854-1856. Am. Neptune, Oct. 1971. [7820]
- PÉROTIN, YVES. Facilitating Access to the League of Nations Archives. Am. Archivist, no. 1, 1972. [7821]
- PERRY, P. J. Agricultural History: A Geographer's Critique. Agric. Hist., no. 2, 1972. [7822]
- REUTER, PAUL H., JR. The Strange Case of Rudolf Hess [1941]. S. Q., July 1971. [7823]
- ROBERTS, MARTIN. History Books for Schools: 29. History, Feb. 1972. [7824]
- ROTENSTREICH, NATHAN. The Idea of Historical Progress and Its Assumptions. Hist. and Theory, no. 2, 1971. [7825]
- SEDILLOT, RENÉ. Problèmes monétaires de notre temps: l'or, le franc et le dollar. Annales, Apr. 1971. [7826]
- SETON-WATSON, HUGH. Unsatisfied Nationalisms. J. Contemp. Hist., no. 1, 1971. [7827]
- SEXTER, DOROTHY. The Current Status of Women in the Historical Profession in the Western States. AHA Newslett., no. 3, 1972. [7828]
- SIEGFRIED, JOHN J. The Publishing of Economic Papers and Its Impact on Graduate Faculty Ratings, 1960-1969. J. Ec. Lit., no. 1, 1972. [7829]
- SJÖHOLM, PENTTI. FAO, storbolagen och den gröna revolutionen. Ord och bild, no. 2, 1971. [7830]
- SMITH, CYRIL STANLEY. Metallurgical Footnotes to the History of Art. (Penrose Memorial Lecture.) Proc. Am. Phil. Soc., no. 2, 1972. [7831]
- SMITH, RAOUL N. Interactive Lexicon Updating. Computers and Humanities, no. 3, 1972. [7832]
- SOKAL, MICHAEL M. Psychology at Victorian Cambridge—The Unofficial Laboratory of 1887-1888. Proc. Am. Phil. Soc., no. 2, 1972. [7833]
- SPECK, WILLIAM A. Herbert Butterfield on the Christian and Historical Study. Fides et Hist., no. 1, 1971. [7834]
- STARN, RANDOLPH. Historians and "Crisis." Past & Present, Aug. 1971. [7835]
- TALMON, J. L. Suggestions for Isolating the Jewish Component in World History. Midstream, Mar. 1972. [7836]
- TANDRUP, LEO. En historiker og hans helt. Historie, no. 2, 1971. [7837]
- TOMASKE, JOHN A. The Determinants of Inter-country Differences in European Emigration: 1881-1900. J. Ec. Hist., Dec. 1971. [7838]
- VANCE, DAVID, and HELLER, JACK. Structure and Content of a Museum Data Bank. Computers and Humanities, no. 2, 1971. [7839]
- VAN ESSENDELFT, DENNIS. Quantitative Analysis for Present and Future Historians: A Review Essay. Hist. Methods Newslett., no. 2, 1972. [7840]
- Verbal Materials in Machine-Readable Form. Computers and Humanities, no. 3, 1972. [7841]
- WASERMAN, MANFRED J. (comp.). Bibliography on Oral History. Oral Hist. Assoc., New York 1971. [7842]
- WATTS, EUGENE J. Quantitative Methods in Historical Analysis: A Syllabus. Hist. Methods Newslett., no. 2, 1972. [7843]
- WEAVER, CHRISTOPHER. The Assassination of Trotsky [1940]. Hist. Today, Oct. 1971. [7844]
- WEDEBYE, JØRGEN. Befolkningstilvækst og befolkningsprognoser. Øk. og pol., no. 1, 1971. [7845]
- WHETTEN, LAWRENCE L. Appraising the Ostpolitik. Orbis, no. 3, 1971. [7846]
- WHITAKER, RICHARD E. Computerized Video-Composition for the Humanist. Computers and Humanities, no. 3, 1972. [7847]
- WILES, PETER. The Necessity and Impossibility of Political Economy. Hist. and Theory, no. 1, 1972. [7848]

ANCIENT

George W. Houston, University of North Carolina

GENERAL

- ARNOLD, IRENE RINGWOOD. Festivals of Ephesus. Am. J. Archaeol., Jan. 1972. [7849]
- BENNETT, ROBERT A., JR. Africa and the Biblical Period [ca. 2000 B.C.-ca. A.D. 200]. Harvard Theol. R., Oct. 1971. [7850]
- DESANGES, J. L'antiquité gréco-romaine et l'homme noir [r. art.]. R. Et. lat., XLVIII, 1970. [7851]
- DIETRICH, ALBERT. Hellas und Rom in der islamischen Geschichtsschreibung. Veröff. Max-Planck-Inst. Gesch., XXXVI, no. 1, 1971. [7852]
- JANSSEN, L. F. De gemengde constitutie als bestuurlijk ideaal en historisch exemplum [r. art.]. Tijd. Gesch., no. 1, 1972. [7853]
- KUDLIEN, FRIDOLF. Medical ethics and popular ethics in Greece and Rome. Clio Medica, no. 2, 1970. [7854]
- METZGER, BRUCE M. Literary Forgeries and Canonical Pseudepigrapha. J. Biblical Lit., Mar. 1972. [7855]
- MOMIGLIANO, ARNALDO. Empietà ed eresia nel mondo antico. R. stor. ital., no. 4, 1971. [7856]
- MOMIGLIANO, ARNALDO. La libertà di parola nel mondo antico. R. stor. ital., no. 3, 1971. [7857]

ANCIENT NEAR EAST

- AHARONI, Y. Khirbet Raddana and its Inscription. Israel Explor. J., no. 2-3, 1971. [7858]
- AMIRAN, RUTH. The First and Second Walls of Jerusalem Reconsidered in the Light of the New Wall. Israel Explor. J., no. 2-3, 1971. [7859]
- AVI-YONAH, M. The Newly-Found Wall of Jerusalem and Its Topographical Significance. Israel Explor. J., no. 2-3, 1971. [7860]
- BAKRY, HASSAN S. K. Two Saïte Monuments of Two Master Physicians. Oriens antiquus, no. 4, 1970. [7861]
- BECKERATH, JÜRGEN VON. Ein Denkmal zur Genealogie der XX. Dynastie. Z. Ägypt. Sprache Altertumsk., no. 1-2, 1971. [7862]
- BERNARD, M. PAUL. La campagne de fouilles de 1970 à Aï Khanoum (Afghanistan). C. R. Acad. Inscr., Apr.-June 1971. [7863]
- BORZSÁK, I. Die Achämeniden in der späteren Überlieferung. Zur Geschichte ihres Ruhmes. Acta Antiqua (Budapest), no. 1-2, 1971. [7864]
- BOURKE, J. B. The Palaeopathology of the Vertebral Column in Ancient Egypt and Nubia. Medical Hist., Oct. 1971. [7865]
- BRESCIANI, E. La statua naofora da Sais del profeta di Isi Psamteksaneit all'Ashmolean Museum di Oxford. Oriens antiquus, no. 3, 1970. [7866]
- CADELL, HÉLÈNE. La viticulture scientifique dans les archives de Zénon: PSI 624. Aegyptus, no. 1-4, 1969. [7867]
- DANDAMAYEV, M. A. New Documents on the Royal Economy in Iran [in Russian; Eng. summary]. Vest. drev. ist., no. 1, 1972. [7868]
- DAUMAS, FRANÇOIS. Quelques notes sur l'Ambre jaune dans l'ancienne Egypte. Chron. Egypte, Jan. 1971. [7869]
- DAVIES, G. I. Hagar, el-Heğra and the Location of Mount Sinai. Vetus Test., no. 2, 1972. [7870]
- DELLER, K., and SAPORETTI, C. Documenti medio-assiri redatti a titolo di ricevuta dietro parziale adempimento di un debito. Oriens antiquus, no. 4, 1970. [7871]
- DIKONOFF, I. M. Die Arier im Vorderen Orient: Ende eines Mythos (Zur Methodik der Erforschung verschollener Sprachen). Orientalia, no. 1, 1972. [7872]
- DUCHESNE-GUILLEMIN, J. Die Religion der Achämeniden. Acta Antiqua (Budapest), no. 1-2, 1971. [7873]
- EDEL, ELMAR. Zwei neue Felsinschriften aus Tumâs mit nubischen Ländernamen. Z. Ägypt. Sprache Altertumsk., no. 1-2, 1971. [7874]
- FAIRMAN, H. W. Tutankhamun and the end of the 18th Dynasty. Antiquity, Mar. 1972. [7875]
- FALES, FREDERICK MARIO. Il paese di Q/Kipani. R. Stud. Orient., no. 1-2, 1970. [7876]
- FALK, ZEEV W. Zum fremden Einfluss auf das jüdische Recht. R. int. droits antiq., XVIII, 1971. [7877]
- FATTOVICH, RODOLFO. Elementi per una ricerca sulle origini della monarchia sacra egiziana. R. Stud. Orient., no. 3-4, 1970. [7878]
- FELDMAN, LOUIS H. Hellenizations in Josephus' Version of Esther. Trans. Proc. Am. Philol. Assoc., 101, 1970. [7879]
- GIGNOUX, PH. La liste des provinces de l'Érân dans les inscriptions de Šābuhr et de Kirdīr. Acta Antiqua (Budapest), no. 1-2, 1971. [7880]
- GOLOMB, G., and KEDAR, Y. Ancient Agriculture in the Galilee Mountains. Israel Explor. J., no. 2-3, 1971. [7881]
- HABACHI, LABIB. The Jubilees of Ramesses II and Amenophis III with Reference to Certain Aspects of their Celebration. Z. Ägypt. Sprache Altertumsk., no. 1-2, 1971. [7882]
- HARMATTA, J. The Rise of the Old Persian Empire. Cyrus the Great. Acta Antiqua (Budapest), no. 1-2, 1971. [7883]
- HARTMAN, THOMAS C. Some Thoughts on the Sumerian King List and Genesis 5 and 11 B. J. Biblical Lit., Mar. 1972. [7884]
- HINZ, WALTHER. Achämenidische Hofverwaltung. Z. Assyriol. Vorderasiat. Arch., Feb. 1972. [7885]
- HOPKINS, I. W. J. The Four Quarters of Jerusalem. Palestine Explor. Q., July-Dec. 1971. [7886]
- HULSE, E. V. Joshua's Curse and the Abandonment of Ancient Jericho: Schistosomiasis as a Possible Medical Explanation. Medical Hist., Oct. 1971. [7887]
- JACKSON, BERNARD S. Foreign Influence in the Early Jewish Law of Theft. R. int. droits antiq., XVIII, 1971. [7888]
- KANAEL, B. Notes on the Dates Used During the Bar Kokhba Revolt. Israel Explor. J., no. 1, 1971. [7889]
- KAPLONY, PETER. Das Papyrusarchiv von Abusir. Orientalia, no. 1, 1972. [7890]
- KHAZANOV, A. M. The Character of Slavery among the Scythians [in Russian; Eng. summary]. Vest. drev. ist., no. 1, 1972. [7891]
- KUPPER, JEAN-ROBERT. La Date des Šakkanakku de Mari. R. Assyriol., no. 2, 1971. [7892]
- KUPPER, J.-R. Les inscriptions triomphales akkadiennes. Oriens antiquus, no. 2, 1971. [7893]
- LAVER, A. B. Precursors of Psychology in Ancient Egypt. J. Hist. Behavioral Sci., Apr. 1972. [7894]
- LIPINSKI, E. Ba'li-Ma'zer II and the Chronology of Tyre. R. Stud. Orient., no. 1-2, 1970. [7895]
- LORDKIPANIDZE, OTAR. La civilisation de l'ancienne Colchide aux V<sup>e</sup>-IV<sup>e</sup> siècles. R. Archéol., no. 2, 1971. [7896]
- MALAMAT, A. On the Akkadian Transcription of the Name of King Joash. Bull. Am. Schools Orient. Res., Dec. 1971. [7897]
- MALAMAT, A. Syro-Palestinian Destinations in a Mari Tin Inventory. Israel Explor. J., no. 1, 1971. [7898]
- MARRASSINI, P. Sui "campi fortificati" nell'età de Mari. Oriens antiquus, no. 2, 1971. [7899]
- MITTMANN, SIEGFRIED. Danaba. Z. Deutsch. Palästina-Ver., no. 1, 1971. [7900]
- MOOREY, P. R. S. The Loftus Hoard of Old Babylonian Tools from Tell Sifr in Iraq. Iraq, Autumn 1971. [7901]
- MORENZ, SIEGFRIED. Traditionen um Cheops. Beiträge zur Überlieferungsgeschichtlichen Methode in der Ägyptologie I. Z. Ägypt. Sprache Altertumsk., no. 1-2, 1971. [7902]

- MURNANE, WILLIAM J. Once Again the Dates for Tuthmosis III and Amenhotep II. J. Anc. Near E. Soc. Columbia U., Autumn 1970-71. [7903]
- NAVEH, JOSEPH. The Aramaic Inscriptions on Boundary Stones in Armenia. Welt Orients, no. 1, 1971. [7904]
- NEGBI, ORA. Contacts between Byblos and Cyprus at the End of the Third Millennium B.C. Levant, IV, 1972. [7905]
- NOUGAYROL, JEAN. Textes religieux (I). R. Assyriol., no. 2, 1971. [7906]
- OTTEN, HEINRICH. Die Genealogie Hattusilis III. nach KBo VI28. Z. Assyriol. Vorderasiat. Arch., Feb. 1972. [7907]
- OWEN, DAVID I. Ur III Letter-Orders from Nippur in the University Museum. Orientalia, no. 4, 1971. [7908]
- PETTINATO, G. Die sumerischen Personennamen der 3. Dynastie von Ur. Oriens antiquus, no. 1, 1971. [7909]
- PINTORE, FRANCO. I dodici intendenti di Salomone. R. Stud. Orient., no. 3-4, 1970. [7910]
- POLAČEK, ADALBERT. Gesellschaftliche und juristische Aspekte in altägyptischen Weisheitslehren. Aegyptus, no. 1-4, 1969. [7911]
- REDFORD, D. B. The Earliest Years of Ramesses II, and the Building of the Ramesside Court at Luxor. J. Egypt. Archaeol., 57, 1971. [7912]
- RISSE, GUENTER B. Pharaoh Akhenaton of Ancient Egypt: Controversies among Egyptologists and Physicians Regarding his Postulated Illness. J. Hist. Medicine, no. 1, 1971. [7913]
- SALVINI, MIRJO. Neues urartäisches Inschriftenmaterial aus sowjetischen Veröffentlichungen. Z. Assyriol. Vorderasiat. Arch., Feb. 1972. [7914]
- SASSON, J. M. Mari Notes. R. Assyriol., no. 2, 1971. [7915]
- SEIDL, ERWIN. Studien an den Hawara-Urkunden I. Aegyptus, no. 1-4, 1969. [7916]
- SETERS, JOHN VAN. The Terms "Amorite" and "Hittite" in the Old Testament. Vetus Test., no. 1, 1972. [7917]
- SPERBER, DANIEL. Patronage in Amoraic Palestine (c. 220-400): Causes and Effects. J. Ec. Soc. Hist. Orient., Dec. 1971. [7918]
- STAMBAUGH, JOHN E. Harmotes [Evidence on his cult]. Aegyptus, no. 1-4, 1969. [7919]
- SZLECHTER, EMILE. Les Lois Néo-Babyloniennes. R. int. droits antiq., XVIII, 1971. [7920]
- THÉODORIDÈS, ARISTIDE. Les contrats d'Hâpidjefa (XII<sup>e</sup> dynastie, 20<sup>e</sup> s. av. J.-C.). R. int. droits antiq., XVIII, 1971. [7921]
- USSISHKIN, DAVID. Was Bit-Adini a Neo-Hittite or Aramaean State? Orientalia, no. 4, 1971. [7922]
- VANDIER, JACQUES. Une statue présumée du nomarque de Siout, Hâpidjefa. C. R. Acad. Inscr., Apr.-June 1971. [7923]
- WRIGHT, G. R. H. Pre-Israelite Temples in the Land of Canaan. Palestine Explor. Q., Jan.-June 1971. [7924]
- YADIN, Y. Peshar Nahum (4QpNahum) Reconsidered. Israel Explor. J., no. 1, 1971. [7925]
- YEIVIN, S. The Benjaminite Settlement in the Western Part of their Territory. Israel Explor. J., no. 2-3, 1971. [7926]
- YEIVIN, SH. Marginal Glosses [on problems in the Old Testament; in Hebrew; Eng. summary]. Tarbiz, July-Sept. 1971. [7927]
- ZACCAGNINI, CARLO. KBo I 14 e il "monopolio" hittita del ferro. R. Stud. Orient., no. 1-2, 1970. [7928]
- ZANDEE, J. Le Messie. Conceptions de la royauté dans les religions du Proche-Orient ancien. R. Hist. Relig., July-Sept. 1971. [7929]

ANCIENT GREECE

- ADKINS, A. W. H. Homeric Values and Homeric Society. J. Hell. Stud., XCI, 1971. [7930]
- ALLEN, R. E. Attalos I and Aigina. An. Brit. School Athens, 66, 1971. [7931]
- ANDREWES, A. Two Notes on Lysander. Phoenix, no. 3, 1971. [7932]
- ATKINSON, K. M. T. A Hellenistic Land-Conveyance: The Estate of Mnesimachus in the Plain of Sardis. Historia, no. 1, 1972. [7933]
- BICKNELL, P. J. The Euryptolemos at Xenophon Hell. I 3, 12-13. Mnemosyne, no. 4, 1971. [7934]
- BICKNELL, P. J. Peisianax of IG I<sup>2</sup> 1022. Mnemosyne, no. 4, 1971. [7935]
- BOARDMAN, JOHN. Sickles and Strigils. J. Hell. Stud., XCI, 1971. [7936]
- BOEGEHOLD, ALAN L. The Establishment of a Central Archive at Athens. Am. J. Archaeol., Jan. 1972. [7937]
- BUCK, R. J. The Formation of the Boeotian League. Class. Philol., Apr. 1972. [7938]
- BUCKLER, JOHN. Dating the Peace of 375/4 B.C. Greek, Roman, Byz. Stud., no. 3, 1971. [7939]
- CAIRNS, FRANCIS. A Note on the Eponymous Archon of 490/89. Rhein. Mus. Philol., no. 2, 1971. [7940]
- CALLIGAS, P. An Inscribed Lead Plaque from Korkyra. An. Brit. School Athens, 66, 1971. [7941]
- CAZZANIGA, IGNAZIO. L'estensione alla Sicilia della espressione Magna Grecia in Strabone (VI 1,2). Parola Passata, no. 136, 1971. [7942]
- COWELL, J. H. Foreign Influence on Greek Religion (to the end of the 5th century). Pegasus, Mar. 1971. [7943]
- DONLAN, WALTER. Archilochus, Strabo and the Lelantine War. Trans. Proc. Am. Philol. Assoc., 101, 1970. [7944]
- DONZELLI, GIUSEPPINA BASTA. Un'ideologia "contestataria" del secolo IV a. C. Stud. Ital. Filol. Class., no. 1-2, 1970. [7945]
- DOSSIN, GEORGES. Grèce et Orient. R. belge philol. hist., no. 1, 1971. [7946]
- DRUET, F.-X. La préambule des décrets attiques. R. belge philol. hist., no. 1, 1971. [7947]
- EDMUNDS, LOWELL. The Religiosity of Alexander. Greek, Roman, Byz. Stud., no. 3, 1971. [7948]
- ELLIS, J. R. Amyntas Perdikka, Philip II and Alexander the Great. A Study in Conspiracy. J. Hell. Stud., XCI, 1971. [7949]
- ENGEL, RUDOLF. Anmerkungen zur Schlacht von Orkynia. Mus. Helvet., no. 4, 1971. [7950]

- EVJEN, HAROLD D. (Dem.) 47.68–73 and the [dikē phonou]. R. int. droits antiq., XVIII, 1971. [7951]
- FORNARA, CHARLES W. Evidence for the Date of Herodotus' Publication. J. Hell. Stud., XCI, 1971. [7952]
- FRASER, P. M. Eratosthenes of Cyrene. Proc. Brit. Acad., LVI, 1970. [7953]
- FRENCH, A. The Tribute of the Allies. Historia, no. 1, 1972. [7954]
- FROST, FRANK J. Ptolemy II and Halicarnassus: an Honorary Decree. Anatolian Stud., XXI, 1971. [7955]
- GAUTHIER, PHILIPPE. Les [xenoï] dans les textes athéniens de la seconde moitié du V<sup>e</sup> siècle av. J.-C. R. Et. grecques, Jan.–June 1971. [7956]
- GIANNOTI, GIAN FRANCO. Note alla rhetra di Licurgo. R. Filol. Istruz. Class., no. 4, 1971. [7957]
- GOLDSTEIN, JONATHAN A. Demosthenes' Fine and Its Payment, 323–322 B.C. Class. J., Oct.–Nov. 1971. [7958]
- GRAHAM, A. J. Patterns in Early Greek Colonisation. J. Hell. Stud., XCI, 1971. [7959]
- HACKETT, GENERAL SIR JOHN. Reflections upon Epic Warfare. Proc. Class. Assoc. (London), LXVIII, 1971. [7960]
- HAMILTON, CHARLES D. The Politics of Revolution in Corinth, 395–386 B.C. Historia, no. 1, 1972. [7961]
- HAUBEN, H. On Two Ephesian Citizenship Decrees from the Diadochian Period. Z. Papyrol. Epig., 9, no. 1, 1972. [7962]
- HAUBEN, HANS. An Annotated List of Ptolemaic Naukleroi with a Discussion of BGU X 1933. Z. Papyrol. Epig., 8, no. 3, 1971. [7963]
- HEALY, J. F. Artists, Engravers, and Style in Greek Coinage. Bull. John Rylands Lib., Autumn 1971. [7964]
- HEGYI, DOLORES. Der Ionische Aufstand und die Regierungsmethoden Darcios' I. Das Altertum, no. 3, 1971. [7965]
- HELLY, BRUNO. Décrets de Démétrias pour des juges étrangers. Bull. corr. hell., no. 2, 1971. [7966]
- HILLER, STEFAN, and PANAGL, OSWALD. Linear B: Fortschritte und Forschungsstand. Ein Forschungsbericht. Saeculum, no. 2–3, 1971. [7967]
- HUNTER, VIRGINIA JOYCE. Thucydides and the Historical Fact. Class. J., Oct.–Nov. 1971. [7968]
- JACKSON, ANNE. The Chronology of the Bronze Coins of Knossos. An. Brit. School Athens, 66, 1971. [7969]
- JORDAN, BORIMIR. A Note on the Athenian Strategia. Trans. Proc. Am. Philol. Assoc., 101, 1970. [7970]
- JUHASZ, JOSEPH B. Greek Theories of Imagination. J. Hist. Behavioral Sci., Jan. 1971. [7971]
- KOSHELENKO, G. A. The Revolt of the Greeks in Bactria and Sogdiana in the Light of IV Century Social and Political Theory [in Russian; Eng. summary]. Vest. drev. ist., no. 1, 1972. [7972]
- LARSON, RAYMOND H. A Note on Thucydides 2:40.1. Class. J., Oct.–Nov. 1971. [7973]
- LEVICK, B. The Table of Mên. J. Hell. Stud., XCI, 1971. [7974]
- LITTAUER, MARY AIKEN. The Military Use of the Chariot in the Aegean in the Late Bronze Age. Am. J. Archaeol., Apr. 1972. [7975]
- LITTMAN, ROBERT J. The Loves of Alcibiades. Trans. Proc. Am. Philol. Assoc., 101, 1970. [7976]
- LORTON, DAVID. The Supposed Expedition of Ptolemy II to Persia. J. Egypt. Archaeol., 57, 1971. [7977]
- MACDONALD, ALEXANDER. A Note on the Raid of Sphodrias. Historia, no. 1, 1972. [7978]
- MACDOWELL, DOUGLAS M. The Chronology of Athenian Speeches and Legal Innovations in 401–398 B.C. R. int. droits antiq., XVIII, 1971. [7979]
- MCNEAL, R. A. The Greeks in history and prehistory. Antiquity, Mar. 1972. [7980]
- MANFREDINI, MARIO. Il decreto di Aristide sull'arcontato e un excerptum plutarco di Giorgio Gemisto Pletone. An. Scuola Norm. Sup. Pisa, no. 1, 1971. [7981]
- MARR, J. L. Andocides' Part in the Mysteries and Hermæ Affairs 415 B.C. Class. Q., Nov. 1971. [7982]
- MARSHALL, M. H. B. Thucydides iv. 4. 1. Class. R., Dec. 1971. [7983]
- MATTINGLY, HAROLD B. Some Third Magistrates in the Athenian New Style Silver Coinage. J. Hell. Stud., XCI, 1971. [7984]
- MEINECKE, JOACHIM. Gesetzesinterpretation und Gesetzesanwendung im Attischen Zivilprozess. R. int. droits antiq., XVIII, 1971. [7985]
- MODRZEJEWSKI, JOSEPH. Zum hellenistischen Ehegüterrecht im griechischen und römischen Ägypten. Z. Savigny-Stiftung Rechtsgesch. (Rom. Abt.), 87, 1970. [7986]
- MOGGI, MAURO. In merito alla datazione dei "tirannicidi" di Antenor. An. Scuola Norm. Sup. Pisa, no. 1, 1971. [7987]
- MOSLEY, D. J. Cimon and the spartan proxeny. Athenaeum, no. 3–4, 1971. [7988]
- MOSLEY, D. J. Diplomacy and Disunion in Ancient Greece. Phoenix, no. 4, 1971. [7989]
- MOSLEY, D. J. Spartan kings and proxeny. Athenaeum, no. 3–4, 1971. [7990]
- OSBORNE, MICHAEL J. Athens and Orontes. IG ii<sup>2</sup> 207+SEG xv. 92, xxi. 261. An. Brit. School Athens, 66, 1971. [7991]
- PALMA, CLAUDIO DE. Nuove prospettive per la storia della civiltà egea. Nuova r. stor., no. 3–4, 1971. [7992]
- PAPANIKOLAOU, ANTONIOS D. Aischylos über die Flottenstärke bei Salamis (Pers. 333–347). Rhein. Mus. Philol., no. 3, 1971. [7993]
- PAPAZOGLU, FANOULA. Quelques problèmes de l'histoire épirote. Ziva Antika, XX, 1970. [7994]
- PICCIRILLI, LUIGI. La controversia fra Ierone I e Polizelo in Diodoro, negli scholia vetera e nello scholion recens a Pindaro, OT 2, 29. An. Scuola Norm. Sup. Pisa, no. 1, 1971. [7995]
- PODLECKI, A. J. Cimon, Skyros and "Theseus' Bones." J. Hell. Stud., XCI, 1971. [7996]
- PODLECKI, A. J. Stesichoreia. Athenaeum, no. 3–4, 1971. [7997]

PRÉAUX, C. La place des papyrus dans les sources de l'histoire hellénistique. Bull. Am. Soc. Papyrol., Dec. 1971. [7998]

PRICE, THEODORA HADZISTELIOU. Double and Multiple Representations in Greek Art and Religious Thought. J. Hell. Stud., XCI, 1971. [7999]

RÄDLE, HERBERT. Freilassung von Sklaven im Theater (Inchriftliche Zeugnisse). R. int. droits antiq., XVIII, 1971. [8000]

RAEPSAET, GEORGES. Les motivations de la natalité à Athènes aux V<sup>e</sup> et IV<sup>e</sup> siècles avant notre ère. Antiq. class., no. 1, 1971. [8001]

RANGNEKAR, SHARU S. The Strategy of Alexander the Great. A Comparative Analysis. Q. R. Hist. Stud., no. 2, 1969-70. [8002]

REEKER, HANS-DIETER. Solons Reisen. Antike u. Abendland, no. 2, 1971. [8003]

RESTELLI, GIUSEPPE. [Epeirōtika.] Rend. Ist. Lombardo, no. 2-3, 1970. [8004]

RICHTER, DONALD C. The Position of Women in Classical Athens. Class. J., Oct.-Nov. 1971. [8005]

ROBERT, LOUIS. Un oracle gravé à Oinoanda. C. R. Acad. Inscr., July-Oct. 1971. [8006]

ROESCH, PAUL. Sur un nouveau recueil de lois sacrées [r. art.]. Antiq. class., no. 1, 1971. [8007]

SALOMONE, SERENA. Noterelle iperidee. Maia, no. 4, 1971. [8008]

SCHACHERMEYER, FRITZ. Mykene und Linear B-Schrift im Rahmen der Altertumsforschung. Saeculum, no. 2-3, 1971. [8009]

SHOFMAN, A. S. The Army and Military Reforms of Alexander the Great [in Russian; Eng. summary]. Vest. drev. ist., no. 1, 1972. [8010]

SHRIMPTON, G. S. The Theban Supremacy in Fourth-Century Literature. Phoenix, no. 4, 1971. [8011]

SOLMSEN, FRIEDRICH. Thucydides' Treatment of Words and Concepts. Hermes, no. 4, 1971. [8012]

THOMPSON, WESLEY E. Attic Kinship Terminology. J. Hell. Stud., XCI, 1971. [8013]

THOMPSON, WESLEY E. Leagros. Athenaeum, no. 3-4, 1971. [8014]

VAN DE MAELE, SYMPHORIEN. Le récit de l'expédition athénienne de 415 en Sicile et l'opinion de Thucydide sur le rappel d'Alcibiade. Antiq. class., no. 1, 1971. [8015]

VAN RENGEL, WILFRIED. Les jeux de Panopolis. Chron. Egypte, Jan. 1971. [8016]

VERNANT, JEAN-PIERRE. Métis et les mythes de souveraineté. R. Hist. Relig., July-Sept. 1971. [8017]

VOKOTPOULOU, JULIA. Town Building Problem of Ancient Ambrakia [in Greek; Eng. summary]. Athens An. Archaeol., no. 3, 1971. [8018]

WESTLAKE, H. D. Thucydides and the Uneasy Peace—A Study in Political Incompetence. Class. Q., Nov. 1971. [8019]

WOODBURY, LEONARD. Socrates and Archelaus. Phoenix, no. 4, 1971. [8020]

ANCIENT ROME

ABEL, KARLHANS. Die Kulturelle Mission des Panaitios. Antike u. Abendland, no. 2, 1971. [8021]

AGACHE, R. L'habitat antique en Artois, d'après les premières prospections aériennes. R. Nord, Oct.-Dec. 1971. [8022]

ALFÖLDY, GÉZA. Die Ablehnung der Diktatur durch Augustus. Gymnasium, no. 1-2, 1972. [8023]

ALFÖLDY, GÉZA. Eine spanische Gesandtschaft in Pannonien. Arch. Español Arqueol., 43, 1970. [8024]

ALFÖLDY, GÉZA. Zeitgeschichte und Krisenempfindung bei Herodian. Hermes, no. 4, 1971. [8025]

ALLEN, D. F. The Coins of the Iceni. Britannia, I, 1970. [8026]

ANKUM, HANS. Die Haltung der Präfecten von Ägypten gegenüber den greko-ägyptischen Recht. R. int. droits antiq., XVIII, 1971. [8027]

APPLEBAUM, SHIMON. The Zealots: the Case for Reevaluation. J. Roman Stud., LXI, 1971. [8028]

BADIAN, E. The Family and Early Career of T. Quinticius Flamininus. J. Roman Stud., LXI, 1971. [8029]

BALSDON, J. P. V. D. Dionysius on Romulus: A Political Pamphlet? J. Roman Stud., LXI, 1971. [8030]

BARNES, T. D. The First African Consul. Class. R., Dec. 1971. [8031]

BARNES, T. D. A Marian Colony. Class. R., Dec. 1971. [8032]

BAROJA, JULIO CARO. Sobre la fecha de la Fundación de "Caesaraugusta." Bol. Real Acad. Hist., Sept.-Dec. 1971. [8033]

BARTELINK, G. J. M. Kritiek op het Nieuwjaarsfeest in de late Oudheid. Hermeneus, Nov.-Dec. 1971. [8034]

BASTIANINI, GUIDO. La carriera di Sarapion alias Apollonius. Aegyptus, no. 1-4, 1969. [8035]

BENARIO, HERBERT W. Priam and Galba. Class. World, Jan. 1972. [8036]

BISCARDI, ARNALDO. Aperçu historique du problème de l'abrogatio legis. R. int. droits antiq., XVIII, 1971. [8037]

BOULAKIA, JEAN DAVID C. Lead in the Roman World. Am. J. Archaeol., Apr. 1972. [8038]

BOWERSOCK, G. W. A Report on Arabia Provincia. J. Roman Stud., LXI, 1971. [8039]

BOWMAN, A. K. Roman Bureaucracy in the Late Third Century A.D. Bull. Am. Soc. Papyrol., Dec. 1971. [8040]

BREEZE, DAVID J. Pay Grades and Ranks below the Centurionate. J. Roman Stud., LXI, 1971. [8041]

BRINGMANN, KLAUS. Zur Tiberiusbiographie Suetons. Rhein. Mus. Philol., no. 3, 1971. [8042]

BROWN, PETER. The Rise and Function of the Holy Man in Late Antiquity. J. Roman Stud., LXI, 1971. [8043]

BUTTREY, T. V. Halved Coins, The Augustan Reform, and Horace, Odes I.3. Am. J. Archaeol., Jan. 1972. [8044]

CADOUX, J.-L., and MASSY, J.-L. Ribemont-sur-Ancre: Études. R. Nord, Oct.-Dec. 1970. [8045]

- CECCHINI, S. M. Per un'identificazione di Monte Sirai. Oriens antiquus, no. 2, 1971. [8046]
- CLOUD, J. D. The primary purpose of the lex Cornelia de sicariis. Z. Savigny-Stiftung Rechtsgesch. (Rom. Abt.), 86, 1969. [8047]
- CONSTANTELOS, DEMETRIOS J. Kyros Panopolites, Rebuilder of Constantinople. Greek, Roman, Byz. Stud., no. 3, 1971. [8048]
- CRAWFORD, MICHAEL H. Le problème des liquidités dans l'Antiquité classique. An.: Ec., Soc., Civil., no. 6, 1971. [8049]
- CURRAN, LEO C. Transformation and Anti-Augustanism in Ovid's Metamorphoses. Arethusa, Spring 1972. [8050]
- DAMSHOLT, TORBEN. Historia Augusta Problemet. Stud. Sprog- og Oldtidsforsk., no. 277, 1971. [8051]
- DAVIES, R. W. The Roman Military Diet. Britannia, II, 1971. [8052]
- DAVIES, R. W. The Romans at Burnswark. Historia, no. 12, 1972. [8053]
- DORUȚIU-BOILĂ, EMILIA. Zur Abgrenzung des Territorium von Kallatis. Dacia, XV, 1971. [8054]
- DOVATUR, A. I. Herodian as a Historian [in Russian]. Vest. drev. ist., no. 1, 1972. [8055]
- DREW-BEAR, THOMAS. Three Senatus Consulta concerning the Province of Asia. Historia, no. 1, 1972. [8056]
- DUPONT, CLÉMENTINE. De quelques problèmes découlant de la conquête de l'Orient par Constantin. Leur solution par ce prince. R. int. droits antiq., XVIII, 1971. [8057]
- DUŠANIĆ, MILENA. Epirus Nova Dalmatorum [in Croatian; Eng. summary]. Ziva Antika, XX, 1970. [8058]
- ENGELMANN, H. Der Tempel des Hadrian in Ephesos und der Proconsul Servaeus Innocens. Z. Papyrol. Epig., 9, no. 1, 1972. [8059]
- Die Eroberung Pannoniens und die Fragen der Romanisation. Diskussion. Acta Archaeol. (Budapest), XXIII, 1971. [8060]
- ERRINGTON, R. M. The alleged Syro-Macedonian pact and the origins of the second Macedonian War. Athenaeum, no. 1-4, 1971. [8061]
- EUFEMIA, MAURO D'. Problemi della romanità politica fra repubblica e principato. R. Cult. Class. Med., XIII, 1971. [8062]
- FALLU, E. La première lettre de Cicéron à Quintus et la Lex Julia de repetundis. R. Et. lat., XLVIII, 1970. [8063]
- FASCIANO, DOMENICO. Numen, Reflexions sur sa nature et son rôle. R. Cult. Class. Med., XIII, 1971. [8064]
- FERENCZY, ENDRE. Fremde Einflüsse auf die Rechtsentwicklung der klassischen Republik. R. int. droits antiq., XVIII, 1971. [8065]
- FITZ, J. Angaben zu den Gebietsveränderungen der Civitas Eraviscorum. Acta Archaeol. (Budapest), XXIII, 1971. [8066]
- FLAM-ZUCKERMANN, LÉA. Un Exemple de la Genèse des Domaines Impériaux d'après deux Inscriptions de Bithynie. Historia, no. 1, 1972. [8067]
- FREND, W. H. C. The Monks and the Survival of the East Roman Empire in the Fifth Century. Past & Present, Feb. 1972. [8068]
- FROLOVA, N. A. From the History of Bosphorus in the Early II Century A.D. [in Russian; Eng. summary]. Vest. drev. ist., no. 1, 1972. [8069]
- GABLER, D. Die Eroberung Pannoniens im Spiegel der Sigillaten. Acta Archaeol. (Budapest), XXIII, 1971. [8070]
- GAMER, GUSTAV. Estatuas imperiales de los campamentos militares romanos. Arch. Español Arqueol., 43, 1970. [8071]
- GARNSEY, PETER. Taxatio and Pollicitatio in Roman Africa. J. Roman Stud., LXI, 1971. [8072]
- GENER, JOSÉ LUIS MURGA. La extracomercialidad de los bienes afectados a un destino colectivo en el bajo imperio romano. R. int. droits antiq., XVIII, 1971. [8073]
- GÉRARD, J. Juvénal et les associations d'artistes grecs à Rome. R. Et. lat., XLVIII, 1970. [8074]
- GIARD, JEAN-BAPTISTE. Pouvoir central et libertés locales. Le monnayage en bronze de Claude avant 50 après J.C. R. Numis., XII, 1970. [8075]
- GILLIAM, J. F. A Legionary Veteran and His Family. Bull. Am. Soc. Papyrol., Dec. 1971. [8076]
- GIRARD, JEAN-LOUIS. Les origines du culte de Minerve. R. Et. lat., XLVIII, 1970. [8077]
- GOLENKO, G. V. Notes on the Circulation of Roman Coins in the Transcaucasia [in Russian; Eng. summary]. Vest. drev. ist., no. 4, 1971. [8078]
- HADOT, ILSETRAUT. Tradition stoïcienne et idées politiques au temps des Gracques. R. Et. lat., XLVIII, 1970. [8079]
- HALL, A. S. The Gorgoromeis. Anatolian Stud., XXI, 1971. [8080]
- HALLETT, JUDITH P. "Over Troubled Waters": The Meaning of the Title Pontifex. Trans. Proc. Am. Philol. Assoc., 101, 1970. [8081]
- HAMMOND, N. G. L. Antigonea in Epirus. J. Roman Stud., LXI, 1971. [8082]
- HARDEN, D. B. Ancient Glass, II: Roman. Archaeol. J., CXXVI, 1969. [8083]
- HASSALL, M. W. C. Batavians and the Roman Conquest of Britain. Britannia, I, 1970. [8084]
- HELD, WIELAND. Der römische Kolonat am Ende des 2. und zu Beginn des 3. Jahrhunderts. Das Altertum, no. 3, 1971. [8085]
- HELLEGOUARC'H, J. Le principat de Camille. R. Et. lat., XLVIII, 1970. [8086]
- HENIG, MARTIN. The Veneration of Heroes in the Roman Army. The Evidence of Engraved Gemstones. Britannia, I, 1970. [8087]
- HEUBNER, HEINZ. Vater oder Tochter? [On Tacitus Agricola 9.6.]. Rhein. Mus. Philol., no. 3, 1971. [8088]
- HOMMEYER, HELENE. Ciceros Tod im Urteil der Nachwelt. Das Altertum, no. 3, 1971. [8089]
- HONORÉ, A. M., and RODGER, ALAN. How the Digest Commissioners Worked. Z. Savigny-Stiftung Rechtsgesch. (Rom. Abt.), 87, 1970. [8090]
- HORSFALL, NICHOLAS. Numanus Remulus: Ethnography and Propaganda in Aen., ix, 598f. Latomus, no. 4, 1971. [8091]

- JOHNSON, J. S. The Date of the Construction of the Saxon Shore Fort at Richborough. Britannia, I, 1970. [8092]
- JONES, BRIAN W. A Note on the Flavians' Attitude to the Censorship. Historia, no. 1, 1972. [8093]
- JONES, G. D. B., and LITTLE, J. H. Coastal Settlement in Cyrenaica. J. Roman Stud., LXI, 1971. [8094]
- JÓZEFOWICZ, MARIA. Les idées politiques dans la morale stoïcienne de Marc-Aurèle. Eos, no. 2, 1971. [8095]
- JUNG, EDMOND. Les noms du Tibre et de Rome. Matériaux et questions. R. Int. Onomastique, no. 1, 1972. [8096]
- KAHLO, G. Einige ungelöste antike Fragen [inter alia, Sardinia; Druids]. Ziva Antika, XX, 1970. [8097]
- KATZ, ROBERT S. The Illness of Caligula. Class. World, Mar. 1972. [8098]
- KATZOFF, RANON. Judicial Reasoning in P. Catt.—Fraus Legi. Trans. Proc. Am. Philol. Assoc., 101, 1970. [8099]
- KEENAN, JAMES G. Census Return of Herakleides Son of Didymos the Younger. Chron. Egypte, Jan. 1971. [8100]
- KEPPIE, LAWRENCE J. F. Legio VIII Augusta and the Claudian Invasion. Britannia, II, 1971. [8101]
- KEPPIE, L. J. F. A Note on the Title Actiacus. Class. R., Dec. 1971. [8102]
- KOCH, HANS. a victore (Tac. Germ. 2,3). Gymnasium, no. 1-2, 1972. [8103]
- KORFMACHER, WILLIAM CHARLES. Cicero and the Bellum Iustum. Class. Bull., Feb. 1972. [8104]
- LANA, ITALO. Scienza e tecnica a Roma da Augusto a Nerone. At. Accad. Sci. Torino, no. 1, 1971. [8105]
- LANGE, DOROTHY. Two Financial Maneuvers of Cicero. Class. World, Jan. 1972. [8106]
- LENZ, JEAN-PIERRE. The Rise and Fall of the Roman Empire in North Africa. Réalités, June 1971. [8107]
- LEVICK, BARBARA. The Beginning of Tiberius' Career. Class. Q., Nov. 1971. [8108]
- LEWIS, NAPHTALI. Un nouveau texte sur la juridiction du préfet d'Egypte. R. hist. droit fr. étranger, no. 1, 1972. [8109]
- LINTOTT, A. W. Lucan and the History of the Civil War. Class. Q., Nov. 1971. [8110]
- LINTOTT, A. W. The Tribunate of P. Sulpicius Rufus. Class. Q., Nov. 1971. [8111]
- LITEWSKI, WIESLAW. Consultatio ante sententiam. Z. Savigny-Stiftung Rechtsgesch. (Rom. Abt.), 86, 1969. [8112]
- LITEWSKI, WIESLAW. Remarques sur la dissolution de la société en droit romain. R. hist. droit fr. étranger, no. 1, 1972. [8113]
- LOVEJOY, JACK. The Tides of New Carthage. Class. Philol., Apr. 1972. [8114]
- MCDERMOTT, WILLIAM C. In Ligarianam. Trans. Proc. Am. Philol. Assoc., 101, 1970. [8115]
- MADDOLI, GIANFRANCO. Il rito degli Argei e le origini del culto di Hera a Roma. Parola Passata, no. 138, 1971. [8116]
- MANN, J. C. Spoken Latin in Britain as Evidenced in the Inscriptions. Britannia, II, 1971. [8117]
- MARCILLET-JAUBERT, JEAN. Note sur un gouverneur de Numidie [ca. A.D. 300]. Z. Papyrol. Epig., 9, no. 1, 1972. [8118]
- MARINOVICH, L. P. [Paramonē] in Delphic Manumissions of the Roman Period [in Russian; Eng. summary]. Vest. drev. ist., no. 4, 1971. [8119]
- MARTIN, RENÉ. Le sens de l'expression Asinus aureus et la signification du roman apulien. R. Et. lat., XLVIII, 1970. [8120]
- MARTIN, REX. The Two Cities in Augustine's Political Philosophy. J. Hist. Ideas, no. 2, 1972. [8121]
- MATTHEWS, J. F. Gallic Supporters of Theodosius. Latomus, no. 4, 1971. [8122]
- MAZZARINO, S. La tradizione sulle guerre tra Shābuhr I e l'impero romano: "prospettiva" e "deformazione storica". Acta Antiqua (Budapest), no. 1-2, 1971. [8123]
- MEISTER, KLAUS. Das Datum des römisch-karthagischen Vertrages: [kata tēn Pyrrou diabasin]. Parola Passata, no. 138, 1971. [8124]
- MEISTER, KLAUS. Die synchronistische Darstellung des Polybios im Gegensatz zur Disposition des Ephoros und Theopomp. Hermes, no. 4, 1971. [8125]
- MERKELBACH, R. Das Osiris-Fest des 24./25. Dezember in Rom. Aegyptus, no. 1-4, 1969. [8126]
- MILLAR, FERGUS. Paul of Samosata, Zenobia and Aurelian: the Church, Local Culture and Political Allegiance in Third-century Syria. J. Roman Stud., LXI, 1971. [8127]
- MIRKOVIĆ, MIROSLAVA. Dalmatae Scordis <ci> superati [in Serbian; Ger. summary]. Ziva Antika, XX, 1970. [8128]
- MÓCSY, A. Zur frühesten Besatzungsperiode in Pannonien. Acta Archaeol. (Budapest), XXIII, 1971. [8129]
- MOELLER, WALTER O. The Trinci/Trinqui and the Martyrs of Lyons. Historia, no. 1, 1972. [8130]
- MORGAN, M. GWYN. Lucius Cotta and Metellus. Roman Campaigns in Illyria during the late second century. Athenaeum, no. 3-4, 1971. [8131]
- MORGAN, M. GWYN. The Portico of Metellus: A Reconsideration. Hermes, no. 4, 1971. [8132]
- MORTON, RICHARD K. The Early Roman Empire. Class. Bull., Jan. 1972. [8133]
- MOTTO, ANNA LYDIA. Seneca on Women's Liberation. Class. World, Jan. 1972. [8134]
- MROZEK, STANISLAW. Zu den Preisen und Löhnen bei Lukian. Eos, no. 2, 1971. [8135]
- NAGY, T. Der Vicus und das Municipium von Aquincum. Acta Archaeol. (Budapest), XXIII, 1971. [8136]
- NAVASCUÉS, JOAQUÍN M<sup>a</sup> DE. Cronología Monetaria Caesar-Augustana (siglo I a. C.). Bol. Real Acad. Hist., Sept.-Dec. 1971. [8137]
- NICOLET, CLAUDE. Les variations des prix et la "théorie quantitative de la monnaie" à Rome, de Cicéron à Pline l'Ancien. An.: Ec., Soc., Civil., no. 6, 1971. [8138]
- NONY, DANIEL. A propos des nouveaux procurateurs d'Astorga. Arch. Español Arqueol., 43, 1970. [8139]

- NUTTON, VIVIAN. Two Notes on Immunities: Digest 27, 1, 6, 10 and 11. J. Roman Stud., LXI, 1971. [8140]
- OGLIVIE, R. M. Fragments of a New Manuscript of Livy. Rhein. Mus. Philol., no. 3, 1971. [8141]
- PALMER, ROBERT E. A. Tre lettere in cerca di storico. R. Filol. Istruz. Class., no. 4, 1971. [8142]
- PARRISH, EVE J. The Senate on January 1, 62 BC. Class. World, Jan. 1972. [8143]
- PASOLI, ELIO. Ancora su Sall. Ep. Caes. 2, 7, 6. R. Filol. Istruz. Class., no. 4, 1971. [8144]
- PEKKANEN, TUOMO. Note critiche a Tacito, Germania 45, 1 e 46, 2. R. Filol. Istruz. Class., no. 3, 1971. [8145]
- PEPERMANS, G. M. A. Het beeld van keizer Augustus in de poëzie van Horatius. Hermeneus, Apr. 1972. [8146]
- PERUZZI, EMILIO. Livio 1, 20, 5. R. Filol. Istruz. Class., no. 3, 1971. [8147]
- PETRIKOVITS, HARALD VON. Fortifications in the North-western Roman Empire from the Third to the Fifth Centuries A.D. J. Roman Stud., LXI, 1971. [8148]
- PEYRE, CHRISTIAN. Tite-Live et la "férocité" gauloise. R. Et. lat., XLVIII, 1970. [8149]
- PIANKO, GABRIELA. Korespondenci Cyserona: Młodzi Cyseronowie [on the young Ciceros, Marcus M.f. and Quintus Q.f.; in Polish; Latin summary]. Meander, no. 1, 1972. [8150]
- PIPER, LINDA J. Livy's Portrayal of Early Roman Women. Class. Bull., Dec. 1971. [8151]
- PÓCZY, K. SZ. Die Anfänge der Urbanisation in Scarbantia. Acta Archaeol. (Budapest), XXIII, 1971. [8152]
- POLAČEK, ADALBERT. Le traité de paix d'Apamée. R. int. droits antiq., XVIII, 1971. [8153]
- POTIER, RENÉ. Réflexions sur une "Question d'Alésia" [two pts.]. Information hist., no. 5, 1971; no. 1, 1972. [8154]
- POUCET, JACQUES. Romains, Sabins et Samnites. Antiq. class., no. 1, 1971. [8155]
- RATTI, EDOARDO. Impero romano e armonia dell'universo nella pratica retorica e nella concezione religiosa di Elio Aristide: una ricerca per l' [eis Rōmēn]. Mem. Ist. Lombardo, no. 4, 1971. [8156]
- REA, J. A new view of PSI 870 [Restitutus as a prefect of Egypt]. Bull. Am. Soc. Papyrol., Dec. 1971. [8157]
- REA, JOHN R. Notes on some III<sup>d</sup> and IVth Century Documents. Chron. Egypte, Jan. 1971. [8158]
- REA, J. R. O. Leid. 144 and the Chronology of A.D. 238. Z. Papyrol. Epig., 9, no. 1, 1972. [8159]
- REAGAN, CHRISTOPHER J. Laterculum Prosopographicum Plinianum. Rend. Ist. Lombardo, no. 2-3, 1970. [8160]
- REED, NICHOLAS. The Fifth Year of Agricola's Campaigns. Britannia, II, 1971. [8161]
- REINHOLD, MEYER. Marcus Agrippa's Son-in-law P. Quinctilius Varus. Class. Philol., Apr. 1972. [8162]
- RICHARD, JEAN-CLAUDE. Salluste témoin et juge de son temps [r. art.]. R. Et. lat., XLVIII, 1970. [8163]
- RIVET, A. L. F. The British Section of the Antonine Itinerary. Britannia, I, 1970. [8164]
- ROBERTSON, ANNE. Roman Finds from non-Roman Sites in Scotland. More Roman "Drift" in Caledonia. Britannia, I, 1970. [8165]
- ROKEAH, DAVID. Jews and their Law (Torah) in the Pagan-Christian Polemic in the Roman Empire. Tarbiz, July-Sept. 1971. [8166]
- ROWLAND, ROBERT J., JR. Plutarch, Romulus 14. Class. World, Mar. 1972. [8167]
- ROZITIS, PABLO PIERNABIEJA. Estela funeraria del sagitario Tito Flavio Expedito. Arch. Español Arqueol., 43, 1970. [8168]
- RUBINSOHN, ZEEV. Was the Bellum Spartacium a Servile Insurrection? R. Filol. Istruz. Class., no. 3, 1971. [8169]
- RUGGINI, LELLIA CRACCO. Sofisti greci nell'impero romano [r. art.]. Athenaeum, no. 3-4, 1971. [8170]
- SACHAROFF, MARK. Suicide and Brutus' Philosophy in Julius Caesar. J. Hist. Ideas, no. 1, 1972. [8171]
- SALAMON, MACIEJ. The chronology of Gothic incursions into Asia Minor in the IIIrd Century A.D. Eos, no. 1, 1971. [8172]
- SCARDIGLI, BARBARA. Considerazioni sulle fonti della biografia plutarca di Sertorio. Stud. Ital. Filol. Class., no. 1, 1971. [8173]
- SCARDIGLI, BARBARA. Sertorio: problemi cronologici. Athenaeum, no. 3-4, 1971. [8174]
- SCHILLING, ROBERT. L'originalité du vocabulaire religieux latin. R. belge philol. hist., no. 1, 1971. [8175]
- SCHILLING, ROBERT. Sacrum et profanum. Essai d'interprétation. Latomus, no. 4, 1971. [8176]
- SCHUBERT, WERNER. Die rechtliche Sonderstellung der Dekurionen (Kurialen) in der Kaisergesetzgebung des 4.-6. Jahrhunderts. Z. Savigny-Stiftung Rechtsgesch. (Rom. Abt.), 86, 1969. [8177]
- SCOVAZZI, MARCO. Tuisto e Mannus nel II Capitolo della Germania di Tacito. Rend. Ist. Lombardo, no. 2-3, 1970. [8178]
- SELEM, ANTONIO. A proposito del comando militare di Giuliano in Gallia secondo Ammiano. R. Cult. Class. Med., XIII, 1971. [8179]
- SESTON, WILLIAM, and EUZENAT, MAURICE. Un dossier de la chancellerie romaine: la Tabula Banasitana. Etude de diplomatique. C. R. Acad. Inscr., July-Oct. 1971. [8180]
- SHELTON, JOHN C. A Land Lease from the Age of Augustus. Trans. Proc. Am. Philol. Assoc., 101, 1970. [8181]
- SHOTTER, D. C. A. Julians, Claudians and the Accession of Tiberius. Latomus, no. 4, 1971. [8182]
- SHOTTER, D. C. A. The Trial of C. Junius Silanus. Class. Philol., Apr. 1972. [8183]
- SHOTTER, D. C. A. The Trial of M. Scribonius Libo Drusus. Historia, no. 1, 1972. [8184]
- SOMMELLA, PAOLO. Per uno studio degli insediamenti nelle valli del Sacco e del Liri in età preromana. Stud. Etruschi, XXXIX, 1971. [8185]
- SORDI, MARTA. La Via Aurelia da Vada a Pisa nell'antichità. Athenaeum, no. 3-4, 1971. [8186]
- SOTIROFF, G. The Language of Emperor Valentinian. Class. World, Mar. 1972. [8187]

- SOUBIRAN, J. Une analyse du style historique [r. art.]. R. Et. lat., XLVIII, 1970. [8188]
- SULLIVAN, J. P. The Politics of Elegy. Arethusa, Spring 1972. [8189]
- SUMMERS, RICHARD G. Apuleius' Juridicus. Historia, no. 1, 1972. [8190]
- SUMMERS, RICHARD G. Roman Justice and Apuleius' Metamorphoses. Trans. Proc. Am. Philol. Assoc., 101, 1970. [8191]
- SUMNER, G. V. The Lex Annalis under Caesar [2 pts.]. Phoenix, nos. 3-4, 1971. [8192]
- SZELEST, HANNA. Rolle und Aufgaben der Reden und Briefe in der "Historia Augusta." Eos, no. 2, 1971. [8193]
- TANDOI, VINCENZO. Restauri testuali nell' Historia Augusta. Stud. Ital. Filol. Class., no. 12, 1971. [8194]
- TANGUY, BERNARD. Un nom celtique de la forêt dans la toponymie de la France: le gaulois "cetón" et ses dérivés. Bull. philol. hist., II, 1968. [8195]
- TANNER, R. G. Some Problems in Aeneid 7-12. Proc. Virgil Soc., 10, 1970-71. [8196]
- TERNES, CH.-M. Paysage réel et coulisse idyllique dans la "Mosella" d'Ausone. R. Et. lat., XLVIII, 1970. [8197]
- THEVENOT, ÉM. La voie d'Autun vers la Séquanie. Latomus, no. 4, 1971. [8198]
- THOMAS, G. S. R. Flavius Antonius Eustochius (CIL VI, 508) n'était pas un archigalle. R. belge philol. hist., no. 1, 1971. [8199]
- THOMAS, J. DAVID. On Dating by Regnal Years of Diocletian, Maximian and the Caesars. Chron. Egypte, Jan. 1971. [8200]
- TIBILETTI, G. Nota al miliario di Çalış. Oriens antiquus, no. 1, 1971. [8201]
- TODD, MALCOLM. The Small Towns of Roman Britain. Britannia, I, 1970. [8202]
- TOMULESCU, C. ST. Paul, D. 18. 1. 1 pr. et la mancipatio. R. int. droits antiq., XVIII, 1971. [8203]
- TORELLI, MARIO. Per la storia dell'Etruria in età imperiale. R. Filol. Istruz. Class., no. 4, 1971. [8204]
- TRÄNKLE, HERMANN. Livius und Polybios. Gymnasium, no. 1-2, 1972. [8205]
- TRIANTAPHYLLOPOULOS, JEAN. Lex Apuleia de sponsu. Aegyptus, no. 1-4, 1969. [8206]
- USSANI, VINCENZO, JR. Leggendo Plinio il giovane, II. Oratio-Historia. R. Cult. Class. Med., XIII, 1971. [8207]
- VISKY, KÁROLY. Urteilsbegründung im römischen Zivilprozess. R. int. droits antiq., XVIII, 1971. [8208]
- VOLPONI, MARINA. M. Celio Rufo, "ingeniose nequam." Mem. Ist. Lombardo, no. 3, 1971. [8209]
- VREESE, J. DE. Scipio en de Numidische Prins (Livius 27, c. 19). Hermeneus, Apr. 1972. [8210]
- WARD, ALLEN M. Politics in the Trials of Manilius and Cornelius. Trans. Proc. Am. Philol. Assoc., 101, 1970. [8211]
- WEAVER, P. R. C. Bureaucratic Structure and the Problem of Corruption in the Administration of the Early Roman Empire. AULLA, 12, 1969. [8212]
- WEBSTER, GRAHAM. The Military Situations in Britain Between A.D. 43 and 71. Britannia, I, 1970. [8213]
- WEINRIB, E. J. Obnuntiatio: Two Problems. Z. Savigny-Stiftung Rechtsgesch. (Rom. Abt.), 87, 1970. [8214]
- WELCH, M. G. Late Romans and Saxons in Sussex. Britannia, II, 1971. [8215]
- WELLESLEY, KENNETH. A Major Crux in Tacitus: Historiae II, 40. J. Roman Stud., LXI, 1971. [8216]
- WIKARJAK, JAN. Les conseillers de Cicéron. Eos, no. 1, 1971. [8217]
- WILKES, JOHN. Julio-Claudian Historians. Class. World, Feb. 1972. [8218]
- WISEMAN, T. P. Roman Republican Road-Building. Pap. Brit. School Rome, 38, 1970. [8219]
- WÓJCIK, ANDRZEJ. De Catone Maiore Censorii cognomine appellato [in Polish; Latin summary]. Eos, no. 2, 1971. [8220]
- XELLA, P. A proposito del giuramento annibalico. Oriens antiquus, no. 2, 1971. [8221]

EARLY CHRISTIAN

- BALCH, D. L. Backgrounds of I Cor. VII: Sayings of the Lord in Q; Moses as an Ascetic [theios anēr] in II Cor. III. New Test. Stud., Apr. 1972. [8222]
- BRANDON, S. G. F. Jesus and the Zealots: Aftermath. Bull. John Rylands Lib., Autumn 1971. [8223]
- BUCHNER, EDMUND. Eine neue christliche Inschrift aus Alicante. Mitt. Deutsch. Archäol. Inst., Madrid. Abt., XII, 1971. [8224]
- BUDESHEIM, THOMAS L. Jesus and the Disciples in Conflict with Judaism. Z. Neutest. Wiss., no. 3-4, 1971. [8225]
- CLARKE, G. W. Prosopographical Notes on the Epistles of Cyprian. I. The Spanish Bishops of Epistle 67. Latomus, no. 4, 1971. [8226]
- DANIEL, CONSTANTIN. Un Essénien mentionné dans les Actes des Apôtres: Barjésu. Muséon, no. 3-4, 1971. [8227]
- FIÉY, JEAN MAURICE. Ma'in, général de Sapor II, confesseur et évêque. Muséon, no. 3-4, 1971. [8228]
- GRÄSSER, ERICH. "Der politisch gekreuzigte Christus." Kritische Anmerkungen zu einer politischen Hermeneutik des Evangeliums. Z. Neutest. Wiss., no. 3-4, 1971. [8229]
- KANE, J. P. By No Means "The Earliest Records of Christianity"—with an Emended Reading of the Talpiot Inscription [iġsōus iou]. Palestine Explor. Q., July-Dec. 1971. [8230]
- KLIJN, A. F. J. Christianity in Edessa and the Gospel of Thomas. Novum Test., Jan. 1972. [8231]
- KRETSCHMAR, GEORG. Festkalender und Memorialstätten Jerusalems in altkirchlicher Zeit. Z. Deutsch. Palästina-Ver., no. 2, 1971. [8232]
- PATSCH, HERMANN. Abendmahlsterminologie ausserhalb der Einsetzungsberichte. Erwägungen zur Traditionsgeschichte der Abendmahlsworte. Z. Neutest. Wiss., no. 3-4, 1971. [8233]
- SMITH, MORTON; FUNKENSTEIN, AMOS; and MARTY, MARTIN E. The Cambridge History of the Bible [r. art.]. AHR, Feb. 1972. [8234]

STEINSEIFER, BERND. Der Ort der Erscheinungen des Auferstandenen. Zur Frage alter galiläischer Ostertraditionen. Z. Neutest. Wiss., no. 3-4, 1971. [8235]

TROMPF, G. W. The First Resurrection Appearance and the Ending of Mark's Gospel. New Test. Stud., Apr. 1972. [8236]

WIND, A. Destination and Purpose of the Gospel of John. Novum Test., Jan. 1972. [8237]

ARCHEOLOGY

AHMED, SAMI SAID. Hatra, Iraq. Archaeology, Apr. 1972. [8238]

BARTOLONI, P. Fortificazioni puniche a Sulcis. Oriens antiquus, no. 2, 1971. [8239]

BISI, A. M. Recenti scoperte puniche in Sicilia. Oriens antiquus, no. 3, 1970. [8240]

BRANIGAN, KEITH. Pavements and Poverty in the Chiltern Villas. Britannia, II, 1971. [8241]

BRUNEAU, PHILIPPE. Une nouvelle publication de fouilles: Eretria [r. art.]. R. Et. grecques, Jan.-June 1971. [8242]

CAMPBELL, EDWARD F., JR.; ROSS, JAMES F.; and TOOMBS, LAWRENCE E. The Eighth Campaign at Balâṭah (Shechem). Bull. Am. Schools Orient. Res., Dec. 1971. [8243]

CASSON, LIONEL. Il Palazzo dei Conservatori. Archaeology, Apr. 1972. [8244]

CHARLESWORTH, DOROTHY. Tell El-Fara'in, Egypt: An Industrial Site in the Nile Delta. Archaeology, Jan. 1972. [8245]

CHEVALLIER, RAYMOND. Problématique de l'archéologie gallo-romaine (1955-1970). J. Roman Stud., LXI, 1971. [8246]

CLEERE, HENRY. Ironmaking in a Roman Furnace. Britannia, II, 1971. [8247]

CONRAD, JOACHIM. Petra und Palmyra. Zwei Handelsstädte im östlichen Grenzbereich der hellenistisch-römischen Welt. Das Altertum, no. 3, 1971. [8248]

DEVER, WILLIAM G.; LANCE, H. DARRELL; BULLARD, REUBEN G.; COLE, DAN P.; FURSHPAN, ANITA M.; HOLLADAY, JOHN S., JR.; SEGER, JOE D.; and WRIGHT, ROBERT B. Further Excavations at Gezer, 1967-1971. Biblical Archaeologist, no. 4, 1971. [8249]

FELTEN, FLORENS. Römische Panzerstatue in München. Archäol. Anz., no. 2, 1971. [8250]

FRERE, S. S. The Forum and Baths at Caistor by Norwich. Britannia, II, 1971. [8251]

GIMBUTAS, MARIJA. Excavation at Anza, Macedonia. Further insight into the civilization of Old Europe, 7000-4000 B.C. Archaeology, Apr. 1972. [8252]

JASHEMSKI, WILHELMINA F. A Vineyard at Pompeii [2 pts.]. Archaeology, Jan., Apr. 1972. [8253]

KRIS, H. I. The Taurians and the Kizil-Kobin Culture [in Russian; Eng. summary]. Vest. drev. ist., no. 4, 1971. [8254]

KUZMINA, E. E. Early Stages in the Evolution of North Bactrian Culture [in Russian; Eng. summary]. Vest. drev. ist., no. 1, 1972. [8255]

LAUTER, HANS. Heiligtum oder Markt? [Excavation at Alba Fucentia]. Archäol. Anz., no. 1, 1971. [8256]

LOVE, IRIS CORNELIA. A Preliminary Report of the Excavations at Knidos, 1970. Am. J. Archaeol., Jan. 1972. [8257]

LUTZ, MARCEL. Le domaine gallo-romain de Saint-Ulrich (Moselle). Gallia, no. 1, 1971. [8258]

MALLWITZ, A. Ein neuer Übersichtsplan von Olympia. Archäol. Anz., no. 2, 1971. [8259]

MELLINK, MACHTELD J. Archaeology in Asia Minor. Am. J. Archaeol., Apr. 1972. [8260]

MEYERS, ERIC M.; KRAABEL, A. THOMAS; and STRANGE, JAMES F. Archaeology and Rabbinic Tradition at Khirbet Shema'. 1970 and 1971 Campaigns. Biblical Archaeologist, no. 1, 1972. [8261]

MICHAUD, JEAN-PIERRE. Chronique des fouilles et découvertes archéologiques en Grèce en 1970. Bull. corr. hell., no. 2, 1971. [8262]

NEGEV, A. The Nabatean Necropolis of Mampsis (Kurnub). Israel Explor. J., no. 2-3, 1971. [8263]

PAPAPOSTOLOU, J. A. Topographical Notes from Patras [in Greek; Eng. summary]. Athens An. Archaeol., no. 3, 1971. [8264]

PÉRICHON, ROBERT. Le gisement protohistorique d'Aulnat. Cah. hist., no. 1, 1972. [8265]

PICARD, GILBERT. Les sanctuaires d'Argentomagus. C. R. Acad. Inscr., July-Oct. 1971. [8266]

READE, J. E. Tell Taya (1968-9): Summary Report. Iraq, Autumn 1971. [8267]

SACKETT, L. H., and POPHAM, M. R. Lefkandi: A Euboean Town of the Bronze Age and the Early Iron Age (2100-700 B.C.). Archaeology, Jan. 1972. [8268]

SETTIS, SALVATORE. Medma, An Ancient Greek City of Southern Italy. Archaeology, Jan. 1972. [8269]

TORELLI, MARIO. Il santuario di Hera a Gravisca. Parola Passata, no. 136, 1971. [8270]

WEINBERG, S. S. Tel Anafa: The Hellenistic Town. Israel Explor. J., no. 2-3, 1971. [8271]

WILLIAMS, J. H. Roman Building-Materials in South-East England. Britannia, II, 1971. [8272]

ZIRRA, VLAD. Beiträge zur Kenntnis des keltischen Latène in Rumänien. Dacia, XV, 1971. [8273]

INSCRIPTIONS, COINS, PAPYRI

AMELOTTI, MARIO. Le costituzioni giustinianee nei papiri. Bull. Am. Soc. Papyrol., Dec. 1971. [8274]

ARAKELYAN, B. N. Latin Inscriptions from Artashat, Capital of Ancient Armenia [in Russian; Eng. summary]. Vest. drev. ist., no. 4, 1971. [8275]

BATES, GEORGE E. Constans II or Heraclonas? An Analysis of the Constantinopolitan Folles of Constans II. Am. Numis. Soc. Mus. Notes, 17, 1971. [8276]

BEDOUKIAN, PAUL Z. Coinage of the Later Artaxiads. Am. Numis. Soc. Mus. Notes, 17, 1971. [8277]

- BEN-DAVID, ARYE. Jewish and Roman Bronze and Copper Coins: Their Reciprocal Relations in Mishnah and Talmud from Herod the Great to Trajan and Hadrian. Palestine Explor. Q., July-Dec. 1971. [8278]
- BETANCOURT, PHILIP P. A Hoard of Bronze Coins from Erythrae. Am. Numis. Soc. Mus. Notes, 17, 1971. [8279]
- BITRAKOVA-GROZANOVA, VERA. Trois monuments épigraphiques d'Ohrid [in Serbian; Fr. summary]. Ziva Antika, XX, 1970. [8280]
- BOGOSLOVSKY, EUĞ. Monuments and Documents from Dêr el-Medîna [in Russian; Eng. summary]. Vest. drev. ist., no. 1, 1972. [8281]
- BOUSQUET, JEAN. Affranchissements de Larissa (Thessalie): Note complémentaire. Bull. corr. hell., no. 2, 1971. [8282]
- BOUSQUET, JEAN. Inscriptions de Rennes. Gallia, no. 1, 1971. [8283]
- BRESCIANI, EDDA. Un papiro demotico da Tebe nel Kunsthistorisches Museum di Wien. Aegyptus, no. 1-4, 1969. [8284]
- BROWNE, G. M. Ad P. Oxy XXXIV 2705. [The papyrus is concerned with the registration of chirographs.] Bull. Am. Soc. Papyrol., Dec. 1971. [8285]
- CASTROVIEJO, FERNANDO ACUÑA; GONZALEZ-PARDO, ISIDORO MILLÁN; and ALÉN, ALFREDO GARCÍA. Dos voces indígenas en nuevas inscripciones galaico-romanas. Emerita, no. 2, 1971. [8286]
- CATALANO, VIRGILIO. La più antica epigrafe scherzosa ellenica graffita su pithos a Phaistos. G. Ital. Filol., Nov. 1971. [8287]
- CRAWFORD, MICHAEL. A Roman Representation of the [Keramos Troikos]. J. Roman Stud., LXI, 1971. [8288]
- DOLLEY, MICHAEL, and SEABY, W. A. A Parcel of Fourth-Century Roman Coins from North-Western Asia Minor. Numis. Circ., no. 3, 1972. [8289]
- DRAGOJEVIĆ-JOSIFOVSKA, BORKA. Un autel votif de Scupi [in Serbian; Fr. summary]. Ziva Antika, XX, 1970. [8290]
- DREW-BEAR, THOMAS. Deux inscriptions à Aphrodisias. Z. Papyrol. Epig., 8, no. 3, 1971. [8291]
- ERIM, KENAN T.; REYNOLDS, JOYCE; and CRAWFORD, MICHAEL. Diocletian's Currency Reform; A New Inscription. J. Roman Stud., LXI, 1971. [8292]
- GARCÍA Y BELLIDO, ANTONIO. Novedades Epigráficas. Inscripciones romanas de Córdoba, Navarra, Extremadura, Portugal, Cádiz, Ciudad Real, Málaga y Murcia. Bol. Real Acad. Hist., May-Aug. 1971. [8293]
- GILMORE, PETER. An Unrecorded Bronze of Antioch in Pisidia? Numis. Circ., no. 3, 1972. [8294]
- HEINEN, HEINZ. Zur Chronologie der Ehen des Ptolemaios VIII. Euergetes II. Eine vergleichende Untersuchung griechischer, demotischer und hieroglyphischer Papyri und Inschriften. Bull. Am. Soc. Papyrol., Dec. 1971. [8295]
- HINZ, W. Zu den elamischen Burgbau-Inschriften Darius I. aus Susa. Acta Antiqua (Budapest), no. 1-2, 1971. [8296]
- HOLLOWAY, R. ROSS. An Archaic Hoard from Crete and the Early Aeginetan Coinage. Am. Numis. Soc. Mus. Notes, 17, 1971. [8297]
- ISTITUTO PAPIROLOGICO "G. VITELLI." Silloge di papiri documentari. Stud. Ital. Filol. Class., no. 2, 1971. [8298]
- JONES, J. R. Some Numismatic Problems in the Delian Inscriptions. Am. Numis. Soc. Mus. Notes, 17, 1971. [8299]
- KINDLER, A. A Coin of Herod Philip—the Earliest Portrait of a Herodian Ruler. Israel Explor. J., no. 2-3, 1971. [8300]
- KLEINER, FRED S. The Alexander Tetradrachms of Pergamum and Rhodes. Am. Numis. Soc. Mus. Notes, 17, 1971. [8301]
- KNOEPFLER, DENIS. Un décret de Kymê d'Eolide au Musée National d'Athènes. Bull. corr. hell., no. 2, 1971. [8302]
- KOUMANOUDES, STEPHEN N., and MILLER, STEPHEN G. I.G., II<sup>2</sup>, 1477 and 3046 Rediscovered. Hesperia, no. 4, 1971. [8303]
- KRAMOLISCH, HERWIG. Bemerkungen zu einer Freilassungsurkunde aus Larisa. Z. Papyrol. Epig., 9, no. 1, 1972. [8304]
- KRUETZMAN, WILLIAM E., and ROWE, CLEMENT E. Ancient Coins from the Tiber River. Numismatist, Apr. 1972. [8305]
- LEWIS, NAPHTALI. A Centurion's Will Linking Two of the Karanis Fourth-Century Archives. Bull. Am. Soc. Papyrol., Dec. 1971. [8306]
- LUNDIN, A. G. Inscriptions from Jār al-Labbā [in Russian; Eng. summary]. Vest. drev. ist., no. 1, 1972. [8307]
- MACQUERON, JEAN. La lacune du C. I. L. III. 933 no. IV. Aegyptus, no. 1-4, 1969. [8308]
- MAEHLE, H. Ein römischer Veteran und das Militärarchiv. Bull. Am. Soc. Papyrol., Dec. 1971. [8309]
- MARROU, HENRI-IRÉNÉE. Deux inscriptions latines d'Apt et de Marseille. C. R. Acad. Inscr., Apr.-June 1971. [8310]
- MARTINI, WOLFRAM. Samos 1970. "Römische Ruine." Archäol. Anz., no. 2, 1971. [8311]
- MATTINGLY, HAROLD B. The Verulamium (1960) Hoard of "Barbarous Radiates." Britannia, II, 1971. [8312]
- MELIKISHVILI, G. A. Urartian Cuneiform Inscriptions. II. Discoveries and Publications, 1954-1970 [in Russian]. Vest. drev. ist., no. 4, 1971. [8313]
- MESHORER, Y. A New Type of Coins of Agrippa II. Israel Explor. J., no. 2-3, 1971. [8314]
- MITREA, BUCUR. Découvertes récentes et plus anciennes de monnaies antiques et byzantines en Roumanie. Dacia, XV, 1971. [8315]
- MONTEVECCHI, O., and GERACI, G. Documenta inedita ad Neronis atque Othonis principatus pertinentia in papyris Mediolanensibus reperta (P. Med. inv. 70.01; 69.66). Bull. Am. Soc. Papyrol., Dec. 1971. [8316]
- OLIVIER, JEAN-PIERRE, and PELON, OLIVIER. Un tesson inscrit en linéaire A de Mallia. Bull. corr. hell., no. 2, 1971. [8317]
- OSBORNE, MICHAEL J. A Closer Join in the First Evagoras Decree. Z. Papyrol. Epig., 9, no. 1, 1972. [8318]
- OSBORNE, MICHAEL J. Notes on Attic Inscriptions. An. Brit. School Athens, 66, 1971. [8319]
- PALMAITIS, L. The First Ancient Ammonite Inscription of the I Millennium B.C. [in Russian; Eng. summary]. Vest. drev. ist., no. 4, 1971. [8320]

PAPAZOGLU, FANOULA. Inscription hellénistique de Lyncestide. Ziva Antika, XX, 1970. [8321]

PEEK, WERNER. Epigramme und andere Inschriften aus Lakonien und Arkadien. Sitzungsber. Heidelberger Akad. Wiss., no. 2, 1971. [8322]

PERNIGOTTI, S. Un papiro demotico di epoca saitica nel Kunsthistorisches Museum di Vienna (inv. 3853). Oriens antiquus, no. 3, 1971. [8323]

PETZL, GEORG. Zwei Inschriften aus Smyrna. Z. Papyrol. Epig., 9, no. 1, 1972. [8324]

PICOUS, N. N. Zur Frage der sozialen Lage der griechischen Bauern und Handwerker in Ägypten im 3. Jahrhundert v. Chr. Bull. Am. Soc. Papyrol., Dec. 1971. [8325]

REYNOLDS, JOYCE. Roman Inscriptions 1966-1970. J. Roman Stud., LXI, 1971. [8326]

ROESCH, PAUL. Une dédicace en l'honneur de Vespasien a Salamine de Chypre. Bull. corr. hell., no. 2, 1971. [8327]

ROQUEFEUIL, SYLVIE DE. Un nouveau trésor d'antoniniani frappés en Orient. R. Numis., XII, 1970. [8328]

ROWE, C. E. Unlisted Varieties of Mint and Officina Marks in a Hoard of Roman Folles. Numis. Circ., no. 2, 1972. [8329]

SERRANO, CARLOS CALLEJO. Nuevo repertorio epigrafico de la provincia de Caceres. Arch. Español Arqueol., 43, 1970. [8330]

SHELTON, JOHN C. BGU III 920: Two Notes. [The date of the papyrus is A.D. 212.] Z. Papyrol. Epig., 8, no. 3, 1971. [8331]

SPEIDEL, MICHAEL P. P. Gen. lat. 1 und der Sold der römischen Hilfstruppen. Bull. Am. Soc. Papyrol., Dec. 1971. [8332]

SZÖKE, M. Building Inscription of a Silvanus Sanctuary from Cirpi (Dunabogdány). Acta Archaeol. (Budapest), XXIII, 1971. [8333]

THOMAS, J. D. Notes on Documentary Papyri (P. Oxy. 1572 and 2561, BGU 2118) [third century A.D.]. Z. Papyrol. Epig., 8, no. 3, 1971. [8334]

TROXELL, HYL A. The Peloponnesian Alexanders. Am. Numis. Soc. Mus. Notes, 17, 1971. [8335]

TZORI, N. An Inscription of the Legio VI Ferrata from the Northern Jordan Valley. Israel Explor. J., no. 1, 1971. [8336]

VANDERPOOL, EUGENE. An Athenian Decree in Phocian Stiris. Athens An. Archaeol., no. 3, 1971. [8337]

VINOGRADOV, YU. G. A Greek Letter from Berezan [of the 6th century B.C.; in Russian; Eng. summary]. Vest. drev. ist., no. 4, 1971. [8338]

WRIGHT, R. P. Roman Britain in 1969. The Inscriptions. Britannia, I, 1970. [8339]

WRIGHT, R. P., and HASSALL, M. W. C. Roman Britain in 1970. II. Inscriptions. Britannia, II, 1971. [8340]

YOUTIE, L. C.; HAGEDORN, D.; and YOUTIE, H. C. Documents from Panopolis II. Z. Papyrol. Epig., 8, no. 3, 1971. [8341]

MEDIEVAL

Bernard J. Holm, Wartburg Theological Seminary

AIRALDI, GABRIELLA. Qual è la patria di Antonio Ivani [humanist, 1430-1482]? Arch. stor. ital., no. 2-3, 1972. [8342]

ALONSO, ADOLFO MUÑOZ. Tomás de Aquino, peregrino de Dios. Sapientia, Apr.-Dec. 1971. [8343]

AMARGIER, P. PAUL. La pêche en petite Camargue au XIV<sup>e</sup> siècle. Bull. philol. hist., I, 1968. [8344]

ANTONIADIS-BIBICOU, HÉLÈNE. Démographie, salaires et prix à Byzance au XI<sup>e</sup> siècle. An.: Ec., Soc., Civil., Jan.-Feb. 1972. [8345]

ARON, RAYMOND. Comment l'historien écrit l'épistémologie: à propos du livre de Paul Veyne. An.: Ec., Soc., Civil., Nov.-Dec. 1971. [8346]

ASHTOR, E. Un mouvement migratoire au haut Moyen Age: Migrations de l'Irak vers les pays méditerranéens. An.: Ec., Soc., Civil., Jan.-Feb. 1972. [8347]

BAKER, DEREK. St. Antony and Biblical Precedents for the Monastic Vocation. Ampleforth J., no. 1, 1971. [8348]

BALBERGHE, ÉMILE VAN. Le commentaire sur les Clémentines d'Étienne Troches et Pierre d'Estaing. R. Hist. Eccles., no. 2, 1971. [8349]

BARBET, A. Mercin et Vaux (Aisne), un établissement gallo-romain à bassin en forme de T. R. Nord, Oct.-Dec. 1971. [8350]

BARNES, CARL F., JR. The Gothic Architectural Engravings in the Cathedral of Soissons. Speculum, Jan. 1972. [8351]

BARON, FRANK. Der erste Druck einer Schrift Augustins. Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte des frühen Buchdrucks und des Humanismus. Hist. Jb., no. 1, 1971. [8352]

BARONI, MARIA FRANCA. Elementi storici e diplomatici in un formulario di indirizzi della cancellaria di Francesco Sforza conservato nella Biblioteca Trivulziana di Milano. Arch. stor. lombardo, VIII, 1971. [8353]

BASS, GEORGE F. A Byzantine Trading Venture: Early in the Seventh Century a Small Cargo Ship Went Down in the Eastern Mediterranean. Four Seasons of Underwater Investigation Have Reconstructed the Vessel's Last Voyage. Sci. Am., Aug. 1971. [8354]

BAUTIER, ROBERT-HENRI. Les mutations agricoles des XIV<sup>e</sup> et XV<sup>e</sup> siècles et les progrès de l'élevage. Bull. philol. hist., I, 1967. [8355]

BAUTIER, ROBERT-HENRI. Origine et diffusion du sceau de juridiction. C. R. Acad. Inscr., Apr.-June 1971. [8356]

BAUTIER, ROBERT-HENRI. Une opération de décentralisation industrielle sous Philippe V: l'installation de drapiers parisiens à Gray (1318). Bull. philol. hist., II, 1968. [8357]

BECKERMAN, JOHN S. Succession in Normandy, 1087, and in England, 1066: The Role of Testamentary Custom. Speculum, Apr. 1972. [8358]

- BEER, JEANETTE M. A. A Mediaeval Cato—Virtus or Virtue? Speculum, Jan. 1972. [8359]
- BERMEGO, JOAQUÍN VALLVÉ. La división territorial en la España Musulmana. La Cora de Jaén. Al-Andalus, no. 1, 1969. [8360]
- BERQUE, JACQUES. Retour à Mazouna [Islamic Algiers in the fifteenth century]. An.: Ec., Soc., Civil., Jan.-Feb. 1972. [8361]
- BERZA, MIHAI. Nicole Iorga [1871-1940] et les traditions du Sud-Est Européen dans le domaine de la culture. J. World Hist., no. 3, 1971. [8362]
- BEŠEVILIEV, V. Les inscriptions protobulgares et leur portée culturelle et historique. Byzantinoslavica, no. 1, 1971. [8363]
- BETHELL, DENIS. The Miracles of St. Ithamar [with Latin text]. Analecta Bollandiana, no. 3-4, 1971. [8364]
- BEZZOLA, RETO R. Introduction à la langue et à la littérature romanches. J. World Hist., no. 3, 1971. [8365]
- Bibliographie, année 1971. R. Hist. Eccles., no. 3-4, 1971. [8366]
- BIENVENU, JEAN-MARC. Les caractères originaux de la Réforme grégorienne dans le diocèse d'Angers. Bull. philol. hist., II, 1968. [8367]
- BLACK, ANTONY. Heimericus de Campo: The Council [of Basel] and History. An. hist. conciliorum, no. 1, 1970. [8368]
- BLECKER, MICHAEL PAULIN. Roman Law and "Consilium" in the Regula Magistri and the Rule of St. Benedict. Speculum, Jan. 1972. [8369]
- BLOMGREN, SVEN. In Venantii Fortunati carmina adnotationes novae. Éranos, LXIX, 1971. [8370]
- BLUM, JEROME. The European Village as Community: Origins and Functions. Agric. Hist., July 1971. [8371]
- BLUMENKRANZ, B. Les Juifs en France médiévale. A propos d'une réimpression récente [Henri Gross, Gallia Judaica, 1897]. Moyen Age, no. 3-4, 1971. [8372]
- BOITEAU, PIERRE; URVEG-RATSIMAMANGA, SUZANNE; and RATSIMAMANGA, RAKOTO. Rôle éventuel de la malnutrition dans l'épidémiologie de la lèpre: exemple de la France du Moyen Age et de la Renaissance. Bull. philol. hist., I, 1968. [8373]
- BORTOLASO, GIOVANNI. L'edizione leonina delle opere di san Tommaso: La ripresa delle pubblicazioni. Civiltà Cattolica, 15 gennaio, 1972. [8374]
- BOÜARD, MICHEL DE. Les graffiti carolingiens de Doué-la-Fontaine (Maine-et-Loire). C. R. Acad. Inscr., Apr.-June 1971. [8375]
- BRAET, HERMAN. Fonction et importance du songe dans la chanson de geste. Moyen Age, no. 3-4, 1971. [8376]
- BRAUNSTEIN, PHILIPPE. Livres de comptes et routes commerciales dans les Alpes orientales et les Balkans au XVI<sup>e</sup> siècle. An.: Ec., Soc., Civil., Jan.-Feb. 1972. [8377]
- BREDIN, HUGH. T. S. Eliot and Thomistic Scholasticism. J. Hist. Ideas, Apr.-June 1972. [8378]
- BROWN, J. V. Henry of Ghent on Internal Sensation. J. Hist. Phil., Jan. 1972. [8379]
- BRÜHL, CARLRICHARD. Eine Fälschung auf den Namen Karls des Einfältigen für das Nonnenkloster St-Andoche zu Autun. Hist. Jb., no. 2, 1971. [8380]
- BUCHHOLZ, PETER. Shamanism—the Testimony of Old Icelandic Literary Tradition. Med. Scand., 4, 1971. [8381]
- BUCK, AUGUST. Italienischer Humanismus. Forschungsbericht. Arch. Kulturgesch., no. 1, 1970. [8382]
- BURNS, ROBERT I. How to End a Crusade: Techniques for Making Peace in the Thirteenth-Century Kingdom of Valencia. Mil. Aff., no. 4, 1971. [8383]
- CAMPBELL, JAMES. The First Century of Christianity in England [597 on]. Ampleforth J., no. 1, 1971. [8384]
- CAMPBELL, MILES W. Note sur les déplacements de Tostig Godwinson en 1066. An. Normandie, Mar. 1972. [8385]
- CAMPBELL, MILES W. Queen Emma and Aelfgifu of Northampton: Canute the Great's Women. Med. Scand., 4, 1971. [8386]
- CARDINI, FRANCO. Una licenza di Niccolò IV all'ospedale di San Gallo. Arch. stor. ital., no. 3-4, 1970. [8387]
- CAROLUS-BARRÉ, LOUIS. Renaut de Clamecy et la condition des "hommes" de Notre-Dame de Cambrai demeurant en Soissonnais à la fin du XIII<sup>e</sup> siècle. Bull. philol. hist., II, 1967. [8388]
- CHAMBERLIN, E. R. The French Invasion of Italy, 1494. Hist. Today, Jan. 1972. [8389]
- CHANTRAINE, G. Josse Clichtove: témoin théologien de l'humanisme parisien. Scolastique et célibat au XVI<sup>e</sup> siècle. R. Hist. Eccles., no. 2, 1971. [8390]
- CHARANIS, P. Graecia in Isidore of Seville. Byz. Z., July 1971. [8391]
- CHARBONNIER, PIERRE. L'alimentation d'un seigneur auvergnat au début du XV<sup>e</sup> siècle. Bull. philol. hist., I, 1968. [8392]
- CHESNUTT, MICHAEL, and ERLINGSSON, DAVID. Norse-Celtic Bibliographical Survey: Second Report. Med. Scand., 4, 1971. [8393]
- CHRISTENSEN, AKSEL E. Hvilken (kong) Svend belejrede Hedeby [a problem in runology]? Hist. tids. (Den.), no. 2, 1971. [8394]
- CHRISTIANSON, GERALD. G. G. Coulton: The Medieval Historian as Controversialist. Cath. Hist. R., Oct. 1971. [8395]
- COBBAN, ALAN B. Medieval Student Power. Past & Present, Nov. 1971. [8396]
- COLE, RICHARD G. Sixteenth-Century Travel Books as a Source of European Attitudes towards Non-White and Non-Western Culture. Proc. Am. Phil. Soc., no. 1, 1972. [8397]
- COLEMAN, EMILY R. A Note on Medieval Peasant Demography. Hist. Methods Newslett., no. 2, 1972. [8398]
- COLKER, M. L. Latin Verses Lamenting the Death of Saint Wulfstan of Worcester. Analecta Bollandiana, no. 3-4, 1971. [8399]
- COLLIN, HUBERT. De Toul à Metz: le regroupement des seigneuries sur la Moselle au Moyen Age et l'apparition des châteaux. Bull. philol. hist., II, 1967. [8400]

- COLLIN, HUBERT. Les ressources alimentaires en Lorraine pendant la première partie du XIV<sup>e</sup> siècle. Bull. philol. hist., I, 1968. [8401]
- COLLIN, SIMONE. L'emploi des clefs des songes dans la littérature médiévale. Bull. philol. hist., II, 1967. [8402]
- CONANT, KENNETH JOHN. La chronologie de Cluny III, d'après les fouilles. Cah. Civil. méd., Oct.-Dec. 1971. [8403]
- CONSTABLE, GILES. The Liber Memorialis of Remiremont. Speculum, Apr. 1972. [8404]
- COWAN, IAN B. Two Early Scottish Taxation Rolls. Innes R., Spring 1971. [8405]
- COWDREY, H. E. J. Anselm of Besate and Some North-Italian Scholars of the Eleventh Century. J. Eccles. Hist., no. 2, 1972. [8406]
- CUNNINGHAM, I. C. Notes on the Auchinleck Manuscript. Speculum, Jan. 1972. [8407]
- DAVIES, R. W. The Romans at Burnswark [archaeological]. Historia, no. 1, 1972. [8408]
- DEBERSEE, MARC. Une dépense à la charge du duc de Bourgogne à la fin du XIV<sup>e</sup> siècle: les travaux et réparations effectués à Lille et dans sa châtellenie. R. Nord, July-Sept. 1971. [8409]
- DECKER, RAYMOND G. Institutional Authority versus Personal Responsibility in the Marriage Sections of Gratian's A Concordance of Discordant Canons. Jurist, no. 1, 1972. [8410]
- DELARUELLE, ÉTIENNE, and POVILL, JANINE. Les paroisses à Toulouse des origines à 1160. Bull. philol. hist., II, 1967. [8411]
- DELATOCHE, RAYMOND. Importance relative des divers produits agricoles dans le "Gros Brief" de Flandre pour 1187. Bull. philol. hist., I, 1968. [8412]
- DELATOCHE, RAYMOND. Le poisson d'eau douce dans l'alimentation médiévale: l'exemple du Maine. Bull. philol. hist., I, 1967. [8413]
- DELMARE, ROLAND. Un nouveau fragment de Dr. 37 signé de Cerialis. R. Nord, Oct.-Dec. 1971. [8414]
- DEMANDT, A. Die Konsuln der Jahre 381 und 382 namens Syagrius. Byz. Z., July 1971. [8415]
- DENTON, J. H. Royal Supremacy in Ancient Domesne Churches. J. Eccles. Hist., Oct. 1971. [8416]
- DE ROOVER, RAYMOND. Early Banking before 1500 and the Development of Capitalism. R. int. Hist. Banque, no. 4, 1971. [8417]
- DEVAILLY, GUY. Les restitutions de paroisses au temps de la Réforme grégorienne. Bretagne et Berry: étude comparée. Bull. philol. hist., II, 1968. [8418]
- DEVOS, PAUL. La Passion de S. Liévin de Gand, source principale inattendue de "Beatus Cyrillus." Analecta Bollandiana, no. 3-4, 1971. [8419]
- DEYRES, M. Le local à usage de sacristie à Sainte-Foy de Conques. An. Midi, July-Sept. 1971. [8420]
- DILLER, A. Joannes Canabutzes. Byzantion, no. 2, 1971. [8421]
- DIMIER, A. Violences, rixes et homicides chez les Cisterciens. R. Sci. relig., Jan. 1972. [8422]
- DODWELL, C. R. L'originalité iconographique de plusieurs illustrations anglo-saxonnes de l'Ancien Testament. Cah. Civil. méd., Oct.-Dec. 1971. [8423]
- DOSSAT, YVES. A propos du prieur des Pauvres catholiques: Durand de Huesca ou de Losque en Rouergue? Bull. philol. hist., II, 1967. [8424]
- DOSSAT, YVES. Un viguier de Toulouse au début du XIV<sup>e</sup> siècle: Philippe de Fontanes (1303-1310). Bull. philol. hist., II, 1968. [8425]
- DUBLED, HENRI. L'organisation de la boucherie et la consommation de la viande à Carpentras au XV<sup>e</sup> siècle. Bull. philol. hist., I, 1967. [8426]
- DUBUC, ANDRÉ. Le tabellionage rouennais durant l'occupation anglaise (1418-1445). Bull. philol. hist., II, 1967. [8427]
- DUNDULIS, B. A Historiographic Survey of Lithuanian-Polish Relations. Lituanus, no. 4, 1971. [8428]
- DUSSOURD, HENRIETTE. Les moulins qui donnèrent leur nom à la ville de Moulins. Bull. philol. hist., II, 1968. [8429]
- DYKMANS, MARC. Nouveaux textes de Jean XXII sur la vision béatifique. R. Hist. Eccles., no. 2, 1971. [8430]
- EDWARDS, A. S. G. A Missing Leaf from the Plimpton Fall of Princes [note]. Manuscripta, Mar. 1971. [8431]
- EINARSSON, BJARNI. The Lovesick Skald. Med. Scand., 4, 1971. [8432]
- EISENSTEIN, ELIZABETH L. L'avènement de l'imprimerie et la Réforme. Une nouvelle approche au problème du démembrement de la chrétienté occidentale. An.: Ec., Soc., Civil., Nov.-Dec. 1971. [8433]
- ENDREI, WALTER. Changements dans la productivité de l'industrie lainière au Moyen Age. An.: Ec., Soc., Civil., Nov.-Dec. 1971. [8434]
- ENDRÈS, ANDRÉ. Un vivier naturel dans une anse de la Marne en aval de Meaux: les marais de Lesches. Bull. philol. hist., I, 1967. [8435]
- ESBROECK, MICHEL VAN. Témoignages littéraires sur les sépultures de saint Grégoire l'illuminateur. Analecta Bollandiana, no. 3-4, 1971. [8436]
- EVER, FRÉDÉRIC. La cervoise et la bière au Moyen Age et à la Renaissance. Bull. philol. hist., I, 1968. [8437]
- FAVREAU, ROBERT. La boucherie en Poitou à la fin du Moyen Age. Bull. philol. hist., I, 1968. [8438]
- FERRARI, LEO C. The Mystical Tree in the Western Christian Tradition. Communio Viatorum, no. 1, 1971. [8439]
- FIASCHINI, GIULIO. A proposito di Genova e Venezia fra Tre e Quattrocento. Arch. stor. ital., no. 3-4, 1970. [8440]
- FIERRO, ALFRED. Un cycle démographique: Dauphiné et Faucigny du XIV<sup>e</sup> au XIX<sup>e</sup> siècle. An.: Ec., Soc., Civil., Sept.-Oct. 1971. [8441]
- FLEDELIUS, KARSTEN. Byzansforskningen efter 1940. Hist. tids. (Den.), no. 2, 1971. [8442]
- FOSSIER, ROBERT. Les mouvements populaires en Occident au XI<sup>e</sup> siècle. C. R. Acad. Inscr., Apr.-June 1971. [8443]
- FOUSEK, MARIANKA SASHA. Spiritual Direction and Discipline: A Key to the Flowering and Decay of the 16th Century Unitas Fratrum. Arch. Reformationsgesch., no. 2, 1971. [8444]

- FRANCE, J. The Crisis of the First Crusade: From the Defeat of Kerbogah to the Departure from Arqa. Byzantion, no. 2, 1971. [8445]
- FRANCE, J. The Departure of Tatikius from the Crusader Army. Bull. Inst. Hist. Res., Nov. 1971. [8446]
- FRANK, ROBERTA. Some Uses of Paronomasia in Old English Scriptural Verse. Speculum, Apr. 1972. [8447]
- FRASER, C. M., and EMSLEY, K. Justice in North East England, 1256-1356. Am. J. Legal Hist., July 1971. [8448]
- FREND, W. H. C. The Monks and the Survival of the East Roman Empire in the Fifth Century. Past & Present, Feb. 1972. [8449]
- FRYDE, NATALIE M. John Stratford, Bishop of Winchester, and the Crown. Bull. Inst. Hist. Res., Nov. 1971. [8450]
- FRYDE, NATALIE M. A Royal Inquiry into Abuses. Queen Eleanor's Ministers in North-East Wales. Welsh Hist. R., Dec. 1971. [8451]
- GABET, CAMILLE. Le droit de pacage en Aunis. Bull. philol. hist., I, 1967. [8452]
- GAFFIER, BAUDOUIN DE. A propos des Vies des saintes Pusinne et Liutruide. Analecta Bollandiana, no. 3-4, 1971. [8453]
- GALBRAITH, V. H. Sir Frank Stenton (1880-1967) [r. art.]. AHR, Oct. 1971. [8454]
- GALLETI, ANNA IMELDE. Considerazioni per una interpretazione dell' Eulisteia. Arch. stor. ital., no. 3-4, 1970. [8455]
- GANTIER, ODILE. Rôle économique et social de l'abbaye de Marmoutier aux XI<sup>e</sup> et XII<sup>e</sup> siècles. Bull. philol. hist., II, 1968. [8456]
- GARZYA, A. Fin quando visse Niceforo Basilace? Byz. Z., Dec. 1971. [8457]
- GARZYA, A. Precisazioni sul processo di Niceforo Basilace. Byzantion, no. 2, 1971. [8458]
- GEANAKOPOLOS, DENO J. The Transmission of Greek Learning from Byzantium to the West in the Renaissance. Alumni Lectures (Holy Cross Greek Orthodox Alumni Assoc., Brookline, Mass.), no. 1, 1971. [8459]
- GÉNICOT, LÉOPOLD. Une thèse: campagnes et paysans de Picardie jusqu'au XIII<sup>e</sup> siècle. An.: Éc., Soc., Civil., Sept.-Oct. 1970. [8460]
- GOFFART, WALTER. From Roman Taxation to Mediaeval Seigneurie: Three Notes. Part I (to be concluded). Speculum, Apr. 1972. [8461]
- GOITEIN, S. D. An Eleventh-Century Letter from Tyre in the John Rylands Library. Bull. John Rylands Lib., no. 1, 1971. [8462]
- GOITEIN, SHELOMO D. Formal Friendship in the Medieval Near East. Proc. Am. Phil. Soc., no. 6, 1971. [8463]
- GÓMEZ-MÁS, R. A. Prophecy in the Early Church, a Historical Approach. Communio, no. 1, 1971. [8464]
- GRANDEAU, YANN. Les Enfants de Charles VI. Essai sur la vie privée des princes et des princesses de la maison de France à la fin du Moyen Age. Bull. philol. hist., II, 1967. [8465]
- GRANDEAU, YANN. Le dauphin Jean, duc de Touraine, fils de Charles VI (1398-1417). Bull. philol. hist., II, 1968. [8466]
- GRANJA, FERNANDO DE LA. Fiestas cristianas en al-Andalus (Materiales para su estudio). I. "Al-Durr al-munazzam" de al-'Asafi" [Arabic text and Spanish tr.]. Al-Andalus, no. 1, 1969. [8467]
- GRANDSEN, ANTONIA. Realistic Observation in Twelfth-Century England. Speculum, Jan. 1972. [8468]
- GRAU, JOSÉ JOAQUÍN SATORRE. Pedro de Corral y la estructura de su "Crónica del Rey Don Rodrigo." Al-Andalus, no. 1, 1969. [8469]
- GROSSMANN, P. Zur Datierung der Frühen Kirchenanlagen aus Faras. Byz. Z., Dec. 1971. [8470]
- GUILLAND, R. Contribution à l'histoire administrative de l'Empire byzantin: La patricienne à ceinture. Byzantinoslavica, no. 2, 1971. [8471]
- GUILLAND, R. Contribution à la prosopographie de l'Empire byzantin: Les Patrices. Byzantion, no. 2, 1971. [8472]
- GUILLAND, R. Les hippodromes de Byzance. Byzantinoslavica, no. 1, 1971. [8473]
- GUITER, HENRI. Le développement d'un monastère bénédictin à l'époque carolingienne: Saint-André d'Eixalada—Saint-Michel de Cuixà. Bull. philol. hist., II, 1967. [8474]
- GUREVICH, A. YA. Saga and History. The "historical conception" of Snorri Sturluson. Med. Scand., 4, 1971. [8475]
- GUTIERREZ, L. El monaquismo romano y San Jerónimo. Communio, no. 1, 1971. [8476]
- HAAS, STEVEN W. Simon Fish, William Tyndale, and Sir Thomas More's "Lutheran Conspiracy." J. Eccles. Hist., Apr. 1972. [8477]
- HAINES, ROY M. Adam Orleton and the Diocese of Winchester. J. Eccles. Hist., no. 1, 1972. [8478]
- HALL, BASIL. The Reformation City. Bull. John Rylands Lib., Autumn 1971. [8479]
- HARRISON, C. J. The Petition of Edmund Dudley [1509]. EHR, Jan. 1972. [8480]
- HARVEY, SALLY. Domesday Book and its predecessors [note]. EHR, Oct. 1971. [8481]
- HAWS, CHARLES H. The Diocese of Aberdeen and the Reformation. Innes R., no. 2, 1971. [8482]
- HEATH, R. G. The Western Schism of the Franks and the "Filioque." J. Eccles. Hist., Apr. 1972. [8483]
- HEERS, JACQUES. La mode et les marchés des draps de laine: Gènes et la Montagne à la fin du Moyen Age. An.: Éc., Soc., Civil., Sept.-Oct. 1971. [8484]
- HEIDRICH, INGRID. Die Absetzung Herzog Adalberos von Kärnten durch Kaiser Konrad II., 1035. Hist. Jb., no. 1, 1971. [8485]
- HEIMANN, ADELHEID, and CROZET, RENÉ. Discussion: à propos des chapiteaux de la façade occidentale de Chartres. Cah. Civil. méd., Oct.-Dec. 1971. [8486]
- HEIMPEL, HERMANN. Königtum, wandel der Welt, Bürgertum. Nachruf auf P. E. Schramm. Hist. Z., Feb. 1972. [8487]

- HELMHOLZ, R. H. Abjuration sub pena nubendi in the Church Courts of Medieval England. Jurist, no. 1, 1972. [8488]
- HÉMARQUINQUER, JEAN-JACQUES. Les "inventions" du Moyen Âge et de la Renaissance d'après un nouvel atlas historique des cultures vivrières. Bull. philol. hist., I, 1968. [8489]
- HEMMERDINGER, B. 173 noms communs grecs d'origine iranienne. Byzantinoslavica, no. 1, 1971. [8490]
- HEMMERDINGER, B. Photius à Bagdad. Byz. Z., July 1971. [8491]
- HEMMERDINGER, B. Saint Jean Damascène, Barlaam et Joasaph: l'intermédiaire arabe. Byz. Z., July 1971. [8492]
- HEMPSALL, DAVID S. The Languedoc 1520-1540: A Study of the Pre-Calvinist Heresy in France. Arch. Reformationsgesch., no. 2, 1971. [8493]
- HENDRICKX, B. Baudouin IX de Flandre et les empereurs byzantins Isaac II l'Ange et Alexis IV. R. belge, no. 2, 1971. [8494]
- HEPPEL, MURIEL. The Rila Manuscripts of the "Lestvica." Byzantinoslavica, no. 2, 1971. [8495]
- HERRMANN, ERWIN. Der Fürstenspiegel des Michael von Prag. Hist. Jb., no. 1, 1971. [8496]
- HILL, ROSALIND. An English Archbishop and the Scottish War of Independence. Innes R., no. 2, 1971. [8497]
- HÖFLECHNER, WALTER. Die "Regule ad extrahendum litteras ziferatas sine exemplo." Mitt. Österr. Staatsarch., XXIII, 1970. [8498]
- HOFFMANN, HARTMUT. Petrus Diaconus, die Herren von Tusculum und der Sturz Oderisius' II. von Montecassino. Deutsches Arch., no. 1, 1971. [8499]
- HOFFMANN, RICHARD C., and JOHNSON, H. B., JR. Un village portugais en mutation. Póvoa d'El Rey à la fin du quatorzième siècle. An.: Ec., Soc., Civil., Sept.-Oct. 1971. [8500]
- HOLMSEN, ANDREAS. Det nordiske ædegårdsprojekt. Hist. tids. (Sw.), no. 4, 1971. [8501]
- IORGA, NICOLE. Extraits de l'oeuvre historique: II. L'homme byzantin, III. Byzance après Byzance. J. World Hist., no. 3, 1971. [8502]
- IRMSCHER, J. Das Nikänische Kaisertum und Russland. Byzantion, no. 2, 1971. [8503]
- JEAUNEAU, EDOUARD. Note critique sur une traduction française du "Defensor pacis" de Marsile de Padoue. R. Hist. Eccles., no. 3-4, 1971. [8504]
- JONES, ANDREW. Land and People at Leighton Buzzard in the Later Fifteenth Century. Ec. Hist. R., Feb. 1972. [8505]
- JONES, W. R. The Image of the Barbarian in Medieval Europe. Comp. Stud. Soc. Hist., Oct. 1971. [8506]
- KALINKE, MARIANNE. A Structural Comparison of Chrétien de Troyes' Erec et Enide and the Norse Erex saga. Med. Scand., 4, 1971. [8507]
- KAMBYLES, A. Bemerkungen zum Text des Romanos. Byz. Z., July 1971. [8508]
- KEANEY, JOHN J. Moschopulea. Byz. Z., Dec. 1971. [8509]
- KITCHING, C. J. Alchemy in the Reign of Edward VI: an Episode in the Careers of Richard Whalley and Richard Eden. Bull. Inst. Hist. Res., Nov. 1971. [8510]
- KLOPF, M. The Army in Constantinople at the Accession of Constantine XI. Byzantion, no. 2, 1971. [8511]
- KNECHT, R. J. The Early Reformation in England and France: A Comparison. History, Feb. 1972. [8512]
- KOSCHORRECK, WALTER. Eine Bilderhandschrift des Sachsenspiegels: über den.CPG 164 der Universitäts-Bibliothek Heidelberg. Heidelberger Jb., XV, 1971. [8513]
- KRAEMER, JOEL L. A Critical Edition with a Translation and Notes of the Book of Tradition [note]. Jewish Q. R., July 1971. [8514]
- KRAUSE, HERMANN. Monumenta Germaniae Historica: Bericht für das Jahr 1970/71. Deutsches Arch., no. 1, 1971. [8515]
- KUHN, SHERMAN M. Cursus in Old English: Rhetorical Ornament or Linguistic Phenomenon? Speculum, Apr. 1972. [8516]
- LAMPIDIS, OD. Beitrag zur Biographie des Georgios Paläologos des Megas Hetäreiararches. Byzantion, no. 2, 1971. [8517]
- LAVIGNE, RICHARD LOUIS DE. La Peste Noire et la commune de Toulouse: le témoignage du livre des matricules des notaires. An. Midi, Oct.-Dec. 1971. [8518]
- LAZARD, GILBERT. Les origines de la poésie persane. Cah. Civil. méd., Oct.-Dec. 1971. [8519]
- LAZAREV, VICTOR. Regard sur l'art de la Russie pré-mongole, II. Le système de la décoration murale de Sainte-Sophie de Kiev. Cah. Civil. méd., July-Sept. 1971. [8520]
- LECLERCQ, JEAN. Recherches sur la collection des épîtres de saint Bernard. Cah. Civil. méd., July-Sept. 1971. [8521]
- LECOANET, SIMONE. Charte de Eudes II concernant le premier pont de Tours. Bull. philol. hist., II, 1968. [8522]
- LELONG, CHARLES. La frise d'Épeigné-sur-Dême. Cah. Civil. méd., July-Sept. 1971. [8523]
- LEMAN-DELERIVE, G. Une sépulture de la Tène finale découverte à Marœuil (Pas-de-Calais). R. Nord, Oct.-Dec. 1971. [8524]
- LEMARIGNIER, JEAN FRANÇOIS. Autour d'un diplôme de Robert le Pieux pour Saint-Denis (1008). C. R. Acad. Inscr., Apr.-June 1971. [8525]
- LE MENÉ, MICHEL. La forêt du Lattay au Moyen Âge: défrichement de la partie occidentale entre la Loire, l'Eure et l'Hyrome. Bull. philol. hist., II, 1968. [8526]
- LEONE, P. A. Nicephori Gregorae Antilogia et Solutiones Quaestionum [edition of Greek text]. Byzantion, no. 2, 1971. [8527]
- LEOWENTHAL, L. J. A. For the Biography of Walter Ophamil, Archbishop of Palermo. EHR, Jan. 1972. [8528]
- LEROY, JULES. La renaissance de l'Église syriacque aux XII<sup>e</sup>-XIII<sup>e</sup> siècles (suite et fin). Cah. Civil. méd., July-Sept. 1971. [8529]
- LLEWELLYN, PETER. From Patriarchate to Papacy. Ampleforth J., no. 3, 1971. [8530]
- LOTTER, FRIEDRICH. Legenden als Geschichtsquellen. Deutsches Arch., no. 1, 1971. [8531]

- LOWMIANSKI, H. The Slavic Rite in Poland and St. Adalbert. Acta Poloniae Hist., XXIV, 1971. [8532]
- LUBENOW, HERWIG. Kaisertum und Papsttum im Widerstreit bei der Gründung des Deutschordensstaates in Preussen. Gesch. Wiss. Unter., Apr. 1972. [8533]
- LUTTRELL, A. Notes on the Chancery of the Hospitallers of Rhodes, 1314-1332. Byzantion, no. 2, 1971. [8534]
- LYNCH, JOHN E. Marriage and Celibacy of the Clergy: The Discipline of the Western Church, An Historico-Canonical Synopsis. Part I. Jurist, no. 1, 1972. [8535]
- MCDONALD, WILLIAM W. Erasmus and the Protestant Reformation. Ill. Q., Apr. 1972. [8536]
- MACEK, JOSEF. "La fortuna" chez Machiavel (suite et fin). Moyen Age, no. 3-4, 1971. [8537]
- MCGOVERN, JOHN F. The Rise of New Economic Attitudes in Canon and Civil Law, A.D. 1200-1550. Jurist, no. 1, 1972. [8538]
- MCNIVEN, PETER. The Betrayal of Archbishop Scrope. Bull. John Rylands Lib., no. 1, 1971. [8539]
- MCROBERTS, DAVID. The Manse of Stobo in 1542 [inventory as clue to late medieval wealth]. Innes R., nos. 1-2, 1971. [8540]
- MAHÉ, J. P. Quelques remarques sur la religion des Métamorphoses d'Apulée et les doctrines gnostiques contemporaines. R. Sci. relig., Jan. 1972. [8541]
- MAILLARD, FRANÇOIS. Tableau pour la détermination de la date de Pâques et du calendrier ecclésiastique. Bull. philol. hist., II, 1967. [8542]
- MAJESKA, G. P. The Image of the Chalice Savior in Saint Sophia. Byzantinoslavica, no. 2, 1971. [8543]
- MANNING, ROGER B. La diffusion du Protestantisme populaire en Angleterre. An.: Ec., Soc., Civil., Nov.-Dec. 1971. [8544]
- MARCHETTI, VALERIO. La storiografia ungherese sul rapporto tra la critica antitrinitaria sozziniana e le origini dell'unitarismo transilvano del Cinquecento. Arch. stor. ital., no. 3-4, 1970. [8545]
- MÁRQUEZ, ANTONIO. Juan de Valdés, teólogo de los alumbados. La Ciudad de Dios, Apr.-June 1971. [8546]
- MÁRQUEZ, RAFAELA CASTRILLO. Descripción de al-Andalus según un ms. de la Biblioteca de Palacio. Al-Andalus, no. 1, 1969. [8547]
- MARTIN, REX. The Two Cities in Augustine's Political Philosophy. J. Hist. Ideas, Apr.-June 1972. [8548]
- MARTIN-DEMÉZIL, JEAN. "Haie" dans la terminologie forestière de la Loire moyenne. Bull. philol. hist., II, 1968. [8549]
- MATTHEWS, J. F. Gallic Supporters of Theodosius. Latomus, Oct.-Dec. 1971. [8550]
- MAZZAOLI, MAUREEN F. The Cotton Industry of Northern Italy in the Late Middle Ages, 1150-1450. J. Ec. Hist., Mar. 1972. [8551]
- MENDOZA, CELINA LÉRTORA, and BOLZÁN, J. E. La "Summa Physicorum" atribuida a Roberto Grosseteste. Sapientia, Jan.-Mar. 1971. [8552]
- MENDOZA, C. LÉRTORA. La "Summa Physicorum" y la filosofía natural de Grosseteste. Sapientia, Apr.-Dec. 1971. [8553]
- MENKES, FRED. Une communauté juive en Provence au XIV<sup>e</sup> siècle: étude d'un groupe social (suite et fin). Moyen Age, no. 3-4, 1971. [8554]
- MEONI, NOEMI. Visite pastorale a Cortona nel Trecento. Arch. stor. ital., no. 2-3, 1971. [8555]
- MERGL, G. Nochmals: Gelzers Kulturgeschichte. Byz. Z., Dec. 1971. [8556]
- METZ, WOLFGANG. Tafelgut, Königsstrasse und Servitium regis in Deutschland, vornehmlich im 10. und 11. Jahrhundert. Hist. Jb., no. 2, 1971. [8557]
- MIDELFORT, H. C. ERIK. Witchcraft and Religion in Sixteenth-Century Germany: The Formation and Consequences of an Orthodoxy. Arch. Reformationsgesch., no. 2, 1971. [8558]
- MIEG, PHILIPPE. Les relations de Mulhouse avec l'électeur palatin Frédéric I<sup>er</sup> le Victorieux. Bull. philol. hist., I, 1967. [8559]
- MILLER, D. A. Byzantine Treaties and Treaty-Making: 500-1025 A.D. Byzantinoslavica, no. 1, 1971. [8560]
- MINERVINI, LIDIA. Un problema ancora aperto: La Cronaca malespiniana. Arch. stor. ital., no. 2-3, 1971. [8561]
- MÖLK, ULRICH. Le sonnet Amor è un desio de Giacomo da Lentini et le problème de la genèse de l'amour. Cah. Civil. méd., Oct.-Dec. 1971. [8562]
- MORLET, MARIE-THÉRÈSE. Les noms de personne à Corbie, au XIV<sup>e</sup> siècle. Bull. philol. hist., II, 1967. [8563]
- MORLET, MARIE-THÉRÈSE. Les noms de lieux d'origine religieuse en Touraine. Bull. philol. hist., II, 1968. [8564]
- MORRALL, JOHN B. The Medieval Tradition of English Political Thought. Hist. Today, Apr. 1972. [8565]
- MULON, MARIANNE. Deux traités inédits d'art culinaire médiéval. Bull. philol. hist., I, 1968. [8566]
- MUSGRAVE, L. CURTIS. Medieval University Life. Hist. Today, Feb. 1972. [8567]
- NAHLIK, ADAM. Les techniques de l'industrie textile en Europe orientale du X<sup>e</sup> au XV<sup>e</sup> siècle, à travers les vestiges de tissus. An.: Ec., Soc., Civil., Nov.-Dec. 1971. [8568]
- NARDI, PAOLO. Recenti studi di storia dell'eresia in Siena nel Cinquecento. Arch. stor. ital., no. 3-4, 1970. [8569]
- NAT'ALE, ALFIO ROSARIO. Nota sull'Archivio del Governatore degli Statuti di Milano. Arch. stor. lombardo, VIII, 1971. [8570]
- NAVARRETE, ROSINA D. La Ideología del "Poema de mio Cid." Hispania, May 1972. [8571]
- NELSON, BENJAMIN. The Medieval Canon Law of Contracts, Renaissance "Spirit of Capitalism," and the Reformation "Conscience": A Vote for Max Weber. Philomathes, Martinus Nijhoff, 1971. [8572]
- NIEMEYER, GERLINDE. Die Miracula S. Mariae Laudunensis des Abtes Hermann von Tournai. Verfasser und Entstehungszeit. Deutsches Arch., no. 1, 1971. [8573]
- NORTH, DOUGLASS C., and THOMAS, ROBERT PAUL. The Rise and Fall of the Manorial System: A Theoretical Model. J. Ec. Hist., Dec. 1971. [8574]
- O'CONNOR, MARY. End of the [English] Assizes [after 800 years]. Illus. London News, Apr. 1972. [8575]

ÖBERG, JAN. Einige Bemerkungen zum Diplomatarium Danicum unter besonderer Berücksichtigung vom 6. Band der III. Reihe. Med. Scand., 4, 1971. [8576]

OHLGREN, THOMAS H. Five New Drawings in the MS Junius 11: Their Iconography and Thematic Significance. Speculum, Apr. 1972. [8577]

ORRMAN, ELJAS. De senmedeltida ödesmålen i sydvästra Finland. Hist. tids. Finl., no. 3, 1971. [8578]

PAGANINI, CARLO. Colombano legislatore monastico: appunti di uno studio su S. Colombano. Arch. stor. lombardo, VIII, 1971. [8579]

PALLAS, D. I. Eine Differenzierung unter den himmlischen Ordnungen (ikonographische Analyse). Byz. Z., July 1971. [8580]

PANEBIANCO, DOMENICO. Documenti sull'ultima malattia di Bianca Maria Sforza e sulla peste del 1468. Arch. stor. lombardo, VIII, 1971. [8581]

PARISSE, MICHEL. Saint-Denis et ses biens en Lorraine et en Alsace. Bull. philol. hist., I, 1967. [8582]

PARK, DABNEY G. Dante as Reformer [diss. abstract]. Church Hist., Mar. 1972. [8583]

PETERSOHN, JÜRGEN. Bemerkungen zu einer neuen Ausgabe der Viten Ottos von Bamberg. 1. Prüfeninger Vita und Ebo. Deutsches Arch., no. 1, 1971. [8584]

PETERSOHN, JÜRGEN. Normannische Bildungsreform im hochmittelalterlichen England. Hist. Z., Oct. 1971. [8585]

POLLAK, MICHAEL. The Performance of the Wooden Printing Press. Lib. Q., Apr. 1972. [8586]

PONFERRJA, G. E. Tomás de Aquino en la Universidad de Paris. Sapientia, Apr.-Dec. 1971. [8587]

POPPE, A. La dernière expedition russe contre Constantinople [1043 A.D.]. Byzantinoslavica, nos. 1-2, 1971. [8588]

POUNDS, NORMAN J. G. Population and Settlement in the Low Countries and Northern France in the Later Middle Ages. R. belge, no. 2, 1971. [8589]

PRESTWICH, J. Isabella de Vesey and the Custody of Bamburgh Castle. Bull. Inst. Hist. Res., Nov. 1971. [8590]

PRIESSNIG, A. Die biographische Form der Plotinvita des Porphyrios und das Antoniosleben des Athanasius. Byz. Z., July 1971. [8591]

RADDING, CHARLES M. The Estates of Normandy and the Revolts in the Towns at the Beginning of the Reign of Charles VI. Speculum, Jan. 1972. [8592]

RANDALL, LILIAN M. C. Games and the Passion in Pucelle's Hours of Jean d'Evreux. Speculum, Apr. 1972. [8593]

RICHARDS, MELVILLE. Places and Persons of the Early Welsh Church. Welsh Hist. R., Dec. 1971. [8594]

RILEY-SMITH, J. A Note on Confraternities in the Latin Kingdom of Jerusalem. Bull. Inst. Hist. Res., Nov. 1971. [8595]

RILEY-SMITH, JONATHAN. Some Lesser Officials in Latin Syria. EHR, Jan. 1972. [8596]

ROFFI, MARIO. Le canzoni di Gesta e l'epopea (a proposito del recente volume di Italo Siciliano). Arch. stor. ital., no. 1, 1971. [8597]

ROMESTAN, GUY. L'activité des muletiers catalans entre perpignan et Valence dans la première moitié du XIV<sup>e</sup> siècle. Bull. philol. hist., II, 1967. [8598]

ROSEN, JOSEF. Prices and Public Finance in Basle, 1360-1535. Ec. Hist. R., no. 1, 1972. [8599]

ROSKELL, J. S., and TAYLOR, F. The Authorship and Purpose of the Gesta Henrici Quinti, pt. II. Bull. John Rylands Lib., no. 1, 1971. [8600]

ROSS, JAMES BRUCE. The Emergence of Gasparo Contarini: A Bibliographical Essay. Church Hist., Mar. 1972. [8601]

RUSSELL, JOCELYNE G. The Search for Universal Peace: The Conferences at Calais and Bruges in 1521. Bull. Inst. Hist. Res., Nov. 1971. [8602]

SADOURNY, ALAIN. Les rentes à Rouen au XIII<sup>e</sup> siècle. An. Normandie, June 1971. [8603]

SAMARAN, CHARLES. Un essai de pain à l'abbaye de Saint-Denis au XIV<sup>e</sup> siècle. Bull. philol. hist., I, 1968. [8604]

SCHIEFFER, THEODOR. Nekrolog: Heinrich Büttner, 1908-1970. Hist. Jb., no. 1, 1971. [8605]

SCHMALE, FRANZ-JOSEF. Überlieferungskritik und Editionsprinzipien der Chronik Ekkehard's von Aura. Deutsches Arch., no. 1, 1971. [8606]

SCHMITTEIN, RAYMOND. La frontière entre les Burgondes et les Alamans dans la Haute Alsace. Bull. philol. hist., I, 1967. [8607]

SCHNEYER, JOHANNES BAPTIST. Neuaufgefundene Konstanzer Konzilspredigten. An. hist. conciliorum, no. 1, 1970. [8608]

SCHNITH, KARL. Gedanken zu den Königsabsetzungen im Spätmittelalter. Hist. Jb., no. 2, 1971. [8609]

SCHOWINGEN, KARL FRIEDRICH VON. Der bleibende Sinngehalt von Nizâmulmulk's Siyâsatnâma: Gedanken zur historischen Kontinuität. Hist. Jb., no. 2, 1971. [8610]

SCHURR, ADOLF. Vie et réflexion selon Saint Anselm. Arch. Phil., Jan.-Mar. 1972. [8611]

SHERLOCK, D. A. Saul, Paul, and the Silver Spoons from Sutton Hoo. Speculum, Jan. 1972. [8612]

SITTLER, LUCIEN. L'élevage à Colmar au Moyen Age et au début des temps modernes. Bull. philol. hist., I, 1967. [8613]

ŚLASKI, KAZIMIERS. Die dänisch-polnischen Beziehungen von dem Tode Valdemars II. bis zum Entstehen der Kalmarer Union. Med. Scand., 4, 1971. [8614]

SOMERVILLE, ROBERT. The French Councils of Pope Urban II: Some Basic Considerations. An. hist. conciliorum, no. 1, 1970. [8615]

SOYEZ, J.-M., and GARDELLES, J. L'activité artistique à Lille dans la première moitié du XV<sup>e</sup> siècle. R. Nord, Oct.-Dec. 1970. [8616]

SPEVAČEK, JIRI. Die letzte Phase des Kampfes Markgraf Karls (IV) um die römische Krone [1346]. Hist. Jb., no. 1, 1971. [8617]

STACPOOLE, ALBERIC. Regularis Concordia: Millennium Conference, University of Leicester, Dec. 16-19, 1970 [monastic revival after 970]. Ampleforth J., no. 1, 1971. [8618]

STANESCU, E. Les études byzantines en Roumanie, 1963-1968. Byzantinoslavica, no. 1, 1971. [8619]

- STAS, CLAUDE. Un ensemble funéraire de la Tène III dans le site de l'abbaye de Vaclair (Aisne). R. Nord, Oct.-Dec. 1971. [8620]
- STEGELICH, WOLFGANG. Die Stellung der evangelischen Reichsstände und Reichsstädte zu Karl V. zwischen Protestation und Konfession 1529/30. Ein Beitrag zur Vorgeschichte des Augsburger Glaubensbekenntnisses. Arch. Reformationsgesch., no. 2, 1971. [8621]
- STEINMAN, MARTIN. Eine neue Handschrift der "Gesta Romanæ ecclesiæ contra Hildebrandum." Deutsches Arch., no. 1, 1971. [8622]
- STEPHENS, JOHN N. Heresy in Medieval and Renaissance Florence. Past & Present, Feb. 1972. [8623]
- STEVENS, MARTIN. Laughter and Game in Sir Gawain and the Green Knight. Speculum, Jan. 1972. [8624]
- STICHEL, R. Darstellungen des Trionfo della morte in der nachbyzantinischen Kunst. Byzantinoslavica, no. 2, 1971. [8625]
- ST. MICHAÏLOV. Une nouvelle inscription protobulgare dans l'ancienne capitale Pliska. Byzantion, no. 2, 1971. [8626]
- STRAETEN, JOSEPH VAN DER. Translation d'un bras de S. Maximien, un des Sept Dormants. Analecta Bollandiana, no. 3-4, 1971. [8627]
- STRAYER, JOSEPH R. The Fourth and the Fourteenth Centuries. AHR, Feb. 1972. [8628]
- ST. SINOS. Die sogenannte Kirche des Hagios Elias zu Athen. Byz. Z., Dec. 1971. [8629]
- SZEMERÉNYI, OSWALD J. L. A New Leaf of the Gothic Bible. Language, Mar. 1972. [8630]
- SZOMLAISKI, LEIF. Valdemar Atterdag's Kalundborg contract of 1360 and its background. Med. Scand., 4, 1971. [8631]
- TAILLÉ, MICHEL. Un nouveau fragment de la Bible gotique. Impacts, no. 1, 1972. [8632]
- THELAMON, FRANÇOISE. Histoire et structure mythique: la conversion des Ibères. R. hist. (Paris), Jan.-Mar. 1972. [8633]
- THIBAUT, PIERRE. Un notable parisien au XV<sup>e</sup> siècle: Martin de la Planche. Moyen Age, no. 3-4, 1971. [8634]
- THIRIET, BR. Sur la méthode historique du R. J. Loenertz. Byzantion, no. 2, 1970. [8635]
- THOMPSON, CHRISTOPHER. The Counting of Manors Reconsidered. Ec. Hist. R., Feb. 1972. [8636]
- THURMAN, W. S. A Juridical and Theological Concept of Nature in the Sixth Century. Byzantinoslavica, no. 1, 1971. [8637]
- TILLIER, JEAN-CLAUDE. Les conciles provinciaux de la province ecclésiastique de Bordeaux au temps de la Réforme grégorienne (1073-1100). Bull. philol. hist., II, 1968. [8638]
- TINNEFELD, F. Pachymeres und Philes als Zeugen für ein frühes Unternehmen gegen die Osmanen. Byz. Z., July 1971. [8639]
- TORI, GIORGIO. Nicolao degli Onesti, Vicario di Paolo Guinigi, e la visita a Montecarlo di Gregorio XII (26 gennaio 1408). Arch. stor. ital., no. 3-4, 1970. [8640]
- TRAPP, E. Textkritische Bemerkungen zum Belisargedicht. Byzantion, no. 2, 1970. [8641]
- Travaux relatifs à l'histoire du Moyen Age, 1970. Moyen Age, no. 3-4, 1971. [8642]
- TRIBOUT DE MOREMBERT, HENRI. Une possession de Cluny en Lorraine: le prieuré de Thicourt (1093-1576). Bull. philol. hist., II, 1968. [8643]
- TÜCHLE, HERMANN. Das Bistum Augsburg und seine Bischöfe im Jahrhundert der Reformation. Hist. Jb., no. 1, 1971. [8644]
- TYLEND, JOSEPH N. Calvin Bibliography, 1960-1970. Calvin Theol. J., Nov. 1971. [8645]
- ULLMANN, WALTER. Schranken der Königsgewalt im Mittelalter. Hist. Jb., no. 1, 1971. [8646]
- VALLEZ, A. La construction du comté d'Alençon (1269-1380). Essai de géographie historique. An. Normandie, Mar. 1972. [8647]
- VERHULST, A. A propos de La terre et les hommes en Picardie [by R. Fossier]. Cah. Civil. méd., July-Sept. 1971. [8648]
- VIGNI, M. CRISTINA PECCHIOLI. Lo Statuto in volgare della Magistratura della Grascia (a. 1379). Arch. stor. ital., no. 1, 1971. [8649]
- VIOLA, COLOMAN ETIENNE. Journées internationales Anselmiennes (Bad Wimpfen, 13-16 septembre 1970). Arch. Phil., Jan.-Mar. 1972. [8650]
- VISCONTI, G. D. OLTRONA. La successione feudale di Castano. Arch. stor. lombardo, VIII, 1971. [8651]
- WATANABE, MORIMICHI. Authority and Consent in Church Government: Panormitanus, Aeneas Sylvius, Cusanus. J. Hist. Ideas, Apr.-June 1972. [8652]
- WEILL, GEORGES. Origine du patriciat strasbourgeois aux XIII<sup>e</sup> et XIV<sup>e</sup> siècles: les lignages Zorn et Mullenheim. Bull. philol. hist., I, 1967. [8653]
- WESTERINK, L. G. Ein astrologisches Kolleg aus dem Jahre 564. Byz. Z., July 1971. [8654]
- WHITBREAD, LESLIE G. Conrad of Hirsau as Literary Critic. Speculum, Apr. 1972. [8655]
- WILLIAMS-JONES, KEITH. Thomas Becket and Wales. Welsh Hist. R., Dec. 1971. [8656]
- WILLIS, E. DAVID. Calvin and the Italian Anti-Trinitarians. Arch. Reformationsgesch., no. 2, 1971. [8657]
- WILSDORF, CHRISTIAN. Dans la vallée de la Thur aux XIII<sup>e</sup> et XIV<sup>e</sup> siècles: La transformation d'un paysage par la route. Bull. philol. hist., I, 1967. [8658]

MODERN EUROPE GENERAL

- ASHCRAFT, RICHARD. Marx and Weber on Liberalism as Bourgeois Ideology. Comp. Stud. Soc. Hist., no. 2, 1972. [8659]
- ATKINSON, JAMES. Luther Studies [r. art.]. J. Eccles. Hist., no. 1, 1972. [8660]

- BARYCZ, HENRYK. The Contribution of the University of Cracow to the Dissemination of Erasmian Thought in Poland [in Polish; Eng. summary]. Prace Hist., no. 33, 1971. [8661]
- BLUM, JEROME. The Internal Structure and Polity of the European Village Community from the Fifteenth to the Nineteenth Century. J. Mod. Hist., Dec. 1971. [8662]
- BOAS, GEORGE. The Retreat from Reason. Proc. Am. Phil. Soc., no. 6, 1971. [8663]
- BOUVIER, JEAN. Systèmes bancaires et entreprises industrielles dans la croissance européenne au XIX<sup>e</sup> siècle. An.: Ec., Soc., Civil., Jan.-Feb. 1972. [8664]
- CAMPERS, ELIZA. Le bloc des neutres (sept.-déc. 1939). R. Roumaine Hist., no. 5, 1971. [8665]
- CANOVAN, MARGARET. The Limits of Seriousness: Rousseau and the Interpretation of Political Theory. Eur. Stud. R., Jan. 1972. [8666]
- CHASTEL, ANDRÉ. The Horizon of the Renaissance. Diogenes, no. 74, 1971. [8667]
- CIPOLLA, CARLO M. The Diffusion of Innovations in Early Modern Europe. Comp. Stud. Soc. Hist., no. 1, 1972. [8668]
- COLE, RICHARD G. Sixteenth-century Travel Books as a Source of European Attitudes toward Non-White and Non-Western Culture. Proc. Am. Phil. Soc., no. 1, 1972. [8669]
- DANIELOU, S. E. Autorité et liberté dans l'Eglise d'aujourd'hui. Annales, May 1971. [8670]
- DEYON, PIERRE. La concurrence internationale des manufactures lainières aux XVI<sup>e</sup> et XVII<sup>e</sup> siècles. An.: Ec., Soc., Civil., Jan.-Feb. 1972. [8671]
- DOMAŃSKI, JULIUSZ. On the Patristic Sources of Philosophia Christi: St. John Chrysostom and the Erasmian Conception of Philosophy [in Polish; Eng. summary]. Prace Hist., no. 33, 1971. [8672]
- EISENSTEIN, ELIZABETH L. L'avènement de l'imprimerie et la Réforme: Une nouvelle approche au problème du démembrement de la chrétienté occidentale. An.: Ec., Soc., Civil., Nov.-Dec. 1971. [8673]
- EKELUND, ROBERT B., JR. Economic Empiricism in the Writing of Early Railway Engineers. EEH, no. 2, 1971-72. [8674]
- FORD, FRANKLIN L. Dimensions of Toleration: Castelli, Bodin, Montaigne. Proc. Am. Phil. Soc., no. 2, 1972. [8675]
- GARBACIK, JÓZEF, and GIEROWSKI, JÓZEF A. The Erasmian Age [in Polish; Eng. summary]. Prace Hist., no. 33, 1971. [8676]
- GUGGENHEIM, THOMAS. Inflation and Interest Rates in Early Economic Thought. R. int. Hist. Banque, no. 4, 1971. [8677]
- HAJDUKIEWICZ, LESZEK. Erasmus of Rotterdam in Polish Public Opinion in the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Centuries [in Polish; Eng. summary]. Prace Hist., no. 33, 1971. [8678]
- HALL, BASIL. The Reformation City. Bull. John Rylands Lib., no. 1, 1971. [8679]
- HANSEN, H. THUSTRUP. Den internationale økonomiske situation [2 pts.]. Øk. og pol., nos. 1-2, 1971. [8680]
- HARRIS, JESSICA L.; HINES, THEODORE C.; and SCOTT, RALPH L. A Computer-Based Census and Local Handlist System for Incunabula. Computers and Humanities, no. 2, 1971. [8681]
- HEERTJE, ARNOLD. Two Letters from James Mill to Jean Baptiste Say. Hist. Pol. Ec., Fall 1971. [8682]
- KNECHT, R. J. The Early Reformation in England and France: A Comparison. History, Feb. 1972. [8683]
- LANDO, OLE. Etableringsret og fri udveksling af tjenesteydelser i faellesmarkedet. Øk. og pol., no. 2, 1971. [8684]
- LEWICKA-KAMIŃSKA, ANNA. Erasmus of Rotterdam in Poland (The Jagiellonian Library Exhibition Catalogue) [in Polish; Eng. summary]. Prace Hist., no. 33, 1971. [8685]
- LUDWIG, KARL HEINZ. Fabrications de fusées et stratégie. R. Hist. deux. guerre mond., Oct. 1971. [8686]
- MCCASKIE, T. C. Innovational Eclecticism: the Asante Empire and Europe in the Nineteenth Century. Comp. Stud. Soc. Hist., no. 1, 1972. [8687]
- MACFARLANE, IRIS. Pepper Politics. Hist. Today, Feb. 1972. [8688]
- PFLUG, GÜNTHER. The Development of Historical Method in the Eighteenth Century. Hist. and Theory, beiheft 11, 1971. [8689]
- PIQUET-MARCHAL, MARIE-ODILE. Doctrines monétaires et conjoncture aux XIV<sup>e</sup> et XV<sup>e</sup> siècles. R. int. Hist. Banque, no. 4, 1971. [8690]
- RABB, THEODORE K., and EISENSTEIN, ELIZABETH. The Advent of Printing and the Problem of the Renaissance. Past & Present, Aug. 1971. [8691]
- REDLICH, FRITZ. Science and Charity: Count Rumford and His Followers. Int. R. Soc. Hist., pt. 2, 1971. [8692]
- SAKMANN, PAUL. The Problems of Historical Method and of Philosophy of History in Voltaire. Hist. and Theory, beiheft 11, 1971. [8693]
- SØILEN, ODDMUND. FN och imperialismen. Ord och bild, no. 2, 1971. [8694]
- STEPHENSON, RICHARD W. Atlases of the Western Hemisphere: A Summary Survey. Geog. R., no. 1, 1972. [8695]
- SZELIŃSKA, WACŁAWA. Sixteenth Century Readers and Admirers of Erasmian Books in Cracow [in Polish; Eng. summary]. Prace Hist., no. 33, 1971. [8696]
- TURNAU, IRENA. La bonneterie en Europe du XVI<sup>e</sup> au XVIII<sup>e</sup> siècle. An.: Ec., Soc., Civil., Sept.-Oct. 1971. [8697]
- UNGER, RUDOLF. The Problem of Historical Objectivity. A Sketch of Its Development to the Time of Hegel. Hist. and Theory, beiheft 11, 1971. [8698]

BRITISH COMMONWEALTH AND IRELAND

Leland H. Carlson, *University of Southern California*Frederic A. Youngs, Jr., California State University, Long Beach

GENERAL

ALLEN, DAVID. Surveys of Records in the British Isles. Archives, Oct. 1971. [8699]

BUCHANAN, R. A. The Study of Industrial Archaeology. Brit. Stud. Monitor, Winter 1971-72. [8700]

HEATHER, DEREK. History Teaching and Political Education. History, Feb. 1972. [8701]

HOSKINS, W. G. The Homes of Family Names. Hist. Today, Mar. 1972. [8702]

MACLEOD, ROY M., and FRIDAY, JAMES R. Les archives historiques des scientifiques britanniques. Soc. Sci. Information, Oct. 1971. [8703]

NEU, JOHN. Ninty-sixth Critical Bibliography of the History of Science and its Cultural Influences (to January 1971). ISIS, pt. 5, 1971. [8704]

OWEN, DOROTHY M. Handlists of Ecclesiastical Records: A Supplement to Records of the Established Church. Archives, Oct. 1971. [8705]

OWEN, DOROTHY M. The Local Historian and his Theme [r. art.]. Archives, Oct. 1971. [8706]

PALAIS, ELLIOT S. The Publications of the Royal Commission on Historical Manuscripts. Coll. & Res. Lib., Mar. 1972. [8707]

PEMBERTON, JOHN E. Printed Ephemera in British Libraries. Aslib Proc., Mar. 1972. [8708]

SYMONDS, ROGER. Preservation and Perspectives in Industrial Archaeology [r. art.]. History, Feb. 1972. [8709]

TUCKER, K. A. Business History: Some Proposals for Aims and Methodology. Bus. Hist., Jan. 1972. [8710]

VEYSEY, A. G. Local Archives of Great Britain: XXXII. The Flintshire Record Office. Archives, Oct. 1971. [8711]

TUDORS AND STUARTS

ANDEREGG, MICHAEL A. Utopia and Early More Biography: Another View. Moreana, Feb. 1972. [8712]

BARBOUR, PHILIP L. The Earliest Reconnaissance of the Chesapeake Bay Area: Captain John Smith's Map and Indian Vocabulary, Part II. Va. Mag. Hist. Biog., Jan. 1972. [8713]

BARBOUR, PHILIP L. A Possible Clue to Samuel Argall's Pre-Jamestown Activities. WMQ, Apr. 1972. [8714]

BARBOUR, P. L. Captain John Smith's Sea Grammar and Its Debt to Sir Henry Mainwaring's 'Seaman's Dictionary.' Mariner's Mirror, Feb. 1972. [8715]

BARRATT, J. The Letters of the First Baron Byron of Rochdale (1600-1652). J. Soc. Army Hist. Res., Autumn 1971. [8716]

BEACH, D. M. The Poetry of Idea: Sir Philip Sidney and the Theory of Allegory. Tex. Stud. Lit. Lang., Fall 1971. [8717]

BEER, BARRETT L. Sir William Paget and the Protectorate, 1547-1549. Ohio Acad. Hist. Newslett., Nov. 1971. [8718]

BENTLEY, GERALD EADES. The Profession of Dramatist in Shakespeare's Time. Proc. Am. Phil. Soc., no. 6, 1971. [8719]

BISHOP, CAROLYN J. Raleigh Satirized by Harington and Davies. R. Eng. Stud., Feb. 1972. [8720]

BOWLER, PETER J. Preformation and Pre-existence in the Seventeenth Century: A Brief Analysis. J. Hist. Biology, Fall 1971. [8721]

BREITENBACH, EDGAR. Guild Days in Norwich. Q. J. Lib. Cong., Jan. 1972. [8722]

BRENNER, ROBERT. The Social Basis of English Commercial Expansion, 1550-1650. J. Ec. Hist., Mar. 1972. [8723]

BROWN, MARK N. The Works of George Saville, Marquis of Halifax: Dates and Circumstances of Composition. Huntington Lib. Q., Feb. 1972. [8724]

BUCKLEY, G. T. Was Edmund Guilty of Capital Treason? Shakespeare Q., Winter 1972. [8725]

BURG, B. RICHARD. A Letter of Richard Mather to a Cleric in Old England. WMQ, Jan. 1972. [8726]

BUSH, SARGENT, JR. Thomas Hooker and the Westminster Assembly. WMQ, Apr. 1972. [8727]

CASHMAN, M. J. The Gateshead Martyr [John Ingram (1565-1594)]. Recusant Hist., Oct. 1971. [8728]

CLAY, CHRISTOPHER. The Misfortunes of William, Fourth Lord Petre (1638-1655). Recusant Hist., Apr. 1971. [8729]

COLLINSON, PATRICK. The Reformer and the Archbishop: Martin Bucer and an English Bucerian. J. Relig. Hist., no. 4, 1971. [8730]

COWIE, LEONARD W. The Banqueting House, Whitehall. Hist. Today, Jan. 1972. [8731]

DALY, J. W. John Bramhall and the Theoretical Problems of Royalist Moderation. J. Brit. Stud., Nov. 1971. [8732]

DEVINE, T. M., and LYTHER, S. G. E. The Economy of Scotland under James VI: A Revision Article. Scottish Hist. R., Oct. 1971. [8733]

FAIRFIELD, LESLIE P. The Vocacyon of Johan Bale and Early English Autobiography. Renaissance Q., Autumn 1971. [8734]

FARMER, NORMAN K., JR. Robert Herrick's Commonplace Book? Some Observations and Questions. Pap. Bibliogr. Soc. Am., First Quarter 1972. [8735]

FARNELL, JAMES E. The Aristocracy and Leadership of Parliament in the English Civil Wars [r. art.]. J. Mod. Hist., Mar. 1972. [8736]

GLEISSNER, RICHARD A. The Revolutionary Settlement of 1691 in Maryland. Md. Hist. Mag., Winter 1971. [8737]

GRAY, CHARLES M. Bonham's Case Reviewed. Proc. Am. Phil. Soc., no. 1, 1972. [8738]

- GREENLEE, DOUGLAS. Locke and the Controversy over Innate Ideas. J. Hist. Ideas, Apr.–June 1972. [8739]
- HAAS, STEVEN W. Simon Fish, William Tyndale, and Sir Thomas More's 'Lutheran Conspiracy.' J. Eccles. Hist., no. 2, 1972. [8740]
- HARDIN, RICHARD F. Ovid in Seventeenth-Century England. Comp. Lit., Winter 1972. [8741]
- HARRISON, C. J. The Petition of Edmund Dudley [doc.]. EHR, Jan. 1972. [8742]
- HAST, ADELE. State Treason Trials During the Puritan Revolution, 1640–1660. Hist. J., Mar. 1972. [8743]
- HENRY, BRUCE WARD. John Dee, Humphrey Llwyd, and the Name "British Empire" [note]. Huntington Lib. Q., Feb. 1972. [8744]
- HITCHCOCK, JAMES. More and Tyndale's Controversy over Revelation: A Test of the McLuhan Hypothesis. J. Am. Acad. Relig., Dec. 1971. [8745]
- HÖLTGEN, KARL JOSEF. Richard Latewar, Elizabethan Poet and Divine. Anglia, pt. 4, 1971. [8746]
- HORWITZ, HENRY. The General Election of 1690. J. Brit. Stud., Nov. 1971. [8747]
- HUNTER, M. C. W. The Royal Society and the Origins of British Archaeology: I, II. Antiquity, June, Sept. 1971. [8748]
- INGRAM, WILLIAM. The Closing of the Theaters in 1597: A Dissenting View. Mod. Philol., Nov. 1971. [8749]
- ISHAM, GYLES. Earl Marshals and Northamptonshire. Northamptonshire Past and Present, 6, 1971/72. [8750]
- JARVIS, RUPERT. Ship Registry—to 1707. Marit. Hist., no. 1, 1971. [8751]
- JOHNSON, W. MCALLISTER. On Some Neglected Usages of Renaissance Diplomatic Correspondence [English Ambassador's Description of Fontainebleau, 1540]. Gaz. Beaux-Arts, Jan. 1972. [8752]
- JONES, ANDREW. Land and People at Leighton Buzzard in the Later Fifteenth Century. Ec. Hist. R., Feb. 1972. [8753]
- JONES, DAVID LEWIS. William Herle and the Office of Rhaglaw in Elizabethan Cardiganshire. Nat. Lib. Wales J., Winter 1971. [8754]
- KINNEY, ARTHUR F. Parody and Its Implications in Sydney's Defense of Poesie. Stud. Eng. Lit., 1500–1900, Winter 1972. [8755]
- KNECHT, R. J. The Early Reformation in England and France: A Comparison. History, Feb. 1972. [8756]
- LECOAT, GERARD. Comparative Aspects of the Theory of Expression in the Baroque Age. Eighteenth-Cent. Stud., Winter 1971–72. [8757]
- LEFANU, WILLIAM R. The Versatile Nehemiah Grew. Proc. Am. Phil. Soc., no. 6, 1971. [8758]
- LOOMIE, ALBERT J. Guy Fawkes in Spain: The 'Spanish Treason' in Spanish Documents. Bull. Inst. Hist. Res., suppl. no. 9, Nov. 1971. [8759]
- LUNN, MAURUS. Chaplains to the English Regiment in Spanish Flanders, 1605–06. Recusant Hist., Oct. 1971. [8760]
- MCCANN, TIMOTHY J. The Catholic Recusancy of Dr. John Bullaker of Chichester, 1574–1627. Recusant Hist., Apr. 1971. [8761]
- MACEY, SAMUEL L. The Introduction of Shakespeare into Germany in the Second Half of the Eighteenth Century. Eighteenth-Cent. Stud., Winter 1971–72. [8762]
- MANNING, ROGER B. The Crisis of Episcopal Authority During the Reign of Elizabeth I. J. Brit. Stud., Nov. 1971. [8763]
- MANNING, ROGER B. Elizabethan Recusancy Commissions. Hist. J., Mar. 1972. [8764]
- MARSTON, THOMAS E. An Early English Bestseller [John Mirk, Liber festivalis (and) Quattuor sermones (1499)]. Yale U. Lib. Gaz., Oct. 1971. [8765]
- MASON, H. A. Editing Wyatt. Further Reflections on the Possibility of Literary Study. Cambridge Q., Summer–Autumn 1971. [8766]
- MOORE, STANLEY. Hobbes on Obligation, Moral and Political. Part Two: Political Obligation. J. Hist. Phil., Jan. 1972. [8767]
- MORRISSEY, THOMAS E. A. G. Dickens and the Men of the Sixteenth Century. AHR, Apr. 1972. [8768]
- O'DAY, M. ROSEMARY. Thomas Bentham: A Case Study in the Problems of the Early Elizabethan Episcopate. J. Eccles. Hist., Apr. 1972. [8769]
- OSBORN, JAMES M. Sidney and Pietro Bizari. Renaissance Q., Autumn 1971. [8770]
- PARKS, STEPHEN. The Osborn Collection: A Second Biennial Progress Report. Yale U. Lib. Gaz., Jan. 1972. [8771]
- PAULSON, KRISTOFFER F. The Reverend Edward Stillingfleet and the "Epilogue" to Rochester's A Satyre against Reason and Mankind. Philol. Q., Oct. 1971. [8772]
- RABB, THEODORE K. Parliament and Society in Early Stuart England: The Legacy of Wallace Notestein [r. art.]. AHR, June 1972. [8773]
- RINEHART, KEITH. Shakespeare's Cleopatra and England's Elizabeth. Shakespeare Q., Winter 1972. [8774]
- ROBERTS, BRYN. Llythyr John Lloyd at Edward Lhuyd. Nat. Lib. Wales J., Winter 1971. [8775]
- ROETHLISBERGER, MARCEL. The Ulysses Tapestries at Hardwick Hall. Gaz. Beaux-Arts, Feb. 1972. [8776]
- ROGERS, PAT. Defoe in the Fleet Prison. R. Eng. Stud., Nov. 1971. [8777]
- ROGERS, PAT. An Eighteenth-Century Alarm: Defoe, Sir Justinian Isham and the Secretaries of State. Northamptonshire Past and Present, 6, 1971/72. [8778]
- RUSSELL, CONRAD. English Land Sales, 1540–1640: A Comment on the Evidence [note]. Ec. Hist. R., Feb. 1972. [8779]
- RUSSELL, JOYCELYNE G. The Search for Universal Peace: The Conferences at Calais and Bruges in 1521. Bull. Inst. Hist. Res., Nov. 1971. [8780]
- SANDOZ, ELLIS. The Civil Theology of Liberal Democracy: Locke and His Predecessors. J. Pol., Feb. 1972. [8781]
- SCHWOERER, LOIS G. "The Fittest Subject for a King's Quarrel": An Essay on the Militia Controversy 1641–1642. J. Brit. Stud., Nov. 1971. [8782]

SHORT, K. R. M. A Theory of Common Education in Elizabethan Puritanism [R. Greenham]. J. Eccles. Hist., Jan. 1972. [8783]

SMITH, CONSTANCE I. Northamptonshire in the History of Witchcraft. Northamptonshire Past and Present, 6, 1971/72. [8784]

SPRUNGER, KEITH L. English Puritans and Anabaptists in Early Seventeenth-Century Amsterdam. Mennonite Q. R., Apr. 1972. [8785]

SPRUNGER, KEITH L. Other Pilgrims in Leiden: Hugh Goodyear and the English Reformed Church. Church Hist., Mar. 1972. [8786]

STONE, LAWRENCE. The Aristocracy in Transition: A Reply to Dr. Woolf [note]. Ec. Hist. R., Feb. 1972. [8787]

STONE, LAWRENCE. Counting Manors Again: A Reply to Mr Thompson [note]. Ec. Hist. R., Feb. 1972. [8788]

STONE, LAWRENCE. English Land Sales, 1540-1640: A Reply to Mr Russell [note]. Ec. Hist. R., Feb. 1972. [8789]

THOMPSON, CHRISTOPHER. The Counting of Manors Reconsidered [note]. Ec. Hist. R., Feb. 1972. [8790]

TUCKER, M. J. The More-Norfolk Connection. Moreana, Feb. 1972. [8791]

VALDEZ, F. M., and O'MALLEY, C. D. James Keill of Northampton, Physician, Anatomist and Physiologist. Medical Hist., Oct. 1971. [8792]

WALLIS, P. J. The 1628-1633 Editions of William Gilbert's 'De Magnete': a Tribute to the Late Clifford Dobb. Bibliothek, no. 2, 1971. [8793]

WEST, MICHAEL. Ecclesiastical Controversy in George Herbert's 'Peace.' R. Eng. Stud., Nov. 1971. [8794]

WILLIAMS, NORMAN LLOYD. A Frenchman in Tudor England [Etienne Perlin]. Hist. Today, Mar. 1972. [8795]

WINTER, J. M. A Bibliography of the Published Writings of R. H. Tawney. Ec. Hist. R., Feb. 1972. [8796]

WUELLNER, GUY. The Fitzwilliam Virginal Book. Textual Procedures of the English Virginalists. Music R., Nov. 1971. [8797]

MODERN BRITAIN SINCE 1714

ABBOTT, JOHN LAWRENCE. Samuel Johnson and "The Life of Dr. Richard Mead." Bull. John Rylands Lib., Autumn 1971. [8798]

ADAMS, JOHN G. U. London's Third Airport. From TLA to Airstrip One. Geog. J., Dec. 1971. [8799]

ADIE, DOUGLAS K. The English Money Stock 1834-1844. EEH, Winter 1971-72. [8800]

AKENSON, D. H. Patterns of English Educational Change: The Fisher and the Butler Acts. Hist. Ed. Q., Summer 1971. [8801]

ALDCROFT, DEREK H. Reflections on the Rochdale Inquiry into Shipping: A Review Article. Marit. Hist., no. 2, 1971. [8802]

ALDERMAN, GEOFFREY. Samuel Plimsoll and the Shipping Interest. Marit. Hist., no. 1, 1971. [8803]

ALLEN TUCK, MARCIA EPSTEIN. Edmund Burke to John Barrow: A New Discovery. Philol. Q., Oct. 1971. [8804]

ALTHOLZ, JOSEF L. The Vatican Decrees Controversy, 1874-1875. Cath. Hist. R., Jan. 1972. [8805]

BAGWELL, PHILIP. The Post Office Steam Packets, 1821-36, and the Development of Shipping on the Irish Sea. Marit. Hist., no. 1, 1971. [8806]

BAILEY, LESLIE G. Victorian Studies Programs in the United States and Canada. Victorian Stud., Dec. 1971. [8807]

BAIN, GEORGE SAYERS, and WOOLVEN, GILLIAN B. The Primary Materials of British Industrial Relations. Brit. J. Ind. Relations, Nov. 1971. [8808]

BARNET, MARGARET C. The 1832 Cholera Epidemic in York. Medical Hist., Jan. 1972. [8809]

BARTON, PETER. The Port of Stockton-on-Tees and its Creeks, 1825-61: A Problem in Port History. Marit. Hist., no. 2, 1971. [8810]

BEGG, H. M., and STEWART, J. A. The Nationalist Movement in Scotland. J. Contemp. Hist., no. 1, 1971. [8811]

BERRY, B. MIDI, and SCHOFIELD, R. S. Age at Baptism in Pre-industrial England. Population Stud., Nov. 1971. [8812]

BETTS, RAYMOND F. The Allusion to Rome in British Imperialist Thought of the Late Nineteenth and Early Twentieth Centuries. Victorian Stud., Dec. 1971. [8813]

BOADEN, N. T. Innovation and Change in English Local Government. Pol. Stud., Dec. 1971. [8814]

BORTHWICK, R. L. An Early Experiment with Standing Committees in the House of Lords. Parl. Aff., Winter 1971/72. [8815]

BOWERS, BRIAN. The Rise of the Electricity Supply Industry. Hist. Today, Mar. 1972. [8816]

BRANTLINGER, PATRICK. Dickens and the Factories. Nineteenth-Cent. Fiction, Dec. 1971. [8817]

BRAUER, KINLEY J. British Mediation and the American Civil War: A Reconsideration. J. S. Hist., Feb. 1972. [8818]

BRAUER, KINLEY J. Seward, American Politics and Anglo-American Relations: The British Perspective. Am. Chron., Feb. 1972. [8819]

BREDIN, HUGH. T. S. Eliot and Thomistic Scholasticism [note]. J. Hist. Ideas, Apr.-June 1972. [8820]

BROCK, WILLIAM. The Image of England and American Nationalism. J. Am. Stud., Dec. 1971. [8821]

BROMLEY, D., et al. Banbury at the Turn of the Century. Cake and Cockhorse, Spring 1972. [8822]

BROWN, KENNETH D. Conflict in Early British Welfare Policy: The Case of the Unemployed Workmen's Bill of 1905. J. Mod. Hist., Dec. 1971. [8823]

BROWN, R. K., et al. The Contours of Solidarity: Social Stratification and Industrial Relations in Shipbuilding. Brit. J. Ind. Relations, Mar. 1972. [8824]

BROWN, WALLACE. Escape from the Republic: The Dispersal of the American Loyalists. Hist. Today, Feb. 1972. [8825]

BROWNE, JOSEPH WILLIAM. Berkeley and Scholasticism. Mod. Schoolman, Jan. 1972. [8826]

BRUNDAGE, ANTHONY. The Landed Interest and the New Poor Law: a Reappraisal of the Revolution in Government. EHR, Jan. 1972. [8827]

- BRYNN, EDWARD. Politics and Economic Theory: Robert Wilnot Horton, 1820-1841. Historian, Feb. 1972. [8828]
- BURCHELL, ROBERT A. British Immigrants in Southern California, 1850-1870. S. Calif. Q., Dec. 1971. [8829]
- CALVERT, PETER. The Last Occasion on Which Britain Used Coercion to Settle a Dispute with a Non-colonial Territory in the Caribbean: Guatemala and the Powers, 1909-1913. Inter-Am. Ec. Aff., Winter 1971. [8830]
- CAMPBELL, IAN. Carlyle and Sir Gideon Dunn. Eng. Lang. Notes, Mar. 1972. [8831]
- CAMPBELL, IAN. Edward Irving, Carlyle and the Stage. Stud. Scottish Lit., Jan. 1971. [8832]
- CARSON, EDWARD. Sources for Maritime History (1): Customs Bills of Entry. Marit. Hist., no. 2, 1971. [8833]
- CHURCH, R. A. The British Leather Industry and Foreign Competition, 1870-1914. Ec. Hist. R., Nov. 1971. [8834]
- CHURCH, R. A. Profit-Sharing and Labour Relations in England in the Nineteenth Century. Int. R. Soc. Hist., pt. 1, 1971. [8835]
- CLARKE, P. F. Electoral Sociology of Modern Britain. History, Feb. 1972. [8836]
- COLLIN, DOROTHY W. The Composition of Mrs. Gaskell's North and South. Bull. John Rylands Lib., no. 1, 1971. [8837]
- COLLINS, MICHAEL. The Langton Papers: Banking and Bank of England Policy in the 1830s. Economica (Eng.), Feb. 1972. [8838]
- CONDON, M. E. The Establishment of the Transport Board—A Subdivision of the Admiralty—4 July 1794. Mariner's Mirror, Feb. 1972. [8839]
- COOK, H. C. B. The Diaries of General E. A. Holdich, G.C.B. J. Soc. Army Hist. Res., Winter 1971. [8840]
- COTTRELL, PHILIP L. The Financial Sector and Economic Growth: England in the Nineteenth Century. R. int. Hist. Banque, no. 4, 1971. [8841]
- COULTER, E. MERTON. The Great Georgia Railway Disaster Hoax on the London Times. Ga. Hist. Q., Spring 1972. [8842]
- CROWE, SIBYLEYRE. Sir Eyre Crowe and the Locarno Pact. EHR, Jan. 1972. [8843]
- CULLER, A. DWIGHT. Recent Studies in the Nineteenth Century. Stud. Eng. Lit., 1500-1900, Autumn 1971. [8844]
- DANIELSEN, ROLF. Ramsay MacDonald—svikar eller ansvarleg statsmann? Syn og segn, no. 8, 1971. [8845]
- DAVIES, NORMAN. The Poles in Great Britain, 1914-1919. Slavonic E. Eur. R., Jan. 1972. [8846]
- DÁVIS, MOLLIE C. The Countess of Huntingdon and Whitefield's Bethesda. Ga. Hist. Q., Spring 1972. [8847]
- DEANE, SEAMUS F. Lord Acton and Edmund Burke [note]. J. Hist. Ideas, Apr.-June 1972. [8848]
- DÉVADHAR, V. C. Alfred Marshall on Cooperation. An. Public Co-operative Ec., Oct.-Dec. 1971. [8849]
- DOWRICK, F. E. Christian Values in the Legislative Process in Britain in the Sixties. Am. J. Jurisprudence, 16, 1971. [8850]
- EMERY, RUTH. James Stuart and Nicholas Revett: Their Cultural Antecedents. Stud. Burke Times, Winter 1971-72. [8851]
- EMY, H. V. The Impact of Financial Policy on English Party Politics before 1914. Hist. J., Mar. 1972. [8852]
- FAIRLIE, SUSAN. Shipping in the Anglo-Russian Grain Trade, to 1870: Part One. Marit. Hist., no. 2, 1971. [8853]
- FARMER, DAVID. The Bibliographical Potential of a 20th Century Literary Agent's Archive: The Pinker Papers [Huxley, Graves, Wells, Bennett, Lawrence, et al.]. Lib. Chron. (Tex.), Nov. 1970. [8854]
- FARR, GRAHAME. The Steamship Great Britain—Homecoming and Approach to Restoration. Marit. Hist., no. 1, 1971. [8855]
- FEHL, PHILIPP. John Trumbull and Robert Ball Hughes's Restoration of the Statue of Pitt the Elder. N.-Y. Hist. Soc. Q., Jan. 1972. [8856]
- FEMIA, JOSEPH V. Barrington Moore and the Preconditions for Democracy. Brit. J. Pol. Sci., Jan. 1972. [8857]
- FINLAY, JOHN L. The Religious Response to Douglasism in England. J. Relig. Hist., no. 4, 1971. [8858]
- FOGARTY, MICHAEL P. Company and Corporation Reform and Worker Participation: The State of the Debate. Brit. J. Ind. Relations, Mar. 1972. [8859]
- FORBES, THOMAS R. Mortality Books for 1820 to 1849 from the Parish of St. Bride, Fleet Street, London. J. Hist. Medicine, Jan. 1972. [8860]
- FORBES, THOMAS R. The Regulation of English Midwives in the Eighteenth and Nineteenth Centuries. Medical Hist., Oct. 1971. [8861]
- FRANKLIN, MARK N.; MILLER, WILLIAM L.; and ROSE, RICHARD. A Demand-Driven File of British Political History. Hist. Methods Newslett., Dec. 1971. [8862]
- FRASER, W. HAMISH. Trade Unions, Reform and the Election of 1868 in Scotland. Scottish Hist. R., Oct. 1971. [8863]
- FRAZER, CATHERINE S. Hume on Imagination and Natural Relations. Stud. Burke Times, Winter 1971-72. [8864]
- FROST, F. Un anglo-catholique du XIX<sup>e</sup> siècle: Charles Gore et la question du développement du dogme. Mél. Sci. relig., Dec. 1971. [8865]
- GALLAWAY, LOWELL E., and VEDDER, RICHARD K. Emigration from the United Kingdom to the United States: 1860-1913. J. Ec. Hist., Dec. 1971. [8866]
- GEMMETT, ROBERT J. The Beckford Sale of 1817. Lib. Chron. (Pa.), Winter 1971. [8867]
- GEORGE, C. H. The Making of the English Bourgeoisie, 1500-1750. Sci. and Soc., Winter 1971. [8868]
- GERSTNER, PATSY A. The Reaction to James Hutton's Use of Heat as a Geological Agent. Brit. J. Hist. Sci., Dec. 1971. [8869]
- GILBERT, EDMUND W., and GOUDIE, ANDREW. Sir Roderick Impey Murchison, Bart, KCB, 1792-1871. Geog. J., Dec. 1971. [8870]
- GOURVISH, T. R. The Cost of Living in Glasgow in the Early Nineteenth Century. Ec. Hist. R., Feb. 1972. [8871]

- GRAHAM, GEORGE J., JR. Edmund Burke's "Developmental Consensus." Midwest J. Pol. Sci., Feb. 1972. [8872]
- GRAHAM, RIGBY. Modern English Woodcuts. Private Lib., Summer 1971. [8873]
- GRANT, W. P., and MARSH, D. The Confederation of British Industry. Pol. Stud., Dec. 1971. [8874]
- GREEN, DONALD C. Formulas and Syntax in Old English Poetry: A Computer Study. Computers and Humanities, no. 2, 1971. [8875]
- GREENHILL, BASIL. The National Maritime Museum's Exhibition of the Paintings of Reuben Chappell. Marit. Hist., no. 1, 1971. [8876]
- GRENVILLE, J. A. S. History at the Open University [r. art.]. History, Feb. 1972. [8877]
- GRIFFIN-COLLART, E. Le principe d'utilité et l'égalité: Bentham et J. S. Mill. R. int. Phil., no. 3, 1971. [8878]
- GULVIN, C. The Union and the Scottish Woollen Industry, 1707-1760. Scottish Hist. R., Oct. 1971. [8879]
- GWYN, WILLIAM B. The Labour Party and the Threat of Bureaucracy. Pol. Stud., Dec. 1971. [8880]
- HACHEY, THOMAS E. Winning Friends and Influencing Policy: British Strategy to Woo America in 1937. Wis. Mag. Hist., Winter 1971-1972. [8881]
- HARGREAVES, GEOFFREY D. 'Correcting in the Slip': The Development of Galley Proofs. Library, Dec. 1971. [8882]
- EARLAND, JOHN H. The Early History of the Steering Wheel. Mariner's Mirror, Feb. 1972. [8883]
- HARRIS, G. EDWARD. Contemporary Collectors, XLVI. Notes on a Small Collection of British Bindings. Book Collector, Winter 1971. [8884]
- HATTENDORF, JOHN B. Sir Julian Corbett [1854-1927] on the Significance of Naval History. Am. Neptune, Oct. 1971. [8885]
- HAWKINS, KEVIN, and RADCLIFFE, ROSEMARY. Competition in the Brewing Industry. J. Ind. Ec., Nov. 1971. [8886]
- HECHTER, MICHAEL. Regional Inequality and National Integration: The Case of the British Isles. J. Soc. Hist., Fall 1971. [8887]
- HENRIQUES, U. R. Q. The Rise and Decline of the Separate System of Prison Discipline. Past & Present, Feb. 1972. [8888]
- HEUSINGER VON WALDEGG, JOACHIM. Zeitkritik in England, 1730-1830. Die englische Karikatur von Hogarth bis Cruikshank. Philobiblon, Nov. 1971. [8889]
- HILLS, R. L., and PACEY, A. J. The Measurement of Power in Early Steam-driven Textile Mills. Technol. Cult., Jan. 1972. [8890]
- EIMMELFARB, GERTRUDE. The Writing of Social History: Recent Studies of Nineteenth-Century England [r. art.]. J. Brit. Stud., Nov. 1971. [8891]
- FOCKIN, THOMAS A. The Roles of the Loyal Opposition in Britain's House of Commons: Three Historical Paradigms. Parl. Aff., Winter 1971/72. [8892]
- FODGE, ALISON. The Training of Missionaries for Africa: the Church Missionary Society's Training College at Islington, 1900-1915. J. Relig. Africa, no. 2, 1971. [8893]
- HODGMAN, DONALD R. British Techniques of Monetary Policy: A Critical Review. J. Money, Credit, Banking, Nov. 1971. [8894]
- HOLMAN, WILLIAM R. Eric Gill, Master of Letter Forms. Lib. Chron. (Tex.), Nov. 1970. [8895]
- HORN, PAMELA. Agricultural Trade Unionism and Emigration, 1872-1881. Hist. J., Mar. 1972. [8896]
- HORN, PAMELA. Northamptonshire Agricultural Labourers and the Quest for Allotments—the 1870s. Northamptonshire Past and Present, 6, 1971/72. [8897]
- HUGH, RONALD K. The Anti-Corn Law League and the Salisbury Election of November 1843. Can. J. Hist., Dec. 1971. [8898]
- HURT, J. S. Professor West on Early Nineteenth-Century Education. Ec. Hist. R., Nov. 1971. [8899]
- INGLEHART, RONALD. Changing Value Priorities and European Integration. J. Common Market Stud., Sept. 1971. [8900]
- INGLEHART, RONALD. The Silent Revolution in Europe: Intergenerational Change in Post-Industrial Societies. Am. Pol. Sci. R., Dec. 1971. [8901]
- INGLIS-JONES, ELIZABETH. A Pembrokeshire County Family in the Eighteenth Century. Nat. Lib. Wales J., Winter 1971. [8902]
- IRONMONGER, EDWARD. Further Thoughts on W. T. Brande. Proc. Roy. Inst. Great Britain, Dec. 1971. [8903]
- JACKSON, DAVID. Registration of Land Interests—the English Version. Law Q. R., Jan. 1972. [8904]
- JACOB, ALARIC. Bayards of British India. Hist. Today, Jan. 1972. [8905]
- JARCHO, SAUL. Admiral Horatio Nelson's Combined Knife and Fork. Bull. N.Y. Acad. Medicine, Aug. 1971. [8906]
- JARCHO, SAUL. The Lazar House Library in Norwich. Bull. N.Y. Acad. Medicine, Oct. 1971. [8907]
- JURY, ELSIE MCLEOD. U.S.S. Tigress—H.M.S. Confiance, 1813-1831. Inland Seas, Spring 1972. [8908]
- KELLY, RICHARD. The Haunted House of Bulwer-Lytton. Stud. Short Fiction, Fall 1971. [8909]
- KIERNAN, COLIN. Swift and Science. Hist. J., Dec. 1971. [8910]
- KIRKPATRICK, EVRON M. "Toward a More Responsible Two-Party System": Political Science, Policy Science, or Pseudo-Science? Am. Pol. Sci. R., Dec. 1971. [8911]
- KISSANE, JAMES. Art Historians and Art Critics—IX: P. G. Hamerton, Victorian Art Critic. Burlington Mag., Jan. 1972. [8912]
- KLEIN, IRA. The Anglo-Russian Convention and the Problem of Central Asia, 1907-1914. J. Brit. Stud., Nov. 1971. [8913]
- KNOX, BRUCE A. The Rise of Colonial Federation as an Object of British Policy, 1850-1870. J. Brit. Stud., Nov. 1971. [8914]
- KORSHIN, PAUL J. The Intellectual Context of Swift's Flying Island. Philol. Q., Oct. 1971. [8915]
- LAMBERT, RICHARD S. The Stanton Press: A Retrospect. Private Lib., Summer 1971. [8916]

- LANGTON, JOHN. Coal Output in South-West Lancashire, 1590-1799. Ec. Hist. R., Feb. 1972. [8917]
- LAWLER, JUSTUS GEORGE. Newman's Apologia and the Burden of Editing. Mod. Lang. Q., Sept. 1971. [8918]
- LAWRENCE, ELWOOD P. "The Happy Land": W. S. Gilbert as Political Satirist. Victorian Stud., Dec. 1971. [8919]
- LAYTON, DAVID. Science in the Schools: The First Wave—A Study of the Influence of Richard Dawes (1793-1867). Brit. J. Ed. Stud., Feb. 1972. [8920]
- LEHMANN, WILLIAM C. Comment on Louis Schneider, "Tension in the Thought of John Millar." Stud. Burke Times, Winter 1971-72. [8921]
- LEWIS, E. M. A Georgian Etymologist: Dr Johnson's predecessor in the year 1730 [Nathan Bailey]. Hist. Today, Feb. 1972. [8922]
- LEWISHON, DAVID. Mill and Comte on the Methods of Social Science [note]. J. Hist. Ideas, Apr.-June 1972. [8923]
- LICHTENBERG, G. C. Impressions of [David] Garrick [tr. by John Nowell]. Hist. Today, Mar. 1972. [8924]
- LIEBER, ROBERT J. Interest Groups and Political Integration: British Entry into Europe. Am. Pol. Sci. R., Mar. 1972. [8925]
- LOGAN, JOHN C. The Dumbarton Glass Works Company: A Study in Entrepreneurship. Bus. Hist., Jan. 1972. [8926]
- LYON, JOHN. Immediate Reactions to Darwin: the English Catholic Press' First Reviews of the 'Origin of the Species.' Church Hist., Mar. 1972. [8927]
- MCCLOSKEY, DONALD N. The Enclosure of Open Fields: Preface to a Study of Its Impact on the Efficiency of English Agriculture in the Eighteenth Century. J. Ec. Hist., Mar. 1972. [8928]
- MCCREADY, H. W. Chief Whip and Party Funds: The Work of Herbert Gladstone in the Edward Liberal Party, 1899 to 1906. Can. J. Hist., Dec. 1971. [8929]
- MCCUSKER, JOHN J. Sources of Investment Capital in the Colonial Philadelphia Shipping Industry. J. Ec. Hist., Mar. 1972. [8930]
- MAJUMDAR, KANCHANMOY. British Impact on Nepal. Bengal Past and Present, Jan.-June 1971. [8931]
- MALAMENT, BARBARA C. Baldwin Re-restored? [r. art.]. J. Mod. Hist., Mar. 1972. [8932]
- MANNING, ROGER B. La diffusion du Protestantisme populaire en Angleterre. An.: Ec., Soc., Civil., no. 6, 1971. [8933]
- MARTIN, STEPHEN B., and MCCORD, NORMAN. The Steamship Bedlington, 1841-54. Marit. Hist., no. 1, 1971. [8934]
- MATHIAS, PETER. La révolution industrielle en Angleterre: un cas unique? Annales, Jan.-Feb. 1972. [8935]
- MAUDSLEY, RONALD. Tax Planning in England. San Diego Law R., no. 2, 1972. [8936]
- MEHRA, PARSHOTAM. A Forgotten Chapter in the History of the Northeast Frontier: 1914-36 [British India and Tibet]. J. Asian Stud., Feb. 1972. [8937]
- MEIER, PAUL. An Unpublished Lecture of William Morris [doc.]. Int. R. Soc. Hist., pt. 2, 1971. [8938]
- MENDELS, FRANKLIN F. Proto-industrialization: The First Phase of the Industrialization Process. J. Ec. Hist., Mar. 1972. [8939]
- MILLER, RONALD. Mungo Park, 1771-1971. Scottish Geog. Mag., Dec. 1971. [8940]
- MILNE, A. T. Twenty-Five Years at the Institute, 1946-71. Bull. Inst. Hist. Res., Nov. 1971. [8941]
- MILTON-SMITH, JOHN. Earl Grey's Cabinet and the Objects of Parliamentary Reform. Hist. J., Mar. 1972. [8942]
- MONSMAN, GERALD, and WRIGHT, SAMUEL. Walter Pater: Style and Text. S. Atl. Q., Winter 1972. [8943]
- MOODIE, GRAEME C., and EUSTACE, ROWLAND. British Universities as Political Systems. Pol. Stud., Sept. 1971. [8944]
- MORGAN, KENNETH O. Welsh Nationalism. The Historical Background. J. Contemp. Hist., no. 1, 1971. [8945]
- MUNSELL, F. DARRELL. Charles Edward Trevelyan and Peel's Irish Famine Policy, 1845-1846. Societas, no. 4, 1971. [8946]
- MUSSON, A. E. The 'Manchester School' and Exportation of Machinery. Bus. Hist., Jan. 1972. [8947]
- NEAL, LARRY. Deane and Cole on Industrialization and Population Change in the Eighteenth Century [comment; with rejoinder by W. A. Cole]. Ec. Hist. R., Nov. 1971. [8948]
- NEIMAN, FRASER. The Letters of William Gilpin to Samuel Henley. Huntington Lib. Q., Feb. 1972. [8949]
- NEWALL, VENETIA. Some Problems Relating to the Study of Folklore in England. J. Am. Folklore, July-Sept. 1971. [8950]
- NEWBURY, C. W. Credit in Early Nineteenth Century West African Trade. J. Afric. Hist., no. 1, 1972. [8951]
- NEWTON, BERNARD. The Impact of Henry George on British Economists, III. The Third Phase of Response, 1885-1901; Rogers, Symes and McDonnell. Am. J. Ec. Sociol., Jan. 1972. [8952]
- Nonesuch: The Next Two Score. Book Collector, Winter 1971. [8953]
- ODDIE, WILLIAM. Dickens and the Indian Mutiny. Dickensian, Jan. 1972. [8954]
- OGELESBY, J. C. M. The British Attacks on the Caracas Coast, 1743. Mariner's Mirror, Feb. 1972. [8955]
- O'HARA-MAY, JANE. Measuring Man's Needs [for Food]. J. Hist. Biology, Fall 1971. [8956]
- PARSLOE, GUY. Recollections of the Institute, 1922-43. Bull. Inst. Hist. Res., Nov. 1971. [8957]
- PAULSON, RONALD. Hogarth the Painter: The Exhibition at the Tate. Burlington Mag., Feb. 1972. [8958]
- PETERS, MARIE. The 'Monitor' on the Constitution, 1755-1765: New Light on the Ideological Origins of English Radicalism. EHR, Oct. 1971. [8959]
- PETRIE, SIR CHARLES. An Outstanding Ambassador—Sir Benjamin Keene. Contemp. R., Mar. 1971. [8960]
- POTTER, CLIFTON W. 'Downright Shippen [William Shippen]': the Politician as Philosopher. Hist. Today, Mar. 1972. [8961]

- PRICE, RICHARD N. The Working Men's Club Movement and Victorian Social Reform Ideology. Victorian Stud., Dec. 1971. [8962]
- PRONAY, NICHOLAS. British Newsreels in the 1930s. 2. Their Policies and Impact. History, Feb. 1972. [8963]
- RANDALL, ADRIAN. The Kettering Worsteds Industry in the Eighteenth Century. Northamptonshire Past and Present, no. 6, 1971/72. [8964]
- RECKORD, MARY. The Colonial Office and the Abolition of Slavery. Hist. J., Dec. 1971. [8965]
- REDLICH, FRITZ. Science and Charity: Count Rumford and his Followers. Int. R. Soc. Hist., pt. 2, 1971. [8966]
- RICHARDS, NOEL J. The Education Bill of 1906 and the Decline of Political Nonconformity. J. Eccles. Hist., Jan. 1972. [8967]
- RICHARDSON, H. W. British Emigration and Overseas Investment, 1870-1914. Ec. Hist. R., Feb. 1972. [8968]
- RICHARDSON, JOANNA. The Princess Charlotte. Hist. Today, Feb. 1972. [8969]
- ROGAL, SAMUEL J. Isaac Watts' London Printers, Publishers, and Booksellers (1700-1748). Yale U. Lib. Gaz., Jan. 1972. [8970]
- ROGAL, SAMUEL J. Religious Periodicals in England during the Restoration and Eighteenth Century. J. Rutgers U. Lib., Dec. 1971. [8971]
- ROGERS, JAMES ALLEN. Darwinism and Social Darwinism. J. Hist. Ideas, Apr.-June 1972. [8972]
- ROSSI, JOHN P. Lord Ripon's Resumption of Political Activity, 1878-1880. Recusant Hist., Apr. 1971. [8973]
- ROWE, D. J. Some Aspects of Chartism on Tyneside. Int. R. Soc. Hist., pt. 1, 1971. [8974]
- ROWE, D. J. A Trade Union of the North-East Coast Seamen in 1825. Ec. Hist. R., Feb. 1972. [8975]
- RUFF, LILLIAN M. How Musical was Charles Dickens? Dickensian, Jan. 1972. [8976]
- SAVORY, REGINALD. Jeffery Amherst Conducts the Hessians to England, 1756. J. Soc. Army Hist. Res., Autumn 1971. [8977]
- SCHNEIDER, FRED D. Kikuyu and Ecclesia Anglicana. Hist. Mag. Prot. Epis. Church, Mar. 1972. [8978]
- SCHNEIDER, LOUIS. Tension in the Thought of John Millar. Stud. Burke Times, Winter 1971-72. [8979]
- SEARIGHT, SARAH. The Treaty of Waitangi, 1840. Hist. Today, Feb. 1972. [8980]
- SHEPHERD, JAMES F., and WALTON, GARY M. Trade, Distribution, and Economic Growth in Colonial America. J. Ec. Hist., Mar. 1972. [8981]
- SHINGLETON, ROYCE GORDON. British Observations on Farming in the Old South. Am. Chron., Feb. 1972. [8982]
- SMITH, B. C., and STANYER, J. Administrative Developments in 1970: A Survey. Public Adm., Winter 1971. [8983]
- SMITH, JOSEPH H., and HERSHKOWITZ, LEO. Courts of Equity in the Province of New York: The Cosby Controversy, 1732-1736. Am. J. Legal Hist., Jan. 1972. [8984]
- SOKAL, MICHAEL M. Psychology at Victorian Cambridge—The Unofficial Laboratory of 1887-1888. Proc. Am. Phil. Soc., no. 2, 1972. [8985]
- SPRINGHALL, J. O. The Boy Scouts, Class and Militarism in Relation to British Youth Movements, 1908-1930. Int. R. Soc. Hist., pt. 2, 1971. [8986]
- STAMMERS, M. K. The Shipping Collection of the City of Liverpool Museums. Marit. Hist., no. 2, 1971. [8987]
- STEELE, ANITA. An Essay on "An Introduction to the Principles of Morals and Legislation" by Jeremy Bentham (1748-1832). Law Lib. J., Feb. 1972. [8988]
- STEVENSON, J. The London "Crimp" Riots of 1794. Int. R. Soc. Hist., pt. 1, 1971. [8989]
- STOKES, M. VERONICA. Charles Dickens: A Customer of Coutts & Co. Dickensian, Jan. 1972. [8990]
- STONE, LAWRENCE. The Aristocracy in Transition: a Reply to Dr Woolf. Ec. Hist. R., Feb. 1972. [8991]
- STURGILL, CLAUDE C. John Bull's Stinginess in East Florida [note]. Fla. Hist. Q., Jan. 1972. [8992]
- SWEETMAN, JOHN. Uncorroborated Evidence: One Problem about the Crimean War. J. Soc. Army Hist. Res., Winter 1971. [8993]
- THOMPSON, E. P. The Moral Economy of the English Crowd in the Eighteenth Century. Past & Present, Feb. 1971. [8994]
- USHERWOOD, STEPHEN. The Siege of Toulon, 1793. Hist. Today, Jan. 1972. [8995]
- UTTON, M. A. The Effect of Mergers on Concentration: U. K. Manufacturing Industry, 1954-65. J. Ind. Ec., Nov. 1971. [8996]
- UTTON, M. A. Some Features of the Early Merger Movements in British Manufacturing Industry. Bus. Hist., Jan. 1972. [8997]
- VEDDER, RICHARD K., and GALLAWAY, LOWELL E. The Geographical Distribution of British and Irish Emigrants to the United States after 1800. Scottish J. Pol. Ec., Feb. 1972. [8998]
- A View of the Oxford University Press. Book Collector, Winter 1971. [8999]
- VOYANT, CLAIRE. Clio Sells Sterling Short. EEH, Winter 1971-72. [9000]
- WALTON, GARY M. The New Economic History and the Burdens of the Navigation Acts. Ec. Hist. R., Nov. 1971. [9001]
- WAND, BERNARD. C. B. Macpherson's Conceptual Apparatus. Can. J. Pol. Sci., Dec. 1971. [9002]
- WARMAN, ROBERTA M. The Erosion of Foreign Office Influence in the Making of Foreign Policy, 1916-1918. Hist. J., Mar. 1972. [9003]
- WATT, DAVID. The Politics of 1951-71. Hist. Today, Jan. 1972. [9004]
- WEAVER, WARREN. In Pursuit of Lewis Carroll. Lib. Chron. (Tex.), Nov. 1970. [9005]
- WEINBROT, HOWARD D. Johnson's Dictionary and The World: The Papers of Lord Chesterfield and Richard Owen Cambridge. Philol. Q., Oct. 1971. [9006]

WEISSER, HENRY G. Chartist Biography: A Critical Bibliographical Essay. Rocky Mt. Soc. Sci. J., Jan. 1972. [9007]

WELLS, KENTWOOD D. Sir William Lawrence (1783-1867). A Study of Pre-Darwinian Ideas on Heredity and Variation. J. Hist. Biology, Fall 1971. [9008]

WEST, E. G. The Interpretation of Early Nineteenth-Century Education Statistics. Ec. Hist. R., Nov. 1971. [9009]

WILLIAMS, ROGER. The Technological Society and British Politics. Govt. and Opposition, Winter 1972. [9010]

WILLIAMSON, EUGENE L. Words from Westminster Abbey: Matthew Arnold and Arthur Stanley. Stud. Eng. Lit., 1500-1900, Autumn 1971. [9011]

WILLIAMSON, HENRY. Reflections on the Death of a Field Marshal [Haig]. Contemp. R., June 1971. [9012]

WINTER, J. M. (comp.). A Bibliography of the Published Writings of R. H. Tawney. Ec. Hist. R., Feb. 1972. [9013]

WORRALL, B. G. The Authority of Grace in the Theology of P. T. Forsyth. Scottish J. Theol., Feb. 1972. [9014]

WYNNE, MICHAEL. Thomas Frye (1710-1762). Burlington Mag., Feb. 1972. [9015]

YOUNGS, JOYCE. Local Record Sources in Print and in Progress, 1971-72. Hist. Assoc., no. 85, 1972. [9016]

ZANGERL, CARL H. E. The Social Composition of the County Magistracy in England and Wales, 1831-1887. J. Brit. Stud., Nov. 1971. [9017]

COMMONWEALTH AND IRELAND

ALBINSKI, HENRY S. Australian Society. Current Hist., Mar. 1972. [9018]

BAKER, DONALD G. Australia and America: The Refracted Image. S. Atl. Q., no. 2, 1972. [9019]

BECK, HORACE. The Prince of Spain, 1588 [Armada and the Irish Coast]. J. Folklore Inst., June 1971. [9020]

BECKFORD, GEORGE L. The Dynamics of Growth and the Nature of Metropolitan Plantation Enterprise. Soc. Ec. Stud., Dec. 1970. [9021]

BELLOMO, J. JERALD. Upper Canadian Attitudes towards Crime and Punishment (1832-1851). Ontario Hist., Mar. 1972. [9022]

BENTLEY, PHILIP. Australian Trade Unionism 1970-71. J. Ind. Relations, Dec. 1971. [9023]

BENTLEY, PHILIP, and HUGHES, BARRY. Australian Cyclical Strike Patterns. J. Ind. Relations, Dec. 1971. [9024]

BLUM, ALBERT A. Strikes, Salaries and the Search for Solutions: An Interpretive Analysis of the Irish Industrial Relations System. Brit. J. Ind. Relations, Mar. 1972. [9025]

BLUMHARDT, DOREEN. Pottery in New Zealand. Aspac Q. Cult. Soc. Aff., no. 2, 1971. [9026]

BOTHWELL, ROBERT. Canada and the World in the Seventies. Current Hist., Apr. 1972. [9027]

BROMAGE, MARY C. Ireland's Unfinished Revolution. S. Atl. Q., Winter 1972. [9028]

CAMERON, CLYDE. The Word is Strike—Responsibilities of Government, Industrial Tribunals, Employers and Trade Unions. J. Ind. Relations, Dec. 1971. [9029]

CANNY, NICHOLAS P. Historical Revision: XVI. The Flight of the Earls, 1607. Irish Hist. Stud., Mar. 1971. [9030]

CHARLTON, KENNETH. The State of Ireland in the 1820s: James Cropper's Plan. Irish Hist. Stud., Mar. 1971. [9031]

COOKE, RAYMOND M. The Historian as Underdog: Eric Williams [1911-] and the British Empire. Historian, Aug. 1971. [9032]

DINWOODIE, D. H. Arctic Controversy: the 1925 Byrd-MacMillan Expedition Example. Can. Hist. R., Mar. 1972. [9033]

DRUMMOND, ROBERT J. The Canadian Political System: An Overview. Current Hist., Apr. 1972. [9034]

EID, NADIA. L'étude des idéologies au Québec: bilan et perspectives de la recherche [comment]. R. Hist. Am. fr., no. 4, 1972. [9035]

ELKINS, W. F. Marcus Garvey, the Negro World, and the British West Indies: 1919-1920. Sci. and Soc., Spring 1972. [9036]

ELTIS, D. The Traffic in Slaves between the British West Indian Colonies, 1807-1833. Ec. Hist. R., Feb. 1972. [9037]

ESPESAT, HÉLÈNE; HARDY, JEAN-PIERRE; and RUDELL, THIERRY. Le monde du travail au Québec au XVIII<sup>e</sup> et au XIX<sup>e</sup> siècles: historiographie et état de la question. R. Hist. Am. fr., no. 4, 1972. [9038]

FALCONE, DAVID J. The Canadian Economy. Current Hist., Apr. 1972. [9039]

FARRELL, BRIAN. The Irish Prime Minister. Parl. Aff., Winter 1971/72. [9040]

FRANKS, C. E. S. The Dilemma of the Standing Committees of the Canadian House of Commons. Can. J. Pol. Sci., Dec. 1971. [9041]

FRYKENBERG, ROBERT ERIC. The Partition of India: A Quarter Century After. AHR, Apr. 1972. [9042]

GATES, R. C. Post-War Social Change in Australia. Aspac Q. Cult. Soc. Aff., Summer 1971. [9043]

GOODWIN, CARUFURD D. Canadian-American Relations in Perspective. Current Hist., Apr. 1972. [9044]

GORDON, BERNARD K. Open Options: Australia's Foreign Policy in the Seventies. Current Hist., Mar. 1972. [9045]

GRANATSTEIN, J. L. The "Man of Secrets" in Canada, 1934 [Sir Maurice Hankey]. Dalhousie R., Winter 1971-72. [9046]

GRANT, IAN. Erastus Wiman: a Continentalist Replies to Canadian Imperialism. Can. Hist. R., Mar. 1972. [9047]

GRATTAN, C. HARTLEY. The Historical Context of Australian-Japanese Relations. Current Hist., Mar. 1972. [9048]

GRUNFELD, CYRIL. Australian Compulsory Arbitration: Appearance and Reality. Brit. J. Ind. Relations, Nov. 1971. [9049]

HAGAN, CHARLES B. Australia Today. Current Hist., Mar. 1972. [9050]

- HAIR, P. E. H. An Irishman before the Mexican Inquisition, 1574-5. Irish Hist. Stud., Mar. 1971. [9051]
- FANCOCK, KEITH, and MOORE, KATHRYN. The Occupational Wage Structure in Australia since 1914. Brit. J. Ind. Relations, Mar. 1972. [9052]
- FARRIS, P. B. The International Future of Hongkong. Int. Aff., Jan. 1972. [9053]
- FARVEY, FERNAND. Les travailleurs québécois au XIX<sup>e</sup> siècle: essai d'un cadre d'analyse sociologique. R. Hist. Am. fr., no. 4, 1972. [9054]
- FORN, PAMELA L. R. The National Agricultural Labourers' Union in Ireland, 1873-9. Irish Hist. Stud., Mar. 1971. [9055]
- FRESL, PETER KARL. The United States, Canada, and the 'Market Mentality.' J. Inter-Am. Stud. World Aff., Feb. 1972. [9056]
- KUPP, JAN. Could the Dutch Commercial Empire have influenced the Canadian Economy during the First Half of the Eighteenth Century? Can. Hist. R., Dec. 1971. [9057]
- LAFFAN, MICHAEL. The Unification of Sinn Féin in 1917. Irish Hist. Stud., Mar. 1971. [9058]
- LARKIN, EMMET. The Devotional Revolution in Ireland, 1850-75. AHR, June 1972. [9059]
- LAWSON, R. Brisbane in the 1890s: The Economic Shape of a Key Decade. Ec. Rec., Dec. 1971. [9060]
- LEACH, RICHARD H. Australian Federalism. Current Hist., Mar. 1972. [9061]
- MCDONALD, LYNN. Social Class and Voting: A Study of the 1968 Canadian Federal Election in Ontario. Brit. J. Sociol., Dec. 1971. [9062]
- MCMANUS, JOHN C. An Economic Analysis of Indian Behavior in the North American Fur Trade. J. Ec. Hist., Mar. 1972. [9063]
- MCMINN, W. G. Bishop Murray and the Pattern of Australian Catholicism. J. Relig. Hist., no. 4, 1971. [9064]
- MCNAB, DAVID. Peter McArthur and Canadian Nationalism. Ontario Hist., Mar. 1972. [9065]
- MALLORY, J. R. French and English in Canada: Uneasy Union. Current Hist., Apr. 1972. [9066]
- MATHIEU, JACQUES. La balance commerciale. Nouvelle-France—Antilles au XVIII<sup>e</sup> siècle. R. Hist. Am. fr., no. 4, 1972. [9067]
- MILLS, C. P. Legislation and Decisions Affecting Industrial Relations. J. Ind. Relations, Dec. 1971. [9068]
- MORTON, W. L. The Nature of Canadian Nationality. Current Hist., Apr. 1972. [9069]
- MOYLES, R. G. Missionary Life in Newfoundland: Three Nineteenth-Century Journals. J. Can. Church Hist. Soc., Dec. 1971. [9070]
- NEATBY, HILDA. Pierre Guy: A Montreal Merchant of the Eighteenth Century. Eighteenth-Cent. Stud., Winter 1971-72. [9071]
- NIJEUWENHUYSEN, J. P., and NORMAN, N. R. Wages Policy in Australia: Issues and Tests. Brit. J. Ind. Relations, Nov. 1971. [9072]
- OLIVER, PETER. Sir William Hearst and the Collapse of the Ontario Conservative Party. Can. Hist. R., Mar. 1972. [9073]
- POTHOLM, CHRISTIAN P. At the Interface: Canada and the United States in the Seventies. Current Hist., Apr. 1972. [9074]
- POWELL, J. M. Soldier Settlement in New Zealand, 1915-1923. Australian Geog. Stud., Oct. 1971. [9075]
- PRESTHUS, ROBERT. Interest Groups and the Canadian Parliament: Activities, Interaction, Legitimacy, and Influence. Can. J. Pol. Sci., Dec. 1971. [9076]
- PURDY, J. D. John Strachan's Educational Policies, 1815-1841. Ontario Hist., Mar. 1972. [9077]
- RAUDZENS, GEORGE K. A Successful Military Settlement: Earl Grey's Enrolled Pensioners of 1846 in Canada. Can. Hist. R., Dec. 1971. [9078]
- RICHARDSON, J. L. Australian Strategic Perspectives. Current Hist., Mar. 1972. [9079]
- SEARIGHT, SARAH. The Treaty of Waitangi, 1840. Hist. Today, Feb. 1972. [9080]
- SEDERBERG, PETER C. The Gold Coast under Colonial Rule: An Expenditure Analysis. Afric. Stud. R., Sept. 1971. [9081]
- SHERIDAN, RICHARD B. Africa and the Caribbean in the Atlantic Slave Trade. AHR, Feb. 1972. [9082]
- SITSKY, LARRY. Modern Music in Australia. Aspac Q. Cult. Soc. Aff., no. 2, 1971. [9083]
- SNELL, J. G. John F. Potter, Consul General to British North America, 1864-1866. Wis. Mag. Hist., Winter 1971-72. [9084]
- SPRY, GRAHAM. Canada: Notes on Two Ideas of Nation in Confrontation. J. Contemp. Hist., no. 1, 1971. [9085]
- STAMP, ROBERT M. Technical Education, the National Policy, and Federal-Provincial Relations in Canadian Education, 1899-1919. Can. Hist. R., Dec. 1971. [9086]
- SYMES, DAVID G. Farm Household and Farm Performance: A Study of Twentieth Century Changes in Ballyferriher, Southwest Ireland. Ethnology, Jan. 1972. [9087]
- TRUMAN, TOM. A Critique of Seymour M. Lipset's Article, "Value Differences, Absolute or Relative: The English-speaking Democracies." Can. J. Pol. Sci., Dec. 1971. [9088]
- TRUMAN, TOM. Party Politics in Australia. Current Hist., Mar. 1972. [9089]
- TWIDALE, C. R. Landform Development in the Lake Eyre Region, Australia. Geog. R., Jan. 1972. [9090]
- URCH, GEORGE E. Education and Colonialism in Kenya. Hist. Ed. Q., Fall 1971. [9091]
- WALKER, R. B. The Growth and Typology of the Wesleyan Methodist Church in New South Wales, 1812-1901. J. Relig. Hist., no. 4, 1971. [9092]
- WILLIAMS, D. B., and MACAULAY, T. G. Changes in Rural Population and Work Force in Victoria, 1961-66. Australian Geog. Stud., Oct. 1971. [9093]

FRANCE

Beatrice Hyslop, Hunter College

GENERAL

- ANDRÉ, R. Le Hainaut. La démographie du Hainaut franco-belge. R. Nord, Apr.-June 1971. [9094]
- BENAERTS, PIERRE. Les expériences européennes des deux Napoléon. Ecrits Paris, July-Aug. 1971. [9095]
- COUSIN, B. Une bibliothèque de couvent à l'époque moderne: les livres des Franciscains de Sospel. An. Midi, Apr.-June 1971. [9096]
- DEYON, P. Recherches en Histoire démographique et sociale de l'époque moderne: Dénombrements et structures urbaines. R. Nord, July-Sept. 1971. [9097]
- FALLEUR, M. DE. Le Hainaut. Problèmes et Perspectives économiques du Hainaut. R. Nord, Apr.-June 1971. [9098]
- FOURNIER, HENRI. Productivité et Rentabilité des grandes Banques françaises et des grandes Banques allemandes: Essai de Comparaison. R. int. Hist. Banque, no. 4, 1971. [9099]
- FRÊCHE, G. La population de Castres et du Tarn de 1665 à 1968. An. Midi, Apr.-June 1971. [9100]
- GAXOTTE, PIERRE. Les débuts du capitalisme. Historia, Jan. 1972. [9101]
- GRANDBASTIEN, JEAN-FRANÇOIS. Les débuts du Mouvement républicain populaire en Meurthe-et-Moselle (1945-1946). An. Est, no. 2, 1971. [9102]
- GUIRAL, PIERRE. Présentation Problèmes d'histoire de la presse. R. Hist. mod. contemp., Oct.-Dec. 1971. [9103]
- KNECHT, R. J. The Early Reformation in England and France. Historia, Feb. 1972. [9104]
- LHOTE, JEAN. Variation du chiffre de la population de Metz pendant la première moitié du XIX<sup>e</sup> siècle, selon les tableaux nominatifs et les recensements. An. Est, no. 3, 1971. [9105]
- NORTIER, M. Bibliographie normande (1970). An. Normandie, Dec. 1971. [9106]
- POSNER, ERNST. Manual of Archives Administration; Theory and Practice of Public Archives in France: A Review Article. Am. Archivist, no. 1, 1972. [9107]
- REPARAZ, G.-A. DE. Le village de Haute Provence entre la fin de l'Ancien Régime et la fin de la Monarchie de juillet. Prov. hist., Sept. 1971. [9108]
- ROCHE, LOUIS. Paul Claudel à l'ambassade de Bruxelles (1933-1934). R. Hist. dipl., July-Dec. 1971. [9109]
- TRENARD, LOUIS. Le Hainaut. Du Siècle de Louis XIV à la Grande Guerre. R. Nord, Apr.-June 1971. [9110]
- TRIBOUT DE MOREMBERT, HENRI. Bibliothèques messines du XVII<sup>e</sup> siècle. An. Est, no. 3, 1971. [9111]
- BAYARD, FRANÇOISE. Les Bonvisi, marchands banquiers à Lyon, 1575-1629. An.: Ec., Soc., Civil, no. 6, 1971. [9113]
- BERTHOUBE, JEAN-PAUL. Etude historique et sociologique d'une paroisse réformée rurale: Châtillon-en-Diois des origines à nos jours (suite). Bull. Soc. Hist. Prot. fr., July-Sept. 1971. [9114]
- BOUTON, ANDRÉ. L'alimentation dans le Maine aux XV<sup>e</sup> et XVI<sup>e</sup> siècles. Bull. philol. hist., I, 1968. [9115]
- CARDAILLAC, LOUIS. Le Passage des Morisques en Languedoc (1609-1612). An. Midi, July-Sept. 1971. [9116]
- CAROLUS-BARRÉ, LOUIS. La population de Crépy-en-Valois dans la première partie du XV<sup>e</sup> siècle d'après deux rôles de taille (1426-1450). Bull. philol. hist., II, 1968. [9117]
- CHAMBERLIN, E. R. The French Invasion of Italy, 1494. Hist. Today, Jan. 1972. [9118]
- CHEVALIER, BERNARD. Alimentation et niveau de vie à Tours à la fin du XV<sup>e</sup> siècle. Bull. philol. hist., I, 1968. [9119]
- CLAVIER, HENRI. La conjuration d'Amboise vue de Strasbourg. Bull. philol. hist., II, 1968. [9120]
- DARRICAU, RAYMOND. L'action charitable d'une reine de France: Anne d'Autriche. XVII<sup>e</sup> siècle, nos. 90-91, 1971. [9121]
- DUCHÊNE, ROGER. Lettres et gazettes au XVII<sup>e</sup> siècle. R. Hist. mod. contemp., Oct.-Dec. 1971. [9122]
- ENDRÈS, ANDRÉ. Alimentation d'assistance à l'Hôtel-Dieu de Meaux en 1527. Bull. philol. hist., I, 1968. [9123]
- GONON, Mlle. Le terrier de la seigneurie de Rochetaillée (1652). Bull. Diana, no. 4, 1971. [9124]
- HAUCHECORNE, FRANÇOIS. Orléans ligueur en 1591. Bull. philol. hist., II, 1968. [9125]
- HOHL, CLAUDE. Alimentation et consommation à l'Hôtel-Dieu de Paris aux XV<sup>e</sup> et XVI<sup>e</sup> siècles. Bull. philol. hist., I, 1968. [9126]
- JAROUSSEAU, GÉRARD. L'alimentation dans l'abbaye Sainte-Croix de Poitiers en 1546 et 1547. Bull. philol. hist., I, 1968. [9127]
- JENNY, JEAN. Nouvelles recherches sur l'imprimerie à Bourges avant 1562. Bull. philol. hist., II, 1968. [9128]
- KLAITS, JOSEPH. Men of Letters and Political Reform in France at the End of the Reign of Louis XIV: The Founding of the Académie Politique. J. Mod. Hist., Dec. 1971. [9129]
- LE BLANT, ROBERT. Marchands tourangeaux à Paris au début du XVII<sup>e</sup> siècle. Bull. philol. hist., II, 1968. [9130]
- LE BLANT, ROBERT. Marché de viandes et de poissons pour Catherine de Bourbon. Bull. philol. hist., I, 1968. [9131]
- LEFEBVRE, A., and TRIBOUILLARD, F. Fiscalité et population dans l'élection de Valognes de 1540 à 1660. An. Normandie, Oct. 1971. [9132]

FRANCE: 1500 TO 1715

- MACDONALD, L. R. France and New France: The Internal Contradictions. Can. Hist. R., June 1971. [9133]
- MAILLARD, FRANÇOIS. Les dépenses de l'hôtel du comte Jean d'Angoulême pour le second semestre 1462. Bull. philol. hist., I, 1968. [9134]
- MANDROU, ROBERT. L'Histoire métallique du règne de Louis XIV (A propos d'un livre récent). R. hist. (Paris), Oct.-Dec. 1971. [9135]
- MARTIN, GILBERT. Les bases de l'alimentation dans la région de Murat-en-Bourbonnais aux XVI<sup>e</sup> et XVII<sup>e</sup> siècles. Bull. philol. hist., I, 1968. [9136]
- MILOT, J. Un problème opérationnel du XVII<sup>e</sup> siècle illustré par un cas régional. R. Nord, Apr.-June 1971. [9137]
- MUTEL, A. Notes sur les usages locaux du bailliage de Caux dans la coutume rédigée de 1583. An. Normandie, Oct. 1971. [9138]
- PAILLARD, PHILIPPE. L'élevage à Salon-de-Provence de 1470 à 1550. Bull. philol. hist., I, 1968. [9139]
- POUTET, YVES. L'enseignement des pauvres dans la France du XVII<sup>e</sup> siècle. XVII<sup>e</sup> siècle, nos. 90-91, 1971. [9141]
- PRESSOUYRE, FERDINAND. De la paroisse à la commune. Étude d'un cas particulier: Cornac (Lot). Bull. philol. hist., II, 1968. [9142]
- SAINT-ÉLOY, MADELEINE. Dépenses alimentaires à la charge de la ville de Nevers du XV<sup>e</sup> au XVI<sup>e</sup> siècle: nourriture des malades atteints de peste et festins offerts par la communauté. Bull. philol. hist., I, 1968. [9143]
- STOCKER, CHRISTOPHER. Office as Maintenance in Renaissance France. Can. J. Hist., Mar. 1971. [9145]
- VENARD, MARC. Les Oeuvres de Charité en Avignon à l'aube du XVII<sup>e</sup> siècle. XVII<sup>e</sup> siècle, nos. 90-91, 1971. [9146]
- VOISÉ, WALDEMAR. Autour de la Renaissance, de l'Humanisme et de la Réform. R. Synthèse, Jan.-June 1971. [9147]
- FRANCE: 1715 TO 1815
- ANTOINE, MICHEL. L'Etat monarchique sous le règne de Louis XV. L'Information hist., Nov.-Dec. 1971. [9148]
- ARCHES, P. Les origines du conventionnel toulousain Jacques-Marie Rouzet (1743-1820). An. Midi, Oct.-Dec. 1971. [9149]
- ARMSTRONG, JOHN A. Old-Regime Governors: Bureaucratic and Patrimonial Attributes. Comp. Stud. Soc. Hist., Jan. 1972. [9150]
- BERNARDIS, LAZZARO DE. Le Consulat et l'Empire. Quelques remarques sur le concordat français de 1801 par rapport au concordat italien de 1929. Cah. Hist. ... Clermont ... Chambéry, nos. 3-4, 1971. [9151]
- BLOMSTER, WESLEY V., and GILBERT, LEON J. Textual Revisions in Peter Weiss's Marat/Sade. Symposium (U.S.), Spring 1971. [9152]
- BOSHER, J. F. The French Crisis of 1770. History, Feb. 1972. [9153]
- BREDIN, JEAN-DENIS. Le procès du duc d'Enghien. Annales, Nov. 1971. [9154]
- BURGENER, LOUIS. Napoléon et la Suisse: méthodes et décisions (d'après la correspondance de Napoléon I). L'Information hist., Sept.-Oct. 1971. [9155]
- CAYEZ, PIERRE. Le Consulat et l'Empire. La Chambre de Commerce de Lyon et le régime impérial. Cah. Hist. ... Clermont ... Chambéry, nos. 3-4, 1971. [9156]
- CHAMBRUN, RENÉ DE. Adrienne and Lafayette at La Grange. Q. J. Lib. Cong., no. 2, 1972. [9157]
- Le Consulat et l'Empire. L'exposition de la chapelle du lycée Ampère. Cah. Hist. ... Clermont ... Chambéry, nos. 3-4, 1971. [9158]
- COSTAMAGNA, HENRI. Aspects et problèmes de la vie agropastorale dans le Comté de Nice (1699-1792). R. Hist. éc. soc., no. 4, 1971. [9159]
- DANIELS, MARY F. The Lafayette Collection at Cornell. Q. J. Lib. Cong., no. 2, 1972. [9160]
- DARNTON, ROBERT. Reading, Writing and Publishing in Eighteenth Century France: A Case Study in the Sociology of Literature. Daedalus, Winter 1971. [9161]
- DARQUENNE, ROGER. Sur les biens nationalisés celés au domaine, sous le Consulat et l'Empire. R. Nord, July-Sept. 1971. [9162]
- DEL VITTO, V. Le Consulat et l'Empire. Stendhal et Napoléon. Cah. Hist. ... Clermont ... Chambéry, nos. 3-4, 1971. [9163]
- DESPLAT, C. Le Parlement de Navarre et l'expulsion des Jésuites (mars 1762-mai 1764). An. Midi, Oct.-Dec. 1971. [9164]
- DUPUY, R. À propos de "la Vendée" de Charles Tilly. An. hist. Rév. fr., Oct.-Dec. 1971. [9165]
- FAJN, MAX. The circulation of the French press during the French Revolution: the case of R. F. Lebois' L'Ami du peuple and the royalist Gazette française [note]. EHR, Jan. 1972. [9166]
- GILLISPIE, CHARLES COULSTON. Probability and Politics: Laplace, Condorcet, and Turgot. Proc. Am. Phil. Soc., no. 1, 1972. [9167]
- GODECHOT, JACQUES. Nation, Patrie, Nationalisme and Patriotisme en France au XVIII<sup>e</sup> siècle. An. hist. Rév. fr., Oct.-Dec. 1971. [9168]
- GOLIN, STEVE. Madame de Stael: Culture as Social Control. R. Pol., July 1971. [9169]
- GOODMAN, CELIA. Chateaubriand et Madame Recamier. Hist. Today, Jan. 1972. [9170]
- GRILLON, PIERRE. Le Maroc du XVIII<sup>e</sup> siècle, d'après la correspondance du consul Louis Chénier (1767-1782). L'Information hist., Jan.-Feb. 1972. [9171]
- GRIVEAU, LÉON. Sur les débuts de la révolution industrielle en France au Creusot. Trois lettres inédites d'I. F. de Wendel et de W. Wilkinson. R. Hist. éc. soc., no. 3, 1971. [9172]
- GROENEWEGEN, P. D. A Re-Interpretation of Turgot's Theory of Capital and Interest. Ec. J. (London), June 1971. [9173]
- HODGE, M. J. S. Lamarck's Science of Living Bodies. Brit. J. Hist. Sci., Dec. 1971. [9174]
- JEHASSE, JEAN. Le Consulat et l'Empire. Napoléon, Bossuet et le mythe antique de Lyon. Cah. Hist. ... Clermont ... Chambéry, nos. 3-4, 1971. [9175]

- LAGET, MIREILLE. Petites écoles en Languedoc au XVIII<sup>e</sup> siècle. An.: Ec., Soc., Civil., no. 6, 1971. [9176]
- LANGLOIS, CL. Le plébiscite de l'an VIII: documents d'une falsification. Bull. Soc. Hist. mod., no. 4, 1971. [9177]
- LATREILLE, ANDRÉ. Le Consulat et l'Empire. Le cardinal Fesch, archevêque après 1814. Cah. Hist. ... Clermont ... Chambéry, nos. 3-4, 1971. [9178]
- LÉON, PIERRE. Le Consulat et l'Empire. Conjoncture internationale et vicissitudes de l'industrie dauphinoise sous l'Empire. Cah. Hist. ... Clermont ... Chambéry, nos. 3-4, 1971. [9179]
- MARKOVITCH, TIHOMIR J. Le Triple Tricentenaire de Colbert: l'enquête, les règlements, les inspecteurs. R. Hist. éc. soc., no. 3, 1971. [9180]
- MERLEY, JEAN. Le Consulat et l'Empire. La situation économique et politique de la Haute-Loire à la fin du Directoire et le redressement consulaire. Cah. Hist. ... Clermont ... Chambéry, nos. 3-4, 1971. [9181]
- MILLER, LESLIE L. Peter Weiss, Marat, and Sade: Comments on an Author's Commentary. Symposium (U.S.), Spring 1971. [9182]
- MOUSNIER, ROLAND. D'Aguesseau et le tournant des ordres aux classes sociales. R. Hist. éc. soc., no. 4, 1971. [9183]
- MULTHAUF, ROBERT P. The French Crash Program for Saltpeter Production, 1776-1794. Technol. Cult., Apr. 1971. [9184]
- MUTEL-PAGÈS, ANDRÉ. La persécution religieuse dans la Haute-Loire en 1793: l'exécution de l'abbé Chabrier. Cah. Hist. ... Clermont ... Chambéry, no. 1, 1972. [9185]
- NECHELES, RUTH F. The Abbé Grégoire and the Jews. Jewish Soc. Stud., Apr.-July 1971. [9186]
- PAPADOPOULOS, HÉLÈNE. Deux lettres inédites de Buonarroti. An. hist. Rév. fr., Oct.-Dec. 1971. [9187]
- PERCEVEAUX, PAUL. Le Consulat et l'Empire. Tableau économique de la Dombes sous la Révolution et l'Empire. Cah. Hist. ... Clermont ... Chambéry, nos. 3-4, 1971. [9188]
- PFLUG, GÜNTHER. The Development of Historical Method in the Eighteenth Century. Hist. and Theory, no. 2, 1971. [9189]
- POLIAKOV, LÉON. Les idées anthropologiques des philosophes du Siècle des Lumières. R. fr. Hist. Outre-Mer, no. 3, 1971. [9190]
- POTTECHER, FRÉDÉRIC. Trois grands procès sous la Terreur: Madame Roland, Barnave, Bailly. Annales, Dec. 1971. [9191]
- REINERMAN, ALAN J. The Napoleonic Suppression of Italian Religious Orders and Sale of Their Property: Studies since 1960. Cath. Hist. R., July 1971. [9192]
- ROBERTS, J. M. The origins of a mythology: freemasons, Protestants and the French Revolution. Bull. Inst. Hist. Res., May 1971. [9193]
- ROBIN, RÉGINE. Fief et seigneurie dans le droit et l'idéologie juridique à la fin du XVIII<sup>e</sup> siècle. An. hist. Rév. fr., Oct.-Dec. 1971. [9194]
- ROCHE, DANIEL. Voltaire, aujourd'hui (A propos de livres récents). R. hist. (Paris), Oct.-Dec. 1971. [9195]
- RUDE, FERNAND. Le Consulat et l'Empire. Le discours d'Ugo Foscolo pour la Consulta cisalpine (1802). Cah. Hist. ... Clermont ... Chambéry, nos. 3-4, 1971. [9196]
- RUDE, FERNAND. Le Consulat et l'Empire. Le réveil du patriotisme révolutionnaire dans la région Rhône-Alpes en 1814. Cah. Hist. ... Clermont ... Chambéry, nos. 3-4, 1971. [9197]
- SAKMANN, PAUL. Problems of Historical Method and of Philosophy of History in Voltaire. Hist. and Theory, no. 2, 1971. [9198]
- SELLERS, JOHN R. Lafayette Papers at the Library of Congress. Q. J. Lib. Cong., no. 2, 1972. [9199]
- SOBOUL, ALBERT. De l'an II à la Commune de 1871. An. hist. Rév. fr., Oct.-Dec. 1971. [9200]
- STAUFFER, RICHARD. Brève histoire de la confession de La Rochelle. Bull. Soc. Hist. Prot. fr., July-Sept. 1971. [9201]
- TULARD, JEAN. Le Consulat et l'Empire. L'immigration provinciale à Paris sous le premier Empire. Cah. Hist. ... Clermont ... Chambéry, nos. 3-4, 1971. [9202]
- USHERWOOD, STEPHEN. The Siege of Toulon, 1793. Hist. Today, Jan. 1972. [9203]
- VACARINO, GIORGIO. Le Consulat et l'Empire. Annexionnistes et autonomistes piémontais sous le Directoire et le Consulate. Cah. Hist. ... Clermont ... Chambéry, nos. 3-4, 1971. [9204]
- VATTEVILLE, ERIC. La Pensée fiscale de J. J. L. Graslin (1727-1790). R. Hist. éc. soc., no. 3, 1971. [9205]
- VILLEMONT, M.-J. À partir des sources hospitalières. L'alimentation du pauvre de l'hôpital général de Caen au début du XVIII<sup>e</sup> siècle. An. Normandie, Oct. 1971. [9206]
- VITTE, MARCEL. Le Consulat et l'Empire. Quelques aspects de la Saône et Loire au début de l'Empire. Cah. Hist. ... Clermont ... Chambéry, nos. 3-4, 1971. [9207]
- WELCH, M. L. Napoleon's Marshals: Brune. Am. Soc. Legion Honor Mag., no. 1, 1972. [9208]
- WELCH, M. L. Napoleon's Marshals: Moncey. Am. Soc. Legion Honor Mag., no. 2, 1972. [9209]
- WHITE, J.-C. Un exemple des réformes humanitaires dans la marine française: l'hôpital maritime de Toulon (1782-1787). An. Midi, Oct.-Dec. 1971. [9210]

FRANCE: 1815 TO 1919

- ARCHER, J. Lyon sous la III<sup>e</sup> République. La naissance de la III<sup>e</sup> République à Lyon. Cah. Hist. ... Clermont ... Chambéry, no. 1, 1971. [9211]
- ARSAC, PIERRE. Le comportement juridique des individus d'après les contrats de mariage au XIX<sup>e</sup> siècle (Grenoble, 1813-1860). R. Hist. éc. soc., no. 4, 1971. [9212]
- BAUMGARTEN, W. La Banque de France. Historia, Nov. 1971. [9213]
- BÉNÉTON, PHILIPPE. La Génération de 1912-1914, Image, mythe et réalité? R. fr. Sci. pol., Oct. 1971. [9214]
- BERTHOUD, J. Lyon sous la III<sup>e</sup> République. L'attentat contre Carnot. Cah. Hist. ... Clermont ... Chambéry, no. 1, 1971. [9215]
- BONNET, J. CH. Lyon sous la III<sup>e</sup> République. Les travailleurs étrangers dans la Loire sous le III<sup>e</sup> République. Cah. Hist. ... Clermont ... Chambéry, no. 1, 1971. [9216]

- BROGAN, HUGH. Alexis de Tocqueville and the Liberal Movement. Hist. J., June 1971. [9217]
- CAZELLES, RAYMOND. Le duc d'Aumale et la presse. R. Hist. mod. contemp., Oct.-Dec. 1971. [9218]
- CHALINE, NADINE-JOSETTE. Le Recrutement du clergé dans le diocèse de Rouen au XIX<sup>e</sup> siècle. R. Hist. éc. soc., no. 3, 1971. [9219]
- CHATELAIN, ABEL. Lutte entre colporteurs et boutiquiers en France pendant la première moitié du XIX<sup>e</sup> siècle. R. Hist. éc. soc., no. 3, 1971. [9220]
- COQ, LÉONCE. Les Auditeurs sous-préfets de Poitiers (1811-1816). L'Information hist., Sept.-Oct. 1971. [9221]
- CORBIN, A. Migrations temporaires et société rurale au XIX<sup>e</sup> siècle: le cas du Limousin. R. hist. (Paris), Oct.-Dec. 1971. [9222]
- DAVEZ, OWEN A. The Origins of the Légion des Volontaires français contre le Bolchevisme. J. Contemp. Hist., no. 4, 1971. [9223]
- DELORME, ALBERT. L'histoire de Bordeaux au XIX<sup>e</sup> siècle. R. Synthèse, Jan.-June 1971. [9224]
- DELPECH, F. Lyon sous la III<sup>e</sup> République. La presse et les partis à Lyon à l'avènement des républicains. Cah. Hist. ... Clermont ... Chambéry, no. 1, 1971. [9225]
- DOMINIQUE, PIERRE. Un rapprochement français-allemand manqué (1872-1878). Ecrits Paris, Oct. 1971. [9226]
- Les fastes de Napoléon III. Historia, Mar. 1972. [9227]
- FORTIN, ANDRÉ. Les chemins de fer et les voies navigables du Pas-de-Calais durant le Second Empire. R. Nord, July-Sept. 1971. [9228]
- FOURNIAU, CH. L'évolution de l'affaire du Tonkin: la genèse; le drame tonkinois (mai-déc. 1883), de la mort de Rivière à la prise de Sontay. R. hist. (Paris), Oct.-Dec. 1971. [9229]
- GILLET, MARCEL. Le Bassin houiller du Nord et du Pas-de-Calais de 1815 à 1914, étude économique et sociale. R. Nord, July-Sept. 1971. [9230]
- GONTARD, M. Une expérience scolaire au XIX<sup>e</sup> siècle: l'École Normale secondaire d'Aix de 1848. Prov. hist., Apr.-June 1971. [9231]
- GONTARD, MAURICE. La politique religieuse de Gallieni à Madagascar pendant les premières années de l'occupation française (1896-1900). R. fr. Hist. Outre-Mer, no. 2, 1971. [9232]
- HARTMAN, MARY S. The Sacrilege Law of 1825 in France: A Study in Anticlericalism and Mythmaking. J. Mod. Hist., no. 1, 1972. [9233]
- HOHENBERG, PAUL. Change in Rural France in the Period of Industrialization, 1830-1914. J. Ec. Hist., Mar. 1972. [9234]
- HOLROYD, RICHARD. The Bourbon Army, 1815-1830. Hist. J., Sept. 1971. [9235]
- HUARD, R. La défense du suffrage universel sous la Seconde République: les réactions de l'opinion gardoise et le pétitionnement contre la loi du 31 mai 1850 (1850-1851). An. Midi, July-Sept. 1971. [9236]
- JOACHIM, BENOÎT. L'indemnité coloniale de Saint-Dominique et la question des rapatriés. R. hist. (Paris), Oct.-Dec. 1971. [9237]
- LACOUR, R. Lyon sous la III<sup>e</sup> République. Le bonapartisme sous le III<sup>e</sup> République. Cah. Hist. ... Clermont ... Chambéry, no. 1, 1971. [9238]
- LÉVY-LEBOYER, MAURICE. La Décélération de l'économie française dans la seconde moitié du XIX<sup>e</sup> siècle. R. Hist. éc. soc., no. 4, 1971. [9239]
- LIENS, GEORGES. La commission de censure et la commission de contrôle postal à Marseille pendant la première guerre mondiale. R. Hist. mod. contemp., Oct.-Dec. 1971. [9240]
- MALÉCOT, GEORGES. Les voyageurs français et les relations entre la France et l'Abyssinie de 1835 à 1870. R. fr. Hist. Outre-Mer, I, no. 2, 1971; II, no. 3, 1971. [9241]
- MARTIN, JACQUES. Une opération manquée: le sacre de Napoléon III. Historia, Mar. 1972. [9242]
- MAURRAS, HÉLÈNE. Quelques lettres de Monseigneur Penon à son ancien élève Charles Maurras (1885-1886) (suite). Ecrits Paris, June 1971. [9243]
- MESTRE, JEAN-LOUIS. Politique et recrutement du Conseil Général des Bouches-du-Rhône de 1852 à 1879. Prov. hist., Apr.-June 1971. [9244]
- NANTET, JACQUES. Royer-Collard, Guizot, Tocqueville et le parti du mouvement. R. Deux Mondes, Mar. 1972. [9245]
- PAUL, HARRY W. Science and the Catholic Institutes in Nineteenth-Century France. Societas, no. 4, 1971. [9246]
- PEYRE, HENRI, et al. Revolution and Reaction: The Paris Commune of 1871. Mass. R., Summer 1971. [9247]
- PORCH, DOUGLAS. The French Army Law of 1832. Hist. J., Dec. 1971. [9248]
- POZZI, REGINA. Il Moniteur Républicain e l'Homme libre. Contributo alla storia delle società segrete sotto la monarchia di luglio. R. stor. ital., Sept. 1971. [9249]
- PRICE, R. The Paris Commune of 1871. J. Eur. Stud., Dec. 1971. [9250]
- PRICE, R. D. Ideology and Motivation in the Paris Commune of 1871. Hist. J., no. 1, 1972. [9251]
- PRICE, R. D. Popular Disturbances in the French Provinces after the July Revolution of 1830. Eur. Stud. R., no. 4, 1971. [9252]
- REARDON, MICHAEL. The Reconciliation of Christianity with Progress: Philippe Buchez. R. Pol., Oct. 1971. [9253]
- RENAULT, FRANÇOIS. L'abolition de l'esclavage au Sénégal: L'attitude de l'administration française (1848-1905). R. fr. Hist. Outre-Mer, no. 1, 1971. [9254]
- RIVET, A. Lyon sous la III<sup>e</sup> République. La proclamation de la III<sup>e</sup> République dans une sous-préfecture d'Auvergne. Cah. Hist. ... Clermont ... Chambéry, no. 1, 1971. [9255]
- ROUGERIE, J. Le centenaire de la Commune: Moisson, problèmes, ouvertures. R. hist. (Paris), Oct.-Dec. 1971. [9256]
- RUBY, EDMOND. Quelques aspects militaires de la commune de Paris. Ecrits Paris, Sept. 1971. [9257]
- SANVOISIN, GAETAN. Le siège de Paris et la commune vus par Albert Robida. R. Deux Mondes, Apr. 1972. [9258]
- SHORROCK, WILLIAM J. The French Presence in Syria and Lebanon before the First World War, 1900-1914. Historian, Feb. 1972. [9259]

- SILVERMAN, DAN P. The Economic Consequences of Annexation: Alsace-Lorraine and Imperial Germany, 1871-1918. Central Eur. Hist., Mar. 1971. [9260]
- STERNHELL, ZEEV. Paul Déroulède and the origins of modern French Nationalism. J. Contemp. Hist., no. 4, 1971. [9261]
- TÉMIME, ÉMILE. Un journaliste d'affaires: Gabriel Hugelmann propagandiste au service de Napoléon III et homme de confiance de Thiers. R. Hist. mod. contemp., Oct.-Dec. 1971. [9262]
- THÉODORIDÈS, JEAN. Alexandre de Humboldt observateur de la France de Louis-Philippe (Rapports diplomatiques inédits) 1835-1847. R. Hist. dipl., July-Dec. 1971. [9263]
- TROUX, ALBERT. La Commune (1871). L'Information hist., Sept.-Oct., Nov.-Dec. 1971. [9264]
- VIDAL, CHRISTIANE. Chronologie et rythmes du dépeuplement dans le département des Alpes de Haute-Provence depuis le début du XIX<sup>e</sup> siècle. Prov. hist., Sept. 1971. [9265]
- WARD, JAMES E. Cardinal Place and Leo XIII's Ralliement Policy. Cath. Hist. R., Jan. 1972. [9266]
- WATSON, D. R. The making of French foreign policy during the first Clemenceau ministry, 1906-1909 [note]. EHR, Oct. 1971. [9267]
- WEILLER, JEAN SYLVAIN. Long-run Tendencies in Foreign Trade: With a Statistical Study of French Foreign Trade Structure, 1871-1939. J. Ec. Hist., Dec. 1971. [9268]
- ZENNER, VON M. Der Begriff der Nation in den politischen Theorien Benjamin Constants. Hist. Z., Aug. 1971. [9269]
- FRANCE: SINCE 1919
- ALBERT, PIERRE. Remarques sur la stagnation des tirages de la presse française de l'entre-deux-guerres. R. Hist. mod. contemp., Oct.-Dec. 1971. [9270]
- AUDEMARE, DANIEL. René Pleven réformateur. R. pol. parl., Feb. 1972. [9271]
- BAUDOT, MARCEL. La Résistance française face aux problèmes de répression et d'épuration. R. Hist. deux. guerre mond., Jan. 1971. [9272]
- BAUMONT, MICHEL. La presse niçoise de 1914 à 1916. R. Hist. mod. contemp., Oct.-Dec. 1971. [9273]
- BÉNÉTON, PHILIPPE. La génération de 1912-1914: image, mythe et réalité. R. fr. Sci. pol., Oct. 1971. [9274]
- BERGERON, ANDRÉ. F. O. [Force ouvrière]: une total indépendance. R. pol. parl., Jan. 1972. [9275]
- BLAIN, JEAN. La frontière en Nouvelle-France—perspectives historiques nouvelles à partir d'un thème ancien [note]. R. Hist. Am. fr., no. 3, 1971. [9276]
- BORDAZ, ROBERT. Transformations du Louvre et rénovation culturelle. R. Deux Mondes, Apr. 1972. [9277]
- BRADLEY, J. F. N. France, Lenin and the Bolsheviks in 1917-1918 [note]. EHR, Oct. 1971. [9278]
- CAMERON, DAVID R. Stability and Change in Patterns of French Partisanship. Public Opinion Q., Spring 1972. [9279]
- CAPDEVIELLE, JACQUES, and CAYROL, ROLAND. Les Groupes d'Entreprise du P.S.U. [Parti socialiste unifié]. R. fr. Sci. pol., Feb. 1972. [9280]
- CAYROL, ROLAND; PARODI, JEAN-LUC; and YSMAL, COLLETTE. L'Image de la Fonction parlementaire chez les députés français. R. fr. Sci. pol., Dec. 1971. [9281]
- CERNY, P. G. De Gaulle's Theory of the Nation-State and Foreign Policy. R. Pol., Apr. 1971. [9282]
- COMBES, GÉRARD. L'esprit public en Haute-Loire de 1940 à 1942. R. Hist. deux. guerre mond., Jan. 1972. [9283]
- DAVEY, OWEN A. The Origins of the Légion des Volontaires français contre le Bolchevisme. J. Contemp. Hist., no. 4, 1971. [9284]
- DEMOUVEAU, M. La scission de la C.G.T. à Lille-Roubaix-Tourcoing (1920-1922). R. Nord, July-Sept. 1971. [9285]
- DOLBOIS, HENRI. La voix de la France dans le monde. R. Défense nat., Nov. 1971. [9286]
- DOMINIQUE, PIERRE. De Petain à De Gaulle. Ecrits Paris, Feb. 1971. [9287]
- DUBESSET, P. La population tuberculeuse dans l'agglomération lyonnaise. R. géog. Lyon, no. 1, 1971. [9288]
- DUROCHER, RENÉ, and JEAN, MICHÈLE. Duplessis et la Commission royale d'enquête sur les problèmes constitutionnels, 1953-1956. R. Hist. Am. fr., no. 3, 1971. [9289]
- FESSARD DE FOUCAULT, BERTRAND. Les Ministres d'État. R. fr. Sci. pol., Feb. 1972. [9290]
- FOSSIER, J.-M. Suggestions pour de nouvelles recherches en vue d'une évaluation quantitative de la répression des faits de résistance de mai 1940 à septembre 1944, dans le Nord de la France. R. Nord, Apr.-June 1971. [9291]
- FREYSSINET, JACQUELINE. La nouvelle génération étudiante à Grenoble: essai de typologie. R. fr. Sci. pol., Oct. 1971. [9292]
- GALLAGHER, M. D. Léon Blum and the Spanish Civil War. J. Contemp. Hist., no. 3, 1971. [9293]
- GINSBURG, SHAUL. Raymond Lefebvre, national defence, and international revolution. J. Contemp. Hist., no. 4, 1971. [9294]
- GIRARD, J. L'organisation et les opérations à caractère militaire des Forces Françaises de l'Intérieur dans les Alpes-Maritimes de mars à août 1944. R. Hist. deux. guerre mond., Jan. 1972. [9295]
- GROSCLAUDE, PIERRE. Péguy et le Protestantisme. Bull. Soc. Hist. Prot. fr., July-Sept. 1971. [9296]
- HUGUEN, R. Les débuts et le fonctionnement d'un réseau d'évasion: Le réseau Shelburne. R. Hist. deux. guerre mond., Jan. 1972. [9297]
- KESSELMAN, MARK G. Changes in the French Party System. Comp. Pol., Jan. 1972. [9298]
- KOLODZIEJ, EDWARD A., and ENSNARED, FRANÇOIS. French Strategic Policy and Bloc Politics after 1968. Orbis, Winter 1972. [9299]
- LABORIE, PIERRE. Les partis politiques et la Résistance dans le Lot. R. Hist. deux. guerre mond., Jan. 1972. [9300]
- LE CORBEILLER, JACQUES. En feuilletant l'historique de la VI<sup>e</sup> armée (juin 1940). Ecrits Paris, Mar. 1972. [9301]
- LEFRANC, GEORGES. Léon Blum, chef de Parti. L'Information hist., Nov.-Dec. 1971, Jan.-Feb. 1972. [9302]

LÉVY, CLAUDE. Un journal parisien dans l'Occupation (1940-1944): "Les Nouveaux Temps." L'Information hist., Nov.-Dec. 1971. [9303]

MACHEFER, PHILIPPE. Les Croix de Feu (1927-1936). L'Information hist., Jan.-Feb. 1972. [9304]

MALTERRE, ANDRÉ. La C.G.C. [Confédération générale des Cadres] et la politique. R. pol. parl., Jan. 1972. [9305]

MENDÈS-FRANCE, PIERRE. Mon évasion. Historia, Dec. 1971. [9306]

MEYER, ANDRÉ. La présence et l'image des États-Unis dans le "Mémorial d'Aix" de 1919 à 1939. Prov. hist., Apr.-June 1971. [9307]

NGUYEN, VICTOR. Situation des études maurrassiennes: Contribution à l'étude de la presse et des mentalités. R. Hist. mod. contemp., Oct.-Dec. 1971. [9308]

NICOLET, C. Bulletins Historiques (1965-1971): Problèmes de la conquête. Institutions et histoire sociale de la fin de la République. R. hist. (Paris), Oct.-Dec. 1971. [9309]

PAPAYANIS, NICHOLAS. Alphonse Merrheim and the Strike of Hennebont: The Struggle for the Eight-Hour Day in France. Int. R. Soc. Hist., pt. 2, 1971. [9310]

RICHARDSON, JOANNA. Théophile Gautier: Social Historian. Hist. Today, Apr. 1972. [9311]

ROSEFELDER, ROGER. The Plot to Murder Admiral Darlan. Today in FRANCE, Jan.-Feb. 1972. [9312]

SCHAEFER, JEAN. Les principes de la C.G.T. R. pol. parl., Jan. 1972. [9313]

SLEVIN, CARL. Social Change and Human Values: A Study of the Thought of Bertrand de Jouvenel. Pol. Stud., Mar. 1971. [9314]

SOUCY, ROBERT. French Fascism as Class Conciliation and Moral Regeneration. Societas, no. 4, 1971. [9315]

SOUSTELLE, JACQUES. Les "services spéciaux" en France. R. pol. parl., Feb. 1972. [9316]

STJERNFELT, BERTIL. Invasionen i skuggan. En studie i anfall och försvar på franska sydkusten i augusti 1944. Aktuellt och hist., 1971. [9317]

YSMAL, COLETTE. Adhérents et Dirigeants du Centre démocrate. R. fr. Sci. pol., Feb. 1972. [9318]

SPAIN AND PORTUGAL

C. J. Bishko, University of Virginia

GENERAL

CASTELO-BRANCO, FERNANDO. Subsídios para a história da "Academia Real da História Portuguesa." Anais, XX, 1971. [9319]

FÁBREGA GRAU, ANGEL. Monseñor José Vives [bio-bibliogr.]. An. estud. med., VI, 1969. [9320]

CARCÍA GÓMEZ, EMILIO. En el centenario del nacimiento de don Miguel Asín. Bol. Real Acad. Española, Sept.-Dec. 1971. [9321]

CIBERT, RAFAEL. Tomás Muñoz y Romero (1814-1867). An. estud. med., VI, 1969. [9322]

GUAL CAMARENA, MIGUEL. Tesis doctorales y de licenciatura de tema hispano-medieval (Universidad de Madrid y Universidades francesas). An. estud. med., VI, 1969. [9323]

LINAGE CONDE, A. La edición de fuentes monásticas hispanas (1950-1970) [r. art.]. Stud. monastica, no. 2, 1971. [9324]

MANZANARES DE CIRRE, M. Gloria y descrédito de D. José Antonio Conde. An. estud. med., VI, 1969. [9325]

MARTÍN DUQUE, ANGEL J. José María Lacarra y de Miguel [bio-bibliogr.]. An. estud. med., VI, 1969. [9326]

SICROFF, A. A. Américo Castro and His Critics: Eugenio Asensio. Hisp. R., Winter 1972. [9327]

ZARAGÜETA, JUAN. Don Miguel Asín y el pensamiento islámico. Bol. Real Acad. Española, Sept.-Dec. 1971. [9328]

SPAIN AND PORTUGAL: THE MIDDLE AGES

BELMARTINO, SUSANA M. Estructura de la familia y "edades sociales" en la aristocracia de León y Castilla según las fuentes literarias e historiográficas (siglos X-XIII). Cuad. hist. España, XLVII-XLVIII, 1968. [9329]

BISHKO, CHARLES JULIAN. Count Henrique of Portugal, Cluny, and the antecedents of the Pacto Sucessório. R. port. hist., XIII, 1971. [9330]

BISHKO, CHARLES JULIAN. Fernando I y los orígenes de la alianza castellano-leonesa con Cluny. Cuad. hist. España, XLVII-XLVIII, 1968. [9331]

BURNS, ROBERT I. How to End a Crusade: Techniques for Making Peace in the Thirteenth-Century Kingdom of Valencia. Mil. Aff., Dec. 1971. [9332]

CABRILLANA, NICOLÁS. Estado actual de los estudios sobre los despoblados medievales en Europa [r. art.]. An. estud. med., VI, 1969. [9333]

DÍAZ Y DÍAZ, MANUEL C. La pasión de S. Pelayo y su difusión. An. estud. med., VI, 1969. [9334]

DÍAZ Y DÍAZ, M. C. El primer testimonio sobre la Vita Fructuosi. R. port. hist., XIII, 1971. [9335]

DINIS, ANTÓNIO JOAQUIM DIAS. Os progenitores dos Henriques de Portugal—Notas históricas. R. port. hist., XIII, 1971. [9336]

ENGELS, ODILO. La "autonomía" de los condados de Pallars y Ribagorza. An. estud. med., VI, 1969. [9337]

FELIU I MONTFORT, G. La cronología según los reyes francos en el Condado de Barcelona (siglo x). An. estud. med., VI, 1969. [9338]

FERREIRO ALEMPARTE, JAIME. Asentamiento y extinción de la Orden Teutónica en España. La encomienda de Santa María de Castellanos de la Mota de Toro (1222-1556). Bol. Real Acad. Hist., May-Aug. 1971. [9339]

GAUTIER-DALCHÉ, J. L'histoire monétaire de l'Espagne septentrionale et centrale du IX<sup>e</sup> au XII<sup>e</sup> siècles. An. estud. med., VI, 1969. [9340]

GOÑI GAZTAMIDE, JOSÉ. Dispensas del voto Jacobeo en el siglo XIV. Hisp. sacra, Jan.-June 1971. [9341]

GRASSOTTI, HILDA. ¿Otra osadía abulense? Cuad. hist. España, XLVII-XLVIII, 1968. [9342]

KOFMAN DE GUARROCHENA, LYDIA C., and CARZOLIO DE ROSSI, MARÍA INÉS. Acerca de la demografía astur-leonesa y castellana en la Alta Edad Media. Cuad. hist. España, XLVIII-XLVIII, 1968. [9343]

LANGHANS, ALMEIDA. Os Mesteirais—Crónica milenária do trabalho artifice. R. port. hist., XIII, 1971. [9344]

LINEHAN, P. A. Una "Apología" papal de mediados del siglo XIII. Hisp. sacra, Jan.-June 1971. [9345]

LUTTRELL, ANTHONY. La Corona de Aragón y la Grecia catalana: 1379-1394. An. estud. med., VI, 1969. [9346]

MACHADO MOURET, OSVALDO. Historia de los Arabes de España por Ibn Jaldūn [translation]. Cuad. hist. España, XLVII-XLVIII, 1968. [9347]

MACKENZIE, DAVID. García Alvarez y la "Corónica de Iria." An. estud. med., VI, 1969. [9348]

MARTÍNEZ DÍEZ, GONZALO. Los fueros de la familia Coria Cima-Coa. R. port. hist., XIII, 1971. [9349]

MATTOSO, JOSÉ. A nobreza rural portuense nos séculos XI e XII. An. estud. med., VI, 1969. [9350]

MATTOSO, JOSÉ. Sanctio (875-1100). R. port. hist., XIII, 1971. [9351]

O'CALLAGHAN, JOSEPH F. The Cortes and Royal Taxation during the Reign of Alfonso X of Castile. Traditio, XXVII, 1971. [9352]

ORLANDIS, JOSÉ. Los hispano-romanos en la aristocracia visigótica del siglo VII. R. port. hist., XIII, 1971. [9353]

PASTOR DE TOGNERI, REYNA. Poblamiento, frontera y estructura agraria en Castilla la Nueva (1085-1230). Cuad. hist. España, XLVII-XLVIII, 1968. [9354]

PEREIRA, ISAÍAS DE ROSA. Um "ordo" visigótico para a reunião do concílio provincial. R. port. hist., XIII, 1971. [9355]

PÉREZ DE URBEL, JUSTO. La literatura extranjera en los escriptorios españoles durante el siglo X. R. port. hist., XIII, 1971. [9356]

PÉREZ-EMBI, FLORENTINO. La marina real castellana en el siglo XIII. An. estud. med., VI, 1969. [9357]

RIBEIRO, ORLANDO. Em torno das origens de Viseu. R. port. hist., XIII, 1971. [9358]

SÃO-PAIO, MARQUÊS DE. O Conde D. Henrique em Toledo, em 1101. Anais, XX, 1971. [9359]

SMELSER, MARSHALL. A Note on the Castle and Walled Village of Sesimbra. J. Am. Port. Cult. Soc., Winter-Spring 1971. [9360]

VEGA, ANGEL CUSTODIO. La expresión antipriscilianista, "non sic unum deum solitarium vel quasi solitarium," y la datación de ciertas "profesiones de fe" antiguas. Bol. Real Acad. Hist., May-Aug. 1971. [9361]

SPAIN AND PORTUGAL: EARLY MODERN

ALVAREZ, ARTURO. Curioso epistolario en torno a la infanta Sor Margarita de la Cruz. Hisp. sacra, Jan.-June 1971. [9362]

BATLLE GALLART, CARMEN. Notas sobre la familia Llobera, mercaderes barceloneses del siglo XV. An. estud. med., VI, 1969. [9363]

BATLLE GALLART, CARMEN. La lauda sepulcral del arzobispo de Tarragona Pere Sagarriga. An. estud. med., VI, 1969. [9364]

BEAUROY, JACQUES. Note sur les boissons et l'importation de vins du Midi et d'Espagne en Nouvelle France. An. Midi, Oct.-Dec. 1971. [9365]

BOXER, C. R. A Question of Contraband: the Old Colonial Trade. Hist. Today, May 1972. [9366]

BUJANDA, J. M. DE. Los libros italianos en el Indice español de 1559. Bibl. Humanisme Renaissance, no. 1, 1972. [9367]

BURRIEL DE ORUETA, EUGENIO L. Desarrollo urbano de Castellón de la Plana. Estud. geog., May 1971. [9368]

CARRERAS, JOSÉ URBANO M. Gabriel Alonso de Herrera y su "Obra de Agricultura." R. Indias, Jan.-June 1971. [9369]

COSTA, ANTÓNIO DOMINGUES DE SOUSA. Redacções do "Liber dispensationum" e da "Summula super decimis ecclesiasticis" do canonista João de Deus. R. port. hist., XIII, 1971. [9370]

CROFT, PAULINE. Englishmen and the Spanish Inquisition, 1558-1625. EHR, Apr. 1972. [9371]

DINIS, ANTÓNIO JOAQUIM DIAS. A prelazia "nullius dioecesis" de Tomar e o Ultramar português até 1460. Anais, XX, 1971. [9372]

ECHÁNOVE TUERO, ALFONSO. La preparación intelectual del P. Andrés Marcos Burriel, S.J. (1731-1750). Hisp. sacra, Jan.-June 1971. [9373]

FERNÁNDEZ SERRANO, FRANCISCO. Obispos auxiliares en Plasencia: siglos XV-XX. Hisp. sacra, Jan.-June 1971. [9374]

FREITAS, EUGÉNIO ANDREA DA CUNHA E. António de Faria de Sousa, o da "Peregrinação." Anais, XX, 1971. [9375]

GAMBETTA, AGOSTINHO FERREIRA. Regimento dado por D. Manuel I à Casa de Moeda de Lisboa, em 1498. Anais, XX, 1971. [9376]

GARCÍA FERNÁNDEZ, JESÚS. El cultivo de arroz y su expansión en el siglo XVIII en los llanos litorales del golfo de Valencia. Estud. geog., May 1971. [9377]

HOFFMAN, PAUL E. The Portuguese Crown's Cost and Profits in the India Trade, 1580. A Report with a Proposal for Increasing the Profits. J. Am. Port. Cult. Soc., Winter-Spring 1971. [9378]

KOENIGSBERGER, H. G. The Statecraft of Philip II. Eur. Stud. R., Jan. 1971. [9379]

LADERO QUESADA, A. Algunos datos para la historia económica de las Ordenes Militares de Santiago y Calatrava en el siglo XV. Hispania, Sept.-Dec. 1970. [9380]

LOOMIE, ALBERT J. Guy Fawkes in Spain: the 'Spanish Treason' in Spanish Documents. Bull. Inst. Hist. Res., suppl. no. 9, Nov. 1971. [9381]

LOPES, FÉLIX. Duas cartas inéditas da Rainha Santa Isabel sobre jóias empenhoradas. R. port. hist., XIII, 1971. [9382]

LOVETT, A. W. A New Governor for the Netherlands: the Appointment of Don Luis de Requesens, Commendador Mayor de Castilla. Eur. Stud. R., Apr. 1971. [9383]

LOVETT, A. W. Juan de Ovando and the Council of Finance (1573-1575). Hist. J., no. 1, 1972. [9384]

MARCOS-MARÍN, FRANCISCO. Algunas notas sobre la prueba de la sangre. Bol. Real Acad. Española, Sept.-Dec. 1971. [9385]

MARTINS, MÁRIO. Introdução ao Livro de Horas del-rei D. Duarte. R. port. hist., XIII, 1971. [9386]

MASOLIVER, A. Poblet, un caso significativo de autonomía dentro del Cister. Stud. monastica, no. 2, 1971. [9387]

MASSOT I MUNTANER, J. Els abats de Sant Feliu de Guíxols. Stud. monastica, no. 2, 1971. [9388]

PEREIRA, ISAÍAS DA ROSA. Sinodo diocesano de Évora de 1534. Anais, XX, 1971. [9389]

PÉREZ BUSTAMANTE, CIRIACO. Los finales de una privanza. Bol. Real Acad. Hist., May-Aug. 1971. [9390]

PÉREZ GONZÁLEZ, RAMÓN. La Laguna. Estud. geog., Aug. 1971. [9391]

PORRO, NELLY R. Las dos investiduras de un Alvarez de Toledo. Cuad. hist. España, XLVII-XLVIII, 1968. [9392]

SEGRET, MANUEL, and RIU, MANUEL. Una villa señorial catalana en el siglo XV: Sant Llorenç de Morunys. An. estud. med., VI, 1969. [9393]

SOBREQUÉS VIDAL, SANTIAGO. El pretès "Parlament de Peralada" i la cavalleria del Bisbat de Girona en l'interregne de 1410-1412. An. estud. med., VI, 1969. [9394]

STRADLING, R. A. Spanish Conspiracy in England, 1661-1663. EHR, Apr. 1972. [9395]

SPAIN AND PORTUGAL: NINETEENTH AND TWENTIETH CENTURIES

GIL NOVALES, ALBERTO. La sociedad patriótica del café de Lorencini. Bol. Real Acad. Hist., May-Aug. 1971. [9396]

HILT, DOUGLAS. Manuel Godoy: Prince of Peace. Hist. Today, Dec. 1971. [9397]

LIDA, CLARA E. Agitaciones populares y toma de conciencia durante el bienio constitucional (1854-1856). Bol. informativo ciencia pol., Dec. 1970. [9398]

LINEHAN, P. A. Right, Left and Centre: The Second Spanish Republic [r. art.]. Hist. J., no. 1, 1972. [9399]

MACEDO, JORGE DE. O aparecimento em Portugal do conceito de programa político. R. port. hist., XIII, 1971. [9400]

MITCHELL, DAVID. Brothers of the Ideal: Some Reflections on the Spanish Civil War. Hist. Today, May 1972. [9401]

QUIRÓS LINARES, F. Fuentes para la geografía de la circulación en España: algunos libros sobre los caminos españoles de los siglos XVIII y XIX. Estud. geog., May 1971. [9402]

SÁNCHEZ DIANA, J. MA. Burgos en la Guerra de la Independencia. La ciudad y los guerrilleros. Hispania, Sept.-Dec. 1970. [9403]

SANTILLÁN Y GUTIÉRREZ DE BÁRCENA, JOSÉ RAMÓN. De 1879 a 1874. Nuevos documentos complementarios para el estudio de este período de la historia de España. Bol. Real Acad. Hist., May-Aug. 1971. [9404]

TUSELL GÓMEZ, J. Para la sociología política de la España contemporánea: el impacto de la Ley de 1907 en el comportamiento electoral. Hispania, Sept.-Dec. 1970. [9405]

VALAİK, J. DAVID. In the Days before Ecumenism: American Catholics, Anti-Semitism, and the Spanish Civil War. J. Church and State, Autumn 1971. [9406]

VILAR, P. Patrie et nation dans le vocabulaire de la guerre d'Indépendance espagnole. An. hist. Rev. fr., Oct.-Dec. 1971. [9407]

THE LOW COUNTRIES

Pierre-Henri Laurent, Tufts University

BENS, E. DE. La Presse au temps de l'occupation en Europe occidentale: En Belgique, la presse au temps de l'occupation de la Belgique. R. Hist. deux. guerre mond., Oct. 1970. [9408]

BILLIACENSIS. Aus der Geschichte von wasserbillig und mertert. Hèmecht, no. 3, 1971. [9409]

BUISSINK, J. D. Regional Differences in Marital Fertility in the Netherlands in the Second Half of the Nineteenth Century. Population Stud., no. 3, 1971. [9410]

CALMES, C. 1868-1870: Années du doute [on Luxemburg neutrality and Great Power diplomacy]. Hèmecht, no. 4, 1971. [9411]

CEYSSENS, L. Ludwig von Pastor et l'histoire du jansénisme a ses débuts. Meded. van het Nederlands Hist. Inst. te Rome, XXXV, 1971. [9412]

DAALDER, H. On building consociational nations: The case of the Netherlands and Switzerland. Int. Soc. Sci. J., no. 3, 1971. [9413]

DERUELLE, A.-C. Réflexions sur l'utilisation des sources cadastrales et notariales. Un exemple: ventes de terrains à Bruxelles en 1865. Contributions hist. éc. soc., V, 1968-69. [9414]

DUTHOY, J.-J. Le XVIII<sup>e</sup> siècle, âge d'or de l'architecture civile à Gand. R. Nord, Oct.-Nov. 1971. [9415]

- DUVOSQUEL, J.-M. La chartre de donation de saint Humbert pour l'abbaye de Maroilles, en Hainaut (18 mars 674). Bull. Commission Roy. Hist., nos. 2-4, 1970. [9416]
- ERPELDING, E. Vergangene alzettemühlen auf dem gebeid der stadt Luxemburg [pts. 1 and 2]. Hemecht, nos. 3-4, 1971. [9417]
- GALLE, H. Les canaux de la Sambre au XIX<sup>e</sup> siècle. Problèmes posés par la réduction des péages sur cette ligne en 1840. Contributions hist. éc. soc., V, 1968-69. [9418]
- HANNICK, P. Les prévôts de Thierry à Neufchâteau au XVIII<sup>e</sup> siècle. Hemecht, no. 3, 1971. [9419]
- HERR, J. Les outils en quartzite sur les plateaux de la sùre moyenne. Hemecht, no. 4, 1971. [9420]
- INGLEHART, R. The Silent Revolution in Europe: Intergenerational Change in Post-Industrial Societies [pertains to Beneluxers]. Am. Pol. Sci. R., no. 4, 1971. [9421]
- JORIS, A. Documents concernant le commerce de Juy avec la Bohême et la Haute-Meuse (XIII<sup>e</sup>-XIV<sup>e</sup> siècles). Bull. Commission Roy. Hist., no. 1, 1971. [9422]
- KESSEL, P. J. VAN. Overzicht van de Belangrijkste verrichtingen van het Nederlands historisch Instituut te Rome en van die dar andere buitenlandse instituten aldaar op het gebeid van de geschiedenis. Meded. van het Nederlands Hist. Inst. te Rome, XXXV, 1971. [9423]
- LEEuw, A. VAN DER. La Presse de l'occupation en Europe occidentale: la presse néerlandaise sous l'occupation allemande. R. Hist. deux. guerre mond., Oct. 1970. [9424]
- LOVETT, A. W. Some Spanish Attitudes to the Netherlands (1572-1578). Tijd. Gesch., no. 1, 1972. [9425]
- NAGELS, J. Eléments de dialectique dans la pensée de Pierre Le Pesant de Boisguillebert [deals with the seventeenth century]. Contributions hist. éc. soc., V, 1968-69. [9426]
- NAZET, J. A propos de la distinction échevins jurés: les institutions de Soignies aux XII<sup>e</sup>-XIII<sup>e</sup> siècles. Contributions hist. éc. soc., V, 1968-69. [9427]
- OESTREICH, G. Das politische Angliegen von Justus Lipsius' De constantia... in publicis malis (1584). Veröff. Max-Planck-Inst. Gesch., no. 1, 1971. [9428]
- PAQUET, J. Statuts de la Faculte des arts de Louvain (1567-1568?). Bull. Commission Roy. Hist., nos. 2-4, 1970. [9429]
- POSTMA, J. The Dimension of the Dutch Slave Trade from West Africa. J. Afric. Hist., no. 2, 1972. [9430]
- RAMLOT-STILMANT, E. Une tentative de monopole d'Etat sous Marie-Thérèse: La raffinerie de sel d'Ostende, 1756-1770. Contributions hist. éc. soc., V, 1968-69. [9431]
- ROLLMANN-THILL, G. Notes sur le mobilier baroque des couverts du Luxembourg [pts. 1 and 2]. Hemecht, nos. 3-4, 1971. [9432]
- SCHOFFER, I. Het trauma van de Nederlandse nederlaag [a review of L. de Jong, Het Koninkrijk der Nederlande in de tweede wereldoorlog]. Tijd. Gesch., no. 4, 1971. [9433]
- SCHRIJVER, E. History at the Rijksmuseum. Hist. Today, no. 3, 1972. [9434]
- SCHULTE NOORDHOLT, H. 64ste verslag van het Nederlands Historisch Instituut te Rome over de jaren 1968 en 1969. Meded. van het Nederlands Hist. Inst. te Rome, XXV, 1971. [9435]
- TOLLENAERE, F. DE. Encoding Techniques in Dutch Historical Lexicography. Computers and Humanities, no. 3, 1972. [9436]
- VANDERMAESEN, M. Het slot van Rupelmonde als centraal archiefdepot van het graafschap Vlaanderen (midden 13de-14de e.). Bull. Commission Roy. Hist., nos. 2-4, 1970. [9437]
- VAN DE SANDE-MEIJIS, M. Het nieuwe apostolische vicariaat Breda en de ijdele hoop op eigen bisschoppen in de bataafse republiek: De oprichting van het apostolische vicariaat Breda en de Romeinse bezwaren tegen het verlangen naar nationale bisschoppen in Holland, Brabant en in het voormalige bisdom Roermond (1802-1803). Meded. van het Nederlands Hist. Inst. te Rome, XXXV, 1971. [9438]
- VANLOUBBEECK, G. L'activité politique à Liège pendant la guerre 1914-1918. R. belge hist. contemp., no. 2, 1970. [9439]
- VISSER, D. Junius: The Author of the Vindiciae contra tyrannos? Tijd. Gesch., no. 4, 1971. [9440]
- WILLEMYS, R. De Spanje-reis (1564-1571) uit het 16de-eeuwse Weydts-hs. Bull. Commission Roy. Hist., nos. 2-4, 1970. [9441]
- WOLTIER, J. J. Koningin Elizabeth en de Opstand in de Nederlanden [major review essay of C. Wilson, Queen Elizabeth and the Revolt of the Netherlands]. Tijd. Gesch., no. 1, 1972. [9442]

NORTHERN EUROPE

Raymond E. Lindgren, California State University, Long Beach

- ABRAHAM, HENRY J. Prime Minister Olof Palme of Sweden. Orbis, no. 3, 1971. [9443]
- AHNLUND, KNUT. National Self-Characterization in Scandinavian Literature. Scandinavica, no. 2, 1971. [9444]
- ARVIDSSON, ROLF. Källkritisk radikalism och litteraturhistorisk forskning. Lauritz Weibull, Henrik Schück och Joseph Bédier. Scandia, no. 2, 1971. [9445]
- BEHRE, GÖRAN. Nya vägar för historieundervisningen i Göteborg. Hist. tids. (Sw.), no. 4, 1971. [9446]
- BINDSLOV, LAWRIIS. "La Presse de l'occupation en Europe occidentale." La Presse danoise pendant l'occupation. R. Hist. deux. guerre mond., Oct. 1970. [9447]
- BÖÖS, ERNST NATHORST. Le Musée bancaire de Stockholm. R. int. Hist. Banque, no. 4, 1971. [9448]
- CARLSSON, RAGNAR. Bolagens bostäder. Ord och bild, nos. 7-8, 1971. [9449]
- CHRISTENSEN, AKSEL E., and MOLTKE, ERIK. Hvilken (kong) Svend belejrede Hedeby. Hist. tids. (Den.), no. 2, 1971. [9450]

- DAHL, OTTAR. Grupperinger i Stortinget 1892-97, belyst ved voteringsdata. Noen metoder og foreløpige resultater. Hist. tids. (Nor.), no. 3, 1971. [9451]
- DAHL, SVEIN. Høyre og julkrisen i 1892. Hist. tids. (Nor.), no. 4, 1971. [9452]
- FEUK, DOUGLAS. Produktionsvillkor och produktutveckling. Ord och bild, nos. 7-8, 1971. [9453]
- FIDJESTØL, BJARNE. Tåtten om Harald Hardråde og fiskaren Thorgils. Maal og minne, nos. 1-2, 1971. [9454]
- FREDHOLM, CHRISTER. Nordatlanten-norskehavet. Et skandinavisk sikkerhetsproblem. Mil. tids., Mar. 1972. [9455]
- FRISBERG, CLAUS. Edv. Brandes mellem Hørup og Berg 1880-84. Historie, no. 3, 1971. [9456]
- GOLDSCHMIDT, VERNER. Kommunikation som middel til konfliktløsning. Analyse af et dansk FN-kontingents fredsbevarende aktivitet på Cypren. Mil. tids., Nov. 1971. [9457]
- GRANQVIST, KALEVI. Diktonius—litteraturkritiker i Arbetarbladet. Hist. litt.-hist. stud., 1971. [9458]
- GRÖNVIK, AXEL. Brokiga blad ur Publicistförbundets krönika. Hist. litt.-hist. stud., 1971. [9459]
- GRØTVEDT, PER NYQUIST. Den kulturelle og språklige bakgrunden for Biskop Jens Nilssøns (og Oluf Børgessøns) forfatterskap. Maal og minne, nos. 1-2, 1971. [9460]
- GUSTAFSSON, BO. Marxistisk teori och idéhistorisk metod. En fallstudie. Scandia, no. 2, 1971. [9461]
- HAGSTRÖM, TORE. Avslöjade anonyma bidrag i Åbo tidningar 1782-85. Hist. litt.-hist. stud., 1971. [9462]
- HANSEN, VILFRED FRIBORG. Mellempartiet. Et studium i partihistorie og partiorganisation med særligt henblik på perioden 1866-1870. Historie, no. 3, 1971. [9463]
- HAUGEN, HELICK O. Celebration of the Realm. The Norseman, no. 2, 1972. [9464]
- HAUTALA, KUSTAA. From the Black Sea to the Atlantic: Finnish Merchant Shipping in the late Nineteenth Century. Scand. Ec. Hist. R., no. 1, 1971. [9465]
- HELGASON, GRÍMUR M. Handritadeild Landsbókasafns. Landsbókasafn Íslands, 1970. [9466]
- [HJARTARSON, ASGEIR.] Íslenzk rit 1969. Landsbókasafn Íslands, 1970. [9467]
- HJELHOLT, HOLGER. H. C. Reedtz' henvendelse i august 1850 til Rusland og Frankrig om militær hjælp mod den slesvig-holstenske aggression. Hist. tids. (Den.), no. 2, 1971. [9468]
- HODNE, FRITZ. Staten og utbyggingen av kommunikasjonene i Norge 1850-1870. Søkelys på "Det norske system." Hist. tids. (Nor.), no. 3, 1971. [9469]
- HOLMSEN, ANDREAS. Det nordiske ødegårdsprosjekt. Hist. tids. (Sw.), no. 4, 1971. [9470]
- JENSEN, BENT. Studiet af Danmarks nyeste historie i Sovjetunionen. Hist. tids. (Den.), no. 2, 1971. [9471]
- JØRGENSEN, HARALD. Danmark 1970. Nord. tids., no. 8, 1971. [9472]
- JØRGENSEN, JOHAN. The Economic Condition of Zealand Provincial Towns in the Eighteenth Century. Scand. Ec. Hist. R., no. 1, 1971. [9473]
- JØRGENSEN, P. J. Sikkerhedspolitisk orientering. Mil. tids., Feb. 1972. [9474]
- JONES, MICHAEL. Landhöjning och bebyggelse i Maxmonejden intill 1700-talet. Hist. tids. Finl., no. 4, 1971. [9475]
- KAARSTED, TAGE. Fra statsminister M. P. Friis' eksil 1923-26. Historie, no. 3, 1971. [9476]
- KAARSTED, TAGE. Det bedragne lykkeløse kuld om baggrunden for oprettelsen af Det krigsvidenskabelige Selskab. Mil. tids., Nov. 1971. [9477]
- KERO, REINO. The Return of Emigrants from America to Finland. Publ. Inst. Gen. Hist., 1972. [9478]
- KOBLIK, STEVEN. The Politics of Swedish Neutrality. Sweden and the Western Powers, 1917-1918. Hist. tids. (Sw.), no. 1, 1972. [9479]
- KOIVUKANGAS, OLAVI. Finnish Migration to Australia before World War II. Publ. Inst. Gen. Hist., 1972. [9480]
- KRAFFT, TONE. The Versatile Vikings. The Norseman, no. 2, 1972. [9481]
- KRAG, CLAUS. Landskapsnavn på—land og—rike. Hist. tids. (Nor.), no. 4, 1971. [9482]
- KUUSE, JAN. Mechanisation, Commercialisation and the Protectionist Movement in Swedish Agriculture, 1860-1910. Scand. Ec. Hist. R., no. 1, 1971. [9483]
- LEIDE, HELGA. Ödeläggelse och uppodling efter skånska kriget. En studie av gårdar, bönder och jordens uppodling i Landskronatrakten 1675-1700. Scandia, no. 2, 1971. [9484]
- LEUX-HENSCHEN, IRMGARD. Kellgren försvarar Åbo tidningar. Hist. litt.-hist. stud., 1971. [9485]
- LIND, INGELA. Må dessa eländiga bönder slås till marken. Ord och bild, nos. 7-8, 1971. [9486]
- LOIT, ALEKSANDER. Skandinavienforskningen i Sovjetunionen. Hist. tids. (Sw.), no. 4, 1971. [9487]
- LUNDEEN, KÅRE. Utgangen på "Den Gudbrandsdalske sak" i 1660-åra. Hist. tids. (Nor.), no. 4, 1971. [9488]
- MAGERØY, HALLVARD. Har Sturla Thordarsson skrive Laxdoela Saga? Maal og minne, nos. 1-2, 1971. [9489]
- MONSTAD, KARSTEN. Det norske byråkrati i Sars' polemikk og historieskrivning. Hist. tids. (Nor.), no. 4, 1971. [9490]
- MORRISON, R. J. The Duchies and the Kingdom: Nineteenth-Century Denmark and the Theory of Customs Unions. Scand. Ec. Hist. R., no. 1, 1971. [9491]
- MUSTELIN, OLOF. Om pressensuren i Finland 1939-40. Några anteckningar om censureringen av Åbo Underrättelser. Hist. litt.-hist. stud., 1971. [9492]
- NEVAKIVI, JUKKA. Suomen kysymys kansainliitossa joulukuussa 1939. Hist. aikakausk., no. 4, 1971. [9493]
- NILSSON, GÖRAN B. Midsommarkrisen 1941. Hist. tids. (Sw.), no. 4, 1971. [9494]
- NILZÉN, GÖRAN. Näringsfrågor och partipolitik 1734. Hist. tids. (Sw.), no. 1, 1972. [9495]
- NYBERG, TORE. Geschichtsmethodologie in Skandinavien. Hist. Jb., no. 2, 1971. [9496]
- OLSSON, HENRY. Henrik Schück. En porträttskiss. Nord. tids., no. 1, 1972. [9497]

- PIPPING, HUGO E. Krig i fred. Storpolitiskt blindbockspel 1918-20. Nya Argus, no. 4, 1972. [9498]
- PIPPING, HUGO E. Alexander Blomqvist och Finlands allmänna tidning. Hist. litt.-hist. stud., 1971. [9499]
- PLEIJEL, AGNETA. Historia nerifrån. Ord och bild, nos. 7-8, 1971. [9500]
- Quarter's History. Am. Scand. R., Spring 1972. [9501]
- ROTT, JEAN. Un recueil de correspondances strasbourgeoises du XVI<sup>e</sup> siècle à la bibliothèque de Copenhague (ms. Thott 497, 2). Bull. philol. hist., II, 1968. [9502]
- SALOHEIMO, VEIJO. Käkisalmen pohjoislaänin väestönmuutokset 1600-luvulla talokirjanpidon valossa. Hist. aikakausk., [9503]
- SCHIFF, MARTIN. Sweden and the European Economic Community. Scand. Stud., Winter 1972. [9504]
- SCHILLER, BERNT. Samtidshistoria och kallkritik. Hist. tids. (Sw.), no. 1, 1972. [9505]
- SCHOOLFIELD, GEORGE C. Luminaries of a Golden Age. Am. Scand. R., Spring 1972. [9506]
- SIGURDSSON, HARALDUR. The Changing Face of Iceland. Am. Scand. R., Spring 1972. [9507]
- SKODVIN, M. "La Presse de l'occupation en Europe occidentale." La Presse norvégienne sous l'occupation allemande. R. Hist. deux. guerre mond., Oct. 1970. [9508]
- SNORRASON, EGILL. Johann Friedrich Struensee. Laegen, der politisk fejlede, men—. Nord. tids., no. 1, 1972. [9509]
- SÖDERBERG, TOM. Bondeförbundets debut och proportionalismen. Hist. tids. (Sw.), no. 1, 1972. [9510]
- STEBLIN-KAMENSKIJ, M. I. Kva er sanning i sagaene? Syn og segn, no. 3, 1972. [9511]
- STEINBY, TORSTEN. Tidningsjubileet 1871. Hist. litt.-hist. stud., 1971. [9512]
- SVENNINGSEN, NILS. Danmarks status efter 9. april 1940 og dr. P. Munchs politik. Hist. tids. (Den.), no. 2, 1971. [9513]
- THESTRUP, ANNA. Arkivdannelse under statens regnskabsvaesen. Arkiv, no. 4, 1971. [9514]
- THORSTEINSSON, STEINGRÍMUR J. Halldór Laxness and the Icelandic Sagas. Scandinavica, suppl., 1972. [9515]
- THULSTRUP, ÅKE. Gustav V:s roll under midsommarkrisen 1914. Hist. tids. (Sw.), no. 1, 1972. [9516]
- VALKNER, KRISTEN. Konrektor Edvart Edvartzen. Til belysning av hans personlighet og verk. Nord. tids., no. 8, 1971. [9517]
- VELAND, ASBJØRN. Hyrdingsbrevet frå biskop Gunnerus—vårt fyrste vitskapsprogram. Syn og segn, no. 1, 1972. [9518]
- VERNEY, DOUGLAS. The Foundations of Modern Sweden: The Swift Rise and Fall of Swedish Liberalism. Pol. Stud., no. 1, 1972. [9519]
- VESTERDAL, M. Betragtninger vedrørende haerens organisation 1842-64. Mil. tids., Oct. 1971. [9520]
- VILHJÁLMSOHN, BJARNI. Um þjóðskjalasafn Íslands og héraðsskjalasöfn. Landsbókasafn Íslands, 1970. [9521]
- WEIBULL, JÖRGEN. Järnvägssabotaget i Danmark under andra världskriget. En opposition. Scandia, no. 2, 1971. [9522]

GERMANY, AUSTRIA, AND SWITZERLAND

Arnold H. Price, Library of Congress

GERMANY: GENERAL

- BAHR, ERNST. Das Gebiet Bordschow am mittleren Schwarzwasser und seine Siedlungen bis zum Ausgang des 18. Jahrhunderts. Beitr. Gesch. Westpreussens, III, 1970. [9523]
- BEHR, HANS-JOACHIM. Militärgeschichtliche Quellen im Staatsarchiv in Osnabrück. Militärgesch. Mitt., no. 2, 1971. [9524]
- BOGGS, ROY A. Computer-Aided Studies of Middle High German Texts: A Report of the Mannheim Symposium. Computers and Humanities, no. 3, 1972. [9525]
- BOSL, KARL. Der Osten in der deutschen Geschichte. Bohemia, XI, 1970. [9526]
- BRACHVOGEL, EUGEN. Geschichte des Kirchspiels Bischofsstein. Z. Gesch. Altertumsk. Ermlands, XXXV, 1971. [9527]
- BROŻEK, ANDRZEJ. Der Beitrag Schlesiens zur Entwicklung der Statistik in Wissenschaft und Praxis [by Margret Jacobs; r. art.]. Acta Poloniae Hist., XXIV, 1971. [9528]
- BUSSMANN, WALTER. Literaturbericht: Beiträge zur preussischen Geschichte. Gesch. Wiss. Unter., Mar. 1972. [9529]
- DELORME, HERMANN. Zur Geschichte der Kassenvereine. Arch. Inst. bankhist. Forsch., Oct. 1971. [9530]
- DE PORRE, EUGEN. Militärgeschichtliche Quellen im Staatsarchiv Bremen. Militärgesch. Mitt., no. 2, 1971. [9531]
- DEUERLEIN, ERNST. Föderalismus [5 pts.]. Parlament, no. 1, 1968. no. 5, 1968; no. 38-39, 1968; no. 34-35, 1971; no. 36, 1971. [9533]
- EHMANN, KARL. Der Bergbau in Pforzheims Umgebung. Pforzheimer Geschichtsbbl., III, 1971. [9534]
- ERLBECK, GUSTAV. Die alte "Schweizer Strasse" im Schönbuch. Z. württemb. Landesgesch., XXXIX, 1970. [9535]
- FOURNIER, HENRI. Productivité et rentabilité des grandes banques françaises et des grandes banques allemandes: Essai de comparaison. R. int. Hist. Banque, no. 4, 1971. [9536]
- HEIMPEL, HERMANN. Königtum, Wandel der Welt, Bürgertum: Nachruf auf P. E. Schramm. Hist. Z., Feb. 1972. [9537]
- HERBST, WOLFGANG. Geschichtswissenschaft und Geschichtsmuseum. Z. Geschichtswiss., no. 1, 1972. [9538]

- HOPF, HANS. Archivalien zur Geschichte Westpreussens im Bundesarchiv. Beitr. Gesch. Westpreussens, III, 1970. [9539]
- JAN, HELMUT VON. Geschichtlicher Überblick über die Bischofs- und Hansestadt Hildesheim. Alt-Hildesheim, XLII, 1971. [9540]
- LETKEMANN, PETER. Archivalien zur Geschichte Westpreussens im Geheimen Staatsarchiv Berlin. Beitr. Gesch. Westpreussens, III, 1970. [9541]
- LINDENBERG, HEINZ. Das Land zwischen Ferse, Küddow und Netze in der alten Kartographie (ca. 1500–1750). Beitr. Gesch. Westpreussens, III, 1970. [9542]
- MAIER, HANS. Klassische Philologie und Politik. Merkur, Jan. 1972. [9543]
- MARCH, ULRICH. Die Wehrverfassung der Grafschaft Holstein. Z. Ges. Schleswig-Holstein. Gesch., XCVI, 1971. [9544]
- SCHULTZ, HELGA; HEITZ, GERHARD; and OLECHNOWITZ, KARL-FRIEDRICH. Die Entwicklung der Geschichtswissenschaft an der Universität Rostock seit dem Ende des 18. Jahrhunderts. Wiss. Z. U. Rostock, Ges.- u. sprachwiss. Reihe, no. 5, 1970. [9545]
- SEIFFERT, JOHANNES ERNST. "Deutsche Menschen": Vorläufiges zu Walter Benjamins Brief-Anthologie. Jb. Inst. Dtsch. Gesch., I, 1972. [9546]
- STÜRMER, MICHAEL. Das zerbrochene Haus: Preussen als Problem der Forschung. Militärgesch. Mitt., no. 2, 1971. [9547]
- TREUE, WILHELM. Wald und Technik im Bayerischen Wald vom 18. bis zum 20. Jahrhundert. Z. Agrargesch. Agrarsoziol., Oct. 1971. [9548]
- VISCHER, EDUARD. Friedrich Meinecke: Autobiographische Schriften—Ausgewählte Briefe—Zur Geschichte der Geschichtsschreibung [r. art.]. Schweiz. Z. Gesch., no. 3, 1971. [9549]
- VOLKER, LENHART. Die Pädagogik als wissenschaftliche Disziplin an der Ruprecht-Karl-Universität Heidelberg 1803–1970. Heidelberger Jb., XV, 1971. [9550]
- GERMANY: 1500 TO 1648
- ASCH, JÜRGEN. Das Protokoll des Gödringer Meierdings von 1547. Alt-Hildesheim, XLII, 1971. [9551]
- BENECKE, G. Ennoblement and Privilege in Early Modern Germany. History, Oct. 1971. [9552]
- BRODEK, THEODOR V. Socio-Political Realities in the Holy Roman Empire. J. Interdisc. Hist., Spring 1971. [9553]
- CLASEN, CLAUS-PETER. Schwenckfeld's Friends: A Social Study. Mennonite Q. R., Jan. 1972. [9554]
- COHN, HENRY J. The Early Renaissance Court in Heidelberg. Eur. Stud. R., no. 4, 1971. [9555]
- ECKERT, ALFRED. Magister Johannes Deucer 1570–1655. Z. bayer. Kirchengesch., XL, 1971. [9556]
- EPINEY-BURGARD, GEORGETTE. Jean Eck et le commentaire de la Théologie mystique du pseudo-Denis. Bibl. Humanisme Renaissance, no. 1, 1972. [9557]
- EVANS, R. J. W. Bohemia, the Emperor and the Porte 1550–1600. Oxford Slavonic Pap., III, 1970. [9558]
- FAST, HEINOLD. Die Frage nach der Autorität der Bibel auf dem Frankenthaler Täufergespräch 1571. Mennonitische Geschichtsbl., XXVIII, 1971. [9559]
- GOETZ, HELMUT. Die Instruktionen für Giovanni Tommaso Sanfelice, Ausserordentlicher Nuntius in Deutschland 1544. Quel. Forsch. ital. Arch. Bibl., L, 1971. [9560]
- GÓRSKI, KAROL. Königlich-Preussen, Polen und die Hanse: Ein Beitrag zu ihrer Geschichte an der Wende des 15. und 16. Jahrhunderts. Forsch. mittelalterlichen Gesch., XVII, 1970. [9561]
- HARSGOR, MICHAEL. Engelbert von Kleve (1462–1506), ein deutscher Fürst als hoher Würdenträger am französischen Hof. Jb. Inst. Dtsch. Gesch., I, 1972. [9562]
- HASEL, GERHARD F. Capito, Schwenckfeld and Crautwald on Sabbatarial Anabaptist Theology. Mennonite Q. R., Jan. 1972. [9563]
- HOFACKER, HANS-GEORG. Die Reformation in der Reichsstadt Ravensburg. Z. würtemb. Landesgesch., XXXIX, 1970. [9564]
- HONSELMANN, WILHELM. Peter Buschmann, Kanzler in Paderborn und Köln (1604–1673). Westf. Z., CXX, 1970. [9565]
- KÄHLER, ERNST. Nicht Luther, sondern Karlstadt. Z. Kirchengesch., no. 3, 1971. [9566]
- KAUL, THEODOR. Peter Patiens, der hierzulande "unübliche Papst." Bl. pfälz. Kirchengesch. relig. Volksk., XXXVII–XXXVIII, pt. 2, 1970–71. [9567]
- KÜHNERT, HERBERT. Zwei schwarzburgisch-pappenheimische und schwarzburgisch-sächsische Grenzbereitungen im Jahre 1548. Jb. Coburger Landesstiftung, XVI, 1971. [9568]
- LANGER, HERBERT. Die Stralsunder Gerichtsbücher des 16. Jahrhunderts als Quelle zur Erforschung des Wirtschafts-, Sozial- und Kulturgeschichte. Forsch. mittelalterlichen Gesch., XVII, 1970. [9569]
- LAUBACH, ERNST. Wahlpropaganda im Wahlkampf um die deutsche Königswürde 1519. Arch. Kulturgesch., no. 2, 1971. [9570]
- MIDELFORT, H. C. ERIK. Witchcraft and Religion in Sixteenth-Century Germany: The Formation and Consequences of an Orthodoxy. Arch. Reformationsgesch., no. 2, 1971. [9571]
- OELSCHLÄGER, ULRICH. Der Sendbrief Franz von Sickingens an seinen Verwandten Dieter von Handschuchsheim. Bl. pfälz. Kirchengesch. relig. Volksk., XXXVII–XXXVIII, pt. 2, 1970–71. [9572]
- PETRY, LUDWIG. Horizonte deutschen Bürgertums um 1600 im Spiegel der Oppenheimer Stadtgeschichte. Bl. pfälz. Kirchengesch. relig. Volksk., XXXVII–XXXVIII, pt. 2, 1970–71. [9573]
- RÖHRS, HERMANN. Die Studienzeit des Comenius in Heidelberg. Heidelberger Jb., XV, 1971. [9574]
- SAMSONOWICZ, HENRYK. Über Fragen des Landhandels Polens mit Westeuropa im 15./16. Jahrhundert. Forsch. mittelalterlichen Gesch., XVII, 1970. [9575]
- SCHILDHAUER, JOHANNES. Der Anteil der wendischen Städte am Königsberger See- und Handelsverkehr im 16. Jahrhundert auf Grundlage der Königsberger Pfundzollregister. Forsch. mittelalterlichen Gesch., XVII, 1970. [9576]

SCHMID, HANS-DIETER. Die Haltung Nürnbergs in der Täuferfrage gegenüber dem Schwäbischen Bund und dem Schmalkaldischen Bund. Z. bayer. Kirchengesch., XL, 1971. [9577]

SCHMID, HANS-DIETER. Das Hutsche Täuferturn: Ein Beitrag zur Charakterisierung einer täuferischen Richtung aus der Frühzeit der Täuferbewegung. Hist. Jb., no. 2, 1971. [9578]

SCHOPPEMEYER, HEINRICH. Paderborn als Hansestadt. Westf. Z., CXX, 1970. [9579]

SCHRÖCKER, ALFRED. Maximilian I. Auffassung vom Königtum und das ständische Reich. Quel. Forsch. ital. Arch. Bibl., L, 1971. [9580]

SCHRÖDER-LEMBKE, GERTRUD. Petrus de Crescentiis und sein Einfluss auf die frühe deutsche Sachliteratur. Z. Agrargesch. Agrarsoziol., Oct. 1971. [9581]

SCHUBERT, ERNST. Protestantisches Bürgertum in Würzburg am Vorabend der Gegenreformation. Z. bayer. Kirchengesch., XL, 1971. [9582]

SCHULTZ, HELGA. Bäuerliche Klassenkämpfe zwischen frühbürgerlicher Revolution und Dreissigjährigem Krieg. Z. Geschichtswiss., no. 2, 1972. [9583]

SEEBASS, GOTTFRIED. Die Vorgeschichte von Luthers Verwerfung der Konditionaltaufe nach einem bisher unbekannten Schreiben Andreas Osianders an Georg Spalatin vom 26. Juni 1531. Arch. Reformationsgesch., no. 2, 1971. [9584]

STEGELICH, WOLFGANG. Die Stellung der evangelischen Reichsstände und Reichsstädte zu Karl V. zwischen Protestation und Konfession 1529/30. Arch. Reformationsgesch., no. 2, 1971. [9585]

STEIN, LEON. Religion and Patriotism in German Peace Dramas during the Thirty Years' War. Central Eur. Hist., June 1971. [9586]

STRNAD, ALFRED A. Breslaus Kardinalprotektor an der römischen Kurie, vornehmlich im 16. Jahrhundert. Arch. schles. Kirchengesch., XXIX, 1971. [9587]

STUDTMANN, JOACHIM. Regenstein-Blankenburgische Musterungsrollen (1599 und 1616). Braunschw. Jb., LII, 1971. [9588]

THIMM, WERNER. Nicolaus Copernicus Warmiae Commissarius. Z. Gesch. Altertumsk. Ermlands, XXXV, 1971. [9589]

TÜCHLE, HERMANN. Die oberschwäbischen Reichsstädte Leutkirch, Isny und Wangen im Jahrhundert der Reformation. Z. württemb. Landesgesch., XXXIX, 1970. [9590]

UFER, JOACHIM. Reformationsfest und Thesenanschlag: Zur ersten Säkularfeier der Reformation im Jahre 1617. Bl. pfälz. Kirchengesch. relig. Volksk., XXXVII-XXXVIII, pt. 2, 1970-71. [9591]

VOGLER, BERNARD. Herzog Wolfgang von Pfalz-Zweibrücken und die Reformation. Bl. pfälz. Kirchengesch. relig. Volksk., XXXVII-XXXVIII, pt. 2, 1970-71. [9592]

VOLZ, HANS. Der Nürnberger Augustinermönch Martin Glaser und seine Beziehungen zu Martin Luther. Z. bayer. Kirchengesch., XL, 1971. [9593]

WAPNEWSKI, PETER, and MIRGELER, ALBERT. Golo Manns "Wallenstein" im Für und Wider. Merkur, Mar. 1972. [9594]

YULE, GEORGE. In what Way should we Understand the Causes of the Reformation? Hist. Stud., Oct. 1971. [9595]

ZOELLNER, KLAUS-PETER. Zur Stellung der Hansekontore in der zweiten Hälfte des 16. Jahrhunderts. Forsch. mittelalterlichen Gesch., XVII, 1970. [9596]

ZOLLKOEFER, FRIEDRICH. Beiträge zur älteren Geschichte des Buchdrucks in Kempten. Allgäuer Geschichtsfreund, LXXI, 1971. [9597]

GERMANY: 1648 TO 1789

BAUMANN, KARL. Eine Dollinger Militärfeldkarte aus dem Jahre 1704. Jb. Hist. Ver. Dillingen, LXXIII, 1971. [9598]

BLASCHKE, KARLHEINZ. Die historische Statistik in Sachsen seit 1700. Hist.-demog. Mitt., no. 1, 1971. [9599]

BLAUFUSS, DIETRICH. Gottlieb Spizels Gutachten zu Ph. J. Speners Berufung nach Dresden (1686). Z. bayer. Kirchengesch., XL, 1971. [9600]

BÖCHER, OTTO. Die Heidelberger Universitätskollektoren Jung und ihre Familie: Zugleich ein Beitrag zur Sozialgeschichte des kurpfälzischen Pfarrhauses. Bl. pfälz. Kirchengesch. relig. Volksk., XXXVII-XXXVIII, pt. 2, 1970-71. [9601]

BRÄNDLE, WOLFGANG. Ein württembergisches Hugenottenprivileg aus dem Jahre 1685. Z. württemb. Landesgesch., XXXIX, 1970. [9602]

BRILLING, BERNHARD. Die schlesische Judenschaft im Jahre 1737. Jb. Schles. Friedrich-Wilhelms-U. Breslau, XVII, 1972. [9603]

CIEŚLAK, EDMUND. Einige Probleme der politischen und sozialen Auseinandersetzungen in Danzig in der Mitte des 18. Jahrhunderts. Forsch. mittelalterlichen Gesch., XVII, 1970. [9604]

DEETERS, WALTER. Des Prinzen Leopold von Braunschweig Italienreise: Ein Beitrag zur Lessing-Biographie. Braunschw. Jb., LII, 1971. [9605]

DEHNKE, ERHARD. Der Versuch einer Wiederaufrichtung der Saarbrücker Münze in den Jahren 1667-1668. Z. Gesch. Saargegend, XIX, 1971. [9606]

DORN, LUDWIG. Kirchliche Verhältnisse im Allgäu vor Beginn der Aufklärungszeit. Allgäuer Geschichtsfreund, LXXI, 1971. [9607]

ERBACHER, HERMANN. Chur-Pfälzisches Allgemeines Reformiertes Gesangbuch 1749. Bl. pfälz. Kirchengesch. relig. Volksk., XXXVII-XXXVIII, pt. 2, 1970-71. [9608]

GOCKELN, WALTER. Johannes Nikolaus Kindlinger, Sammler, Archivar und Historiograph in der Nachfolge Justus Mörsers [pt. 1]. Westf. Z., CXX, 1970. [9609]

HEITZ, GERHARD. Zum Charakter der "zweiten Leibeigenschaft." Z. Geschichtswiss., no. 1, 1972. [9610]

HELMERT, FRIEDRICH. Ein Inventar kirchlicher Bau- und Kunstdenkmäler vom Jahre 1662. Westf. Z., CXX, 1970. [9611]

HERRMANN, HANS-WALTER. Saarbrücken—französische Festung? Urteile französischer Offiziere über den strategischen und fortifikatorischen Wert der Städte Saarbrücken und St. Johann. Z. Gesch. Saargegend, XIX, 1971. [9612]

HERRMANN, ULRICH. Modell der Schulreform: Das Braunschweigische Schuldirektorium 1786–1790. Braunschw. Jb., LII, 1971. [9613]

HOFMANN, HANNS HUBERT. Reichsidee und Staatspolitik: Die Vorderen Reichskreise im 18. Jahrhundert. Z. bayer. Landesgesch., no. 3, 1970. [9614]

HUFBAUER, KARL. Social Support for Chemistry in Germany during the Eighteenth Century: How and Why did it Change? Hist. Stud. Physical Sci., III, 1971. [9615]

JEANNIN, PIERRE. Zur Geschichte der Hamburger Handelsflotte am Ende des 17. Jahrhunderts: Eine Schiffsliste von 1679. Z. Ver. Hamburg. Gesch., LVII, 1971. [9616]

JORDAHN, OTTFRIED. Georg Friedrich Seilers Lehrbücher und Schriften zur religiösen und allgemeinen Volkserziehung. Z. bayer. Kirchengesch., XL, 1971. [9617]

JUNG, WOLFGANG. Die Kirchen-Ritualien in der Gemeinschaft Guttenberg 1690 [doc.]. Bl. pfälz. Kirchengesch. relig. Volksk., XXXVII–XXXVIII, pt. 2, 1970–71. [9618]

KÁROLYI, LÁSZLÓ V. Der Naturforscher Johann Friedrich Blumenbock (1752–1840) und sein Wirken in Göttingen. Göttinger Jb., XIX, 1971. [9619]

KEINEMANN, FRIEDRICH. Zeitenössische Ansichten über die Entwicklung von Wirtschaft, Gesellschaft und Kultur in den westfälischen Territorien in der zweiten Hälfte des 18. Jahrhunderts. Westf. Z., CXX, 1970. [9620]

LAHRKAMP, HELMUT. Weihbischof Niels Stensen und das Kloster Ringe in Münster. Westfalen, XLVIII, 1970. [9621]

LANGER, HERBERT. Eine neue "Krise des Feudalismus"? Zur Diskussion um die sogenannte Krise des 17. Jahrhunderts. Z. Geschichtswiss., no. 11, 1971. [9622]

LEHMANN, HARTMUT. Der Pietismus im Alten Reich. Hist. Z., Feb. 1972. [9623]

LEHMANN, HARTMUT. Zur Erforschung des württembergischen Pietismus. Schweiz. Z. Gesch., no. 3, 1971. [9624]

MÄLZER, GOTTFRIED. Bücherzensur und Verlagswesen im 18. Jahrhundert, beschrieben aus der Sicht des Autors J. A. Bengel. Börsenbl. deutsch. Buchhandel (Frankfurt), no. 91, 1971. [9625]

MEDIGER, WALTER. Die Gewinnung Bremens und Verdens durch Hannover im Nordischen Kriege. Rotenburger Mitt., no. 35, 1971. [9626]

PICHT, ULRICH. Ein Lüneburger aus Petersburg: Erinnerung an Dietrich Wilhelm Soltau. Deutsche Stud., Mar. 1972. [9627]

PRÜSENER, MARLIES. Lesegesellschaften im 18. Jahrhundert: Ein Beitrag zur Lesergeschichte. Börsenbl. deutsch. Buchhandel (Frankfurt), no. 10, 1972. [9628]

REDLICH, FRITZ. Science and Charity: Count Rumford and his Followers. Int. R. Soc. Hist., pt. 2, 1971. [9629]

SCHNITZER, HELMUT. Zur Funktion und Stellung des Heeres im feudalabsolutistischen Militarismus in Brandenburg-Preussen (17./18. Jahrhundert). Z. Militärgesch., no. 3, 1971. [9630]

SCHULTZ, HELGA. Der Rostocker Erbvertrag von 1788: Zu einigen Problemen der Geschichte einer spätfudalen Stadt. Forsch. mittelalterlichen Gesch., XVII, 1970. [9631]

THIMM, WERNER. Die Ermlandkarte von Endersch (1755). Z. Gesch. Altertumsk. Ermlands, XXXV, 1971. [9632]

TROST, OSKAR. Wege und Wegbereiter zum wirtschaftlichen Aufstieg der Stadt Pforzheim nach der Zerstörung im Orleans'schen Krieg. Pforzheimer Geschichtsbl., III, 1971. [9633]

VAN DOREN, J. P. Kirchliche Beziehungen zwischen der Pfalz und den Niederlanden. Bl. pfälz. Kirchengesch. relig. Volksk., XXXVII–XXXVIII, pt. 2, 1970–71. [9634]

GERMANY: 1789 TO 1867

ANDRIAN-WERBURG, KLAUS FRH. V. Die Coburgische Gerichtsorganisation im 19. Jahrhundert und die Eröffnung des Bayerischen Landgerichts Coburg 1921. Jb. Coburger Landesstiftung, XVI, 1971. [9635]

ASMUS, WALTER. Herbart im Urteil seiner Göttinger Universitätskollegen. Göttinger Jb., XIX, 1971. [9636]

BATSCHA, ZWI. Johann Benjamin Erhards politische Theorie. Jb. Inst. Dtsch. Gesch., I, 1972. [9637]

BERDAHL, ROBERT M. New Thoughts on German Nationalism. AHR, Feb. 1972. [9638]

BERNDT, WOLFGANG, and MÜNCH, GOTTHARD. Die Cholera in Schlesien (1831–1837). Jb. Schles. Friedrich-Wilhelms-U. Breslau, XVII, 1972. [9639]

BOSL, KARL. Das "Dritte Deutschland" und die Lösung der deutschen Frage im 19. Jahrhundert. . . . Das bayerische Beispiel. Bohemia, XI, 1970. [9640]

DEUERLEIN, ERNST. Das Bistum Augsburg zwischen Säkularisierung und Wiedererrichtung. Jb. Ver. Augsburger Bistumsgesch., II, 1968. [9641]

DITTLER, ERWIN. Johann Gottlieb Bärstecher alias Müller, Verleger und revolutionärer Demokrat im Zeitalter der Französischen Revolution. Jb. Inst. Dtsch. Gesch., I, 1972. [9642]

EISENHARDT, ULRICH. Die Garantie der Pressefreiheit in der Bundesakte von 1815. Staat, no. 3, 1971. [9643]

ELKANA, YEHUDA. Helmholtz' "Kraft": An Illustration of Concepts in Flux. Hist. Stud. Physical Sci., II, 1970. [9644]

ENGELMANN, GERHARD. Die russische Chronometer-Expedition im Jahre 1833 und ihre Durchführung an der südlichen Ostseeküste. Greifswald-Stralsunder Jb., IX, 1970–71. [9645]

ENGELMANN, URSMAR. Ignaz Heinrich von Wessenberg und die Kirche. Hist. Jb., no. 1, 1971. [9646]

FORSTREUTER, KURT. Die Rückkehr der Stadt Thorn zu Preussen 1815. Beitr. Gesch. Westpreussens, III, 1970. [9647]

FRANZEN, AUGUST. Die Zölibatsfrage im 19. Jahrhundert: Der "Badische Zölibatssturm" (1828) und das Problem der Priesterehe im Urteil Johann Adam Möhlers und Johann Baptist Hirschers. Hist. Jb., no. 2, 1971. [9648]

FROTSCHER, WERNER. Die ersten Auseinandersetzungen um die richterliche Normenkontrolle in Deutschland. Staat, no. 3, 1971. [9649]

- GEMBRUCH, WERNER. Krieg und Heerwesen im politischen Denken des Freiherrn vom Stein. Militärgesch. Mitt., no. 2, 1971. [9650]
- HALE, DOUGLAS. The Press and Fatherland Society of 1832: Common Ancestor of German Progressivism. Rocky Mt. Soc. Sci. J., Jan. 1972. [9651]
- HAMMEN, OSCAR J. Alienation, Communism, and Revolution in the Marx-Engels Briefwechsel. J. Hist. Ideas, Jan.-Mar. 1972. [9652]
- HERZ, SOPHONY. Treitschkes kritische Haltung gegenüber Berthold Auerbach, Rahel Varnhagen und Fanny Lewald. Jb. Inst. Dtsch. Gesch., I, 1972. [9653]
- HOFFMANN, PETER. Die Politik Württembergs und Bayerns während des Italienischen Einheitskrieges 1859. Z. württemb. Landesgesch., XXXIX, 1970. [9654]
- HOHMANN, FRIEDRICH GERHARD. Paderborn in den Kölner Wirren. Westfalen, XLVIII, 1970. [9655]
- HUMPHREY, TED B. Internal Structure in Kant's Thought. J. Hist. Ideas, Jan.-Mar. 1972. [9656]
- IPSEN, GUNTHER. Landkreis im Sauerland: Meschede 1818-1918, soziale Beharrung am Rande der grossen Industrie. Z. Agrargesch. Agrarsoziol., Oct. 1971. [9657]
- JEDIN, HUBERT. Briefe Constantin Höflers an Augustin Theiner 1841 bis 1845. Hist. Jb., no. 1, 1971. [9658]
- JEDIN, HUBERT. Von Sedlnitzky zu Diepenbrock: Briefe von Ignaz Ritter an Augustin Theiner von 1841-1847. Arch. schles. Kirchengesch., XXIX, 1971. [9659]
- JENSEN, GWENDOLYN. Frederick William IV: A Perplexing Monarch. Essays Arts Sci., 1971. [9660]
- KANTZENBACH, FRIEDRICH-WILHELM. Adolf von Stählin und das Landeskirchentum. Z. bayer. Kirchengesch., XL, 1971. [9661]
- KANTZENBACH, FRIEDRICH-WILHELM. Ein fränkischer Kreis der Christentumsgesellschaft und seine missionarische Ausstrahlung. Z. bayer. Kirchengesch., XL, 1971. [9662]
- KEINEMANN, FRIEDRICH. Westfälischer Adel und preussische Staatsverwaltung: Aus unveröffentlichten Briefen Werner von Haxthausens. Westf. Z., CXX, 1970. [9663]
- KLEIN, MARTIN J. Gibbs on Clausius. Hist. Stud. Physical Sci., I, 1969. [9664]
- KUDLEK, BERNHARD. Der Franzosenfriedhof in Himmelwitz (Oberschlesien) aus dem Jahre 1813/14. Arch. schles. Kirchengesch., XXIX, 1971. [9665]
- LAUER, REINHARD. Andrej Sergevič Kajsarov in Göttingen: Zu den russischen Beziehungen der Universität Göttingen am Anfang des 19. Jahrhunderts. Göttinger Jb., XIX, 1971. [9666]
- LITZENBURGER, LUDWIG. Johann Jakob Geissel und seine Bischofserhebung im Lichte des Informativprozesses 1836. Bl. pfälz. Kirchengesch. relig. Volksk., XXXVII-XXXVIII, pt. 2, 1970-71. [9667]
- MEINHARDT, GÜNTHER. Das frühe Papiergeld in Westpreussen bis zur alleinigen Verwendung des Reichsgeldes 1891. Beitr. Gesch. Westpreussens, III, 1970. [9668]
- MEYER, CARLS. Five Saxon Parishes in 1838. Concordia Hist. Inst. Q., Nov. 1971. [9669]
- MÖLLER, KURT DETLEV. Briefe Johannes Michael Speckters an Johann Martin Lappenburg aus den Jahren 1813-1817. Z. Ver. Hamburg. Gesch., LVII, 1971. [9670]
- OBERMANN, KARL. Die Bevölkerungsentwicklung in Deutschland im 19. Jahrhundert. Hist.-demog. Mitt., no. 1, 1971. [9671]
- PÖNICKE, HERBERT. Die Familie Alberti in Waldenburg: Ein Beitrag zur schlesischen Wirtschaftsgeschichte. Jb. Schles. Friedrich-Wilhelms-U. Breslau, XVII, 1972. [9672]
- PROCHÁZKA, ROMAN, FREIHERR VON. Die letzten königlich-böhmischen Lehensträger und Belehnungen im 19. Jahrhundert. Bohemia, XI, 1970. [9673]
- RAFF, DIETHER. Zur Geschichte Pforzheims: Die Entwicklung von der Kleinstadt zur Mittelstadt. Pforzheimer Geschichtsbl., III, 1971. [9674]
- REINHARDT, RUDOLF. Der Nachlass des Kirchenhistorikers und Bischofs Karl Josef v. Hefe (1809-1893). Z. Kirchengesch., no. 3, 1971. [9675]
- RÖSEN, HEINRICH. Statistisches aus der Stammrolle der Krefelder Bürgerwehr vom November 1848. Heimat (Krefeld), XLII, 1971. [9676]
- SCHMIDT, MARTIN. Karl Bernhard Hundeshagens (1810-1873) theologisch-politische Diagnose der Zeit im Jahre 1847. Heidelberger Jb., XV, 1971. [9677]
- SHOWALTER, DENNIS E. The Prussian Landwehr and its Critics, 1813-18. Central Eur. Hist., Mar. 1971. [9678]
- SHOWALTER, DENNIS E. Soldiers and Steam: Railways and the Military in Prussia, 1832 to 1848. Historian, no. 2, 1972. [9679]
- SIEBER, EBERHARD. Das Jahr 1849 in Heidelberg im Augenzeugenbericht eines Studenten. Heidelberger Jb., XV, 1971. [9680]
- STEINBERG-VON PAPE, CHRISTINE, and BRACKER, JOCHEN. Briefe des sächsischen Oberleutnants Ernst Freiherr von Friesen aus der Zeit der Bundesexekution 1863/64 [pt. 2]. Z. Ges. Schleswig-Holstein. Gesch., XCVI, 1971. [9681]
- TADDEY, GERHARD. Georg Herwegh und Württemberg: Ideologisches Wunschbild und Wirklichkeit. Z. württemb. Landesgesch., XXXIX, 1970. [9682]
- THEODORIDES, JEAN. Alexandre de Humboldt observateur de la France de Louis-Philippe (Rapports diplomatiques inédits) 1835-1847. R. Hist. dipl., July-Dec. 1971. [9683]
- TOURY, JACOB. Die jüdischen Schneider Hamburgs, 1848-1854. Jb. Inst. Dtsch. Gesch., I, 1972. [9684]
- TRIPPEN, NORBERT. Ein Brief an Augustin Theiner in Rom aus Anlass des Streites um die Kölner Erzbischofswahl 1864/66. An. Hist. Ver. Niederrhein, CLXXXIII, 1971. [9685]
- TURNER, R. STEVEN. The Growth of Professorial Research in Prussia, 1818 to 1848: Causes and Context. Hist. Stud. Physical Sci., III, 1971. [9686]
- USCZECK, HANSJÜRGEN. Politik und Kriegsführung in der militärischen Theorie und Praxis von Scharnhorst. Z. Militärgesch., no. 6, 1971. [9687]
- VAHLE, HERMANN. Die polnische Verfassung vom 3. Mai 1791 im zeitgenössischen deutschen Urteil. Jb. Gesch. Osteuropas, Sept. 1971. [9688]
- WEBER, ROLF. Die Revolution in Sachsen 1848/49. Arbeitsber. Gesch. Stadt Leipzig, no. 18, 1970. [9689]

WEISERT, HERMANN. Verfassung der Universität Heidelberg im 19. Jahrhundert [pt. 1]. Ruperto-Carola, no. 49, 1971. [9690]

WIDMANN, HANS. Christian August Vulpius Rache an den Reutlinger Nachdruckern: Mit einem Rückblick auf die württembergischen Verordnungen zum Nachdruck. Z. württemb. Landesgesch., XXXIX, 1970. [9691]

WUTHENOW, RALPH RAINER. Republikanische Rede. Jb. Inst. Dtsch. Gesch., I, 1972. [9692]

ZAK, L. A. Die Grossmächte und die deutschen Staaten am Ende der napoleonischen Kriege. Z. Geschichtswiss., no. 12, 1971. [9693]

GERMANY: 1867 TO 1918

BAUMGART, WINFRIED. Eine neue Imperialismustheorie? Bemerkungen zu dem Buche von Hans-Ulrich Wehler über Bismarcks Imperialismus [r. art.]. Militär-gesch. Mitt., no. 2, 1971. [9694]

BECKERT, SIEGFRIED. Die unmittelbaren Auswirkungen der ... Oktoberrevolution auf die Arbeiterbewegung in Chemnitz. Beitr. Heimatgesch. Karl-Marx-Stadt, XVI, 1971. [9695]

BERDAHL, ROBERT M. Conservative Politics and Aristocratic Landholders in Bismarckian Germany. J. Mod. Hist., no. 1, 1972. [9696]

BRACKER, JOCHEN. Zur Lebensmittelversorgung Kiels im Kriegswinter 1914/15. Z. Ges. Schleswig-Holstein. Gesch., XCVI, 1971. [9697]

BRAUBACH, MAX. Zwei deutsche Historiker aus Westfalen: Nachtrag. Westf. Z., CXX, 1970. [9698]

BRESS, LUDWIG. Karl Marx und die politische Ökonomie in der Gegenwart [r. art.]. Arch. Sozialgesch., XI, 1971. [9699]

BUCHNER, RUDOLF. Russlands Haltung zur Reichsgründung. Jb. Albertus-U. Königsberg, XXII, 1972. [9700]

DIEHL, JAMES M. The Organization of German Veterans, 1917-1919. Arch. Sozialgesch., XI, 1971. [9701]

EPSTEIN, FRITZ T. Neue Literatur zur Geschichte der Ostpolitik im Ersten Weltkrieg [pts. 2-4]. Jb. Gesch. Osteuropas, June-Dec. 1971. [9702]

ERDMANN, SYLVIA. Die Ausfahrten des alten Bismarck. Gesch. Wiss. Unter., Jan. 1972. [9703]

HAUSCHILD-THIESSEN, RENATE. Hamburg im Kriege 1870/71. Z. Ver. Hamburg. Gesch., LVII, 1971. [9704]

HERWIG, HOLGER H. Soziale Herkunft und wissenschaftliche Vorbildung des Seeoffiziers der Kaiserlichen Marine vor 1914 [doc.]. Militär-gesch. Mitt., no. 2, 1971. [9705]

JAHNKE, KARL-HEINZ; PARSON, WALTER; and PIETSCHMANN, HORST. Zum Prozess der Ausarbeitung der marxistischen-leninistischen Jugendpolitik und ihrer Durchsetzung in der Arbeiterbewegung. Beitr. Gesch. Arbeiterbewegung, no. 1, 1972. [9706]

KLEIN, FRITZ. Neuere Veröffentlichungen in der BRD zur Geschichte und Vorgeschichte des ersten Weltkrieges. Z. Geschichtswiss., no. 2, 1972. [9707]

KNOPP, GISEBERT. Kirchliche Personalpolitik im Düsseldorfer Regierungspräsidium vom Ausgang des Kulturkampfes bis zum Ende der Monarchie. An. Hist. Ver. Niederrhein, CLXXIII, 1971. [9708]

KÖNIG, HARTMUT. Bismarck und die Reichsgründung in der sowjetischen Geschichtsschreibung. Osteuropa, Dec. 1971. [9709]

KRAUSE, HANS-DIETER. Gewerkschaften und politischer Kampf in Deutschland in den Jahren 1873/74. Beitr. Gesch. Arbeiterbewegung, no. 1, 1972. [9710]

LEPPEN, JÖRN-PETER. Sozialdemokratie und Nordschleswig-Frage 1912 bis 1924. Z. Ges. Schleswig-Holstein. Gesch., XCVI, 1971. [9711]

LILL, RUDOLF. Die Wende im Kulturkampf. Quel. Forsch. ital. Arch. Bibl., L, 1971. [9712]

LUBAN, OTTOKAR. Die Auswirkungen der Jenaer Jugendkonferenz 1916 und die Beziehungen der Zentrale der revolutionären Arbeiterjugend zur Führung der Spartakusgruppe. Arch. Sozialgesch., XI, 1971. [9713]

LUBAN, OTTOKAR. Zwei Schreiben der Spartakuszentrale an Rosa Luxemburg (Juni 1917; 5. November 1918). Arch. Sozialgesch., XI, 1971. [9714]

MCCLAIN, WILLIAM H., and KURTH-VOIGT, LIESELOTTE E. Karl Gutzows Briefe an Hermann Costenoble. Börsenbl. deutsch. Buchhandel (Frankfurt), no. 91, 1971. [9715]

MCCORMACH, RUSSELL. Einstein, Lorenz, and the Electron Theory. Hist. Stud. Physical Sci., II, 1970. [9716]

MAYER, FRITZ. Industrie Gründungen in Niederrhein vor 100 Jahren. Heimatk. Kreis. Weitzlar, XXII, 1972. [9717]

NÜRNBERGER, RICHARD. Bismarcks Russlandpolitik in ihrer Bedeutung für die Reichsgründung. Jb. Albertus-U. Königsberg, XXII, 1972. [9718]

RICHARDS, MICHAEL D. Rosa Luxemburg—Heroine of the Left. Hist. Today, Feb. 1972. [9719]

RICKMAN, H. P. Dilthey and the Writing of Intellectual History. J. World Hist., no. 3, 1971. [9720]

RIECK, BRIGITTE. Der Beitrag der "Neuen Zeit" zur Auseinandersetzung mit der Ideologie des preussischen Staatssozialismus in den Jahren 1884 bis 1886. Beitr. Gesch. Arbeiterbewegung, no. 6, 1971. [9721]

RÜCKERT, OTTO. Karl Liebknecht zur Stellung und Rolle der Arbeiterklasse. Beitr. Gesch. Arbeiterbewegung, no. 2, 1972. [9722]

SALEWSKI, MICHAEL. "Neujahr 1900": Die Säkularwende in zeitgenössischer Sicht. Arch. Kulturgesch., no. 2, 1971. [9723]

SCHINDLER, KARL. Winston Churchill in Breslau 1906. Jb. Schles. Friedrich-Wilhelms-U. Breslau, XVII, 1972. [9724]

SCHMIDT, BERND, and RICHTER, WOLFGANG. "Dir als dem Vorkämpfer für die volle menschliche Emanzipation des weiblichen Geschlechts": Brief Clara Zetkins an August Bebel. Beitr. Gesch. Arbeiterbewegung, no. 2, 1972. [9725]

SCHMOLZE, GERHARD. Das schweigende Bündnis: Der Gedanke konservativer Kooperation bei Rudolf Rocholl (1822-1905). Jb. Schles. Friedrich-Wilhelms-U. Breslau, XVII, 1972. [9726]

SCHOLZE, SIEGFRIED. Karl Liebknecht und revolutionäre Arbeiterjugendbewegung in den Jahren des ersten Weltkrieges. Beitr. Gesch. Arbeiterbewegung, no. 1, 1972. [9727]

SELESNJOW, KONSTANTIN LWOWITSCH. Sowjetische Literatur über das militärische Erbe von Friedrich Engels. Z. Militärgesch., no. 6, 1971. [9728]

SILVERMAN, DAN P. The Economic Consequences of Annexation: Alsace-Lorraine and Imperial Germany, 1871-1918. Central Eur. Hist., Mar. 1971. [9729]

STAUDE, FRITZ. Probleme des Kampfes der Leipziger Sozialdemokratie gegen das Sozialistengesetz (1878-1890). Arbeitsber. Gesch. Stadt Leipzig, no. 18, 1970. [9730]

STONE, GERALD. Morfill and the Sorbs. Oxford Slavonic Pap., IV, 1971. [9731]

T Ellenbach, GERD. Zur Geschichte des preussischen historischen Instituts in Rom (1888-1936). Quel. Forsch. ital. Arch. Bibl., L, 1971. [9732]

THÜMLER, HEINZ PETER. Zur sozialen Struktur der Ausgewiesenen unter dem Sozialistengesetz (1878-1890). Jb. Wirtschaftsgesch., no. 3, 1971. [9733]

TOEWS, JOHN B. The Origins and Activities of the Mennonite Selbstschutz in the Ukraine (1918-1919). Mennonite Q. R., Jan. 1972. [9734]

WEBERSINN, GERHARD. Carl Freiherr von Hoininge, gen. Huene, der schlesische Bauernkönig. Jb. Schles. Friedrich-Wilhelms-U. Breslau, XVII, 1972. [9735]

WEHLER, HANS-ULRICH. Noch einmal: Bismarcks Imperialismus. Eine Entgegnung auf G. W. F. Hallgartens Rezension. Gesch. Wiss. Unter., Apr. 1972. [9736]

WILHELMUS, WOLFGANG. Der Wolgaster Zementarbeiterstreik von 1908. Greifswald-Stralsunder Jb., IX, 1970-71. [9737]

WINCKLER, MARTIN. Dänemarks und Russlands Rolle in der "Krieg-in-Sicht"-Krise des Frühjahr 1875. Jb. Albertus-U. Königsberg, XXII, 1972. [9738]

GERMANY: 1918 TO 1945

ANIKEN, A. A. Zur marxistischen Historiographie über die Bauernpolitik des deutschen Faschismus. Z. Geschichtswiss., no. 11, 1971. [9739]

ARETIN, KARL OTMAR FREIHERR VON. Brünings ganz andere Rolle: Seine Verfassungspläne, Bemerkungen zu den Memoiren. Frankf. Hefte, Dec. 1971. [9740]

BABITSCHENKO, L. G. Zur Solidaritätsbewegung des internationalen Proletariats für die deutsche Arbeiterklasse in den Jahren 1923/1924. Beitr. Gesch. Arbeiterbewegung, no. 6, 1971. [9741]

BENNETT, EDWARD W. Memoiren 1918-1934 [by Heinrich Brüning; r. art.]. Central Eur. Hist., June 1971. [9742]

BLEY, HERMANNFRIED. Akten zur Geschichte der bürgerlichen Parteien in Mecklenburg. Z. Geschichtswiss., no. 11, 1971. [9743]

BOEHM, HERMANN, and MARSCHALL, WILHELM. Zur deutschen Seekriegsführung 1939-40 [comments]. Marine-Rdsch., Jan.-Feb. 1972. [9744]

BORZEN, MICHAEL IWANOWITSCH. Mit Wilhelm Pieck in den Tagen des zweiten Weltkrieges. Z. Militärgesch., no. 3, 1971. [9745]

BOURRET, J.-F. La Deruluf compagnie d'aviation germano-russe. R. Allemagne, July-Sept. 1971. [9746]

BROMBERG, JOAN. The Impact of the Neutron: Bohr and Heisenberg. Hist. Stud. Physical Sci., III, 1971. [9747]

BURDICK, CHARLES. Les plans militaires allemands pour la France, 1940-1942. R. hist. Armée, no. 4, 1971. [9748]

CORNEBISE, ALFRED E. Gustav Stresemann and the Ruhr Occupation: The Making of a Statesman. Eur. Stud. R., no. 1, 1972. [9749]

CREVELD, M. VAN. The German Attack on the USSR: The Destruction of a Legend. Eur. Stud. R., no. 1, 1972. [9750]

EHNI, HANS PETER. Zum Parteienverhältnis in Preussen 1918-1932: Ein Beitrag zu Funktion und Arbeitsweise der Weimarer Koalitionsparteien. Arch. Sozialgesch., XI, 1971. [9751]

FELDMAN, GERALD D. Big Business and the Kapp Putsch. Central Eur. Hist., June 1971. [9752]

FELDNER, ROLF, JR. Zwischen kaiserlicher Armee und Reichswehr: Das Problem der Machtverteilung in der revolutionären Übergangsperiode. Parlament, no. 50, 1971. [9753]

FELIX, DAVID. Reparations Reconsidered with a Vengeance. Central Eur. Hist., June 1971. [9754]

FICHTNER, PAULA SUTTER. The Enduring Conflict: Hans Grimm and Twentieth-Century Germany. S. All. Q., no. 2, 1972. [9755]

FLEMMING, JENS. Parlamentarische Kontrolle in der Novemberrevolution: Zur Rolle und Politik des Zentralrats zwischen erstem und zweitem Rätekongress (Dezember 1918 bis April 1919). Arch. Sozialgesch., XI, 1971. [9756]

FORMAN, PAUL. Alfred Landé and the Anomalous Zeeman Effect, 1919-1921. Hist. Stud. Physical Sci., II, 1970. [9757]

FORMAN, PAUL. Weimar Culture, Causality, and Quantum Theory, 1918-1927: Adaptation by German Physicists and Mathematicians to a Hostile Intellectual Environment. Hist. Stud. Physical Sci., III, 1971. [9758]

GOSZTONY, PETER. Porträt eines deutschen Generals: Walter von Seydlitz-Kurzbach. Allg. Schweiz. Militärz., July 1971. [9759]

GROEHLER, OLAF. Die... deutsche Luftwaffe in der letzten Phase des zweiten Weltkrieges. Z. Militärgesch., no. 6, 1971. [9760]

HACK, BERTOLD, and KLEISS, MARIETTA. Hermann Broch [und] David Brody: Briefwechsel 1930-1951 [concl.]. Arch. Gesch. Buchwesens, no. 4-6, 1972. [9761]

HADDA, SIEGMUND. Als Arzt am Jüdischen Krankenhaus zu Breslau 1906-1943. Jb. Schles. Friedrich-Wilhelms-U. Breslau, XVII, 1972. [9762]

HADELER, WILHELM. Projektskizzen von Flugzeugschiffen der Kriegsmarine aus dem zweiten Weltkriege. Marine-Rdsch., Jan.-Feb. 1972. [9763]

HEIDER, PAUL. Die Stellung der Kommunistischen Partei Deutschlands zur Armee in der Zeit der Weimarer Republik und während der faschistischen Diktatur [2 pts.]. Z. Militärgesch., nos. 1-2, 1971. [9764]

HERDEN, WERNER. Antifaschistische Streitschriften Heinrich Manns. Z. Geschichtswiss., no. 12, 1971. [9765]

- HERWIG, HOLGER H. Prelude to Weltblitzkrieg: Germany's Naval Policy toward the United States of America, 1939-41. J. Mod. Hist., Dec. 1971. [9766]
- HUBATSCH, WALTHER. Die Teilung der evangelischen Kirchenprovinz Westpreussen 1920 und deren Folgen. Beitr. Gesch. Westpreussens, III, 1970. [9767]
- JABLONOWSKI, HORST. Westpreussen und der Versailler Vertrag. Beitr. Gesch. Westpreussens, III, 1970. [9768]
- JESSEN-KLINGENBERG, MANFRED. Nord-Locarno—Anton Schifferers und Otto Scheels "moralische Reise" im Oktober 1927. Z. Ges. Schleswig-Holstein. Gesch., XCVI, 1971. [9769]
- KANTZENBACH, FRIEDRICH-WILHELM. Das Neuendettelsauer Missionswerk und die Anfänge des Kirchenkampfes. Z. bayer. Kirchengesch., XL, 1971. [9770]
- KATER, MICHAEL H. Die Artamanen—Völkische Jugend in der Weimarer Republik. Hist. Z., Dec. 1971. [9771]
- KLEIN, MARTIN J. The First Phase of the Bohr-Einstein Dialogue. Hist. Stud. Physical Sci., II, 1970. [9772]
- KÖNNEMANN, ERWIN. Zu den Hintergründen der Märzkämpfe 1921. Z. Militärgesch., no. 2, 1971. [9773]
- KOSZYK, KURT. Paul Reusch und die "Münchener Neuesten Nachrichten" [doc.]. Vierteljahrsh. Zeitgesch., Jan. 1972. [9774]
- KRAMMER, ARNOLD. Russian Counterfeit Dollars: A Case of Early Soviet Espionage. Slavic R., Dec. 1971. [9775]
- KÜENTHAL, GEORG. Der Weg der selbstständigen Coburger Landeskirche in die bayerische Landeskirche. Jb. Coburger Landeskirche, XVI, 1971. [9776]
- KUPISCH, KARL. Strömungen der Evangelischen Kirche in der Weimarer Republik. Arch. Sozialgesch., XI, 1971. [9777]
- LAMPRECHT, WERNER. Die Flucht von Hermann Matern und weiteren Kommunisten aus dem Gefängnis in Altdamm bei Stettin. Greifswald-Stralsunder Jb., IX, 1970-71. [9778]
- LINSE, ULRICH. Die Transformation der Gesellschaft durch die anarchistische Weltanschauung: Zur Ideologie und Organisation anarchistischer Gruppen in der Weimarer Republik. Arch. Sozialgesch., XI, 1971. [9779]
- LIPPELT, HELMUT. "Politische Sanierung": Zur deutschen Politik gegenüber Polen 1925/26. Vierteljahrsh. Zeitgesch., Oct. 1971. [9780]
- LOOSE, HANS-DIETER. Gespräche Carl Petersens mit Bethmann Hollweg vor dessen Vernehmung durch den Untersuchungsausschuss der Nationalversammlung 1919. Z. Ver. Hamburg. Gesch., LVII, 1971. [9781]
- MAGENHEIMER, HEINZ. Der deutsche Angriff auf Sowjetrußland 1941. Österr. Mil. Z., May-June 1971. [9782]
- MAMMACH, KLAUS, and NITZSCHE, GERHARD. Zum antifaschistischen Kampf der KPD in den Jahren von 1939 bis 1941. Beitr. Gesch. Arbeiterbewegung, no. 6, 1971. [9783]
- MAUR, HANS. Zur Einheitsfrontpolitik der KPD im Eisenbahnerstreik 1922 [doc.]. Beitr. Gesch. Arbeiterbewegung, no. 2, 1972. [9784]
- METZMACHER, HELMUT. Die Herrschaft des Arbeiter- und Soldatenrates in Saarbrücken 1918. Z. Gesch. Saargegend, XIX, 1971. [9785]
- NAUMANN, HORST. Die Vereinigung des linken Flügels der USPD mit der KPD. Z. Geschichtswiss., no. 11, 1971. [9786]
- POLITZ, ANNE-GRET. Die NSDAP im Raume Hildesheim: Anfänge und Entwicklung bis 1933. Alt-Hildesheim, XLII, 1971. [9787]
- RIESENBERGER, DIETER. Kardinal Schuster von Mailand. Gesch. Wiss. Unter., Jan. 1972. [9788]
- RÖSSLER, EBERHARD. Erprobung des Walter-U-Bootes U 792. Marine-Rdsch., Dec. 1971. [9789]
- RÖSSLER, EBERHARD. Das Projekt "Liliput": Die Entwicklung des U-Boottyps II der Kriegsmarine. Marine-Rdsch., Mar. 1972. [9790]
- ROTHSCHILD, LOTHAR. Jüdisches Schicksal an der Saar: Zur Geschichte der jüdischen Bevölkerung Saarbrückens. Z. Gesch. Saargegend, XIX, 1971. [9791]
- RUGE, WOLFGANG. Heinrich Brünings postume Selbstentlavung. Z. Geschichtswiss., no. 10, 1971. [9792]
- RUGE, WOLFGANG, and SCHUMANN, WOLFGANG. Die Reaktion des deutschen Imperialismus auf Briands Paneuropaplan 1930 [doc.]. Z. Geschichtswiss., no. 1, 1972. [9793]
- SALDERN, ADELHEID V. Zur Entwicklung der Parteien in Göttingen während der Weimarer Zeit. Göttinger Jb., XIX, 1971. [9794]
- SALEWSKI, MICHAEL. Marineleitung und politische Führung 1931-1935 [doc.]. Militärgesch. Mitt., no. 2, 1971. [9795]
- SCHIEL, KLAUS. Dokumente über die Manipulierung der deutschen Bevölkerung für den zweiten Weltkrieg durch die Wehrmachtspropaganda. Z. Militärgesch., no. 3, 1971. [9796]
- SCHLICKER, WOLFGANG. Arbeitsdienstbestrebungen des deutschen Monopolkapitals in der Weimarer Republik. Jb. Wirtschaftsgesch., no. 3, 1971. [9797]
- SCHUMANN, WOLFGANG. Neue Dokumente zur Politik des faschistischen deutschen Imperialismus zur "Neuordnung" Europas im Herbst 1940. Bull. Arbeitskreises "Zweiter Weltkrieg", no. 1-2, 1971. [9798]
- SCHWARZBACH, HELMUT. "Aus Liebe zur Arbeiterklasse," Rudolf Renner [biography of]. Beitr. Gesch. Arbeiterbewegung, no. 2, 1972. [9799]
- SCHWARZBACH, HELMUT. Die Differenzen zwischen dem Verband Sächsischer Industrieller und dem Reichsverband der deutschen Industrie 1931. Jb. Wirtschaftsgesch., no. 3, 1971. [9800]
- SCHWIPPS, WERNER. Deutschland im Weltrundfunkverein 1933-1938. Rundfunk u. Fernsehen, no. 4, 1971. [9801]
- SELESNJOW, K. L. Zur Geschichte der Zeitung "Das freie Wort." Beitr. Gesch. Arbeiterbewegung, no. 6, 1971. [9802]
- SELESNJOW, KONSTANTIN. Zur Geschichte der anglo-amerikanischen Propaganda unter den Truppen und der Bevölkerung des faschistischen Deutschlands in den Jahren des zweiten Weltkrieges. Z. Militärgesch., no. 3, 1971. [9803]

SHAMIR, HAIM. Die Kristallnacht, die Notlage der deutschen Juden und die Haltung Englands. Jb. Inst. Dtsch. Gesch., I, 1972. [9804]

SPACHMANN, FRANZ. Das Projekt "Manta" des Versuchskommandos 456. Marine-Rdsch., Mar. 1972. [9805]

STOLLEIS, MICHAEL. Gemeinschaft und Volksgemeinschaft: Zur juristischen Terminologie im Nationalsozialismus. Vierteljahrsh. Zeitgesch., Jan. 1972. [9806]

STUHLFARRER, KARL. Operationszone "Alpenvorland" und "Adriatisches Küstenland" 1943-1945. Österr. Mil. Z., Sept.-Oct. 1971. [9807]

SUBAJEW, N. A. Aus der Geschichte der Teilnahme deutscher Kommunisten und Jungkommunisten an der Hilfe für die Hungernden in der Tartarischen Autonomen Sowjetrepublik. Beitr. Gesch. Arbeiterbewegung, no. 1, 1972. [9808]

TECHNICEK, MACIEJ. Einige Aspekte der Widerstandsbewegung in Polen und in der Tschechoslowakei 1939-1941. Jb. Inst. Dtsch. Gesch., I, 1972. [9809]

THOMPSON, LARRY V. Lebensborn and the Eugenics Policy of the Reichsführer-SS. Central Eur. Hist., Mar. 1971. [9810]

TIEKE, WILHELM. Das III. Armeekorps (mot.) im Brückenkopf Dnjepropetrowsk August/September 1941. Allg. Schweiz. Militärz., Nov. 1971. [9811]

TJULPANOV, S. I. Der ideologische Kampf gegen den Faschismus im Grossen Vaterländischen Krieg. Z. Geschichtswiss., no. 2, 1972. [9812]

TRÜMLER, ECKHARD. "Die Sache der Arbeiter war seine Sache": Wilhelm Florin. Beitr. Gesch. Arbeiterbewegung, no. 1, 1972. [9813]

ULLRICH, R. P. Vor fünfzig Jahren: Rapallo. Deutsche Stud., Mar. 1972. [9814]

VAAGT, GERD. Der 14. März [1920] als nationales Erlebnis. Z. Ges. Schleswig-Holstein. Gesch., XCVI, 1971. [9815]

VAGTS, ALFRED. Heinrich Brüning: A Review and a Memoir. PSQ, Mar. 1972. [9816]

VOGEL, RUDOLF. Die Öffentlichkeitsarbeit im oberschlesischen Abstimmungsgebiet 1919 bis 1921. Jb. Schles. Friedrich-Wilhelms-Ü. Breslau, XVII, 1972. [9817]

VOLKMAN, HANS-ERICH. Gründung der KPD und ihr Verhältnis zum Weimarer Staat im Jahre 1919. Gesch. Wiss. Unter., Feb. 1972. [9818]

WEBER, HERMANN. Zwischenem kritischem und bürokratischem Kommunismus: Unbekannte Briefe von Clara Zetkin. Arch. Sozialgesch., XI, 1971. [9819]

WEINGARTNER, JAMES J. The SS Race and Settlement Main Office: Towards an Order of Blood and Soil. Historian, Nov. 1971. [9820]

WIMMER, WALTER. Ernst Thälmann: Proletarischer Internationalist. Beitr. Gesch. Arbeiterbewegung, no. 2, 1972. [9821]

ZÖLLNER, CHRISTIAN W. Zur Problematik der kommunistischen Jugendbewegung in der Stadt Braunschweig während der Stalinisierungsphase der KPD von 1924 bis 1929. Braunschw. Jb., LII, 1971. [9822]

GERMANY: 1945 TO PRESENT

AGSTEN, RUDOLF, and BOGISH, MANFRED. Dokumente zur Gründung der Liberal-Demokratischen Partei Deutschlands 1945. Z. Geschichtswiss., no. 10, 1971. [9823]

ANTHON, CARL G. Germany's Westpolitik. Current Hist., May 1972. [9824]

BALLUSECK, LOTHAR VON. Die guten und die bösen Deutschen: Das Freund-Feind-Bild im Schrifttum der DDR. Parlament, no. 47, 1971. [9825]

BAYLIS, THOMAS A. East Germany in Quest of Legitimacy. Probl. Communism, Mar.-Apr. 1972. [9826]

BECHTOLDT, HEINRICH. Berlin Agreement and Security Conference. Aussenpolitik, no. 1, 1972. [9827]

BEHRENDT, LUTZ-DIETER. Über das Verhältnis der SPD-Führung zur Sowjetunion (1945-1970). Beitr. Gesch. Arbeiterbewegung, no. 6, 1971. [9828]

BENSER, GÜNTHER. Das deutsche Volk und die Siegermächte: Zu einigen internationalen Aspekten der Klassenkampfsituation nach der Befreiung Deutschlands vom Faschismus. Z. Geschichtswiss., no. 2, 1972. [9829]

BESSON, WALDEMAR. Wie ich mich geändert habe. Vierteljahrsh. Zeitgesch., Oct. 1971. [9830]

BILKE, JÖRG BERNHARD. Planziel Literaturgesellschaft oder Gibt es zwei deutsche Literaturen. Parlament, no. 51, 1971. [9831]

BORNING, WALTER. Die Militärpolitik der SED. Z. Militärgesch., no. 2, 1971. [9832]

BOYENS, ARMIN. Das Stuttgarter Schuldbekenntnis vom 19. Oktober 1945: Entstehung und Bedeutung. Vierteljahrsh. Zeitgesch., Oct. 1971. [9833]

BRANDT, WILLY. Germany's "Westpolitik." For. Aff., Apr. 1972. [9834]

BRAUNTHAL, GERARD. Politics in West Germany. Current Hist., May 1972. [9835]

BREDOW, WILFRIED VON. Die Demokratie und ihre Wächter. Zum Problem der Intergration von Streitkräften in die Gesellschaft: Ein Vergleich Reichswehr-Bundeswehr. Parlament, no. 50, 1971. [9836]

BURDICK, CHARLES R. Vom Schwert zur Feder: Deutsche Kriegsgefangene im Dienst der Vorbereitung der amerikanischen Kriegsgeschichtsschreibung über den Zweiten Weltkrieg. Militärgesch. Mitt., no. 2, 1971. [9837]

BURTENSHAW, D. Regional Renovation in the Saarland. Geog. R., no. 1, 1972. [9838]

CHAPLIN, DENNIS. The Berlin Wall: Ten Years in Retrospect. Contemp. R., Sept. 1971. [9839]

DALLMANN, GÜNTHER. Nasismens efterklang i den västtyska pressen. Tiden, no. 8, 1971. [9840]

FEDDERN, GERT-DETLEF. Das Konfliktbild des Soldaten der Nationalen Volksarmee. Beitr. Konfliktforsch., no. 4, 1971. [9841]

FRANK, PAUL. German Ostpolitik in a Changing World. Aussenpolitik, no. 1, 1972. [9842]

FRICKE, KARL WILHELM. Opposition in der SED-Führung: Ein Rückblick. Deutschland-Arch., June 1971. [9843]

- FRIEDRICH, KLAUS. West Germany's Trade: An Enviably Dilemma. Current Hist., May 1972. [9844]
- GIMBEL, JOHN. Byrnes' Stuttgarter Rede und die amerikanische Nachkriegspolitik in Deutschland. Vierteljahrsh. Zeitgesch., Jan. 1972. [9845]
- GRAEBNER, NORMAN A. Germany Between East and West. Current Hist., May 1972. [9846]
- GREESE, KARL; HÖHN, HANS; and VOERSTER, ALFRED. Zur Entwicklung der Landstreitkräfte der Nationalen Volksarmee 1960/61 [2 pts.]. Z. Militärgesch., nos. 1-2, 1971. [9847]
- GRILLE, DIETRICH. Der "neue Stil" und seine Tradition: Macht und Geist in der DDR. Deutsche Stud., Mar. 1972. [9848]
- HERZOG, ROMAN. Die Berliner Vereinigung zwischen Staat und Kirchen. Z. ev. Kirchenrecht, Oct. 1971. [9849]
- HILLGRUBER, A. La recherche sur l'histoire de la deuxième guerre mondiale en Allemagne fédérale. R. Hist. deux. guerre mond., Oct. 1971. [9850]
- HIRSCH, FELIX E. Ostpolitik in Historical Perspective. Current Hist., May 1972. [9851]
- HORNUNG, KLAUS. Protestbewegung und Hochschulreform. Staat, no. 3, 1971. [9852]
- KAACK, HEINO, and ROTH, REINHOLD. Die Aussenpolitische Führungselite der Bundesrepublik Deutschland. Parlament, no. 3, 1972. [9853]
- KANZIG, HELGA. Zur Geschichte der ökonomischen Politik der SED in der ersten Hälfte der sechziger Jahre. Z. Geschichtswiss., no. 12, 1972. [9854]
- KATZENSTEIN, DIETRICH. Der Zusammenschluss der nordelbischen Kirchen. Z. ev. Kirchenrecht, Dec. 1971. [9855]
- KOLLER, WILHELM. Die evangelische "Flüchtlings-Diaspora" in Ostbayern nach 1945. Z. bayer. Kirchengesch., XL, 1971. [9856]
- KRÖNER, ARNOLD F. The Challenge of West Germany's Social Market Economy. Current Hist., May 1972. [9857]
- LADES, HANS. Die SED und die Nation. Deutsche Stud., Mar. 1972. [9858]
- LENGEREAU, M. La notion de "Recht auf die Heimat" dans la pensée allemande contemporaine (Allemagne de l'Ouest, 1946-1970). R. Allemagne, July-Sept. 1971. [9859]
- LUDZ, PETER C. East Germany: Continuity and Change since Ulbricht. Probl. Communism, Mar.-Apr. 1972. [9860]
- LUDZ, PETER CHRISTIAN. Zum Begriff der "Nation" in der Sicht der SED: Wandlungen und politische Bedeutung. Deutschland-Arch., Jan. 1972. [9861]
- MAHNKE, HANS HEINRICH. Der Zugang nach Berlin (1): Die historische Entwicklung. Deutschland-Arch., Feb. 1972. [9862]
- MAIER, HANS. Konrad Adenauer (1876-1967). Adenauer-Stud., I, 1971. [9863]
- MALLINCKRODT, ANITA DASBACH. International Political Communications, the DDR's Vital Foreign Policy Instrument. Deutschland-Arch., Sonderheft Nov. 1971. [9864]
- MENTZEL, JÖRG-PETER. Zum Feindbild in der DDR 1965-1971: Ansätze zu einer quantitativen Analyse. Deutschland-Arch., Feb. 1972. [9866]
- MORSEY, RUDOLF. Der politische Aufstieg Konrad Adenauers 1945-1949. Adenauer-Stud., I, 1971. [9867]
- MÜLLER-STERMBERG, ROBERT. Klassenkampf um Shakespeare. Deutsche Stud., Mar. 1972. [9868]
- OPEL, FRITZ. Ostpolitik und Ostkontakte der Gewerkschaften in der Bundesrepublik Deutschland. R. Allemagne, July-Sept. 1971. [9869]
- Pact Between Poland and West Germany [doc.]. Current Hist., May 1972. [9870]
- PIKART, EBERHARD. Theodor Heuss und Konrad Adenauer: Ihre Einstellung zu Demokratie und Parlamentarismus. Adenauer-Stud., I, 1971. [9871]
- PLENER, ULLA. Zum ideologisch-politischen Klärungsprozess in der SPD der sowjetischen Besatzungszone 1945. Beitr. Gesch. Arbeiterbewegung, no. 1, 1972. [9872]
- ROSCHLAU, WOLFGANG. Die Funktion der Pioniertruppen in den Landstreitkräften der Bundeswehr in der Periode der Entwicklung zur atomaren Stossarmee (1956-1962). Z. Militärgesch., no. 6, 1971. [9873]
- SANDER, HANS-DIETRICH. Honecker: Nachfolger oder Liquidator? Deutsche Stud., Mar. 1972. [9874]
- SCHEUCH, ERWIN K. Konfliktmodell Demonstration: Die Kambodscha-Demonstration in Berlin am 9. Mai 1970. Beitr. Konfliktforsch., no. 4, 1971. [9875]
- SCHIECK, HANS. Statistische Untersuchung über das Universitätsstudium der Gymnasiallehrer für Geschichte und Sozialkunde. Gesch. Wiss. Unter., Mar. 1972. [9876]
- SCHWARZ, HANS-PETER. Das aussenpolitische Konzept Konrad Adenauers. Adenauer-Arch., I, 1971. [9877]
- SEIDE, GERNOT. Die Russisch-Orthodoxe Kirche in der Bundesrepublik Deutschland. Ostkirchliche Stud., Sept. 1971. [9878]
- SELBMANN, FRITZ. Anfänge der Wirtschaftsplanung in Sachsen. Beitr. Gesch. Arbeiterbewegung, no. 1, 1972. [9879]
- SELBMANN, FRITZ. Die Währungsreform in Jahre 1948 und die "Berliner Blockade," ihre Bedeutung für die Spaltung Deutschlands [Erinnerungen]. Beitr. Gesch. Arbeiterbewegung, no. 2, 1972. [9880]
- STEDEN, WERNER. Abschreibungen in der Volkswirtschaftlichen Gesamtrechnung der Bundesrepublik. Jb. Nationalök. Stat., Feb. 1972. [9881]
- TROMMLER, FRANK. Von Stalin zu Hölderlin: Über den Entwicklungsroman in der DDR. Basis (Frankfurt), II, 1971. [9882]
- UHLEMANN, MANFRED. Die westdeutsche Arbeiterjugend in der Volksbewegung gegen die Pariser Verträge und den Aufbau der Bundeswehr (1954-1957). Z. Militärgesch., no. 2, 1971. [9883]
- WEBER, BERND. SED Ideology: Rapprochement and Demarcation. Aussenpolitik, no. 1, 1972. [9884]
- WHETTEN, LAWRENCE L. Appraising the Ostpolitik. Orbis, Fall 1971. [9885]
- ZIEMKE, EARL F. West Germany's Security Policy. Current Hist., May 1972. [9886]

AUSTRIA

- AICHELBURG, GRAF WLADIMIR. Die Erkennungszeichen der k.u.k. Torpedoboote und Zerstörer 1914–1918. Marine-Rdsch., Sept. 1971. [9887]
- ANDERLE, JOSEF. Major Contributions of Czechs and Slovaks to Austrian and Hungarian History, 1918–1945. Austrian Hist. Yrbk., VI–VII, 1970–71. [9888]
- BACHMANN, HARALD. Die nationalen Verhältnisse Böhmens während des Temnos im Rahmen der sozialen Struktur. Bohemia, XI, 1970. [9889]
- BIHL, WOLFDIETER. Zur Tätigkeit des ukrainophilen Erzherzogs Wilhelm nach dem Ersten Weltkrieg. Jb. Gesch. Osteuropas, Dec. 1971. [9890]
- BURIAN, PETER. The State Language Problem in Old Austria (1848–1918) [with comments by Boyd C. Shafer]. Austrian Hist. Yrbk., VI–VII, 1970–71. [9891]
- CSÁKY-LOEBENSTEIN, EVA-MARIE. Studien zur Kavaliertour österreichischer Adelige im 17. Jahrhundert. Mitt. Inst. österr. Geschichtsforsch., no. 3–4, 1971. [9892]
- DUJMOVITS, WALTER. Die Amerikaauswanderung der Burgenländer. Österreich Gesch. Lit., Sept. 1971. [9893]
- EGGER, RAINER. The Kriegsarchiv. Austrian Hist. Yrbk., VI–VII, 1970–71. [9894]
- ELROD, RICHARD B. Austria and the Venetian Question, 1860–1866. Central Eur. Hist., June 1971. [9895]
- EPSTEIN, FRITZ T. The History of Austria in United States and Canadian Dissertations. Austrian Hist. Yrbk., VI–VII, 1970–71. [9896]
- ERNST, AUGUST. Die historische Entwicklung des Burgenlandes. Österreich Gesch. Lit., Sept. 1971. [9897]
- GOLDINGER, WALTER. The Allgemeines Verwaltungsarchiv. Austrian Hist. Yrbk., VI–VII, 1970–71. [9898]
- GREGER, RENE. Wer war der erfolgreichste U-Boot-Kommandant Österreich-Ungarns im Handelskrieg? [on Zdenko Hudeček]. Marine-Rdsch., Jan.–Feb. 1972. [9899]
- HABACHER, MARIA. Das k.k. Fabriksproduktenkabinett (1806–1815) und sein Direktor Aloys Beckh von Widmanstätter [pt. 1]. Acta universitatum, no. 2–3, 1971. [9900]
- HERMANN, KARL FRIEDRICH. Zur Geschichte der theologischen Fakultät in Salzburg im 19. Jahrhundert. Mitt. Ges. Salzburger Landesg., CIX, 1969. [9901]
- HERSCHE, PETER. Die österreichischen Jansenisten und die Unionsverhandlungen der Utrechter Kirche mit Rom. Z. Kirchengesch., no. 3 1971. [9902]
- JELAVICH, BARBARA. Foreign Policy and the National Question in the Habsburg Empire: A Memorandum of Kálnoky. Austrian Hist. Yrbk., VI–VII, 1970–71. [9903]
- KAISER, FRANZ. Zum Jubiläum der Donauregulierung und zum neuen Wiener Donau-Hochwasserschutzprojekt. Österreich Gesch. Lit., Nov. 1971. [9904]
- KISZLING, RUDOLF. Generaloberst Carl Freiherr von Pflanzer-Baltin. Österreich Gesch. Lit., Nov. 1971. [9905]
- KLEIN, KURT. Österreichs Bevölkerung 1754–1869. Mitt. österr. geog. Ges., no. 1–2, 1971. [9906]
- KOPF, OSKAR. Zehn Jahre Wehrgesetzgebung (1961–1971). Österr. Mil. Z., Nov.–Dec. 1971. [9907]
- KORKISCH, GUSTAV. Der Bauernaufstand auf der Mährisch-Trübau-Türnauer Herrschaft 1706–1713. Bohemia, XI, 1970. [9908]
- KREMZOW, FRIEDRICH WILHELM. Friedrich Tezner: Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte der österreichischen Verwaltungswissenschaft [pt. 1]. Acta universitatum, no. 2–3, 1971. [9909]
- MECHTLER, PAUL. The Verkehrsarchiv. Austrian Hist. Yrbk., VI–VII, 1970–71. [9910]
- MIKOLETZKY, HANNS LEO. The Finanz- und Hofkammerarchiv. Austrian Hist. Yrbk., VI–VII, 1970–71. [9911]
- MILLER, SUSANNE. Das Ringen um "die einzige grossdeutsche Republik": Die Sozialdemokratie in Österreich und im Deutschen Reich zur Anschlussfrage 1918/19. Arch. Sozialgesch., XI, 1971. [9912]
- NASKO, SIEGFRIED. Bibl contra Srbik: Ein Beitrag zur historiographischen Polemik um Metternich. Österreich Gesch. Lit., Nov. 1971. [9913]
- NECK, RUDOLF. The Haus-, Hof- und Staatsarchiv: Its History, Holdings, and Use. Austrian Hist. Yrbk., VI–VII, 1970–71. [9914]
- OFNER, JOSEF. Die Stadt Steyr in den ersten Jahren des Dreissigjährigen Krieges: Defensionsmassnahmen und Truppeneinquartierungen (1619–1625). Oberösterreich. Heimatbl., no. 3–4, 1971. [9915]
- OTROBA, GUSTAV, and KROFF, RUDOLF. Die Entwicklung von Bergbau und Industrie in Oberösterreich ... (1841–1873). Oberösterreich. Heimatbl., no. 3–4, 1971. [9916]
- POSCH, FRITZ. Die Salzburger Mautordnung des Erzbischofs Wolf Dietrich von 1589 und ihre handelspolitischen Folgen für die Nachbarländer. Mittel. Ges. Salzburger Landesg., CIX, 1969. [9917]
- RAMANN, V. V., and FORMAN, PAUL. Why Was it Schrödinger Who Developed de Broglie's Ideas? Hist. Stud. Physical Sci., I, 1969. [9918]
- ROCK, KENNETH W. Schwarzenberg versus Nicholas I, Round One: The Negotiation of the Habsburg-Romanov Alliance against Hungary in 1849. Austrian Hist. Yrbk., VI–VII, 1970–71. [9919]
- RUMPF, HELMUT. Vienna Convention: The Treaty of Treaties. Aussenpolitik, no. 1, 1972. [9920]
- SCHLAG, GEROLD. Burgenland 1921. Österr. Mil. Z., Nov.–Dec. 1971. [9921]
- STAUDINGER, ANTON. Die österreichische Wehrgesetzgebung 1918–1938 [2 pts.]. Österr. Mil. Z., May–June, July–Aug. 1971. [9922]
- ŠTIESS, BEDŘICH. Die sozialen Verhältnisse der Glasmacher in den westböhmisches Hütten im 18. und 19. Jahrhundert. Bohemia, XI, 1970. [9923]
- VALENTIN, JEAN-MARIE. Les élections au "Nationalrat" autrichien (mars 1970). R. Allemagne, July–Sept. 1971. [9924]
- WACHA, GEORG. Keplers Trauung in Eferding. Oberösterreich. Heimatbl., no. 3–4, 1971. [9925]
- WAGNER, HANS. Der Verrat des Domdekans Wilhelm von Trauttmansdorff: Eine Salzburger Haupt- und Staatsaktion aus dem Jahr 1580. Mittel. Ges. Salzburger Landesg., CIX, 1969. [9926]

WENISCH, ERNST. Die Koadjutoren des Fürstbischofs Sigmund Christoph von Zeil und Trauchburg. Mitt. Ges. Salzburger Landesk., CIX, 1969. [9927]

SWITZERLAND

BALTENSPERGER, ERNST. Growth and Concentration of Swiss Banks, 1945-1965. Schweiz. Z. Volksw. Stat., Dec. 1971. [9928]

BIETENHOLZ, PETER G. Mino Celsi and the Toleration Controversy of the Sixteenth Century. Bibl. Humanisme Renaissance, no. 1, 1972. [9929]

BÖCHER, OTTO. Die Gräber des Ulrich von Hutten. Bl. pfälz. Kirchengesch. relig. Volksk., XXXVII-XXXVIII, pt. 2, 1970-71. [9930]

BONORAND, CONRADIN. Joachim Vadian und Johannes Dantiscus: Ein Beitrag zu den schweizerisch-polnischen Beziehungen im 16. Jahrhundert. Z. Gesch. Altertumsk. Ermlands, XXXV, 1971. [9931]

DEBRUNNER, WERNER. Die Sammlung der Notariatsprotokolle im Staatsarchiv Zürich. Zürcher Taschenb., XCII, 1972. [9932]

DUIČ, MARIO. Operationspläne in der Defensive? Ein Beitrag an Hand des schweizerischen Beispiels im Zweiten Weltkrieg. Österr. Mil. Z., Nov.-Dec. 1971. [9933]

HAUSER, ALBERT. Bäuerliche Wirtschaft und Ernährung in der Schweiz vom 15.-18. Jahrhundert. Z. Agrargesch. Agrarsoziol., Oct. 1971. [9934]

HELFENSTEIN, ULRICH. Herrn Secretair Vogels Reise in die Rheinlande [1841]. Zürcher Taschenb., XCII, 1972. [9935]

LEZZI, BRUNO. Ulrich Wille und Fritz Gertsch als Redaktoren der "Allgemeinen Schweizerischen Militärzeitung." Allg. Schweiz. Militärz. Nov. 1971. [9936]

MONTER, E. WILLIAM. Patterns of Witchcraft in the Jura. J. Soc. Hist., Fall 1971. [9937]

MORAD, NICOLAS. Les premières enclosures dans le Canton de Fribourg à la fin du moyen âge et les progrès de l'individualisme agraire. Schweiz. Z. Gesch., no. 3, 1971. [9938]

PLATH, UWE. Ein unbekannter Brief Calvins vom Vorabend der Religionskriege in Frankreich. Arch. Reformationsgesch., no. 2, 1971. [9939]

ROSEN, JOSEF. Prices and Public Finance in Basle, 1360-1535. Ec. Hist. R., Feb. 1972. [9940]

ROSSI, ANGELO A., and THOMAS, R. LEIGHTON. Inflation in the Post-war Swiss Economy: An Econometric Study of the Interaction between Immigration and the Labour Market. Schweiz. Z. Volksw. Stat., Dec. 1971. [9941]

SCHINZ, HANS. Rudolf Schinz, Schiffmann und Krieger. Zürcher Taschenb., XCII, 1972. [9942]

SIGG, OTTO. Zwei Zürcher Kornhändler im 16. Jahrhundert: Hans und Nikolaus Hofmeister. Zürcher Taschenb., XCII, 1972. [9943]

SILBENER, EDMUND. Drei Herzen-Briefe. Int. R. Soc. Hist., pt. 1, 1971. [9944]

STELLING-MICHAUD, SVEN. Sismondi et les historiens suisses (Jean de Muller, P. H. Mallet, Ch. Monnard, A. Daguet et J. C. Zellweger). Schweiz. Z. Gesch., no. 3, 1971. [9945]

USTERI, EMIL. Der Stapfer-Prozess, eine Episode aus den Mailänderkriegen. Zürcher Taschenb., XCII, 1972. [9946]

WILLIS, E. DAVID. Calvin and the Italian Anti-Trinitarians. Arch. Reformationsgesch., no. 2, 1971. [9947]

ZIEGLER, ERNST. Ferdinand Vetter, ein Schüler Jacob Burckhardts, in Selbstzeugnissen seiner Jugendzeit. Arch. Kulturgesch., no. 2, 1971. [9948]

ITALY

Emiliana P. Noether, University of Connecticut

GENERAL

BORRELLI, GENNARO. Il palazzo Carigliano in piazza S. Domenico Maggiore in Napoli (pts. 4, 5). Realtà Mezzogiorno, Nov., Dec. 1971. [9949]

BROGLIO, FRANCESCO MARGIOTTA. Ernesto Buonaiuti. Stor. contemp., Dec. 1971. [9950]

COLOMBO, ARTURO. Colajanni e la Rivista popolare. Nuova antol., Dec. 1971. [9951]

COMPAGNA, GUIDO. Il meridionalismo di Salvemini. Nord Sud, Dec. 1971. [9952]

FUBINI, MARIO. Sul carteggio D'Ancona-Croce. R. stud. crociani, Oct.-Dec. 1971. [9953]

GANCI, S. MASSIMO. Ricordo di Napoleone Colajanni. Risorgimento Sicilia, July-Dec. 1970. [9954]

GARRANI, GIUSEPPE. Il Banco di Prefetia di Trapani: Origini e Vicende. R. int. Hist. Banque, no. 4, 1971. [9955]

GUIFFRIDA, ROMUALDO. La "Cassa di soccorso per le opere pubbliche delle provincie di Sicilia" nelle scritture dell'archivio storico del banco di Sicilia. R. int. Hist. Banque, no. 4, 1971. [9956]

JEULAND-MEYNAUD, MARYSE. Pirar.dello dramaturge des conformismes. R. Et. ital., Jan.-Mar. 1971. [9957]

LAMBERTI, M. MIMITA. Lionello Venturi sulla via dell'impressionismo. An. Scuola Norm. Sup. Pisa (classe lett. filos.), no. 1, 1971. [9958]

LUGNANI, LUCIO. Situazione e forma in [Francesco] De Sanctis. An. Scuola Norm. Sup. Pisa (classe lett. filos.), no. 1, 1971. [9959]

MIKOLJI, BORIS H. Ethnic Groups in America. The Italians of Rochester. Politico, no. 4, 1971. [9960]

SURADO, DINO SECCO. Luigi Sturzo nella storia d'Italia. Civitas, Feb. 1972. [9961]

ITALY: RENAISSANCE TO 1715

AYMARD, MAURICE. Une famille de l'aristocratie sicilienne au XVI<sup>e</sup> et XVII<sup>e</sup> siècles: les ducs de Terranova. R. hist. (Paris), Jan.-Mar. 1972. [9962]

BORDONE, RENATO. L'aristocrazia militare nel territorio di Asti: i signori di Gorzano. Boll. stor.-bibliogr. Subalpino, July-Dec. 1971. [9963]

COLAPIETRA, RAFFAELE. I genovesi a Napoli nel secondo Cinquecento (pt. 2). Stor. pol., Oct.-Dec. 1971. [9964]

CORNAGLIOTTI, ANNA. Catalani alla corte di Savoia nel secolo XV. Boll. stor.-bibliogr. Subalpino, July-Dec. 1971. [9965]

FIASCHINI, GIULIO. A proposito di Genova e Venezia fra Tre e Quattrocento. Arch. stor. ital., no. 3-4, 1970. [9966]

MARIETTI, MARINA. Lorenzino De Medicis, disciple de Machiavel. R. Et. ital., Oct.-Dec. 1970. [9967]

MAZZAOI, MAUREEN F. The Cotton Industry of Northern Italy in the Late Middle Ages: 1150-1450. J. Ec. Hist., Mar. 1972. [9968]

MAZZEI, RITA. La vita economica a Lucca agli inizi del secolo xvii. Arch. stor. ital., no. 3-4, 1970. [9969]

SCHELLHASE, KENNETH CHARLES. Tacitus in the Political Thought of Machiavelli. Pensiero pol., Dec. 1971. [9970]

SPINI, GIORGIO. Architettura e politica nel principato mediceo del Cinquecento (ricerche dell'Istituto di storia del Magistero di Firenze). R. stor. ital., Dec. 1971. [9971]

TURCHI, MARCELLO. Riflessi letterari in Italia della battaglia di Lepanto. Nel quarto centenario della battaglia di Lepanto. Nuovi Q. meridione, Oct.-Dec. 1971. [9972]

WOŚ, JAN W. Per la storia dei rapporti culturali tra Italia e Polonia tra la fine del sec. xvi e il principio del xvii: La corrispondenza del pistoiese Don Alessandro Cilli, "Notarius Italicus" del Re Sigismondo III Vasa, con il Duca di Urbino. An. Scuola Norm. Sup. Pisa (classe lett. filos.), no. 1, 1971. [9973]

ITALY: 1715 TO 1870

ARA, ANGELO. I progetti di Antonio Rosmini Serbati per una costituzione per lo Stato Pontificio [1848]. Risorgimento (Italy), Oct. 1971. [9974]

BACCHELLI, RICCARDO. Per il centenario di Mazzini. Nuova antol., Mar. 1972. [9975]

BOYER, FERDINAND. Palermo nel Settembre 1860 visto da un ufficiale della marina francese. Risorgimento Sicilia, July-Dec. 1970. [9976]

CACCIATORE, GIUSEPPE. Un discorso raro di Angelo Camillo De Meis [delivered on May 8, 1848]. Pensiero pol., Dec. 1971. [9977]

CATTANEI, LUIGI. Sul taccuino di Nino Bixio in Sicilia. Risorgimento Sicilia, July-Dec. 1970. [9978]

COLOMBO, ARTURO. Il Mazzini dei Ricordi. Nuova antol., Mar. 1972. [9979]

D'AMATO, CARMELO. La formazione di Giuseppe Ferrari e la cultura italiana nella prima metà dell'800. Stud. stor., Oct.-Dec. 1971. [9980]

GIUFFRIDA, ROMUALDO. Aspetti dell'economia siciliana nel decennio pre-unitario. Risorgimento Sicilia, July-Dec. 1970. [9981]

GRISERI, GIUSEPPE. Due lettere sulla campagna navale di Lissa (1866). Boll. stor.-bibliogr. Subalpino, July-Dec. 1971. [9982]

GUT, PHILIPPE. Une polémique de la presse parisienne au cours de l'année 1856: La question romaine. Rass. stor. Risorgimento, Oct.-Dec. 1971. [9983]

LOVETT, CLARA MARIA. Carlo Cattaneo e il mito bonapartista 1852-1853. Rass. stor. Risorgimento, July-Sept. 1971. [9984]

MARINO, GIUSEPPE CARLO. Il meridionalismo della Destra storica e l'Inchiesta parlamentare del 1867 su Palermo. Risorgimento Sicilia, July-Dec. 1970. [9985]

MORELLI, MARIA AUGUSTA TIMPANARO. Persone e momenti del giornalismo politico a Firenze dal 1766 al 1799 in alcuni documenti dell'archivio di stato di Firenze. Rass. arch. stato, May-Aug. 1971. [9986]

OTTAVI, ANTOINE. Guiseppe Mazzini: le bonheur refusé. R. Et. ital., Oct.-Dec. 1970. [9987]

PIERAZZI, GIUSEPPE. Progetti e tentativi di propaganda sovversiva tra le truppe slave di Radetsky nella primavera del 1848. Rass. stor. Risorgimento, July-Sept. 1971. [9988]

PISCOPO, UGO. Dickens e l'Italia. Cult. scuola, Apr.-June 1971. [9989]

PIVA, FRANCO. Contributo alla fortuna di Helvétius nel Veneto nel secondo Settecento. Aevum, Sept.-Dec. 1971. [9990]

PONZO, GIOVANNI. I "cento giorni" del popolo italiano [1866]. Rass. pol. stor., July-Sept. 1971. [9991]

PRETI, DOMENICO. L'arte della lana in Toscana al tempo della Reggenza lorenese (1737-1765). Stud. stor., Oct.-Dec. 1971. [9992]

SANTONASTASO, GIUSEPPE. Il pensiero di Mazzini. Nuova antol., Mar. 1972. [9993]

SERRAFERO, GABRIELE. A Casale Monferrato nella primavera del 1859. Rass. stor. Risorgimento, July-Sept. 1971. [9994]

SIPALA, PAOLO MARIO. La liberazione di Roma nella letteratura italiana dell'Ottocento. Cult. scuola, Apr.-June 1971. [9995]

SPADOLINI, GIOVANNI. Il Risorgimento fra Cavour e Mazzini. Nuova antol., Mar. 1972. [9996]

TORTORETTO, ALESSANDRO. Manzoni e Leopardi. Aevum, May-Aug. 1971. [9997]

TRASPADINI, RENATO. Il punto sulla "politica" dell'Alfieri. Aevum, May-Aug. 1971. [9998]

ZAMBELLI, PAOLO. La prima autobiografia di Antonio Genovesi. R. stor. ital., Sept. 1971. [9999]

ITALY: 1870 TO PRESENT

ARE, GIUSEPPE. Pensiero economico e vita nazionale in Italia (1890-1922). Considerazioni preliminari (pt. 3). Stor. contemp., Sept. 1971. [10000]

BARIÉ, OTTAVIO. Luigi Albertini, il Corriere della Sera e la crisi dello Stato liberale (pt. 2). Stor. pol., Oct.-Dec. 1971. [10001]

BARNES, SAMUEL H. Left, Right, and the Italian Voter. Comp. Pol. Stud., July 1971. [10002]

BARNES, SAMUEL H. The Legacy of Fascism: Generational Differences in Italian Political Attitudes and Behavior. Comp. Pol. Stud., Apr. 1972. [10003]

BASSO, LELIO. Nascita di un socialista. Belfagor, Mar. 1972. [10004]

- BEDESCHI, LORENZO. La corrispondenza inedita fra Sturzo e Murri (1898-1906). Stor. contemp., Dec. 1971. [10005]
- BONO, SALVATORE. Lettere dal fronte libico (1911-1912). Nuova antol., Dec. 1971. [10006]
- BORTOLOTTI, LANDO. La proprietà edilizia e il fascismo. Stud. stor., Oct.-Dec. 1971. [10007]
- BRANCATO, FRANCESCO. La campagna elettorale per la XIX legislatura (Di Rudinì contro Crispi). Nuovi Q. meridione, July-Sept. 1971. [10008]
- CAPRÌ, GIOVANNI. Il generale Di Giorgio Cadorna e Mussolini. Osservatore pol. lett., Apr. 1972. [10009]
- CORBINO, EPICARMO. Il Governo di Salerno e la crisi dell'aprile 1944. Osservatore pol. lett., Jan. 1972. [10010]
- CORSI, ERMANNO. Pella e il Governo dell'Assunta. Nord Sud, Dec. 1971. [10011]
- DEL NOCE, AUGUSTO. Genesi e significato della prima sinistra cattolica italiana post-fascista. Stor. contemp., Dec. 1971. [10012]
- DELUKEANU, STEFAN. L'union de Rome avec l'Italie. Témoignages roumains. Rass. stor. Risorgimento, July-Sept. 1971. [10013]
- DINOLFO, ENNIO. Austria e Roma nel 1870. Rass. stor. Risorgimento, July-Sept. 1971. [10014]
- FERRI, RENATO. Le agitazioni siciliane del 1893-94 nella pubblicistica dell'epoca (pts. 2, 3). Nuovi Q. meridione, July-Sept., Oct.-Dec. 1971. [10015]
- FRANCESCHINI, EZIO. Concetto Marchesi dal 25 luglio 1943 al rifugio svizzero di Loverciano. Aevum, Jan.-Apr. 1971. [10016]
- GARRUCCIO, LUDOVICO. La contestazione del '15. Mulino, Jan.-Feb. 1972. [10017]
- GENTILE, EMILIO. Gobetti e la Voce. Osservatore pol. lett., Dec. 1971. [10018]
- GENTILE, EMILIO. La Voce e l'età giolittiana. Stor. contemp., June 1971. [10019]
- GHISALBERTI, CARLO. Appunti per una storia costituzionale dell'Italia liberale. Rass. stor. Risorgimento, Oct.-Dec. 1971. [10020]
- LEDEEN, MICHAEL A. Fascism and the Generation Gap. Eur. Stud. R., July 1971. [10021]
- LENTI, LIBERO. Luigi Einaudi, dieci anni dopo. G. ec. an. ec., Sept.-Oct. 1971. [10022]
- LEONETTI, ALFONSO. Gli italiani nella Comune di Parigi. Ponte, Dec. 1971. [10023]
- LÖNNE, KARL EGON. Il fascismo italiano nel giudizio del Cattolicesimo politico della Repubblica di Weimar. Stor. contemp., Dec. 1971. [10024]
- MAGONI, LUISA. Aspetti della cultura cattolica sotto il fascismo: la rivista Il Frontespizio. Stor. contemp., Dec. 1971. [10025]
- MICCICHÉ, G. La Sicilia Orientale dall'occupazione delle terre al fascismo: 1919-1922. Movim. operaio socialista, Jan.-Mar. 1970. [10026]
- MICHAELIS, MEIR. La prima missione del principe d'Assia presso Mussolini. Nuova r. stor., May-Aug. 1971. [10027]
- MOMIGLIANO, ARNALDO. Gaetano De Sanctis e Augusto Rostagni. An. Scuola Norm. Sup. Pisa (classe lett. filos.), no. 1, 1971. [10028]
- NAZZARO, PELLEGRINO. L'atteggiamento della stampa cattolico-moderata americana verso il fascismo prima e dopo la Conciliazione. Stor. contemp., Dec. 1971. [10029]
- NEUFELD, MAURICE. Il fallimento del Governo militare in Italia. Stor. pol., July-Sept. 1971. [10030]
- NOETHER, EMILIANA P. Italian Intellectuals under Fascism. J. Mod. Hist., Dec. 1971. [10031]
- PASSERIN D'ENTRÈVES, ETTORE. Appunti sul riformismo religioso e culturale di padre Giovanni Semeria. Stor. contemp., Dec. 1971. [10032]
- PERILLO, GAETANO. I comunisti e la lotta di classe in Liguria: novembre 1922-novembre 1926 (pt. 3). Movim. operaio socialista, Jan.-Mar. 1972. [10033]
- PETRICIOLI, MARTA. L'occupazione italiana del Caucaso: "Un ingrato servizio" da rendere a Londra. Politico, no. 4, 1971. [10034]
- PETRILLI, GIUSEPPE. L'Entreprise à participation d'état dans l'expérience italienne (Un témoignage du président de l'I.R.I.). R. int. Hist. Banque, no. 4, 1971. [10035]
- POULAT, ÉMILE. Panorama internazionale della crisi modernista. Stor. contemp., Dec. 1971. [10036]
- REMOND, RENÉ. Il fascismo italiano visto dalla cultura cattolica francese. Stor. contemp., Dec. 1971. [10037]
- RIBUTTI, MICHELE. Il neutralismo di Croce. Nord Sud, Nov. 1971. [10038]
- RUMI, GIORGIO. Padre Gemelli e l'Università Cattolica. Stor. contemp., Dec. 1971. [10039]
- SCHWARZENBERG, CLAUDIO. La burocrazia italiana dall'Unità ai nostri giorni. Idea (Italy), Jan. 1972. [10040]
- TARROW, SIDNEY. The Political Economy of Stagnation. Communism in Southern Italy, 1960-1970. J. Pol., Feb. 1972. [10041]
- TRAMONTIN, SILVIO. La formazione dell'ala destra nel partito popolare italiano. Stor. contemp., Dec. 1971. [10042]
- ULLRICH, HARTMUT. Le elezioni del 1913 a Roma (pt. 1). Nuova r. stor., May-Aug. 1971. [10043]
- VENERUSO, DANILO. I rapporti tra fascismo e destra tedesca. Mulino, Nov.-Dec. 1971. [10044]
- VENTRY, LANCE T. Prospettive delle relazioni italo-americane nell'ultimo anno della prima guerra mondiale. Arch. stor. ital., no. 1, 1971. [10045]

ITALY: BIBLIOGRAPHY AND SOURCES

- CACCAMO, DOMENICO. Il problema degli "eretici" del Cinquecento nella storiografia italiana. Cult. scuola, Apr.-June 1971. [10046]
- CASUCCI, COSTANZO. Saggio di bibliografia dell'archivio centrale dello Stato (1953-1968). Rass. arch. stato, May-Aug. 1971. [10047]
- COLAPIETRA, RAFFAELE. La dominazione austriaca a Napoli nei principali studi dell'ultimo ventennio. Cult. scuola, July-Sept. 1971. [10048]

DEMARCO, DOMENICO. Il più antico documento dell'archivio storico del banco di Napoli: La fede di credito del 9 gennaio, 1572. R. int. Hist. Banque, no. 4, 1971. [10049]

DE RIENZO, GIORGIO. Trentadue lettere di Giuseppe Giacosa a Giosuè Carducci [Apr. 2, 1882–Nov. 29, 1902]. Boll. stor.-bibliogr. Subalpino, July–Dec. 1971. [10050]

MAZZONIS, FILIPPO. Orientamenti e prospettive storiografiche su l'unificazione amministrativa. Cult. scuola, Apr.–June 1971. [10051]

MELZI D'ERIL, FRANCESCA KAUCISVILI. Un'altra lettera di Montalembert a Cantù. Aevum, Jan.–Apr. 1971. [10052]

NARDI, PAOLO. Recenti studi di storia dell'eresia in Siena nel Cinquecento. Arch. stor. ital., no. 3–4, 1970. [10053]

PASTORELLI, PIETRO. La storiografia italiana nel dopoguerra sulla politica estera fascista. Stor. pol., Oct.–Dec. 1971. [10054]

ROSS, JAMES BRUCE. The Emergence of Gasparo Contarini [1483–1542]: A Bibliographical Essay. Church Hist., Mar. 1972. [10055]

ROSSINI, GIUSEPPE. Per una storia dei Patti Lateranesi. Documenti. Stor. contemp., Dec. 1971. [10056]

VALIANI, LEO. I rapporti italo-austriaci dal 1870 al 1915 nella storiografia italiana. R. stor. ital., Dec. 1971. [10057]

EASTERN EUROPE

Charles Morley and Carole Rogel, Ohio State University

GENERAL

ANDREEV, M. Sur le problème de la coexistence du droit écrit et du droit coutumier des Slaves du Sud au Moyen Age. R. ét. sud-est eur., no. 3, 1971. [10058]

BRAUNSTEIN, PHILIPPE. A propos de l'Adriatique entre le XVI<sup>e</sup> et le XVIII<sup>e</sup> siècle. An.: Ec., Soc., Civil., no. 6, 1971. [10059]

BRAUNSTEIN, PHILIPPE. Livres de comptes et routes commerciales dans les Alpes orientales et les Balkans au XVI<sup>e</sup> siècle. An.: Ec., Soc., Civil., no. 1, 1972. [10060]

CRENZIEN, B. J. Internationalisme. Socialisme. Nationalisme. Militær-patriotisk opdragelse i Sovjetunionen og i de øvrige Warszawapagtlande. [Internationalism. Socialism. Nationalism. Military-Patriotic Trends in the Soviet Union and in the other Warsaw Pact Countries]. Mil. tids., June 1971. [10061]

GRŠINA, R. P. La politique de front national dans les pays du centre et du Sud-Est de l'Europe en 1944–45 [in Czech]. Českoslov. časopis Hist., no. 1, 1972. [10062]

KARAYANNOPULOS, J. Zur Frage der Slavenansiedlungen auf dem Peloponnes. R. ét. sud-est eur., no. 3, 1971. [10063]

MIHĂESCU, H. La diffusion de la langue latine dans le sud-est de l'Europe I, II. R. ét. sud-est eur., nos. 3–4, 1971. [10064]

PANTEV, ANDREI. L'Angleterre et l'action de réformes en Turquie d'Europe (1895–1903) [in Bulgarian]. Ist. Pregled, no. 6, 1971. [10065]

SAMARDJIEV, BOŽIDAR. Le krach du constitutionnalisme dans l'Empire ottoman (1877–1878) [in Bulgarian]. Ist. Pregled, no. 5, 1971. [10066]

TODOROV, NIKOLAI. The Balkan town in the 15th to 19th centuries within the Ottoman Empire [in Russian]. Ét. balkaniques, no. 4, 1971. [10067]

TURCZYŃSKI, EMANUEL. Nationalism and Religion in Eastern Europe. E. Eur. Q., Jan. 1972. [10068]

WEITZMANN, KURT. A 10th Century Lectionary. A lost Masterpiece of the Macedonian Renaissance. R. ét. sud-est eur., no. 3, 1971. [10069]

BULGARIA

DANOVA, NADIA. L'insurrection de Crète en 1866–1869 et l'opinion publique bulgare [in Bulgarian]. Ist. Pregled, no. 6, 1971. [10070]

DIMITROVA, STELA. Le Parti sociale-démocrate ouvrier bulgare (socialistes de gauche) contre l'opportunisme des sociaux-démocrates de droite (1918–1919) [in Bulgarian]. Ist. Pregled, no. 5, 1971. [10071]

GORANOV, P. ST. Les conditions préalables à l'apparition du mouvement socialiste à Veliko Tŕnovo [in Bulgarian]. Ist. Pregled, no. 5, 1971. [10072]

JOVKOV, MILČO. Sur le nom de la ville de Pavlikeni [in Bulgarian]. Ist. Pregled, no. 6, 1971. [10073]

MANASIEVA, ELKA. Les manuels d'histoire bulgare pendant la renaissance bulgare [in Bulgarian]. Ist. Pregled, no. 6, 1971. [10074]

NATAN, J. Le Parti communiste bulgare et la science historique [in Bulgarian]. Ist. Pregled, no. 5, 1971. [10075]

SALAMON, MACIEJ. Some Notes on an Inscription from Medieval Silistria (c. 976). R. ét. sud-est eur., no. 3, 1971. [10076]

STANEVA, NATAŠA. La société bulgare-soviétique à Sofia (1934–1939) [in Bulgarian]. Ist. Pregled, no. 6, 1971. [10077]

TOMASZEWSKI, JERZY. Les élections de 1945 en Bulgarie [Fr. summary]. Kwartalnik Hist., LXXIX, 1972. [10078]

CZECHOSLOVAKIA

BACHSTEIN, MARTIN K. Programmdiskussion und Krise in der Deutschen sozialdemokratischen Arbeiterpartei (DSAP) in der Tschechoslowakischen Republik. Bohemia, XI, 1970. [10079]

BUKOWSKI, JAMES. Two Letters of F. L. Rieger to Bishop Strossmayer, 1865–1866. E. Eur. Q., Jan. 1972. [10080]

EDGREN, LENNART. Slanskyprocessen—en politisk offeritual. [The Slansky Trial—A Political Ritual Offering.] Tiden, no. 2, 1971. [10081]

FIALA, ZDENĚK. Des sources du dit-Dalimil dans son histoire de Saint Wenceslas [in Czech]. Českoslov. časopis Hist., no. 6, 1971. [10082]

FOWKES, F. B. M. The Origins of Czechoslovak Communism. Eur. Stud. R., July 1971. [10083]

LACINA, VLASTISLAV. La région sucrière dans l'agriculture tchèque des années 1920-1930 [in Czech; Ger. summary]. Českoslov. časopis Hist., no. 1, 1972. [10084]

LINZ, NORBERT. Der Aufbau der deutschen politischen Presse in der Ersten Tschechoslowakischen Republik (1918-1925). Bohemia, XI, 1970. [10085]

MAUR, EDUARD. Problèmes de structure démographique en Bohême au milieu du 17<sup>e</sup> siècle [in Czech]. Českoslov. časopis Hist., no. 6, 1971. [10086]

SEIBT, FERDINAND. Ideologie und Geschichte: Die tschechische Historiographie 1945-1968. Veröff. Max-Planck-Inst. Gesch., XXXVI, no. 1, 1971. [10087]

ŠESTÁK, MIROSLAV. La question croate dans la politique tchèque (1860-1864) [in Czech; Ger. summary]. Českoslov. časopis Hist., no. 1, 1972. [10088]

ŠMAHEL, FRANTIŠEK. Critique sociale de la ville de Pierre Chelčický [in Czech; Ger. summary]. Českoslov. časopis Hist., no. 1, 1972. [10089]

VÁŠ, KAREL. L'Antisovietisme de l'appareil de l'Etat dans la République d'avant Munich [in Czech]. Českoslov. časopis Hist., no. 6, 1971. [10090]

GREECE

DELLAGRAMMATIKAS, J. How the Imperialists Established Their Economic Control Over Greece [Eng. summary]. Vopr. Ist., no. 11, 1971. [10091]

KOSTAS, SULAS. Die Landwirtschaft Griechenlands zwischen den beiden Weltkriegen [in Hungarian; Russian, Ger. summaries]. Agrár. Szemle, no. 1-2, 1971. [10092]

KYRIAKIDON-NESTOROS, ALKE. The Theory of Folklore in Greece: Laographia in its Contemporary Perspective. E. Eur. Q., Jan. 1972. [10093]

TIVČEV, P. Pages de l'histoire sociale de Chypre aux XIV-XV<sup>e</sup> siècles [in Bulgarian]. Ist. Pregled, no. 5, 1971. [10094]

HUNGARY

BALASZ, EVA H. Contribution à l'Etude de l'Ere des Lumières et du Josephinisme en Hongrie. E. Eur. Q., Jan. 1972. [10095]

DEME, LASZLO. The Committee of Public Safety in the Hungarian Revolution of 1848. Can. Slavic Stud., Fall 1971. [10096]

DEME, LASZLO. The Society for Equality in the Hungarian Revolution of 1848. Slavic R., Mar. 1972. [10097]

EDDIE, SCOTT M. Farmers' Response to Price in Large-Estate Agriculture: Hungary, 1870-1913. Ec. Hist. R., no. 4, 1971. [10098]

GAÁL, LÁSZLÓ. Die Wirtschaftung des Fürstlichen Fideikommisses Esterházy (1930-1940) [in Hungarian; Russian, Ger. summaries]. Agrár. Szemle, no. 1-2, 1971. [10099]

GRANASZTÓI, GY. Computerized Analysis of a Medieval Tax Roll. Acta Hist., no. 1-2, 1971. [10100]

GYÖRFFY, GY. Dem Gedächtnis Stephans, des ersten Königs von Ungarn. Acta Hist., no. 1-2, 1971. [10101]

HALÁSZ, PÉTER. Geschichte der landwirtschaftlichen Produktionsgenossenschaft in Egyházaskozár [in Hungarian]. Agrár. Szemle, no. 1-2, 1971. [10102]

HANÁK, PÉTER. Short Survey of Recent Literature on Hungarian Economic History [essay, no. 70]. Ec. Hist. R., no. 4, 1971. [10103]

HANDLERY, GEORGE. Revolutionary Organization in the Context of Backwardness: Hungary's 1848. E. Eur. Q., Mar. 1972. [10104]

KATZBURG, NATHANIEL. Paul Teleki and the Jewish Question in Hungary [doc.]. Soviet Jewish Aff., no. 2, 1971. [10105]

KAZIMÍR, ŠTEFAN. Quellenmaterial Betreffs der Landwirtschaftlichen Umstände im 16 und 18 Jahrhundert und Ihre Anwendung in Der Agrargeschichtlichen Forschung [in Hungarian; Russian, Ger. summaries]. Agrár. Szemle, no. 1-2, 1971. [10106]

KOSÁRY, D. Ungarische politische Bestrebungen und die Probleme der Monarchie im Zeitalter des Dualismus. Acta Hist., no. 1-2, 1971. [10107]

KOVÁCS, EDIT. Gestaltung der Börsenkurse der Schuldscheine als Entschädigung für Fronabgabe in den Jahren 1856-1867 [in Hungarian; Russian, Ger. summaries]. Agrár. Szemle, no. 1-2, 1971. [10108]

MCCAGG, WILLIAM O., JR. Hungary's "Feudalized" Bourgeoisie. J. Mod. Hist., no. 1, 1972. [10109]

MENCZER, BÉLA. The Habsburg Restoration: Hungary in 1921. Hist. Today, Feb. 1972. [10110]

NAGY, DEZSÖ. Neuere (Ausländische) Angaben zur Geschichte des "Planierers" [in Hungarian; Russian, Ger. summaries]. Agrár. Szemle, no. 1-2, 1971. [10111]

NIEDERHAUSER, EMIL. L'histoire des peuples slaves et de l'Europe Orientale dans l'historiographie hongroise récente. Can. Slavic Stud., Fall 1971. [10112]

OKONOMIDÈS, N. A propos des relations ecclésiastiques entre Byzance et la Hongrie au XI<sup>e</sup> siècle: le métropolit de Turquie. R. ét. sud-est eur., no. 3, 1971. [10113]

PACH, ZSIGMOND PÁL. Zur Problematik der Osteuropäischen "Gutswirtschaft" Fronarbeit und Lohnarbeit auf den Ungarischen Herrengütern des 16 und 17 Jahrhunderts [in Hungarian; Russian, Ger. summaries]. Agrár. Szemle, no. 1-2, 1971. [10114]

PERJÉS, GÉZA. Zur Psychologie des Ungarischen Militärs im 16. und 17. Jahrhundert. Militärgesch. Mitt., no. 2, 1971. [10115]

SIKLÓS, A. The Hungarian Soviet Republic and the National and Nationality Question. Acta Hist., no. 1-2, 1971. [10116]

SIPÓS, GÁBOR. E. Székács, der grosse ungarische Pflanzenzüchter [in Hungarian]. Agrár. Szemle, no. 1-2, 1971. [10117]

SZUHAY, MIKLÓS. Entwicklung der Produktion des Ackers in der Ungarischen Landwirtschaft von 1867 bis 1914 [in Hungarian; Russian, Ger. summaries]. Agrár. Szemle, no. 1-2, 1971. [10118]

POLAND

BOREJSZA, JERZY W. De Sedan à Versailles (esquisse des relations franco-polonaises 1870-1919). Acta Poloniae Hist., XXIV, 1971. [10119]

- BORKOWSKI, JAN. La paysannerie dans la vie politique polonaise dans les années 1918-1939. Acta Poloniae Hist., XXIV, 1971. [10120]
- BROZEK, ANDRZEJ. Der Beitrag Schlesiens zur Entwicklung der Statistik in Wissenschaft und Praxis. Acta Poloniae Hist., XXIV, 1971. [10121]
- CERNEA, EMIL. Quelques considérations sur le Jus Valachicum dans la Pologne féodale. R. Roumaine Hist., no. 5, 1971. [10122]
- CIENCIALA, ANNA M. Marxism and History: Recent Polish and Soviet Interpretations of Polish Foreign Policy in the Era of Appeasement. An Evaluation. E. Eur. Q., Mar. 1972. [10123]
- CIRIC, K. C. Poland in the Aftermath of the December Crisis. Contemp. R., Apr. 1971. [10124]
- DAVIES, NORMAN. The Poles in Great Britain, 1914-1919. Slavonic E. Eur. R., Jan. 1972. [10125]
- DAVIES, NORMAN. The Poles in Great Britain. Slavonic E. Eur. R., Jan. 1972. [10126]
- DROZDOWSKI, MARIAN. Commercial Treaties after the First Partition and the Problem of the Economic Unity of the Polish Lands [in Polish]. Rocz. Hist., XXXVII, 1971. [10127]
- DWORZACZEK, WŁODZIMIERZ. Perméabilité des barrières sociales dans la Pologne du XVI<sup>e</sup> siècle. Acta Poloniae Hist., XXIV, 1971. [10128]
- GRONIEWSKI, KRZYSZTOF. Polonia in the United States and National Democracy, 1893-1914 [Eng. summary]. Kwartalnik Hist., LXXIX, 1972. [10129]
- HAGEN, WILLIAM W. National Solidarity and Organic Work in Prussian Poland, 1815-1914. J. Mod. Hist., no. 1, 1972. [10130]
- HASS, LUDWIK. Autour de la genèse des illusions parlementaires nourries en Pologne pendant l'entre-deux-guerres [Fr. summary]. Kwartalnik Hist., LXXIX, 1972. [10131]
- HASS, LUDWIK. Le mouvement ouvrier syndical en Pologne de 1918 à 1938 [Fr. summary]. Rocz. Dziejów Społ. Gos., XXXII, 1971. [10132]
- HERBST, STANISŁAW. L'importance stratégique de l'Europe centrale dans la Seconde Guerre mondiale. Acta Poloniae Hist., XXIV, 1971. [10133]
- HIRSZOWICZ, LUKASZ, and PRICE, D. L. Reflections on the Polish Experience: Notes on Particular Aspects. Soviet Jewish Aff., no. 2, 1971. [10134]
- KOSMAN, MARCELI. Les conflits de religion à Wilna [in Polish; Russian summary]. Kwartalnik Hist., LXXIX, 1972. [10135]
- LANDAU, ZBIGNIEW. Crise industrielle en Pologne durant les années 1924-1925 [Fr. summary]. Rocz. Dziejów Społ. Gos., XXXII, 1971. [10136]
- LANDAU, ZBIGNIEW. Développement de la législation relative aux cartels dans la Pologne de l'entre-deux-guerres, sur le fond de la politique économique polonaise [Fr. summary]. Kwartalnik Hist., LXXIX, 1972. [10137]
- ŁEPKOWSKI, TADEUSZ. La formation de la Nation polonaise au 19<sup>e</sup> siècle [in Czech]. Českoslov. časopis Hist., no. 6, 1971. [10138]
- ŁOWMIAŃSKI, HENRYK. The Slavic Rite in Poland and St. Adalbert. Acta Poloniae Hist., XXIV, 1971. [10139]
- MACZAK, ANTONI. The Balance of Polish Sea Trade with the West 1565-1646. Scand. Ec. Hist. R., no. 2, 1970. [10140]
- PIASKOWSKI, JERZY. Problème de la continuité du développement des fonderies de fer sur les territoires polonais dans l'antiquité et au début du Moyen-Age [Fr. summary]. Rocz. Dziejów Społ. Gos., XXXII, 1971. [10141]
- POPIOŁ-SZYMAŃSKA, ALEKSANDRA. Opinions de la noblesse et des bourgeois concernant le commerce intérieur en Pologne depuis la fin du XV<sup>ème</sup> jusqu'à la moitié du XVI<sup>ème</sup> siècle [Fr. summary]. Rocz. Hist., XXXVII, 1971. [10142]
- SIMONS, THOMAS W., JR. The Peasant Revolt of 1846 in Galicia: Recent Polish Historiography. Slavic R., Dec. 1971. [10143]
- SOLCHANYK, ROMAN. The Foundation of the Communist Movement in Eastern Galicia, 1919-1921. Slavic R., Dec. 1971. [10144]
- STEFANŃSKI, KAROL. Dörfer nach "deutschem Recht" in Grosspolen 1333-1370 [Ger. summary]. Rocz. Hist., XXXVII, 1971. [10145]
- VAHLE, HERMANN. Die polnische Verfassung vom 3 Mai 1791 im zeitgenössischen Urteil. Jb. Gesch. Osteuropas, Sept. 1971. [10146]
- WYCZANSKI, A. Le revenu national en Pologne au XVI<sup>e</sup> siècle. Premiers résultats. An.: Ec., Soc., Civil., Jan.-Feb. 1971. [10147]
- WYNOT, EDWARD D., JR. The "Service of Youth": A Polish Experiment in Social Modernization, 1937-1939. Can. Slavic Stud., Summer 1971. [10148]
- ŻYTKOWICZ, LEONID. Grain Yields in Poland, Bohemia, Hungary, and Slovakia in the 16th to 18th Centuries. Acta Poloniae Hist., XXIV, 1971. [10149]

ROMANIA

- BARTOȘ, GHEORGHE. Horia, Cloșca, et Criș an dans l'iconographie du temps [in Romanian; Fr. summary]. Acta Musei Napocensis, VIII, 1971. [10150]
- BERINDEI, DAN. N. Iorga et les moments de faite du processus de constitution de la Roumanie moderne. R. Roumaine Hist., no. 4, 1971. [10151]
- BODEA, CORNELIA. Vasile Alecsandri—l'un des fondateurs de la Roumanie moderne. R. Roumaine Hist., no. 6, 1971. [10152]
- BOTEZAN, L., and ENEA, C. Bauernbewegungen im Bezirk Cluj zur Zeit des ersten Weltkrieges. Acta Musei Napocensis, VIII, 1971. [10153]
- BUNEA, AURELIA. Le drapeau de la Roumanie—symbole de l'aspiration à l'union de la Transylvanie avec la Roumanie (1850-1918). R. Roumaine Hist., no. 4, 1971. [10154]
- BUNTA, P., and TUȚUI, GH. Die organisatorische Erstarkung der Rumänischen Kommunistischen Partei und das Anwachsen ihres politischen Einflusses (1944-1945). Acta Musei Napocensis, VIII, 1971. [10155]
- CAMPUS, ELIZA. La Roumanie rentre en guerre (novembre 1918). R. Roumaine Hist., no. 6, 1971. [10156]

CERNOVODEANU, PAUL. Préoccupations en matière d'histoire universelle dans l'historiographie roumaine aux XVII<sup>e</sup> et XVIII<sup>e</sup> siècles (III). R. Roumaine Hist., no. 4, 1971. [10157]

CHIȘU, IOAN. Der proletarische Internationalismus—eine Konstante in der Geschichte der Kommunistischen Partei Rumäniens (1921–1944) [in Romanian; Ger. summary]. Acta Musei Napocensis, VIII, 1971. [10158]

CIUREA, D. Considérations sur la littérature historique et géographique des XVII<sup>e</sup>–XVIII<sup>e</sup> siècles (Essai de classification). R. Roumaine Hist., no. 5, 1971. [10159]

COLUMBEAU, SERGIU. I. C. Filitti (1879–1945). R. Roumaine Hist., no. 5, 1971. [10160]

CRONȚ, GHEORGHE. Nicolae Iorga, historien de l'Empire byzantin. R. Roumaine Hist., no. 4, 1971. [10161]

DAN, MIHAIL. Kaufleute aus Cluj in Krakau im letzten Jahrzehnt des 17. Jhs [in Romanian; Ger. summary]. Acta Musei Napocensis, VIII, 1971. [10162]

DEUTSCH, ROBERT. Der Beitrag der Fachzeitschriften zur zeitgenössischen rumänischen Historiographie (1944–1971). R. Roumaine Hist., no. 4, 1971. [10163]

DIMA-DRĂGAN, CORNELIU. Le stolnic Constantin Cantacuzène. R. Roumaine Hist., no. 5, 1971. [10164]

FLORESCU, MARIA-ECATERINA. Nicolae Bălcescu's Conception of International Relations. R. roumaine ét. int., no. 1, 1971. [10165]

GEORGESCU, ION. L'opposition aux Habsbourg des paysans roumains durant les guerres napoléoniennes (1798–1815). R. Roumaine Hist., no. 6, 1971. [10166]

GLODARIU, EUGENIA. Über die Verlagstätigkeit der Astra: "Die Volksbücherei der Gesellschaft" [in Romanian; Ger. summary]. Acta Musei Napocensis, VIII, 1971. [10167]

HERLEA, ALEXANDRU. Relations de droit entre les Pays Roumains aux XIV<sup>e</sup>–XVIII<sup>e</sup> siècles. R. Roumaine Hist., no. 5, 1971. [10168]

JORDÁKY, LUDOVIC. The Figure of Lenin in the Newspapers in Transylvania in the period of 1917–1924 [in Romanian; Eng. summary]. Acta Musei Napocensis, VIII, 1971. [10169]

MÎHORDEA, V. Le problème des sources documentaires dans l'œuvre de Nicolae Iorga. R. Roumaine Hist., no. 4, 1971. [10170]

NEACȘU, IOAN RAUL I. Nuevos aspectos sobre las relaciones entre América Latina y Rumania (La segunda mitad del XIX<sup>e</sup> siglo). R. Roumaine Hist., no. 5, 1971. [10171]

NEAMȚU, AL. La main-d'œuvre payée dans l'industrie extractive de Transylvanie au XVIII<sup>e</sup> siècle [in Romanian; Fr. summary]. Acta Musei Napocensis, VIII, 1971. [10172]

NEDELCU, FL., and BODEA, GH. I. Aus dem von den fortschrittlichen patriotischen Kräften Rumäniens in den Jahren 1936–1937 geführten Kampf gegen Faschismus und Revisionismus [in Romanian; Ger. summary]. Acta Musei Napocensis, VIII, 1971. [10173]

NEDELCU, FLOREA. Etude concernant le rôle de l'Allemagne hitlérienne dans l'évolution des organisations fascistes de Roumanie dans la période 1933–1937. R. Roumaine Hist., no. 6, 1971. [10174]

NEDELCU, FLOREA. Regarding the Question of Romania's Foreign Policy in the period from September 1936 to December 1937. R. roumaine ét. int., no. 1, 1971. [10175]

NETEA, VASILE. N. Iorga vu par ses contemporains roumains et étrangers. Sa postérité. R. Roumaine Hist., no. 4, 1971. [10176]

POPESCU-GOGAN, PETRE. Nicolae Iorga et l'échange de valeurs scientifiques universelles par l'Académie roumaine. R. Roumaine Hist., no. 4, 1971. [10177]

PROTOPODESCU, GEORGE. Die Taktik und Strategie des rumänischen Oberkommandos im Kampf zur Verteidigung von Bukarest [in Romanian; Ger. summary]. Acta Musei Napocensis, VIII, 1971. [10178]

RETEGAN, S. Die sozial-ökonomische Struktur des rumänischen Bürgertums aus Siebenbürgen in den Jahren des liberalen Regimes [in Romanian; Fr. summary]. Acta Musei Napocensis, VIII, 1971. [10179]

RUSU, CONSTANTIN. Idées philosophiques, sociales et politiques progressistes dans la pensée de Vasile Lucaci [in Romanian; Fr. summary]. Acta Musei Napocensis, VIII, 1971. [10180]

SMULTEA, ILIE J. Ideology and Political Continuity in Eastern Europe: The Case of Romania. E. Eur. Q., Jan. 1972. [10181]

ȘTEFĂNESCU, ȘTEFAN. Nicolae Iorga. R. Roumaine Hist., no. 4, 1971. [10182]

UDREA, TRAIAN. La politique extérieure de la dictature légionnaire antonescienne (septembre 1940–janvier 1941). R. Roumaine Hist., no. 6, 1971. [10183]

VAJDA, LUDOVIC. Die erste Eisenbahn in Siebenbürgen [in Romanian; Ger. summary]. Acta Musei Napocensis, VIII, 1971. [10184]

VLAD, MATEI D. Le régime fiscal et administratif dans les villages de colonisation de Valachie et de Moldavie au XVIII<sup>e</sup> siècle. R. Roumaine Hist., no. 6, 1971. [10185]

ZUB, AL. La conception de Nicolae Iorga sur le contenu de la forme dans la manière d'écrire l'histoire. R. Roumaine Hist., no. 4, 1971. [10186]

YUGOSLAVIA

ĐUROVIĆ, SMILJANA. Methodologie et méthode de recherches des phénomènes historico-économiques [in Serbo-Croatian]. Jugoslav. Ist. časopis, no. 1–2, 1971. [10187]

FERENC, TONE. Exiles as Cheap Labour of the German 'Reich' [in Slovene; Ger. summary]. Zgodov. časopis, no. 1–2, 1971. [10188]

FURUBOTN, EIRIK, and PEJOVIĆ, SVETOZAR. The Role of the Banking System in Yugoslav Economic Planning, 1946–1969. R. int. Hist. Banque, no. 4, 1971. [10189]

KONJEVIĆ, MILE. Structure sociale de Vinodol dans la nouvelle historiographie croate [in Serbo-Croatian]. Jugoslav. Ist. časopis, no. 1–2, 1971. [10190]

KRIZMAN, BOGDAN. Délimitation de l'Etat d'Oustachi [in Serbo-Croatian; Eng. summary]. Jugoslav. Ist. časopis, no. 1–2, 1971. [10191]

LAYTON, ROLAND V., JR. The History Department of the University of Belgrade. E. Eur. Q., Jan. 1972. [10192]

MARUŠIĆ, BRANKO. Notes on the Political History of the Slovenes in the Gorica Area during the Period 1870–1875 [in Slovene; Ital. summary]. Zgodov. časopis, no. 3–4, 1971. [10193]

MIKUŽ, METOD. A Contribution to the History of the Liberation Front [in Slovene; Ger. summary]. Zgodov. časopis, no. 1-2, 1971. [10194]

NATEK, MILAN. The Influence of Industrialization on the Agrarian Landscape in the Velenje Area [in Slovene; Ger. summary]. Zgodov. časopis, no. 3-4, 1971. [10195]

PAVLOWITCH, K. ST. The Constitutional Development of Serbia in the Nineteenth Century. E. Eur. Q., Jan. 1972. [10196]

PETROVICH, MICHAEL B. Yugoslavia: Religion and the Tensions of a Multi-National State. E. Eur. Q., Mar. 1972. [10197]

PISAREV, JURIJ A. Une contribution à l'histoire de l'activité de la Mission serbe dans la Russie soviétique en 1917-1918 [in Serbo-Croatian; Fr. summary]. Jugoslav. Ist. časopis, no. 1-2, 1971. [10198]

PIVEC-STELÈ, MELITTA. Henrik Costa's Diary about the Holy Alliance Congress in Ljubljana in 1821 [in Slovene; Fr. summary]. Zgodov. časopis, no. 3-4, 1971. [10199]

RADIŠIĆ, ĐORĐE. Activité éducative et culturelle du prolétariat de Vukovar en 1919-1920 [in Serbo-Croatian; Ger. summary]. Jugoslav. Ist. časopis, no. 1-2, 1971. [10200]

ROGEL, GAROLE. Preporodovci: Slovene Students for an Independent Yugoslavia, 1912-14. Can. Slavic Stud., Summer 1971. [10201]

ŠKERL, FRANCE. The Second Trieste Process [in Slovene; Ger. summary]. Zgodov. časopis, no. 1-2, 1971. [10202]

TOPOLSKI, JEŽI. Conception activiste du processus historique [in Serbo-Croatian]. Jugoslav. Ist. časopis, no. 1-2, 1971. [10203]

UDE, LOJZE. Mouvement de déclaration chez les Slovènes [in Slovene; Ger. summary]. Jugoslav. Ist. časopis, no. 1-2, 1971. [10204]

ZIVOJINOVIC, DRAGAN. The Nitti Government and the Problem of Montenegro, 1919-1920. E. Eur. Q., Mar. 1972. [10205]

ZORN, TONE. The Attitudes of the Carinthian Parties Concerning a Cultural Autonomy for Carinthian Slovenes during the Years 1925-1968 [in Slovene; Ger. summary]. Zgodov. časopis, no. 3-4, 1971. [10206]

ZORN, TONE. Concerning Some Questions from the Problems of the Slovenes in Carinthia in the First Half of the 1870ies [in Slovene; Ger. summary]. Zgodov. časopis, no. 3-4, 1971. [10207]

SOVIET UNION

Robert V. Allen, Library of Congress

RUSSIA AND THE RUSSIAN EMPIRE TO 1917

AUGUSTINE, WILSON R. Notes toward a Portrait of the Eighteenth-Century Russian Nobility. Can. Slavic Stud., Fall 1970. [10208]

BABKIN, V. I. Specific Features of the Class Struggle in the Period of the Fatherland War of 1812 [in Russian]. Ist. SSSR, no. 2, 1972. [10209]

BARTON, H. ARNOLD. Russia and the Problem of Sweden-Finland, 1721-1809. E. Eur. Q., Jan. 1972. [10210]

BENNETT, GEOFFREY. Admiral Ushakov: Nelson's Russian Ally. Hist. Today, Oct. 1971. [10211]

BERINDEL, M. Contribution à l'étude du commerce ottoman des fourrures moscovites. La route moldavo-polonoise. 1453-1700. Cah. monde russe soviétique, Oct.-Dec. 1971. [10212]

BESKROVNYI, L. G. Partizans in the Fatherland War of 1812 [in Russian]. Vopr. Ist., nos. 1-2, 1972. [10213]

BIGGART, JOHN. Kirov Before the Revolution. Soviet Stud., Jan. 1972. [10214]

BOGDANOV, L. The Recruiting of the Russian Army on the Eve of the Fatherland War of 1812 [in Russian]. Voenno-ist. zhurn., no. 1, 1972. [10215]

CIORAN, SAMUEL D. Aleksandr Dobroliubov: A Prophet of Silence. Can. Slavic Stud., no. 2, 1971. [10216]

COMTET, M. S. M. Stepnjak-Kravčinskij et la Russie sectaire. 1851-1895. Cah. monde russe soviétique, Oct.-Dec. 1971. [10217]

CROSS, ANTHONY. John Rogerson: Physician to Catherine the Great [note]. Can. Slavic Stud., Fall 1970. [10218]

DUDZINSKAIA, E. A. Bourgeois Tendencies in the Theory and Practice of the Slavophiles [in Russian]. Vopr. Ist., no. 1, 1972. [10219]

DURAN, JAMES A., JR. The Reform of Financial Administration in Russia during the Reign of Catherine II. Can. Slavic Stud., Fall 1970. [10220]

FLORIA, B. N. Evolution of Tax Immunity of the Lay Feudal Landlords in the Second Half of the 15th and First Half of the 16th Centuries [in Russian]. Ist. SSSR, no. 1, 1972. [10221]

FLYNN, JAMES T. Magnitskii's Purge of Kazan University: A Case Study in the Uses of Reaction in Nineteenth-Century Russia. J. Mod. Hist., no. 4, 1971. [10222]

FOX, FRANK. Negotiating with the Russians: Ambassador Ségur's Mission to Saint-Petersburg, 1784-1789. Fr. Hist. Stud., Spring 1971. [10223]

GEIERHOS, WOLFGANG. Zu bisher ungenutzten Aufzeichnungen der französischen Geheimpolizei über die Tätigkeit russischer Revolutionäre, 1890-1917. Jb. Gesch. Osteuropas, Dec. 1971. [10224]

GORIAKINA, V. S. The Peasant Movement in the Ukraine in 1907-1914 [in Russian]. Ist. SSSR, no. 1, 1972. [10225]

GREGORY, PAUL. Economic Growth and Structural Change in Tsarist Russia: A Case of Modern Economic Growth? Soviet Stud., Jan. 1972. [10226]

GRIFFITHS, DAVID M. The Rise and Fall of the Northern System: Court Politics and Foreign Policy in the First Half of Catherine II's Reign. Can. Slavic Stud., Fall 1970. [10227]

GUROFF, GREGORY, and STARR, S. FREDERICK. A Note on Urban Literacy in Russia, 1890-1914. Jb. Gesch. Osteuropas, Dec. 1971. [10228]

- IASMAN, Z. D. The Origins of Agricultural Machine Production in Russia of the Serf Era [in Russian]. Vopr. Ist., no. 3, 1972. [10229]
- JONES, ROBERT E. Catherine II and the Provincial Reform of 1775: A question of motivation. Can. Slavic Stud., Fall 1970. [10230]
- KÄMPFER, FRANK. Ivan Groznyj und Hilandar [Monastery on Mt. Athos]. Jb. Gesch. Osteuropas, Dec. 1971. [10231]
- KOTLIAR, M. F. Coinage and Money of Account in the Left Bank Ukraine in the 18th Century [in Ukrainian]. Ukrains'kyi ist. zhurn., no. 2, 1972. [10232]
- KOZLOVSKII, P. G. Development of Productive Forces in Large Noble Estates of Western and Central Belorussia in the Second Half of the 16th Century [in Russian]. Ist. SSSR, no. 2, 1972. [10233]
- LANE, R. C. The Reception of F. I. Tyutchev's Political Articles in Russia and Abroad, 1844-1858. Eur. Stud. R., July 1971. [10234]
- LAVERYCHEV, V. IA. Russian Capitalists and the Periodical Press in the Second Half of the 19th Century [in Russian]. Ist. SSSR, no. 1, 1972. [10235]
- LEDONNE, JOHN P. The Provincial and Local Police under Catherine the Great, 1775-1796. Can. Slavic Stud., Fall 1970. [10236]
- LINCOLN, W. B. Russia's "Enlightened" Bureaucrats and the Problem of State Reform, 1848-1856. Cah. monde russe soviétique, Oct.-Dec. 1971. [10237]
- LINCOLN, W. BRUCE. Nicholas I: Russia's Last Absolute Monarch. Hist. Today, Feb. 1971. [10238]
- ŁOJEK, JERZY. Catherine II's Armed Intervention in Poland: Origins of the Political Decisions at the Russian Court in 1791 and 1792. Can. Slavic Stud., Fall 1970. [10239]
- MCCARTHER, GILBERT H. Catherine II and the Masonic Circle of N. I. Novikov. Can. Slavic Stud., Fall 1970. [10240]
- MACMILLAN, DAVID S. The Scottish-Russian Trade: Its Development, Fluctuations, and Difficulties 1750-1796. Can. Slavic Stud., Fall 1970. [10241]
- MAXWELL, MARGARET. A Re-examination of the Role of N. K. Giers as Russian Foreign Minister under Alexander III. Eur. Stud. R., no. 4, 1971. [10242]
- MORRISON, KERRY R. Catherine II's Legislative Commission: An Administrative Interpretation. Can. Slavic Stud., Fall 1970. [10243]
- ORZHEKHOVSKII, I. V. The Third Department [of His Imperial Majesty's Own Chancellery; in Russian]. Vopr. Ist., no. 2, 1972. [10244]
- POKHILEVICH, D. L. The Peasant Budget in Belorussia and Lithuania in the 16th Century [in Russian]. Ist. SSSR, no. 1, 1972. [10245]
- PRUDNIKOV, IU. F. The Recruiting of the Officer Corps of the Russian Army in 1794-1804 [in Russian]. Vest. Mosk. U., no. 2, 1972. [10246]
- RANSEL, DAVID. Nikita Panin's Imperial Council Project and the Struggle of Hierarchy Groups at the Court of Catherine II. Can. Slavic Stud., Fall 1970. [10247]
- RANSEL, DAVID L. The "Memoirs" of Count Münnich. Slavic R., Dec. 1971. [10248]
- ROBBINS, RICHARD G., JR. Russia's System of Food Supply Relief on the Eve of the Famine of 1391-92. Agric. Hist., Oct. 1971. [10249]
- ROOSA, RUTH AMENDE. Russian Industrialists and 'State Socialism,' 1906-1917. Soviet Stud., Jan. 1972. [10250]
- RÜSS, HARTMUT. Elena Vasil'evna Glinskaja, [Regent of Russia, 1533-1538]. Jb. Gesch. Osteuropas, Dec. 1971. [10251]
- SHEREMET, V. I. The Treaty of Adrianople and A. F. Orlov's Mission to Turkey (1829-1830) [in Russian]. Ist. SSSR, no. 1, 1972. [10252]
- SHUTOI, V. E. The Cossack Leader [Semen Palei; in Russian]. Vopr. Ist., no. 1, 1972. [10253]
- SIGAL, GEORGES. Deux journalistes polonais au service du Tsar. R. Hist. mod. contemp., Oct.-Dec. 1971. [10254]
- SUNY, RONALD GRIGOR. A Journeyman for the Revolution: Stalin and the Labour Movement in Baku, June 1907-May 1908. Soviet Stud., Jan. 1972. [10255]
- SWORAKOWSKI, WITOLD S. The Authorship of the Abdication Document of Nicholas II. Russian R., July 1971. [10256]
- TSIMBAEV, N. I. The Note of K. S. Aksakov "On the Internal Condition of Russia" and Its Role in the Ideology of Slavophilism [in Russian]. Vest. Mosk. U., no. 2, 1972. [10257]
- VON WAHLDE, PETER. A Pioneer of Russian Strategic Thought: G. A. Leer, 1829-1904. Mil. Aff., no. 4, 1971. [10258]
- ZACEK, JUDITH COHEN. The Russian Bible Society and the Catholic Church. Can. Slavic Stud., no. 1, 1971. [10259]

RUSSIA AND THE SOVIET UNION SINCE 1917

- BEAUCHAMP, EDWARD R. Ideology and Fantasy: The German Occupation of the Ukraine, 1941-45. Soc. Stud., Jan. 1972. [10260]
- BEERMANN, RENÉ. The 1970-71 Soviet Trials of Zionists: Some Legal Aspects. Soviet Jewish Aff., no. 2, 1971. [10261]
- BEILINA, E. E. The Industry of the USSR in the Years of the Eighth Five Year Plan (1966-1970) [in Russian]. Ist. SSSR, no. 2, 1972. [10262]
- CHERNOMORSKII, M. N. The Industry of the USSR in the First Years of Industrialization (1926-1927) [in Russian]. Vopr. Ist., no. 1, 1972. [10263]
- CHUGUNOV, A. I. The Struggle with the Basmachestvo in Central Asia (1931-1933) [in Russian]. Ist. SSSR, no. 2, 1972. [10264]
- CONTE, F. Christian Rakovskij, commissaire aux Affaires étrangères de l'Ukraine. Janvier 1919-août 1923. Cah. monde russe soviétique, Oct.-Dec. 1971. [10265]
- COOX, ALVIN D. Japanese Foreknowledge of the Soviet-German War, 1941. Soviet Stud., Apr. 1972. [10266]
- DAVIES, NORMAN. The Soviet Command and the Battle of Warsaw [1920; in Russian]. Soviet Stud., Apr. 1972. [10267]
- DOUGLAS, JAMES. Stalin in the Second World War. Survey, no. 4, 1971. [10268]

- ERICKSON, J. The Soviet Response to Surprise Attack: Three Directives, 22 June 1941. Soviet Stud., Apr. 1972. [10269]
- ERMOLIN, P. A. The Red Army Rear Area in the Battle of Moscow. Vopr. Ist., no. 2, 1972. [10270]
- FEDOSEYEV, VIKTOR. Leaving Russia: A Personal Experience. Soviet Jewish Aff., June 1971. [10271]
- FRIDBERG, L. IA. The Formation of the Food Reserve in the USSR before the Great Fatherland War [in Russian]. Ist. SSSR, no. 1, 1972. [10272]
- GILBOA, YEHOASHUA A. The 1948 Zionist Wave in Moscow. Soviet Jewish Aff., no. 2, 1971. [10273]
- GIMPEL'SON, E. G. Concerning the Number of Industrial Workers of the Soviet Republic During the Years of the Civil War, 1918-1920 [in Russian]. Ist. SSSR, no. 1, 1972. [10274]
- GOLDWATER, BARRY. The Perilous Conjunction: Soviet Ascendancy and American Isolationism. Orbis, Spring 1971. [10275]
- GRIDNEV, V. M. The German-Fascist Occupation Regime in Rural Areas of Western and Northwestern Regions of the RSFSR (1941-1944) [in Russian]. Ist. SSSR, no. 1, 1972. [10276]
- HUMPHREY, HUBERT H. The Course of Soviet Foreign Policy and Soviet-American Relations in the 1970's. Orbis, Spring 1971. [10277]
- KATZ, ZEV. Sociology of Religion in the USSR: A Beginning [r. art.]. Slavic R., no. 4, 1971. [10278]
- KOBLIAKOV, I. K. An Outstanding Success of the Leninist Policy of Peace [Rappallo; in Russian]. Ist. SSSR, no. 2, 1972. [10279]
- KOHLER, FOY D. An American View of Soviet Foreign Policy in the 1970's. Orbis, Spring 1971. [10280]
- KOREY, WILLIAM. The "Right to Leave" for Soviet Jews: Legal and Moral Aspects. Soviet Jewish Aff., June 1971. [10281]
- KRAMMER, ARNOLD. Russian Counterfeit Dollars: A Case of Early Soviet Espionage. Slavic R., Dec. 1971. [10282]
- KSENZENKO, N. I. Solution of the Agrarian Problem in the Beet-Raising Areas of the Ukraine (1917-1921) [in Russian]. Vopr. Ist., no. 2, 1972. [10283]
- LVAVI, JACOB. Jewish Agricultural Settlement in the USSR. Soviet Jewish Aff., June 1971. [10284]
- MC CLELLAND, JAMES C. Bolshevik Approaches to Higher Education, 1917-1921. Slavic R., no. 4, 1971. [10285]
- MAKIEVSKII, G. M. The Occupational Structure of the Working Class of Krasnoiarsk krai, 1939-1959 [in Russian]. Ist. SSSR, no. 2, 1972. [10286]
- MEDLIN, VIRGIL DEWAIN. Tseretelli and the Mensheviks, 1917. Rocky Mt. Soc. Sci. J., Jan. 1972. [10287]
- MICHAELIS, M. 'Jewish Bolshevism' and Russo-German Relations in 1933: a Documentary Note. Soviet Jewish Aff., no. 2, 1971. [10288]
- MILLMAN, IVOR I. Major Centres of Jewish Population in the USSR and a Note on the 1970 Census. Soviet Jewish Aff., June 1971. [10289]
- PINKUS, BENJAMIN. Yiddish-Language Courts and Nationalities Policy in the Soviet Union. Soviet Jewish Aff., no. 2, 1971. [10290]
- POLLÁK, PAVEL. Die Auswanderung in die Sowjetunion in den zwanziger Jahren. Bohemia, 10, 1969. [10291]
- POSSONY, STEFAN F. The USSR: Beyond Its Zenith? Orbis, Spring 1971. [10292]
- REDLICH, SHIMON. Jews in General Anders' Army in the Soviet Union 1941-42. Soviet Jewish Aff., no. 2, 1971. [10293]
- REDLICH, SHIMON. The Jews in the Soviet Annexed Territories 1939-41. Soviet Jewish Aff., June 1971. [10294]
- RICH, VERA. Byelorussian National Consciousness and Jewish Tradition—some Examples of Soviet Editorial Policy. Soviet Jewish Aff., no. 2, 1971. [10295]
- RUBINSTEIN, ALVIN Z. Soviet Policy Toward the Third World in the 1970's. Orbis, Spring 1971. [10296]
- RYAVEC, KARL W. Soviet Industrial Management: Challenge and Response, 1965-1970. Can. Slavic Stud., no. 2, 1971. [10297]
- SAWCZUK, KONSTANTYN. The Ukraine: a Sovereign and Independent State? A Juridical Approach. Eur. Stud. R., no. 4, 1971. [10298]
- SCHROETER, LEONARD. Soviet Jews and Israeli Citizenship: The Nationality Amendment Law of 1971. Soviet Jewish Aff., no. 2, 1971. [10299]
- SCHUSTER, ALICE. Women's Role in the Soviet Union: Ideology and Reality. Russian R., July 1971. [10300]
- SIVOKHINA, T. A. The Guiding Role of the Working Class in State Construction (October 1917-July 1918) [in Russian]. Vest. Mosk. U.; Ist., no. 2, 1972. [10301]
- TIURINA, A. P. Development of the Agriculture of the USSR in the Eighth Five Year Plan (1966-1970) [in Russian]. Ist. SSSR, no. 1, 1972. [10302]
- TROFIMENKO, G. A. The Theory of the "Balance of Forces" and the Real Contradiction Between Capitalism and Socialism in the World Arena [in Russian]. Ist. SSSR, no. 1, 1972. [10303]
- TUCKER, ROBERT C. Several Stalins. Survey, no. 4, 1971. [10304]
- USSR and the Politics of Polish Antisemitism 1956-68. Soviet Jewish Aff., June 1971. [10305]
- YODFAT, ARYEH. Jewish Religious Communities in the USSR. Soviet Jewish Aff., no. 2, 1971. [10306]

RUSSIA AND THE SOVIET UNION: HISTORIOGRAPHY AND BIBLIOGRAPHY

- ABRAMSKY, CHIMEN. The Jewish Labour Movement: Some Historiographical Problems. Soviet Jewish Aff., June 1971. [10307]
- ALEXANDER, JOHN T. Recent Soviet Historiography on the Pugachev Revolt [r. art.]. Can. Slavic Stud., Fall 1970. [10308]
- BARON, SAMUEL H. The Transition from Feudalism to Capitalism in Russia: A Major Soviet Historical Controversy [r. art.]. AHR, June 1972. [10309]

BEN-SHLOMO, ZEEV. The Khrushchev Apocrypha. Soviet Jewish Aff., June 1971. [10310]

BUKSHPAN, P. IA. Works on the History of Museums in the USSR [in Russian]. Vopr. Ist., no. 3, 1972. [10311]

CHEREDNYCHENKO, V. P. The Universal of Treason [Ukraine in 1918 in American Interpretation; in Ukrainian]. Ukrains'kyi ist. zhurn., no. 2, 1972. [10312]

DMITRENKO, V. P. Some Problems of the NEP in Soviet Historiography of the '60's [in Russian]. Vopr. Ist., no. 3, 1972. [10313]

FRANK, SEMEN. Vekhi (Signposts): A Collection of Articles on the Russian Intelligentsia, VII: The Ethic of Nihilism: A Characterization of the Russian Intelligentsia's Moral Outlook. Can. Slavic Stud., no. 3, 1971. [10314]

GERSCHENKRON, ALEXANDER. Soviet Marxism and Absolutism [r. art.]. Slavic R., no. 4, 1971. [10315]

GRIFFITHS, DAVID M. Soviet Views of Early Russian-American Relations. Proc. Am. Phil. Soc., no. 2, 1972. [10316]

HOLLIDAY, GILBERT F. Russian Derivation and Lexicology: A Review Article. Can. Slavic Stud., no. 2, 1971. [10317]

JUSSILA, OSMO. Forskning rörande absolutism och självhärskardöme i Sovjetunionen. Hist. tids. Finl., no. 4, 1970. [10318]

LOURIA, YVETTE. Gogol' Reconsidered [r. art.]. Can. Slavic Stud., no. 2, 1971. [10319]

OREKHOV, V. A. Lenin's "Iskra" in the View of Contemporary Anglo-American Bourgeois Historiography [in Russian]. Ist. SSSR, no. 1, 1972. [10320]

PENCHKOVSKAIA, S. M. The All-Union Coordinating Conference [on the Theme "The 24th Congress of the CPSU and the Tasks of Soviet Historical Scholarship"; in Russian]. Vopr. Ist., no. 3, 1972. [10321]

RAEFF, MARC. Random Notes on the Reign of Catherine II in the Light of Recent Literature. Jb. Gesch. Osteuropas, Dec. 1971. [10322]

SERGIN, ANNA. Jews and the October Revolution in Recent Soviet Literature. Soviet Jewish Aff., no. 2, 1971. [10323]

ZAGOROVSKII, V. P., and NIKITIN, N. I. Survey of Soviet Literature of 1969-1970 on the History of Russia in the Feudal Era [in Russian]. Ist. SSSR, no. 2, 1972. [10324]

ZIL'BERMAN, A. O. New Bibliographic Publications for Historians [in Russian]. Vopr. Ist., no. 2, 1972. [10325]

NEAR EAST

Sidney Glazer, Washington, D. C.

NEAR EAST: MEDIEVAL

ALĪ, S. Two Great Contemporaries of Thirteenth Century A.D. Sultan al-ʿUlama al-ʿIzz ibn al-Salām and Ibn ʿArabī. Islamic Cult., no. 3, 1971. [10326]

AL-JUNDI, A. A Comprehensive Historical-Geographical Study of the Arabian Peninsula [in Arabic]. al-Adīb (Beirut), Sept. 1971. [10327]

BĀQR, T. An Historical Glance at the Rivers of Iraq [in Arabic]. al-Aqlām, no. 1, 1971. [10328]

BOSWORTH, C. E. Christian and Jewish Religious Dignitaries in Mamlūk Egypt and Syria: Int. J. Mid. E. Stud., nos. 1-2, 1972. [10329]

BOURNOUTIAN, GEORGE. The Armenian Community of Isfahan in the Seventeenth Century. Armenian R., no. 1, 1972. [10330]

CHARANIS, PETER. Armenians and Greeks in the Byzantine Empire. Armenian R., no. 1, 1972. [10331]

FORAND, P. Early Muslim Relations with Nubia. Der Islam (Hamburg), no. 1, 1971. [10332]

HINDS, M. Kufan Political Alignments and Their Background in the Mid-Seventh Century A.D. Int. J. Mid. E. Stud., no. 4, 1971. [10333]

JONES, W. R. The Armenian Church and the Papacy in the Fourteenth Century: Richard Fitzralph's Critique of Armenian Christianity. Armenian R., no. 1, 1972. [10334]

KOŞAY, HÂMIT. Migration of Nomadic Peoples of the East toward the West: a Bibliography [in Turkish]. Belleten, Apr. 1971. [10335]

ROFÉ, H. Land and Sea Contacts Between the Near and Far East. E. Horizon, no. 3, 1971. [10336]

TEKINDAG, SEHABETTIN. Ottoman Historiography [in Turkish]. Belleten, Oct. 1971. [10337]

VRONIS, SPEROS, JR. Evidence on human sacrifice among the early Ottoman Turks. J. Asian Hist., no. 2, 1971. [10338]

YÜCEL, YAŞAR. Research in the History of Turkey in the 14th and 15th Centuries [in Turkish]. Belleten, Oct. 1971. [10339]

NEAR EAST: MODERN

AL-QAZZAZ, A. Power Elite in Iraq, 1320-1958: a Study of the Cabinet. Muslim World, no. 4, 1971. [10340]

AMIRSADEGHI, H. With Russia and America: the Shah's Balanced Alignment. New Mid. E., Nov. 1971. [10341]

BAYKAL, BEKIR SITKI. Atatürk and History [in Turkish]. Belleten, Oct. 1971. [10342]

BAYKARA, H. Economic Foundations of the Azerbaijan Struggle for Independence [in Turkish]. Türk Kültürü, May 1971. [10343]

BAYUR, H. The Politics of Kamil Pasha in the Light of Newly Discovered Documents [in Turkish]. Belleten, Jan. 1971. [10344]

BAZAN, R. Some Notes for a History of the Relations Between Latin America, the Arabs and Islam. Muslim World, no. 4, 1971. [10345]

BELHASSEN, S. Tunisie: le congrès de la dernière chance. Jeune Afrique, Oct. 1971. [10346]

BROWN, N. Jordanian Civil War. Mil. R., Sept. 1971. [10347]

- BÜYÜTÜĞRUL, A. Russia's Aims in the Ottoman Empire After the War of 1877-78 [in Turkish]. Türk Tarihi Dergisi, Feb. 1971. [10348]
- COOKE, J., and HEGGOY, A. The American Periodical Press and Ahmed Ben Bella. Muslim World, no. 4, 1971. [10349]
- ÇORBACIOĞLU, M. Documents of the First Secret Student Society of 1877, I [in Turkish]. Türk Tarihi Dergisi, Feb. 1971. [10350]
- CRABB, CECIL V., JR. India, Egypt, and New Patterns of "Non-Alignment." World Aff., no. 4, 1972. [10351]
- CURTIS, M. Soviet-American Relations and the Middle East Crisis. Orbis, no. 3, 1971. [10352]
- DONABEDIAN, KEVORK. The Eastern Question and the Armenian Case, III. Armenian R., no. 1, 1972. [10353]
- DONINI, PIER GIOVANNI. Il movimento delle "Pantere Nere" in Israele et le sue cause. Oriente Mod., nos. 6-8, 1971. [10354]
- EDMONDS, C. J. Kurdish Nationalism. J. Contemp. Hist., no. 1, 1971. [10355]
- ESHETE, A. Une ambassade du Ras Ali en Egypt, 1852. J. Ethiopian Stud., no. 1, 1971. [10356]
- ETMEKJIAN, JAMES. The Tanzimat Reforms and Their Effect on the Armenians in Turkey. Armenian R., no. 1, 1972. [10357]
- FLOOR, W. M. The Office of Kalāntar in Qājār Persia. J. Ec. Soc. Hist. Orient., no. 3, 1971. [10358]
- FORSYTHE, D. ÜNRWA, the Palestine Refugees and World Politics: 1949-1969. Int. Organ., no. 3, 1971. [10359]
- FRISCH, A. Frankreich und die Maghrebstaaten. Afrika Spectrum, no. 3, 1970. [10360]
- GARTHWAITE, GENE R. The Bakhti-yāri Khans, the Government of Iran, and the British, 1946-1915. Int. J. Mid. E. Stud., no. 1, 1971. [10361]
- GIL BENUMEYA, R. Una nueva problematica oriental en torno al Golfo Persico. R. Pol. Int., Mar.-Apr. 1971. [10362]
- GLASNECK, JOHANNES. Kemal Atatürk in der Historiographie. Z. Geschichtswiss. no. 9, 1971. [10363]
- GRAY, RICHARD. The Southern Sudan. J. Contemp. Hist., no. 1, 1971. [10364]
- HARMEI, C. Considérations générales sur le désastre communiste au Soudan. Est et Ouest, Sept. 1971. [10365]
- HOTTINGER, A. VON. Der Machtkampf in Aegypten nach dem Tode Nassers. Europa-Arch., Sept. 1971. [10366]
- HOWARD, HARRY N. Jordan in Turmoil. Current Hist., Jan. 1972. [10367]
- ISMAEL, T. Der Staatsreich vom Mai 1969 im Sudan: Rebellion oder Revolution? Europa-Arch., Sept. 1971. [10368]
- KAYLANI, NABIL M. The Rise of the Syrian Ba'th, 1940-1958: Political Success, Party Failure. Int. J. Mid. E. Stud., no. 3, 1972. [10369]
- KAZARIAN, H. Opening of the Turkish Genocide of 1915-18: Arrest and Murder of the Armenian Intellectuals. Armenian R., no. 3, 1971. [10370]
- KEDOURIE, E. The Jews of Baghdad in 1910. Mid. E. Stud., no. 3, 1971. [10371]
- KILNER, PETER. Better Outlook for Sudan. World Today, Apr. 1971. [10372]
- KING, W. Settlement of Armenians in Eastern Cilicia. Armenian R., no. 3, 1971. [10373]
- KOLODZIEJ, E. French Mediterranean Policy: the Politics of Weakness. Int. Aff. (London), no. 3, 1971. [10374]
- KUDSI-ZADEH, A. A Diary of Mesopotamia in 1906. Welt Islams, nos. 1-2, 1971. [10375]
- LANG, N. Difficultés soviétiques au Proche-Orient. Est et Ouest, Oct. 1971. [10376]
- LEGASSICK, TREVOR J. Some Recent War-Related Arabic Fiction. Mid. E. J., no. 4, 1971. [10377]
- LEWAN, K. Opening of Hostilities in the Middle East. R. égyptienne Droit Int., no. 26, 1971. [10378]
- LOSMAN, DONALD L. The Arab Boycott of Israel. Int. J. Mid. E. Stud., no. 2, 1972. [10379]
- MACIU, VASILE. Les relations Roumano-Turques pendant la révolution de 1848. Belleten, July 1971. [10380]
- MALONE, JOSEPH J. The Yemen Arab Republic's 'Game of Nations.' World Today, Dec. 1971. [10381]
- MANSFIELD, P. Egypt after Nasser. World Today, July 1971. [10382]
- ÖKTE, E. The Greek Revolutionary Society in Istanbul, KORDUS [in Turkish]. Türk Tarihi Dergisi, Jan. 1971. [10383]
- OWEN, R. P. The British Withdrawal from the Persian Gulf. World Today, Feb. 1972. [10384]
- QUANDT, W. The Middle East Conflict in U.S. Strategy, 1970-71. J. Palestine Stud., no. 1, 1971. [10385]
- RAFAAT, W. Essai sur l'Union des Emirats du Golfe Arabique [in Arabic]. R. égyptienne Droit Int., no. 26, 1970. [10386]
- REICH, BERNARD. Israel's Quest for Security. Current Hist., Jan. 1972. [10387]
- SALIBI, KAMAL S. The Lebanese Identity. J. Contemp. Hist., no. 1, 1971. [10388]
- SCHULZ, ANN T. A Leadership Role for Iran in the Persian Gulf? Current Hist., Jan. 1972. [10389]
- SHORROCK, WILLIAM I. The French Presence in Syria and Lebanon Before the First World War, 1900-1914. Historian, no. 2, 1972. [10390]
- SIMPSON, DWIGHT JAMES. Turkey: A Time of Troubles. Current Hist., Jan. 1972. [10391]
- SLONIM, SHLOMO. Egypt's Conflict of Alliances. World Today, Mar. 1972. [10392]
- SONYEL, SALAH I. R. The Last Days of Atatürk in the Light of English Documents [in Turkish]. Belleten, Oct. 1971. [10393]
- SULEIMAN, MICHAEL W. Crisis and Revolution in Lebanon. Mid. E. J., no. 1, 1972. [10394]
- TATON, R. L'amélioration des relations franco-algériennes. Eur.-France Outremer, Aug.-Sept. 1971. [10395]

THOMAN, ROY E. Iraq under Baathist Rule. Current Hist., Jan. 1972. [10396]

UZUNÇARŞILI, İ. H. A Statesman from the Time of "Nizami Cedit": Kadi Abdurrahman Pasa [in Turkish]. Belleten, Apr., July 1971. [10397]

VINOGRADOV, AMAL. The 1920 Revolt in Iraq Reconsidered: the Role of Tribes in National Politics. Int. J. Mid. E. Stud., no. 1, 1972. [10398]

WELLER, J. Israeli Armor: Lessons from the Six-Day War. Mil. R., no. 11, 1971. [10399]

WHETTEN, L. The Military Consequences of Mediterranean Superpower Parity. New Mid. E., Nov. 1971. [10400]

WILKINSON, J. The Oman Question: the Background to the Political Geography of South-East Arabia. Geog. J., no. 3, 1971. [10401]

WOLF, JOHN B. Lebanon: The Politics of Survival. Current Hist., Jan. 1972. [10402]

YISRAELI, D. The Third Reich and Palestine. Mid. E. Stud., no. 3, 1971. [10403]

YODFAT, A. The End of Syria's Isolation? World Today, no. 8, 1971. [10404]

YODFAT, A. Iraq: Russia's Other Middle Eastern Pasture. New Mid. E., Nov. 1971. [10405]

ZENNER, WALTER P., and GUTMANN, DAVID. Aqilli Agha: The Strongman in the Ethnic Relations of the Ottoman Galilee [art. and comment]. Comp. Stud. Soc. Hist., no. 2, 1972. [10406]

AFRICA

David E. Gardinier, Marquette University

GENERAL

ALLEN, J. DE V. A proposal for Indian Ocean studies. U. E. Africa Soc. Sci. Council Conf., Hist. Pap., 1968-69. [10407]

ATMORE, ANTHONY; CHIRENJE, J. M.; and MUDENCE, S. I. Firearms in South-Central Africa. J. Afric. Hist., no. 4, 1971. [10408]

BAKIR, G. Le style français dans l'administration locale et son application dans les pays du Maghreb [in Arabic]. Egypte Contemp., Apr. 1971. [10409]

BENNETT, ROBERT A., JR. Africa and the biblical period. Harvard Theol. R., Oct. 1971. [10410]

BERGATT, BARBARA. Ausgewählte neuere Literatur zum Militär in Afrika. Afrika Spectrum, no. 1, 1971. [10411]

BIERZINA, S. YA. Materials for the ethnic history of the Fulbe [in Russian]. Soviet. Etnogr., no. 4, 1971. [10412]

BOUHDIABA, ABDELWAHAB. La Sociologie du Développement Africain. Current Sociol., no. 2, 1970. [10413]

BOURGES, Y. La politique française d'aide au développement: la coopération. Coopération dév., Jan.-Feb. 1972. [10414]

BOURGES, YVON. La coopération franco-africaine et malgache. R. Défense nat., May 1970. [10415]

BOUTROS-GHALI, B. The Afro-Asian movement: a survey of sources and development. R. égyptienne Droit Int., 1970. [10416]

BREITENGROSS, JENS PETER. Aus afrikanischen Gesetzblättern [Military]. Afrika Spectrum, no. 1, 1971. [10417]

BREITENGROSS, JENS PETER. Aus afrikanischen gesetzblättern [Urbanization]. Afrika Spectrum, no. 2, 1971. [10418]

BRETT, EDWIN A. Dependency and Development: Some Problems Involved in the Analysis of Change in Colonial Africa. Cah. Et. afric., no. 4, 1971. [10419]

BROWN, JEAN. Borana Kalâcâ: Cire Perdue casting. Kenya Past and Present, Dec. 1971. [10420]

BURRACK, DIETER. Pekings Einfluss in Schwarzafrika. Aussenpolitik, Jan. 1972. [10421]

CLARKE, JOHN I. The growth of capital cities in Africa. Afrika Spectrum, no. 2, 1971. [10422]

CONNOR, WALKER. Nation-building or nation-destroying? World Pol., Apr. 1972. [10423]

CONTEE, CLARENCE G. DuBois, the NAACP, and the African Congress of 1919. J. Negro Hist., Jan. 1972. [10424]

DELERM, ROBERT. L'immigration noire en France. Perspectives, conséquences. Hommes et Migrations, Special Issue, 1971. [10425]

DIGGS, IRENE. DuBois and the Pan-African Congresses. Current Bibliogr. Afric. Aff., Mar. 1972. [10426]

DONAT, D. Social integration of North-African Jews in Israel. Dispersion and Unity, 1971. [10427]

DOUGALL, J. W. C. J. H. Oldham. Int. R. Missions, Jan. 1970. [10428]

FIERCE, MILFRED C. Economic aspects of the Marcus Garvey movement. Black Scholar, Mar.-Apr. 1972. [10429]

FRANÇOIS, PIERRE. Le Maghreb sur la voie de l'équilibre. R. Défense nat., Feb. 1970. [10430]

FURLEY, C. W. Education and the chiefs in East Africa in the inter-war period. U. E. Africa Soc. Sci. Council Conf., Hist. Pap., 1968-69. [10431]

GOLDEN, LILY. African studies in the USSR. New World R., Winter 1972. [10432]

GUTTERIDGE, WILLIAM. Foreign military assistance to African states. Afrika Spectrum, no. 1, 1971. [10433]

HODGE, ALISON. The training of missionaries for Africa: the Church Missionary Society's training college at Islington, 1900-1915. J. Relig. Africa, no. 2, 1971. [10434]

- HODGES, NORMAN E. Neo-colonialism: the new rape of Africa. Black Scholar, Jan. 1972. [10435]
- HOFFMAN, WOLFGANG. Von der europäischen zur afrikanischen Kirche in Afrika. Int. Afrika-Forum, Sept.-Oct. 1971. [10436]
- HOUTONDJI, J. P. Un philosophe africain dans l'Allemagne du XVIII<sup>e</sup> siècle: Antoine Guillaume Amo. Et. phil., Jan.-Mar. 1970. [10437]
- IRELE, ABIOLA. Négritude revisited. Odu, Apr. 1971. [10438]
- ISMAEL, TAREQ Y. The People's Republic of China and Africa. J. Mod. Afric. Stud., Dec. 1971. [10439]
- JEFFREYS, M. D. W. Historical review of the nomenclature applied to Negro languages. Afric. Stud., no. 3-4, 1971. [10440]
- JEWSIEWICKI, BOGUMIL. Réflexions sur l'histoire de l'Afrique centrale: quelques observations sur la méthode et la direction des recherches. Africana Bull., no. 13, 1970. [10441]
- JONES, HAYDEN. Ethnocentrism in four contemporary general works on Africa [Murdoch, Hallett, Rotberg, Oliver and Fage]. Mazungumzo, Spring 1971. [10442]
- KARLSSON, PAUL H. Sources for African Constitutional Studies. Afric. Law Stud., Dec. 1971. [10443]
- KENNEDY, ELLEN CONROY. Léon Damas: Pigments and the colonized personality. Black World, Jan. 1972. [10444]
- KING, K. J. The American Negro as missionary to East Africa: a critical aspect of American evangelism. U. E. Africa Soc. Sci. Council Conf., Hist. Pap., 1968-69. [10445]
- MARCUM, JOHN. The United States and Portuguese Africa: a perspective on American foreign policy. Africa Today, Oct. 1971. [10446]
- MARTIN, TONY. George Padmore as a Prototype of the Black Historian in the age of militancy. Mazungumzo, Winter 1971. [10447]
- MATTHEWS, ROBERT O. Refugees and stability in Africa [r. art.]. Int. Organ., Winter 1972. [10448]
- MATTHIES, VOLKER. Militärische Staatsstreichs und Militärregime südlich der Sahara. Afrika Spectrum, no. 1, 1971. [10449]
- MATZNETTER, JOSEF. Urbanisierung in Portugiesisch-Afrika. Afrika Spectrum, no. 2, 1971. [10450]
- MAWHOOD, PHILIP. Rural local government in tropical Africa: examples from Tanzania and Cameroon. Afric. Adm. Stud., June 1971. [10451]
- MAZRUI, ALI A. Inter-African Migration. Round Table, Apr. 1971. [10452]
- MAZRUI, ALI A. Political man and the heritage of hair: some African perspectives. Brit. J. Pol. Sci., Jan. 1972. [10453]
- MELOTTI, UMBERTO. Marx e il Terzo Mondo. Terzo Mondo, Sept.-Dec. 1971. [10454]
- MÖLLER, TIES, and MUNDT, GIESELA. Ausgewählte neuere Literatur zur Urbanisierung in Tropisch-Afrika. Afrika Spectrum, no. 2, 1971. [10455]
- MORISON, DAVID. The USSR and Africa—Commitment and Isolation. Race, Jan. 1972. [10456]
- MORTIMER, EDWARD. France and Francophonie. Round Table, Apr. 1971. [10457]
- MUCHNIK, NICOLE. Les guerrillas anti-Portugaises. La Nef, Oct. 1971-Jan. 1972. [10458]
- NARDIN, J.-CL. Encore des chiffres, la traite négrière pendant la première moitié du XVIII<sup>e</sup> siècle. R. fr. Hist. Outre-Mer, no. 209, 1970. [10459]
- NWORAH, KENNETH D. The Aborigines Protection Society, 1889-1909: a pressure group in colonial policy. Can. J. Afric. Stud., no. 1, 1971. [10460]
- NWORAH, KENNETH D. The West African Mail, 1903-1906: the life of a journal and the role of its editors. Genève-Afrique, no. 1, 1971. [10461]
- ODAK, J. B. OSAGA. Ethnology, East African history and sociology. E. Afric. J., Aug. 1971. [10462]
- OGOT, BETHWELL A. Towards a history of the relations between African systems. Hadith, no. 3, 1971. [10463]
- OLORUNTIMEHIN, B. O. Constitutional developments and the achievement of independence in French West Africa, 1914-1960. Tarikh, no. 4, 1971. [10464]
- PARRY, JOHN H. Portugal Overseas: the search for riches [r. art.]. J. Interdisc. Hist., Winter 1972. [10465]
- PÉROTIN, YVES. Facilitating Access to the League of Nations Archives. Am. Archivist, Jan. 1972. [10466]
- PERSON, YVES. Anthropologie et l'histoire africaine. Can. J. Afric. Stud., no. 1, 1971. [10467]
- PERSON, YVES. Histoire de l'Afrique noire depuis l'indépendance. Ec. Humanisme, Sept.-Oct. 1970 [10468]
- Problèmes d'Afrique Australe, évolution de Juin à mi-Novembre 1970. Chron. Pol. étrangère, Jan. 1971. [10469]
- RILEY, G. MICHAEL. Labor in Cortesian Enterprise: the Cuernavaca area, 1522-1549 [data on slave origins]. The Americas, Jan. 1972. [10470]
- SAID, DIBINGA WA. An African theology of decolonization. Harvard Theol. R., Oct. 1971. [10471]
- SAND, PETER. Current trends in African legal geography. Afric. Law Stud., Dec. 1971. [10472]
- SCHMID, ERICH. L'erezione di vicariato apostolico dell'Africa centrale (1846). Euntes docete, 22, 1969. [10473]
- SEIDMAN, ANN. Prospects for Africa's exports. J. Mod. Afric. Stud., Oct. 1971. [10474]
- SIMOONS, FREDERICK J. The antiquity of dairying in Asia and Africa. Geog. R., July 1971. [10475]
- SPADY, JAMES G. Négritude, Pan Ba Négritude and the Diopian Philosophy of African History. Current Bibliogr. Afric. Aff., Jan. 1972. [10476]
- STEINHART, EDWARD I. History, Social Science and Africa. Africa Today, Oct. 1971. [10477]
- STEVENS, CHRISTOPHER. Africa and the Soviet Union. Int. Relations, Nov. 1971. [10478]
- TIBI, BASSAM. Armee und sozialer Wandel in Nordafrika. Afrika Spectrum, no. 1, 1971. [10479]
- UKPABI, S. C. Christianity and Islam and Change in African society and religion. Africa Q., July-Sept. 1971. [10480]

VENNETIER, PIERRE. Aspects of Urbanisation in Black Africa and Madagascar. Africa Q., Apr.-June 1971. [10481]

VERDIER, R. Évolution et réformes foncières de l'Afrique Noire Francophone. J. Afric. Law, Spring 1971. [10482]

VERVIN, ANTOINE. Vie et oeuvre de Bénito Sylvain, apôtre de relèvement social des Noirs. Afrique Lit. Artistique, Oct. 1971. [10483]

VIGNES, JACQUES. Le Bastion Blanc d'Afrique Australe. La Nef, Oct. 1971-Jan. 1972. [10484]

VIGNES, JACQUES. Les mouvements contestataires en Afrique francophone. La Nef, Oct. 1971-Jan. 1971. [10485]

VINAY, BERNARD. Coopération intra-Africaine et intégration. L'Expérience de l'U.D.E.A.C. Penant, July-Sept. 1971. [10486]

WEEKS, JOHN F. Wage policy and the colonial legacy—a comparative study [Nigeria, Kenya, Uganda]. J. Mod. Afric. Stud., Oct. 1971. [10487]

WEISBORD, ROBERT G. Black America and the Italian-Ethiopian crisis: an episode in pan-negroism. Historian, Feb. 1972. [10488]

ALGERIA

AUGARDE, JACQUES. L'immigration algérienne avant l'indépendance. Hommes et Migrations, no. 116, 1970. [10489]

AUGARDE, JACQUES. L'immigration algérienne depuis l'indépendance. Hommes et Migrations, no. 116, 1970. [10490]

AUGARDE, JACQUES. Quelques données statistiques sur la migration algérienne. Hommes et Migrations, no. 116, 1970. [10491]

BOURDIEU, PIERRE. Formes et degrés de la Conscience du Chômage dans l'Algérie Coloniale. Manpower and Unemployment Res. Newslett. (Montreal), Apr. 1971. [10492]

CHAMPION, JACQUES. Culture algérienne et culture française. Espriit, Mar. 1972. [10493]

MERAD, ALI. L'émir Khaled (1875-1936) vu par Ibn Bâdis (1889-1940). R. Occident musulman Méditerran., no. 9, 1971. [10494]

SAINT-MARIE, A. La province d'Alger vers 1870: l'établissement du douar-commune et la fixation de la nature de la propriété en territoire militaire dans le cadre du sénatus-Consulte du 22 Avril 1863. R. Occident musulman Méditerran., no. 9, 1971. [10495]

SARI, DJILALI. L'équilibre économique traditionnel des populations de l'Ouarsenis central. R. Occident musulman Méditerran., no. 9, 1971. [10496]

SUTTON, H. Fanon: the revolutionary as prophet. Saturday R., July 17, 1971. [10497]

ANGOLA

BENDER, GERALD J. The limits of counter-insurgency: an African case. Comp. Pol., Apr. 1972. [10498]

BURUNDI

NAHAYO, SIMON. Contribution à la bibliographie des ouvrages relatifs au Burundi (Afrique Centrale). Genève-Afrique, no. 1, 1971. [10499]

CAMEROON

ABBO, M., and MOHAMMADOU, ELDRIDGE. Un nouveau manuscrit arabe sur l'histoire du Mandara. R. camerounaise Hist., no. 1, 1971. [10500]

DOUMBE-MOULOUNGO, MAURICE. Le Ngondo, assemblée traditionnelle du peuple Duala. R. camerounaise Hist., no. 1, 1971. [10501]

GAUTHIER, J.-G. Notes sur l'histoire des Bant Tsalo (Fali du Tinguélin). Bull. Assoc. Fr. Rech. Et. Camerounaises, no. 4, 1969. [10502]

GELZER, DAVID GEORGE. Missions and colonization: education in Cameroun in the days of the Germans. Bull. Soc. Afric. Church Hist., nos. 1-2, 1969-70. [10503]

GHOMSI, E. La naissance des chefferies Bamiléké et les relations entre les divers groupements avant la conquête allemande. R. camerounaise Hist., no. 1, 1971. [10504]

HURAUULT, JEAN. Éleveurs et cultivateurs des hauts plateaux du Cameroun: la population du lamidat de Banyo. Population, Sept.-Oct. 1969; Sept.-Oct. 1970. [10505]

LANTUM, D. N. The advent of Christianity in Nso. R. camerounaise Hist., no. 1, 1971. [10506]

MÖLLER, KARIN. Die funktionale Gliederung einer Hafenstadt mit überregionaler Bedeutung: Douala. Afrika Spectrum, no. 2, 1971. [10507]

MVENG, ENGELBERT. Archéologie camerounaise: Mvolyé. R. camerounaise Hist., no. 1, 1971. [10508]

MVENG AYI, M. La formation et l'équipement des armées Beti au début du XX<sup>e</sup> siècle. R. camerounaise Hist., no. 1, 1971. [10509]

SANTERRE, RENAUD. Aspects conflictuels de deux systèmes d'enseignement au Nord-Cameroun. Can. J. Afric. Stud., no. 2, 1971. [10510]

CENTRAL AFRICAN REPUBLIC

PRILOU, CHRISTIAN. Le rôle des relations familiales entre Bangui et les villages centrafricains. Can. J. Afric. Stud., no. 1, 1971. [10511]

CHAD

ARDITI, CLAUDE. Les populations de la moyenne vallée du Chari (Tchad): vie économique et sociale. Cah. Et. afric., no. 4, 1971. [10512]

BOUQUET, CHRISTIAN. Les incertitudes de la démographie africaine: l'exemple du Tchad. Cah. Outre-Mer, Oct.-Dec. 1971. [10513]

COPPENS, YVES. Les cultures protohistoriques et historiques du Djourab. Et. doc. tchadiens, Mém., no. 1, 1969. [10514]

COURTIN, JEAN. Le néolithique du Borkou, Nord-Tchad. Et. doc. tchadiens, Mém., no. 1, 1969. [10515]

LEBEUF, JEAN-PAUL. Le Dépôt national d'archives du Tchad. R. fr. Hist. Outre-Mer, no. 208, 1970. [10516]

TREINEN, F., and LAQUAY, R. Découvertes préhistoriques dans la région de Fort-Lamy (Tchad). Notes Afric., Apr. 1971. [10517]

ZELTNER, J.-C. Le May Idris Alaoma et les Kotoko. R. camerounaise Hist., no. 1, 1971. [10518]

CONGO-BRAZZAVILLE

VANSINA, JAN. Comment reconstituer la société batéké de la fin du XIX<sup>e</sup> siècle. R. fr. Hist. Outre-Mer, no. 208, 1970. [10519]

DAHOMÉY

DECALO, SAMUEL. Dahomey 1968-1971: return to origins. Genève-Afrique, no. 1, 1971. [10520]

PATTERSON, K. DAVID. A note on slave exports from the Costa Da Mina, 1760-1770. Bull. I.F.A.N., Apr. 1971. [10521]

VON DER ROPP, KLAUS FIHR. Elfenbeinküste und Conseil de l'Entente. Aussenpolitik, Feb. 1972. [10522]

EGYPT

HOTTINGER, ARNOLD. Die Föderation der Arabischen Republiken vorläufig eine Kriegs-alliance. Europa-Arch., Feb. 1972. [10523]

L'Égypte de Nasser (1952-1970). Probl. pol. soc., Apr. 1971. [10524]

MESSERI, M. The Egyptian labour movement in the political arena, 1919-1936, I: first steps [in Hebrew]. New East, no. 2, 1971. [10525]

REJWAN, NISSIM. Egypt's education problems. Midstream, Mar. 1972. [10526]

RONDOT, PIERRE. La politique nassérienne avant et après le sommet de Rabat. R. Défense nat., Feb. 1970. [10527]

RONDOT, PIERRE. Le R.A.U. après Gamal Abdel Nasser. R. Défense nat., Mar. 1971. [10528]

RONDOT, PIERRE. L'ère post-nassérienne dans l'Orient arabe. R. Défense nat., Nov. 1970. [10529]

RONDOT, PIERRE. L'union des républiques arabes. Etudes, Jan. 1972. [10530]

SILBERMAN, G. Changes in the definition of national identity in the Nasserist ideology, 1952-1970. New East, no. 2, 1971. [10531]

SILVERA, A. Edme-François Jomard and Egyptian reforms in 1839. Mid. E. Stud., no. 3, 1971. [10532]

STEPHANESCO, GERARD. L'Église Copte Orthodoxe en Égypte. R. Deux Mondes, Jan. 1972. [10533]

ETHIOPIA

AYELE, NEGUSSAY. The 1952-1959 Ethio-Italian Boundary Negotiations: an Exercise in Diplomatic Futility [Somalia boundary]. J. Ethiopian Stud., no. 2, 1971. [10534]

BERHANESELAASSIE, TSEHAJ. The Life and Career of Däjazmach Balcha Aba Näfso. J. Ethiopian Stud., no. 2, 1971. [10535]

BIZZONI, ACHILLE. The battle of Adowa: a contemporary Italian view. Ethiopia Observer, no. 2, 1971. [10536]

CAULK, R. A. Yohannes IV, the Mahdists, and the Colonial Partition of north-east Africa. Transafric. J. Hist., July 1971. [10537]

CAULK, RICHARD A. The Occupation of Hara: January 1877. J. Ethiopian Stud., no. 2, 1971. [10538]

CHOJNACKI, S. Notes on Art in Ethiopia in the 16th Century: an Enquiry into the Unknown. J. Ethiopian Stud., no. 2, 1971. [10539]

CONTEE, CLARENCE G. Ethiopia and the Pan-African Movement before 1945. Black World, Feb. 1972. [10540]

COTTERELL, F. P. An indigenous Church in Southern Ethiopia. Bull. Soc. Afric. Church Hist., nos. 1-2, 1969-70. [10541]

CRUMMEY, DONALD. The Violence of Tēwodros. J. Ethiopian Stud., no. 2, 1971. [10542]

DAVIS, WILLIAM B. Perspectiva histórica do desenvolvimento cultural na Etiópia. Afro-Asia, June-Dec. 1969. [10543]

KIERAN, J. A. A route to the Galla. Hadith, no. 3, 1971. [10544]

PANKHURST, RICHARD. An historical examination of traditional Ethiopian medicine and surgery. Cong. Int. Sci. Anthropol. Ethnol., 1970. [10545]

PANKHURST, RICHARD. History and Principles of Ethiopian Chess. J. Ethiopian Stud., no. 2, 1971. [10546]

PANKHURST, RICHARD. Italy and Ethiopia—III. Africa Q., Apr.-June 1971. [10547]

PANKHURST, RICHARD. The illustration of Menelik's letter of 1867 to Queen Victoria. Ethiopia Observer, no. 2, 1971. [10548]

RIGGI, L. L'etiopistica italiana nel cinquantenario 1920-70. Boll. Assoc. Afric. Italiani, Jan.-June 1971. [10549]

GABON

BLANKOFF, BORIS. L'état des recherches préhistoriques au Gabon. Et. doc. tchadiens, Mém., no. 1, 1969. [10550]

GAMBIA

UKPABI, S. C. Gambia: independence and after. Africa Q., Jan.-Mar. 1971. [10551]

UKPABI, S. C. The Gambia Expedition of 1901. Bull. I.F.A.N. Apr. 1971. [10552]

GHANA

AFESI, J. DOVI. J. E. Casely Hayford: from Gold Coast cultural nationalism to Pan-African political nationalism. Mazungumzo, Winter 1971. [10553]

ACBODEKA, F. Nationalism in the Gold Coast, 1900-45. Tarikh, no. 4, 1971. [10554]

ASANTE, S. K. B. The Aborigines Society, Kwame Nkrumah and the 1945 Pan-African Congress. Res. R., no. 2, 1971. [10555]

BOATEN, KWASI. Commerce in Northern Asante 1702-1945. Bull. Ghana Geog. Assoc., 1969. [10556]

DICKSON, K. B. Some materials for the historical geography of Ghana from earliest times to 1850 A.D. Bull. Ghana Geog. Assoc., 1968. [10557]

- FLOYD, BARRY. The language of Africa: a geographical review. Bull. Ghana Geog. Assoc., 1969. [10558]
- ILIASU, A. A. The origins of the Mossi-Dagomba states. Res. R., no. 2, 1971. [10559]
- MCCASKIE, T. C. Innovational eclecticism: the Asante empire and Europe in the nineteenth century. Comp. Stud. Soc. Hist., Jan. 1972. [10560]
- MCLEOD, M. D. Goldweights of Asante. Afric. Arts, Autumn 1971. [10561]
- POSNANSKY, MERRICK. Ghana and the origins of West African trade. Africa Q., July-Sept. 1971. [10562]
- RENSBURG, A. P. J. VAN. Nkrumah en Nasser—'n vergelyking van metodes en prestasies in die stryd teen kolonialisme. Historia, Dec. 1971. [10563]
- TIMMLER, MARKUS. Der Staatsreich der Militär in Ghana. Aussenpolitik, Mar. 1972. [10564]

GUINEA

- CORNEVIN, ROBERT. Alfa Yaya Diallo fut-il un héros national de Guinée ou l'innocente victime d'un règlement de compte entre gouverneurs? R. fr. Hist. Outre-Mer, no. 208, 1970. [10565]
- RIVIÈRE, CLAUDE. Les bénéficiaires du commerce dans la Guinée précoloniale et coloniale. Bull. I.F.A.N., Apr. 1971. [10566]
- TOURÉ, SÉKOU. The African elite in the anti-colonial struggle. Black Scholar, Jan. 1972. [10567]

KENYA

- ATIENO-ODHIAMBO, E. S. Some reflections on African initiatives in early colonial Kenya. E. Afric. J., June 1971. [10568]
- HELLEINER, G. K. Agricultural Development Plans in Kenya and Tanzania, 1969-1974. Rural Africana, Winter 1971. [10569]
- HODGES, G. W. T. African responses to European rule in Kenya (to 1914). Hadith, no. 3, 1971. [10570]
- KING, KENNETH J. The politics of agricultural education for Africans in Kenya. Hadith, no. 3, 1971. [10571]
- LEAKEY, L. S. B. History of the National Museum of Kenya. Kenya Past and Present, Dec. 1971. [10572]
- MACGOYE, MARJORIE OLUDHE. Report on the Okeyo-Ogara manuscript project. Mila (Nairobi), no. 1, 1970. [10573]
- MCINTOSH, B. G. Kenya 1923: the political crisis and the missionary dilemma. U. E. Africa Soc. Sci. Council Conf., Hist. Pap., 1968-69. [10574]
- MAXON, ROBERT M. The early years of the Gusii coffee industry in Kenya, 1933-1946. J. Dev. Areas, Apr. 1972. [10575]
- MURIUKI, GODFREY. Chronology of the Kikuyu. Hadith, no. 3, 1971. [10576]
- OKOTH-OGENDO, H. W. O. The politics of constitutional change in Kenya since independence, 1963-69. Afric. Aff., Jan. 1972. [10577]
- OLSON, J. B. Secondary schools and elites in Kenya: a comparative study of students in 1961 and 1968. Comp. Ed. R., Feb. 1972. [10578]

- OSOGO, J. N. B. Educational developments in Kenya 1911-1924 (with particular reference to African education). Hadith, no. 3, 1971. [10579]
- SCHNEIDER, FRED D. Kikuyu and ecclesia anglicana. Hist. Mag. Prot. Epis. Church, Mar. 1972. [10580]
- SINGH, MAKHAN. The East African Association 1921-1925. Hadith, no. 3, 1971. [10581]
- TEMU, A. J. The role of the Bombay Africans (liberated Africans) on the Mombasa coast 1874-1904. Hadith, no. 3, 1971. [10582]
- TIGNOR, ROBERT L. Colonial chiefs in chiefless societies. J. Mod. Afric. Stud., Oct. 1971. [10583]
- TURTON, E. R. The impact of Mohammed Abdille Hassan in the East Africa Protectorate. U. E. Africa Soc. Sci. Council Conf., Hist. Pap., 1968-69. [10584]
- WIPPER, AUDREY. Elijah Masinde: a folk hero. Hadith, no. 3, 1971. [10585]
- WIPPER, AUDREY. Equal rights for women in Kenya. J. Mod. Afric. Stud., Oct. 1971. [10586]

LESOTHO

- WALLMAN, SANDRA. Conditions of Non-Development: the case of Lesotho. J. Dev. Stud., Jan. 1972. [10587]

LIBERIA

- LOWENKOPF, MARTIN. Political modernization in Liberia: a conservative model. W. Pol. Q., Mar. 1972. [10588]

LIBYA

- FUNK, HARALD. Libyen nach der Revolution von 1969 (Anhang: Konstitutionelle Proklamation). Orient Forsch., no. 1, 1971. [10589]
- ROMAIN, RAINERO. Il nuovo regime in Libia. Comunità, Feb. 1970. [10590]

MADAGASCAR

- AUGUSTINS, G. Esquisse d'une Histoire de l'Imamo. Bull. Madagascar, June 1971. [10591]
- DECRAENE, PHILIPPE. Madagascar en avril 1971. C. R. trimestriels séances Acad. Sci. Outre-mer, no. 2, 1971. [10592]
- DEZ, J. Malgache et Formosan. Bull. Madagascar, Feb. 1971. [10593]
- FAUBLÉE, JACQUES. Les manuscrits arabico-malgaches du Sud-Est, leur importance historique. R. fr. Hist. Outre-Mer, no. 208, 1970. [10594]
- FERNANDEZ, M.-F. Quelques aspects des coutumes et des monuments funéraires sihanaka. Bull. Madagascar, Feb. 1971. [10595]
- GONTARD, MAURICE. La politique religieuse de Gallieni à Madagascar pendant les premières années de l'occupation française (1896-1900). R. fr. Hist. Outre-Mer, no. 2, 1971. [10596]
- HARDYMAN, J. T. Current Research in Area Studies: a history of the Church in Madagascar. Bull. Soc. Afric. Church Hist., nos. 1-2, 1969-70. [10597]

KOERNER, FRANCIS. Décolonisation et économie de plantations dans les régions cotières du nord et de l'ouest malgache. R. Ec. Madagascar, Jan.-Dec. 1970. [10598]

KOERNER, FRANCIS. L'échec de l'éthiopianisme dans les églises protestantes malgaches. R. fr. Hist. Outre-Mer, no. 2, 1971. [10599]

MANTAUX, CHR. G. Un cousin de Radama 1<sup>er</sup> dans l'Anosy en 1825: le Prince Ramananolona—sa campagne, son gouvernement, sa fin. Bull. Madagascar, Jan. 1971. [10600]

MILLE, A. Ambohimaroroka, village nécropole dans l'Itasy. Bull. Madagascar, Jan. 1971. [10601]

MKELE, KOMREDI. Madagascar (Bukini): habari za kale. Kiswahili (Dar es Salaam), Sept. 1970. [10602]

VALETTE, JEAN. Étude sur la mort du Prince Ratemfy (1828), analyse et critique des sources—essai d'interprétation. Bull. Madagascar, Feb. 1971. [10603]

VALETTE, JEAN. Note sur la qualité et l'emploi du coton du Fort-Dauphin en 1824-1826. Bull. Madagascar, Jan. 1971. [10604]

VERIN, PIERRE. Transformations historiques de la société merina. Afrique Lit. Artistique, Feb. 1972. [10605]

MALAWI

LANGWORTHY, H. W. The political and religious elite in the history of Undi's Malawi Empire. U. E. Africa Soc. Sci. Council Conf., Hist. Pap., 1968-69. [10606]

MALI

ANSPRENGER, FRANZ. Mali—eine Militärregierung sucht Abstinenz von du Politiik. Afrika Spectrum, no. 1, 1971. [10607]

FILIPOWIAK, WLADYSŁAW. Sredniowieczna stolica Mali w swietle zrodel pisanych, ustnych i archeologicznych, na tle zaplecza gospodarczopolitycznego [La capitale moyenageuse du Mali à la lumière des sources écrites, orales et des trouvailles archéologiques, de l'arrière-pays économiques et des conditions politiques]. Materiały Zachodnio-Pomorskie, no. 13, 1969. [10608]

TYMOWSKI, MICHAŁ. Majatki wiadcow Songhaj (Sudan Zachodni) a wczesnofeudalna wlosc europejska (Estates of the rulers of Songhay and the early-feudal European lordships). Przegląd hist., no. 4, 1969. [10609]

MOROCCO

AGOURRAM, ABDELJALIL, and BELAL, ABDEL-AZIZ. Bilan de l'économie marocaine depuis l'indépendance. Bull. Ec. Sociol. Maroc, Jan.-Mar. 1970. [10610]

BROWN, KENNETH. Histoire culturelle de Salé-Profil d'un 'alim du 19<sup>e</sup> siècle. Bull. Ec. Sociol. Maroc, Jan.-Mar. 1970. [10611]

COOKE, JAMES J. Lyautey and Étienne: the soldier and the politician in the penetration of Morocco, 1904-1906. Mil. Aff., Feb. 1972. [10612]

CURIE, RAYMOND. Quelques aspects de la mise en valeur agricole dans la province de Casablanca depuis l'indépendance (1956-1966). Bull. Ec. Sociol. Maroc, Jan.-Mar. 1970. [10613]

MARRAKECHI, A. Political crisis in Morocco. World Marxist R., Feb. 1972. [10614]

PERSELL, STUART M. L'affaire de "La Tourmaline" (1897-1898). Les réactions françaises à la présence anglaise au Maroc. R. Hist. dipl., Apr.-June 1971. [10615]

TINGITANUS. Au Maroc, l'histoire ne sonnera pas deux fois. Esprit, Feb. 1972. [10616]

TURBET-DELOF, GUY. Une "description" des ports marocains imprimée en fraude à Paris en 1682. R. Occident musulman Méditerr., no. 9, 1971. [10617]

ZAFRANI, HAIM. La vie intellectuelle juive au Maroc de la fin du 15<sup>ème</sup> au début du 20<sup>ème</sup> siècle. R. Occident musulman Méditerr., no. 9, 1971. [10618]

NIGERIA

AFIGBO, A. E. The Aro of Southeastern Nigeria: a socio-historical analysis of legends of their origins—Part I. Afric. Notes, no. 2, 1971. [10619]

AGIRI, BABATUNDE. The Ogboni among the Oyo-Yoruba (a new interpretation of the nature and role of an important Nigerian Secret Society in the nineteenth century). Lagos Notes & Rec., Jan. 1972. [10620]

ANJORIN, A. O. Tin mining in Northern Nigeria during the nineteenth and early part of the twentieth centuries. Odu, Apr. 1971. [10621]

AUSMAN, JOHN L. The disturbances in Abeokuta in 1918. Can. J. Afric. Stud., no. 1, 1971. [10622]

AYANDELE, E. A. Chieftaincy in Ijebuland 1892-1948: the interaction of religion and politics. U. E. Africa Soc. Sci. Council Conf., Hist. Pap., 1968-69. [10623]

BABAYEMI, S. O. Upper Ogun: an historical sketch. Afric. Notes, no. 2, 1971. [10624]

BAMISAIYE, A. Ethnic politics as an instrument of unequal socio-economic development in Nigeria's first republic. Afric. Notes, no. 2, 1971. [10625]

DOI, A. R. I. The Yoruba Mahdi. J. Relig. Africa, no. 2, 1971. [10626]

GROSSMAN, DAVID. The roots of the practice of migratory tenant farming: the case of Nkeland in Eastern Nigeria. J. Dev. Areas, Jan. 1972. [10627]

IGBAFE, PHILIP. The Benin Trials of 1897 and 1899. Odu, Apr. 1971. [10628]

LAVERS, JOHN E. Islam in the Bornu Caliphate. Odu, Apr. 1971. [10629]

MABOGUNJE, AKIN L. Changes in socio-economic and cultural patterns caused by the industrialization of Nigeria—a regional differentiation. Afrika Spectrum, no. 3, 1971. [10630]

MCKENZIE, P. R. Samuel Crowther's attitudes to other faiths—the early period. Bull. Soc. Afric. Church Hist., nos. 1-2, 1969-70. [10631]

NWABARA, SAMUEL N. Christian Encounter with Indigenous Religion at Onitsha (1857-1885). Cah. Et. afric., no. 4, 1971. [10632]

ODUFALU, J. O. Indigenous enterprise in Nigerian manufacturing. J. Mod. Afric. Stud., Dec. 1971. [10633]

OJEDOKUN, OLASUPO. The Anglo-Nigerian Entente and its demise, 1960-1962. J. Commonwealth Pol. Stud., Nov. 1971. [10634]

ONYEMEACHI TASIE, GODWIN. Denominational co-operation and rivalry in South-East Nigeria, 1880-1918. Bull. Soc. Afric. Church Hist., nos. 1-2, 1969-70. [10635]

OSUNTOKUM, AKINJIDE. Disaffection and revolts in Nigeria during the First World War, 1914-1918. Can. J. Afric. Stud., no. 2, 1971. [10636]

PHILLIPS, ADEDOTUN. Nigeria's federal financial experience. J. Mod. Afric. Stud., Oct. 1971. [10637]

SMITH, ROBERT. A note on two shirts of chain mail in the palace at Owo in Southwestern Nigeria. Odu, Apr. 1971. [10638]

UDO, E. A. The divided Eastern Nigeria: the case of minorities and minority chiefs in politics. U. E. Africa Soc. Sci. Council Conf., Hist. Pap., 1968-69. [10639]

PORTUGUESE GUINEA

MENDES MOREIRA, J. Da ergologia dos Fulas da Guiné Portuguesa. Bol. cult. Guiné port., Jan., Apr. 1971. [10640]

MORAIS FERREIRA MENDES, JOSÉ LUIS. Problemas e perspectivas do desenvolvimento rural da Guiné. Bol. cult. Guiné port., Apr. 1971. [10641]

RHODESIA

ALPORT, RT. HON. LORD. The Conservative Party and Rhodesia. Round Table, July 1971. [10642]

COGGIN, C. Rhodesian Bibliography: recent contributions. Rhodesian Librarian, July 1971. [10643]

GOOD, ROBERT C. Rhodesia: towards a new policy context. Africa Today, Oct. 1971. [10644]

PALMER, R. H. War and land in Rhodesia. Transafric. J. Hist., July 1971. [10645]

PEADEN, W. R. Zionist Churches in Southern Mashonaland 1924-1933. Bull. Soc. Afric. Church Hist., nos. 1-2, 1969-70. [10646]

RANGER, T. O. The historiography of Southern Rhodesia. Transafric. J. Hist., July 1971. [10647]

RULLI, G. La Rhodesia Verso l'Indipendenza "Legale." Civiltà Cattolica, Jan. 1972. [10648]

WALL, PATRICK. Rhodesia—a fair settlement? Contemp. R., Jan. 1972. [10649]

RWANDA

FELTZ, G. Considérations sur l'histoire contemporaine du Rwanda. R. fr. Et. pol. afric., Sept. 1971. [10650]

VIDAL, CLAUDINE. Enquête sur le Rwanda traditionnel: conscience historique et traditions orales. Cah. Et. afric., no. 4, 1971. [10651]

SENEGAL

ADAMOLEKUN, 'LADIPO. Bureaucrats and the Senegalese political process. J. Mod. Afric. Stud., Dec. 1971. [10652]

BARRY, BOUBACAR. La guerre des Marabouts dans la région du Fleuve Sénégal de 1673 à 1677. Bull. I.F.A.N., July 1971. [10653]

CERTAINES, JACQUES-DONALD DE. La colonisation du Pays adut (1860-1900). Notes Afric., Apr. 1971. [10654]

CRUISE O'BRIEN, RITA. Colonization to cooperation? French technical assistance in Senegal. J. Dev. Stud., Oct. 1971. [10655]

KNIGHT-BAYLAC, M.-H. La vie à Gorée de 1677 à 1789. R. fr. Hist. Outre-Mer, no. 209, 1970. [10656]

LEWICKI, TADEUSZ. Un État soudanais médiéval inconnu: le royaume de Zāfūn(u). Cah. Et. afric., no. 4, 1971. [10657]

LINTINGRE, PIERRE. Notes pour servir à l'histoire religieuse du Sénégal: le père Guyot 1779. Afrique Lit. Artistique, Oct. 1971. [10658]

PINTO-BULL, P., and BOULÈGE, J. La mission de Baltasar Borreira à Joal et Portudal (1609). Notes Afric., Apr. 1971. [10659]

ROCHE, CHRISTIAN. Les trois Fodé Kaba. Notes Afric., Oct. 1970. [10660]

SAMB, AMAR. L'Islam et l'histoire du Sénégal. Bull. I.F.A.N., July 1971. [10661]

SENGHOR, LEOPOLD I. De la Négritude. Éducateur: R. Pédagogique (Kinshasa), Apr. 1971. [10662]

SYLLA, ASSANE. Les persécutions de Seydina Mouhamadou Limamou Lâye par les autorités coloniales. Bull. I.F.A.N., July 1971. [10663]

TEXEIRA DA MOTA, A. D. João Bemoim e a Expedição Portuguesa ao Senegal em 1489. Bol. cult. Guiné port., Jan. 1971. [10664]

THILMANS, G. Le Sénégal dans l'oeuvre d'Olfreid Dapper. Bull. I.F.A.N., July 1971. [10665]

WANE, YAYA. Organisation 'Traditionnelle' et modernisation sociale au Sénégal. Cah. int. Sociol., Jan.-June 1971. [10666]

SOUTH AFRICA

ABROUS, A. OAU and arms sales to South Africa. Africa Q., Apr.-June 1971. [10667]

APPELGRYN, M. S. Die ontstaan van die Eerste Gesondheidskomitee van Johannesburg. Kleio, Oct. 1971. [10668]

ASWEGEN, H. J. VAN. Die Vestedeliking van die Nie-blank in die Oranje-Vrystaat, 1854-1902. S. Afric. Hist. J., Nov. 1970. [10669]

BOESEKEN, A. J. Die Verhouding tussen Blank en Nie-blank in Suid-Afrika aan die hand van die Vroegste Bronne. S. Afric. Hist. J., Nov. 1970. [10670]

BRADLOW, FRANK R. Further travels in search of Thomas Baines. Q. Bull. S. Afric. Lib., Mar. 1971. [10671]

BRADLOW, FRANK R. The Bailey bequest of sporting pictures in the S. A. National Gallery, Cape Town. Q. Bull. S. Afric. Lib., Mar. 1971. [10672]

CAGELING, M. A. Die hoed van Paul Kruger. Lantern (S. Africa), Dec. 1971. [10673]

CASADA, JAMES A. Sir George Grey and the Speke-Grant Nile Expedition. Q. Bull. S. Afric. Lib., June 1971. [10674]

C. C. Schonegevel's view of Cape Town and its environs. Q. Bull. S. Afric. Lib., Sept. 1971. [10675]

CHRISTOPHER, A. J. A note on the opening of Zululand to European settlement. Historia, Sept. 1971. [10676]

- CHRISTOPHER, A. J. Land speculation in colonial Natal, 1843-1910. Historia, June 1971. [10677]
- COOK, C. W. The writing of South African Church History: our appraisal of the English speaking traditions. S. Afric. Hist. J., Nov. 1970. [10678]
- DAVENPORT, T. R. H. The triumph of Colonel Stallard: the transformation of the Natives (Urban Areas) Act between 1923 and 1937. S. Afric. Hist. J. Nov. 1970. [10679]
- DENOON, DONALD. The decolonisation of South African history. U. E. Africa Soc. Sci. Council Conf., Hist. Pap., 1968-69. [10680]
- Diary of a voyage to the Cape in 1842. Q. Bull. S. Afric. Lib., Sept. 1971. [10681]
- Dr. Bleek writes about Sir George Grey and the Grey Collection. Q. Bull. S. Afric. Lib., Dec. 1971. [10682]
- EVANS, DAVID S. Sir John Herschel to Captain Smyth. Q. Bull. S. Afric. Lib., Sept. 1970. [10683]
- FFOLIOTT, P. A. Lawrence Twentymen, Cape silversmith. Q. Bull. S. Afric. Lib., June 1971. [10684]
- FORBES, VERNON S. The mission to the Bushmen at Hephzibah. Q. Bull. S. Afric. Lib., Dec. 1970. [10685]
- FRONTINI, ROSA MARIA. Tribal treasures of the Dundo Museum. Optima, Sept. 1971. [10686]
- GOGUEL, ANNE-MARIE. L'apartheid jusqu'à quand? Esprit, Jan. 1972. [10687]
- The governor as benefactor: a further look at Sir George Grey's contributions to the Speke-Grant Nile Expedition. Q. Bull. S. Afric. Lib., Dec. 1971. [10688]
- HAASBROEK, J. P. The struggle for political supremacy in Natal 1856-1896. Historia, Dec. 1971. [10689]
- HOPKINS, H. C. Die Bailey-stukke in die Suid-Afrikaanse Biblioteek. Q. Bull. S. Afric. Lib., Sept. 1970. [10690]
- JAARVELD, F. A. VAN. Geskiedenisonderrig en selfvervreemding in 'n veranderde lewensituasie. Historia, Dec. 1971. [10691]
- JAARVELD, F. A. VAN. Oor die opleiding van Geskiedkundiges. Historia, June, Sept. 1971. [10692]
- KAIN, D. N. E. The great physical explosion at our universities. Lantern (S. Africa), Dec. 1971. [10693]
- KILFOIL, K. M. The rise of the Zulu Empire. Kleio, Oct. 1971. [10694]
- KNOX, BRUCE A. The rise of colonial federation as an object of British policy, 1850-1870. J. Brit. Stud., Nov. 1971. [10695]
- KORNEGAY, FRANCIS A., JR. Southern Africa and the emerging constituency for Africa in the United States—a selected survey of periodical literature. Current Bibliogr. Afric. Aff., Jan. 1972. [10696]
- LAMB, DOREEN. President M. W. Pretorius. Lantern (S. Africa), Sept. 1971. [10697]
- LANGHAM-CARTER, R. R. The Bartolini busts in the South African Library. Q. Bull. S. Afric. Lib., Dec. 1970. [10698]
- LE BARROW, WILLIAM. Jagersfontein. Optima, June 1971. [10699]
- A letter from Lady Catherine Bell, 1829. Q. Bull. S. Afric. Lib., Sept. 1971. [10700]
- A letter from Natal, July 1861. Q. Bull. S. Afric. Lib., Dec. 1971. [10701]
- LEVERTON, B. J. T. The Moreland Papers. Lantern (S. Africa), Dec. 1971. [10702]
- LIPTON, MERLE. Independent Bantustans? Int. Aff., Jan. 1972. [10703]
- MADAVO, CALLISTO E. Government policy and economic dualism in South Africa. Can. J. Afric. Stud., no. 1, 1971. [10704]
- MARAIS, A. H. Aansluitingsprobleme tussen Skool en Universiteit met spesiale verwysing na Geskiedenis. Historia, Dec. 1971. [10705]
- MARAIS, A. H. 'n Hofsaak oor £8000 voor Nasionale Doelende. Historia, Sept. 1971. [10706]
- MERWE, D. W. VAN DER. Eerwaarde Freidrich Reuter in die Geskiedenis van die Oos-Transvaalse Laeveld. Kleio, June 1971. [10707]
- MERWE, D. W. VAN DER. Geskiedenis in Oos-Duitsland. Historia, June 1971. [10708]
- MOLTENO, ROBERT. South Africa's Forward Policy in Africa. Round Table, July 1971. [10709]
- MULLER, C. F. J. Pretoriuskloof. Historia, June 1971. [10710]
- NÖTHLING, F. J. Enkele Grepe uit die Geskiedenis van Brakpan, 1886-1912. Kleio, June 1971. [10711]
- PIKE, NICHOLAS. An American visitor to the Cape in 1866. Q. Bull. S. Afric. Lib., June 1971. [10712]
- PLOEGER, J. W. F. Mondriaan. Lantern (S. Africa), Sept. 1971. [10713]
- RAVEN-HART, R. (ed.). The 1784 mutiny in the ship Java: addendum. Q. Bull. S. Afric. Lib., Dec. 1970. [10714]
- SCHOOR, M. C. E. VAN. Louis Botha op die Natalse Front. Kleio, Oct. 1971. [10715]
- SPIES, F. J. DU T. Die Kompanjiestydperk aan die Kaap (1652-1795) in die Suid-Afrikaanse Geskiedskrywing van die 19e Eeu. Historia, June 1971. [10716]
- SPIILHAUS, M. WHITING. The story of Ryk Tulbagh. Historia, Sept., Dec. 1971. [10717]
- SPIILHAUS, M. WHITING. The Story of Simon van der Stel. Historia, June 1971. [10718]
- STALS, E. L. P. Die aanraking tussen blankes en Ovambo's in suidwes-Afrika, 1850-1915 (summary of Ph.D. thesis). Humanitas (Pretoria), no. 1, 1970. [10719]
- STEENKAMP, J. A. Die ou forte van Bloemfontein. Historia, Dec. 1971. [10720]
- STEYTLER, JOHN GEORGE. Remembrances from 1832-1900 (I-IV). Q. Bull. S. Afric. Lib., Sept., Dec. 1970; Mar., June 1971. [10721]
- TRÜMPELMAN, M. H. Geskiedeniswetenskap in tydgenootlike perspektief. Historia, Sept. 1971. [10722]
- VILLIERS, J. DE. Die Hottentotregimente aan die Kaap 1781-1806 (summary of M. A. thesis). Humanitas (Pretoria), no. 1, 1970. [10723]
- WEINSTOCK, DONALD J. The two Boer Wars and the Jameson Raid: a checklist of novels in Dutch and Afrikaans. Res. Afric. Lit., no. 1, 1971. [10724]

WELSH, DAVID. The cultural dimension of apartheid. Afric. Aff., Jan. 1972. [10725]

ZIETSMAN, P. H. The death of the past of die Lewende Verlede? Kleio, Oct. 1971. [10726]

SOUTH-WEST AFRICA

BEIDER WIEDEN, H. Wollschafszucht in Deutsch-Südwestafrika. Vierteljahrschr. Sozial-u. Wirtschaftsgesch., no. 1, 1971. [10727]

SUDAN

FORAND, P. Early Muslim relations with Nubia. Islam, no. 1, 1970. [10728]

SABER, M. La nouvelle réforme de l'éducation en République Démocratique du Soudan. Afrique contemp., July-Aug. 1971. [10729]

TANZANIA

BAITWABABO, S. R. Mpororo traditions of Chieftainship. U. E. Africa Soc. Sci. Council Conf., Hist. Pap., 1968-69. [10730]

BETBEDER, PAUL. The kingdom of Buzinza. J. World Hist., no. 4, 1971. [10731]

CLIFFE, LIONEL. The policy of Ujamaa Vijijini and the class struggle in Tanzania. Rural Africana, Winter 1971. [10732]

CUNNINGHAM, GRIFFITHS. The Ujamaa Village Movement in Tanzania. Rural Africana, Winter 1971. [10733]

INGLE, CLYDE R. The ten-house cell system in Tanzania: a consideration of an emerging village institution. J. Dev. Areas, Jan. 1972. [10734]

ISHUMI, ABEL G. M. The kingdom of Kiziba. J. World Hist., no. 4, 1971. [10735]

KAIJAGE, FREDERICK J. Kyamutwara. J. World Hist., no. 3, 1971. [10736]

KATOKE, ISRAEL K. Karagwe: a pre-colonial state. J. World Hist., no. 3, 1971. [10737]

KATOKE, ISRAEL K. The history of the pre-colonial states of North-Western Tanzania: introduction. J. World Hist., no. 3, 1971. [10738]

KATOKE, ISRAEL K. The kingdom of Ihangiro. J. World Hist., no. 4, 1971. [10739]

KIERAN, J. A. Christian villages in Northeastern Tanzania. U. E. Africa Soc. Sci. Council Conf., Hist. Pap., 1968-69. [10740]

MATVEYEV, V. V. Records of early Arab authors on Bantu peoples (Muluk al-zinj, i.e. 'Kings of zinj', according to Arabic sources of the 9th-10th centuries). Cong. Int. Sci. Anthropol. Ethnol., 1970. [10741]

MISSUGUINE, V. M. Les règles de succession au trône des rois du Paté (d'après une chronique swahile des XII<sup>e</sup>-XIX<sup>e</sup> siècles) [in Russian]. Cong. Int. Sci. Anthropol. Ethnol., 1970. [10742]

MOHIDDIN, AHMED. Relevance and Development in Tanzania. Cah. Et. afric., no. 4, 1971. [10743]

OCHSNER, KNUD. Church, school and the clash of cultures: examples from North-West Tanzania. J. Relig. Africa, no. 2, 1971. [10744]

RANGER, T. Towards a historical study of African religious systems in Tanzania: a survey of recent research. U. E. Africa Soc. Sci. Council Conf., Hist. Pap., 1968-69. [10745]

UNOMAH, A. The crisis of Fundikira Empire. U. E. Africa Soc. Sci. Council Conf., Hist. Pap., 1968-69. [10746]

ZIMON, H. Geschichte des Herrscher-Klans Abasiranga auf der Insel Bukerebe (Tanzania) bis 1895. Anthropos, no. 3-4, no. 5-6, 1971. [10747]

TUNISIA

SRAIEB, NOUREDDINE. Note sur les dirigeants politiques et syndicalistes tunisiens de 1905 à 1934. R. Occident musulman Méditerr., no. 9, 1971. [10748]

TARIFA, C. L'enseignement du premier et du second degré en Tunisie. Population, Mar. 1971. [10749]

TLILI, BACHIR. Eléments pour une approche de la pensée socio-économique de Khérédine (1810-1889). R. Occident musulman Méditerr., no. 9, 1971. [10750]

TRIULZI, ALESSANDRO. Italian-speaking communities in early nineteenth century Tunis. R. Occident musulman Méditerr., no. 9, 1971. [10751]

UGANDA

BOWLES, BRIAN D. The influence of events in Kenya, Nyasaland and Ghana on the Baganda 1950-1958. U. E. Africa Soc. Sci. Council Conf., Hist. Pap., 1968-69. [10752]

GERSHENBERG, IRVING. Banking in Uganda since independence. Ec. Dev. Cult. Change, Apr. 1972. [10753]

GIRLING, F. K. The socio-political system of the Acholi of Uganda in the years 1865-1899. Cong. Int. Sci. Anthropol. Ethnol., 1970. [10754]

KIWANUKA, M. S. M. The evolution of chieftainship in Buganda ca. 1400-1900. U. E. Africa Soc. Sci. Council Conf., Hist. Pap., 1968-69. [10755]

ROWE, JOHN A. Lugard at Kampala. U. E. Africa Soc. Sci. Council Conf., Hist. Pap., 1968-69. [10756]

STEINHART, E. I. Primary collaborations in Ankole: 1891-1901; an interpretation of the response to the colonial impact. U. E. Africa Soc. Sci. Council Conf., Hist. Pap., 1968-69. [10757]

SUTTON, ANNE. A preliminary study of Lugbara response to alien intrusion in West Nile District, 1880-1920. U. E. Africa Soc. Sci. Council Conf., Hist. Pap., 1968-69. [10758]

SWEETING, RACHAEL. The growth of the Church in Buwalasi—II. Bull. Soc. Afric. Church Hist., nos. 1-2, 1969-70. [10759]

TWADDLE, M. Bakungu Chiefs of Buganda under British colonial rule 1900-1930. U. E. Africa Soc. Sci. Council Conf., Hist. Pap., 1968-69. [10760]

TWADDLE, M. The religion of Malaki revisited. U. E. Africa Soc. Sci. Council Conf., Hist. Pap., 1968-69. [10761]

TWADDLE, M. 'Tribalism' in Eastern Uganda. U. E. Africa Soc. Sci. Council Conf., Hist. Pap., 1968-69. [10762]

TWADDLE, MICHAEL. The Muslim Revolution in Buganda [1880s]. Afric. Aff., Jan. 1972. [10763]

USOIGWE, G. N. Kabalega's Abarusura: the military factor in Bunyoro. U. E. Africa Soc. Sci. Council Conf., Hist. Pap., 1968-69. [10764]

ZAIRE

BERNARD, GUY. La contestation et les églises nationales au Congo. Can. J. Afric. Stud., no. 2, 1971. [10765]

BERNARD, GUY. Perspectives pour une sociologie dialectique de la décolonisation du Congo. Can. J. Afric. Stud., no. 1, 1971. [10766]

CASTRO SEGOVIA, J. L'image du Congo dans le dictionnaire de Trévoux. Afrique Lit. Artistique, Oct. 1971. [10767]

Dans le cadre de l'authenticité, nouvelles appellations en République du Zaïre. Et. afric. C.R.I.S.P., Mar. 1972. [10768]

DEMUNTER, P. Les relations entre le mouvement étudiant et le régime politique Congolais, le Colloque de Goma. Et. afric. C.R.I.S.P., Apr. 1971. [10769]

HEATHCOTE, NINA. Ireland and the United Nations: Operation in the Congo. Int. Relations, May 1971. [10770]

JANZEN, JOHN M. Kongo religious renewal: iconoclastic and iconorthostic. Can. J. Afric. Stud., no. 2, 1971. [10771]

L'investissement privé—étranger et national—en République du Zaïre. Et. afric. C.R.I.S.P., Apr. 1972. [10772]

ORLOVA, A. S. Institution de l'esclavage dans l'état du Congo au Moyen Age (XVI<sup>e</sup>-XVII<sup>e</sup> siècles). Cong. Int. Sci. Anthropol. Ethnol., 1970. [10773]

SALOMON, PIERRE. Les Zande sous l'administration belge (1908-1960). C. R. trimestriels séances Acad. Sci. Outre-Mer, 1971. [10774]

SOBTCHENKO, A. I. Phénomènes ethniques au Congo (Kinshasa) au XX<sup>e</sup> siècle. Cong. Int. Sci. Anthropol. Ethnol., 1970. [10775]

VANSINA, JAN. Les mouvements religieux Kuba (Kasai) à l'époque coloniale. Et. Hist. Afric., no. 2, 1971. [10776]

VERHAEGEN, BENOÎT. Dix ans de nationalisme au Congo. Le cas de l'Abako. Bull. Acad. Roy. Sci. Outre-mer, no. 2, 1971. [10777]

VERHAEGEN, BENOÎT. Les premiers manifestes politiques à Léopoldville (1950-1956). Cah. CEDAF, no. 10, 1971. [10778]

YANKAH, KOJO. The Congo—Not Yet Free. Mazungumzo, Spring 1971. [10779]

ZAMBIA

FABER, MICHAEL. The Mshiri-Thomson meeting of November 1890—a note. Afric. Soc. Res., Dec. 1971. [10780]

MAIMBO, FABIAN J. M., and FRY, JAMES. An investigation into the change in the terms of trade between the rural and urban sectors in Zambia. Afric. Soc. Res., Dec. 1971. [10781]

MALIK, JALIL R., et al. Zambian local government and national development. Afric. Adm. Stud., June 1971. [10782]

ROBERTS, A. D. Firearms in north-eastern Zambia before 1900. Transafric. J. Hist., July 1971. [10783]

EAST ASIA

Hilary Conroy, University of Pennsylvania

ALLEN, LOUIS. Notes on Japanese Historiography: World War II. Mil. Aff., Dec. 1971. [10784]

AOKI, TOMITARO. On the Ordu of Inner Mongolia during the Ming period [in Japanese]. Tōyōshi Kenkyū, June 1971. [10785]

BARNETT, SUZANNE WILSON. Protestant Expansion and Chinese Views of the West. Mod. Asian Stud., Apr. 1972. [10786]

BEER, LAWRENCE W. Freedom of Information and the Evidentiary Use of Film in Japan: Law and Sociopolitics in an East Asian Democracy. Am. Pol. Sci. R., Dec. 1971. [10787]

BRAZELL, KAREN. Towazugatari, Autobiography of a Kamakura Court Lady. Harvard J. Asian Stud., 31, 1971. [10788]

Buddhism in Mainland China, 1949-1967 (Sourcebook). Chinese Sociol. Anthropol., Fall 1971. [10789]

CHANG, TE-CH'ANG. The Economic Role of the Imperial Household in the Ch'ing Dynasty. J. Asian Stud., Nov. 1971. [10790]

CHEN, KUAN-I. Economic Fluctuations in a Planned Underdeveloped Economy—A Case Study of Mainland China, 1952-65. Asian Survey, Apr. 1972. [10791]

CHONG, KEY RAY. The Abortive American-Chinese Project for Chinese Revolution, 1908-1911. Pac. Hist. R., Feb. 1972. [10792]

CH'UAN, HAN-SHENG. The Fluctuating Silver-Copper Ratio in the Total Government Revenue and Expenditures from the Sung to the Ming Dynasties [in Chinese]. Chung-yang yen-chiu yüan Li-shih yü-yen yen-chiu so chi-k'an, June 1971. [10793]

CHUANG, CHI-FA. The Ch'ien-lung Emperor's Conquest of the Gurkhas [in Chinese]. Ta-lu, Aug. 1971. [10794]

COOX, ALVIN D. Changkufeng and the Japanese "threat" to Vladivostok, 1938. J. Asian Hist., no. 2, 1971. [10795]

DATOR, JAMES ALLEN. The Soka Gakkai-Komeito and Its Role in the Sociopolitical Development of Postwar Japan. J. Dev. Areas, Apr. 1972. [10796]

DRAKE, FRED W. A Mid-nineteenth-century Discovery of the Non-Chinese World. Mod. Asian Stud., Apr. 1972. [10797]

EASTMAN, LLOYD E. Fascism in Kuomintang China: The Blue Shirts. China Q., Jan.-Mar. 1972. [10798]

The Formation of Imperialism in East Asia [9 arts.; in Japanese]. Rekishigaku Kenkyū, Apr. 1972. [10799]

- FUKUI, HARUHIRO. Economic Planning in Postwar Japan: A Case Study in Policy Making. Asian Survey, Apr. 1972. [10800]
- GRIFFIN, EDWARD G. The Universal Suffrage Issue in Japanese Politics, 1918-25. J. Asian Stud., Nov. 1971. [10801]
- HU, SUNG-P'ING. Hu-shih: A Brief Biographical Chronicle [in Chinese]. Ta-lu, July 1971. [10802]
- INOUE, KIYOSHI. History of the so-called Senkaku Islands and the Question of the Title to them [in Japanese]. Rekishigaku Kenkyū, Feb. 1972. [10803]
- ITO, TESABURO. Student life in the late Edo period [in Japanese]. Nihon Rekishi, Jan. 1972. [10804]
- KANEDA, AKIHIRO. The structure of villages and settlements in the Nara and Heian period [in Japanese]. Shirin, May 1971. [10805]
- KATAKURA, MINORU. Vietnam under Chinese control [in Japanese]. Rekishigaku Kenkyū, Jan. 1972. [10806]
- KAWAUCHI, YOSHIHIRO. Sable Trade in north-east Asia during the Ming period [in Japanese]. Tōyōshi Kenkyū, June 1971. [10807]
- KELLEY, ALLEN C., and WILLIAMSON, JEFFREY G. Writing History Backwards: Meiji Japan Revisited. J. Ec. Hist., Dec. 1971. [10808]
- KENNEDY, THOMAS L. Industrial Metamorphosis in the Self-strengthening Movement: Li Hung-chang and the Kiangnan Shipbuilding Program. J. Inst. Chinese Stud. Chinese U. Hong Kong, Sept. 1971. [10809]
- KESSLER, LAWRENCE D. Chinese Scholars and the Early Manchu State. Harvard J. Asian Stud., 31, 1971. [10810]
- KILLIGREW, JOHN W. A Critique of the Military Thought of Chiang Pai-li. Mil. Aff., Feb. 1972. [10811]
- KLEIN, IRA. British Imperialism in Decline: Tibet 1914-21. Historian, Nov. 1971. [10812]
- KLEIN, THOMAS M. The Ryukyus on the Eve of Reversion. Pac. Aff., Spring 1972. [10813]
- KO, SEUNG K. South Korean-Japanese Relations Since the 1965 Normalization Pacts. Mod. Asian Stud., Jan. 1972. [10814]
- KOBAYASHI, SEIJI. Legal basis of the control of towns by feudal lords [in Japanese]. Nihon Rekishi, Jan. 1972. [10815]
- KOO, C. F. Economic and Trade Development of Taiwan. Pac. Community (Japan), Jan. 1972. [10816]
- LARY, DIANA. Communism and Ethnic Revolt: Some Notes on the Chuang Peasant Movement in Kwangsi, 1921-1931. China Q., Jan.-Mar. 1972. [10817]
- LEE, NGOK. The Strengthening of Party Identity in the CCP Reform Campaign 1942-1944. Chung Chi J., May 1970. [10818]
- LEONARD, JANE KATE. Chinese Overlordship and Western Penetration in Maritime Asia: A Late Ch'ing Reappraisal of Chinese Maritime Relations. Mod. Asian Stud., Apr. 1972. [10819]
- LI, SHOU-K'UNG. Li Hung-chang's Early Contributions to the Hunan Army [in Chinese]. Yu-shih, June 1970. [10820]
- LIU, I-CH'ENG. The Successes and Failures of the Wuchang Revolt, Oct. 1911 [in Chinese]. Yu-shih, June 1970. [10821]
- LIU, JAMES T. C. Yueh Fei (1103-41) and China's Heritage of Loyalty. J. Asian Stud., Nov. 1971. [10822]
- LO, CHIH-YUAN. Social Background of Sino-Western Contacts: The Late Ch'ing Period [in Chinese]. Hsin shih-tai, Feb.-Mar. 1971. [10823]
- LOEWE, MICHAEL. K'ung Heng and the Reform of Religious Practices (31 B.C.). Asia Major, pt. 1, 1971. [10824]
- MCCUTCHEON, JAMES M. "Tremblingly Obey": British and Other Western Responses to China and the Chinese Kotow. Historian, Aug. 1971. [10825]
- MAO TSE-TUNG (tr. Stuart R. Schram). The Great Union of the Popular Masses. China Q., Jan.-Mar. 1972. [10826]
- MATSUI, MASATO. The Russo-Japanese Agreement of 1907: Its Causes and the Progress of Negotiations. Mod. Asian Stud., Jan. 1972. [10827]
- MITCHELL, PETER M. The Limits of Reformism: Wei Yuan's Reaction to Western Intrusion. Mod. Asian Stud., Apr. 1972. [10828]
- MORI, MASAO. New Source materials on the Sogdian people in the Tu-chüeh Empire [in Japanese]. Shigaku Zasshi, Feb. 1972. [10829]
- MORIKAWA, TETSUO. "Tumen" in the middle Mongol period [in Japanese]. Shigaku Zasshi, Jan. 1972. [10830]
- MYERS, RAMON H., and ULIE, THOMAS R. Foreign Influence and Agricultural Development in Northeast China: A Case Study of the Liaotung Peninsula, 1906-42. J. Asian Stud., Nov. 1971. [10831]
- NAGATSUMI, YOKO. Hirado-han and the Dutch Trade [in Japanese]. Nihon Rekishi, Mar. 1972. [10832]
- NAOKI, KŌJIRO. The Relations between Imperial Names and Place Names in Ancient Japan [in Japanese]. Nihon Rekishi, Jan. 1972. [10833]
- NISHIMURA, GENSHO. Land surveys in the late Ming period [in Japanese]. Shirin, Sept. 1971. [10834]
- OH, KISONG. An Analysis of Recent North Korean Propaganda Material. J. Korean Aff., Jan. 1972. [10835]
- OTANI, TOSHIO. A study of Wei Yuan's political and economic ideas [in Japanese]. Shirin, Nov. 1972. [10836]
- PARK, SOO GIL. The Legal Aspects of the Repatriation of Prisoners of War Issue: A Case Study on the P.O.W. Problem in the Korean Truce Talks. J. Korean Aff., Jan. 1972. [10837]
- PAULSEN, GEORGE E. The Abrogation of the Gresham-Yang Treaty. Pac. Hist. R., no. 4, 1971. [10838]
- P'ENG TSE-CHOU. Liang Ch'i-ch'ao and the Ta-t'ung School in Tokyo [in Chinese]. Ta-lu, Aug. 1971. [10839]
- PEZEU-MASSABUAU, JACQUES. La notion d'emprise sur le milieu géographique: l'exemple japonais. An.: Ec., Soc., Civil., Jan.-Feb. 1972. [10840]
- QUO, F. Q. Democratic Theories and Japanese Modernization. Mod. Asian Stud., Jan. 1972. [10841]
- RAO, C. R. M. Limits of Normalization of Relations with China. Pac. Community (Japan), Jan. 1972. [10842]

- ROY, ANDREW T. The Background of the Confucian Dilemma in the Period 1927-47. Chung Chi J., May 1970. [10843]
- RYU, TÔSHOKU. Beliefs and rites of ancient Korea [in Japanese]. Shûkyô Kenkyû, Oct. 1971. [10844]
- SCHRAM, STUART. Mao Tse-Tung and Liu Shao-Ch'i, 1939-1969. Asian Survey, Apr. 1972. [10845]
- SCHRAM, STUART R. From the "Great Union of the Popular Masses" to the "Great Alliance." China Q., Jan.-Mar. 1972. [10846]
- SEKIGUCHI HIROKO. Institution of legal wife and mistress in the state under the Ritsuryô system [in Japanese]. Shigaku Zasshi, Jan. 1972. [10847]
- STARR, JOHN BRYAN. Revolution in Retrospect: The Paris Commune through Chinese Eyes. China Q., Jan.-Mar. 1972. [10848]
- SUGHASHI, TAKAO. Court-Shogunate Relations in the early Kamakura period [in Japanese]. Shirin, Nov. 1971. [10849]
- TAGA, MUNETAKA. The Rise of the Saionji Family [in Japanese]. Nihon Rekishi, Jan. 1972. [10850]
- TATE, E. MOWBRAY. Admiral Bell and the New Asiatic Squadron 1865-1868. Am. Neptune, Apr. 1972. [10851]
- THOMSON, SANDRA CARUTHERS. Filibustering to Formosa: General Charles LeGendre and the Japanese. Pac. Hist. R., no. 4, 1971. [10852]
- TOYAMA, SHIGEKI. The Position of Okinawa in Modern Japanese History [in Japanese]. Rekishigaku Kenkyû, Mar. 1972. [10853]
- WAGNER, RUDOLF G. The Original Structure of the Correspondence between Shih Hsiu-yuan and Kumarajiva. Harvard J. Asian Stud., 31, 1971. [10854]
- WANG, ERH-MING. China's Use of Foreign Military Assistance in the Lower Yangtze Valley, 1860-1864. Chung-yang yen-chiu-yüan Chin-tai shih yen-chiu-so chi-k'an, June 1971. [10855]
- WANG, ERH-MING. Introspection and Self-consciousness Among the Intellectuals of the Late Ch'ing Period [in Chinese]. Chung-yang yen-chiu-yüan Chin-tai shih yen-chiu-so chi-k'an, June 1970. [10856]
- WONG, GEORGE H. C. Wang Jen-tsuang: A Late Nineteenth Century Obstructor to the Introduction of Western Thought. Chung Chi J., May 1970. [10857]
- YAHUDA, MICHAEL. Kremlinology and the Chinese Strategic Debate, 1965-1966. China Q., Jan.-Mar. 1972. [10858]
- YAMANOUCHI, HISAAKI. Mishima Yukio and his Suicide. Mod. Asian Stud., Jan. 1972. [10859]
- YOSHIE, AKIO. Village Festivals and Public Finance under the Ancient Statute System of Japan [in Japanese]. Rekishigaku Kenkyû, Jan. 1972. [10860]
- YOUNG, NANCY F. Changes in Value and Strategies Among Chinese in Hawaii. Sociol. Soc. Res., Jan. 1972. [10861]

SOUTHEAST ASIA

D. R. SarDesai, University of California, Los Angeles

GENERAL

- BUTWELL, RICHARD. The Nixon Doctrine in Southeast Asia. Current Hist., Dec. 1971. [10862]
- CRUIKSHANK, ROBERT B. Abangan, Santri and Prijaji: A Critique. J. S.E. Asian Stud., Mar. 1972. [10863]
- DENOON, DAVID B. H. Indonesia: Transition to Stability? Current Hist., Dec. 1971. [10864]
- DOMMEN, ARTHUR J. Laos: The Contest of Wills. Current Hist., Dec. 1971. [10865]
- DUIKER, WILLIAM J. Phan Boi Chau: Asian Revolutionary in a Changing World. J. Asian Stud., Nov. 1971. [10866]
- FOURNIAU, CH. La genèse et l'évolution de l'affaire du Tonkin. R. hist. (Paris), Oct.-Dec. 1971. [10867]
- GOH, CHENG TEIK. Why Indonesia's Attempt at Democracy in the Mid-1950s Failed. Mod. Asian Stud., pt. 2, 1972. [10868]
- HOFFMAN, J. E. Early Politics in the Malacca Jurisdiction of the United East India Company: The Malay Peninsula and Netherlands East Indies Attachment. J. S.E. Asian Stud., Mar. 1972. [10869]
- JACOBY, ERICH H. Effects of the 'Green Revolution' in South and South East Asia. Mod. Asian Stud., pt. 1, 1972. [10870]
- KATTENBURG, PAUL M. Viet Nam and U.S. Diplomacy, 1940-1970. Orbis, no. 3, 1971. [10871]
- MCDUGALL, DEREK. The Evolution of Australia's Defence Policy in Relation to Malaysia-Singapore, 1964-1971. J. S.E. Asian Stud., Mar. 1972. [10872]
- NGOC, MAI. Saigon's National Museum. Aspac Q. Cult. Soc. Aff., no. 2, 1971. [10873]
- NGUYEN, DANG THUC. Confucius and the Philosophy of Education in Old Vietnam. Aspac Q. Cult. Soc. Aff., no. 1, 1971. [10874]
- NIXON, RICHARD M. President Nixon on U.S. Policy toward Communist China [doc.]. Current Hist., Dec. 1971. [10875]
- OROSA, ROSALINDA L. The Guerrilla Theatre in the Philippines. Aspac Q. Cult. Soc. Aff., no. 2, 1971. [10876]
- OTT, MARVIN C. Foreign Policy Formulation in Malaysia. Asian Survey, Mar. 1972. [10877]
- PEDERSON, PAUL. Possibilities for Violence in Malaysia. Current Hist., Dec. 1971. [10878]
- RAHULA, W. L'idéal du Bodhisattva dans le Theravâda et le Mahâyâna. J. Asiatique, no. 1-2, 1971. [10879]
- RUDNER, MARTIN. The Draft Development Plan of the Federation of Malaya, 1950-1955. J. S.E. Asian Stud., Mar. 1972. [10880]
- STILLSON, RICHARD T. The Financing of Malayan Rubber, 1905-1923. Ec. Hist. R., no. 4, 1971. [10881]
- THOMAS, ALLAN. The Javanese Gamelan of Raffles. J. Roy. Central Asian Soc., Feb. 1972. [10882]
- YOUNG, KENNETH. Thailand and Multipolarity. Current Hist., Dec. 1971. [10883]

SOUTH ASIA

Stephen Hay, University of California, Santa Barbara

GENERAL

- ABBOTT, F. The historical background of Islamic India and Pakistan. Contributions Asian Stud., II, 1971. [10884]
- ALAYEV, L. B. Indian Rural Community as a type. Narody Azii Afriki, no. 5, 1971. [10885]
- EHATTACHARYA, BHOLANATH. A Note on Vaisakhi Dharma Gajan of Bengal. Folklore, July 1971. [10886]
- EHOWMIK, SUHRID KUMAR. A Note on the Patuas of Bengal. Folklore, July 1971. [10887]
- EURKI, SHAHID JAVED. Social and Economic Determinants of Political Violence: A Case Study of the Punjab. Mid. E. J., no. 4, 1971. [10888]
- LE BRUYNE, JENNY L. Some critical remarks on modern Indian historians. Acta Orient. Neerlandica, May 1970. [10889]
- EUTT, NALINAKSHA. The Sammitiyas and their Fuggalavada. Maha Bodhi, May-June 1971. [10890]
- EMBREE, AINSIE T. Oriental Despotism: A Note on the History of an Idea. Societas, no. 4, 1971. [10891]
- JOSHI, L. M. Prolegomena on Religious Geography. Maha Bodhi, May-June 1971. [10892]
- LEHMAN, ARNO. A South Indian contribution to Christian Art History. J. Tamil Stud., Apr. 1969. [10893]
- MAHAPATRA, PIYUSH KANTI. The Nath Cult of Bengal. Folklore, Oct. 1971. [10894]
- MARETINA, S. A. Relations between Natural Conditions of Labour, Economy and Social Order of Mountain Peoples of North-East India. Narody Azii Afriki, no. 6, 1971. [10895]
- MUDIRAJ, G. N. R. Minstrel Beggars of Telangana: Custodians of Oral Literary Tradition. Folklore, Oct. 1971. [10896]
- NARAYANA, P. L. The Traditional Political Organisation of Funyam Saoras. Folklore, Aug. 1971. [10897]
- PATTERSON, MAUREEN L. P. Bibliographical Controls for South Asian Studies. Lib. Q., Apr. 1971. [10898]
- SHATTACHARYA, S. C. Emperor Asoka—A Re-Study. J. Asiatic Soc. Pakistan, Dec. 1970. [10899]
- DAY, DAVID HOWARD. Links between Ur and the Indus. J. Tamil Stud., Oct. 1970. [10900]
- DOBBINS, K. W. Eras of Gandharas. J. Orient. Soc. Australia, Dec. 1970. [10901]
- DOBBINS, K. WALTON. The Commerce of Kalisene and Gandhara after the fall of the Indo-Greek rule. J. Ec. Soc. Hist. Orient, Dec. 1971. [10902]
- HEESTERMAN, J. C. Kautalya and the ancient Indian state. Acta Orient. Neerlandica, May 1970. [10903]
- KARWAL, G. D. Ancient Indian Economic Theories. Indian J. Ec., July 1969. [10904]
- LEEUEW, J. E. VAN LOHUIZEN-DE. The rock-reliefs at Isurumuni. Acta Orient. Neerlandica, May 1970. [10905]
- NANNITHAMBY, LOGANAYAKY. The Fine Arts and Recreation during the Cola Period. J. Tamil Stud., Oct. 1969. [10906]
- NIJENHUIS, EMMIE TE. The Influence of the Samgitasastra on the Ragamala Miniatures. Acta Orient. Neerlandica, May 1970. [10907]
- PATHAN, MUMTAZ A. Multan under the Arabs. Islamic Cult., Jan. 1969. [10908]
- PATHAN, MUMTAZ A. The Ruins of Bhambhor and its identification with Al-Daybul, the Arab Seaport of Sind. Islamic Cult., Oct. 1969. [10909]
- PILLAI, K. K. Tamil Literature as a Source Material of History. J. Tamil Stud., Apr. 1969. [10910]
- RAY, AMITA. Early Buddhist Narrative Art: An Outline Sketch of a Social Analysis. Indian Ec. Soc. Hist. R., Sept. 1971. [10911]
- SADDHATISSA, H. Why Buddhism Disappeared From India. Maha Bodhi, May-June 1971. [10912]
- SAHA, S. R. Kingship in Ancient India. Calcutta R., Oct.-Dec. 1970. [10913]
- SANKALIA, H. D. The Beginning of Civilization in South India. J. Tamil Stud., Oct. 1969. [10914]
- SHETH, SURABHI. The Puranic World View. Indo-Asian Cult., Apr. 1971. [10915]
- SRINIVASACHARI, M. S. Draksharama Bheemeswara Temple in Literature—A Critical Study. Q. R. Hist. Stud., no. 4, 1970-71. [10916]
- THAKUR, UPENDRA. Economic data from the early coins of India. J. Ec. Soc. Hist. Orient, Dec. 1971. [10917]
- VASILKOV, YA V. Mahabharata and Oral Epic Poetry. Narody Azii Afriki, no. 4, 1971. [10918]

SOUTH ASIA: c. 1000-c. 1700

- AHMAD, NAZIR. Adilshahi Diplomatic Missions to the Court of Shah Abbas. Islamic Cult., Apr. 1969. [10919]
- AHMAD, NAZIR. Shah Khalilullah Khushnawis, the Royal Calligraphist of the Adilshahi Court. Islamic Cult., Jan. 1970. [10920]
- ASHRAFYAN, K. Z. The Development of Money Relations and the Peasant Landowning in Medieval India. Narody Azii Afriki, no. 1, 1972. [10921]
- BANERJI, ADRIIS. The Lonely Tomb at Kahalgau. Mod. R., Oct. 1971. [10922]
- DESAI, Z. A. The Indo-Islamic Architecture of Bihar. Islamic Cult., Jan. 1972. [10923]
- DUTTA, JATINDRA MOHAN. Population of India in 1360 A.D. Man in India, Oct.-Dec. 1971. [10924]
- GHAURI, IFTIKHAR AHMAD. Central Structure of the Kingdom of Bijapur. Islamic Cult., Jan. 1970. [10925]

GHAURI, IFTIKHAR AHMAD. Kingship in the Sultanates of Bijapur and Golconda. Islamic Cult., Jan. 1972. [10926]

INDRAPALA, K. Some Medieval Mercantile Communities of South India and Ceylon. J. Tamil Stud., Oct. 1970. [10927]

KAZIMI, MASOOM RAZA. Humayun in Iran. Islamic Cult., Jan. 1969. [10928]

KHAN, HUSSAIN. The Genesis of Roh (The Medieval Homeland of the Afghans). J. Asiatic Soc. Pakistan, Dec. 1970. [10929]

KHAN, MOHD. ABDUL WAHEED. Excavation of a Medieval Site Near Qutb Shahi Tombs (Golconda). Islamic Cult., Oct. 1970. [10930]

MOHAN, JAG. The Fort of Pangana in Himachal Pradesh. Folklore, July 1971. [10931]

NADARAJAH, DEVAPOOPATHY. Courtship and Marriage in the Classical Period. J. Tamil Stud., Oct. 1969. [10932]

NATH, R. Glass-Mosaic Decoration and the Shish-Mahal of Agra Fort. Islamic Cult., Jan. 1971. [10933]

NATH, R. Mughal Hammam and the Institute of Ghusal Khana. Islamic Cult., Apr. 1970. [10934]

PAWAR, JAISINGRAO B. Queen Janakibai. Q. R. Hist. Stud., no. 4, 1970-71. [10935]

RIZVI, S. A. A. Sufis and Natha Yogis in Medieval Northern India. J. Orient. Soc. Australia, Dec. 1970. [10936]

SANGAR, S. P. Exports of Indian Textiles to England in the Seventeenth Century. Res. Bull. (Arts), Panjab U., Mar. 1971. [10937]

SARKAR, JAGADISH NARAYAN. Some Aspects of Military Thinking and Practice in Medieval India. Q. R. Hist. Stud., no. 1, 1971-72. [10938]

SHARMA, B. D. Shivaji's Escape from Agra. Q. R. Hist. Stud., no. 1, 1971-72. [10939]

SIDDIQI, IQTIDAR HUSSAIN. Rise and Fall of the Nuhani Afghans in Bihar. Islamic Cult., Oct. 1971. [10940]

SIDDIQI, IQTIDAR HUSSAIN. Shaikh Rizq Allah Mushtaqi (a Sufi Historian of Medieval India). Islamic Cult., Oct. 1969. [10941]

SINHA, SURENDRA NATH. Social Life of the Subah of Allahabad under the Great Mughals. Islamic Cult., Apr. 1969. [10942]

SOUTH ASIA: EIGHTEENTH CENTURY

BANERJEE, PHANINDRA NATH. Indian Law Officers in the Early British Judiciary in Bengal. Q. R. Hist. Stud., no. 4, 1970-71. [10943]

BOXER, C. R. A Question of Contraband: The Old Colonial Trade. Hist. Today, Mar. 1972. [10944]

DE, AMALENDU. A Note on the Black Hole Tragedy (Part II). Q. R. Hist. Stud., no. 4, 1970-71. [10945]

EANG, CHEONG WENG. Changing the Rules of the Game (The India-Manila Trade: 1785-1809). J. S.E. Asian Stud., Sept. 1970. [10946]

FAARBORG, VIRTE. Trellunds Trankebarkort 1733. Arkiv, no. 3, 1971. [10947]

HUSAIN, A. B. M. The Date of the Stone-Cutters Masjid at Fatehpur-Sikri. J. Asiatic Soc. Pakistan, Dec. 1970. [10948]

MALIK, ZAHIRUDDIN. The Rise of the Tugh Beg Khan—First Nawab of Surat, 1773-1746. Islamic Cult., Jan. 1972. [10949]

NIJJAR, BAKHSHISH SINGH. The North-Western Frontier under the Later Mughals (1707-1759). Q. R. Hist. Stud., no. 1, 1971-72. [10950]

SANKDHER, B. M. Mirza Abu Talib Khan: An Economic Thinker and Historian. Q. R. Hist. Stud., no. 4, 1970-71. [10951]

SANKDHER, B. M. Mirza Abu Talib Khan: His Life and Works. Islamic Cult., Oct. 1970. [10952]

SERAJUDDIN, A. M. The Zamindaries of Chittagong in the Late Eighteenth Century: A Study in Contrast. J. Asiatic Soc. Pakistan, Dec. 1970. [10953]

SHYAM, RADHEY. Mirza Hindal (A Biographical Study). Islamic Cult., Apr. 1971. [10954]

SINGH, NAND KISHORE. The Permanent Settlement in the Shahabad District (Bihar)—A Case Study. Q. R. Hist. Stud., no. 1, 1971-72. [10955]

SOUTH ASIA: NINETEENTH CENTURY

ADAMS, JOHN. A Statistical Test of the Impact of the Suez Canal on the Growth of India's Trade. Indian Ec. Soc. Hist. R., Sept. 1971. [10956]

ANWAR, MOHAMMAD RAFI. Genesis of the Establishment of the Provincial Civil Service in Indo-Pakistan. J. Hist. Pol. Sci., no. 1, 1971-72. [10957]

BAIG, SAFDAR ALL. The Mystical Poetry of Ghalib. Islamic Cult., Apr. 1969. [10958]

BENJAMIN, N. Economic History of Western India: A Survey of R. D. Choksey's Works. Artha Vijnana, June 1971. [10959]

BENJAMIN, N. Some Aspects of Agricultural Indebtedness in British India (1850-1900). Indian J. Ec., Jan. 1971. [10960]

CHATURVEDI, UMESH. The Image of British Administration of Justice as Reflected in Hindi Press in the last quarter of the 19th Century. Q. R. Hist. Stud., no. 4, 1970-71. [10961]

HARRIS, L. The Frontier Route from Peshawar to Chitral: Political and Strategic aspects of the 'Forward Policy,' 1889-1896. Contributions Asian Stud., I, 1971. [10962]

JACOB, ALARIC. Bayards of British India. Hist. Today, Jan. 1972. [10963]

KENNEDY, P. M. Imperial cable communications and strategy, 1870-1914. EHR, Oct. 1971. [10964]

MISRA, R. S. Rural Boards in U. P. in the last quarter of 19th Century. Int. R. Hist. Pol. Sci., Nov. 1970. [10965]

NAIR, P. THANKAPPAN. Sandor Csoma Korosi. Maha Bodhi, Sept. 1971. [10966]

PAKRASI, KANTI. 'Benevolent Crusade' to Suppress Infanticides in India: An Observation. Calcutta R., Oct.-Dec. 1970. [10967]

FRASAD, RAMESHWAR. Beginnings of Political Organisation in Bengal and Some Earliest Efforts to Establish a Foreign Agency in England (1825-1889). Q. R. Hist. Stud., no. 1, 1971-72. [10958]

PRASAD, SATYANARAIN. Modern Education among the Tribals of Bihar in the Second Half of the 19th Century. Man in India, Oct.-Dec. 1971. [10969]

SAINI, BAKHTAVAR SINGH. Ahmadiya Movement in the Panjab. Islamic Cult., Jan. 1969. [10970]

SAINI, KRISHAN G. A case of aborted economic growth: India, 1860-1913. J. Asian Hist., no. 2, 1971. [10971]

SANDHU, KERNAIL SINGH. Some Aspects of Indian Settlement in Singapore 1819-1969. J. S.E. Asian Hist., Sept. 1969. [10972]

SEN GUPTA, KALYAN KUMAR. The Rent Question in Bengal and Sir George Campbell (1871-74). Calcutta R., Oct.-Dec. 1970. [10973]

TIMBERG, THOMAS A. A Study of a "Great" Marwari Firm, 1860-1914. Indian Ec. Soc. Hist. R., Sept. 1971. [10974]

WASTI, S. RAZI. British Policy Towards Indian Muslims Immediately After 1857. J. Hist. Pol. Sci., no. 1, 1971-72. [10975]

SOUTH ASIA: c. 1900-c. 1947

AHIR, D. C. Eighty Years of Buddhism in India (1891-1971). Maha Bodhi, May-June 1971. [10976]

BAIG, M. SAFFDAR ALI. Doctor Iqbal's Optimism. Islamic Cult., Apr. 1970. [10977]

BASU, APARNA. Indian Primary Education, 1900-1920. Indian Ec. Soc. Hist. R., Sept. 1971. [10978]

DUTTA, AMITA. Foreign Labour Contribution to Ceylon's Income and Export Supply, 1920-38. Indian Ec. R., Apr. 1971. [10979]

ELLINWOOD, DEWITT C. The Round Table Movement and India, 1909-1920. J. Commonwealth Pol. Stud., Nov. 1971. [10980]

GOPALAKRISHNAN, S. Jawaharlal Nehru's Writings on the Indian Liberals. Q. R. Hist. Stud., no. 1, 1971-72. [10981]

MATHUR, Y. B. Minority of the Nizam of Hyderabad. Islamic Cult., Jan. 1969. [10982]

MEHRA, PARSHOTAM. A Forgotten Chapter in the History of the North East Frontier: 1914-36. J. Asian Stud., Feb. 1972. [10983]

MUKERJI, KARUNA MOY. Land Transfers in Birbhum, 1928-1955: Some Implications of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885. Indian Ec. Soc. Hist. R., Sept. 1971. [10984]

RAIKOV, A. V. The Indian National Revolutionaries and Marxism (1920's-1930's). Vopr. Ist., no. 2, 1972. [10985]

ROY, P. C. Charles Freer Andrews: A Friend of India. Indo-Asian Cult., Apr. 1971. [10986]

SARKAR, BHUPENDRA NATH. Andrews the Cosmopolitan. Indo-Asian Cult., Apr. 1971. [10987]

THAKURTA, B. K. GUHA. Consumer Behaviour of Cereals in West Bengal (1939-61) with Special Reference to Calcutta. Artha Vijnana, Sept. 1971. [10988]

SOUTH ASIA: POST-1947

AHMAD, A. Islam and Democracy in Pakistan. Contributions Asian Stud., II, 1971. [10989]

AHMAD, AZIZ. L'Islam et la démocratie dans le sous-continent indo-pakistanaï. Orient (Paris), nos. 3-4, 1969. [10990]

AHMAD, S. Islam and Pakistan Peasants. Contributions Asian Stud., II, 1971. [10991]

BARAL, L. S. Nepal's Apprenticeship in Democracy 1951-1960. India Q., July-Sept. 1971. [10992]

BLAIR, HARRY W. The Green Revolution and "Economic Man": Some Lessons for Community Development. Pac. Aff., Fall 1971. [10993]

BURKI, S. J. Ayub's Fall: A Socio-Economic Explanation. Asian Survey, Mar. 1972. [10994]

DEWANI, L. Bankipore Congress Presidency. Q. R. Hist. Stud., no. 4, 1970-71. [10995]

DOBDEL, W. M. Ayub Khan: A de Gaulle in Asia? Contributions Asian Stud., I, 1971. [10996]

FARHAT, MAHMUD. Pak-American Relations. J. Hist. Pol. Sci., no. 1, 1971-72. [10997]

GAEFFKE, P. Ravindranatha Thakur and the Hindi literature. Acta Orient. Neerlandica, May 1970. [10998]

GALANTER, MARC. The Aborted Restoration of 'Indigenous' Law in India. Comp. Stud. Soc. Hist., no. 1, 1972. [10999]

GUPTE, R. S. A Survey of Indo-U.S. Relations Till 1964. Int. R. Hist. Pol. Sci., Aug. 1969. [11000]

HARRISS, BARBARA. Innovation Adoption in Indian Agriculture—the High Yielding Varieties Programme. Mod. Asian Stud., pt. 1, 1972. [11001]

HUSAIN, AHMED. Political Elitism in Pakistan. J. Hist. Pol. Sci., no. 1, 1971-72. [11002]

JACOBY, ERICH H. Effects of the 'Green Revolution' in South and South-East Asia. Mod. Asian Stud., pt. 1, 1972. [11003]

JAIN, RAJENDRA KUMAR. Planning Machinery of Pakistan: A Review (1947-1965). Int. R. Hist. Pol. Sci., Apr. 1970. [11004]

KHARE, R. S., and POOLEY, BEVERLEY J. Indigenous Culture and Lawyer's Law in India [art. and comment]. Comp. Stud. Soc. Hist., no. 1, 1972. [11005]

KLOCHKOVSKY, L. L. U. S. Economic Expansion in South and South-East Asia. Narody Azii Afriki, no. 6, 1971. [11006]

KROEF, J. M. VAN DER. India's Maoists: Organizational Patterns and Tactics. Contributions Asian Stud., I, 1971. [11007]

MCDONOUGH, S. The Social Import of Parwez's Religious Thought. Contributions Asian Stud., II, 1971. [11008]

MALIK, H. The Spirit of Capitalism and Pakistani Islam. Contributions Asian Stud., II, 1971. [11009]

MOGENSEN, KAREN, and MARTINUSSEN, JOHN E. Splittelse af det Pakistanske faelleskab. Øk. og pol., no. 1, 1971. [11010]

MORRISON, CHARLES. Kinship in Professional Relations: A Study of North Indian District Lawyers. Comp. Stud. Soc. Hist., no. 1, 1972. [11011]

QURESHI, S. M. M. Religion and Party Politics in Pakistan. Contributions Asian Stud., II, 1971. [11012]

RAM, SURESH. Twenty Years of Sarvodaya. Mod. R., Sept. 1971. [11013]

RAY, HEMEN. Gandhiji Through Russian Eyes. United Asia, July-Aug. 1971. [11014]

RIZVI, MIRZA MOHAMMAD. Formative Phase of Pakistan Armed Forces. J. Hist. Pol. Sci., no. 1, 1971-72. [11015]

SAINI, MAHANDER KUMAR. A Study of No-Confidence Motions in the Indian Parliament (1925-70). Indian J. Pol. Sci., July-Sept. 1971. [11016]

SUBRAHMANYAM, K. 1962: The Causes and Lessons. Int. Stud., Oct. 1969. [11017]

ZIRING, L. Politics and Language in Pakistan: Prolegomena 1947-1952. Contributions Asian Stud., I, 1971. [11018]

UNITED STATES

Wood Gray, George Washington University

BIBLIOGRAPHY, METHODOLOGY, AND SOURCES

ANKLI, ROBERT E. Problems in Aggregate Agricultural History. Agric. Hist., Jan. 1972. [11019]

BRODIE, FAWN M. Jefferson Biographers and the Psychology of Canonization [r. art.]. J. Interdisc. Hist., Summer 1971. [11020]

CAWELTI, JOHN G. Recent Trends in the Study of Popular Culture. Am. Stud., Winter 1971. [11021]

CLARK, ANDREW HILL, and PARKS, ROGER N. Suggestions for the Geographical Study of Agricultural Change in the United States, 1790-1840 [art. and comment by]. Agric. Hist., Jan. 1972. [11022]

CUTLER, WILLIAM W., III. Oral History: Its Nature and Uses for Educational History. Hist. Ed. Q., Summer 1971. [11023]

DAVIS, ROBERT C. Social Research in America before the Civil War. J. Hist. Behavioral Sci., Jan. 1972. [11024]

EVANS, HOWARD V. Current Trends in American and European Historiography. Mich. Academician, Fall 1971. [11025]

FLEMING, RONALD LEE. After the Report, What?: The Uses of Historical Archaeology, A Planner's View. Hist. Arch., 1971. [11026]

FOGEL, ROBERT WILLIAM. Current Directions in Economic History. J. Ec. Hist., Mar. 1972. [11027]

FOLSOM, BURTON W., II. The Collective Biography as a Research Tool. Mid-America, Apr. 1972. [11028]

GATES, PAUL W. Problems of Agricultural History, 1790-1840. Agric. Hist., Jan. 1972. [11029]

HAGAN, WILLIAM T. On Writing the History of the American Indian [r. art.]. J. Interdisc. Hist., Summer 1971. [11030]

HIDY, RALPH W. The Road We are Traveling. J. Ec. Hist., Mar. 1972. [11031]

KELSEY, DARWIN P., and SHORT, JAMES R. Outdoor Museums and Historical Agriculture [art. and comment]. Agric. Hist., Jan. 1972. [11032]

KLEIN, MILTON M. The American Revolution in the Twentieth Century. Historian, Feb. 1972. [11033]

LONG, CHARLES H. Perspectives for a Study of Afro-American Religion in United States. Hist. Relig., Aug. 1971. [11034]

MCCAIN, WILLIAM D. Some Reminiscences of the United States Archivist in Italy, 1944-1945: Director William D. McCain on Military Leave from Mississippi Department of Archives and History. J. Miss. Hist., Feb. 1972. [11035]

MCCORISON, MARCUS A. Sources and Literature for Western American History. Donald McKay Frost—A Collector of Western Americana. W. Hist. Q., no. 1, 1972. [11036]

MCNALL, NEIL A. Comments on Where We Have Been: Bidwell and Falconer, and Gray. Agric. Hist., Jan. 1972. [11037]

MOORE, JOHN HEBRON. A Review of Lewis C. Gray's History of Agriculture in the Southern United States to 1860. Agric. Hist., Jan. 1972. [11038]

MORGENSTERN, OSKAR. La valeur du programme spatial des Etats-Unis: étude économique. R. Trav. Acad. Sci. morales pol., no. 1, 1969. [11039]

NEUBECK, DEBORAH K. MHS Microfilms: The Papers of John Lind's Mission to Mexico [1913-14]. Minn. Hist., Winter 1971. [11040]

PAPENFUSE, EDWARD. Finding Aids and the Historian: The Need for National Priorities and a Standard Approach. AHA Newsllett., no. 3, 1972. [11041]

RASMUSSEN, WAYNE D. History of Agriculture in the Northern United States, 1620-1860, Revisited. Agric. Hist., Jan. 1972. [11042]

SCHEIPS, PAUL J. On the Study of War and Peace: Some Remarks in Memory of Quincy Wright, 1890-1970. Md. Hist., Fall 1971. [11043]

SCHEIPS, PAUL J. Quincy Wright, 1890-1970. Mil. Aff., Apr. 1971. [11044]

SCHLEBECKER, JOHN T. Curatorial Agriculture. Agric. Hist., Jan. 1972. [11045]

SCHMANDT, RAYMOND H. A Check-List of Eighteenth and Nineteenth Century Pamphlets in the Library of The American Catholic Historical Society: Part V: Conclusion and Index. Rec. Am. Cath. Hist. Soc. Philadelphia, Dec. 1971. [11046]

SCHUYLER, ROBERT L. History of American Archaeology: Examination of Procedure. Am. Antiq., Oct. 1971. [11047]

SEFTON, JAMES E. On "Scholarly Reprints." AHA Newsllett., no. 3, 1972. [11048]

SELLERS, JOHN R. Lafayette Papers at the Library of Congress. Q. J. Lib. Cong., Apr. 1972. [11049]

SHAPIRO, GILBERT. Cumulative Collective Bibliography: A Proposal for Computer Use in Historical Research. Hist. Methods Newslett., Dec. 1970. [11050]

STODDARD, ROGER ELIOT. Notes on American Play Publishing, 1765-1865. Proc. Am. Antiq. Soc., pt. 1, 1971. [11051]

TUDOR, DEAN. A Discography of the Real Blues. Lib. J., Feb. 15, 1972. [11052]

TUTOROW, NORMAN E., and ABEL, ARTHUR R. Western and Territorial Research Opportunities in Trans-Mississippi Federal Records Centers. Pac. Hist. R., Nov. 1971. [11053]

VANESSENDELFT, DENNIS. Quantitative Analysis for Present and Future Historians [r. art.]. Hist. Methods Newslett., Mar. 1972. [11054]

WATERS, EDWARD N. Notable Acquisitions of the Music Division. Q. J. Lib. Cong., Jan. 1972. [11055]

WAX, DAROLD D. Whither the Comparative History of Slavery? Va. Mag. Hist. Biog., Jan. 1972. [11056]

WEBB, JOSEPH M. Rebirth of Facsimile: Its Nature and Consequences. Journalism Q., Autumn 1971. [11057]

WISER, VIVIAN. Comments on Research and Writing in Agricultural History, 1790-1840. Agric. Hist., Jan. 1972. [11058]

WORTIS, AVI. The Burnside Mystery: The R. H. [Robert Hubber Thorne] Burnside [1870-1952] Collection and the New York Public Library. Bull. N.Y. Public Lib., Oct. 1971. [11059]

UNITED STATES: GENERAL

AAGE, HANS. Utopiske samfund i USA i årene 1750-1900. Øk. og pol., no. 1, 1971. [11060]

ABBOTT, COLLAMER M. Copper Mining in the Eastern United States during the Nineteenth Century. R. int. Hist. Banque, no. 4, 1971. [11061]

BACHRACH, BRADFORD. Four Bachrachs [photographers, MSS at Syracuse U.]. Courier (Syracuse), Jan. 1972. [11062]

BLUMIN, STUART M. In Pursuit of the American City [r. art.]. J. Interdisc. Hist., Summer 1971. [11063]

BRICKMAN, WILLIAM W. Russia and the United States, 1776-1917: Cultural-Educational Relations between Two Revolutions. Int. Ed. Cult. Exchange, Summer 1971. [11064]

BROCK, WILLIAM. Image of England and American Nationalism. J. Am. Stud., Dec. 1971. [11065]

BROWN, RICHARD D. Modernization and the Modern Personality in Early America, 1600-1865: A Sketch of Synthesis. J. Interdisc. Hist., Winter 1972. [11066]

BROWN, SANDRA G. Shaker History in the George Arents Research Library. Courier (Syracuse), Jan. 1971. [11067]

BROWNELL, BLAINE A. A Symbol of Modernity: Attitudes Toward the Automobile in Southern Cities in the 1920s. Am. Q., Mar. 1972. [11068]

BRUCHEY, STUART. The Business Economy of Marketing Change, 1790-1840: A Study of Sources of Efficiency. Agric. Hist., Jan. 1972. [11069]

CAROSSO, VINCENT P. Investment Banking in America: A Survey of Some Major Developments. R. int. Hist. Banque, no. 4, 1971. [11070]

CARSON, GERALD. The Late, Late Frontier [rodeos]. Am. Heritage, Apr. 1972. [11071]

CHALMERS, DAVID M. Race and Racial Thinking [r. art.]. N.-Y. Hist. Soc. Q., Apr. 1972. [11072]

CRIMMINS, TIMOTHY J. Commonweal Catholics [1924-]. S. Atl. Q., Spring 1972. [11073]

CUTLER, ANTHONY. The Tyranny of Hagia Sophia: Notes on Greek Orthodox Church Design in United States. J. Soc. Architectural Historians, Mar. 1972. [11074]

DAVIDSON, MARSHALL B. The Legacy of Craftsmen. Am. Heritage, Apr. 1972. [11075]

DAVIS, DAVID BRION. New Sidelights on Early Antislavery Radicalism. WMQ, Oct. 1971. [11076]

DEGLER, CARL N., and FREDRICKSON, GEORGE M. Racism in the United States: An Essay Review [George M. Fredrickson, The Black Image in the White Mind: The Debate on Afro-American Character and Destiny, 1817-1914]. J. S. Hist., Feb. 1972. [11077]

DORSETT, LYLE W., and SHAFFER, ARTHUR H. Was the Antebellum South Antiurban? A Suggestion. J. S. Hist., Feb. 1972. [11078]

GALLMAN, ROBERT E. Changes in Total U. S. Agricultural Factor Productivity in the Nineteenth Century. Agric. Hist., Jan. 1972. [11079]

GRABILL, JOSEPH L. The "Invisible" Missionary: A Study in American Foreign Relations. J. Church and State, Winter 1972. [11080]

GREEN, JAMES R. Behavioralism and Class Analysis [r. art. on U.S. Labor History]. Labor Hist., Winter 1972. [11081]

GRIFFITHS, DAVID M. Soviet Views of Early Russian-American Relations. Proc. Am. Phil. Soc., no. 2, 1972. [11082]

HUXFORD, GARY. Origins of the American Military Tradition Reconsidered. Rocky Mt. Soc. Sci. J., Oct. 1971. [11083]

JOHANNINGMEIER, E. V. Presbyterians, Democracy, and Demography [r. art.]. Hist. Ed. Q., Summer 1971. [11084]

JONES, CHARLES EDWIN. Disinherited or Rural? A Historical Case Study in Urban Holiness Religion. Mo. Hist. R., Apr. 1972. [11085]

KETT, JOSEPH F. Adolescence and Youth in Nineteenth-Century America. J. Interdisc. Hist., Autumn 1971. [11086]

KLEIN, LAWRENCE R. The Role of War in the Maintenance of American Economic Prosperity. Proc. Am. Phil. Soc., no. 6, 1971. [11087]

KNUDSON, DAVID L. A Note on Walter LaFeber, Captain Mahan, and the Use of Historical Sources. Pac. Hist. R., Nov. 1971. [11088]

LANDES, WILLIAM M., and SOLMON, LEWIS C. Compulsory Schooling Legislation: An Economic Analysis of Law and Social Change in the Nineteenth Century. J. Ec. Hist., Mar. 1972. [11089]

LEBERGOTT, STANLEY. Comments on Measuring Agricultural Change. Agric. Hist., Jan. 1972. [11090]

LEVITAN, SAR A., and MARWICK, DAVID. The Mounting and Insurmountable Welfare Problem. Current Hist., Nov. 1971. [11091]

LINDEEN, JAMES W. Longitudinal Analysis of Republican Presidential Electoral Trends, 1896-1968. Midwest J. Pol. Sci., Feb. 1972. [11092]

LYMAN, JOHN. Some Misconceptions Concerning the Spinnaker. Am. Neptune, Jan. 1972. [11093]

MCKINNEY, RICHARD I. The Black Church: Its Development and Present Impact. Harvard Theol. R., Oct. 1971. [11094]

MARTY, MARTIN E. Ethnicity: The Skeleton of Religion in America. Church Hist., Mar. 1972. [11095]

ONDISHKO, JOSEPH J., JR. A View of Anxiety, Fear and Panic. Mil. Aff., Apr. 1972. [11096]

PARKER, WILLIAM N. A Note on Regional Culture in the Corn Harvest. Agric. Hist., Jan. 1972. [11097]

PITZER, DONALD E. Revolution and the Evangelicals. Fides et Hist., no. 1, 1971. [11098]

REED, JOHN SHELTON. To Live, and Die, in Dixie: A Contribution to the Study of Southern Violence. PSQ, Sept. 1971. [11099]

RINGENBERG, WILLIAM C. The American Revolution, the 1960's and the Use of Violence. Fides et Hist., no. 1, 1971. [11100]

SCHNELL, J. CHRISTOPHER, and MCLEAR, PATRICK E. Why the Cities Grew: A Historiographical Essay on Western Urban Growth, 1850-1880. Bull. Mo. Hist. Soc., Apr. 1972. [11101]

Southern History in Periodicals, 1971: A Selected Bibliography. J. S. Hist., May 1972. [11102]

SYLLA, RICHARD E. American Banking and Growth in the Nineteenth Century: A Partial View of the Terrain. EEH, Winter 1971-72. [11103]

TYACK, DAVID B. The Tribe and the Common School: Community Control in Rural Education. Am. Q., Mar. 1972. [11104]

VEDDER, RICHARD K., and GALLAWAY, LOWELL E. The Settlement Preferences of Scandinavian Emigrants to the United States, 1850-1960. Scand. Ec. Hist. R., no. 2, 1970. [11105]

WARD, JUST. La società americana negli anni settanta. I militari. Comunità, June 1971. [11106]

WINKLER, ALLAN M. Ulrich Bonnell Phillips: A Reappraisal. S. Atl. Q., Spring 1972. [11107]

WODEHOUSE, LAWRENCE. Alfred B. Mullett [1834-90] and His French Style Government Buildings. J. Soc. Architectural Historians, Mar. 1972. [11108]

ZEVIN, ROBERT B. An Interpretation of American Imperialism. J. Ec. Hist., Mar. 1972. [11109]

UNITED STATES: COLONIAL (TO 1763)

MANN, BRUCE H., SELLERS, CHARLES, et. al. Plus Ça Change, Plus C'est la Même Chose [long hair for men, 17th and 18th centuries]. WMQ, Oct. 1971. [11110]

SCANLON, JAMES EDWARD. American College Presidents in the Eighteenth Century [r. art.]. Hist. Ed. Q., Spring 1971. [11111]

SHEPHERD, JAMES F., and WALTON, GARY M. Trade, Distribution, and Economic Growth in Colonial America. J. Ec. Hist., Mar. 1972. [11112]

STADELMAN, BONNIE S. Flora and Fauna versus Mice and Mold [trans-Atlantic biological shipments in the eighteenth century]. WMQ, Oct. 1971. [11113]

WALTON, GARY M. The New Economic History and the Burdens of the Navigation Acts. Ec. Hist. R., Nov. 1971. [11114]

UNITED STATES:

REVOLUTION AND CONFEDERATION (1763-89)

BERKHOFER, ROBERT F., JR. Jefferson, the Ordinance of 1784, and the Origins of the American Territorial System. WMQ, Apr. 1972. [11115]

BROWN, WALLACE. Escape from the Republic: The Dispersal of the American Loyalists. Hist. Today, Feb. 1972. [11116]

CURREY, CECIL B. Eighteenth-Century Evangelical Opposition to the American Revolution: The Case of the Quakers. Fides et Hist., no. 1, 1971. [11117]

CURTIS, THOMAS D. Land Policy: Pre-condition for the Success of the American Revolution. Am. J. Ec. Sociol., Apr. 1972. [11118]

DANIELS, MARY F. The Lafayette Collection at Cornell. Q. J. Lib. Cong., Apr. 1972. [11119]

FREEHLING, WILLIAM W. The Founding Fathers and Slavery. AHR, Feb. 1972. [11120]

HOFFER, PETER C. The Constitutional Crisis and the Rise of a Nationalistic View of History in America, 1786-1788. N.Y. Hist., July 1971. [11121]

HUTSON, JAMES H. The Partition Treaty and the Declaration of American Independence. J. Am. Hist., Mar. 1972. [11122]

KAPLAN, LAWRENCE S. Concensus of 1789: Jefferson and Hamilton on American Foreign Policy. S. Atl. Q., Winter 1972. [11123]

MARKS, FREDERICK W., III. Foreign Affairs: A Winning Issue in the Campaign for Ratification of the United States Constitution. PSQ, Sept. 1971. [11124]

MASLOWSKI, PETE. National Policy toward the Use of Black Troops in the Revolution. S.C. Hist. Mag., Jan. 1972. [11125]

MATTSON-BOZÉ, M. HOWARD. Evangelical Participation in the American Revolution: An Essay Review of Alan Heimert's Religion and the American Mind. Fides et Hist., no. 1, 1971. [11126]

OHLINE, HOWARD A. Republicanism and Slavery: Origins of the Three-Fifths Clause in the United States Constitution. WMQ, Oct. 1971. [11127]

SCHEWE, DONALD B., and DOWD, MARY JANE. "Among the Evils Consequent on a Depreciation of Money." [John Cox and Charles Pettit, 3 July 1779]. Am. Archivist, no. 1, 1972. [11128]

STOKES, DÜRWARD T. John Kilby's "Narrative as Seaman of the Bonhomme Richard," Written at Hanover County, Va., Sept. 1810. Md. Hist. Mag., Spring 1972. [11129]

UNITED STATES: EARLY NATIONAL PERIOD TO THE ERA OF JACKSON (1789-1828)

ALLEN, JOHN L. An Analysis of the Exploratory Process: The Lewis and Clark Expedition of 1804-1806. Geog. R., Jan. 1972. [11130]

ALLMENDINGER, DAVID F., JR. The Strangeness of the American Education Society: Indigent Students and the New Charity, 1815-1840. Hist. Ed. Q., Spring 1971. [11131]

BOWLING, KENNETH R., and COOKE, JACOB E. Dinner at Jefferson's: A Note on Jacob E. Cooke's "The Compromise of 1790" [note and rebuttal]. WMQ, Oct. 1971. [11132]

CUTRIGHT, PAUL RUSSELL. The Journal of Private Joseph Whitehouse, a Soldier with Lewis and Clark. Bull. Mo. Hist. Soc., Apr. 1972. [11133]

ECKERT, EDWARD K. William Jones, Mr. Madison's Secretary of the Navy. Pa. Mag. Hist. Biog., Apr. 1972. [11134]

EGAN, CLIFFORD L. (ed.). David Bailie Warden's "Of the Probable Duration of the American Government" [1815]. N.-Y. Hist. Soc. Q., Jan. 1972. [11135]

KUEHL, JOHN W. Southern Reaction to the XYZ Affair, an Incident in the Emergence of American Nationalism. Regist. Ky. Hist. Soc., Jan. 1972. [11136]

KUEHL, JOHN W. The XYZ Affair and American Nationalism: Republican Victories in the Middle Atlantic States. Md. Hist. Mag., Spring 1972. [11137]

MCBRIDE, ROBERT R. An Account of the Great "Two-Lines" Controversy [Presbyterian Church, 1816-19]. W. Pa. Hist. Mag., Apr. 1972. [11138]

MCCORISON, MARCUS A. Two Unrecorded American Printings of "Fanny Hill" [ca. 1818]. Vt. Hist., Winter 1972. [11139]

MCCUSKER, JOHN J. The Current Value of English Exports, 1697 to 1800. WMQ, Oct. 1971. [11140]

OWSLEY, FRANK LAWRENCE, JR. The Role of the South in the British Grand Strategy in the War of 1812. Tenn. Hist. Q., Spring 1972. [11141]

RYAN, MARY P. Party Formation in the United States Congress, 1789 to 1796: A Quantitative Analysis. WMQ, Oct. 1971. [11142]

SUTTON, ROBERT P. Sectionalism and Social Structure: A Case Study of Jeffersonian Democracy. Va. Mag. Hist. Biog., Jan. 1972. [11143]

WINSTON, ALEXANDER. Tourisme à la guerre [Chastellux in America]. Am. Soc. Legion Honor Mag., no. 3, 1971. [11144]

UNITED STATES: THE ERA OF JACKSON, EXPANSION, AND SECTIONALISM (1828-61)

BROWN, LAWRENCE L. 1835 and All That: Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society Membership and the Missionary Spirit. Hist. Mag. Prot. Epis. Church, Dec. 1971. [11145]

CALKIN, HOMER. Federal Government and Agriculture, 1840-1860. Palimpsest, Dec. 1971. [11146]

CAVE, ALFRED A. Calvin Colton [b. 1789], An Antebellum Disaffection with the Presbyterian Church. J. Presb. Hist., Spring 1972. [11147]

EICHERT, MAGDALEN. Daniel Webster's Western Land Investments. Hist. N.H., Fall 1971. [11148]

FELLMAN, MICHAEL. The Earthbound Eagle: Andrew Jackson and the American Pantheon. Am. Stud., Fall 1971. [11149]

HARMS, ERNEST. America's First Major Psychologist: Lawrens Perseus Hickok [b. 1788]. J. Hist. Behavioral Sci., Jan. 1972. [11150]

HOLZHAMMER, ROBERT ERNEST. The Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society: The Period of Expansion and Development [1823-35]. Hist. Mag. Prot. Epis. Church, Dec. 1971. [11151]

HORLICK, ALLAN S. Phrenology and the Social Education of Young Men [1850s]. Hist. Ed. Q., Spring 1971. [11152]

JEANSONNE, GLEN. Southern Baptist Attitudes toward Slavery, 1845-1861. Ga. Hist. Q., Winter 1971. [11153]

MILES, EDWIN A. President [John Quincy] Adams' Billiard Table. New Eng. Q., Mar. 1972. [11154]

MYER, MRS. MAX W. The Colony of Economy and the Harmonist Sect: Extract of a Letter from M. Louis Cortambert, December 20, 1840. Bull. Mo. Hist. Soc., Oct. 1971. [11155]

NILSSON, NILS GUNNAR. Origin of Interview [ca. 1830]. Journalism Q., Winter 1971. [11156]

PEASE, JANE H., and PEASE, WILLIAM H. Confrontation and Abolition in the 1850s. J. Am. Hist., Mar. 1972. [11157]

PESSEN, EDWARD. The Occupations of the Ante-Bellum Rich: A Misleading Clue to the Sources and Extent of Their Wealth. Hist. Methods Newslett., Mar. 1972. [11158]

RANSOM, ROGER L. A Closer Look at Canals and Western Manufacturing. EEH, Summer 1971. [11159]

SINDORF, ROBERT. "Gingerbread" [architecture]. Yesterday Mag., Jan. 1972. [11160]

STAROBIN, ROBERT S. Privileged [Negro Slave] Bondsmen and the Process of Accommodation: Role of Houservants and Drivers as Seen in Their Own Letters. J. Soc. Hist., Fall 1971. [11161]

SULLIVAN, JOHN. [Andrew] Jackson Caricatured: Two Historical Errors. Tenn. Hist. Q., Spring 1972. [11162]

THEISEN, LEE SCOTT. James K. Polk, Not So Dark a Horse. Tenn. Hist. Q., Winter 1971. [11163]

UNITED STATES: CIVIL WAR AND RECONSTRUCTION (1861-77)

BRAUER, KINLEY J. British Mediation and the American Civil War: A Reconsideration. J. S. Hist., Feb. 1972. [11164]

CARTER, DAN T. Abolitionism and Reconstruction: The Case of Sidney Andrews. Md. Hist., Fall 1971. [11165]

CARTER, L. EDWARD. The Revolution in Journalism during the Civil War. Lincoln Herald, Winter 1971. [11166]

CURRY, RICHARD O. Copperheadism and Continuity: Anatomy of a Stereotype. J. Negro Hist., Jan. 1972. [11167]

DELANEY, NORMAN C. The End of the [C.S.S.] Alabama [1864]. Am. Heritage, Apr. 1972. [11168]

HARWELL, RICHARD BARKSDALE. Brief Candle: The Confederate Theatre. Proc. Am. Antiq. Soc., pt. 1, 1971. [11169]

JOHNSON, ROBERT ERWIN. Investment by Sea: The Civil War Blockade. Am. Neptune, Jan. 1972. [11170]

JONES, HOWARD MUMFORD. The Wounds of War: A Tale of Two Cities [Charleston and Boston in Civil War]. Harvard Lib. Bull., Apr. 1972. [11171]

MORGAN, CLAUDE M. Mutiny at Camp Hubbard [2d R.I. Cav., 1863]. R.I. Hist., Fall 1971. [11172]

RAMPP, LARY C. Confederate Indian Sinking of the J. R. Williams [1864]. J. West, Jan. 1972. [11173]

RINGOLD, MAY SPENCER. William Gourdin Young and the Wigfall Mission, Fort Sumter, April 13, 1861. S.C. Hist. Mag., Jan. 1972. [11174]

SNELL, J. G. John F. Potter, Consul General to British North America, 1864–1866. Wis. Mag. Hist., Winter 1971–72. [11175]

THEODORE, TERRY. Laura Keane and Mr. Lincoln. Lincoln Herald, Winter 1971. [11176]

UNITED STATES:

INDUSTRIALISM AND REFORM (1865–1917)

AQUARONE, ALBERTO. L'imperialismo americano in Asia nell'età di Theodore Roosevelt. R. stor. ital., Sept. 1971. [11177]

BEAN, RONALD. A Note on the Knights of Labour in Liverpool, 1889–90. Labor Hist., Winter 1972. [11178]

BROWN, RICHARD D. Two Baltic Families Who Came to America: The Jacobsons and the Kruskals, 1870–1970. Am. Jewish Arch., Apr. 1972. [11179]

BRUCHEY, STUART. The Twice "Forgotten" Man, Henry George. Am. J. Ec. Sociol., Apr. 1972. [11180]

CLARKE, JOHN PROCTOR. Random Recollections of Campaigning with Colonel Roosevelt. Courier (Syracuse), Jan. 1971. [11181]

GRAVENS, HAMILTON C. Abandonment of Evolutionary Social Theory in America: Impact of Academic Professionalization upon American Sociological Theory, 1890–1920. Am. Stud., Fall 1971. [11182]

DANNETT, SYLVIA G. L. Belva Ann Lockwood [1830–1917], Feminist Lawyer. Courier (Syracuse), July 1971. [11183]

DARNALL, MARGARETTA JEAN. Innovations in American Prefabricated Housing, 1860–1890. J. Soc. Architectural Historians, Mar. 1972. [11184]

DRESCHER, NUALA MCGANN. "To Play the Hypocrite": Terence V. Powderly on the Anarchists. Labor Hist., Winter 1972. [11185]

ENGELBOURG, SAUL. Behind the Throne: A Non-Morgan View of the Panic of 1907. R. int. Hist. Banque, no. 4, 1971. [11186]

FANNING, CHARLES F., JR. Mr. Dooley's Bridgeport Chronicle. Chicago Hist., Spring 1972. [11187]

FRASER, JAMES EARLE. Sculpting T. R. [Roosevelt]. Am. Heritage, Apr. 1972. [11188]

GOFF, REDA C. The Confederate Veteran Magazine [1893–1933]. Tenn. Hist. Q., Spring 1972. [11189]

GRIBBEN, ALAN. Mark Twain, Phrenology and the "Temperaments": A Study of Pseudoscientific Influence. Am. Q., Mar. 1972. [11190]

GUTMAN, HERBERT G. The Knights of Labor and Patrician Anti-Semitism, 1891. Labor Hist., Winter 1972. [11191]

HACKNEY, SHELDON. Origins of the New South [by C. Vann Woodward] in Retrospect. J. S. Hist., May 1972. [11192]

HARRELL, DON W. A Chaser of Phantoms: Mark Twain and Romanticism. Midwest Q., Winter 1972. [11193]

JELINEK, YESHAYAHU. Self-identification of First Generation Hungarian Jewish Immigrants. Am. Jewish Hist. Q., Mar. 1972. [11194]

JOHNSON, KENNETH R. N. H. R. Dawson: United States Commissioner of Education [1886–89]. Hist. Ed. Q., Summer 1971. [11195]

KAUFMAN, BURTON I. The Organizational Dimension of United States Economic Foreign Policy, 1900–1920. Bus. Hist. R., Spring 1972. [11196]

KELLER, PHYLLIS. George Sylvester Viereck [1884–1962]: Psychology of a German-American Militant. J. Interdisc. Hist., Summer 1971. [11197]

KLEBER, LOUIS C. The Era of the American Cowboy. Hist. Today, May 1972. [11198]

LARSON, T. A. Dolls, Vassals, and Drudges—Pioneer Women in the West. W. Hist. Q., no. 1, 1972. [11199]

LEONARD, HENRY B. Louis Marshall and Immigration Restriction, 1906–1924. Am. Jewish Arch., Apr. 1972. [11200]

LIENHARD, JOSEPH T. The New York Review [1905–08] and Modernism in America. Rec. Am. Cath. Hist. Soc. Philadelphia, June 1971. [11201]

LINK, ARTHUR S. Woodrow Wilson and the Progressive Movement in New Jersey. Princeton Hist., no. 1, 1971. [11202]

LITTLEFIELD, DANIEL F., JR., and UNDERHILL, LONNIE E. Renaming the American Indian, 1890–1913. Am. Stud., Fall 1971. [11203]

LURIE, JONATHAN. Speculation, Risk, and Profits: The Ambivalent Agrarian in the Late Nineteenth Century. Agric. Hist., Apr. 1972. [11204]

NIEMI, ALBERT W. Structural and Labor Productivity Patterns in United States Manufacturing, 1849–1899. Bus. Hist. R., Spring 1972. [11205]

PAULSEN, GEORGE E. The Abrogation of the Gresham-Yang Treaty [1904]. Pac. Hist. R., Nov. 1971. [11206]

PERREN, RICHARD. The North American Beef and Cattle Trade with Great Britain, 1870–1914. Ec. Hist. R., Aug. 1971. [11207]

RANSON, EDWARD. Investigation of the War Department, 1898–99. Historian, Nov. 1971. [11208]

SCHLEGEL, MARVIN W. The [Henry L.] Dawes Plan: The Origin of the Joint Committee on Reconstruction [1865]. Va. Soc. Sci. J., Nov. 1971. [11209]

SCHMIEL, EUGENE D. The Oberlin Letter [Jacob Dolson Cox, 1865]: The Post-Civil War Northern Voter and the Freedman. N. W. Ohio Q., Fall 1971. [11210]

SHEFFER, MARTIN S. The Gospel of Wealth 1865-1900: Changing American Ideology. Va. Soc. Sci. J., Nov. 1971. [11211]

SOLVICK, STANLEY D. The Pre-Presidential Political and Economic Thought of William Howard Taft. N. W. Ohio Q., Fall 1971. [11212]

SONNICHSEN, C. L. Colonel William C. Greene and the Strike at Cananea, Sonora, 1906. Ariz. West, Winter 1971. [11213]

STEIN, HARRY H. Theodore Roosevelt and the Press: Lincoln Steffens. Mid-America, Apr. 1972. [11214]

TATE, E. MOWBRAY. Admiral [Henry H.] Bell and the New Asiatic Squadron, 1865-1868. Am. Neptune, Apr. 1972. [11215]

TOMASKE, JOHN A. The Determinants of Intercountry Differences in European Emigration: 1881-1900. J. Ec. Hist., Dec. 1971. [11216]

WALTMANN, HENRY C. Circumstantial Reformer: President Grant & the Indian Problem. Ariz. West, Winter 1971. [11217]

WELLS, PHILIP P. Philip P. Wells in the Forest Service Law Office [1906-09, recollections]. Forest Hist., Apr. 1972. [11218]

WILLIAMS, JOHN ALEXANDER. Stephen B. Elkins and the Benjamin Harrison Campaign and Cabinet, 1887-1891. Ind. Mag. Hist., Mar. 1972. [11219]

UNITED STATES: WORLD WAR I TO FDR (1914-32)

ANDRADE, ERNEST, JR. Submarine Policy in the United States Navy, 1919-1941. Mil. Aff., Apr. 1971. [11220]

BENNION, SHERILYN COX. Reform Agitation in the American Periodical Press, 1920-29. Journalism Q., Winter 1971. [11221]

BRYSON, THOMAS A. The Armenia-America Society: A Factor in American-Turkish Relations, 1919-1924. Rec. Am. Cath. Hist. Soc. Philadelphia, June 1971. [11222]

BURNS, RICHARD DEAN. Regulating Submarine Warfare, 1921-41: A Case Study in Arms Control. Mil. Aff., Apr. 1971. [11223]

CONTEE, CLARENCE G. Du Bois, the NAACP, and Pan-African Congress of 1919. J. Negro Hist., Jan. 1972. [11224]

COOLEY, THOMAS W., JR. Lincoln Steffens: American Innocent Abroad. Am. Lit., Jan. 1972. [11225]

DALE, DORIS CRUGER. An American in Geneva: Florence Wilson and the League of Nations Library. J. Lib. Hist., Apr. 1972. [11226]

DINWOODIE, D. H. Arctic Controversy: 1925 [Richard E.] Byrd-[Donald B.] MacMillan Expedition Example. Can. Hist. R., Mar. 1972. [11227]

DYSON, LOWELL K. The Red Peasant International in America. J. Am. Hist., Mar. 1972. [11228]

FALKUS, M. E. United States Economic Policy and the "Dollar Gap" of the 1920's. Ec. Hist. R., Nov. 1971. [11229]

HOROWITZ, HELEN L. The Progressive Education Movement After World War I [r. art.]. Hist. Ed. Q., Spring 1971. [11230]

IGNASIAS, C. DENNIS. Personal Emissaries during the Harding Administration and Mexican Recognition. N. W. Ohio Q., Winter 1971-72. [11231]

LEWIS, ROBERT W. Babbitt and the Dream of Romance. NDQ, Winter 1972. [11232]

MACHADO, MANUEL A., JR. The United States and the De la Huerta Rebellion [1920-24]. S. W. Hist. Q., Jan. 1972. [11233]

PETRULLO, HELEN B. Dorothy Thompson's Role in Sinclair Lewis' Break with Harcourt Brace [MSS, 1918-61, at Syracuse U.]. Courier (Syracuse), Apr. 1971. [11234]

PHILP, KENNETH. Herbert Hoover's New Era: A False Dawn for the American Indian, 1929-1932. Rocky Mt. Soc. Sci. J., Apr. 1972. [11235]

RONNIE, ART. Houdini's High-flying Hoax [1919]. Am. Heritage, Apr. 1972. [11236]

SPECTOR, RONALD. "You're Not Going to Send Soldiers over There Are You!": The American Search for an Alternative to the Western Front, 1916-1917. Mil. Aff., Feb. 1972. [11237]

STROMBERG, ROLAND N. Uncertainties and Obscurities about the League of Nations. J. Hist. Ideas, Jan.-Mar. 1972. [11238]

TEICHROEW, ALLAN. World War I and the Mennonite Migration to Canada to Avoid the Draft. Mennonite Q. R., July 1971. [11239]

TIERNEY, JOHN J., JR. U.S. Intervention in Nicaragua, 1927-1933: Lessons for Today. Orbis, Winter 1971. [11240]

WEITEKAMP, RAYMOND. The Virgin Islands Purchase and the Coercion Myth. Mid-America, Apr. 1972. [11241]

UNITED STATES: THE NEW DEAL AND THE SECOND WORLD WAR (1932-45)

BLANTZ, THOMAS E. Francis J. Haas: Priest and Government Servant [b. 1889]. Cath. Hist. R., Jan. 1972. [11242]

BLUM, ALBERT A. Roosevelt, The D-Day Plans, and the Military Complex. Mil. Aff., Apr. 1972. [11243]

BLUM, ALBERT A. Soldier or Worker: A Reevaluation of the Selective Service System. Midwest Q., Winter 1972. [11244]

BLUM, ALBERT A., and SMYTH, J. DOUGLAS. National Citizens Political Action Committee: An Example of Liberal-Labor Cooperation [1944-46]. Societas, Summer 1971. [11245]

CAMPONESI, CRISTIANO. S. Hook, un filosofo americano degli anni '30 alla ricerca del marxismo. R. crit. stor. fil., Apr.-June 1971. [11246]

CANNISTRARO, PHILIP V., and KOVALEFF, THEODORE P. Father [Charles E.] Coughlin and Mussolini: Impossible Allies. J. Church and State, Autumn 1971. [11247]

CLIFFORD, JOHN GARRY. The Odyssey of the City of Flint [1939-40]. Am. Neptune, Apr. 1972. [11248]

CORRIGAN, ROBERT A. What's My Line: Bennett Cerf, Ezra Pound and the American Poet. Am. Q., Mar. 1972. [11249]

GOTTLIEB, MOSHE. The American Controversy over the Olympic Games [1936]. Am. Jewish Hist. Q., Mar. 1972. [11250]

HACHEY, THOMAS E. Winning Friends and Influencing Policy: British Strategy to Woo America in 1937. Wis. Mag. Hist., Winter 1971-72. [11251]

O'NEILL, JAMES E. The Accessibility of Sources for the History of the Second World War: The Archivist's Viewpoint. Prologue, Spring 1972. [11252]

RYANT, CARL G. From Isolation to Intervention: The Saturday Evening Post, 1939-42. Journalism Q., Winter 1971. [11253]

SALMOND, JOHN. "Aubrey Williams Remembers": A Note on Franklin D. Roosevelt's Attitude toward Negro Rights. Atla R., Jan. 1972. [11254]

SCHAEFFER, RONALD. The 1940 [Marine Corps] Small Wars Manual and the "Lessons of History." Mil. Aff., Apr. 1972. [11255]

SHAPIRO, EDWARD S. Decentralist Intellectuals and the New Deal. J. Am. Hist., Mar. 1972. [11256]

SMETHERMAN, ROBERT M., and SMETHERMAN, BOBBIE B. The Alliance for Progress: Promises Unfulfilled. Am. J. Ec. Sociol., Jan. 1972. [11257]

STEELE, RICHARD W. Political Aspects of American Military Planning, 1941-1942. Mil. Aff., Apr. 1971. [11258]

TUCHMAN, BARBARA W. Sources and Problems in Writing the Biography of General Stilwell. Md. Hist., Fall 1971. [11259]

VALAIK, J. DAVID. In the Days before Ecumenism: American Catholics, Anti-Semitism, and the Spanish Civil War. J. Church and State, Autumn 1971. [11260]

WEISBORD, ROBERT G. Black America and the Italian-Ethiopian Crisis: Episode in Pan-Negroism. Historian, Feb. 1972. [11261]

WYNN, NEIL A. Impact of Second World War on the American Negro. J. Contemp. Hist., no. 2, 1971. [11262]

ZAHN, GORDON C. Catholic Opposition to Hitler: The Perils of Ambiguity. J. Church and State, Autumn 1971. [11263]

UNITED STATES: SINCE 1945

CHRISTIANSON, ELIN B. Mergers in the Publishing Industry, 1958-1970. J. Lib. Hist., Jan. 1972. [11264]

COLLETT, JOAN. American Libraries Abroad: United States Information Agency Activities. Lib. Trends, Jan. 1972. [11265]

COOLING, B. FRANKLIN. Civil Defense and the Army: The Quest for Responsibility, 1946-1948. Mil. Aff., Feb. 1972. [11266]

DEBOUZY, MARIANNE. Le problème de l'immigration et l'histoire des États-Unis [note]. An.: Ec., Soc., Civil., no. 1, 1972. [11267]

DEMBITZ, NANETTE. The Good of the Child versus the Rights of the Parent: The Supreme Court Upholds the Welfare Home-Visit. PSQ, Sept. 1971. [11268]

FRANKLIN, JOHN HOPE. The Great Confrontation: The South and the Problem of Change. J. S. Hist., Feb. 1972. [11269]

HAGENS, WILLIAM J. The Moss Committee and Freedom of Information [1955-]. Mich. Academician, Fall 1971. [11270]

HAIDER, DONALD H. Governors and Mayors View the Poverty Program [1964-]. Current Hist., Nov. 1971. [11271]

HAMBY, ALONZO L. The Vital Center, the Fair Deal, and the Quest for a Liberal Political Economy. AHR, June 1972. [11272]

HOILAND, RICHARD. What the World Needs Most: Life Story of Luther Wesley Smith [1897-1971]. Foundations, Jan.-Mar. 1972. [11273]

LANDESS, THOMAS H. Southern History and Manhood: Major Themes in the Works of Shelby Foote. Miss. Q., Fall 1971. [11274]

LORENZ, JOHN G. The Library of Congress Abroad. Lib. Trends, Jan. 1972. [11275]

LUNDGREN, LENNART; SJÖGREN, OLLE; and STENBERG, ULF. Hollywood i det kalla kriget. Ord och bild, no. 2, 1971. [11276]

MADGWICK, P. J. Politics of Urban Renewal. J. Am. Stud., Dec. 1971. [11277]

MARTY, MARTIN E. Historical Reflections on Counter Culture. Societas, Summer 1971. [11278]

NELSON, DAVID P. Higher Education: To Compete or to Coordinate? Colo. Mag., Spring 1972. [11279]

NIEMI, ALBERT W., JR. Changes in Racially Structured Employment Patterns in the Northeast and South, 1940-60. Am. J. Ec. Sociol., Apr. 1972. [11280]

PINKERTON, JAN. Political Realities and Poetic Release: Prose Statements by Wallace Stevens. New Eng. Q., Dec. 1971. [11281]

PIOUS, RICHARD M. The Phony War on Poverty in the Great Society. Current Hist., Nov. 1971. [11282]

PLISCHKE, ELMER. International Conferencing and the Summit: Macro-Analysis of Presidential Participation. Orbis, Fall 1970. [11283]

PLISCHKE, ELMER. The President's Right to Go Abroad. Orbis, Fall 1971. [11284]

President Nixon's Proposals for Welfare Reform and Revenue-Sharing [1969-]. Current Hist., Nov. 1971. [11285]

RAYMOND, RICHARD. Determinants of Non-White Migration during the 1950's: Their Regional Significance and Long-Run Implications. Am. J. Ec. Sociol., Jan. 1972. [11286]

SCHLAUCH, WOLFGANG. "Cold War: German Front." A Reply. Md. Hist., Fall 1971. [11287]

SHEERMAN, BARRY. Extremism and Liberalism in Contemporary America [r. art.]. J. Am. Stud., Dec. 1971. [11288]

SHEPPARD, WILLIAM F. The Plight of "Foreign Relations": A Plea for Action. AHA Newslett., Nov. 1971. [11289]

SMETHERMAN, BOBBIE B., and SMETHERMAN, ROBERT M. The CEP Claims, U.S. Tuna Fishing and Inter-American Relations. Orbis, Winter 1971. [11290]

SOUTH, DONALD R., and FLOYD, H. HUGH, JR. Parental or Peer Orientation? Options and Implications for Youth and Parents. S. Q., Oct. 1971. [11291]

STEBBINS, PHILLIP E. Truman and the Seizure of Steel [1952]: A Failure in Communication. Historian, Nov. 1971. [11292]

SWEENEY, J. K. Portugal, the United States and Aviation, 1945. Rocky Mt. Soc. Sci. J., Apr. 1972. [11293]

VAUGHAN, PHILIP H. President Truman's Committee on Civil Rights [1946-47]: The Urban Implications. Mo. Hist. R., Apr. 1972. [11294]

VISSCHER, MAURICE B. The Newer Antivivisectionists. Proc. Am. Phil. Soc., no. 2, 1972. [11295]

WOOD, JAMES E., JR. Parochialism and the U.S. Supreme Court. J. Church and State, Autumn 1971. [11296]

YELLOWITZ, IRWIN. Black Militancy and Organized Labor: An Historical Parallel. Midwest Q., Winter 1972. [11297]

YOCHELSON, JOHN. The American Military Presence in Europe: Current Debate in the United States. Orbis, Fall 1971. [11298]

UNITED STATES: NEW ENGLAND

BAKER, RONALD L. An Annotated Bibliography of Works about Rowland E. Robinson [1833-1900]. Vt. Hist., Winter 1972. [11299]

BANDEL, BETTY. Thaddeus Stevens, Playwright [1813]. Vt. Hist., Spring 1972. [11300]

BOZEMAN, THEODORE DWIGHT. Religious Liberty and the Problem of Order in Early Rhode Island. New Eng. Q., Mar. 1972. [11301]

BROWN, BANCROFT H. "I Have a Garden": A Young Teacher Solves an Old Problem [1912]. Vt. Hist., Spring 1972. [11302]

BRYNN, EDWARD. Patterns of Dissent: Vermont's Opposition to the War of 1812. Vt. Hist., Winter 1972. [11303]

BUSH, SARGENT, JR. Thomas Hooker and the Westminster Assembly [1642-49; note]. WMQ, no. 2, 1972. [11304]

BUTTERFIELD, L. H. A Family [Adams] Tells Its Own Story. N.C. Hist. R., Spring 1972. [11305]

CARY, RICHARD. "Yours Always Lovingly": Sarah Orne Jewett to John Greenleaf Whittier [1877-90]. Essex Inst. Hist. Collect., Oct. 1971. [11306]

CASSARA, ERNEST. Reformer as Politician: Horace Mann and the Anti-Slavery Struggle in Congress, 1848-1853. J. Am. Stud., Dec. 1971. [11307]

CHUDACOFF, HOWARD P., and HIRT, THEODORE C. Social Turmoil and Governmental Reform in Providence, 1820-1832. R.I. Hist., Winter 1972. [11308]

COLE, ARTHUR H. The Expansion of Economic Literature at Harvard. Harvard Lib. Bull., Jan. 1972. [11309]

CONLEY, PATRICK T. Rhode Island's Paper Money Issue and Trevett v. Weeden, 1786. R.I. Hist., Summer 1971. [11310]

CROUCH, BARRY A. Rusticated Rebel: Amos A. Lawrence and His Harvard Years [1831-35]. Harvard Lib. Bull., Jan. 1972. [11311]

DAVIDSON, CARLA. Boston Painters, Boston Ladies. Am. Heritage, Apr. 1972. [11312]

DESTLER, CHESTER MCARTHUR. The Gentleman Farmer and the New Agriculture: Jeremiah Wadsworth [1743-1804]. Agric. Hist., Jan. 1972. [11313]

DORENKAMP, J. H. The Bay Psalm Book and "Ainsworth Psalter." Early Am. Lit., Spring 1972. [11314]

FOWLER, WILLIAM M., JR. William Ellery [b. 1727]: Making of a Rhode Island Politician. R.I. Hist., Fall 1971. [11315]

HANSEN, JAMES E., II. Students and the [Elisha Benjamin] Andrews Legend at Brown [president, 1889-93]. R.I. Hist., Summer 1971. [11316]

HUNTER, DOREEN. America's First Romantics: Richard Henry Dana, Sr. and Washington Allston. New Eng. Q., Mar. 1972. [11317]

JONES, ALICE HANSON. Wealth Estimates for the New England Colonies about 1770. J. Ec. Hist., Mar. 1972. [11318]

KAYE, RUTH LINCOLN. A Wedding Diary of 1832. New Eng. Hist. Geneal. Reg., Apr. 1972. [11319]

KERBER, LINDA K. Science in the Early Republic: The Society for the Study of Natural Philosophy [1801-07]. WMQ, no. 2, 1972. [11320]

KERSHAW, GORDON E. A Colonial Land Company's Dilemma: Justice on the Maine Frontier [Kennebec Purchase Co., 1748-]. New Eng. Soc. Stud. Bull., Winter 1972. [11321]

KNIGHT, RUSSELL W. The Stature of a General [John Glover]. Essex Inst. Hist. Collect., Oct. 1971. [11322]

LACY, HARRIET S. A Welcome for Governor Benning Wentworth, 1741. Hist. N.H., Fall 1971. [11323]

LAMBERT, BARBARA. The Musical Puritans. Old-Time New Eng., Winter 1972. [11324]

LAWRENCE, PHILIP J. Edward Hitchcock: The Christian Geologist [1793-1864]. Proc. Am. Phil. Soc., no. 1, 1972. [11325]

LAZERSON, MARVIN. Urban Reform and the Schools: Kindergartens in Massachusetts, 1870-1915. Hist. Ed. Q., Summer 1971. [11326]

LITTLE, DAVID B. 'Twas the Nineteenth of April in (18)75—and the Centennial was Coming Unstuck. Am. Heritage, Apr. 1972. [11327]

LUCAS, REX A. A Specification of the Weber Thesis: Plymouth Colony. Hist. and Theory, no. 3, 1971. [11328]

MCCABE, JAMES. In the Twilight of His Years: Eli Canfield Recalls His Boyhood in Arlington, 1817-1831. Vt. Hist., Spring 1972. [11329]

MACEY, BARRY A. Charles Sanger Mellen [1851-1927], Architect of Transportation Monopoly. Hist. N.H., Winter 1971. [11330]

MCLOUGHLIN, WILLIAM G. Mob Violence against Dissent in Revolutionary Massachusetts. Foundations, Oct.-Dec. 1971. [11331]

MAECHLING, CHARLES JR. Count Rumford [Benjamin Thompson, 1753-1814], Scientific Adventurer. Hist. Today, Apr. 1972. [11332]

MAGUIRE, JAMES H. "Elisium and the Wilds": A Loyalist's [Edward Parry] Account of Experiences in America at the Beginning of the American Revolution. Hist. N.H., Winter 1971. [11333]

MALONE, MICHAEL T. Ecclesiastical Trials in Massachusetts of Oliver Sherman Prescott [b. 1824]. Church Hist., Mar. 1972. [11334]

MARRO, ANTHONY. Vermont's Local Militia Units, 1815-1860. Vt. Hist., Winter 1972. [11335]

MASSEY, ROBERT K., JR. The Democratic Laggard: Massachusetts in 1932. New Eng. Q., Dec. 1971. [11336]

MATTINGLY, PAUL H. Educational Revivals in Ante-Bellum New England. Hist. Ed. Q., Spring 1971. [11337]

MAZUZAN, GEORGE T. "Skiing is not merely a schport": The Development of Mount Mansfield as a Winter Recreation Area, 1930-1955. Vt. Hist., Winter 1972. [11338]

MYERS, JOHN L. The Major Effort of Antislavery Agents in New Hampshire, 1835-1837. Hist. N.H., Fall 1971. [11339]

MYERSON, JOEL. Lowell on Emerson: New Letter from Concord in 1838. New Eng. Q., Dec. 1971. [11340]

PAINTER, NELL. Jim Crow at Harvard, 1923. New Eng. Q., Dec. 1971. [11341]

PORTER, DAVID. The Baptist Struggle for Religious Freedom in the Massachusetts Bay Colony, 1650-1670. Foundations, Jan.-Mar. 1971. [11342]

PULSIFER, JANICE GOLDSMITH. The Cutlers [family] of Hamilton [1771-1840]. Essex Inst. Hist. Collect., Oct. 1971. [11343]

REASKE, CHRISTOPHER R. The Devil and Jonathan Edwards. J. Hist. Ideas, Jan.-Mar. 1972. [11344]

REEVES, THOMAS C. Chester A. Arthur, Vermont Schoolmaster. Vt. Hist., Winter 1972. [11345]

ROSS, JONATHAN. An [Waterford] Old Home Week Address, August 1902. Vt. Hist., Spring 1972. [11346]

ROSSITER, MARGARET W. Benjamin Silliman and the Lowell Institute: The Popularization of Science in Nineteenth-Century America. New Eng. Q., Dec. 1971. [11347]

RUSSELL, C. ALLYN. Rhode Island Baptists, 1825-1931. Foundations, Jan.-Mar. 1971. [11348]

SAINSBURY, JOHN A. Miantonomo's Death and New England Politics, 1630-1645. R.I. Hist., Fall 1971. [11349]

SCHUCHMAN, JOHN S. The Political Background of the Political-Question Doctrine: The Judges and the Dorr War [1841-49]. Am. J. Legal Hist., Apr. 1972. [11350]

SHELLEY, BRUCE. A. J. Gordon [d. 1895] and Biblical Criticism. Foundations, Jan.-Mar. 1971. [11351]

SMITH, DANIEL SCOTT. The Demographic History of Colonial New England. J. Ec. Hist., Mar. 1972. [11352]

SMITH, DUANE A. Vermont Remembered: [Horace Austin] "Silver King" Tabor [1830-99] Recalls His Boyhood. Vt. Hist., Spring 1972. [11353]

SMITH, LYDIA A. H. Lectures on School-Keeping, by Samuel Read Hall (1829). Harvard Lib. Bull., Jan. 1972. [11354]

ST. ARMAND, BARTON L. Facts in the Case of H. P. Lovecraft [1890-1937, science fiction and horror story writer]. R.I. Hist., Winter 1972. [11355]

STODDARD, RICHARD. Hammatt Billings [1818-74], Artist and Architect. Old-Time New Eng., Winter 1972. [11356]

TOLLES, BRYANT F., JR. The "College Edifice" (1801-1807) at the University of Vermont. Vt. Hist., Winter 1972. [11357]

TRUE, MARSHALL, and BANDEL, BETTY. Schools and Society in the Nineteenth Century. Vt. Hist., Spring 1972. [11358]

VINOVSKIS, MARIS A. Mortality Rates and Trends in Massachusetts before 1860. J. Ec. Hist., Mar. 1972. [11359]

WALSH, JAMES. The Great Awakening in the First Congregational Church of Woodbury, Connecticut. WMQ, Oct. 1971. [11360]

WERKING, RICHARD H. "Reformation Is Our Only Preservation": Cotton Mather and Salem Witchcraft [note]. WMQ, Apr. 1972. [11361]

WILBUR, W. ALLAN. Timothy Pickering, Federalist Politician: An Historiographical Perspective. Historian, Feb. 1972. [11362]

YEAGER, HENRY J. The French Fleet at Newport, 1780-1781 [from the recollections of the Chevalier de Villebresme]. R.I. Hist., Summer 1971. [11363]

ZINK, DAVID D. Who Was Ann Parry's Jonah? [New Eng. whaling, 1845-48]. Am. Neptune, Jan. 1972. [11364]

UNITED STATES: MIDDLE ATLANTIC STATES

ANDERSON, SAMUEL K. Public Lotteries in Colonial New York. N.-Y. Hist. Soc. Q., Apr. 1972. [11365]

ANDREWS, PETER. More Sock and Less Buskin [William Clyde Fitch, 1865-1909, playwright]. Am. Heritage, Apr. 1972. [11366]

ARMSTRONG, WILLIAM M. The Letters of Edwin L. Godkin [1831-1902]: A Calendar and Locator File. Bull. N. Y. Public Lib., Sept. 1971. [11367]

BARBER, DANIEL M., and HAMELL, GEORGE R. The Redware Pottery Factory of Alvin Wilcox at Mid-19th Century [Bloomfield, N.Y.]. Hist. Arch., 1971. [11368]

BAUMANN, ROLAND M. Dissertations on Pennsylvania History, 1866-1971: A Bibliography. Pa. Hist., Jan. 1972. [11369]

BOWMAN, CHARLES H., JR. Financial Plans and Operations of Manuel Torres [1762-1822] in Philadelphia. Rec. Am. Cath. Hist. Soc. Philadelphia, June 1971. [11370]

BRADBURY, M. L. Legal Privilege and the Bank of North America. Pa. Mag. Hist. Biog., Apr. 1972. [11371]

BUCHER, GLENN R. John Coleman Bennett [b. 1902]: The Presbyterian Years. J. Presb. Hist., Spring 1972. [11372]

CLARK, DENNIS. Kellyville, an Immigrant Enterprise. Pa. Hist., Jan. 1972. [11373]

CLARK, DENNIS. A Pattern of Urban Growth: Residential Development and Church Location in Philadelphia. Rec. Am. Cath. Hist. Soc. Philadelphia, Sept. 1971. [11374]

CODY, EDWARD J. The Price of Perfection: The Irony of George Keith. Pa. Hist., Jan. 1972. [11375]

COEN, RENA NEUMANN. [Maj. Lawrence] Taliaferro [1794-1871] Portrait: Was It Painted by Catlin? Minn. Hist., Winter 1971. [11376]

- COHEN, RONALD D. The New England Colonies and the Dutch Recapture of New York, 1673-1674. N.-Y. Hist. Soc. Q., Jan. 1972. [11377]
- COLLINS, HELEN. The League of the Iroquois. W. Pa. Hist. Mag., Apr. 1972. [11378]
- CUTLER, WILLIAM W., III. Status, Values and the Education of the Poor: The Trustees of The New York Public School Society, 1805-1853. Am. Q., Mar. 1972. [11379]
- DUDDEN, FAYE. Asa Eastwood and His Diaries, 1806-1870. Courier (Syracuse), Oct. 1971. [11380]
- FAULKNER, JOSEPH W. Painters at the Hall of Expositions, 1890. Chicago Hist., Spring 1972. [11381]
- FEHL, PHILIPP. John Trumbull and Robert Ball Hughes's Restoration of the Statue of Pitt the Elder. N.-Y. Hist. Soc. Q., Jan. 1972. [11382]
- FENTON, WILLIAM N. The New York State Wampum Collection: The Case for the Integrity of Cultural Treasures. Proc. Am. Phil. Soc., no. 6, 1971. [11383]
- FLIPPPELLI, RONALD L. Labor Manuscripts in the Pennsylvania State University Library. Labor Hist., Winter 1972. [11384]
- FOWLER, WILLIAM M., JR. A Yankee Peddler [David Hill], Nonimportation, and the New York Merchants [1770-72]. N.-Y. Hist. Soc. Q., Apr. 1972. [11385]
- GILCHRIST, AGNES ADDISON. John McComb, Sr. and Jr., in New York, 1784-1799. J. Soc. Architectural Historians, Mar. 1972. [11386]
- HAHN, EDWARD H. Science in Pittsburgh, 1813-1848. W. Pa. Hist. Mag., Jan. 1972. [11387]
- HANSON, LEE, and HSU, DICK PING. Nineteenth Century Transfer Printed Earthenwares from Rome, New York. Hist. Arch., 1971. [11388]
- HANYAN, CRAIG R. DeWitt Clinton and Partisanship: The Development of Clintonianism from 1811 to 1820. N.-Y. Hist. Soc. Q., Apr. 1972. [11389]
- HEALY, KATHLEEN. The Early History of the Sisters of Mercy in Western Pennsylvania [1843-]. W. Pa. Hist. Mag., Apr. 1972. [11390]
- HEIGES, GEORGE L. Lancaster 1870: Celebrated People Lectured in the City One Hundred Years Ago. J. Lancaster Co. [Pa.] Hist. Soc., Trinity 1970. [11391]
- HELLER, MARY BELLE STAHR. College Hill in the 80's and 90's: Memoirs of a Franklin and Marshall Faculty Daughter. J. Lancaster Co. [Pa.] Hist. Soc., Hilarymas 1971. [11392]
- HENWOOD, JAMES N. J. Experiment in Relief: The Civil Works Administration in Pennsylvania, 1933-34. Pa. Hist., Jan. 1972. [11393]
- HESSEN, ROBERT. Charles M. Schwab, President of United States Steel, 1901-1904. Pa. Mag. Hist. Biog., Apr. 1972. [11394]
- JANNITZ, JOHN. Lyman A. Spalding [1800-85], The Samuel Pepsys of Lockport, New York. Courier (Syracuse), Apr. 1971. [11395]
- JANNITZ, JOHN. The Osborne Family Papers: Spotlight on Thomas Mott Osborne [1859-1926]. Courier (Syracuse), Jan. 1971. [11396]
- MCCUSKER, JOHN J. Sources of Investment Capital in the Colonial Philadelphia Shipping Industry. J. Ec. Hist., Mar. 1972. [11397]
- MACKEY, PHILIP ENGLISH. Law and Order, 1877: Philadelphia's Response to the Railroad Riots. Pa. Mag. Hist. Biog., Apr. 1972. [11398]
- MCMAHON, REGINALD. The Achter Col Colony on the Hackensack [1641-43]. N. J. Hist., Winter 1971. [11399]
- MILLER, ERNEST C., and STRATTON, T. K. Oildom's Photographic Historian [John Aked Mather, 1829-1915]. W. Pa. Hist. Mag., Jan. 1972. [11400]
- MODELL, JOHN. The Peopling of a Working-Class Ward: Reading, Pennsylvania, 1850. J. Soc. Hist., Fall 1971. [11401]
- MOORHEAD, JAMES H. Henry J. Van Dyke, Sr. [1822-91]: Conservative Apostle of a Broad Church. J. Presb. Hist., Spring 1972. [11402]
- MUSSEY, EDGAR A. Church of St. Anthony of Padua, 1870-1919. J. Lancaster Co. [Pa.] Hist. Soc., Michaelmas 1970. [11403]
- NELSON, DANIEL, and CAMPBELL, STUART. Taylorism versus Welfare Work in American Industry: H. L. Gannt and the Bancrofts. Bus. Hist. R., Spring 1972. [11404]
- OBLINGER, CARL D. Ellipses, the Black Masses, and Local Elan: A Review of the Sources for a History of the Antebellum Negro in Southeastern Pennsylvania. J. Lancaster Co. [Pa.] Hist. Soc., Trinity 1970. [11405]
- PINGEON, FRANCES D. Dissenting Attitudes toward the Negro in New Jersey, 1837. N. J. Hist., Winter 1971. [11406]
- RENINGER, MARION WALLACE. Alice [Appenzeller, 1885-1950] of Korea. J. Lancaster Co. [Pa.] Hist. Soc., Trinity 1970. [11407]
- ROBERTSON, CONSTANCE NOYES. The Perfectionist Standard: Reading and Study in the Oneida Community. Courier (Syracuse), Jan. 1971. [11408]
- ROSENBERGER, HOMER T. The Passing of a Great Lady: Mrs. Harriet Lane Johnston [d. 1903]. J. Lancaster Co. [Pa.] Hist. Soc., Hilarymas 1971. [11409]
- ROWLEY, WILLIAM E. The Irish Aristocracy of Albany, 1798-1878. N. Y. Hist., July 1971. [11410]
- SEAVOY, RONALD E. Laws to Encourage Manufacturing: New York Policy and the 1811 General Incorporation Statute. Bus. Hist. R., Spring 1972. [11411]
- SHANKMAN, ARNOLD. John P. Penney, Harry White, and the 1864 Pennsylvania Senate Deadlock. W. Pa. Hist. Mag., Jan. 1972. [11412]
- SHARP, MYRON B. The California Furnace [1850-59] and the Iron Industry. W. Pa. Hist. Mag., Apr. 1972. [11413]
- SHRYOCK, RICHARD HARRISON. The Medical Reputation of Benjamin Rush: Contrasts over Two Centuries. Bull. Hist. Medicine, Jan. 1972. [11414]
- SIEGEL, FRED, and FRANK, ALEX. Quantification and Early New York History: A Report on a Conference. Hist. Methods Newsletter, Mar. 1972. [11415]
- STEIN, JUDITH. The Impact of the New Deal on New York Politics: Kenneth Simpson and the Republican Party. N.-Y. Hist. Soc. Q., Jan. 1972. [11416]

STEWART, JOHN D., II. The Great Winnebago Chieftan: Simon Cameron's Rise to Power, 1860-1867. Pa. Hist., Jan. 1972. [11417]

SWETNAM, GEORGE. Where Did George Croghan Die [1782]? W. Pa. Hist. Mag., Jan. 1972. [11418]

WEIGLEY, EMMA SEIFRIT. The Philadelphia Chef [Sarah Tyson Heston Rorer, 1849-1937]: Mastering the Art of Philadelphia Cookery. Pa. Mag. Hist. Biog., Apr. 1972. [11419]

WILKENFELD, BRUCE M. The New York City Common Council, 1689-1800. N.Y. Hist., July 1971. [11420]

WILLIAMS, RONALD J., and KETCHUM, CARLTON G. [William Hervey Allen, 1889-1949]: A Modern Fenimore Cooper and Dr. Johnson. W. Pa. Hist. Mag., Apr. 1972. [11421]

UNITED STATES: THE SOUTH

ALLAN, ANNE ALDEN. Patriots and Loyalists: The Choice of Political Allegiances by the Members of Maryland's Proprietary Elite. J. S. Hist., May 1972. [11422]

AMMERMAN, DAVID. Annapolis and the First Continental Congress: A Note on the Committee System in Revolutionary America. Md. Hist. Mag., Summer 1971. [11423]

ASCHER, ROBERT, and FAIRBANKS, CHARLES H. Excavation of a Slave Cabin: Georgia, U.S.A. Hist. Arch., 1971. [11424]

AXELROD, BERNARD. St. Louis and the Mexican Revolutionaries, 1905-1906. Bull. Mo. Hist. Soc., Jan. 1972. [11425]

BAILEY, ROBERT J. Theodore G. Bilbo and the Senatorial Election of 1934. S. Q., Oct. 1971. [11426]

BALANOFF, ELIZABETH. Negro Legislators in the North Carolina General Assembly, July, 1868-February, 1972. N.C. Hist. R., Winter 1972. [11427]

BARBOUR, PHILIP L. The Earliest Reconnaissance of the Chesapeake Bay Area: Captain John Smith's Map and Indian Vocabulary, Part II. Va. Mag. Hist. Biog., Jan. 1972. [11428]

BARBOUR, PHILIP L. A Possible Clue to Samuel Argall's Pre-Jamestown Activities [note]. WMQ, Apr. 1972. [11429]

BATES, J. LEONARD. The "Kingfish" [Huey Long] Seen Through Oral History [r. art.]. Historian, Nov. 1971. [11430]

BAUER, GERALD. The Quest for Religious Freedom in Virginia. Hist. Mag. Prot. Epis. Church, Mar. 1972. [11431]

BIGGER, JEANNE RIDGWAY. Jack Daniel [ca. 1848-1911] Distillery and Lynchburg: A Visit to Moore County, Tenn. Tenn. Hist. Q., Spring 1972. [11432]

BISHKO, LUCRETIA RAMSEY. John S. Skinner Visits the Virginia Springs, 1847. Va. Mag. Hist. Biog., Apr. 1972. [11433]

BISHOP, CHARLES C. The Pro-Slavery Argument Reconsidered: James Henley Thornwell, Millennial Abolitionist. S.C. Hist. Mag., Jan. 1972. [11434]

BOLSTER, PAUL D. Christian Socialism Comes to Georgia: The Christian Commonwealth Colony [1896-1906]. Ga. R., Spring 1972. [11435]

BONIOL, JOHN DAWSON, JR. The Walton Road [ante-bellum westward movement]. Tenn. Hist. Q., Winter 1971. [11436]

BOWMAN, FOREST J. A Troublesome and Difficult Affair: Surveying the Fairfax Line [1746]. W. Va. Hist., Apr. 1972. [11437]

BROWNELL, BLAINE A. Birmingham, Alabama: New South City in the 1920s. J. S. Hist., Feb. 1972. [11438]

BUCHANAN, WILLIAM T., JR., and HEITE, EDWARD F. The Hallowes Site: A Seventeenth-Century Cottage in Virginia. Hist. Arch., 1971. [11439]

BUCKALEW, ARTHUR R., and BUCKALEW, ROBERT B. Hillsboro's Soldier-Citizen: Horatio Gates Perry Williams [d. 1908]. Ark. Hist. Q., Spring 1972. [11440]

BUKEY, EVAN BURR. Frederick Gerstaecker and Arkansas [1838-42]. Ark. Hist. Q., Spring 1972. [11441]

CALDWELL, DOROTHY J. David Rankin [1825-1910], "Cattle King" of Missouri. Mo. Hist. R., Apr. 1972. [11442]

CLOUGH, DICK B. Teacher Institutes in Tennessee, 1870-1900. Tenn. Hist. Q., Spring 1972. [11443]

CLOWER, GEORGE W. The Mitchell Family Library [1772-1900]. Ga. Hist. Q., Winter 1971. [11444]

COLEMAN, KENNETH (ed.). John Basil Lamar Meets Laura Cobb [1834]. Ga. Hist. Q., Winter 1971. [11445]

COOPER, JOHN MILTON, JR. Racism and Reform: A Review Essay [William F. Holmes' James K. Vardaman]. Wis. Mag. Hist., Winter 1971-72. [11446]

COULTER, E. MERTON. The Great Georgia Railway Disaster: Hoax on the London Times [1856]. Ga. Hist. Q., Spring 1972. [11447]

COVINGTON, JAMES W. Apalachee Indians, 1704-1763. Fla. Hist. Q., Apr. 1972. [11448]

GROUSE, MAURICE A. Cautious Rebellion: South Carolina's Opposition to the Stamp Act. S.C. Hist. Mag., Apr. 1972. [11449]

CRUTCHER, CHARLOTTE. Asiatic Cholera in Jonesboro, 1873. Tenn. Hist. Q., Spring 1972. [11450]

CUBBY, EDWIN A. Railroad Building and the Rise of the Port of Huntington. W. Va. Hist., Apr. 1972. [11451]

DAINS, MARY K. The St. Louis Tornado of 1896. Mo. Hist. R., Apr. 1972. [11452]

DANIEL, PETE. "We are going to do away with these boys ..." [peonage and murder in Jasper County, Georgia, 1921]. Am. Heritage, Apr. 1972. [11453]

DANIEL, W. HARRISON. Virginia Baptists and the Negro in the Early Republic. Va. Mag. Hist. Biog., Jan. 1972. [11454]

DAVIS, CURTIS CARROLL. Dr. [William Alexander] Caruthers [1802-46] Confronts the Bureaucrats. Ga. Hist. Q., Spring 1972. [11455]

DAVIS, MOLLIE C. The Countess of Huntingdon [b. 1707] and Whitefield's Bethesda. Ga. Hist. Q., Spring 1972. [11456]

DAVIS, MOLLIE C. George Whitefield's Attempt to Establish a College in Georgia. Ga. Hist. Q., Winter 1971. [11457]

- DEEN, JAMES W., JR. Patterns of Testation: Four Tidewater Counties in Colonial Virginia. Am. J. Legal Hist., Apr. 1972. [11458]
- DEROSIER, ARTHUR H., JR. Natchez and the Formative Years of William Dunbar [1750-1812]. J. Miss. Hist., Feb. 1972. [11459]
- DEWITT, JOHN H., JR. Early Radio Broadcasting in Middle Tennessee. Tenn. Hist. Q., Spring 1972. [11460]
- DIENER, THOMAS J. A Junior College Idea at the University of Georgia, 1859. Ga. Hist. Q., Spring 1972. [11461]
- DISMUKES, CAMILLUS J. Inventory of a Planter's Estate [Robert Ellison, 1806]. S.C. Hist. Mag., Jan. 1972. [11462]
- DISMUKES, CAMILLUS J. North Georgia College under the Trustees. Ga. Hist. Q., Spring 1972. [11463]
- DORSET, LYLE W., and DORSET, MARY. Rhetoric versus Realism: 150 Years of Missouri Boosterism. Bull. Mo. Hist. Soc., Jan. 1972. [11464]
- DOUGAN, MICHAEL B. Life in Confederate Arkansas. Ark. Hist. Q., Spring 1972. [11465]
- EAVES, RICHARD GLEN. Pro-Allied Sentiment in Alabama, 1914-1917: A Study of Representative Newspapers. Ala. R., Jan. 1972. [11466]
- EISTERHOLD, JOHN A. Lumber and Trade in the Lower Mississippi Valley and New Orleans, 1800-60. La. Hist., Winter 1972. [11467]
- ELLEM, WARREN A. Who Were the Mississippi Scalawags? J. S. Hist., May 1972. [11468]
- ELLIOTT, HERBERT A. Sir Peyton Skipwith [1740-1805] and the Byrd Land. Va. Mag. Hist. Biog., Jan. 1972. [11469]
- FLANNERY, TONI. The Cupples Warehouse Block [St. Louis nineteenth-century architecture]. Bull. Mo. Hist. Soc., Jan. 1972. [11470]
- Florida History Research in Progress. Fla. Hist. Q., Jan. 1972. [11471]
- FORMAN, WILLIAM HARPER, JR. William P. Harper [1834-74] in War and Reconstruction. La. Hist., Winter 1972. [11472]
- FURLONG, PATRICK J. Abraham Baldwin [d. 1807]: A Georgia Yankee as Old Congress-man. Ga. Hist. Q., Spring 1972. [11473]
- GATEWOOD, WILLARD B., JR. Virginia's Negro Regiment in the Spanish-American War, the Sixth Virginia Volunteers. Va. Mag. Hist. Biog., Apr. 1972. [11474]
- GIBSON, GEORGE H. (ed.). The Georgia Letters of John Pierpont, Jr. to his Father [1852-54], Part I. Ga. Hist. Q., Winter 1971. [11475]
- GOFF, FREDERICK R. Jefferson, the Book Collector. Q. J. Lib. Cong., Jan. 1972. [11476]
- GOODRICH, JAMES W. In the Earnest Pursuit of Wealth: David Waldo in Missouri and the Southwest, 1820-1878. Mo. Hist. R., Jan. 1972. [11477]
- GRAHAM, ELEANOR; INNIS, JACQUELINE SIMONE; BENEDICT, SARAH BRYAN; CANNON, OPHELIA COLLEY; and CAYCE, MARY ELIZABETH. Belmont [Ward-Belmont]. Tenn. Hist. Q., Winter 1971. [11478]
- GRAHAM, HUGH DAVIS. Kefauver: A Political Biography [r. art.]. Tenn. Hist. Q., Winter 1971. [11479]
- GRIFFITH, BENJAMIN W. Csardas [Chataqua] at Salt Springs [Georgia]: Southern Culture in 1888. Ga. R., Spring 1972. [11480]
- GUICE, JOHN D. W. Democracy in Colonial Virginia. S. Q., Oct. 1971. [11481]
- HALSELL, WILLIE D. A Bibliography of Theses and Dissertations Relating to Mississippi, 1971. J. Miss. Hist., Feb. 1972. [11482]
- HALSELL, WILLIE D. J. K. Vardaman's Christmas-Tide, 1909. J. Miss. Hist., Feb. 1972. [11483]
- HAMILTON, JEAN TYREE. Abel J. Vanmeter: His Park and His Diary [1865]. Bull. Mo. Hist. Soc., Oct. 1971. [11484]
- HARDEMAN, NICHOLAS P. Portrait of a Western Farmer: John Locke Hardeman of Missouri, 1809-1858. Mo. Hist. R., Apr. 1972. [11485]
- HARRIS, WILLIAM C. James Lynch [1838-72], Black Leader in Southern Reconstruction. Historian, Nov. 1971. [11486]
- HARTDAGEN, GERALD E. The Anglican Vestry in Colonial Maryland: A Study in Corporate Responsibility, Part Two. Hist. Mag. Prot. Epis. Church, Dec. 1971. [11487]
- HAUNTON, RICHARD H. Law and Order in Savannah, 1850-1860. Ga. Hist. Q., Spring 1972. [11488]
- HAY, ROBERT P. Charles Carroll [1737-1832] and the Passing of the Revolutionary Generation. Md. Hist. Mag., Spring 1972. [11489]
- HIGGINBOTHAM, DON. James Iredell's Efforts to Preserve the First British Empire. N.C. Hist. R., Spring 1972. [11490]
- HIGGS, ROBERT. Did Southern Farmers Discriminate? Agric. Hist., no. 2, 1972. [11491]
- HOLLAND, DOROTHY GARESCHÉ. The Planters' House [St. Louis hotels]. Bull. Mo. Hist. Soc., Jan. 1972. [11492]
- HOOLE, W. STANLEY. The Confederate Army at Tallassee, Alabama, 1864-1865. Ala. R., Jan. 1972. [11493]
- HOWELL, GEORGE W. The Buttahatchie Settlers [1815-]. J. Miss. Hist., Feb. 1972. [11494]
- HUSLEY, FABIAN V. The Department of Western Virginia: Guardian of the Alleghenies [1861-65]. W. Va. Hist., Apr. 1972. [11495]
- JONES, THOMAS B. Calvin Jones [1775-1846], M.D.: A Case Study in the Practice of Early American Medicine. N.C. Hist. R., Winter 1972. [11496]
- KELLER, WILLIAM F. Henry Marie Brackenridge, First United States Forester [Fla., 1828-32]. Forest Hist., Jan. 1972. [11497]
- KIRBY, JAMES E., JR. How to Become a Union General without Military Experience [Clinton Bowen Fisk]. Mo. Hist. R., Apr. 1972. [11498]
- LECOMPTE, JANET, and TURLEY, LESTER F. The Turleys from Boonslick. Bull. Mo. Hist. Soc., Apr. 1972. [11499]
- LEMMON, SARAH MCCULLOH. Dissent in North Carolina during the War of 1812. N.C. Hist. R., Spring 1972. [11500]
- LEWIS, CLIFFORD M., and KEMP, EMORY. The Wheeling Suspension Bridge [1847-54]. W. Va. Hist., Apr. 1972. [11501]
- LEYERZAPF, JAMES W. "Nearest by Air to Everywhere": Aviation Promotion in Kansas City, 1925-1931. Mo. Hist. R., Jan. 1972. [11502]

- MACMASTER, RICHARD K. Arthur Lee's "Address on Slavery": An Aspect of Virginia's Struggle to End the Slave Trade, 1765-1774. Va. Mag. Hist. Biog., Apr. 1972. [11503]
- MALONE, MICHAEL T. The Episcopal School of North Carolina, 1832-1842. N.C. Hist. R., Spring 1972. [11504]
- MASON, CAROL, and HANSON, LEE H., JR. Gunflints and Chronology at Ocmulgee National Monument. Hist. Arch., 1971. [11505]
- MATHIAS, FRANK F. Slavery, the Solvent of Kentucky Politics. Regist. Ky. Hist. Soc., Jan. 1972. [11506]
- MIDDLETON, ARTHUR PIERCE. The Colonial Virginia Parish. Hist. Mag. Prot. Epis. Church, Dec. 1971. [11507]
- MIDDLETON, ARTHUR PIERCE. Contributions of William Archer Rutherford Goodwin [d. 1972] to Church History. Hist. Mag. Prot. Epis. Church, Mar. 1972. [11508]
- MILANICH, JERALD T. Tacatacuru and the San Pedro de Mocamo Mission [prehistoric Indian village]. Fla. Hist. Q., Jan. 1972. [11509]
- MILLER, JOHN E. Isaac Charles Parker [1838-96, "hanging Judge"]. Ark. Hist. Q., Spring 1972. [11510]
- MITCHELL, FRANKLIN D. A Progressive's Progress: The Changing Liberalism of Charles M. Hay of Missouri. Mo. Hist. R., Jan. 1972. [11511]
- MULLER, ALBERT C. George MacLaren Brydon [1875-1963]. Hist. Mag. Prot. Epis. Church, Mar. 1972. [11512]
- NASH, GARY B. The Image of the Indian in the Southern Colonial Mind. WMQ, Apr. 1972. [11513]
- NICOLOSI, LOUIS J. The Teaching of Louisiana History in the School Curriculum. La. Hist., Winter 1972. [11514]
- NICOLSON, JOHN. "To Mock My Maker": A Civil War Letter on Freedom of Conscience [Rev. Alfred Augustine Watson to Gen. Joseph R. Hawley, Wilmington, N.C., Mar. 1965]. Hist. Mag. Prot. Epis. Church, Mar. 1972. [11515]
- NIEPMAN, ANN DAVIS. General Orders No. 11 and Border Warfare during the Civil War. Mo. Hist. R., Jan. 1972. [11516]
- OLSON, AUDREY L. The Nature of an Immigrant Community: St. Louis Germans, 1850-1920. Mo. Hist. R., Apr. 1972. [11517]
- PAPENFUSE, EDWARD C., JR. Planter Behavior and Economic Opportunity in a Staple Economy [1690-1776]. Agric. Hist., Apr. 1972. [11518]
- POWELL, WILLIAM S. North Carolina Bibliography, 1970-1971. N.C. Hist. R., Spring 1972. [11519]
- PRICE, WILLIAM S., JR. "Men of Good Estates": Wealth among North Carolina's Royal Councillors. N.C. Hist. R., Winter 1972. [11520]
- RACKLEFF, ROBERT B. Anti-Catholicism and the Florida Legislature, 1911-1919. Fla. Hist. Q., Apr. 1972. [11521]
- REED, MERL E. Lumberjacks and Longshoremen: The I.W.W. in Louisiana. Labor Hist., Winter 1972. [11522]
- RINGOLD, MAY SPENCER. Robert Newman Gourdin and the "1860 Association." Ga. Hist. Q., Winter 1971. [11523]
- ROACH, S. F., JR. The Georgia Gazette and the Stamp Act: A Reconsideration. Ga. Hist. Q., Winter 1971. [11524]
- SHELLEY, DIAN LEE. Tivoli Theatre of Pensacola. Fla. Hist. Q., Apr. 1972. [11525]
- SHOFNER, JERRELL H. The Labor League of Jacksonville: A Negro Union and White Strikebreakers. Fla. Hist. Q., Jan. 1972. [11526]
- SHOFNER, JERRELL H. A Merchant-Planter in the Reconstruction South. Agric. Hist., Apr. 1972. [11527]
- SMITH, JULIA F. Slavetrading in Antebellum Florida. Fla. Hist. Q., Jan. 1972. [11528]
- SOWLE, PATRICK. The Trials of a Virginia Unionist: William Cabell Rives [1793-1868] and the Secession Crisis, 1860-1861. Va. Mag. Hist. Biog., Jan. 1972. [11529]
- SPRAGUE, STUART SEELY. New Madrid, Paper Town of the 1780s. Bull. Mo. Hist. Soc., Jan. 1972. [11530]
- SPRAGUE, STUART SEELY. Richard H. Collins, and His History of Kentucky. Regist. Ky. Hist. Soc., Jan. 1972. [11531]
- STOESSEN, ALEXANDER R. Claude Pepper and the Florida Canal Controversy, 1939-1943. Fla. Hist. Q., Jan. 1972. [11532]
- STOKES, DURWARD T. Adam Boyd [1738-1803], Publisher, Preacher and Patriot. N.C. Hist. R., Winter 1972. [11533]
- STOKES, DURWARD T. The Baptist and Methodist Clergy in South Carolina and the American Revolution. S.C. Hist. Mag., Apr. 1972. [11534]
- STOKES, WALTER, JR. The Schoolmaker, "Sawney" [William R.] Webb and the Bell Buckle Story" [r. art.]. Tenn. Hist. Q., Winter 1971. [11535]
- STONE, JAMES H. A Note on Voter Registration under the Mississippi Understanding Clause, 1892. J. S. Hist., May 1972. [11536]
- STURGILL, CLAUDE C. John Bull's Stinginess in East Florida [1763-84]. Fla. Hist. Q., Jan. 1972. [11537]
- TAFT, PHILIP. The Bisbee Deportation [1917]. Labor Hist., Winter 1972. [11538]
- TROEN, SELWYN K. Operation Headstart: The Beginnings of the Public School Kindergarten Movement. Mo. Hist. R., Jan. 1972. [11539]
- TUCKER, EDWARD L. (ed.). A New Letter by Thomas Holley Chivers [1847]. Ga. Hist. Q., Winter 1971. [11540]
- TYLER, RONNIE C. Fugitive Slaves in Mexico. J. Negro Hist., Jan. 1972. [11541]
- Views of Missouri by an Anglo-American: Letter Published in the Missouri Republican, December 20, 1831. Bull. Mo. Hist. Soc., Oct. 1971. [11542]
- WAKELYN, JON L. Party Issues and Political Strategy of the Charleston Taylor Democrats of 1848. S.C. Hist. Mag., Apr. 1972. [11543]
- WARE, JOHN D. (ed.). Tampa Bay in 1757: Francisco Maria Celi's Journal and Logbook, Part II. Fla. Hist. Q., Jan. 1972. [11544]
- WHITAKER, BRUCE E. The Social Philosophy of Charles A. Ellwood [b. 1873]. N.C. Hist. R., Spring 1972. [11545]
- WIGGINS, SARAH WOOLFOLK. What is a Scalawag? Ala. R., Jan. 1972. [11546]

WILLIS, KATHERINE JACKSON, and ROGERS, WILLIAM WARREN. Robert Hamilton Harris [1842-1925]: Georgia's Wiregrass Humorist. Ga. Hist. Q., Winter 1971. [11547]

WINN, WILLIAM W. Private Fastness: Tales of Wild Cumberland Island [Georgia] and How Modern Times at Last Have Reached It. Am. Heritage, Apr. 1972. [11548]

WOOD, LILLIAN FORDHAM. The Reverend John LaPierre. Hist. Mag. Prot. Epis. Church, Dec. 1971. [11549]

ZIMMER, ANNE YOUNG, and KELLY, ALFRED H. Jonathan Boucher: Constitutional Conservative. J. Am. Hist., Mar. 1972. [11550]

UNITED STATES: MIDWEST-OLD NORTHWEST

AGRIESTI, PAUL A. A Bibliography of Ohio Library History. J. Lib. Hist., Apr. 1972. [11551]

ANGLE, PAUL M. North Avenue Vignettes: The Bookseller. Chicago Hist., Spring 1972. [11552]

BLOOMBERG, SUSAN E.; FOX, MARY FRANK; WARNER, ROBERT M.; and WARNER, SAM BASS, JR. Census Probe into Nineteenth-Century Family History: Southern Michigan, 1850-1880. J. Soc. Hist., Fall 1971. [11553]

BROWN, ELIZABETH GASPAR. Frontier Justice: Wayne County, [Mich.], 1796-1836. Am. J. Legal Hist., Apr. 1972. [11554]

BURBANK, LYMAN B. Chicago Public Schools and the Depression Years of 1928-1937. J. Ill. State Hist. Soc., Winter 1972. [11555]

CASSIDY, CLAUDIA. The Years of Splendor: Chicago's Music and Theater. Chicago Hist., Spring 1972. [11556]

CHEEVER, L. O. Iowans and the Medal of Honor [1861-]. Palimpsest, Apr. 1972. [11557]

CHICAGO HISTORICAL SOCIETY. Fifty Years Ago as Recorded by Newspapers in the Collection of the Chicago Historical Society. Chicago Hist., Spring 1972. [11558]

COHEN, SIMON. Jewish Pioneers [of Cincinnati] in the Big Brothers Movement [1903-]. Am. Jewish Hist. Q., Mar. 1972. [11559]

DRURY, MARTHA HAWKES. John Francis Hamtramck [1756-1803], Forgotten Soldier of Old Northwest. Old Fort News, Fall-Winter 1971-72. [11560]

FLETCHER, RICHARD D. "Our Own" Mary Garden. Chicago Hist., Spring 1972. [11561]

GALLES, D. L. C. The Bank of Nova Scotia in Minneapolis, 1885-1892. Minn. Hist., Fall 1971. [11562]

GREEN, EDWIN A. A Grant Wood [1891-1942] Sampler. Palimpsest, Jan. 1972. [11563]

HARVEY, ROBERT L. Baptists and the University of Chicago, 1890-1894. Foundations, July-Sept. 1971. [11564]

HAVIG, ALAN R. The Raymond Robins Case for Progressive Republicanism. J. Ill. State Hist. Soc., Winter 1972. [11565]

HENRY, JOHN M. A Treasury of "Ding" [Jay Norwood Darling, cartoonist, d. 1962]. Palimpsest, Mar. 1972. [11566]

HUTSLAR, DONALD A., and HUTSLAR, JEAN L. The Log Architecture of Ohio. Ohio Hist., Summer-Autumn 1971. [11567]

JARCHOW, MERRILL E. Hero: Frederick S. Hartman and the Winnipeg-to-St. Paul Dog Race [1917]. Minn. Hist., Winter 1971. [11568]

JOHNSON, LILA M. Found (and Purchased): Seth Eastman Water Colors. Minn. Hist., Fall 1971. [11569]

KECK, JOHN. A Voyage to Louisville [Ky., by automobile, 1903]. Ind. Hist. Bull., Jan. 1972. [11570]

LANDING, JAMES E. The Geometrical Geography of Michigan City, Indiana. Ind. Hist. Bull., Feb. 1972. [11571]

MASLOWSKI, PETER. A Problem in State Promotion and Regulation: The Creation of the Office of Railroad Commissioner of Ohio in 1867. N. W. Ohio Q., Winter 1971-72. [11572]

MILLHAM, CHARLES. W. Earl Hall [1897-1969], Master Editor. Palimpsest, Feb. 1972. [11573]

MYERS, LEE. Illinois Volunteers in New Mexico, 1847-1848. N.M. Hist. R., Jan. 1972. [11574]

NORTRUP, JACK. A Western Whig [Richard Yates, 1850s] in Washington. J. Ill. State Hist. Soc., Winter 1972. [11575]

O'KEEFE, THOMAS M. Chicago's Flirtation with Political Nativism, 1854-1856. Rec. Am. Cath. Hist. Soc. Philadelphia, Sept. 1971. [11576]

PARKER, BOB. The Lights [Fort Wayne Jenney Electric Light Company and General Electric Co., 1881-]. Old Fort News, Summer 1971. [11577]

ROBERTS, CLARENCE N. The Crusade against Secret Societies and the National Christian Association [1867-]. J. Ill. State Hist. Soc., Winter 1972. [11578]

ROCK, JAMES M. A Growth Industry: The Wisconsin Aluminum Cookware Industry, 1893-1920. Wis. Mag. Hist., Winter 1971-72. [11579]

ROSENOF, THEODORE. "Young Bob" LaFollette on American Capitalism. Wis. Mag. Hist., Winter 1971-72. [11580]

SCHUPPE, THOMAS G. Hamlin Garland [1860-1940] of Iowa. An. Iowa, Winter 1972. [11581]

SEARLE, NEWELL. Minnesota National Forest: The Politics of Compromise, 1898-1908. Minn. Hist., Fall 1971. [11582]

SEINEKE, KATHRINE WAGNER. [Alphonse] Mucha's Chicago Poster. Chicago Hist., Spring 1972. [11583]

SWART, STANLEY L. A Memo on Cross-Burning, and its Implications [1924]. N. W. Ohio Q., Fall 1971. [11584]

SWIFT, J. L. The Death of Cyphert Tally [Copperhead, 1863]. An. Iowa, Winter 1972. [11585]

WOOD, MORRISON. A Half Century of the Culinary Arts in Chicago. Chicago Hist., Spring 1972. [11586]

WYATT, CAROLINE COX, and SYLVESTER, LORNA LUTES. The Civil War Letters of Charles Harding Cox [70th Ind. Regt.]. Ind. Mag. Hist., Mar. 1972. [11587]

UNITED STATES: OLD SOUTHWEST

BLACKBURN, GEORGE M., and RICARDS, SHERMAN L. A Demographic History of the West: Nueces County, Texas, 1850. Prologue, Spring 1972. [11588]

BRINCKERHOFF, SIDNEY B. Graphic Arts on the Arizona Frontier: Frontier Soldiers in Arizona. J. Ariz. Hist., Autumn 1971. [11589]

CLARY, DAVID A. The Role of the Army Surgeon in the West: Daniel Weisel at Fort Davis, Texas, 1868-1872. W. Hist. Q., Jan. 1972. [11590]

DAVISON, STANLEY R. The Bannock-Piute War of 1878: Letters of Major Edwin C. Mason. J. West., Jan. 1972. [11591]

GOODRICH, JAMES W. Revolt at Mora, 1847. N.M. Hist. R., Jan. 1972. [11592]

GREEN, GEORGE N. ILGWU in Texas, 1930-1970. J. Mex. Am. Hist., Spring 1971. [11593]

GREENE, JEROME A. The Crawford Affair: International Implications of the Geronimo Campaign [1885]. J. West., Jan. 1972. [11594]

HATCH, HEATHER S. Music in the Arizona Territory. J. Ariz. Hist., Winter 1971. [11595]

HUNDLEY, NORRIS, JR. Clio Nods: Arizona v. California and the Boulder Canyon Act [1928-]—A Reassessment. W. Hist. Q., Jan. 1972. [11596]

KEENAN, JERRY. The Wagon Box Fight [1867]. J. West., Jan. 1972. [11597]

KING, JAMES T. General Crook at Camp Cloud Peak: "I am at a Loss What to Do" [1876]. J. West., Jan. 1972. [11598]

MEIER, MATT S. Dissertations. J. Mex. Am. Hist., Spring 1971. [11599]

MOORE, YNDIA SMALLEY. "We Slept in the Wagon": An Arizona Camping Trip, 1902 by Flora Smalley. J. Ariz. Hist., Autumn 1971. [11600]

MURPHY, LAWRENCE R. The United States Army in Taos, 1847-1852. N.M. Hist. R., Jan. 1972. [11601]

RAMIREZ, NORA. The Southwestern International Livestock Show and Rodeo [El Paso, Texas]. S. W. Stud. (U. of Tex., El Paso), no. 32, 1972. [11602]

ROBERTS, DERRELL C. Robert Toombs' Texas Lands. Ga. Hist. Q., Winter 1971. [11603]

ROBINSON, WILLARD B. The Public Square as a Determinant of Courthouse Form in Texas. S. W. Hist. Q., Jan. 1972. [11604]

RUE, NORMAN L. Pesh-Bi-Yalti Speaks: White Man's Talking Wire in Arizona. J. Ariz. Hist., Winter 1971. [11605]

RUSSELL, C. ALLYN. J. Frank Norris [1877-1952], Violent Fundamentalist. S. W. Hist. Q., Jan. 1972. [11606]

SCHLESINGER, ANDREW BANCROFT. Las Gorras Blancas, 1889-1891. J. Mex. Am. Hist., Spring 1971. [11607]

STOUT, JOE A., JR. Soldiering and Suffering in Geronimo Campaign: Reminiscences of Lawrence R. Jerome [1886]. J. West., Jan. 1972. [11608]

TYLER, DANIEL. Anglo-American Penetration of the Southwest: The View from New Mexico. S. W. Hist. Q., Jan. 1972. [11609]

WAHMANN, RUSSELL. Railroad in the Verde Valley, 1894-1951. J. Ariz. Hist., Autumn 1971. [11610]

WHITE, LONNIE J. Western Indian Battles and Campaigns: Introduction. J. West., Jan. 1972. [11611]

UNITED STATES: GREAT PLAINS STATES

BARISS, NICHOLAS. Gully Formation in the Loesses of Central Nebraska. Rocky Mt. Soc. Sci. J., Oct. 1971. [11612]

BEARSS, EDWIN C. Civil War Comes to Indian Territory, 1861: Flight of Opothleyoholo. J. West., Jan. 1972. [11613]

BEEZLEY, WILLIAM H. Homesteading in Nebraska, 1862-1872. Nebr. Hist., Spring 1972. [11614]

BENNETT, MARJ D. Chisholm School, District No. 22. Chron. Okla., Winter 1971-72. [11615]

COLETTA, PAOLO E. The Nebraska Democratic Campaign of 1910. Nebr. Hist., Winter 1971. [11616]

DAVIS, KATE WINSLOW. Neighbor to the Mortons [reminiscences, 1852-1935]. Nebr. Hist., Spring 1972. [11617]

DELANEY, DONALD J. The Catlin Portrait of General Leavenworth [1834]. Kan. Hist. Q., Winter 1971. [11618]

FISCHER, LEROY H., and FRANKS, KENNY A. Confederate Victory at Chusto-Talasa [Dec. 1861]. Chron. Okla., Winter 1971-72. [11619]

HARKINS, MICHAEL J. George Washington Lininger [1834-1907], Pioneer Merchant and Art Patron. Nebr. Hist., Winter 1971. [11620]

HARTSOCK, D. LANE. The Impact of the Railroads on Coal Mining in Osage County, 1869-1910. Kan. Hist. Q., Winter 1971. [11621]

HINTON, HERBERT E. Function of Leadership in a Small Denominational College: A Case Study [Grand Island College, Nebraska, 1892-1931]. Foundations, Jan.-Mar. 1971. [11622]

KALISCH, PHILIP A. High Culture on the Frontier: The Omaha Library Association [1857]. Nebr. Hist., Winter 1971. [11623]

MINER, H. CRAIG. The Cherokee Oil and Gas Co., 1889-1902: Indian Sovereignty and Economic Change. Bus. Hist. R., Spring 1972. [11624]

MITCHELL, IRENE B., and RENKEN, IDA BELLE. The Golden Age of Bloomfield Academy [1852-] in the Chickasaw Nation. Chron. Okla., Winter 1971-72. [11625]

MONAHAN, FORREST D., JR. Kiowa—Federal Relations in Kansas, 1865-1868. Chron. Okla., Winter 1971-72. [11626]

OLSON, JAMES C. Arbor Day, Pioneer Expression of Concern for Environment. Nebr. Hist., Spring 1972. [11627]

PARKER, WATSON. The Majors and the Miners: Role of the U.S. Army in the Black Hills Gold Rush. J. West., Jan. 1972. [11628]

POWERS, RAMON, and YOUNGER, GENE. Cholera on the Plains: The Epidemic of 1867 in Kansas. Kan. Hist. Q., Winter 1971. [11629]

RILEY, PAUL D. The Nebraska Hall of Agricultural Achievement [1917-]. Nebr. Hist., Spring 1972. [11630]

SHIRK, GEORGE H. The Journal of Private [George H.] Johnson [1850-1932]: A Fragment [19th Kans. Cav.]. Chron. Okla., Winter 1971-72. [11631]

TAYLOR, BLANCHE M. The English Colonies in Kansas, 1870-1895. Hist. Mag. Prot. Epis. Church, Mar. 1972. [11632]

WALSH, THOMAS R. Charles E. Bessey and the Transformation of the Industrial College. Nebr. Hist., Winter 1971. [11633]

WALSH, THOMAS R. The American Green of Charles Bessey [1845-1915, conservationist]. Nebr. Hist., Spring 1972. [11634]

WELSCH, ROGER L. "Sorry Chuck": Pioneer Foodways. Nebr. Hist., Spring 1972. [11635]

WILLIAMS, BURTON J. Trees but No Timber: The Nebraska Prelude to the Timber Cultural Act. Nebr. Hist., Spring 1972. [11636]

UNITED STATES: ROCKY MOUNTAIN STATES

ALEXANDER, THOMAS G. An Investment in Progress: Utah's First Federal Reclamation Project: The Strawberry Valley Project. Utah Hist. Q., Summer 1971. [11637]

ALEXANDER, THOMAS G. Toward a Synthetic Interpretation of the Mountain West: Diversity, Isolation and Cooperation. Utah Hist. Q., Summer 1971. [11638]

ARRINGTON, LEONARD J., and ANDERSON, THOMAS C. The "First" Irrigation Reservoir in the United States: The Newton, Utah, Project. Utah Hist. Q., Summer 1971. [11639]

BALDRIDGE, KENNETH W. Reclamation Work of the Civilian Conservation Corps, 1933-1942. Utah Hist. Q., Summer 1971. [11640]

BOND, M. E., and LADMAN, JERRY R. Tourism: A Regional Growth Phenomenon. Rocky Mt. Soc. Sci. J., Oct. 1971. [11641]

BROCKMANN, C. THOMAS. Correlation of Social Class and Education on the Flathead Indian Reservation, Montana. Rocky Mt. Soc. Sci. J., Oct. 1971. [11642]

BROWN, MARK H. The [Chief] Joseph Myth [1877]. Mont. Mag. W. Hist., Winter 1972. [11643]

CANNON, HELEN. First Ladies of Colorado: Emma Fletcher Thomas [1853-1940]. Colo. Mag., Spring 1972. [11644]

DYCK, PAUL. Lone Wolf [1882-1970] Returns . . . to That Long Ago Time, as Related to Paul Dyck, His Adopted Son. Mont. Mag. W. Hist., Winter 1972. [11645]

ELSNER, JOHN. Reminiscences of Early Denver. Am. Jewish Arch., Apr. 1972. [11646]

FIFE, AUSTIN E. Stone Houses of Northern Utah. Utah Hist. Q., Winter 1972. [11647]

FREEMAN, CHERYL. Wanted: The Honorable William H. Cushman [b. 1839]. Colo. Mag., Winter 1972. [11648]

HARROD, HOWARD L. The Blackfeet and the Divine "Establishment" [Methodist Mission]. Mont. Mag. W. Hist., Winter 1972. [11649]

HOUGH, MERRILL. Leadville and the Western Federation of Miners. Colo. Mag., Winter 1972. [11650]

JACKSON, HAROLD E. Discrimination and Busing: The Denver School Board Election of May 1969. Rocky Mt. Soc. Sci. J., Oct. 1971. [11651]

LAMAR, HOWARD R. Statehood for Utah: A Different Path. Utah Hist. Q., Fall 1971. [11652]

LANGLEY, HAROLD D. The Custer Battle and the Critique of an Adventurer [Charles Frederick Henningsen]. Mont. Mag. W. Hist., Spring 1972. [1165]

LEVINSON, ROBERT E. Julius Basinski [1844-1926], Jewish Merchant in Montana. Mont. Mag. W. Hist., Winter 1972. [11654]

LINSCOME, SANFORD A. Henry Houseley, Versatile Musician of Early Denver. Colo. Mag., Winter 1972. [11655]

MCCARTHY, G. MICHAEL. White River Forest Reserve: The Conservation Conflict. Colo. Mag., Winter 1972. [11656]

MERRILL, STEPHEN A. Reclamation and the Economic Development of Northern Utah: The Weber River Project. Utah Hist. Q., Summer 1971. [11657]

MYERS, REX. Trolleys of the Treasure State [1881-1951]. Mont. Mag. W. Hist., Spring 1972. [11658]

PETERSON, CHARLES S. Albert F. Potter's Wasatch Survey, 1902: A Beginning for Public Management of Natural Resources in Utah. Utah Hist. Q., Summer 1971. [11659]

SIEVERS, MICHAEL A. Sands of Sand Creek [1864] Historiography. Colo. Mag., Spring 1972. [11660]

SIMMONDS, A. J. Water for the Big Range. Utah Hist. Q., Summer 1971. [11661]

STEEN, CHARLIE R. The Natural Bridges of White Canyon: A Diary of H. L. A. Culmer, 1905. Utah Hist. Q., Winter 1972. [11662]

STEWART, EDGAR I. The Custer Battle and Widow's Weeds. Mont. Mag. W. Hist., Winter 1972. [11663]

TAYLOR, MORRIS F. Fort Stevens, Fort Reynolds, and the Defense of Southern Colorado. Colo. Mag., Spring 1972. [11664]

TUCKER, FRANK H. East Meets West: Woodrow Wilson [at Colorado College] in 1894. Colo. Mag., Spring 1972. [11665]

WADSWORTH, NELSON. Zion's Cameramen: Early Photographers of Utah and the Mormons. Utah Hist. Q., Winter 1972. [11666]

WAGNER, OSWALD F. Lutheran Zealots among the Crows. Mont. Mag. W. Hist., Spring 1972. [11667]

WHITE, JEAN BICKMORE. The Making of the Convention President: The Political Education of John Henry Smith [1848-1911]. Utah Hist. Q., Fall 1971. [11668]

WOLFINGER, HENRY J. A Reexamination of the [Wilford] Woodruff Manifesto [1890] in the Light of Utah Constitutional History. Utah Hist. Q., Fall 1971. [11669]

UNITED STATES: PACIFIC COAST STATES

ALWARD, DENNIS M., and ROLLE, ANDREW F. The Surveyor-General Edward Fitzgerald Beale's Administration of California Lands. S. Calif. Q., June 1971. [11670]

BLOEDEL, RICHARD H. The First Bloom of Alaska Statehood, 1915-1916. Alas. J., Winter 1972. [11671]

BOLANZ, MARIA. The Art and Custom of Tlingit Indian Face Painting. Alas. J., Spring 1971. [11672]

BOOTH, LARRY; OLMSTED, ROGER; and POURADE, RICHARD F. Portrait of a Boom Town: San Diego in the 1880's. Calif. Hist. Q., Dec. 1971. [11673]

BURCHELL, ROBERT A. British Immigrants in Southern California, 1850-1870. S. Calif. Q., Dec. 1971. [11674]

CALDWELL, DAN. The Negroization of the Chinese Stereotype in California. S. Calif. Q., June 1971. [11675]

- CARROLL, GINGER A., and CARROLL, J. MICHAEL. Stick Dance. Alas. J., Spring 1972. [11676]
- CROUCH, VOULA B., and CROUCH, D. B. Sculptress in Soapstone [Mary Annis, 1913-]. Alas. J., Winter 1972. [11677]
- DEARMOND, R. N., and SOBOLEFF, VINCENT I. Whalers of Murder Cove [1907-1910]. Alas. J., Spring 1971. [11678]
- DRAZAN, JOSEPH. Alaskan Libraries in Print, 1905-1971. J. Lib. Hist., Jan. 1972. [11679]
- EDWARDS, G. THOMAS. Benjamin Stark, the U.S. Senate, and 1862 Membership Issues, Pt. I. Ore. Hist. Q., Dec. 1971. [11680]
- EDWARDS, MALCOLM. "Substantial, Fire-Proof Edifices . . ." Made So by the Marvelous Invention of the Iron Door and Window Shutters. Calif. Hist. Q., Dec. 1971. [11681]
- FINGER, JOHN R. Seattle's First Sawmill, 1853-1869. Forest Hist., Jan. 1972. [11682]
- FORRER, PAUL, and MONTAGUE, RICHARD W. The "Happening" Art of Eek [elementary school]. Alas. J., Spring 1971. [11683]
- FRITZSCHE, BRUNO. San Francisco, 1846-1848: The Coming of the Land Speculator. Calif. Hist. Q., Spring 1972. [11684]
- GATES, PAUL W. The California Land Act of 1851. Calif. Hist. Q., Dec. 1971. [11685]
- GEIGER, MAYNARD. Mission San Gabriel in 1814. S. Calif. Q., Sept. 1971. [11686]
- GOLDER, FRANK A. "The Attitude of the Russian Government toward Alaska" [reprint from 1915]. Alas. J., Spring 1971. [11687]
- GRANT, H. ROGER, and KYVIG, DAVID E. A Mormon Plan for an Island Kingdom of God [Vancouver Is.]. Prologue, Spring 1972. [11688]
- HARLEY, R. BRUCE. The Beginnings of March Field, 1917-1918. S. Calif. Q., June 1971. [11689]
- HARNAGEL, EDWARD E. The Life and Times of Walter Lindley, M.D., 1852-1922, and the Founding of the California Hospital. S. Calif. Q., Dec. 1971. [11690]
- HAVILAND, JEAN. In the Twilight of Auxiliary Steam [Pacific coast sailing]. Am. Neptune, Jan. 1972. [11691]
- HEATH, VIRGIL, and HUNT, JOHN CLARK. Alaska CCC [Civil Construction Corps] Days. Alas. J., Spring 1972. [11692]
- HILSCHER, HERB. The Heritage Library of the National Bank of Alaska. Alas. J., Spring 1972. [11693]
- HUNT, WILLIAM R. Judge [William B.] Ballou of Rampart. Alas. J., Winter 1972. [11694]
- JOHNSON, WARREN B. Muckraking in the Northwest: Joe Smith [1873-1962] and Seattle Reform. Pac. Hist. R., Nov. 1971. [11695]
- KING, WILLIAM F. El Monte: An American Town in Southern California, 1851-1866. S. Calif. Q., Dec. 1971. [11696]
- KUSHNER, HOWARD I. "Hellships": Yankee Whaling along the Coasts of Russian-America, 1835-1852. New Eng. Q., Mar. 1972. [11697]
- MCMANUS, JOHN C. An Economic Analysis of Indian Behavior in the North American Fur Trade. J. Ec. Hist., Mar. 1972. [11698]
- MIDDLETON, WILLIAM SHAINLINE. Early Medical Experiences in Hawaii. Bull. Hist. Medicine, Sept.-Oct. 1971. [11699]
- Mission San Gabriel Arcángel: A Pictorial Portfolio. S. Calif. Q., Sept. 1971. [11700]
- MURRAY, KEITH A. The Peter Martin Case [1876-77]. Alas. J., Winter 1972. [11701]
- NASKE, CLAUS-M. Planning Never Came to Alaska. Alas. J., Spring 1972. [11702]
- NUTTALL, DONALD A. Gaspar de Portolá [ca. 1716-86], Disenchanted Conquistador of Spanish Upper California. S. Calif. Q., Sept. 1971. [11703]
- OLMSTED, ROGER. The Square-toed Packets of San Francisco Bay. Calif. Hist. Q., Spring 1972. [11704]
- ORMSBY, WARREN. Peeling the Tanoak [Calif., 1895-]. Forest Hist., Jan. 1972. [11705]
- PATTY, STANTON H. A Conference with the Tanana Chiefs [1915]. Alas. J., Spring 1971. [11706]
- PIERCE, RICHARD A. Two Russian Governors: Hagemeister & Yanovskii. Alas. J., Spring 1971. [11707]
- PIERCE, RICHARD A. Alaska's Russian Governors: Ivan Kupreianov. Alas. J., Winter 1972. [11708]
- PIERCE, RICHARD A. Alaska's Russian Governors: Etholen and Tebenkov [1817-50]. Alas. J., Spring 1972. [11709]
- POSNER, RUSSELL M. A British Consular Agent in California: The Reports of James A. Forbes, 1843-1846. S. Calif. Q., June 1971. [11710]
- PROSILD, ROBERT. A Seal for the Government [reindeer drive, 1932]. Alas. J., Spring 1971. [11711]
- PUTNAM, JACKSON K. Political Change in California: A Review Essay. S. Calif. Q., Dec. 1971. [11712]
- ROCKWELL, ARTHUR E. The Lumber Trade and the Panama Canal, 1921-1940. Ec. Hist. R., Aug. 1971. [11713]
- ROPPEL, PATRICIA. Jualin [gold mine, 1895-1923]. Alas. J., Spring 1972. [11714]
- ROPPEL, PATRICIA. Hadley [copper mining town]. Alas. J., Winter 1972. [11715]
- SCOTTER, GEORGE W. Reindeer Journey on the Rim of the Arctic [1929-35]. Alas. J., Spring 1972. [11716]
- SEWARD, FREDERICK W. Eclipse at Chilkat, August 7 1869. Alas. J., Winter 1972. [11717]
- SHOVER, JOHN L. The California Progressives and the 1924 Campaign. Calif. Hist. Q., Spring 1972. [11718]
- STRITE, DANIEL D. Up the Kilchis [lumbering, 1919], Part 1. Ore. Hist. Q., Dec. 1971. [11719]
- STROBRIDGE, WILLIAM F. Book Smuggling in Mexican California. Am. Neptune, Apr. 1972. [11720]
- TOMPKINS, E. BERKELEY. Black Ahab: William T. Shorey [1859-1918], Whaling Master. Calif. Hist. Q., Spring 1972. [11721]

TUTOROW, NORMAN E. Source Materials for Historical Research in the Los Angeles Federal Records Center. S. Calif. Q., Dec. 1971. [11722]

WALSH, JAMES P. Abe Ruef [1865-1936] Was No Boss: Machine Politics, Reform, and San Francisco. Calif. Hist. Q., Spring 1972. [11723]

WARNER, IRIS. Pioneer Banking at Dawson [1898-]. Alas. J., Spring 1971. [11724]

WEBER, FRANCIS J. Mission San Gabriel's Bicentennial. S. Calif. Q., Sept. 1971. [11725]

WEBER, FRANCIS J. The Chancery Archives of the Archdiocese of Los Angeles: An Historical Perspective. Rec. Am. Cath. Hist. Soc. Philadelphia, Sept. 1971. [11726]

WHEELER, MARY E. Empires in Conflict and Cooperation: The "Bostonians" and the Russian-American Company [1780s]. Pac. Hist. R., Nov. 1971. [11727]

WHITE, LONNIE J. General Sully's Expedition to the North Canadian [river], 1868. J. West, Jan. 1972. [11728]

WOOD, RAYMUND F. Juan Crespi [1721-82], the Man Who Named Los Angeles. S. Calif. Q., Sept. 1971. [11729]

LATIN AMERICA

Donald E. Worcester, Texas Christian University

GENERAL

BAER, WERNER. Import Substitution and Industrialization in Latin America: Experiences and Interpretations. Latin Am. Res. R., Spring 1972. [11730]

BORAH, WOODROW, and COOK, SHERBURNE F. La demografía histórica de América Latina: necesidades y perspectivas. Hist. mex., Oct.-Dec. 1971. [11731]

FURLONG, WILLIAM L. Peruvian and Northern Mexican Municipalities: A Comparative Analysis of Two Political Subsystems. Comp. Pol. Stud., Apr. 1972. [11732]

HARRISON, LAWRENCE E. Waking from the Pan-American Dream. For. Policy, Winter 1971-72. [11733]

LEÓN-PORTILLA, MIGUEL. Perspectivas de la investigación sobre la historia prehispánica de México. Hist. mex., Oct.-Dec. 1971. [11734]

MCDONALD, RONALD H. Electoral Fraud and Regime Controls in Latin America. W. Pol. Q., Mar. 1972. [11735]

MEYER, CHARLES A. U.S. Policy Toward Latin America: Where We Stand Today. Current Hist., Feb. 1972. [11736]

NELKEN TERNER, ANTOINETTE, and MAC NEISH, RICHARD S. La Vallée de Tehuacan (Mexique): 12 000 ans de Préhistoire. An.: Ec., Soc., Civil., no. 6, 1971. [11737]

LATIN AMERICA: COLONIAL PERIOD

ASSIS BASTOS, UACURY RIBEIRO DE. Os jesuítas e seus sucessores (Moxos e Chiquitos) (1767-1830) (I). R. hist. (São Paulo), July-Sept. 1971. [11738]

BOYD-BOWMAN, PETER. Two Country Stores in XVIIIth Century Mexico. The Americas, Jan. 1972. [11739]

CAMPBELL, LEON G. A Colonial Establishment: Creole Domination of the Audiencia of Lima During the Late Eighteenth Century. Hisp. Am. Hist. R., no. 1, 1972. [11740]

COKER, WILLIAM S. Spanish Regulation of the Natchez Indigo Industry, 1793-1794: The South's First Antipollution Laws? Technol. Cult., Jan. 1972. [11741]

ELTIS, D. The Traffic in Slaves between the British West Indian Colonies, 1807-1833. Ec. Hist. R., no. 1, 1972. [11742]

JAOCHIM, BENOÎT. L'indemnité coloniale de Saint-Domingue et la question des rapatriés. R. hist. (Paris), Oct.-Dec. 1971. [11743]

MILANICH, JERALD T. Tacatacuru and the San Pedro de Mocamo Mission. Fla. Hist. Q., Jan. 1972. [11744]

MILLONES, LUIS. Pastores y tejedores de los Condesuyos de Arequipa: Un informe etnológico al Concejo de Regencia (1813). Bol. Bibl. Nac. (Lima), no. 57-58, 1972. [11745]

Minutes of His Majesty's Council, October 1742. Bermuda Hist. Q., no. 4, 1971. [11746]

ÓNODY, OLIVER. Quelques aspects historiques de l'économie de l'or brésilien. R. int. Hist. Banque, no. 4, 1971. [11747]

ORBES MORENO, CAMILO. Un santo desconocido en la Nueva Granada. R. Acad. Colombiana Hist. Ecles., July-Dec. 1970. [11748]

RESTREPO POSADA, JOSÉ. Primeros obispos de Santa Marta. R. Acad. Colombiana Hist. Ecles., July-Dec. 1970. [11749]

RILEY, CARROLL L. Early Spanish-Indian Communication in the Greater Southwest. N.M. Hist. R., Oct. 1971. [11750]

RILEY, G. MICHEAL. Labor in Cortesian Enterprise: The Cuernavaca Area, 1522-1549. The Americas, Jan. 1972. [11751]

SHERIDAN, RICHARD B. Africa and the Caribbean in the Atlantic Slave Trade. AHR, no. 1, 1972. [11752]

TYLER, DANIEL. Anglo-American Penetration of the Southwest: The View from New Mexico. S. W. Hist. Q., Jan. 1972. [11753]

VIGIL, RALPH H. Negro Slaves and Rebels in the Spanish Possessions, 1503-1558. Historian, Aug. 1971. [11754]

WILLIAMS, JOHN HOYT. Tevegó on the Paraguayan Frontier: A Chapter in the Black History of the Americas. J. Negro Hist., Oct. 1971. [11755]

LATIN AMERICA: NATIONAL PERIOD North and Central America and the Caribbean

ANDERSON, DOROTHY M. Family Letters of My Great-Grandfather [Charles Francis Middleton, 1830-1865] with Background Notes. Bermuda Hist. Q., no. 4, 1971. [11756]

GARCÍA-PASSALACQUA, JUAN M. Puerto Rico: Whither Commonwealth? Orbis, no. 3, 1971. [11757]

- GONZÁLEZ, LUIS. Microhistoria para multiméxico. Hist. mex., Oct.-Dec. 1971. [11758]
- GOODSELL, JAMES NELSON. Guatemala: Edge of an Abyss? Current Hist., Feb. 1972. [11759]
- JOHNSON, KENNETH F. The 1966 and 1970 Elections in Guatemala: A Comparative Analysis. World Aff., Summer 1971. [11760]
- LAVRIN, ASUNCIÓN. Mexican Nunneries from 1835 to 1860: Their Administrative Policies and Relations with the State. The Americas, Jan. 1972. [11761]
- MACHADO, MANUEL, JR. The United States and the De la Huerta Rebellion. S.W. Hist. Q., Jan. 1972. [11762]
- MEYER, LORENZO. La ciencia política y sus perspectivas en México. Hist. mex., Oct.-Dec. 1971. [11763]
- NEEDLER, MARTIN C. A Critical Time for Mexico. Current Hist., Feb. 1972. [11764]
- SHATTO, GLORIA. The San Blas Cuna Indian Sociedad as a Vehicle of Economic Development. J. Dev. Areas, Apr. 1972. [11765]
- UNIKEL, LUIS, and GARZA, GUSTAVO. Una clasificación funcional de las principales ciudades de México. Demog. Ec., no. 15, 1971. [11766]
- WILSON, DESMOND P., JR. Alternative Futures in the Cuban Revolution. Orbis, no. 3, 1971. [11767]
- WINN, WILKINS B. The Efforts of the United States to Secure Religious Liberty in a Commercial Treaty with Mexico, 1825-1831. The Americas, Jan. 1972. [11768]
- LATIN AMERICA: NATIONAL PERIOD
South America
- ABADIE-AICARDI, ANIBAL. Recordando a Andrés Bello. Nuestra hist. (Buenos Aires), Sept. 1970. [11769]
- ANGELL, ALAN. Allende's First Year in Chile. Current Hist., Feb. 1972. [11770]
- AVELLÁ CHÁFER, FRANCISCO. El uso de la divisa punzó en la Confederación Argentina: Aspecto eclesiástico. Nuestra hist. (Buenos Aires), Sept. 1970. [11771]
- BENCOMO BARRIOS, HÉCTOR. Campaña de Carabobo 1821. Bol. hist. (Caracas), Sept. 1971. [11772]
- BLASIER, COLE. The United States, Germany, and the Bolivian Revolutionaries (1941-1946). Hisp. Am. Hist. R., no. 1, 1972. [11773]
- CHACON, WAMIREH. Os Krausistas de São Paulo e a questão social. R. Bras. estud. pol., Jan. 1972. [11774]
- DIÉGUES JÚNIOR, MANUEL. Estrutura social brasileira: Aspectos do passado e transformações do presente. R. Bras. estud. pol., Jan. 1972. [11775]
- [Entire issue on La Violencia.] Cristianismo y Soc., no. 28, 1971. [11776]
- FALCOFF, MARK. Raúl Scalabrini Ortiz: The Making of an Argentine Nationalist. Hisp. Am. Hist. R., no. 1, 1972. [11777]
- FORD, A.G. British Investment in Argentina and Long Swings, 1808-1941. J. Ec. Hist., Sept. 1971. [11778]
- GANTIER, JOAQUÍN. Notas sobre la historia del teatro en Bolivia. Nuestra hist. (Buenos Aires), May 1970. [11779]
- GARCÍA ARRIECHE, CARLOS. La Legión Británica en la emancipación de Venezuela y Colombia. Bol. hist. (Caracas), Sept. 1971. [11780]
- GOERTZEL, TED. Generational Differences and Student Activism in Brazil. Sociol. Soc. Res., Oct. 1971. [11781]
- GRAYSON, GEORGE W. Peru Under the Generals. Current Hist., Feb. 1972. [11782]
- GUERRERO BALFAGÓN, ENRIQUE. Espana y los estados americanos del Atlántico Sur. 1831-1852. Nuestra hist. (Buenos Aires), Sept. 1970. [11783]
- HEREDIA, EDMUNDO A. Manuel Moreno al servicio de la corona española en 1817. Nuestra hist. (Buenos Aires), May 1970. [11784]
- JORDAN, DAVID C. Argentina's Bureaucratic Oligarchies. Current Hist., Feb. 1972. [11785]
- KRISCHE, PAULO J. Política económica en la crisis brasileira. Cristianismo y Soc., no. 23, 1970. [11786]
- MERCIER VEGA, LUIS. Chile Under Allende. Survey, Spring 1971. [11787]
- MIRANDA DE SIQUEIRA, MOEMA. Mudança da capital de Minas: uma questão ideológica. R. Bras. estud. pol., Jan. 1972. [11788]
- MORAN, THEODORE H. The Alliance for Progress and "The Foreign Copper Companies and their Local Conservative Allies" in Chile, 1955-1970. Inter-Am. Ec. Aff., Spring 1972. [11789]
- PANG, EUL-SOO, and SECKINGER, RON L. The Mandarins of Imperial Brazil. Comp. Stud. Soc. Hist., no. 2, 1972. [11790]
- PÉREZ MÉNDEZ, CÁNDIDO. ¿Por qué Carabobo? Bol. hist., (Caracas), Sept. 1971. [11791]
- PÉREZ TENREIRO, TOMÁS. El despliegue realista en Carabobo. Bol. hist. (Caracas), Sept. 1971. [11792]
- PÉREZ VILA, MANUEL. Carabobo, batalla decisiva. Bol. hist. (Caracas), Sept. 1971. [11793]
- POPPINO, ROLLIE E. Brazil: New Model for National Development? Current Hist., Feb. 1972. [11794]
- SHAPIRO, SAMUEL. Uruguay's Lost Paradise. Current Hist., Feb. 1972. [11795]
- SMITH, PETER H. The Social Base of Peronism. Hisp. Am. Hist. R., no. 1, 1972. [11796]
- SOARES DE SOUSA, JOSÉ ANTÔNIO. Sarmiento, em Petrópolis, com D. Pedro II. R. inst. hist. geog. bras., Apr.-June 1971. [11797]
- VALENCIA AVARIA, LUIS. Cartas de José Antonio de Lavalle y Arias de Saavedra. Bol. Bibl. Nac. (Lima), nos. 55-56, 1970. [11798]
- VALLA, VICTOR. Os Estados Unidos e a influência estrangeira na economia brasileira: um período de transição (1904-1928) (II). R. hist. (São Paulo), July-Sept. 1971. [11799]
- WHITEHEAD, LAURENCE. Bolivia Swings Right. Current Hist., Feb. 1972. [11800]
- WHITING, GORDON C., and STANFIELD, J. DAVID. Mass Media Use and Opportunity Structure in Rural Brazil. Public Opinion Q., Spring 1972. [11801]

WILLIAMS, JOHN HOYT. Paraguayan Isolation under Dr. Francia: A Re-evaluation. Hisp. Am. Hist. R., no. 1, 1972. [11802]

WINTER, CARL. The Colombian Party Congress. Public Aff., Mar. 1972. [11803]

WITTER, J. S. Um documento para a História dos Preços no Brasil (Descrição e avaliação da Fazenda Ibicaba) (1890). R. hist. (São Paulo), July–Sept. 1971. [11804]

LATIN AMERICA: BIBLIOGRAPHY, HISTORIOGRAPHY, AND ARCHIVAL GUIDES

LOCKHART, JAMES. The Social History of Colonial Spanish America: Evolution and Potential. Latin Am. Res. R., Spring 1972. [11805]

LUBIN, MAURICE A. First Letter from the New World. Manuscripts, Fall 1971. [11806]

MCGANN, THOMAS F. The Social History of Colonial Spanish America: Introduction. Latin Am. Res. R., Spring 1972. [11807]

MEYER, MICHAEL C. A Venture in Documentary Publication: Isidro Fabela's Documentos Históricos de la Revolución Mexicana [r. art.]. Hisp. Am. Hist. R., no. 1, 1972. [11808]

MIRANDA, FRANCISCO. Problemática de una historia eclesiástica. Hist. mex., Oct.–Dec. 1971. [11809]

SPALDING, KAREN. The Colonial Indian: Past and Future Research Perspectives. Latin Am. Res. R., Spring 1972. [11810]

STEIN, STANLEY J., and HUNT, SHANE J. La historia económica en la América Latina. Hist. mex., Oct.–Dec. 1971. [11811]

TOMAN, SUSAN F. Don Salvador de Madariaga: A Provocative Interpreter of Spanish America. S. Atl. Q., no. 2, 1972. [11812]

VÁZQUEZ DE KNAUTH, JOSEFINA. Sobre la síntesis de la historia de México. Hist. mex., Oct.–Dec. 1971. [11813]

VIANNA, HÉLIO. Cartas inéditas de Varnhagen. R. hist. (São Paulo), July–Sept. 1971. [11814]

A GUIDE TO THE ABBREVIATION OF JOURNAL TITLES

GENERAL RULES: Proper names are spelled out with the exception of adjective forms and names of countries used to identify place of publication. Whenever possible articles, conjunctions, and prepositions are deleted. Exceptions are relatively short titles such as Past & Present or The Americas.

|                   |  |                    |  |
|-------------------|--|--------------------|--|
| Abt        | Abteilung  | assyriol    | assyriological, assyriologie, assyriology    |
| acad       | academia, academy  | at          | atti   |
| accad      | accademia  | Atl         | Atlantic                                     |
| adm        | administration, administrative   |                    |  |
| aff        | affairs  | b           | buch (compounds only)                        |
| af-ric     | africain, African  | balt        | baltisch                                     |
| af-rik     | afrikaanse   | bayer       | bayerisch                                    |
| agric      | agricultural, agriculture  | Beitr       | Beitrag, Beiträge                            |
| AHR        | American Historical Review  | Ber         | Bericht                                      |
| aikakausk  | aikakauskirja  | bibl        | bibliotek, bibliotheca, bibliothèque         |
| Akad       | Akademie   | bibliogr    | bibliografice, bibliographical, bibliography |
| Ala        | Alabama  | bijd        | bijdragen                                    |
| Alas       | Alaska   | biog        | biography                                    |
| alemann    | alemannisches  | Bl          | Blatt, Blätter                               |
| alig       | allgemein  | bol         | boletim, boletín                             |
| Altertumsk | Altertumskunde   | boll        | bollettino                                   |
| alttest    | alttestamentliche  | brandenburg | brandenburgisch                              |
| Am         | American   | bras        | brasileira                                   |
| an         | anales, Annalen, annales, annali, annals, annuaires, annual, annuarium       | braunschw   | braunschweigisch                             |
|                   | ancien, ancient  | Braz        | Brazilian                                    |
| anc        |  | brem        | bremisches                                   |
| anthol     | anthology  | Brit        | British                                      |
| anthropol  | anthropologie, anthropology  | bull        | bulletin                                     |
| antiq      | antiquarian, antiquarisch, antiquarischen, antiquité, antiquities, antiquity | bus         | business                                     |
|                   |  | byz         | byzantine                                    |
| antol      | antologia  |                    |  |
| antropol   | antropologiczny  | cah         | cahiers                                      |
| anz        | anzeiger   | Calif       | California                                   |
| appenzell  | appenzellische   | Can         | Canadian                                     |
| arch       | archiven, archives, archivio, archivo, archiv, Archivum                      | Carib       | Caribbean                                    |
| archaeol   | archaeolog, archaeology  | cath        | catholic                                     |
| archäol    | Archäologie, archäologische, archäologischer                                 | cent        | century                                      |
|                   | archeologie, archeology  | cercet      | cercetări                                    |
| archeol    |  | českoslov   | československy                               |
| Ariz       | Arizona  | chron       | chronicles, chronique                        |
| Ark        | Arkansas   | circ        | circle, circular                             |
| ark        | arkiv  | civil       | civilization                                 |
| arq        | arquivos   | class       | classica, classical, classique               |
| arqueol    | arqueológico   | co          | county                                       |
| assoc      | association  | coll        | college                                      |
|                   |  | collect     | collection, collections                      |

|                 |   |                  |  |
|-----------------|---|------------------|--|
| Colo     | Colorado  | germ      | germanistisch  |
| com      | comité, committee   | Ges       | Gesellschaft   |
| comm     | commerce  | gesch     | Geschichte, geschichtliche   |
| comp     | comparative   | gos       | gospodarczych  |
| compil   | compilation, compiled, compiler   | gouv      | government   |
| concl    | conclusion  | grad      | graduate   |
| conf     | conference  | Grafsch   | Grafschaft   |
| cong     | Congress  |                  |  |
| Conn     | Connecticut   | h         | hefte (compounds only)   |
| contemp  | contemporaine, contemporánea, contemporary                                    | hamburg   | hamburgisch  |
| corp     | corporation   | hann      | hannoversche   |
| corr     | correspondence  | hell      | hellenic, hellénique, hellenistic  |
| c. r.    | comptes rendus  | helvet    | helvetian  |
| crit     | critica, criticism  | hess      | hessisch   |
| cuad     | cuaderno  | hisp      | hispanic   |
| cult     | cultura, cultural, culture  | hist      | histoire, historiae, historiallinen, historical, historická, historický, histórico, historicum, historique, historisch, history, historyczne |
| D. C.    | District of Columbia  |                  | hohenzollernische  |
| Del      | Delaware  | hohenzoll | holsteinisch   |
| demog    | demografie, demographische, demography  | holstein  |  |
| dept     | department  |                  |  |
| deux     | deuxième  | iaz       | iazyka   |
| dev      | developing, development   | Ida       | Idaho  |
| dig      | digest  | Ill       | Illinois   |
| dipl     | diplomatic, diplomatique  | illus     | illustrated  |
| doc      | documentation, documents  | ind       | industrial, industry   |
| dok      | dokuments   | Inda      | Indiana  |
| drev     | drevnei   | individ   | individual   |
| dsch     | deutsche, deutschen, deutsches  | inst      | Institut, institute, institution, instituto  |
| e        | east, eastern   | int       | internacional, international, internationale   |
| ec       | economics, economique, economy  | interdisc | interdisciplinary  |
| eccles   | ecclesiastical  | intern    | internal   |
| ecles    | eclesiástico  | introd    | introduced, introduction   |
| ed       | edited, editor  | ist       | istorii, istorijski, istoriski   |
| educ     | education   | istrusz   | istruzione   |
| EEH      | Explorations in Economic History                                       | ital      | Italian, italiana, italienisch   |
| EHR      | English Historical Review  |                  |  |
| ELH      | English Literary History   | j         | journal  |
| Eng      | English   | Jb        | Jahrbuch, Jahrbücher   |
| epig     | epigraphik, epigraphy   | JEGP      | Journal of English and Germanic Philology   |
| Epis     | Episcopal   | jugoslou  | jugoslovenski  |
| estud    | estudios  | jur       | juridical, juridiceski, juridique  |
| et       | études  |                  |  |
| ethnog   | ethnographisch  | kan       | kanonistisch   |
| ethnol   | ethnological, ethnology   | Kans      | Kansas   |
| etnol    | etnologia   | kath      | katholik   |
| Eur      | Europe, European, européennes   | Kd        | Kunde  |
| ev       | evangelisch   | Kl        | Klasse   |
| explor   | explorations  | Ky        | Kentucky   |
| fac      | faculté, faculty  | La        | Louisiana  |
| Fak      | Fakult  | Landesk   | Landeskunde  |
| fil      | filosofia   | lang      | language   |
| filol    | filologia   | lett      | letter, letterário, lettre   |
| Fla      | Florida   | lib       | library  |
| for      | foreign   | Lib Cong  | U.S. Library of Congress   |
| Forsch   | Forschung, Forschungen  | libr      | librarian  |
| fr       | français, French  | ling      | linguistics, linguistique  |
| francisc | franciscanum  | lit       | literary, literatur, literature, literary  |
| fränk    | fränkische  | lübeck    | lübeckische  |
| frankf   | frankfurter   | lüneburg  | lüneburger   |
| g        | giornale  | mag       | magasin, magazine  |
| Ga       | Georgia   | marit     | maritime   |
| gaz      | gazette   | Mass      | Massachusetts  |
| gen      | general, général  | Md        | Maryland   |
| geneal   | genealogy   | Me        | Maine  |
| geog     | geográfico, geographic, geographical, géographique, geographischen, geography | med       | medieval, médiévale, medievals   |
| Ger      | German  | meded     | mededelingen   |
|                 |   | Mediterr  | Mediterranean  |
|                 |   | mél       | mélanges   |
|                 |   | mém       | mémoires, memorie  |

|                    |  |                  |   |
|--------------------|--|------------------|---|
| mennonit    | mennonitische                            | prot      | protestant, Protestantismus             |
| Mex         | Mexican                                  | prov      | providence, provinces                   |
| Mich        | Michigan                                 | PSQ       | Political Science Quarterly      |
| mid         | middle                                   | psych     | psychology                              |
| midcont     | midcontinental                           | pt        | part                                    |
| mil         | militaire, militarisch, military         | pts       | parts                                   |
| Minn        | Minnesota                                | publ      | publication, publishing                 |
| misc        | miscellany                               |                  |   |
| Miss        | Mississippi                              | q         | quaderni, quarterly                     |
| Mitt        | Mitteilung, Mitteilungen                 | quel      | quellen                                 |
| Mo          | Missouri                                 |                  |   |
| mod         | modern, moderna, moderne                 | r         | review, revista, revue, rivista         |
| mond        | mondiale                                 | rass      | rassegna                                |
| Mont        | Montana                                  | Rdsch     | Rundschau                               |
| monum       | monumenta                                | rec       | record                                  |
| movim       | movimento                                | rech      | recherches                              |
| mt          | mountain                                 | regist    | register                                |
| mus         | museum                                   | relig     | religion, religiöse, religious          |
|                    |  | rend      | rendiconti                              |
| n           | north, northern                          | rep       | report, reporter                        |
| nac         | nacional                                 | res       | research                                |
| nass        | nassauische                              | rev       | revolution                              |
| nat         | national                                 | rhein     | rheinisch                               |
| nationalok  | nationalökonomie, nationalökonomisk      | R.I.      | Rhode Island                            |
| naz         | nazionale                                | ric       | ricerche                                |
| N.C.        | North Carolina                           | roc       | roczniki                                |
| N.D.        | North Dakota                             | roman     | romanische                              |
| ne          | northeast                                | roy       | royal                                   |
| Nebr        | Nebraska                                 |                  |   |
| neutest     | neutestamentliche                        | s         | south, southern                         |
| Nev         | Nevada                                   | S.C.      | South Carolina                          |
| newslett    | newsletter                               | Scand     | Scandinavia, Scandinavian               |
| N.H.        | New Hampshire                            | schles    | schlesisch                              |
| niedersächs | niedersächsisch                          | Schr      | Schrift                                 |
| N.J.        | New Jersey                               | schweiz   | schweizerisch                           |
| N.M.        | New Mexico                               | sci       | science, scientific, scientist, scienze |
| no          | number                                   | S.D.      | South Dakota                            |
| nos         | numbers                                  | se        | southeast                               |
| Nor         | Norway                                   | sec       | sectio, section                         |
| nord        | nordisk                                  | ser       | série, series                           |
| norm        | normale                                  | slaw      | slawistik                               |
| numis       | numismatic, numismatique                 | soc       | social, society                         |
| nw          | northwest                                | sociog    | sociographiques                         |
| N.Y.        | New York                                 | sociol    | sociologia, sociological, sociology     |
|                    |  | solothurn | solothurnische                          |
| oeslerr     | oesterreichisch                          | sozial    | sozialistischen                         |
| øk          | økonomie                                 | Soziol    | Soziologie                              |
| Okla        | Oklahoma                                 | spæl      | spølecznuch                             |
| Ore         | Oregon                                   | stat      | statistical, statistics, Statistik      |
| organ       | organization                             | stift     | stiftung                                |
| orient      | oriental, orientalia, orientalistyczny   | stor      | storia, storici, storico                |
| österr      | österreichisch                           | stud      | studi, Studien, studies, studium        |
| Osth        | Osthefte                                 | sup       | superiore                               |
|                    |  | suppl     | supplement                              |
| Pa          | Pennsylvania                             | sw        | southwest                               |
| Pac         | Pacific                                  | Sw        | Sweden                                  |
| pädagog     | pädagogik, pädagogisch                   | Swed      | Swedish                                 |
| paedagog    | paedagogica                              | symp      | symposium                               |
| pap         | papers                                   |                  |   |
| papyrol     | papyrologie                              | tech      | technisch                               |
| parl        | parlementaire, parliament                | technol   | technology                              |
| pfälz       | pfälzische                               | Tenn      | Tennessee                               |
| phil        | philosophical, philosophique, philosophy | test      | testament, testamentum                  |
| philol      | philology                                | Tex       | Texas                                   |
| photo       | photograph                               | theol     | theological, theology                   |
| pol         | political, político, politics, Politik,  | tids      | tidskrift, tidskrift                    |
|                    | politique, politische                    | tijd      | tijdschrift                             |
| port        | portuguesa, portuguese                   | tr        | translated, translation, translator     |
| pres        | president, presidential                  | trans     | transactions                            |
| Presb       | Presbyterian                             | trav      | travail, travaux                        |
| preuss      | preussisch                               |                  |   |
| probl       | problems                                 | u         | und                                     |
| proc        | proceedings                              | U         | University                              |

|               |                              |                  |                                   |
|---------------|------------------------------|------------------|-----------------------------------|
| Unter  | Unterricht                   | westf     | westfälisch                       |
| Va     | Virginia                     | wirtsch   | Wirtschaft, wirtschaftlich        |
| vaterl | vaterlandisch                | Wis       | Wisconsin                         |
| ver    | Verein, vereinigung, Vereins | wiss      | Wissenschaft, wissenschaftlich    |
| Verh   | Verhandlungen                | WMQ       | William and Mary Quarterly |
| Veröff | Veröffentlichungen           | württemb  | württembergisch                   |
| vesn   | vesnik                       | W. Va.    | West Virginia                     |
| vest   | vestnik                      | Wyo       | Wyoming                           |
| volksk | volkskunde                   |                  |                                   |
| vopr   | voprosy                      | yrbk      | yearbook                          |
| vrem   | vremennuk                    |                  |                                   |
| Vt     | Vermont                      | Z         | Zeitschrift, Zeitschriften        |
|               |                              | Zeitgesch | Zeitgeschichte                    |
| w      | west, western                | zgodov    | zgodovinski                       |
| Wash   | Washington                   | zhurn     | zhurnal                           |

---

The American Historical Association

---

Founded in 1884. Chartered by Congress in 1889

Office: 400 A Street, S.E., Washington, D.C. 20003

President: Thomas C. Cochran, University of Pennsylvania

Vice-President: Lynn White, jr., University of California, Los Angeles

Treasurer: Elmer Louis Kayser, George Washington University

Executive Secretary: Paul L. Ward

Assistant Executive Secretary: John J. Rumbarger

MEMBERSHIP: Persons interested in historical studies, whether professionally or otherwise, are invited to membership. The present membership is about 18,000. Members elect the officers by ballot.

MEETINGS: The Association's annual meeting takes place on December 28-30. The meeting in 1972 will be held in New Orleans. Many professional historical groups meet within or jointly with the Association at this time. The Pacific Coast Branch holds separate meetings on the Pacific Coast and publishes the Pacific Historical Review.

PUBLICATIONS AND SERVICES: The American Historical Review is published five times a year and sent to all members. It is available by subscription to institutions. The Association also publishes its Annual Report, the AHA Newsletter, a variety of pamphlets on historical subjects, and bibliographical and other volumes. To promote history and assist historians, the Association offers many other services. It also maintains close relations with international, specialized, state, and local historical societies through conferences and correspondence.

PRIZES: The Herbert B. Adams Prize of $300 awarded annually for a first book in the field of European history. The Troyer Steele Anderson Prize awarded every ten years to the person whom the Council of the Association considers to have made the most outstanding contribution to the advancement of the purposes of the Association during the preceding ten years (next award, 1980). The George Louis Beer Prize of $300 awarded annually for a first book on any phase of European international history since 1895. The Albert J. Beveridge Award of $5,000 given annually for the best book on the history of the United States, Canada, or Latin America. The Albert B. Corey Prize, sponsored jointly by the AHA and the Canadian Historical Association, of $1,000 awarded biennially for the best book on the history of Canadian-American relations or the history of both countries. The John H. Dunning Prize of $300 awarded in the even-numbered years for a book on any subject relating to American history. The John K. Fairbank Prize in East Asian History of $500 awarded in the odd-numbered years beginning in 1969. The Clarence H. Haring Prize of $500 awarded every five years to that Latin American who has published the most outstanding book in Latin American history during the preceding five years (next award, 1976). The Robert Livingston Schuyler Prize of $500 awarded every five years for the best work in modern British and Commonwealth history (next award, 1976). The Watumull Prize awarded in the even-numbered years for a work on the history of India originally published in the United States; beginning this year it carries a cash award of $1,000.

DUES: Annual regular dues are $20.00, student (faculty signature required), emeritus, and spouse $10.00, and life $400. All members receive the American Historical Review, the AHA Newsletter, and the program of the annual meeting.

CORRESPONDENCE: Inquiries should be addressed to the Executive Secretary at 400 A Street, S.E., Washington, D.C. 20003.

---

The American Historical Review

---

Founded in 1895

The AHR is sent to all members of the American Historical Association; information concerning membership will be found on the preceding page. The AHR is also available to institutions by subscription. There are two categories of subscription:

CLASS I: American Historical Review only, United States, Canada, and Mexico $25.00, foreign $27.00.

CLASS II: American Historical Review, the AHA Newsletter, and the program of the annual meeting of the Association, United States, Canada, and Mexico $30.00, foreign $32.00.

Single copies of the current issue and back issues in and subsequent to volume 71 (1965-66) can be ordered from the Business Manager of the Association at $6.00 per copy. Issues prior to volume 71 should be ordered from Kraus Reprint Corporation, 16 East 46th Street, New York, N.Y. 10017.

Correspondence regarding contributions to the American Historical Review and books for review should be sent to the Managing Editor, 400 A Street, S.E., Washington, D.C. 20003. Unsolicited book reviews or review articles are not accepted; a statement concerning reviewing policy will be found in the issue for December 1970, vol. 75, pp. 1889-91. Preliminary inquiries concerning articles are not necessary, though authors may find them useful. Attention is urged, however, to a statement concerning the kinds of articles the AHR ordinarily will and will not publish; it appears in the issue for October 1970, vol. 75, pp. 1577-80. The entire text, including footnotes, of manuscripts submitted for publication must be prepared in double-spaced typescript, with generous margins to allow for copyediting. Footnotes should be numbered consecutively throughout and should appear in a separate section at the end of the text. The editors of the AHR are the final arbiters of length, grammar, usage, and the laws of libel; articles will be edited to conform to AHR style in matters of punctuation, capitalization, and the like. The editors may suggest other changes in the interests of clarity and economy of expression, but such changes are never made without consultation with authors. There is no official style sheet for the American Historical Review, but a convenient general guide is A Manual of Style, published by the University of Chicago Press.

From Sadowa to Sarajevo

F. R. Bridge, London School of Economics
Foreign Policies of the Great Powers Series

The scope and purpose of this important study is to analyse the relations of the Dual Monarchy with the other European powers. The main feature of the series in which it appears is that in addition to a broad analysis of the period covered, extensive use is made of original sources, many of which are reproduced. Dr Bridge here uses material from Austrian and British state archives, which provides new insight into the complex international relations of the period 1866 to 1914.

October 496 pp $20.00

Historians and the Open Society

A. R. Bridbury, London School of Economics

Deals with the conflict between a historian's own expressed political views and the judgements he makes on political events.

August 180 pp $8.25

Class and Ideology in the Nineteenth Century

R. S. Neale, University of New England, Australia

Essays on the theme of authority and aspects of the response and challenge to it made by men and women throughout the nineteenth century.

October 208 pp $9.25

Nonconformity in the Nineteenth Century

Edited by David M. Thompson, Fellow of Fitzwilliam College, Cambridge

Extracts from a variety of sources set Nonconformity in the broader context of social and political history, and reflect the diversity of the Free Churches.

Birth of Modern Britain Series

October 296 pp $10.00 paper $5.00

Routledge

9 Park Street, Boston, Mass 02108

the CRITICAL PERIODS OF HISTORY Series

A stylized black and white logo depicting a hand holding a torch. The hand is shown from the side, with fingers curled around the handle of the torch. The torch is held upright, and a flame is visible at the top. The entire logo is rendered in a solid black silhouette.

Under the General Editorship of Robert D. Cross, University of Virginia, and Paul K. Conkin, University of Wisconsin

---

J.B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY

---

WAR AND SOCIETY

The United States, 1941-1945

Richard Polenberg, Cornell University

The author asserts that World War II radically altered the character of American society: by redefining the relationship of government to the individual; by questioning the relationships between civilians and the military, liberty and security, special interests and national purpose.

TVA AND THE POWER FIGHT, 1933-1939

Thomas K. McCraw, University of Texas, Austin

An illuminating account of the power struggle between the Tennessee Valley Authority and the private power industry, based on sources seldom before used by scholars.

LABOR IN CRISIS

The Steel Strike of 1919

David Brody, University of California, Davis

Against the background issues of unionization and the concurrent Red Scare, the author explains why the great steel strike of 1919 was doomed to inevitable failure.

THE END OF GLORY

An Interpretation of the Origins of World War II

Laurence Lafore, University of Iowa

This analysis of European diplomacy from 1919 to 1939 asserts that World War II resulted largely from the persistence of ideas and institutions made obsolete by World War I.

---

College Department

East Washington Square, Philadelphia, Pa. 19105

---

THE LONG FUSE

An Interpretation of the Origins of World War I

Second Edition

Laurence Lafore, University of Iowa

This study, ranging from 1870 to the outbreak of war in 1914, has been revised to reflect findings of recent historiography.

WHY LENIN? WHY STALIN?

A Reappraisal of the Russian Revolution, 1900-1930

Second Edition

Theodore H. Von Laue, Clark University

The Russian Revolution is viewed as an integral part of European and global history in this penetrating study.

DARKNESS AT THE DAWNING

Race and Reform in the Progressive South

Jack Temple Kirby, Miami University (Ohio)

Focusing on reform movements and race relations between 1890 and 1920, this is the first treatment of the Progressive movement as it swept the South.

McKINLEY, BRYAN AND THE PEOPLE

Paul W. Glad, University of Wisconsin

The struggle between the two protagonists of the 1896 election, portrayed against the issues that sparked the contest.

IRISH-AMERICAN NATIONALISM

Thomas Brown, University of Massachusetts

The nationalistic aspirations of the American Irish and their emergence as a force in American politics, primarily between 1870 and 1890.

---

J.B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY

---

LINCOLN AND THE FIRST SHOT

Richard N. Current, University of North Carolina at Greensboro

A detailed review of the events from Lincoln's arrival in Washington as president-elect in 1861, to the attack on Fort Sumter.

RACE AND POLITICS

"Bleeding Kansas" and the Coming of the Civil War
James A. Rawley, University of Nebraska

Fresh light on the controversies that followed repeal of the Missouri Compromise. The author shows that the real issue was not slavery as such but race.

THE ELECTION OF ANDREW JACKSON

Robert V. Remini, University of Illinois

The first modern presidential election in American history, the personalities who shaped it and the issues: states' rights, internal improvements, tariffs and patronage.

THE NAPOLEONIC REVOLUTION

Robert B. Holtman, Louisiana State University

An exploration of the transition of France and Europe under Napoleon that emphasizes the Emperor's role as a revolutionary innovator who influenced nearly every aspect of political and social life.

All Critical Periods titles available in paperback, $2.45 each. Most titles also available in hardcover.

---

College Department

East Washington Square, Philadelphia, Pa. 19105

---

Books

Spectrum

on American history . . .

Black Reconstructionists

edited by Emma Lou Thornbrough, Butler University

Lays to rest the long-standing myths about the black reconstructionists, and offers a timely and dispassionate reappraisal of our nation's first black political leaders and their role in shaping the America we know today. Selections include the views of the black reconstructionists, the opinions of the apologists of the White South, and the interpretations of modern historians. In the Great Lives Observed Series. Ready, Cloth $5.95 Paper $2.45

John Marshall

edited by Stanley I. Kutler, University of Wisconsin, Madison

Presents a penetrating examination of John Marshall, the "Great Chief Justice" through his own words, the writings of his contemporaries, and the observations of modern historians. Using a three-fold approach, the selections focus on Marshall's legal decisions, his attitudes toward the rights of the individual, and his influence on American life and thought. In the Great Lives Observed Series. Ready, Cloth $5.95 Paper $2.45

---

For Fall/ 1972

The American Tory

edited by Morton Borden, University of California,
Santa Barbara, and Penn Borden

Presents a rare and objective look at the differences between the rebels and the Tories, showing what factors caused each to take their respective positions. Includes writings by Thomas Paine, Samuel Adams, Governor William Franklin, the Reverend Samuel Peters, and others supporting and attacking the Tory position. In the Great Lives Observed Series. Ready, Cloth $5.95 Paper $2.45

From Self to Society, 1919-1941

by Robert Crunden, University of Texas, Austin

Chronicles the change in the basic relationship of the individual to society at large during the period between the two world wars, as it changed "from the self in society, to the self apart from society, to the self submerged in society."

"A readable intellectual history of the period that escapes being pedantic."—Library Journal

Ready, Cloth $6.95 Paper $2.95

Wilson

edited by John Braeman, University of Nebraska, Lincoln

Exploring the life and accomplishments of Woodrow Wilson through the writings of Wilson himself, Theodore Roosevelt, H. L. Menken, Richard Hofstadter, and others, this volume offers a balanced assessment of Wilson's policies, triumphs, failures, and the influence of his programs in shaping the future of the world. In the Great Lives Observed Series. Ready, Cloth $5.95 Paper $2.45

At your bookstore. Teachers, examination copies are available from your Prentice-Hall field representative.

Spectrum  Books

Prentice-Hall, Inc.

Englewood Cliffs, New Jersey 07632

* * *

January 2, 1972—Holt, Rinehart and Winston has transferred all editorial responsibility for its history list to the Dryden Press of Hinsdale, Illinois. After a thirteen year absence the Dryden Press imprint will again appear on an important selection of history textbooks.

* * *

Ready for Spring Adoption

THOMAS HACHEY and RALPH WEBER, Marquette University

VOICES OF REVOLUTION: Rebels and Rhetoric

The impact of numerous revolutionaries is explored through the use of primary sources, pictures and interpretive material. Contributors include: Robespierre, Proudhon, Marx, Tolstoy, Emmeline Pankhorst, Lenin, Leon Trotsky, Thomas Jefferson, Eugene Debs, Emma Goldman, Malcolm X, Gandhi, Ho Chi Minh, Mao Tse-Tung, Fidel Castro, Ernesto Ché Guevara, and others.

November 1972     $4.95 paperbound     300 pages

J. JOSEPH HUTHMACHER, University of Delaware

THE TRUMAN ERA: The Reconstruction of Post War America

Only readings book encompassing the Truman years as a whole, including both foreign and domestic developments. Conservative, liberal, and New Left writers are all represented—the only source that covers the period as a whole.

November 1972     $2.95 paperbound     128 pages

THOMAS C. REEVES, University of Wisconsin, Parkside

MCCARTHYISM

McCarthyism is examined as it related to Senator Joe McCarthy, as it was part of a political movement, and as it was connected with mass movements. A provocative introduction and useful bibliography are included.

December 1972     $3.00     144 pages

DUKE FREDRICK, WILLIAM HOWENSTINE and JUNE SOCHEN

Northeastern Illinois University

DESTROY TO CREATE: INTERACTION WITH THE NATURAL ENVIRONMENT IN THE BUILDING OF AMERICA

Organized chronologically and thematically, this anthology begins with early explorers and proceeds to provide examples throughout our history of how American writers, politicians acted upon and reacted to the changing natural landscape.

November 1972     $5.50     300 pages

THE DRYDEN PRESS, INC.

901 North Elm, Hinsdale, Illinois 60521

USA: An American Record

by Paul Goodman, University of California, Davis, and Frank Otto Gatell, University of California, Los Angeles

150 adoptions this fall indicates USA: AN AMERICAN RECORD has been accepted as a text for both professors and students. Far more than a factual chronicle of a nation's development, USA: AN AMERICAN RECORD leads the student far beyond the events of American history to their root causes. Facts are included but not without analysis to aid the student in his growing appreciation of the historical process.

Now available in two volumes

USA: AN AMERICAN RECORD, Vol. I, 389 pages,

USA: AN AMERICAN RECORD, Vol. II, 419 pages,

For your copy write

$4.00
EACH

THE DRYDEN PRESS, INC.

901 North Elm, Hinsdale, Illinois 60521

Oxford University Press

Booker T. Washington

The Making of a Black Leader, 1856-1901

By LOUIS R. HARLAN, University of Maryland. This brilliant portrait exposes, for the first time, the complex and contradictory private man behind the public image of the great Negro educator. Based on extensive research in the Booker T. Washington Papers, it is "impeccably researched. . . the definitive biography of Booker T. Washington, and a major contribution to the study of black history."—AUGUST MEIER, Kent State University. 8 pages of halftones, frontispiece. $10.95

The American Woman

Her Changing Social, Economic, and Political Roles, 1920-1970

By WILLIAM H. CHAFE, Duke University. Bringing a welcome historical perspective to today's intemperate furor over women's place in society, Professor Chafe tells what has actually happened to women's role in the last half century. "Carefully researched and clearly written. . . the first serious study of the developments which followed the ratification of the Nineteenth Amendment."—ANNE FIROR SCOTT, Duke University $7.95

Between Harvard and America

The Educational Leadership of Charles W. Eliot

By HUGH HAWKINS, Amherst College. Blending biography and social history, the author examines the man and the forces that changed Harvard from a small theological school into a major international center of learning. "A lucid, stimulating account of the most crucial turning-point in the history of American higher education."—LAURENCE R. VEYSEY, University of California, Santa Cruz. 4 pages of halftones, frontispiece. $12.50

The Politics of Depression

Political Behavior in the Northeast, 1893-1896

By SAMUEL T. MCSEVENEY, Vanderbilt University. The Republican party's emergence as the dominant political power from the mid-1890's until the Great Depression is viewed from a new perspective. Professor McSeveney investigates the voting trends of three urban industrial states—Connecticut, New York, and New Jersey—to determine the underlying significance of the "critical elections" of the 1890's. $9.75

Mobile Americans

Residential and Social Mobility in Omaha, 1880-1920

By HOWARD P. CHUDACOFF, Brown University. Professor Chudacoff uses modern techniques of statistical analysis and quantification to reconstruct the texture of life in Omaha during a period of rapid growth. His study challenges the assumption that populations in flux are given to social disorders and instability. 1 map, 15 tables. (Urban Life in America series.) $8.95

The Slave Community

Plantation Life in the Antebellum South

By JOHN W. BLASSINGAME, Yale University. "Based on a rich variety of sources, traditional and new, Blassingame's study carefully describes and analyzes slave cultural forms and behavior patterns in their myriad manifestations. [He riddles] the notion that the slaves had practically no outlet for their creative energies and social instincts."—BENJAMIN QUARLES, Morgan State College. 56 illustrations. $7.95

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS
200 Madison Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10016

Oxford University Press

The Parliamentary Diary of Narcissus Luttrell 1691-1693

Edited by HENRY HORWITZ, University of Iowa. A little-known but extremely informative diary for the 1691-92 and 1692-93 parliamentary sessions, this volume is comparable in scope to the parliamentary diaries of Anchitell Grey, which it rivals in accuracy of detail and coverage of entire debates. 2 figures. $34.00

Reactions to the French Revolution

By RICHARD COBB. The author examines the ways in which the French Revolution impinged or failed to impinge upon individuals, upon their lives, plans, hopes, careers, and material means. Mr. Cobb makes wide use of personal and family case histories, drawn from the judicial records of about fifteen French Departments covering a span of 15 to 20 years before and after the Revolution. $13.75

The Carmen de Hastings Proelio of Guy, Bishop of Amiens

Edited by CATHERINE MORTON and HOPE MUNTZ. The Carmen is the earliest detailed account of the battle of Hastings and the Norman invasion, told from a point of view which is neither Norman nor English, but French. The editors provide a complete English translation and full critical apparatus. 4 plates, 2 maps. (Oxford Medieval Texts.) $15.25

Tertullian

A Historical and Literary Study

By TIMOTHY DAVID BARNES. "Timothy David Barnes's book meets an obvious need, and goes a long way to satisfy it. In his first fifty pages he briskly dismantles the traditional biography of Tertullian. . . . Professor Barnes's treatment is worthy of his theme; his style is always workmanlike, often distinguished, sometimes memorable."—Times Literary Supplement $20.50

The German Policy of Augustus

An Examination of the Archaeological Evidence

By C. M. WELLS. Augustus' policy towards the Germans is examined here in the context of Roman imperialism and the tribal situation on the Rhine and in Germany. In reappraising earlier findings in the light of recent discoveries, the author shows how the conquest of Germany was more systematic and complete than assumed, and that Augustus' aim was not so much the establishment of a defensible frontier as the acquisition of military glory. 15 figures, map. $18.75

The Athenian Empire

By RUSSELL MEIGGS. Few subjects in Greek history have engendered such lively controversy as the nature of Athenian imperialism in the fifth century B.C. This book re-examines in detail all the literary and epigraphic evidence, old and new, to answer the questions: How did the Athenians regard their empire? and How did the "allies" regard Athens? 8 maps. $25.50

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS
200 Madison Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10016

Oxford University Press

The Growth of American Politics

A Modern Reader

Volume I: Through Reconstruction      Volume II: Since the Civil War

Edited by FRANK OTTO GATELL, University of California, Los Angeles; PAUL GOODMAN, University of California, Davis; and ALLEN WEINSTEIN, Smith College. This two-volume collection of forty-two essays traces the evolution of American political institutions from the colonial period to the present. "By far the best collection of essays on the history of American political behavior in existence."—PEYTON MCCRARY, University of Minnesota

1972      Vol. I, 528 pp.      Vol. II, 544 pp.      cloth, $12.50 each      paper, $3.95 each

Readings in American Political History

Edited by FRANK OTTO GATELL, PAUL GOODMAN, and ALLEN WEINSTEIN. This one-volume collection presents twenty-three essays from the editors, The Growth of American Politics. Ranging in time from the colonial period to the present, this work focuses on political history.

1972      544 pp.      paper $3.95

The Crusades

By HANS EBERHARDT MAYER, University of Kiel; translated by JOHN GILLINGHAM, London School of Economics and Political Science. A scholarly and comprehensive history, this work won high praise in its original German edition. Dr. Mayer combines a narrative account of the Crusades with analysis of their cultural and political background and discussion of controversial issues. He questions some previously accepted interpretations and presents a new treatment of such topics as the problem of Indulgence.

1972      256 pp.      3 maps      cloth $10.25      paper $2.95

A History of Russia

Second Edition

By NICHOLAS V. RIASANOVSKY, University of California, Berkeley. "This is a brilliant synthesis, a model of national history. The second edition is even better than the first, which stood as the best of the one-volume histories."—WOODFORD MCCLELLAN, University of Virginia

1969      752 pp.      32 pp. illus.;      30 maps      text edition $9.95      trade edition $15.00

The Rise of Modern China

By IMMANUEL C. Y. HSÜ, University of California, Santa Barbara. "A masterful work of scholarship tracing political, intellectual, social, and economic changes that have affected every phase of Chinese life from 1600 to now."—Foreign Affairs. "A remarkably comprehensive text for mature students."—C. MARTIN WILBUR, Columbia University. A companion to this volume, Readings in Modern Chinese History, featuring forty-nine articles on modern China, is also available. (1971, 720 pp., paper $7.50)

1970      848 pp.      illus.      14 maps      trade edition $14.50      text edition $9.95

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS
200 Madison Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10016

Oxford University Press

A World History

Second Edition

By WILLIAM H. MCNEILL, University of Chicago. "A really outstanding book. . . . Masterly condensations yet also exceptionally clear and understandable."—JAMES G. NUTSCH, California State College, Los Angeles. "Exceptionally fine job with a view toward students' current interest in Asia and Africa within McNeill's historical framework. Splendid achievement."—WALTER J. KELLY, Chicago State University

1971

560 pp.

cloth $15.00 paper $5.95

Readings in World History

Edited by WILLIAM H. MCNEILL and others. The ten paperbound volumes in this series present original source materials chosen to illustrate key points in the history of the world and of the interactions of its separate civilizations. Volumes include: 1. The Origins of Civilization (1968, $1.50) 2. The Ancient Near East (1968, $1.50) 3. The Classical Mediterranean World (1969, $1.75) 4. Classical India (1969, $1.50) 5. Classical China (1970, $1.95) 6. The Islamic World (1972, $1.95) 7. China, India, and Japan: The Middle Period (1971, $2.50) 8. Medieval Europe (1971, $1.95) 9. Modern Asia and Africa (1971, $2.50), and 10. Modern Europe and America (1973, $2.95)

The Ancient Greeks

By CHESTER G. STARR, University of Michigan. "The book is most informative, accurate and is attractive to the non-specialist. The illustrations are beautiful! It will be valuable as a supplement in a history course."—RUTH PAVLANTOS, Gettysburg College

1971

280 pp.

photographs;

maps;

charts

cloth $8.95

paper $3.50

The Ancient Romans

By CHESTER G. STARR. "This is an excellent introduction to Roman history for a survey course. . . . The text gives new and fresh perspectives and the illustrations are especially interesting, unusual, and very well chosen."—JAMES E. SEAVER, The University of Kansas

1971

264pp.

illus.

cloth $8.95 paper $3.50

Early Man

By CHESTER G. STARR. A companion to The Ancient Greeks and The Ancient Romans, Early Man is a general exploration of the earliest stages of human history through the Persian Empire. Part I covers in chronological order the first two stages of man's existence, the food-gathering period and the beginnings of food raising. Part II reconstructs Babylon about 1750 B.C. Part III sketches the consolidation of the Near East in the great Persian Empire. Numerous photographs, maps, and charts, as well as a bibliography are included.

Spring 1973

174 pp.

illus.

cloth $8.95 paper $3.50

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS

200 Madison Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10016

Pittsburgh makes history . . .

THE HISTORY OF THE NAZI PARTY: 1933-1945

DIETRICH ORLOW    The second volume of the definitive study. "A detailed study based on immense documentation, it will be of great value for students of totalitarian regimes" (New York Review of Books). $14.95

DEATH, HEAVEN AND THE VICTORIANS

JOHN MORLEY    "His book is a fitting companion to Jessica Mitford's The American Way of Death" (Book World). $12.95

A TUDOR TAPESTRY: MEN, WOMEN AND SOCIETY IN REFORMATION ENGLAND

DEREK WILSON    A compellingly readable narrative based on sound scholarship and written with an emphasis on exciting personalities. $9.95

THE WILD MAN WITHIN: AN IMAGE IN WESTERN THOUGHT FROM THE RENAISSANCE TO ROMANTICISM

Edited by EDWARD DUDLEY and MAXIMILLIAN E. NOVAK    Original essays tracing the transformation of the myth of the Wild Man into symbol following the discovery of America and the encounter with real primitives. $11.95

THE BULGARIAN JEWS AND THE FINAL SOLUTION, 1940-1944

FREDERICK B. CHARY    A study of the Bulgarian government's policy toward its Jewish citizens, virtually all of whom escaped the death camps. $9.95s

CUBA, CASTRO, AND THE UNITED STATES

PHILIP W. BONSALE    "This is the personal testimony of our last—and certainly our best—ambassador to Cuba" (Library Journal). $9.95

POLITICS WITHOUT PARTIES: MASSACHUSETTS, 1780-1791

VAN BECK HALL    The author demonstrates that, rather than being rooted in personal factionalism, political conflicts before the development of political parties reflected differences in the values of the entire society. $14.95s

THE AMERICAN IDEOLOGY OF NATIONAL SCIENCE: 1919-1930

RONALD C. TOBEY    "In seven episocial chapters, Tobey reconstructs the faltering quest of American science for an ideological rationale and popular support" (Library Journal). $9.95

THE DISPUTE OF THE NEW WORLD: THE HISTORY OF A POLEMIC, 1750-1900

ANTONELLO GERBI translated by JEREMY MOYLE    A definitive study of the debate over whether the New World was an inferior continent, told in readily intelligible and provocative language. $19.95

UNIVERSITY OF PITTSBURGH PRESS

127 North Bellefield Avenue

Pittsburgh, Pa. 15213

New Latin American Titles From Texas

MEXICAN REVOLUTION

The Constitutionalist Years

By Charles C. Cumberland

This study of the years 1913–1920, a sequel to Cumberland's Mexican Revolution: Genesis under Madero, utilizes much new material and brings to it a mature and sophisticated analysis. The result is a major contribution to the understanding of one of the twentieth century's most significant revolutionary movements. Texas Pan American Series. Illustrated. $10.00

THE MEN OF CAJAMARCA

A Social and Biographical Study of the First Conquerors of Peru

By James Lockhart

This study is perhaps the fullest treatment yet published of any group of early Spaniards in America. Part I examines general types, characteristics, and processes visible in the group; Part II contains the men's individual biographies. Latin American Monographs, No. 27. $10.00

X-RAY OF THE PAMPA

By Ezequiel Martínez Estrada

Translated by Alain Swietlicki

The first English translation of Martínez Estrada's incisive analysis of the problems that beset Argentina. Texas Pan American Series. $10.00

UNIVERSITY OF TEXAS PRESS • AUSTIN AND LONDON

Box 7819, Austin, Texas 78712

REAL DEL MONTE

A British Mining Venture in Mexico

By Robert W. Randall

This full account of a single mining venture is a microcosm of early foreign economic penetration into the Mexican mining industry. Latin American Monographs, No. 26. $8.50

TRAGIC CAVALIER

Governor Manuel Salcedo of Texas, 1808–1813.

By Félix D. Almaráz, Jr.

A detailed study of the last major colonial administrator in Spanish Texas. $7.00

CRISIS IN COSTA RICA

The 1948 Revolution

By John Patrick Bell

A historical analysis of the key factors that led to the Costa Rican Revolution of 1948. Latin American Monographs, No. 24. $7.00

If you haven't got any problems in the classroom you need

GREAT ISSUES IN WESTERN CIVILIZATION

SECOND EDITION

Volume I

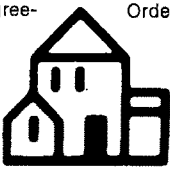

Volume II

FROM PERICLEAN ATHENS THROUGH MARTIN LUTHER | FROM THE ENGLISH CIVIL WAR THROUGH THE COLD WAR
600 pages; $4.95 paperbound; Order Code 31637 | 696 pages; $4.95 paperbound; Order Code 31244

Edited by Brian Tierney, Cornell University, Donald Kagan, Yale University, and L. Pearce Williams, Cornell University

This famous sourcebook concentrates on fundamental controversies in Western history by considering not only what happened in the past but why historians disagree about what happened. Each problem is a carefully organized combination of introduction, primary source materials, and interpretive works by historians. This new edition includes an enlarged preface explaining the nature and causes of disagreements among historians and new sections on Greek science, Christianity and the Roman Empire, and the Cold War. New and substantial essays introduce the problems, defining their historical significance and context. A revised Instructor's Manual provides guidelines for discussion, identification and multiple-choice questions, and suggested essay topics.

Order Code 31244

RANDOM  HOUSE
the college department 201 east 50th street new york, new york 10022

The history of the modern world

Hardbound

1,112 pages; $11.95; Order Code 30356

Instructor's Manual: Order Code 31552

Study Guide: Order Code 31544

Paperbound

Volume I: To 1815; 544 pages; $6.50; Order Code 31652

Volume II: Since 1815; 640 pages; $6.50; Order Code 31651

A SHORT HISTORY OF WESTERN CIVILIZATION

Third Edition

John B. Harrison and Richard E. Sullivan
both of Michigan State University

1971; 1,008 pages; $10.95; Order Code 30245

This highly successful survey, notable for its straightforward style, its clarity and conciseness, not only stimulates and sustains the student's interest but permits the use of collateral reading.

Instructor's Manual and Study Guide.

TWENTIETH- CENTURY EUROPE

Fourth Edition

C. E. Black, Princeton University, and E. C. Helmreich, Bowdoin College

1972; 1,046 pages; $11.95; Order Code 31638

The new edition of the celebrated textbook describing the vast political, economic, and social changes that have altered the face of Europe in the twentieth century.

ALFRED A. KNOPF

the college department 201 east 50th street new york, new york 10022

Chicago Presents

SUPPORT FOR SECESSION

Lancashire and the American Civil War

Mary Ellison

With an Epilogue by Peter d'A. Jones

Dr. Ellison destroys the myth that the British working class supported the North during the American Civil War. The author demonstrates, mainly from a study of the local press, that Lancashire opinion was generally pro-Southern, motivated by a mixture of moral conviction and economic self-interest.

1972

276 pages

Cloth $10.50

AMERICAN JUDAISM

Second Edition, Revised

Nathan Glazer

For this second edition of American Judaism, Professor Glazer has added a new chapter analyzing the dramatic events of 1956-1971. "A remarkable story . . . told briefly and clearly by an objective historical mind, yet with a fine combination of sociological insight and religious sensitivity."—The New York Times Chicago History of American Civilization series.

1972 192pages Cloth $5.95, Paper $1.95

THE AMERICAN MAIL

Enlarger of the Common Life

Wayne E. Fuller

Nearly all aspects of the American past—military, religious, social, political, and economic are reflected in the postal papers preserved in the National Archives. Mr. Fuller's study shows that the Post Office was as much a promoter of American progress as an index to it. Chicago History of American Civilization series.

1972

400 pages

Cloth $8.95

INDIAN LIFE ON THE NORTHWEST COAST OF NORTH AMERICA AS SEEN BY THE EARLY EXPLORERS AND FUR TRADERS DURING THE LAST DECADES OF THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY

Erna Gunther

By combining a study of journals, writings, and sketches made by European traders and explorers who reached the Northwest Coast in the eighteenth century with an examination of artifacts gathered by these early travelers, Dr. Gunther provides a complete picture of the Indian groups of the area.

1972

320 pages

illus.

Cloth

$15.00

CRUSADE FOR JUSTICE

Autobiography of Ida B. Wells

Edited by Alfreda M. Duster

"An illuminating narrative of a zealous race-conscious, civic and church-minded black woman reformer, whose life story is a significant chapter in the history of Negro-White relations."—Negro History Bulletin Negro American Biographies and Autobiographies series.

Cloth edition (1970), $14.50.

1972 xxxii, 434 pages Paper $3.95

THE SOUTHERN LADY

From Pedestal to Politics, 1830-1930

Anne Firor Scott

"This well-written, soundly documented study of upper- and middle-class southern women fills a gap in scholarship and makes a most welcome addition to social and cultural history."—The Journal of American History Cloth edition (1970), $5.95.

1972 xv, 247 pages Paper $2.45

The University of Chicago Press

Chicago 60637

IN A QUANDARY?

Up to your neck in unsolicited examination copies that all look alike?

On the following four pages of American Historical Review are descriptions of new and backlist Scribner books that may be suitable to upcoming second semester/quarter courses. While representative, this is by no means all of the Scribner list. If you are planning a new course syllabus, write or call collect to the Regional Information Center nearest you. Outline your needs, the direction your course will take, the level of difficulty you expect your students to be prepared for. Our Regional Managers will suggest titles from the Scribner College List, Scribners University Library, and The Scribner Library. Examination copies of books pinpointed to your courses will then be sent to you.

JOHN AHRENS

(Mid-West)
4855 Wickford East
Sylvania, Ohio 43560
(419) 882-7618

THOMAS EPLEY

(Southeast)
1916 East Lee Street
Pensacola, Fla. 32503
(904) 434-1309

PETER GIVLER

(Southwest and West)
4309 Clarissa Avenue
Los Angeles, California 90027
(213) 660-0978

CHRISTOPHER KENWOOD

(Northwest and West)
P. O. Box 238
Point Roberts, Wash. 98281
(604) 945-4227

J. WILLIAM MOFFETT

(Northeast)
Route #1
Burdett, N. Y. 14818
(607) 546-6738

A. M. VAL-HACKETT

400 East 89th Street
New York, New York 10028
(212) 486-4010

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS

597 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK, NEW YORK 10017

THE UNITED STATES

Harold Whitman Bradley, *Vanderbilt University

With the appearance, in early 1973, of the second and final volume of The United States, Professor Bradley completes the work of a decade. This interpretive history emphasizes the political, economic, cultural, and social development at work in the birth and the growth of the nation.

THE UNITED STATES 1492-1877

1972. 447 pages. Color Maps. Cloth $12.50.
Scribners University Library, Paper. $5.95

THE UNITED STATES FROM 1865

1973. 512 pages. Color Maps. Cloth, $12.50
Scribners University Library, Paper. $5.95

RELIGION IN AMERICA,

Second Edition

Winthrop S. Hudson, *University of Rochester

First published in 1965, Religion in America has become the most widely used text in its field. In this revision, Professor Hudson has expanded the book, brought it up-to-date, and rewritten a great deal to take into account new interest in past facets of the American experience. His account depicts the rich variety as well as the common patterns of American religious life. Writing out of his own wide knowledge of the past, the author has been able to handle a complicated story in a fascinating way that awakens interest among readers of almost every level of background and understanding.

Second Edition, 1973. About 450 pages. Cloth, About $10.00
Scribners University Library, Paper. About $5.95

THE GILDED AGE AND AFTER

John DeNovo, Hugo A. Meier,

Gerald G. Eggert, Roger R. Trask

Various documents and contemporary sources taken from one of the least written about important eras of American history: the transition of the United States from an agrarian society into a matured industrial-urban nation during the period between the Civil War and the First World War. Invaluable in a U. S. survey course, indispensable in any course dealing with late 19th century America.

1972. 192 pages. Paper. $1.95

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS

597 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK, NEW YORK 10017

DISRUPTED DECADES

The Civil War and Reconstruction Years

Robert H. Jones, University of Akron

A well-paced historical-political narrative of the civil war and reconstruction years in America. Professor Jones explores the path to war with all of the blunders and unsuccessful attempts at compromise; he looks at the divergent societies of North and South before and during the war; he details the events of the 1860's, naval operations and diplomatic actions as well as the military; finally, after Appomattox, he analyzes the course of Reconstruction. The book is enhanced by a considerable amount of original research into the military, diplomatic, and constitutional aspects of the war. 1973. About 640 pages. Cloth, About $10.00

Scribners University Library, Paper, $5.95

AMERICAN BOARDING SCHOOLS,

A Historical Study

James McLachlan, Princeton University

The first study of an important part of the American experience in education, the creation and development in the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries of the private boarding school for boys. Using the results of his extensive research in new materials, the author depicts the attempts of schoolmasters to reconcile the ideal of the Christian gentleman and scholar with American business values and the demands of the American university. "... a tour de force of both historical research and literary craftsmanship." Journal of American History. 1972. 381 Pages. Photographs.

Scribners University Library, Paper, About $5.95

OUR TIMES

Mark Sullivan

The re-issue in 1971 of Mark Sullivan's classic record of life in the United States from the 1890's to 1930 brought unreserved praise from many sources though Smithsonian did note that "It is a commentary on 'Our Times' (today) that the price of each of the volumes is more than triple the original cost." To enable your students to return to those halcyon times at halcyon prices, the first three volumes are now available in paperback: Volume I—The Turn of The Century, Volume II—America Finding Herself, Volume III—Pre-War America. All six volumes are still available in cloth editions at triple the original cost.

1972. Each volume about 600 pages. Illustrated.

Scribners University Library, Paper. Each $5.95

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS

597 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK, NEW YORK 10017

TOWARD THE FRENCH REVOLUTION

Europe and America in the Eighteenth-Century World

Louis Gottschalk, University of Illinois, Chicago Circle

Donald F. Lach, University of Chicago

Dealing with the period 1715-1789, Professors Gottschalk and Lach develop the thesis that there was an interrelated, trans-Atlantic revolutionary movement in the Eighteenth-century rather than a group of separate episodes. Introductory chapters describe the situation in Europe, the East, and the Americas at the beginning of the century and an epilogue summarizes the French Revolution and the days of Napoleon.

1973. About 200 pages. Cloth, About $7.95

Scribners University Library, Paper. About $3.95

MEN IN CRISIS,

The Revolutions of 1848

Arnold Whitridge

This examination of the various revolutions and counter-revolutions that took place in Europe during the year 1848-49 traces the repercussions of these events on the history of America. Political, racial, and social issues are grouped around certain dominant personalities. Lamartine and Louis Napoleon, Mazzini and Garibaldi, Metternich and Kossuth—these are some of the figures whose shadows loom large. Cutting across the revolutionary movements, Karl Marx, as yet unknown except to a few faithful disciples, is seen inciting the proletarians of all countries to unite and overthrow the social order.

1972. About 384 pages. Scribners University Library, Paper. $5.95

THE RED '48ERS,

Karl Marx and Frederick Engels

Oscar J. Hammen

"The purpose of this book is to relate the political careers of Marx and Engels from their earliest beginnings in their student days until 1850 . . . the author's specific interest in Marx and Engels [is] not as theorists nor even as founding fathers of a very potent political and ideological movement, but only as makers of a revolution. . . . He has managed to weave a skillful fabric of personal and political events, moving nimbly from one vantage point to another. . . . Hammen knows the pertinent political history well and has steeped himself in the details of Marx's and Engel's lives . . . a well written book." The American Historical Review

1969. 428 pages. Scribners University Library, Paper. $5.95

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS

597 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK, NEW YORK 10017

A SHORT HISTORY OF BRAZIL

Donald E. Worcester, *Texas Christian University

A thoroughly new, comprehensive history of Brazil with the emphasis on the background of the people and the society in which they lived. The author, who has studied and taught Brazilian history for many years, highlights continuous themes such as the unique Portuguese influence. A landmark study of the largest Latin American country.

1973. About 412 pages. Maps. Cloth, About $10.00
Scribners University Library, Paper, About $5.95

A SHORT HISTORY OF CUBA

Jaime Suchlicki, *University of Miami

An interpretative history of Cuba from Columbus to Castro with special emphasis on political and intellectual developments. Particular attention is paid in each era to culture and society. The book sheds new light on the background of the Cuban Revolution and the events that brought about this major upheaval. Chronology, glossary, tables, bibliography.

1973. About 412 pages. Maps. Cloth, About $10.00
Scribners University Library. Paper. About $5.95

WATCH FOR FURTHER ADDITIONS TO SCRIBNERS' SERIES OF SHORT HISTORIES OF LATIN AMERICAN COUNTRIES

THE CORRESPONDENTS' WAR

Charles H. Brown, *Pennsylvania State University

Whether the Spanish-American War was the newspapers' war or the New York Journal's war, or Mr. Hearst's war, as has often been said, is dubious. But it is also immaterial, for the press—the newspapers and the correspondents—acted as if it were. Charles H. Brown chronicles the exploits of these men during these years and his story conveys the excitement they created in Latin America and across the United States.

1967. 479 pages. Scribner Library Lyceum Edition. Paper. $3.95

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS

597 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK, NEW YORK 10017

The Changing Politics of the South

Edited by WILLIAM C. HAVARD. What changes were taking place in the 1950s and 1960s? What are Democratic prospects in the no-longer-solid South of the 1970s? This book, the most important study of contemporary Southern politics since V. O. Key's Southern Politics, provides an authoritative state-by-state analysis by these contributors: William C. Havard, Ralph Eisenberg, Manning J. Dauer, Lee S. Greene, Jack E. Holmes, O. Douglas Weeks, Richard E. Yates, Joseph L. Bernd, Preston W. Edsall, J. Oliver Williams, Donald S. Strong, Charles N. Fortenberry, F. Glenn Abney, Perry H. Howard, Chester W. Bain, W. Wayne Shannon. 784 pages, $17.50

Hugo Black

The Alabama Years

VIRGINIA VAN DER VEER HAMILTON. "One can best appreciate Black's career on the Supreme Court only when one has been able to consider the details of his political life before his appointment. For that, I consider Mrs. Hamilton's book to be an indispensable tool."—Herbert L. Packer, The New Republic 344 pages, $10.95

The Gray and the Black

The Confederate Debate on Emancipation

ROBERT F. DURDEN. Winner of the 1972 Jules F. Landry Award. Reconstructs the debate that cut to the heart of what the Civil War was all about for the South: Should the Confederacy sacrifice slavery in an attempt to achieve its goal of an independent Southern nation? The author lets the participants in the debate speak for themselves. 328 pages, $10.95

Latin American Thought

A Historical Introduction

HAROLD EUGENE DAVIS. The most complete survey of the subject yet published, this work is a valuable introduction to the social and political thought of Latin America from pre-Conquest times to the present. The author's major concern is with the revolutionary character of Latin American thought and the national quest for identity that has accompanied it, but he also gives attention to concepts of law, economics, education, anthropology, and ethics. 272 pages, $10.00

LSU PRESS
BATON ROUGE, LOUISIANA 70803

"These three volumes provide fascinating material about the evolution and reversal of national attitudes over the last third of a century — an indispensable set for anyone interested in the mysterious workings of public opinion."— ARTHUR SCHLESINGER, JR.

This vast collection offers for the first time a kaleidoscopic view of changing American political and social thought since the New Deal and is vital for an understanding of almost every aspect of American life since 1935. More than 7,000 Gallup reports covering approximately 20,000 questions are included; more than two million Americans have been interviewed. The Gallup Poll, recognized as the most authoritative and accurate public opinion poll, provides in this compendium a barometer of American public opinion and an invaluable source for scholarship and research.

APPROXIMATELY 2,500 PAGES
THREE VOLUMES, CLOTHBOUND,
EACH 7½" X 9½"

$95.00 THE SET

LC# 77-39867

ISBN 0-394-47270-5

Dr. George H. Gallup, Editor

THE GALLUP POLL

Public Opinion, 1935-1971

RANDOM HOUSE
201 East 50th Street New York 10022

THE WORLD OF THE BLUE-COLLAR WORKER

edited by Irving Howe / $8.95

THE NEW WOMAN

Feminism in Greenwich Village, 1910-1920
by June Sochen / $6.95

THE KOREAN WAR

edited by Lloyd C. Gardner / cloth $7.95 / paper $2.95

THE SUPREME COURT UNDER EARL WARREN

edited by Leonard W. Levy / cloth $7.95 / paper $2.95

CAUSES AND CONSEQUENCES OF WORLD WAR I

edited by John M. Cooper, Jr. / cloth $12.50 / paper $2.95

A READER'S GUIDE TO CONTEMPORARY HISTORY

edited by Bernard Krikler and Walter Laqueur / $10.00

NAZISM AND THE THIRD REICH

Modern Scholarship on European History edited by Henry A. Turner, Jr. / cloth $12.50 / paper $3.45

NEW QUADRANGLE PAPERBACKS

William L. O'Neill, Divorce in the Progressive Era, with a new introduction by the author (QP98) $2.95
Leonard W. Levy, Jefferson and Civil Liberties, with a new introduction by the author (QP97) $2.95

QUADRANGLE BOOKS, Inc.

A New York Times Company • Chicago, 60611

New Penguins in HISTORY

THE IMMIGRANT EXPERIENCE. Edited by Thomas C. Wheeler. Nine narratives—especially written for this book by immigrants or close descendants of immigrants—express “the anguish of becoming American.” The contributors are Mario Puzo, Jade Snow Wong, Harry Roskolenko, William Alfred, Eugene Boe, Jack Agueros, Czeslaw Milosz, John A. Williams, and Alan Pryce-Jones—all talented writers who bring to life the Italian, Chinese, Jewish, Irish, Norwegian, Puerto Rican, Polish, Black, and English points of view. The experiences told here say something important not only about Americanization but also about America itself. $1.25

REGION OF REVOLT. Milton Osborne. A look at recent events in Southeast Asia within the context of the region’s turbulent history. The emphasis is on Viet-Nam, Malaya, the Philippines, and Cambodia. $2.25

PHILIPPE DE COMMYNES: MEMOIRS: The Reign of Louis XI 1461-1483. Translated by Michael Jones. Those parts of the Memoirs that cover the reign of Louis XI, whom Commines served as both counselor and friend. A unique record of Western Europe in the late fifteenth century. $2.95

TACITUS: THE HISTORIES (Rev. Ed.) Translated with an introduction by Kenneth Wellesley. The surviving books of Tacitus’ Histories, in which the great Roman historian reconstructs the anarchy of A.D. 69. $1.65

THE IDEA OF PROGRESS: History and Society. Sidney Pollard. A survey of what men have thought about progress throughout history. Covers thinkers as diverse as Saint-Simon, Macaulay, Spengler, Marx, and Marshall. $1.75

EUROPE SINCE HITLER. Walter Laqueur. A political, cultural, economic, and social panorama of Europe since 1945—the first one-volume work of its kind. $2.95

BRAZIL: THE PEOPLE AND THE POWER. Miguel Arraes. A political history of Brazil. Emphasizes the country’s economic dependence—first on Portugal, now on Britain and the United States. $2.45

For a complete list of Penguin Books in history, write:

PENGUIN BOOKS INC

7110 Ambassador Rd. Baltimore, Md. 21207

Overseas readers write: Penguin Education, Harmondsworth, Middlesex, England.

NOW AVAILABLE

BRITISH LABOUR STRUGGLES

Contemporary Pamphlets 1727-1850

32 Books

Advisory Editor: Kenneth E. Carpenter, Curator, Kress Library, Graduate School of Business Administration, Harvard University

The Kress Library houses nearly 25,000 titles of the early economic and business literature of Western Europe and America. From these primary and secondary source materials, Kenneth E. Carpenter, has selected over 200 scarce, often unique, documents pertaining to the period of the Industrial Revolution in England, and assembled them into the thirty-two volume collection, British Labour Struggles. This collection makes a significant contribution to historical studies; it gives the scholar access to resources which previously were available in only a very few of the world's great libraries. Included are pamphlets, broadsides, letters, booklets and other ephemera which reveal the bitter, sometimes violent conflict within the British labor movement during this period.

Please write for a complete prospectus that gives full information on the collection.

ARNO PRESS

A New York Times Company
330 Madison Avenue
New York, N.Y. 10017

NOW AVAILABLE

AMERICAN WOMEN

Images and Realities

44 Books

Advisory Editors: Annette K. Baxter and Leon Stein

The 44 books in the American Women collection bring women into a new focus, tracing their fight for the participation and the achievement which official records of American life have largely ignored.

Here are prophetesses of good conduct, Sarah J. Hale and Eliza Leslie, and purposeful practitioners of misconduct, Frances Wright and Victoria Woodhull. Also included are such forgotten giants as Salome Lincoln, Marie Zakrzewska, Abbey Hadassah Smith, Mary Livermore, Mother Stewart and two soldiers, Deborah Sampson and Loreta Janeta Velazquez.

American Women: Images and Realities includes histories, autobiographies, regional studies and works of sociology, anthropology, psychiatry, and politics. Here too are the male voices of Thomas Branagan and Thomas Higginson, bridging the nineteenth century and, closer to our own time, books by Mary Beard, Sophonisba Breckinridge, Lorine Pruette and Suzanne LaFollette, anticipating changes to come.

Please write for a complete prospectus that gives full information on the collection.

ARNO PRESS

A New York Times Company
330 Madison Avenue
New York, N.Y. 10017

METROPOLITAN MUSEUM OF ART PUBLICATIONS

in reprint from ARNO PRESS

THE TOMB OF KEN-AMUN AT THEBES

Norman de Garis Davies
(Metropolitan Museum of Art Egyptian Expedition Publications, Vol. V)
1930 / 2 vols. in 1: 208 pages, 24 halftones,
20 foldouts, 9 x 12 / $39.00

THE TOMB OF NEFER-HOTEP AT THEBES

Norman de Garis Davies
(Metropolitan Museum of Art Egyptian Expedition Publications, Vol. IX)
1933 / 2 vols. in 1: 192 pages, 11 halftones,
24 foldouts, 9 x 12 / $39.00

THE BURIAL CHAMBER OF THE TREASURER SOBK-MOSE FROM ER-RIZEIKAT

William C. Hayes
(Metropolitan Museum of Art Papers, No. 9)
1939 / 50 pages, 1 halftone,
8½ x 11 / $11.00

OSTRAKA AND NAME STONES FROM THE TOMB OF SEN-MUT (No. 71) AT THEBES

William C. Hayes
(Metropolitan Museum of Art Egyptian Expedition Publications, Vol. XV)
1942 / 136 pages, 34 halftones,
9 x 12 / $20.00

GLAZED TILES FROM A PALACE OF RAMESSES II AT KANTIR

William C. Hayes
(Metropolitan Museum of Art Papers, No. 3)
1937 / 62 pages, 21 halftones,
8½ x 11 / $13.00

THE TEXTS IN THE MASTABEH OF SE'N-WOSRET-ANKH AT LISHT

William C. Hayes
(Metropolitan Museum of Art Egyptian Expedition Publications, Vol. XII)
1937 / 64 pages, 2 halftones,
9 x 12 / $13.00

THE TOMB OF SENEPTISI AT LISHT

Arthur C. Mace and Herbert E. Winlock
(Metropolitan Museum of Art Egyptian Expedition Publications, Vol. I)
1916 / 228 pages, 35 halftones,
9 x 12 / $29.00

THE MONASTERIES OF THE WADI 'N NATRUN

Hugh G. Evelyn White and Walter Hauser
(Metropolitan Museum of Art Egyptian Expedition Publications, Vols. II, VII and VIII)
1926, 1932, 1933 / 3 volumes: 1,340 pages,
124 halftones, 9 x 12 / $40.00 the set

Part I: NEW COPTIC TEXTS FROM THE MONASTERY OF SAINT MACARIUS

1926 / 380 pages, 28 halftones / $42.00

Part II: THE HISTORY OF THE MONASTERIES OF NITRIA AND OF SCETIS

Edited by Walter Hauser
1932 / 552 pages, 8 halftones / $52.00

Part III: THE ARCHITECTURE AND ARCHAEOLOGY

Edited by Walter Hauser
1933 / 408 pages, 88 halftones / $52.00

THE MONASTERY OF EIPHANUS AT THEBES

Herbert E. Winlock, W. E. Crum and Hugh G. Evelyn White
(Metropolitan Museum of Art Egyptian
Expedition Publications, Vols. II and IV)
1926 / 2 volumes: 802 pages, 49 halftones,
9 x 12 / $80.00 the set

Part I: THE ARCHAEOLOGICAL MATERIAL
by H. E. Winlock

THE LITERARY MATERIAL by W. E. Crum
1926 / 374 pages, 32 halftones / $40.00

Part II: COPTIC OSTRACA AND PAPYRI
by W. E. Crum

GREEK OSTRACA AND PAPYRI
by H. G. E. White
1926 / 428 pages, 17 halftones / $45.00

TEN COPTIC LEGAL TEXTS
A. Arthur Schiller
(Metropolitan Museum of Art, Department of Egyptian Art Publications, Vol. II)
1932 / 126 pages, 4 halftones, 3 foldouts,
9 x 12 / $20.00

BAS-RELIEFS FROM THE TEMPLE OF RAMESES I AT ABYDOS
(Metropolitan Museum of Art Papers,
No. 1, Part 1) and

THE TEMPLE OF RAMESSES I AT ABYDOS
(Metropolitan Museum of Art Papers, No. 5)
Herbert E. Winlock
1921, 1937 / 2 volumes in 1: 98 pages,
14 halftones, 7 foldouts, 8½ x 11 / $20.00

MATERIALS USED AT THE EMBALMING OF KING TUT-ANKH-AMUN

Herbert E. Winlock
(Metropolitan Museum of Art Papers, No. 10)
1941 / 30 pages, 6 halftones, 8½ x 11 / $10.00

THE TEMPLE OF HIBIS IN EL KHARGEH OASIS

Herbert E. Winlock, Hugh G. Evelyn White and James H. Oliver
(Metropolitan Museum of Art Egyptian
Expedition Publications, Vols. XIII and XIV)
1941, 1938 / 2 volumes in 1: 298 pages,
41 halftones, 1 foldout, 9 x 12 / $35.00

THE TOMB OF QUEEN MERYET-AMUN
AT THEBES

Herbert E. Winlock
(Metropolitan Museum of Art Egyptian
Expedition Publications, Vol. VI)
1932 / 204 pages, 44 halftones, 9 x 12 / $29.00

THE TOMB OF REKH-MI-RE AT THEBES

Norman de Garis Davies
(Metropolitan Museum of Art Egyptian Expedition Publications, Vol. XI)
1943 / 2 volumes in 1: 374 pages, 6 halftones,
9 x 12 / $39.00

THE TREASURE OF EL LAHUN

Herbert E. Winlock
(Metropolitan Museum of Art, Department of Egyptian Art Publications, Vol. IV)
1934 / 130 pages, 16 halftones,
8½ x 11 / $20.00

ARNO PRESS

A NEW YORK TIMES COMPANY

330 Madison Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10017

NEW from HARPER & ROW

PERSPECTIVES IN WESTERN CIVILIZATION: Essays

from *Horizon

William L. Langer, Editor

In two volumes, these thirty-five historical essays span topics from earliest times to the present. Distinguished for their historical content and literary style, the selections are vivid and authoritative accounts of important episodes in European history. Each—288 pp.; $3.25. Paper. 1972.

THE ISLAMIC TRADITION

John B. Christopher

Requiring no prior knowledge of Islam, this book corrects the two basic Western misconceptions about the tradition—one views it as a crude, static religion for primitive people, and the other depicts it as a fountainhead of civilization in the Middle Ages. Rather, it is realistically assessed against the richness and variety of Muslim culture. 185 pp.; $2.95. Paper. July, 1972.

SOURCES OF ENGLISH CONSTITUTIONAL HISTORY,

Revised Edition

Carl Stephenson and Frederick George Marcham, Editors

Now in two volumes, this well-established collection of documents relating to the development of English society and its political and judicial institutions is the only work of its kind. Vol. I: From A.D. 600 to the Interregnum; Vol. II: From the Interregnum to the Present. Vol. I: 502 pp.; $6.95. Vol. II: 451 pp.; $6.95.

FRANCE SINCE 1789,

Revised Edition

Paul A. Gagnon

On the previous edition—"[Gagnon] handles his theme with freshness and vigour as well as with sympathetic understanding, and he shows great ability in elucidating the significance of many of the complex movements which come within his compass."—J. P. T. Bury in History / The Revised Edition includes a new chapter on the Fifth Republic through de Gaulle's retirement. 577 pp.; $4.95. Paper. 1972.

Superb writing by two of America's most distinguished historians . . .

MODERN EUROPE

Peter Gay and R. K. Webb

Here is a broadly conceived and cohesive history of Europe since the Renaissance. An extensive introductory essay reviews the legacy of the ancient and medieval world, and a long epilogue deals with postwar Europe. Cultural and intellectual history is emphasized throughout, while the traditional fields of politics, the economy, and diplomacy are treated fully and with close attention to recent historiography, which is also highlighted in judiciously selected lists of readings. To challenge student thought, the book offers definite judgments (and some personal asides) about specific events. Combining narrative and analysis, its expository logic clarifies the entire sweep of modern European history. Europe is viewed as a whole, and events in different countries are compared, not merely outlined as a series of parallel developments. The discussion of Russia and Eastern Europe is unusually comprehensive. There are extensive, well-designed, two-color maps, a number of which are accompanied by essays.

Available in one or two volumes. Complete work: Tentative: 1,152 pp.; $12.95; Cloth. Two-volume edition—Vol. I: Modern Europe to 1815; Vol. II: Modern Europe Since 1815: Each—Tentative: 576 pp.; $6.95; Paper. Vol. I ready January, 1973. Vol. II and the one-volume edition ready March, 1973. Instructor's Manual.

Send for our 1972 catalog of history texts (#CT 54).

1817

HARPER & ROW

10 E. 53d Street, N.Y. 10022

NEW from HARPER & ROW

THE MILITARY-INDUSTRIAL COMPLEX

Carroll W. Pursell, Jr., Editor

This is the first volume to trace the development of the military-industrial complex through a collection of readings that combines scholarly overviews from history, economics, and sociology with documents and analysis from the First World War to the present. Current criticisms, defenses, descriptions, and some statistical tables showing long-term trends are included. The viewpoints presented range from Bernard Baruch to the Truman Committee and from Senators Proxmire to Goldwater. Tentative: 320 pp.; $3.95. Paper. January, 1973.

THE POSTWAR EPOCH: Perspectives on American History Since 1945

Allen Yarnell, Editor

Covering many aspects of our recent past that are rarely treated by historians, these readings focus on political and diplomatic events in the United States since 1945 as well as on a number of topics in social history, including television and politics, violence, ethnic minorities, student unrest, and the women's movement. Among the contributors are Arthur Schlesinger, Jr., Eric Goldman, H. Rap Brown, Walter LaFeber, and Joe McGinnis. Tentative: 384 pp.; $4.95. Paper. September, 1972.

THE LIMITS OF POWER: The World and United States Foreign Policy (1945-1954)

Joyce Kolko and Gabriel Kolko

"One of the most important books on American foreign policy during the Truman Presidency yet written."—Gaddis Smith in The New York Times Book Review / A full-scale examination of American foreign policy in its global context, based on new and previously unpublished sources. Focus is on the way America's leaders viewed specific events and the interaction between Congress and the White House which set the tone and format of the entire postwar experience. 820 pp.; $15.00: Cloth; $5.95: Paper. 1972.

Send for our 1972 catalog of history texts (#CT 54).

1817

HARPER & ROW

10 E. 53d Street, N.Y. 10022

Volume I: Colonial Times to the 1870's
 Volume II: Since the Civil War
 Third Edition

Richard N. Current
 University of North Carolina at Greensboro

John A. Garraty
 Columbia University

Julius Weinberg
 Cleveland State University

Words That Made American History

These two volumes, like previous editions, contain a detailed and broadly representative collection of writings and addresses that have influenced the course of American history from its beginnings to the present. Revised and updated, this edition includes new selections which reflect current social, as well as historiographical, trends. Each selection is complete, and is preceded by a brief introduction on the author which places his work in historical context. This is the only American history reader to incorporate a Study Guide as an integral part of the book. In addition, an Instructor's Manual is included for the first time.

Volume I/paper/518 pages/March 1972/$5.95

Volume II/paper/605 pages/April 1972/$5.95

proven successes

for your American History survey course

New Perspectives on the American Past

Second Edition
 Volume I: 1607-1877
 Volume II: 1877 to the Present

Stanley N. Katz
 University of Chicago

Stanley I. Kutler
 University of Wisconsin at Madison

A thorough revision of what has been described as "the best book of readings on the market." This two-volume edition covers an increased range of topics, and the collection's basic premise — to demonstrate the impact of the social sciences upon historical scholarship — has, if anything, been made more explicit. With more than half the articles new, this is a more readable, more teachable edition: it has been reorganized according to traditional chronology, and both chapter and article introductions have been added to help the student place the essays in context. Once again all articles have been reprinted in toto.

Volume I/paper/446 pages/April 1972/$5.95

Volume II/paper/489 pages/April 1972/$5.95

College Division

Little, Brown

and Company 34 Beacon Street Boston, Mass. 02106

The University of Illinois Press announces publication of the first two volumes in

The
BOOKER T. WASHINGTON
Papers

EDITED BY LOUIS R. HARLAN

"... a major event by any standards. At long last friends, critics, and even enemies of Washington can see him as only his own papers can reveal him. In the papers we can find confirmations of our various opinions of him, but we can also find surprises in the life and views of a man that too few of his contemporaries really knew or understood." — John Hope Franklin

"... the single most important research enterprise now under way in the field of American black history." — C. Vann Woodward

Volume 1: The Autobiographical Writings

Assistant editor, John W. Blassingame

Up from Slavery, The Story of My Life and Work, and six other autobiographical writings. 506 pages. Illustrated. $15.00

Volume 2: 1860-89

Assistant editors, Pete Daniel, Stuart B. Kaufman, Raymond W. Smock, and William M. Welty

Over 400 selected and annotated documents, including letters, speeches, articles, and other writings from shortly after Washington's birth in 1856 to the death of his second wife in 1889. 590 pages. Illustrated. Maps. Bibliography. $15.00

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS PRESS Urbana Chicago London

Power to Dissolve

This book centers on the functioning of the courts and committees of the Roman Curia in the dissolution of marriage. Jurisprudentially an examination of a legal system, it is a book about the persons in whom the law lives—the married couples themselves, their lovers, their lawyers, their judges. Examining six principal cases spanning three centuries, Power to Dissolve treats a legal system as neither pure principal nor pure politics, neither a government of laws nor of men, but a process whose understanding requires a knowledge of theological doctrine, legal rules, and human interactions.

Power to Dissolve

Lawyers and Marriages in the Courts of the Roman Curia by John T. Noonan, Jr.
$15.00

The Belknap Press
Harvard
University
Press

Cambridge, Massachusetts 02138

You will also want to read:

CONTRACEPTION: A history of its treatment by the Catholic theologians and canonists,
by John T. Noonan, Jr. (Belknap Press). $11.00

THE MORALITY OF ABORTION: Legal and Historical Perspectives, edited by John T. Noonan, Jr. $8.95

Now available in paperback: $2.95

INNOVATIVE

BOOKS FOR THE HISTORIAN

THE NAVAL ARISTOCRACY: The Golden Age of Annapolis and the Emergence of Modern American Navalism

Peter Karsten, University of Pittsburgh

The American naval officer corps in the Golden Age of Annapolis (the 1840s to the 1940s) is the subject of this careful analysis, fraught with implications for those drafting the naval policies for the 1970s. The author explores the social backgrounds, education, life-styles, diplomatic missions, attitudes, and values of this "naval aristocracy" and considers the causes for, and nature of, modern American navalism.

1972

462 pages

$10.95

BUILDING THE ORGANIZATIONAL SOCIETY: Associational Tendencies in Early Twentieth-Century America

Edited by Jerry Israel, Northern Illinois University

With an Introduction by Samuel P. Hays

Professor Israel brings together the independent original research by young scholars into the nature of early twentieth-century American society and institutions. The selections cover such topics as: American labor and religion; lawyers in the Progressive period; blacks at the turn of the century; the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace; and the bureaucratization of the State Department.

1972

450 pages

$9.95

A HISTORY OF KOREA

William E. Henthorn, University of Hawaii

This is the first English-language history of Korea in more than half a century. It surveys that nation's development from the pre-historical period to the end of the Yi Dynasty in 1910. The author offers his own analyses of Korea's religious and ethical systems, its art and literature, its social structure and educational methods, and the ideas that have helped to make it a dynamic, creative force in the Far East.

1971

256 pages

$9.95

INTERPRETATIONS OF AMERICAN HISTORY: Patterns and Perspectives

Second Edition

Volume I: To 1877      Volume II: Since 1805

Edited by Gerald N. Grob, Rutgers University, and George Athan Billias, Clark University

Bringing together scholarly selections that approach American history from an analytic, rather than factual, point of view, these volumes show that the interpretation of American history has been a constantly changing one. The selections, chosen to reflect both scholarly and literary excellence, deal with how, and why, these interpretations have changed. Fifty percent of the material in this Second Edition is new.

1972

Vol. I: 544 pages

$4.95

Vol. II: 532 pages

$4.95

Also available in a new three-volume edition: From Puritanism to the First Party System; From Jacksonian Democracy to the Gilded Age; From Progressivism to the Cold War.

$3.95 each

THE FREE PRESS

A DIVISION OF THE MACMILLAN COMPANY

Department F, Riverside, New Jersey 08075

Books from North Carolina

---

Nazis and Workers

National Socialist Appeals to German Labor, 1919-1933

by Max H. Kele

"...an important book which fills a gap in English-language historiography on the rise of National Socialism in Germany....[It] is a valuable contribution to understanding the nature and attraction of National Socialism."—Library Journal

254 pages

5½ x 8½

$9.50

---

The Politics of Military Revolution in Korea

by Se-Jin Kim

"Probably the most detailed and informative study of the internal politics of the military régime to appear in English, this book finds the Korean case too ambiguous to answer the currently fashionable theoretical question as to whether military dictatorship helps or hinders 'progress.'"—Foreign Affairs

254 pages

5½ x 8½

$9.25

---

The Party of Eros

Radical Social Thought and the Realm of Freedom

by Richard King

"In his central chapters he focuses on Paul Goodman, Marcuse, and Norman O. Brown—and he proves a formidable critic of each. King is chiefly concerned with the moral values implicit in the thought of these radical social critics....Stimulating criticism in the vein of Rieff and Paul Robinson."—Publishers Weekly

234 pages

5½ x 8½

$7.50

---

our 50th year

THE UNIVERSITY OF
NORTH CAROLINA PRESS
Chapel Hill, North Carolina 27514

Available for second semester —

AMERICA SINCE 1945

edited by Robert D. Marcus and David Burner
State University of New York at Stony Brook

"The United States since the end of World War II has contained all the makings of a great historical subject. Having completely terminated their role as European provincials, Americans in this new era have often seemed most awkward at the center of the world's stage, and reviews of their performance, in diplomacy as well as in culture, have varied widely. Rarely a complacent people, they have sought eagerly for a perspective on their place in the world. Keeping in mind this search for a perspective, we have tried to choose articles that deal with—and link together—the most significant political and social events of the past quarter century."

—from the Preface

CONTENTS

Part I Russia and the Cold War, Averell Harriman; The Cold War:
1945-1952 A Revisionist View, David Horowitz; To Secure These Rights,
The President's Committee on Civil Rights, 1947; Truman and Domestic Politics: The Election of 1948, Richard Kirkendall; Truman and Foreign Policy: The Korean War, Walter LaFeber

Part II Nixon Agonistes: The Checkers Speech, Garry Wills; The Army-
1952-1959 McCarthy Hearings; The Underestimation of Dwight D. Eisenhower, Murray Kempton; Eisenhower Revisited—A Political Genius? A Brilliant Man? Richard H. Rovere; The Feminine Mystique, Betty Friedan; The Texture of Poverty, Michael Harrington

Part III Kennedy: A Cold Warrior, David Burner; The Port Huron State-
The 1960's ment, Students for a Democratic Society; Building the Great Society: The Case of Equal Rights, James Sundquist; Lyndon Johnson and Vietnam: 1968, Townsend Hoopes; One Morning in the War, Richard Hammer; Violence in Chicago, 1968: The Walker Report; Youth as a Stage of Life, Keneth Keniston

Published, 1972 228 pages $3.50

If you would like to consider America Since 1945 for class adoption, please write for a complimentary examination copy to Robert Caldwell,

ST. MARTIN'S PRESS, College Department
175 Fifth Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10010

Kirby Smith's Confederacy

The Trans-Mississippi South, 1863-1865

by Robert L. Kerby

This is the first comprehensive account of a much neglected chapter of Civil War history, the struggle for the Southwest. Most Americans are aware of the exploits of Quantrill's nightriders (if only in the Hollywood version) but not of the many other campaigns that took place in Missouri, Arkansas, Louisiana, Texas, and the Arizona and Indian territories.

This fascinating book focuses on the career of Lt. General Kirby Smith, who commanded the Trans-Mississippi Department of the Confederate Army from the fall of Vicksburg to the end of the war. The book's important insights extend to the political and economic arenas as well as to the battlefield. In these areas, the collapse of the Trans-Mississippi South is especially revealing of the inner contradictions of the Confederate position and the fragility of its morale.

KIRBY SMITH'S CONFEDERACY is a unique book for everyone interested in the Civil War, its strategy and tactics, and its permanent impact on American life. Illustrated with maps. $12.95

Available at your local bookstore

COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY PRESS

Address for orders:
136 South Broadway, Irvington, New York 10533

ANNOUNCING:

THE Law
OF War Edited by Leon Friedman, with a Foreword by Telford Taylor

Random House, Fall 1972      In two volumes: approx. 1,800 pages fully indexed; $65.00 the set; Order Code 47240

This unique collection of materials on the origin, development, and enforcement of the laws of war is of inestimable value to historians, political scientists, jurists, and other scholars and researchers.

The books trace all the laws governing the conduct of warfare from the Middle Ages to the present. They include the writings of Hugo Grotius; treaties, conventions, and agreements spanning the years from the Declaration of Paris (1856) to the recent Convention on Biological Weapons; and transcripts of the war crimes trials and courts-martial which applied those laws—from the Civil War trials to the courts-martial of Calley and Medina. In addition, Telford Taylor's thoughtful introductory essay provides a history of the law of war and an examination of its significance today.

 RANDOM HOUSE
201 East 50th Street      New York 10022

PORTRAIT OF AMERICA VOLUME I:

From the Cliff Dwellers to the End of Reconstruction

VOLUME II:

From Reconstruction to the Present

Edited by Stephen B. Oates, University of Massachusetts, Amherst

Chronicles the human drama of American history through writings distinguished as much for their literary merit as for their interpretations. Editorial Introductions provide historical background for the essays, biographical portraits, eye-witness accounts, and dramatic narratives by such writers as Arthur Schlesinger, Jr., Richard Hofstadter, and Edmund S. Morgan. (Each Volume about 550 pages, paper, November 1972)

THE AMERICAN DIPLOMATIC EXPERIENCE

Daniel M. Smith, University of Colorado, Boulder

Clearly develops the main thrust of American foreign policy from independence to the 1970's, presenting the facts and the latest interpretations by outstanding historians. Bibliographical essays at the end of each chapter guide the reader to specialized and/or controversial studies. (491 pages, 1972, paper, illustrated, $5.95)

Houghton Mifflin

Publisher of The American Heritage Dictionary of the English Language.
Boston 02107 / Atlanta 30324 / Dallas 75235 / Geneva, Ill. 60134
New York 10036* / Palo Alto 94304

* Effective March 1, 1973 — Pennington-Hopewell Road, Hopewell, N.J. 08525

STEPHEN DOUGLAS

The Last Years, 1857-1861

By Damon Wells

"Here is the most detailed and sympathetic study of Stephen A. Douglas's last four years since the massive biography by George Fort Milton a generation ago."
—Journal of the Illinois State Historical Society.

"Wells's book, based on exhaustive research and well written, is the best one to appear on Douglas in 60 years."—Kansas City Star.

"Wells has written a book which will shed new light on the twilight years of Douglas' life. This scholarly volume allows the reader to view Douglas as he grappled with the issues which were tearing the United States apart. It is an important contribution to an understanding of some of the most crucial years in American history and will be welcomed by scholars and other serious readers alike."—Indiana Magazine of History.

"This thoroughly researched, well-written monograph should find a prominent place on the shelf of all interested in the events leading to the attempted dissolution of the Union."—Civil War History.

"Damon Wells' study is a sympathetic but judicious assessment of the roles which Stephen Douglas played during his last four years . . ."—New York History.

"Wells has treated his subject well. His literary style is excellent, full of color and description. His research is thorough."—Lincoln Herald.

"Mainly intended for the serious student, this is an in-depth study of the final four years of the life of the Little Giant. Very well-written . . . Not the least of its virtues is the 'Critical Essay on Sources.'"—Library Journal.

342 pp. Illustrated, bibliography, index. LC 73-149020

$10.00

UNIVERSITY OF TEXAS PRESS • AUSTIN AND LONDON
Box 7819, Austin, Texas 78712

From ST. JOHN'S
UNIVERSITY PRESS
New York

General
Stilwell
in China,
1942-1944:
The Full Story

Chin-tung Liang

Clothbound
Pages: 360

$6.95

Professor Chin-tung Liang, Director of the Institute of Modern History, Academia Sinica, is a well-known jurist as well as historian in China. He taught comparative criminal law for a number of years at the National University at Peking. He is the author of several books, including A History of the First World War (Peking: Oriental Press, 1921), Extraterritoriality in China (Shanghai: Commercial Press, 1931), The Chinese Revolution of 1911 (New York: St. John's University Press, 1962), The Cairo Conference and China (Hong Kong: The Asian Press, 1962), A Historical Study of the Mukden Incident of 1931 (Hong Kong: Asian Book Company, 1963), and The Sinister Face of the Mukden Incident (New York: St. John's University Press, 1969). His latest book is the Chinese version of this study. Published in Taipei, Taiwan, in July 1971, it went through six printings within three months. One of the best-sellers in Free China, it was awarded the 1971 Sun Yat-sen Medal for intellectual distinction.

In his early years, Professor Liang devoted himself to public service. He served as a justice of the Supreme Court of the Republic of China. During World War II, he held high offices in the Ministry of Finance and served in Washington, D.C., as a representative of the Chinese government for the administration of lend-lease supplies to China. Particularly because of this latter personal experience, he was most knowledgeable of the complicated relations between China and the United States throughout the war years.

After the Communist domination of the mainland, Professor Liang resigned from public service and turned his attention to the study of history. Since 1964, he has been a Research Professor of Modern Chinese History at St. John's University.

In his study, Professor Liang has offered us an insight supported by documentary proofs that show the tremendous impact on the world situation in general and Chinese-American relations in particular. . . . It is imperative that for a thorough and genuine understanding of the truth of this most unfortunate episode Western readers be familiar with the facts presented from both American and Chinese sides. Needless to add, what is most valuable in this study is that Professor Liang has had unprecedented access to the private papers and official archives of Generalissimo Chiang, known as the Tachi Archives, disclosed for the first time to the public in the interest of historical truth.

from the foreword of
Paul K.T. Sih, Director
Center of Asian Studies
St. John's University

---

Lists of Doctoral Dissertations in History

---

Sets of the mimeographed Supplements, Number 6-11, to the 1970 List of Doctoral Dissertations in History are available at $1.00 the set. These Supplements list the titles of dissertations in progress that were registered with the Association between May 15, 1971 and May 15, 1972; the titles of completed dissertations that were reported during that period, and changes and deletions to the printed Lists. The Lists for 1964, 1967, and 1970 are also available at the prices indicated below.

---

Ph.D. Dissertations
American Historical Association
400 A Street S. E.
Washington, D. C. 20003

I enclose _____ (check or money order) in payment for _____ Supplements 6-11 to the 1970 List

$1.00 the set

|                        |                        |                        |
|------------------------|------------------------|------------------------|
| _____ 1964 List | _____ 1967 List | _____ 1970 List |
| $1.50 each            | $2.00 each            | $3.00 each            |

Name (please print) _____

Address _____

_____ Zip Code _____

neither SLAVE nor FREE

The Freedman of African Descent in the Slave Societies of the New World

Edited with an Introduction by
DAVID W. COHEN & JACK P. GREENE

In the slave societies of the Americas during the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries a surprisingly large group of blacks and mulattoes were free men. Neither Slave Nor Free investigates the degree to which the experience of the free colored people reflected the character of slavery and race relations in each of ten slave societies. The contributors depict the free colored as a group whose place in society was everywhere ambiguous, even desperate.

CONTENTS

Colonial Spanish America, by Frederick P. Bowser

Surinam and Curaçao, by H. Hoetink

Colonial Brazil, by A. J. R. Russell-Wood

The French Antilles, by Léo Elisabeth

Saint Domingue, by Gwendolyn Midlo Hall

Jamaica, by Douglas Hall

Barbados, by Jerome S. Handler and Arnold A. Sio

The Slave States of North America, by Eugene D. Genovese

Cuba, by Franklin W. Knight

Nineteenth-Century Brazil, by Herbert S. Klein

$13.50

Social Control in Slave Plantation Societies

A Comparison of St. Domingue and Cuba

GWENDOLYN MIDLO HALL

"A comparison of eighteenth-century St. Domingue with nineteenth-century Cuba and an examination of the evolution of significant aspects of both societies from the pre-plantation period through the emergence of the colonies as the leading suppliers of sugar for the world market."—Latin American Research Review

$8.00

JOHNS HOPKINS

The Johns Hopkins University Press, Baltimore, Md. 21218

Gregg Press, in cooperation with the Boston Public Library presents a timely, new collection of retrospective materials offering significant insight into history's most intriguing triangle...

The Three Sides of the American Revolution

The American Revolutionary Series

Compiled by George Athan Billias, Professor of History, Clark University

Facsimile Reprints of Vital Documents, Studies and Accounts Pertaining to the Activities of the Three Major Camps of the American Revolution—the British—the Loyalist—the American and French Allies.

The forty-nine facsimile reprints, drawn from the highly regarded collection of American revolutionary materials at the Boston Public Library, will prove of especially great value with the bicentennial of the War of Independence close at hand. This event will bring intense and far-ranging reassessment of the parties, issues and actions that led to the Revolution and determined its outcome.

- The Loyalist Library is a basic library of 20 works on the actions and attitudes of those colonists who remained loyal to the Crown and who have been generally neglected in most historical studies of the War. This collection includes four works on or by Joseph Galloway, one of the most outspoken critics of British treatment of the Loyalists; detailed accounts of Loyalist activities in the various colonies; and, finally, several accounts of what happened to the Loyalists after the war, their migrations and their claims for losses to the British Parliament.
- British Accounts of the American Revolution offers a broad selection of 15 titles describing the War from the British side. It includes such works as Edmund Burke's speeches in favor of appeasement, Robert Beatson's six-volume history of British naval operations in the War, and the Historical Manuscript Commission's extensive collections of manuscripts, letters and journals relating to the Revolution, as well as individual and collective biographies of major British figures responsible for the conduct of the War.
- American and French Accounts of the Revolution contains 14 titles and emphasizes the military and political maneuverings so crucial to the American victory. It includes such diverse works as Abbe Raynal's classic treatise on British colonialism and the right to revolt against it; Paul Allen's first general account of the War from the standpoint of post-War of 1812 Anglo-American relations; and Thomas Balch's detailed history of the French involvement in all areas of the War.

The American Revolutionary Series will represent a landmark source of unique scholarly materials for the reassessment and continuing study of the American Revolution and will be a marked asset in the holdings of all college and research libraries.

The American Revolutionary Series is now in production and all titles will be ready for shipment in December. Orders received direct from libraries before December 31, 1972 will be billed at the special pre-publication price.

Special Pre-Publication Price, $985.00
Orders received after December 31, 1972 will be billed at $1200.00

For individual titles and full descriptive information, write to:

Prices 10% higher outside the U.S.

Gregg Press A Division of G. K. Hall & Co.
70 Lincoln Street Boston, Massachusetts 02111

Howard M. Sachar

Europe Leaves the Middle East, 1936-1954

"No other work compares with Professor Sachar's for comprehensiveness, erudition, critical acumen, and above all, objectivity . . . a rich and rewarding book, which embodies nearly every virtue that one could desire in historical research and writing."

—From the introduction by William L. Langer

"An important book both in scope and in scholarship. The account of the second World War as it affected the Middle East is the best I have ever read, and the author's description of the British dilemma in the Middle East in the subsequent period and their frustration as they wrestled with the intractable Palestine question is fascinating."

—Gordon A. Craig, J. E. Wallace Sterling
Professor of Humanities, Stanford University

752 pages. 16 maps and diagrams. Bibliography, notes, and index. $15

Alfred • A • Knopf

Robert O. Paxton

Vichy France

OLD GUARD AND NEW ORDER, 1940-1944

A comprehensive, meticulously documented historical account of the government — and the governed — of collaborationist France.

Why the nation, in 1940, gave mass support to the Vichy regime; the power struggles dividing Petain, Laval, and Darlan; the regime's social innovations; the belated rise of the Resistance — all is examined and clarified through incisive use of contemporary materials. The author demonstrates conclusively that Vichy, contrary to the myth it promulgated, provided its people with no better life or fate than befell the fully occupied nations. Robert Paxton is a professor of history at Columbia University.

432 pages. Illustrated with 8 pages of halftones. $10

Alfred • A • Knopf

THINGS IN THE DRIVER'S SEAT: Readings in Popular Culture

Harry Russell Huebel, Texas A & I University

From Currier and Ives and the Shadow to bop and science fiction, this book of essays explores American popular culture, 1865-1970. Emphasis on the present is supplemented by historical perspective. Academic and non-academic, serious and humorous, the diverse selections are given continuity in the author's insightful commentary. $3.95 / 280 pages / paper

THE DISCONTENTED SOCIETY:

Interpretations of 20th Century American Protest

Edited by LeRoy Ashby, Washington State University
Bruce M. Stave, University of Connecticut

RAND McNALLY

NEW in American History

Twentieth century American protest in all forms—violent, non-violent, economic, political, social, cultural, intellectual—is treated in 31 popular and scholarly essays. Grouped into six topical sections, the readings offer analysis and historical background, rather than mere documentation. Helpful editors' introductions, bibliographies. $3.95 / 344 pages / paper

New in the Rand McNally History of American Thought and Culture Series, Series Editor, David D. Van Tassel, Case Western Reserve University

THE UNBRIDGEABLE GAP:

Blacks and Their Quest for the American Dream, 1900-1930

June Sochen, Northeastern Illinois University

A study of how the black American adopted the white American dream for himself, this book analyzes black intellectual thought from 1900-1930. The author uses black fiction and black magazine literature previously unexamined in historical studies.

$2.95 / 152 pages / paper

Coming February

For the American diplomatic history course

THE CREATION OF THE AMERICAN EMPIRE

Lloyd C. Gardner, Rutgers University
Walter F. LaFeber, Cornell University
Thomas J. McCormick, University of Wisconsin

This new diplomatic history text is concerned not only with key events in American history, but also with the attitudes and incidents leading up to those events. The use of primary research as the basis for each chapter, chronological organization, and multiple authorship make this text unique in the field. Covers the Pentagon Papers, President Nixon's new economic policies, and his diplomatic relations with China. c. 500 pages / cloth

For the U.S. survey course

HIGHLIGHTS OF AMERICAN HISTORY

James F. Wickens, Chabot College

Designed specifically for first year college students, this American history text is brief, attractive, and easy to read. Social, economic, and cultural trends are emphasized. Illustrations, chapter summaries, and section questions reinforce the text. A personality profile opens each chapter. c. 500 pages / paper / Instructor's Manual available

College Department
RAND McNALLY
& COMPANY

Box 7600
Chicago, Illinois
60680

PAPERBACKS
in American History

PROMISES TO KEEP: A Portrayal of Nonwhites in the United States

Edited by Bruce A. Glasrud and Alan M. Smith, California State College at Hayward

$3.95 / 398 pages / Also available in two volumes:
Volume I To 1865; Volume II From 1865 / Each $2.50

AMERICA: A History of the People

Richard B. Morris, Columbia University
William Greenleaf, University of New Hampshire
Robert H. Ferrell, Indiana University

Single volume / Colonial Times to the Present / $8.95 / 756 pages
Also available in two volumes:
Volume I To 1877 / $5.95; Volume II From 1865 / $5.95
Complete instructor's manual and test questions with all three titles.

BUILDERS OF AMERICAN INSTITUTIONS:
Readings in United States History / Second Edition

Edited by Frank Freidel, Harvard University
Norman Pollack, Michigan State University
Robert Crunden, University of Texas

Volume I To 1865 / $4.95 / 359 pages
Volume II 1865-1971 / $4.95 / 350 pages

EUROPEAN HISTORY

College Department
RAND McNALLY
& COMPANY
Box 7600
Chicago, Illinois
60680

TWENTIETH CENTURY RUSSIA / Third Edition

Donald W. Treadgold, University of Washington

$10.95 / 563 pages / cloth

THE RENAISSANCE AND REFORMATION MOVEMENTS

Lewis W. Spitz, Stanford University

$9.95 / 614 pages / cloth / Also available in 2-volume paperback:
Volume I The Renaissance; Volume II The Reformation / Each $4.95

A HISTORY OF THE WESTERN WORLD

Bryce Lyon, Brown University
Herbert H. Rowen, Rutgers University
Theodore S. Hamerow, University of Wisconsin

$11.95 / 896 pages / cloth

Also available in 2-volume paperback:

- I. Prehistory to 1715 / $5.95 / 552 pages
- II. 1600 to the Present / $5.95 / 468 pages

Also available in 3-volume paperback:

- I. Prehistory through the Renaissance / $4.95 / 456 pages
- II. Renaissance through Industrial Revolution / $4.50 / 324 pages
- III. The Age of Revolution to the Present / $4.50 / 344 pages

Complete instructor's manual with all titles.

New in the Rand McNally European History Series
Series Advisory Editor, George L. Mosse, University of Wisconsin

THE PROBLEM OF PARTITION: Peril to World Peace

Thomas E. Hachey, Marquette University

This new paperback examines the causes, character, and consequences of the six most significant political partitions in the twentieth century. Five other titles available in series.

$3.50 / c. 200 pages / paper

New this season

from National University Publications

RECONSTRUCTION IN INDIAN TERRITORY: *A Story of Avarice, Discrimination, and Opportunism

M. Thomas Bailey

The tragic post-Civil War years in Indian Territory have been too long ignored. Here Dr. Bailey tells of the political, economic, and educational efforts made by the Five Civilized Tribes in the face of tribal problems derived from wartime allegiances, and despite the treachery and greed of the white man. $11.50 (1972)

CHAMPION OF SOUTHERN FEDERALISM: *Robert Goodloe Harper of South Carolina

Joseph W. Cox

Harper is generally represented as personifying the worst aspects of exploitative Federalism, but this lively political biography challenges this view. Joseph Cox sees Harper as the embodiment of the many differences between eclectic Southern Federalism and its doctrinaire northern counterpart. $12.50 (1972)

RIGHTEOUS CONQUEST: *Woodrow Wilson and the Evolution of the New Diplomacy

Sidney Bell

Wilson's dream was of an American world empire of righteousness and trade based on recognition of the implicit goodness of the United States. Bell shows how this concept developed, conflicted with the forces of nationalism and revolution, and became modified into the ideal of collective security. $10.95 (1972)

DEMOCRACY'S RAILROADS: *Public Enterprise in Jacksonian Michigan

Robert J. Parks

Contrary to the accepted findings of many economic historians, this study shows that the Michigan state-owned railroad and canal system in the Jackson era was not a business failure but foundered because of political and technological circumstances and sectional rivalries. Much more than just a railroad history, this is a study of a developing frontier society. $12.50 (1972)

kennikat press INC.
90 South Bayles Avenue
Port Washington, N.Y. 11050

LABOR AND SOCIALISM IN AMERICA: *The Gompers Era
William M. Dick

This is a study of the formative period in labor history, between the 1880s and 1914, when American trade unions rejected socialism in favor of pressure group politics within the capitalist system. Against the social and cultural background, Professor Dick traces the rise of "Gompersism" which he identifies with the AFL viewpoint.
 $10.95 (1972)

CRUSADE AGAINST RADICALISM: *New York During the Red Scare, 1914-1924
Julian F. Jaffe

The hysterical Red Scare after World War I had its origins in economic conditions, labor unrest, socialist rhetoric, and the specter of the Russian Revolution. Julian Jaffe uses New York as a microcosm to examine antiradicalism and its impact on state and local government, the courts, and the very fabric of life. $12.50 (1972)

From our 1971 backlist . . .

UNITE OR DIE: *Intercolony Relations 1690-1763
Harry M. Ward

"Authoritative, clearly written."—Choice $13.95

HENRY WILSON, PRACTICAL RADICAL: *A Portrait of a Politician
Ernest McKay

"A welcome addition to the studies of Butler, Wade, Hale, and other Radicals."—Civil War History $11.00

MAIN LINE TO OBLIVION: *The Disintegration of the New York Railroads in the Twentieth Century
Robert B. Carson

"Thorough and extremely well-documented."—Choice $12.95

THE BROWNSVILLE AFFAIR: *National Crisis and Black Reaction
Ann J. Lane

"Should be read by all concerned with black history."—Library Journal $10.95

MEXICO AND THE OLD SOUTHWEST: *People, Palaver, and Places
Haldeen Braddy

"Another highly readable collection."—Southwestern Historical Quarterly $12.50 insilco

kennikat

Two important new references from McGraw-Hill!

The Dynamics of World Power

A Documentary History of U.S. Foreign Policy, 1945-1972

General Editor and Introduction by

ARTHUR M. SCHLESINGER, JR.

Albert Schweitzer Professor of Humanities, Graduate Center of the City University of New York

This comprehensive five-volume reference brings together the significant documents that created and express United States foreign policy since the end of World War II. Here, on a region-by-region basis, are the roots and the articulation of the policy as it was formulated and carried out by the executive and legislative branches.

Each volume is edited, introduced, and narrated by a specialist and authority in the field, who places events and trends both in their contemporary context and in broad historical perspective. The work was produced under the overall editorship of Prof. Arthur M. Schlesinger, jr., former special assistant to President Kennedy and prize-winning historian of the Jacksonian and New Deal periods, the Cold War and the Kennedy years. Prof. Schlesinger also provides the perceptive general introduction.

The five volumes encompass the documents and events of U. S. policy relating to: I. Western Europe (Prof. Robert Dallek, ed.), II. Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union (Prof. Walter La Feber, ed.), III. Latin America (Prof. Robert Burr, ed.), IV. The Far East (Prof. Russell D. Buhite, ed.), and V. The United Nations (Richard C. Hottelet, CBS News Correspondent, ed.) and Subsaharan Africa (Prof. Jean Herskovits, ed.). Each volume has its own table of contents and index.

THE DYNAMICS OF WORLD POWER sets forth the sources and evolution of American foreign policy as the U.S. assumed the role of dominant power in the postwar world. This five-volume reference is a portrayal—both panoramic and microscopic—of the course and direction of that foreign policy right up through the admission of Communist China to the United Nations.

Five volumes, 4,800 pages, September 1972 publication, approx. $149.00

A joint Chelsea House/McGraw-Hill publication

Great Britain:

FOREIGN POLICY and THE SPAN OF EMPIRE

A Documentary History, 1689-1971

Edited by JOEL H. WIENER

Department of History, City College of New York

with an Introduction by J. H. PLUMB

Christ College, Cambridge University

This four-volume set makes accessible for the first time the decisive documents that shaped the history of Great Britain's relations with foreign countries and her imperial activities on all five continents from the 17th century to the present.

Retaining the spelling, grammar, and style of the originals, the 555 documents range from treaties and tracts, declarations of war and accounts of battle, Commons debates and addresses, and dispatches and pacts, to letters, acts, reports, resolutions, and radio broadcasts. Dr. Plumb provides a remarkable capsule history of Great Britain's foreign and imperial policy in his full Introduction.

Illuminating editorial commentary precedes each of the nine major sections, giving a solid background to the materials and events covered in the documents themselves. Volumes I and II are devoted to Foreign Policy and are divided into five sections (The 18th Century, 1689-1788; The Age of Revolution, 1789-1848; European Upheaval and the Background to War, 1848-1914; The First World War and its Aftermath, 1914-1939; Ireland, 1691-1922). Volumes III and IV are devoted to the Span of Empire and are divided into three sections (The Old Empire, 1696-1851; The Age of Imperial Expansion, 1852-1913; Dissolution of the Empire, 1914-present).

Offering a much more comprehensive collection of key documents than any other work of its kind, this monumental reference is certain to become a valued standard reference and an essential source of firsthand research in British history, both because of the large number of documents and because the overwhelming mass of them are not easily accessible in any other form.

Four volumes, 3,400 pages, published June 1972, $129.00

A joint Chelsea House/McGraw-Hill publication

McGRAW-HILL BOOK COMPANY

1221 Avenue of the Americas

New York, N.Y. 10020

. . . to encourage literary distinction in the writing of American history

THE SOCIETY OF AMERICAN HISTORIANS, INC.

in cooperation with Bobbs-Merrill; Harper and Row; Little, Brown; McGraw-Hill; Prentice-Hall; and Random House-Alfred A. Knopf announces the thirteenth annual competition for

THE ALLAN NEVINS PRIZE

of $1,000 for the best written dissertation in American history submitted for the Ph.D. degree in 1972. The winning manuscript is normally published by one of the cooperating publishers in accordance with a rotating order of priority. Prize money is free and clear, not an advance against royalties. Each department of history may submit one dissertation before December 15, 1972 to the secretary: Professor Kenneth T. Jackson, 706 Hamilton Hall, Columbia University, New York, New York, 10027. Formal announcement of the award will be made at the annual banquet of the Society in April, 1973. The previous winners are:

- 1960 Waldo H. Heinrichs, Jr., "Joseph C. Grew, 1800-1925, (submitted by Harvard University) published by Little, Brown as American Ambassador: Joseph C. Grew and the Development of the United States Diplomatic Tradition.
- 1961 John L. Thomas, "Isaiah to the Nation: The Life of William Lloyd Garrison," (submitted by Brown University) published by Little, Brown as The Liberator: William Lloyd Garrison.
- 1962 Willie Lee Rose, "Rehearsal for Reconstruction: The Port Royal Experiment," (submitted by The Johns Hopkins University) published by Bobbs-Merrill as Rehearsal for Reconstruction.
- 1963 Joanne L. Neel, "His Britannic Majesty's Consul General: Phineas Bond, Esq.," (submitted by Bryn Mawr College) published by the University of Pennsylvania press as Phineas Bond: A Study in Anglo-American Relations, 1786-1812.
- 1964 William W. Freehling, "The Nullification Controversy of 1832," (submitted by the University of California at Berkeley) published by Harper and Row as Prelude to Conflict: The Nullification Controversy in South Carolina, 1816-1836.
- 1965 Robert L. Beisner, "The Anti-Imperialist Impulse, 1898-1900," (submitted by the University of Chicago) published by McGraw-Hill as Twelve Against Empire: The Anti-Imperialists, 1898-1900.
- 1966 Alan Lawson, "The Failure of Independent Liberalism, 1930-1941," (submitted by the University of Michigan) published by G. P. Putnam's Sons as The Failure of Independent Liberalism.
- 1967 Jerome Sternstein, "Nelson Aldrich, The Early Years," (submitted by Brown University) to be published by Alfred A. Knopf.
- 1968 Steven A. Channing, "Crisis of Fear: Secession in South Carolina, 1859-1860," (submitted by the University of North Carolina) published by Simon and Schuster as Crisis of Fear.
- 1969 Mary Beth Norton, "The British-Americans: The Loyalist Exiles in England, 1774-1789," (submitted by Harvard University) to be published by Little, Brown.
- 1970 Edward H. McKinley, "American Relations with Tropical Africa, 1919-1939" (submitted by the University of Wisconsin) to be published by Bobbs-Merrill.
- 1971 Heath Twitchell, Jr., "The Iron Commandante: Major General Henry T. Allen, 1859-1930," (submitted by The American University)

People of Paradox

AN INQUIRY CONCERNING THE ORIGINS OF AMERICAN CIVILIZATION

Michael Kammen

■ "This is a major, immensely exciting book which will bring new insights and understanding to the most seasoned students of American civilization. Professor Kammen is not content to repeat the common clichés . . . Rather, he explores the functional relationships between a variety of American pluralisms and the pervasive quest for legitimacy . . . This is precisely the kind of theoretical work we have long been needing."

—David Brion Davis, Yale University

■ "People of Paradox lifts the particularities in which most of us get too bogged down to a new level of significance . . . It is beautifully organized, with both clear underlying focus and a supple, free-ranging style of argument . . . In short and in sum, this is a work of creative synthesis of the very first importance."

—John Demos, Brandeis University

■ "Michael Kammen has rethought the perennial question of the American national character (or style) with an admirable command of the latest historical scholarship and an eclectic reach into many other provinces of culture. By concentrating on the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries he gives a stimulating, persuasive account of how the diversities and contrarities that define our values and institutions came into being."—John Higham, John Hopkins University

352 pages. 16 pages of halftones. $8.95

Alfred · A · Knopf

Cornell
University
Press

A HISTORY BOOK CLUB
Main Selection...

Witchcraft in the Middle Ages

By Jeffrey Burton Russell

All known theories and incidents of witchcraft in Western Europe from the fifth to the fifteenth century are brilliantly set forth in this engaging and comprehensive history. Skillfully blending narration with analysis, the author shows how social and religious changes nourished the spread of witchcraft until large portions of medieval Europe were in its grip. "A fine piece of historical and sociological scholarship—good methodology, copious documentation, thorough though select bibliography—covering witchcraft from the 4th Century A.D. to c. 1487. Russell not only traces witchcraft's symbolic content as an evolved complex of folk traditions (beginning in early fertility cults), but also treats witchcraft as 'a variety, or at least an outgrowth, of heresy'."—Library Journal

$15.00

The Origins of the Peloponnesian War

By G. E. M. de STE. CROIX

A radically new interpretation of the origins of the Peloponnesian War and of Thucydides' attitude toward the war is offered in this distinguished and provocative study. On the basis of a major re-evaluation of the evidence, Ste. Croix presents a wide-ranging reappraisal of Thucydides' historical method and his view of the world around him. He offers a highly original explanation of the Megarian decree, and treats Spartan policy and the workings of the Peloponnesian League in great detail. Defending Thucydides' credibility and judgment, Ste. Croix contends that misunderstanding Thucydides' language has led to many distorted interpretations of what he really said. The arguments put forth in this book should generate lively controversy.

$17.50

Cornell University Press ITHACA AND LONDON

Cornell
University
Press

New and recent history titles...

Securing the Revolution

Ideology in American Politics, 1789-1815

By RICHARD BUEL jr. Skillfully combining historical narrative and political analysis, this book offers a fresh look at the formation of America's first party system. Professor Buel shows how the distinctive styles of the Federalists and Republicans were a natural outgrowth of their political beliefs, and he explores the changes in the character of national politics after 1815, when the modern party system began.

$14.50

American Policy and the Division of Germany

The Clash with Russia over Reparations

By BRUCE KUKLICK. In this sophisticated diplomatic history, the author maintains that the uncompromising American reparations policy at the end of World War II was responsible in large part for the division of Germany and the conflict between the U.S. and the Soviet Union.

$9.50

Now in paperback

Four Generations

Population, Land, and Family in Colonial Andover, Massachusetts

By PHILIP J. GREVEN, JR. "This is a study that requires discussion in superlatives. For the first time someone has actually charted changes in the character of the early American family over a period of time. A model of the enlightened use of historical demography... superb."—Virginia Quarterly Review

Paper, $3.95

Medieval Political Philosophy

A Sourcebook

Edited by RALPH LERNER and MUHSIN MAHDI. "A valuable service. Twenty-five important works, represented by large sections from the writings of such authors as Alfarabi, Aquinas, Maimonides, Averroes, Fortescue, give the student an appreciation at once broad and deep of the political themes treated by Islam, Judaism, and Christianity."—Catholic Historical Review

Agora Paperback Edition $4.95

Cornell University Press ITHACA AND LONDON

New from Columbia

20TH CENTURY CHINA: Second Edition

O. EDMUND CLUBB

This new edition has chapters on the great proletarian cultural revolution and its impact on China internally, on Chinese foreign affairs during the period, and on the wide range of other domestic and external developments which affected China during these years.

$12.00 cloth

$3.95 paper

HISTORY OF PERSIA UNDER QĀJĀR RULE

HERIBERT BUSSE, Translator

A translation of the first volume of the nineteenth-century Persian chronicle Fārsnāma-ye Nāseri, a detailed history of the province of Fārs during the period 1789-1883.

Persian Heritage Series

$15.00

JEWISH REACTIONS TO GERMAN

ANTI-SEMITISM, 1870-1914

ISMAR SCHORSCH

The first comprehensive examination of the variety of responses made by the German Jewish community to German antisemitism before World War I.

Columbia Studies in Jewish History,
Culture, and Institutions, 3

$10.00

COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY PRESS

Address for orders: 136 South Broadway, Irvington, New York 10533

New from Columbia

JOHN FOSTER DULLES:

A Statesman and His Times

MICHAEL A. GUHIN

A reassessment of Dulles which shows a man above all responsive to his times, whose approach was constructed on the pragmatic standards of statesmanship and was not distorted by moralistic premises or narrow ideological considerations. $12.95

THE PAPERS OF ALEXANDER HAMILTON

Volume XVI: February 1, 1794-July 31, 1794

Volume XVII: August 1, 1794-December 31, 1794

HAROLD C. SYRETT, Editor

Two important new volumes in this series brings the Hamilton record within one month of the close of his service as Secretary of the Treasury.

$15.00 each volume

AN INTRODUCTION TO CHINESE CIVILIZATION

JOHN MESKILL, Editor, with the assistance

of J. MASON GENTZLER

A major new text on Chinese civilization. The first half of the volume contains a concise but detailed history of China by Dr. Meskill. The second half consists of ten separate essays by individual authorities on important aspects of Chinese civilization.

Companions to Asian Studies

$17.50

TWENTIETH-CENTURY GERMANY

A. J. RYDER

An examination of the upheavals which Germany has seen in the past 8 decades, from William II's German Empire to the remarkable peak of prosperity it enjoys today. This new history of Germany narrates these tumultuous events and interprets the political and economic trends behind them. $12.95

COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY PRESS

Address for orders: 136 South Broadway, Irvington, New York 10533

HUMANITY AND SOCIETY / *A World HistoryKENNETH NEILL CAMERON

Most world histories are, in fact, European-United States histories with only peripheral reference to the rest of the world. This book redresses the balance by giving extended treatment to Asia, Africa, Oceania, and South and Middle America. Cameron is not much interested in kings, parliaments, and dates, but unlike other historians, he emphasizes broad mainline developments in world history which, taken together, answer the question "How did our world of today come about?" A masterful presentation of social, economic, and cultural history.

(Jan.) 544 pages $12.50

A PROOF OF EMINENCE / *The Life of Sir John HawkinsBERTRAM H. DAVIS

This biography brings eighteenth century London to life. Sir John Hawkins, magistrate, historian, and antiquarian, witnessed many crucial events of the period, such as the destructive Gordon Riots, and was the intimate friend of Samuel Johnson, David Garrick, Oliver Goldsmith, and Horace Walpole. Rich in social history, this is a judicious and gracefully written biography of an unusually interesting man.

(Nov.) 420 pages $10.00

SECURITY IN EUROPE, second edition*ROBERT E. HUNTER

How can Europe escape from an obsolete system of military blocs to a European Commonwealth? What are the requirements for a healthy Atlantic Alliance in the coming decade? And what are the prerequisites for improved economic and political relations across the Iron Curtain? These are some of the crucial questions dealt with in this provocative and delightfully irreverent book. Combining historical perspective with a thorough knowledge of current developments, Hunter neither assesses blame for the Cold War nor suggests ways to tilt the balance of power. Rather, he shows how European countries have viewed their security problem, how institutions and military doctrines influenced politics, and what lessons can be drawn for the future from an understanding of the past.

264 pages $8.95

THE UNITED STATES, COMMUNISM, AND THE EMERGENT WORLD*BERNARD P. KIERNAN

This book challenges the basic assumptions underlying American policy toward the so-called "threat" of communism in the Third, or emergent, world. The author argues that any form of totalitarian socialism is a logical and inevitable stage in the development of many Third world nations. Even in the West, he points out, the process of modernization, when viewed historically, has been more coercive than democratic. A learned, penetrating and hard-hitting book.

(Nov.) 256 pages $7.95

THE FORTUNES OF THE WESTThe Future of the Atlantic NationsTHEODORE GEIGER

An economist turned generalist, Mr. Geiger begins with a detailed historical perspective and proceeds to a thorough trend analysis to throw new light on the past, present and future as he explores the origins of socio-economic and psychocultural stages of Western dynamism. A thoughtful and convincing book—full of daring hypotheses—that predicts what the future holds for Western Europe and the United States.

(Jan.) 352 pages $10.00

*now in paperback . . .WRITING AMERICAN HISTORY / *Essays on Modern ScholarshipJOHN HIGHAM

"Anyone and everyone concerned with American history should read this book. There is no comparable work, either in subject matter or intellectual sophistication."—Choice

244 pages (cloth $6.50) $2.95

MAN'S MEMORY OF THE 20TH CENTURY

THE NEW YORK TIMES PRESENTS THE FIRST MAJOR ORAL HISTORY PROGRAM— THE COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY ORAL HISTORY COLLECTION: PART ONE

It seems like only yesterday that Professor Allan Nevins of Columbia University created the very concept of oral history when he cited the need to preserve the memories of living Americans.

Today, some 55,000 typescript pages (about 200 interviews) from the world's best known cache of oral memoirs, The Columbia

Collection, are available to researchers—on microfiche, in your library. The New York Times is now micropublishing this material as Part One of Columbia's Oral History Collection—the memories of men and women who led significant lives, or were close to the world movers of our time.

PRIMARY SOURCE MATERIALS AVAILABLE FOR THE FIRST TIME

The list of memoirists in Part One ranges from authors and diplomats to political reformers and labor leaders...

...from educators, social workers and civic leaders to jurists, cabinet ministers and feminists. Literally thousands of recollections of people and thousands of remembrances of events.

Among the memoirists in Part One are Maxwell Anderson, Marquis W. Childs, W.E.B. Du Bois, Dorothy Canfield Fisher, Felix Frankfurter, Herbert Lehman, Reinhold Niebuhr, Henry L. Stimson, Norman Thomas and Roy Wilkins.

MULTIPLE-ACCESS INDEXING

In addition to offering nearly 650 microfiche, The Times will publish a multiple-access, hard-copy index of some 1,000 pages... accessible by (1) name of the memoirist; (2) names of people remembered; (3) subjects dealt with in interviews.

BEGINNING OF AN IMPORTANT ONGOING PROGRAM

Part One of the Columbia

Oral History Collection is the beginning of a continuing program. The Times will soon publish further selections from the Columbia Collection—as well as other oral history projects.

For complete information and a catalogue of Part One, write to Microfilming Corporation of America, Dept. JA, 21 Harristown Road, Glen Rock, N. J. 07452; or call (201) 447-3000.

THE NEW YORK TIMES
ORAL HISTORY PROGRAM

An Englishman in the American Civil War

The Diaries of Henry Yates Thompson

Edited by Christopher Chancellor

Henry Yates Thompson, a young Englishman, travelled in America after leaving Cambridge in 1863. He was 24 at the time. He left a readable and perceptive account of his journey which included conversations with politicians, wounded soldiers on the battlefields, generals, preachers, slaves, academics, and farmers, and a magnificent account of the Battle of Chattanooga (during which he had stood next to General Grant).

215 pages

2 maps 50 illustrations

$12.50

Italy & the Enlightenment

Franco Venturi

The essays in this volume have been selected to present as wide a range as possible of Franco Venturi's researches, which would offer a broad and comprehensive picture of the Enlightenment. Although the present volume is concerned with the progress of the Enlightenment in Italy, Venturi's interpretation of the cosmopolitan character of the Enlightenment in Europe, outlined in the first general essay, underlies all the other essays dedicated to more specific aspects or personalities.

320 pages

$10.00

Slavery: A Comparative Perspective

Robin W. Winks, editor

The present collection is meant to meet a real and growing need for those students who are interested in slavery per se, rather than in its more precise manifestations as studied within the context of a single country or group of countries. The selections are for the purpose of setting before the reader, by implication as well as explicitly, a number of broad problems relating to how men, of whatever race and time, have compelled other men to do their bidding and work.

240 pages

cloth $8.95 paper $3.95

The Gods of Revolution

Christopher Dawson

Introduction by Arnold Toynbee

The late Christopher Dawson's brilliant and hitherto unpublished analysis of the French Revolution, which concludes his famous series of books dealing with religion as a dynamic force in history. He looks first at the ideological antecedents of the Revolution, then at the Revolution itself, and finally at its aftermath.

224 pages

$8.95

ORDER DIRECTLY FROM:

New York University Press

WASHINGTON SQUARE, NEW YORK 10003

Announcing a collection of key resource materials on the founding of the original 13 colonies

Foundations of Colonial America

A Documentary History

Vol. I The Northeastern Colonies

Vol. II The Middle Atlantic Colonies

Vol. III The Southern Colonies

Editor: W. Keith Kavenagh, Assistant Professor of History, Institute for Colonial Studies, State University of New York at Stony Brook

Introduction: Richard B. Morris, Gouverneur Morris Professor of American History, Columbia University

Three volumes, 2400 pages
Index, appendix, table of regnal years, glossary, bibliography
$95 for the set

■ Over 1,000 key documents from the original founding to 1763 including charters, declarations, patents, laws, deeds, orders-in-council, commissions—many found in no other readily-available source. ■ Arranged and organized for comparative study—by topic, by colony, and in chronological order. ■ Presented in modern English for greater readability—modernization extends to capitalization, punctuation and spelling, but not to syntax.

Documents are organized in the following categories:

1. Colonial Charters
2. Structure and Functions of Colonial Governments
  - a. Structure of the Government
  - b. Regulation of the Status and Activities of Individuals
  - c. Taxation
  - d. Regulation of Economic Activity
  - e. Ecclesiastical Affairs
3. Acts of Parliament and Royal Proclamations
4. Local Government
5. Land Acquisition
  - a. Laws Affecting Property Ownership
  - b. Wills and Estates

A joint publication of

Chelsea House/Holt Information Systems

Detailed information on request from:

Holt Information Systems, Division of Holt, Rinehart and Winston, Inc.
383 Madison Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10017

Recent Books from Harper & Row

THE COLUMBIA HISTORY OF THE WORLD

Edited by John A. Garraty and Peter Gay. Representing the collaborative efforts of 40 prominent Columbia University scholars in many fields this is "the best world history, and the most intellectually stimulating . . . immensely readable."

—J. H. Plumb. 1237 pages, 62-page index, chronologies, maps. $17.50 through December 31, 1972, $20.00 thereafter. A Carolan Book

THE LIMITS OF POWER

By Joyce and Gabriel Kolko. "One of the most important books of American foreign policy during the Truman presidency yet written."

—Gaddis Smith, New York Times Book Review. "No one who pretends to look seriously at the decade (1945-54) can ignore it."—Stephen S. Rosenfeld, Washington Post. Notes, index. $15.00

HISTORIANS AT WORK

Volume I: Herodotus to Froissart
Edited by Peter Gay and Gerald J. Cavanaugh

Volume II: Valla to Gibbon
Edited by Peter Gay and Victor G. Wexler.

Selected writings, plus editorial commentaries on the historians included, covering individual environments, contributions to historiography, and bibliographic information. Each volume $15.00

THE NIGHT OF LONG KNIVES

By Max Gallo, Institut d'Etudes Politiques, Paris. A suspenseful, hour-by-hour reconstruction of one of history's most brutal moments—the "night" in 1934 when Hitler's Nazis and their allies liquidated Ernst Roehm and his S. A. Brown Shirts to become the dominant force in Germany's race to destruction. Illustrated. $8.95

BEFORE THE DELUGE

A Portrait of Berlin in the 1920's

By Otto Friedrich. "A fascinating picture of a city where art and riot flourished side by side and incredibility was the normal state of things."—Atlantic Monthly. "A splendid book . . . in a class with the best of Barbara Tuchmann."—Washington Post. Illustrated. Maps, index. $10.00

UNDER THE GUNS

New York: 1775-1776

By Bruce Bliven, Jr. Social history that reads like a novel, the fascinating story of Tory New York City on the eve of the American Revolution. "Deeply researched, detailed, engrossing."—James Thomas Flexner. Illustrated. $10.00

THE ROAD TO YALTA

Soviet Foreign Relations 1941-1945

By Louis Fischer. Foreword by George F. Kennan. The award-winning historian-biographer analyzes the personalities and events that shaped the final war years and set the stage for the Cold War. Bibliography. $8.95

RENAISSANCE EUROPE

The Individual and Society, 1480-1520

By J. R. Hale. "Brilliant . . . those who want a history of the non-political life of a non-political people will have to wait a long time before they find a better book than this one."—Times Educational Supplement. A new volume in the History of Europe Series, edited by J. H. Plumb. Maps, bibliography, index. $8.95

THE HOLOCAUST

From a Survivor of Verdun

By William Hermanns. The harrowing eyewitness account of the battle that took a million lives and spiritually mutilated countless others. "A meaningful account of war as an insane assault on human sensibilities."—Library Journal. "Should be read by everyone."—Linus Pauling. Illustrated. $5.95

At bookstores

Harper & Row
10 E. 53rd St., New York 10022

EDWARD L.
KEENAN

THE KURBSKII, GROZNYI APOCRYPHA

The Seventeenth-Century Genesis of the "Correspondence" Attributed to Prince A. M. Kurbskii and Tsar Ivan IV

For centuries the exchange of letters between Ivan the Terrible and Prince Kurbskii has been considered an important source for sixteenth-century Russian history. But the provenance of the "Correspondence" has never been properly established. Mr. Keenan contends that this "Correspondence" is a forgery composed in the seventeenth century. His conclusion may well necessitate the re-evaluation of sixteenth-century Russian history. Russian Research Center Studies, 66. Thomas J. Wilson Memorial Prize. $10.00

ABBOTT GLEASON

Ivan Kireevsky and the Origins of Slavophilism

In this fascinating biography of Ivan Vasil'evich Kireevsky (1806-1856), a member of the landed gentry and the most original theoretician of the Slavophile movement, Mr. Gleason recounts the development of Slavophile doctrine. He draws upon Kireevsky's letters, diaries, and journals. Russian Research Center Studies, 68. $13.50

WILLIAM F.
WOEHLIN

CHERNYSHEVSKII

The Man and the Journalist

Chernyshevskii (1828-1889), a pivotal figure in the protest movement that followed the Crimean War, was esteemed by both Marx and Lenin. Alienated from Russia's traditional values, he also rejected the economic and political doctrines of more advanced nations. This is the first full-length biography of him in English, with particular emphasis on his intellectual views. Russian Research Center Studies, 67. $12.50

HARVARD
UNIVERSITY PRESS

---

Announcing a new edition
of the leading textbook for American history

---

THE NATIONAL EXPERIENCE

THIRD EDITION

John M. Blum, Yale University

Edmund S. Morgan, Yale University

Willie Lee Rose, University of Virginia

Arthur Schlesinger, Jr., City University of New York

Kenneth M. Stampp, University of California at Berkeley

C. Vann Woodward, Yale University

Like its two distinguished predecessors, the new Third Edition of this extraordinarily successful textbook provides an authoritative, comprehensive, and up-to-date survey of the social, political, economic, and intellectual developments in American history. Thoroughly revised to incorporate the most recent scholarship in the field, this edition offers many special features, including:

- greater emphasis on minority groups in the United States
- thoughtful coverage of the role of women in American history
- three completely rewritten chapters on the 1850's, the Civil War, and Reconstruction
- a detailed study of the Nixon administration, including an analysis of the Vietnam War, Nixon's economic policies, and recent changes in the social and moral aspects of American life

The Third Edition contains approximately 130 charts, 130 maps, and 530 halftones interspersed throughout the text, including a 32-page full-color insert. An Instructor's Manual with test questions and learning objectives will be available.

928 pages (probable)

Publication: January 1973

Also available in a two-volume paperbound format:

Part One: TO 1877

Part Two: SINCE 1865

Paperbound. 464 pages (probable)

Paperbound. 464 pages (probable)

HARCOURT BRACE JOVANOVIICH, INC.

New York • Chicago • San Francisco • Atlanta

Fall & Winter Books American History

THE COLUMBIAN EXCHANGE

Biological and Cultural Consequences of 1492

by ALFRED W. CROSBY, JR.

This lively interdisciplinary work draws upon both scientific and historical findings as the author traces the post-Columbian exchange of native life forms between the Old World and the New to point out that such exchange irrevocably altered life on this planet. He suggests that the Europeans' greatest violence to the American hemisphere was their disruption of its ecological balance—that the commonplace European microbe, not superior armed strength, was the ultimate "conquistador" of native Americans. $9.50

THE PRESIDENCY OF RUTHERFORD B. HAYES

by KENNETH E. DAVISON

Patterns in presidential politics have a way of recurring. President Rutherford B. Hayes, like John Kennedy, entered the White House after a hotly contested election. Like Richard Nixon, he inherited a hostile Congress; and like Calvin Coolidge and Harry Truman, he fell heir to entrenched patronage and a cumbersome bureaucracy. This October will mark the 150th anniversary of the birth of this unusual president who overcame, or modified, most of these obstacles and, through his own courage and intellect turned the government in a new, constructive direction. $12.00

THE BUTTERFLY CASTE

A Social History of Pellagra in the South

by ELIZABETH W. ETHERIDGE

This is a medical detective story of the search for a killer. Pellagra, an often fatal disease, became pandemic in the southern United States in the early part of this century. Characterized by an ugly red "butterfly" caste across the nose, the disease had strong social implications, for it generally struck only the southern poor. There was often hysterical public reaction to the disease, and many, sometime ridiculous, theories about its causes and cure. $11.00

THE ELEVENTH AMENDMENT AND SOVEREIGN IMMUNITY

by CLYDE E. JACOBS

The author presents trenchant arguments to demonstrate that the framers of the Constitution intended, in Article III, to waive the doctrine of sovereign immunity, and that the adoption of the Eleventh Amendment represents only limited concession to states' rights. Professor Jacobs' thesis has particular bearing upon contemporary desegregation of public schools and reapportionment of state legislatures. $9.50

FIRST FREEDOM

The Responses of Alabama's Blacks to Emancipation and Reconstruction

by PETER KOLCHIN

Professor Kolchin, while carefully presenting the known facts of Black post-bellum behavior in Alabama, draws some provocative conclusions about the psychological attitudes of Blacks during a period of relative freedom. Peter Kolchin documents how the ex-slaves refused the security of the wage system in favor of the riskier sharecropping; how they responded to and initiated efforts to assure education for Blacks; how they evolved stable families after the diaspora caused by slavery; and finally, how they reacted to the chance to obtain political power. $10.00

DEAR MISS EMGeneral Eichelberger's War in the Pacific, 1942-1945*

edited by JAY LUVAAAS

DEAR MISS EM is a compilation of the letters General Robert L. Eichelberger wrote each day to his wife Emmalina, "Miss Em,"—letters in which he described not only the military climate in the Pacific, but his candid reactions to the frustrating manipulation of public relations and play of personalities that were a price of being a subordinate of General Douglas MacArthur.

$12.50

FROM SUPERIORITY TO PARITYThe United States and the Strategic Arms Race, 1961-1971*

by HARLAND B. MOULTON

The political nuclear age began in a strategic sense with the bombing of Hiroshima and Nagasaki. This study examines the impact of the resulting dilemma on traditional attitudes toward war as a tool of diplomacy. While placing special emphasis upon the McNamara regime in the Pentagon, Professor Moulton traces the complete spectrum of philosophies and the entire cast of characters affecting United States nuclear strategy.

$12.00

THE MEANING OF FREEDOM OF SPEECHFirst Amendment Freedoms from Wilson to FDR*

by PAUL L. MURPHY

The role of dissent, and its suppression, in American life is analyzed in this provocative work set in the Jazz Age. Probing the crisis in civil liberties which began with wartime restrictions of freedom of speech in 1918, and continued when restrictions were not lifted after the war, this study explores the entire range of American opinion on the subject and shows how constitutional law in the area of civil liberties was ultimately revolutionized because of reaction to the suppression of free speech.

An Alternate Selection of THE LAWYERS' LITERARY CLUB.

$14.50

BOUND WITH THEM IN CHAINSAn Essay in Antislavery History*

by JANE H. PEASE and WILLIAM H. PEASE

"God makes use of instruments that I wouldn't touch," said abolitionist Maria Chapman as she acknowledged the diversity of opinion and approach to be found within the antislavery movement. The authors have made biographic studies of ten individuals prominent in the abolitionist movement, ranging from anarchistic revolutionary Stephen Symonds Foster to Samuel Eli Cornish, a conservative Black apologist.

$12.50

THE AGE OF GIANT CORPORATIONSA Microeconomic History of American Business, 1914-1970*

by ROBERT SOBEL

Beginning with the mobilization of industry for the First World War when business had to cooperate with and be controlled by government to an unprecedented degree, the author traces the effects of business and government on one another through the laissez-faire policy of the 1920s, the depression and New Deal, the mobilization for the Second World War, and the development of conglomerates and government-oriented industry of the present day.

$9.00

CALIFORNIA AND THE DUST BOWL MIGRATION

by WALTER J. STEIN

During the mid-depression years, California lost its usual good temper towards interstate migrants when the coming of the Okies aggravated social and political tensions within the state. Driven by drought and economic conditions from Oklahoma, Texas, Arkansas, and Missouri, the Okies sought small farms and new opportunities in California. They found neither.

$12.00

AVAILABLE IMMEDIATELY FROM

GREENWOOD PRESS

51 RIVERSIDE AVENUE, WESTPORT, CONNECTICUT 06880

Masterworks of Modern History From Universal Library

CZECHOSLOVAKIA SINCE WORLD WAR II

by Tad Szulc. "An absorbing survey."—N.Y. Times Book Review. "Expert and lucid analysis done in the best traditions of political journalism . . . fascinating."—Library Journal. A first-hand account of the Czechoslovakian crisis of 1968 when, after years of Stalinist repression, the nation tasted liberal, progressive socialism under Dubcek—only to be squelched again by the Russians. 7-5 $3.95

THE BATTLE STALIN LOST: Memoirs of Yugoslavia 1948-53

by Vladimir Dedijer. Journalist and diplomat, formerly one of Tito's right-hand men, Dedijer provides a fascinating, eye-witness account of "the conviction, drama, danger and excitement of those years when the furious Russians would stop at literally nothing to crush the renegade Yugoslavs."—Wall Street Journal 14-8 $2.95

PSYCHOANALYSIS AND HISTORY

Rev. Ed. Edited and with an Introduction by Bruce Mazlish, Professor of History, M.I.T. Trail-blazing essays by Philip Rieff, Hans Meyerhoff, A. L. Kroeber and others on Freud's psychoanalytic approach to a philosophy of history, plus specific case studies of Luther, Henry VIII, Woodrow Wilson, Machiavelli and Erik Erikson's now classic work on Gandhi. Selected bibliography. 250-7 $2.45

GERMANS & JEWS: The Right, the Left, and the Search for a "Third Force" in Pre-Nazi Germany

by George L. Mosse, author of Nazi Culture and Crisis of German Ideology. An exploration of the German intellectuals' search for an ideology between bourgeois-capitalist-parliamentarianism and Marxist-totalitarianism. "A unified and extremely stimulating work."—The Historian. "Elegantly written, beautifully organized and . . . thoroughly researched."—Societas. 257-4 $2.95

LABOR MARTYR: JOE HILL

by Gibbs M. Smith. This brilliant biography traces Hill's evolution from an unknown immigrant to a social revolutionary whose songs fanned the flames of protest, and whose trial and execution in 1914 rank in historical significance with Sacco and Vanzetti's. "Beautiful . . . a work of love, compassion and careful scholarship."—Library Journal. "The fullest single study of the man and the myth in English."—Times Literary Supplement. 262-0 $3.95

Requests for complimentary copies must include course title and projected enrollment, and should be addressed to:

College Division, GROSSET & DUNLAP, INC. A NATIONAL GENERAL COMPANY
51 Madison Ave., New York, N.Y. 10010

The CENTRE D'ETUDE DU QUEBEC

Cameron Nish

Director

WISHES TO ANNOUNCE A SPECIAL SALE!

IN ORDER THAT THE GREATEST POSSIBLE
NUMBER OF RESEARCHERS AND LIBRARIES
MAY ACQUIRE THE FIRST THREE VOLUMES
OF THE PUBLISHED

DEBATES OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF UNITED CANADA

1841-1867

Elizabeth Nish, editor

Vol. I: 1841, 1099 pp. (Publication price: $35.00) ..... $30.00

Vol. II: 1842, 466 pp. (Publication price: $20.00) ..... $17.50

Both Volumes: $40.00

Vol. III: 1843, 1308 pp. .... $15.00

---

PLEASE ADDRESS ORDERS FOR INDIVIDUAL VOLUMES
OR PERMANENT ORDERS TO:

Les Presses de l'Ecole des Hautes Etudes Commerciales
5255 Avenue Decelles (bureau 4010)
Montréal 250, Canada

Key Issues in the Afro-American Experience

Volume I: TO 1877

Volume II: SINCE 1865

Edited by NATHAN I. HUGGINS, Columbia University

MARTIN KILSON, Harvard University

DANIEL M. FOX, State University of New York at Stony Brook

An ideal supplement for American history that will both capture student interest and demonstrate disciplined analysis, Key Issues in the Afro-American Experience offers sharply focused analyses of topics central to an understanding of the black experience in America—among them, the impact of slavery, black self-assertion, the emergence of black nationalism, the urban ghetto, and black identity. Of the 27 essays in these volumes, all but three were written expressly for this collection.

Volume I Paperbound. 272 Pages. $3.50

Volume II Paperbound. 320 pages. $3.95

Twentieth-Century America

RECENT INTERPRETATIONS

Second Edition

Edited by BARTON J. BERNSTEIN, Stanford University and ALLEN J. MATUSOW, Rice University

Reflecting contemporary concerns and events and their impact on recent historical scholarship, the 26 essays in this collection examine the origins of current problems in five important areas: business-government relations, race relations, poverty, cultural antagonism, and war. Each of the four parts of the book—"The Progressive Era," "The Twenties," "The New Deal and the Coming of War," and "The Era of the Cold War"—is introduced by a brief discussion of the period covered and the problems of historical interpretation the period presents.

Paperbound. 582 pages. $5.95

The National Temper

READINGS IN AMERICAN CULTURE AND SOCIETY

Second Edition

Edited by LAWRENCE W. LEVINE

and ROBERT MIDDLEKAUFF, University of California at Berkeley

The Second Edition of The National Temper presents 26 fresh, exciting readings on topics in American society and popular culture. The selections represent serious, although frequently unconventional, attempts to extract meaning from the American past; they illustrate a wide variety of styles, problems, and methods, including literary analyses and sociological studies as well as historical essays. Among the new selections in this edition are essays on women, the Civil War, Reconstruction, the American Indian, popular music, and crowd behavior.

Paperbound. 436 pages. $5.50

Also available in two separate volumes:

Volume I: TO 1877

Paperbound. 241 pages. $3.25

Volume II: SINCE 1865

Paperbound. 213 pages. $3.25

to the study of American history

The Americans

A BRIEF HISTORY

HENRY F. BEDFORD, Phillips Exeter Academy

TREVOR COLBOURN, University of New Hampshire

Just published last February, The Americans has already gained wide acceptance at colleges and universities throughout the country. A concise, modern, extremely accessible treatment of American history, it is ideally suited for survey courses in which a brief textbook is desired. Writing in a clear, lively style, the authors explore the course of American history up to the present administration. Throughout the book, they develop a sound, interpretive viewpoint by focusing on certain values that have characterized the American people—the Puritan work ethic, thrift, the profit motive, emphasis on education, and the belief in political solutions to problems. An Instructor's Manual containing test items and suggested lecture and discussion topics accompanies the book.

Paperbound. 556 pages. $6.50

Also available in two separate volumes:

Part One: TO 1877

Paperbound. 301 pages. $3.95

Part Two: SINCE 1865

Paperbound. 332 pages. $3.95

The Underside of American History

OTHER READINGS

Volume I: To 1877

Volume II: Since 1865

Edited by THOMAS R. FRAZIER,

The Bernard M. Baruch College of The City University of New York

An imaginative, thought-provoking textbook, The Underside of American History presents a selection of untraditional readings in American history—readings that deal with a variety of oppressed groups in America, including Indians, immigrants, poor whites, Afro-Americans, Oriental-Americans, and women. The articles explore the contribution of each group to the mainstream of American development and offer vivid testimony to the fact that much of today's social unrest has its roots deep in the nation's past. Editorial aids include a comprehensive historical introduction to each volume, headnotes for each selection, and extensive annotated bibliographies. A Test Booklet covering both volumes is available.

Volume I Paperbound. 307 pages. $3.75

Volume II Paperbound. 355 pages. $3.75

HARCOURT BRACE JOVANOVIICH, INC.

New York • Chicago • San Francisco • Atlanta

Special Reduced Rate***

comparative studies in society and history

Editors:

SYLVIA L. THRUPP
Economic History, University of Michigan

ERIC R. WOLF
Anthropology, City University of New York

Volume 14, Number 3, June 1972

Cities

RHOADS MURPHEY City and Countryside as Ideological Issues: India and China

ALEJANDRO PORTES Rationality in the Slum: An Essay on Interpretive Sociology

Religious Change

MARTHA E. FRANCOIS Reformation and Society: An Analysis of Guy Swanson's Religion and Regime

DANIEL W. HOWE The Decline of Calvinism: An Approach to its Study

Modernization versus Development

PETER SCHNEIDER, JANE SCHNEIDER and EDWARD HANSEN Modernization and Development: The Role of Regional Elites and Non-Corporate Groups in the European Mediterranean

Ecology and State-Formation

CONRAD P. KOTTAK Ecological Variables in the Origin and Evolution of African States: The Buganda Example

Published quarterly. Volume price by subscription $14.00

*Special price to those who identify themselves as members of the American Anthropological Association or the American Sociological Association when ordering $12.00

Cambridge University Press

32 East 57th Street, New York, N.Y. 10022

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY IN THE UNITED STATES

The Development of Church-State Thought since the Revolutionary Era

by Elwyn A. Smith

Many Americans are deeply concerned about issues such as religious tolerance, church taxation, and state aid to parochial schools. Elwyn A. Smith, one of this country's most distinguished church historians, now brings a clear understanding of the whole course of religious liberty from pre-revolutionary times to the present.

The author delves into three major traditions in American church-state thought: The Separatist Tradition treats the pre-revolutionary formation of American traditions of religious liberty; The Catholic Tradition represents the first thorough survey of the development of Roman Catholic thought and practice regarding church and state in America; The Constitutional Tradition discusses the legal aspect of church-state relations. Letting facts and ideas of the past argue for themselves, Smith clarifies complex historical issues.

This milestone in American studies illuminates the entire background of religious liberty while raising poignant questions about future interaction of religion and civil authority. Many streams of American life are brought together, giving the book equal value for lawyers, political scientists, and historians. Detailed documentation and a complete bibliographical essay will benefit anyone doing research in American history or law.

Elwyn A. Smith is Professor of Religious Thought and Vice President for Student Affairs at Temple University in Philadelphia. A past president of the American Church History Society, he is acknowledged by both jurists and historians as a leading authority on American church-state relations. $10.95

At all bookstores

FORTRESS PRESS

Philadelphia, Pa. 19129

AHA ANNUAL MEETING INFORMATION

Dear AHA Member,

I am pleased to inform you of arrangements to provide group flights to our Annual Meeting in New Orleans December 28-30, 1972. These flights will arrive in New Orleans December 27th and return to your original departure city after the Annual Meeting.

In order to take advantage of the 9 to 32% savings possible thorough group fares, all reservations must be made by November 23rd. If enough AHA members and their families take advantage of our flight program, every effort will be made to arrange charter flights to save you even more money. Of course, you will have the option of accepting a seat on the charter flight or not.

|                  | Group Fare | Regular Coach |
|------------------|-------------------|----------------------|
| Los Angeles      | $160             | $234                |
| San Francisco    | 200               | 262                  |
| Chicago          | 122               | 134                  |
| New York         | 136               | 176                  |
| Philadelphia     | 136               | 166                  |
| Washington, D.C. | 136               | 152                  |

To reserve your seat, complete the form below and return it, along with your payment, to Consortium International, 1406 'M' Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20005 by November 23rd. Only a limited number of seats will be available. Reservations will be accepted based on their date of receipt.

Cordially,

John J. Rumbarger
Asst. Exec. Secy.

.....
yes! Confirm my reservation for the AHA Convention Group Flight. Enclosed is $_____ to reserve _____ seats. (Full payment is required for each person by November 23rd.) City _____

Name _____

Address _____

Office Phone _____ Home Phone _____

Name _____

Address _____

Office Phone _____ Home Phone _____

Name _____

Address _____

Office Phone _____ Home Phone _____

The Administrator acts solely as a representative for the passengers and the responsibility of the Administrator is limited solely to the business arrangements incidental to the flight.

The Johns Hopkins University Press, Baltimore, Maryland 21218

The Savage Ideal

Intolerance and Intellectual Leadership in the South, 1890-1914

BRUCE CLAYTON The generation of scholars, writers, and social critics that came of age in the 1890s subjected the South to searching, often scathing criticism, denouncing illiteracy, demagoguery, and racism. Dr. Clayton probes the social values, myths, prejudices, and "unconscious assumptions" in the mind of the South's first intellectual community and demonstrates that even the best minds unconsciously adhered to the Savage Ideal. $10.00

Men of the First French Republic

Political Alignments in the National Convention of 1792

ALISON M. H. PATRICK By analyzing voting behavior, political alignments, geographic divisions, and political experience of deputies to the convention of 1792, Dr. Patrick shatters longstanding views of the 'Mountain' as a party of Parisian radicals. She shows that the Montagnards held national support long before Robespierre, that they represented nearly all social groups, and that many of them gained political experience in the earlier national assembly of 1791. $16.50

Genetics and American Society

KENNETH M. LUDMERER The interaction between science and society is complex, often subtle, and sometimes indirect. In the first social history of genetics in the United States, Kenneth Ludmerer explores ways in which genetic theories were used—and sometimes misused—to justify various laws, and how political and social events in turn affected the development of genetic science. His book does much to elucidate the genetics-society interface. $10.00

United Nations Peacemaking

The Conciliation Commission for Palestine

DAVID P. FORSYTHE How does the U.N. approach problems of settling disputes? How successful has it been in its peacemaking function? United Nations Peacemaking provides needed insight into the viability and value of peacemaking activities. The author compares the work of the conciliation commission for Palestine with other efforts at conflict resolution in Kashmir, the Congo, Cyprus, Indonesia, and the Balkans. Published for the Middle East Institute. $10.00

New

The Occult Sciences in the Renaissance

A Study in Intellectual Patterns

Wayne Shumaker

Mr. Shumaker's primary aim is to enlarge modern comprehension of five esoteric "scientific" systems of the Renaissance: astrology, natural or white magic, witchcraft, alchemy, and the meditative philosophy associated with Hermes Trismegistus, a shadowy figure of ancient Egypt. "So able a treatise on the whole range of occulta in the Renaissance is a rarity . . . a major, unparalleled effort."

—Paul H. Kocher, Stanford University

LC: 70-153552 300 pages over 50 illustrations $15.00

A Sufi Saint of the Twentieth Century

Shaikh Ahmad al-'Alawi, His Spiritual Heritage and Legacy

Martin Lings

The first edition of this book was welcomed in a typical review as 'one of the most thorough and intimately engaging books on Sufism to be produced by a Western scholar.' This second edition contains two new chapters on the personality and teachings of Shaikh Ahmad al-'Alawi, the Shaikh who headed an Algerian Sufi order until his death in 1934.

LC: 71-182282 242 pages halftones $8.75

Sufis of Andalusia

The Ruh al-Quds and al-Durrah al-Fākhrah of Ibn 'Arabi

Translated with Introduction and Notes by R. W. J. Austin

These are biographical sketches of some 11th and 12th century Spanish Sufi masters drawn from two manuscripts by the celebrated Sufi, Muhyi al-Din Ibn 'Arabi. The Introduction not only describes the fundamentals of Sufism and the context of Ibn 'Arabi's life and writings; it also lends insight into the practices of eminent Sufis at a time when Islam was distinguished by their spiritual intensity.

LC: 77-165230 162 pages $8.75

Fascism in France

The Case of Maurice Barrès

Robert Soucy

Maurice Barrès was one of the most influential popularizers of cultural nationalism in France at the turn of the century. An anti-Semite and a tireless exponent before 1914 of a war of revenge against Germany, Barrès was a precursor of modern French fascism. Mr. Soucy seeks to uncover the major intellectual, emotional, and aesthetic origins of Barrès thought through a study of all his works, including his novels.

LC: 77-153554 384 pages $15.75

from California

University of California Press • Berkeley 94720

Studies in the Libertarian and Utopian Tradition

The Defense of Gracchus Babeuf

Before the High Court of Vendôme

Edited and Translated by JOHN ANTHONY SCOTT

With an Essay by HERBERT MARCUSE

"His eloquent statement, masterfully translated and edited by Scott, indicates the tremendous impact which Babeuf's words were to have on future social thinkers. . . . Herbert Marcuse has appended a perceptive analysis of Babeuf's role as a social thinker. Recommended highly."—Choice
paper $1.95

Pierre-Joseph Proudhon

His Life and Work

GEORGE WOODCOCK
paper $3.95

Utopia and its Enemies

GEORGE KATEB

Evaluates the main contemporary currents of attack on the utopian ideal and includes an analysis of modern utopian thought.
paper $2.95

The Luddites

Machine-Breaking in Regency England

MALCOLM I. THOMIS

Illuminates a crucial stage in the transition from a rural to an urban economy and in working-class and trade-union history.
paper $2.75

The Doctrine of Saint-Simon

An Exposition

Translated with Notes and an Introduction by GEORG G. IGGERS

With a new Preface by the Translator

"A notable contribution to the history of political and social thought. . . . In his long introduction, itself a weighty historical essay, Iggers propounds the novel thesis that the basic instruments of the totalitarian state, 'the ideology, the movement, the party, and the leader—were all found in Saint-Simonian theory.'"

—Journal of Contemporary History

paper $3.95/cloth $7.50

of related interest

Ressentiment

MAX SCHELER

Edited with an Introduction by
Lewis A. Coser

Essays that describe the origins of the fascist personality.
paper $2.95

Examination copies are available when requested on academic letterhead. Write to Dept. 116

Schocken Books

200 Madison Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10016

THE AGRARIAN HISTORY OF ENGLAND AND WALES

Volume 1, Part 2:

A.D. 43-1042

Edited by

H. P. R. FINBERG

The Agrarian History of England and Wales will be a 7-volume work covering every aspect of the rural history of Britain from the neolithic period to the 20th century. Drawing on the findings of archaeology and original documentary sources, the studies examine closely agricultural techniques, field systems, houses, farm buildings, and the structure of rural society.

Volume 1, Part 2, just published, concentrates on A.D. 43 to 1042. The authors are S. Applebaum on Roman Britain, Glanville R. V. Jones on Post-Roman Wales, and H. P. R. Finberg on Anglo-Saxon England to 1042. $37.50

Previously published:

Volume 4: 1500-1640, edited by Joan Thirsk

$32.50

A GUIDE TO THE HISTORICAL GEOGRAPHY OF NEW SPAIN

PETER GERHARD

Regional studies of the 129 minor administrative areas into which the government of New Spain was divided during three centuries of Spanish rule, 1521-1821. Geographically, the scope is what today comprises central and southern Mexico, excluding the peninsula of Yucatan.

This detailed work includes 143 maps which condense much information derived from formerly unused documents and research. (Cambridge Latin American Studies 14) $47.50

THE ARMY OF FLANDERS AND THE SPANISH ROAD

1567-1659

GEOFFREY PARKER

A study of the logistics of Spanish victory and defeat in the Low Countries' Wars. Dr. Parker's consideration of why Spain failed to suppress the Dutch revolt provides a close view of imperialism in action, demonstrates how easily a great power can become involved in a ruinous war which it cannot manage to win but cannot bear to abandon, gives an original and detailed picture of war and military life of the period, and constitutes an important revision of the accepted theory of the decline of Spain. (Cambridge Studies in Early Modern History) $23.50

GANDHI'S RISE TO POWER

Indian Politics

1915-1922

JUDITH M. BROWN

A political study of the first clearly defined period in Mahatma Gandhi's Indian career. The author traces from new source material precisely what he did, on whom he relied for support, what his relations were with established political leaders of the subcontinent, and how he saw his own actions and his role in Indian public life. (Cambridge South Asian Studies 11) $19.50

AFRICA SINCE 1800

Second Edition

ROLAND OLIVER and ANTHONY ATMORE

Cloth $11.95 Paper $3.75

Cambridge University Press

32 East 57th Street, New York, N.Y. 10022

J.H. HEXTER

A DISTINGUISHED SCHOLAR ANALYSES
16th CENTURY THINKING ABOUT POLITICS
AND 20th CENTURY THINKING ABOUT HISTORY.

THE VISION OF POLITICS ON THE EVE OF THE REFORMATION

More, Machiavelli, Seyssel

In these penetrating studies, Professor Hexter seeks to capture the perception of politics of three extraordinarily acute thinkers of early sixteenth-century Europe. He applies an exhaustive contextual analysis to the utopian vision of Thomas More (in Utopia), the predatory vision of Niccolo Machiavelli (in The Prince), and the constitutional vision of Claude de Seyssel (in The Monarchy of France). Their diverse views — elucidated by Professor Hexter with clarity and impeccable scholarship — provide a major contribution to our understanding of the antecedents of modern political thought.

November $8.50

THE HISTORY PRIMER

"A genuine tour de force; more than just a guide for the beginner. . . . A spirited vindication of history for what it is, a humane inquiry into the human past, as well as an equally vigorous attack upon those who would make history what it is not, namely a science. . . . Historians, Hexter believes, must confront their readers with the realization that human situations involve more than just a series of problems to be solved or 'explained'. . . . [A] tightly argued . . . frequently witty book . . . I would . . . especially recommend [it] to all those involved in the teaching of history, either in colleges or secondary schools."—F. X. J. Homer, Ph.D.

$10.00

BASIC BOOKS, INC. 10 East 53rd St., New York 10022

YOU MEAN I CAN GET $50,000 OF TIAA LIFE INSURANCE FOR LESS THAN $100?

That's what an Assistant Professor asked us when he heard about TIAA's low life insurance costs.

It's true. At his age 30 the annual premium for a 20-Year Home Protection policy providing $50,000 initial amount of insurance is $159.00. The first-year dividend, based on our current dividend scale, is $61.50, making a net payment of $97.50. Dividends, of course, are not guaranteed.

The Home Protection plan is level premium Term insurance providing its largest amount of protection initially, reducing by schedule each year to recognize decreasing insurance needs. This is just one example of the many low-cost TIAA plans available. If you need more protection for your family, ask us to mail you a personal illustration with figures for a policy issued at your age. We'll also send the Life Insurance Guide describing other TIAA policies.

ELIGIBILITY

Eligibility to apply for this or other TIAA life insurance is limited to persons employed at the time of application by a college, university, private school, or other nonprofit educational or scientific institution that qualifies for TIAA eligibility.

TEACHERS INSURANCE AND ANNUITY ASSOCIATION
730 Third Avenue, New York, N. Y. 10017

pE

Please mail the new Life Insurance Guide and a personal illustration.

Name _____

Address _____

Street

City

State

Your Date of Birth _____ ZIP _____

Dependents' Ages _____

Nonprofit Employer _____ college, university, or other educational or scientific institution

Redgrave announces a new review journal
Reviews in American History
A Quarterly Journal of Criticism

Managing Editor: Stanley I. Kutler, University of Wisconsin
 Associate Editor: Stanley N. Katz, University of Chicago Law School

Board of Editors

|   |  |
|---|--|
| John W. Blassingame , Yale University    | Harold M. Hyman , Rice University                       |
| Allan G. Bogue , University of Wisconsin | Winthrop D. Jordan , University of California, Berkeley |
| David B. Davis , Yale University         | Merrill D. Peterson , University of Virginia            |
| Carl N. Degler , Stanford University     | Harry N. Scheiber , University of California, San Diego |
| Sidney Fine , University of Michigan     | Anne Firor Scott , Duke University                      |
| Frank Freidel , Harvard University       |  |
| Lloyd C. Gardner , Rutgers University    |  |

Beginning in February, 1973, Redgrave will publish a new quarterly review journal in American history and directly related disciplines. Reviews in American History will be devoted exclusively to the publication of lengthy (1500-3000 or more words) and timely review-essays of scholarly, professional, and non-fiction trade books. Relevant textbooks, reprints, and teaching and research materials also will receive attention. In general, reviews will appear within six months or less after original publication, although retrospective reviews will be published on a more extended schedule.

Reviews in American History will appear in February, May, August, and November and will contain approximately 160 pages per issue in a 6" x 9" paperbound format; an NMA-format microfiche version will also be available.

Please address editorial correspondence to: Reviews in American History, Department of History, University of Wisconsin, 435 North Park Street, Madison, Wisconsin 53706 (608) 263-1835.

Subscription rates for individuals in the U.S. (outside the U.S. add $2.00):
 1 yr. $12                      2 yrs. $23                      3 yrs. $34

Subscriptions are on a volume-year basis only; shipment cannot be made without payment. Single issue and back volume prices, and microfiche and institutional rates on request.

A descriptive brochure is available -- Please send orders and inquiries to:

REDGRAVE INFORMATION RESOURCES CORPORATION
 Dept. AO
 53 Wilton Road, Westport, Connecticut 06880
 (203) 226-6963

American Antiquarian Society PUBLICATIONS

Bibliography of America Directories through 1860, by Dorothea N. Spear (1961). 389 pp. $10.00

Three Autobiographical Fragments, by Isaiah Thomas (1962). 31 pp., front. $3.00

Vermont Imprints, 1778-1820, by Marcus A. McCorison (1963). xxiv, 597 pp. $15.00. Additions and Corrections (1968). 33 pp. $3.75

A Calendar of American Poetry in Colonial Newspapers through 1765, by J. A. Leo Lemay—$15.00

National Index of American Imprints through 1800, by Clifford K. Shipton and James E. Mooney (1969). 2 vols, xxv, xxi, 1028 pp. $45.00

American Penmanship, 1800-1850, A History of Writing and a Bibliography of Copybooks, by Ray Nash (1969). xii, 303 pp. $18.50

William Cobbett and the United States, 1792-1835, by Pierce W. Gaines (1971). xxi, 249 pp. $17.50

Forthcoming Publications

A Bibliography of American Children's Books before 1821, by d'Alté A. Welch

Cotton Mather's Angel of Bethesda, edited by Gordon Jones

A Bibliography of American Cookery Books, 1742-1860, by Eleanor Lowenstein

A Bibliography of American Sacred Music through 1810, by Richard Crawford

Chronological Tables of American Newspapers, 1690-1820, by Edward Connery Lathem

Society publications are distributed by Barre Publishers, Barre, Massachusetts 01005

---

Witch Hunting in Southwestern Germany 1562-1684

The Social and Intellectual Foundations

H. C. Erik Midelfort. One of the most detailed regional studies of witch hunting ever made, this book focuses on an area that in a period of 120 years saw some 480 trials, with some 3,200 persons executed. In bringing together materials on the economic, political, and cultural history of southwestern Germany, as well as insights from anthropology and psychology, the author breaks with the established view that witchcraft doctrines were monolithic, the trials motivated by greed and envy, and the hunts brought to an end by outside forces or "enlightenment." The author takes up the important differences between Protestant and Catholic witch hunting and offers a narrative analysis of the largest witch hunts showing the emerging patterns in location and duration, in types of accusation and confession, and in the ensuing crises of confidence among judges and populace alike that led to a realization of the dangerous futility of the hunts. Illustrated. $11.50

Government and Politics in Kuomintang China, 1927-1937

Hung-mao Tien. Save perhaps for such dramatic events as the Long March and the Sian Incident, remarkably little is known about the political workings of Nationalist China in the decade from the end of the Northern Expedition to the beginning of the war with Japan. The present volume is an effort to remedy this deficiency. It analyzes the Nationalists' political and administrative institutions in both the capital and the provinces, covering such topics as leadership, recruitment, and finances. It seeks to identify the country's political elites, to show how they operated, and to assess their performance in terms of the regime's goals of national unity and political order. Much new information is given on the main Kuomintang factions, on the social composition and educational backgrounds of provincial governors and other elites, and on the sources, extraction, and expenditure of provincial revenue. October. About $10.00

Stanford University Press

---

Law School of Harvard University

Cambridge, Mass. 02138

Liberal Arts Fellowship in Law

For the academic year 1973-1974 Harvard Law School offers four or five Liberal Arts Fellowships to college and university teachers in the arts and sciences for a year at the Law School. Holders of these Fellowships will have the title of Fellow in Law and . . . (History, Sociology, Political Science, Economics, Philosophy, etc., depending upon their particular discipline).

The purpose of the fellowships is to enable teachers in the social sciences or humanities to study fundamental techniques, concepts, and aims of law, so that, in their teaching and research, they will be better able to use legal materials and legal insights which are relevant to their own disciplines.

Fellowship holders will presumably take at least two first-year courses in law, in addition to more advanced courses, and will participate in a joint seminar. The year of study will not count toward a degree.

The fellowship grant is sufficient to cover tuition and fees. The Chairman of the Liberal Arts Fellowship Committee will be glad to write a letter to any funding agency to which the applicant has applied describing the Program and indicating the extent of the Committee's interest in inviting the applicant to be a Fellow.

Applications should include a biographical résumé (including academic record and list of publications), a statement explaining what the applicant hopes to achieve through his year of study, and two letters of recommendation.

Applications for 1973-1974 should be submitted before January 15, 1973, to the Chairman, Committee on Liberal Arts Fellowships, Harvard Law School, Cambridge, Massachusetts 02138.

Awards will be announced before February 15, 1973.

THE INDISPENSABLE BASIC RESEARCH TOOL FOR... HISTORIANS

studying the first century of American expansion, the development of federal land policy, or local history

FEDERAL LAND SERIES

Clifford Neal Smith

The FEDERAL LAND SERIES makes available to historians, librarians and other scholars a systematic survey of archival materials on the land patents issued by the United States government from 1788 to 1810. Of special interest are a list of grants to refugees of the Revolutionary War from Canada and Nova Scotia, the names of Connecticut "Sufferers" who lost property to the British, and some military bounty-land warrants issued for service during the Revolution.

THREE-WAY INDEX ■ Indexes every name encountered ■ Indexes all subject matter covered ■ Indexes all tract designations

You will find the Federal Land Series an indispensable basic research tool.

$20.00

AMERICAN LIBRARY ASSOCIATION • 50 East Huron Street, Chicago, Illinois 60611

D. C. HEATH AND COMPANY
125 Spring Street
Lexington, Massachusetts 02173

Lexington Books

CONSTITUTIONAL CHANGE

Amendment Politics and Supreme Court Litigation Since 1900

Clement E. Vose, Wesleyan University

A Twentieth Century Fund Study

Reviews the history of Supreme Court decisions and Constitutional amendments and contributes significantly to an understanding of the basic mechanisms of American Constitutional change. 448 pp. $15.00

MODERN EUROPEAN SOCIAL HISTORY

A Collection of Essays

edited by Robert J. Bezucha, Northwestern University

Presents relevant aspects of modern European history from a social/cultural/economic point of view. 408 pp. $12.50

A HISTORY OF ENGLAND

General Editor, Lacey Baldwin Smith, Northwestern University

These four volumes incorporate the latest research findings in English history and take into account modern interpretations of American and British scholars:

THE MAKING OF ENGLAND:

55 B.C.—1399

C. Warren Hollister, University of California 270 pp. $8.00

THIS REALM OF ENGLAND:

1399—1688

Lacey Baldwin Smith,
Northwestern University
320 pp. $10.00

THE AGE OF ARISTOCRACY

1688—1830

William B. Willcox,
Yale University
234 pp. $8.00

BRITAIN YESTERDAY AND TODAY: 1830 TO THE PRESENT

Walter L. Arnstein, University of Illinois 400 pp. $10.00

CIVILIZATION AND SOCIETY SERIES

General Editor, Theodore K. Rabb, Princeton University

GERMANY CONFRONTS

MODERNIZATION: German Culture and Society, 1790—1890

Robert Anchor, University of Southern California

This treatment of an era in Germany's development emphasizes the interaction between social and political life and intellectual developments. 160 pp. $8.00

THE SCHOLASTIC CULTURE OF THE MIDDLE AGES: 1000—1300

John W. Baldwin, Johns Hopkins University

An interpretive history of the culture of the Middle Ages in France and Italy. 192 pp. $8.00

MID-CENTURY REVOLUTION, 1848

Society and Revolution in France and Germany

Robert W. Lougee, University of Connecticut

Brings together recent research in Social history to identify and analyze political behavior of groups active in the Revolution of 1848. 208 pp. $8.00

GREEK SOCIETY

Frank J. Frost, University of California, Santa Barbara

A social and economic study of the Greek people, from their origins in the Bronze Age to the Byzantine Empire, based on original sources. 206 pp. $8.00

NEW FROM BASIC BOOKS

THE MIND OF ADOLF HITLER

The Secret Wartime Report

by WALTER C. LANGER

Foreword by WILLIAM LANGER. Afterword by Robert G. L. WAITE. The uncannily accurate psychological analysis of Adolf Hitler — written in 1943, but never before made public — is now published in its entirety. The most remarkable attempt ever made by a government agency to apply psychoanalytic insights to warfare, it predicts Hitler's eventual suicide and it is regarded as a masterpiece of "psychohistorical reconstruction." By combining a careful study of available documents with personal interviews, Dr. Langer succeeded in presenting a startlingly perceptive portrait of Hitler's twisted psyche. "A significant and suggestive interpretation which no serious student of Hitler will ignore."—Robert G. L. Waite $10.00

THE NAMES OF KINGS

The Parisian Laboring Poor in the Eighteenth Century

by JEFFRY KAPLOW

Professor Kaplow's intriguing study tells how and why the relatively passive working poor developed the political consciousness that led them to participate in the essentially bourgeois French Revolution. Painting a broad and richly detailed panorama of the daily life of the Parisian working class, he describes the beginnings of significant social change in the West.

December $7.95

TO SAVE A NATION

American Counter-Subversives, the New Deal, and the Coming of World War II

by GEOFFREY S. SMITH

This cogently argued analysis has special significance for an American public currently pre-occupied with the limits of dissent and the civil rights of dissidents. Looking back to the days before World War II, Professor Smith shows how the fascist ideologies of Father Coughlin, Bund-leader Fritz Kuhn, and others created serious problems for respectable isolationists—and provided the Roosevelt administration with evidence to stimulate national anxieties that frightened the U. S. into war.

February $10.00

THE FASCIST EXPERIENCE

Italian Society and Culture

by EDWARD R. TANNENBAUM

There have been many political studies of Italian Fascism, but little examination of its social context. Here, Professor Tannenbaum rediscovers the perspective of the Italians who actually experienced it as an anti-Communist movement of national social renewal.

$12.50

For examination copy requests, write Promotion Department J

BASIC BOOKS, INC.

10 East 53rd St., N. Y., N. Y. 10022

Two New Pamphlet Series

AMERICAN HISTORICAL ASSOCIATION

AHA PAMPHLETS-narrative and critical essays, including bibliographical guides, on topics in history

- 101 The American Frontier Thesis: Attack and Defense by Ray Allen Billington
- 212 The Progressive Era, 1900-20: The Reform Persuasion by George E. Mowry
- 222 Far Western Frontiers by Harvey L. Carter
- 240 The Indian in American History by William T. Hagan
- 241 The Peopling of America: Perspectives on Immigration by Franklin D. Scott
- 403 The Reformation by Harold J. Grimm
- 427 Russia since 1917: The Once and Future Utopia by George Barr Carson, Jr.

DISCUSSIONS ON TEACHING-essays on approaches to history in the classroom

- 1 Elements of Historical Thinking by Paul L. Ward

These titles available September 1, 1972; price $1.00 each

The American Historical Association
Pamphlet Orders B
400 A Street, SE
Washington, D.C. 20003

PLEASE SEND TO:

NAME (PLEASE PRINT) _____

ADDRESS _____

_____
ZIP CODE _____

I enclose $_____ (check or money order; no stamps please) in payment for the _____ pamphlets indicated below:

AHA PAMPHLETS 101___ 212___ 222___ 240___ 241___ 403___ 427___

DISCUSSIONS ON TEACHING 1___

NEW FROM BARNES & NOBLE

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATION IN EARLY MEDIEVAL EUROPE AD500—1100 Albert C. Leighton

What became of communication and transport in early medieval Europe after the Romans left is the long puzzling mystery examined by Professor Leighton. Using a very wide variety of sources, he has written a scholarly study of communications between AD500 and 1100. Travelers in early medieval times left few records for posterity, therefore sources available today are fragmentary; only one or two incomplete medieval vehicles have survived, and literary references are vague. In a brilliant piece of historical synthesis, the author considers routes, road surfaces, ships and vehicles of every kind.
1972. 265pp. $12.75

LADY JANE GREY: The Setting of the Reign

David Mathew

Lady Jane Grey is of crucial significance for the period 1547 to 1553. On a very slender experience of life, she grafted a burning Calvinist faith which, had she been successful might have brought a unity between the Reformation in England and in Scotland.

1972. 230pp. Illus. (Eyre Methuen) $14.00

AN ECONOMIC HISTORY OF ENGLAND 1870-1939

William Ashworth

A survey of the most complex and rapidly changing phase of England's economic development, which is now available in paperback for the first time.

1972. 450pp. Index (Methuen) University Paperback

Also available in Cloth

Pap. $5.50

HARPER & ROW, PUBLISHERS, INC.

BARNES & NOBLE BOOKS 10 East 53rd Street, New York 10022

New and Significant Histories

---

A History of Missouri, Volume II: 1820 to 1860. Perry McCandless. This second volume in the five-volume Missouri Sesquicentennial History traces the state's political, social, and economic development from statehood to the Civil War. Volumes available yearly through 1976. Maps. $9.50 Also available. A History of Missouri, Volume I: 1673 to 1820. William E. Foley. 256 pages $9.50

---

Captains and Cabinets: Anglo-American Naval Relations, 1917-1918. David F. Trask. Analyzes the men and the forces involved in forging a productive cooperation between war-time allies who were struggling for policy dominance and postwar superiority. Ills. December 400 pages $12.00

---

The New Citizenship: Origins of Progressivism in Wisconsin, 1885-1900. David P. Thelen. A new interpretation of progressivism that attributes its origins not to particular leaders or interest groups, but to the awakening of a popular grass-roots consciousness. 350 pages $12.00

---

Essays on Russian Liberalism. Charles E. Timberlake, editor. Eight distinguished scholars analyze the origin and evolution of Russian liberalism and examine the prospects the movement held for a peaceful, liberal alternative to autocracy in Russia before 1917. 208 pages $9.00

---

The Venezuelan Armed Forces in Politics, 1935-1959. Winfield J. Burggraaff. Explores the powerful political role of the Venezuelan armed forces during a quarter century when the country underwent the full impact of rapid social change. Winner of the University of Missouri 1972 Curators' Publication Award. 256 pages $10.00

A FACTIOUS PEOPLE

POLITICS AND SOCIETY IN COLONIAL
NEW YORK
BY PATRICIA U.
BONOMI

"...a work of major importance for the study of early American politics. It is obviously the most important analysis of the relationship between society, politics and ideology in colonial New York since Carl Becker."

—Jack P. Greene,
The Johns Hopkins University

revision of the subject since Carl Becker's more than a half century ago, but offers a new interpretation, both erudite and challenging, of the complex social, ethnic, geographic, and economic factors which entered into, if they did not control, the direction of New York's politics."

—Richard B. Morris,

"It is not only the first notable Columbia University $10.00

COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY PRESS

Address for orders:

136 South Broadway, Irvington, New York 10533

"Giant among men was Churchill, and gigantic was his accomplishment. How much of the accomplishment belongs particularly to him may always defy agreement, but the overwhelming testimony of those in the British government, civil service, and military who were best placed to know is a testimony to a great servant of the state and of the British people."

So writes the author of this in-depth study that surveys Churchill's war ministry in its entirety and measures the achievements and failures of the man and the ministry.

The War Ministry of WINSTON CHURCHILL

Maxwell P. Schoenfeld

fills a special niche in Churchillian literature since it is the only book to examine the wartime service of Winston Churchill from the standpoint of administrative history. Schoenfeld takes Churchill and his staff through Britain's involvement in the period of independent military operations and the beginnings of that grand strategy that promised victory to the Allied Forces and shaped the course of World War II. He discusses the making of the Grand Alliance and Churchill's dealings with the leaders of France, Russia, and the United States as well as Churchill's ability to manage the military and political problems at Casablanca and to devise a strategy that would win the war. In recapturing the events of the war, the book deals not as much with the progress of combat, with battlefields and generals, as with the administrative decisions that were threshed out around conference tables among Churchill and his aides, the Chiefs of Staff, and the Allies. Its special contribution lies in the delineation of Churchill—in both his political and military roles—as the impresario who conducted the Grand Alliance, shaped Allied decisions, and struggled to secure peace for mankind.

1972, 283 pp., illus., #0260, $9.95

At bookstores, or write

Iowa State University Press
Dept. 5, Ames, Iowa 50010

The AMERICAN HISTORICAL REVIEW

NEW

*General Index to Volumes LXXI-LXXV
1965-1970*

Also available:

*General Index to Volumes LXI-LXX
1955-1965*

*General Index to Volumes XLI-LX
1935-1955*

-----
American Historical Review
400 A Street, Southeast
Washington, D. C. 20003

- (A)
- ☐ 1965-1970 Indices at $10.00 each .....$ _____
- ☐ 1955-1965 Indices at $10.00 each .....$ _____
- ☐ 1935-1955 Indices at $10.00 each .....$ _____

Mr., Mrs., Miss _____

_____

_____

_____

_____

My check is enclosed.

New from Yale University Press New Haven and London

A Religious History of the American People

by Sydney E. Ahlstrom

Here, at last, is the first full-scale history of American religion in one volume. After ten years of wide-ranging research, Sydney Ahlstrom has produced a work that deals with not only the major Western religions but with secular movements, cultic phenomena, and Eastern religions as well. Starting with a thorough description of the European antecedents that shaped religious life in young America, Mr. Ahlstrom explores our religious history within the context of social, political, and intellectual development. In doing so he makes pertinent judgments and interpretations that avoid the parochialism of the conventional church history. The result is an absorbing work that is both broad and deep — a survey of America's communities of belief and commitment that is unparalleled in its comprehensiveness. $19.50

Hitler, Horthy, and Hungary

German-Hungarian Relations, 1941-1944

by Mario D. Fenyo

Mario D. Fenyo, a survivor of the events he relates and son of a distinguished literary and political figure in Hungary, describes the anomalous role played by the Hungarian government in dealing with Nazi Germany in the Second World War. He examines key issues involving Hungary's entrance into the war against the Soviet Union, its limited and wavering military contributions to the Nazi war effort and its ineffectual negotiations to extricate itself from formal hostilities. Also treated at length are the occupation of Hungary, the anti-Jewish campaigns, and Regent Horthy's abortive attempt in late 1944 to regain full control of governmental affairs. $10.00

Massachusetts Bay

The Crucial Decade, 1640-1650

by Robert Emmet Wall, Jr.

During the first ten years of the Massachusetts Bay Colony's existence a struggle persisted between the magistrates, who held effective rule of the colony, and the citizenry. By examining several major instances in which the magistrates came under attack, the author graphically shows how the established leaders preserved their authority in such a way that orthodox solutions to public problems became the colony's pattern for another generation. Nevertheless, the repressive measures they took to secure the colony against the contamination of unorthodoxy inevitably set in motion forces that would lead to reaction and eventually destroy Governor Winthrop's dream of a "city on a hill." $9.75

The Rocky Mountain Bench

The Territorial Supreme Courts of Colorado, Montana, and Wyoming, 1861-1890

by John D. W. Guice

Here is an important new perspective on the establishment of legal institutions in the territorial West. Using the case study approach, the author shows that, despite local and national difficulties, the territorial justices accomplished a great deal. While not denying the presence of some "judicial derelicts" on the Rocky Mountain bench, Mr. Guice effectively destroys the stereotyped image of all territorial justices as carpetbaggers. On the whole, they were civilizers and makers of law who contributed substantially to the territories and to the nation. $9.75

Protestant Thought in the Nineteenth Century

Volume I, 1799-1870

by Claude Welch

Nearly all studies of nineteenth-century religious thought have been national histories. In this comprehensive work, Claude Welch provides, for the first time, a thematic account of the dominating theological concerns in three major geographical areas: Continental Europe (especially Germany), Great Britain, and the United States. The range of the discussion extends from conservative dogmatic theologians to influential literary religious thinkers such as Carlyle and Emerson, to such theological critics as Feurbach and Kierkegaard. Each of the major thinkers is treated in considerable detail, and in each case the interpretation is based on a fresh reading of original sources. $12.50

FRANK FREIDEL

commenting on the fourth edition said:

"I don't know how anyone in the history field can get along without this book, it is so comprehensive and authoritative over such a vast area."

Much has happened in the years intervening since the last revision: Men have landed on the moon and undertaken new explorations of outer space. The six-day Arab/Israeli war has generated explosive tensions far from resolved. The United States, engaged in a lengthy war in Southeast Asia, has suffered political divisions at home. Japan has re-emerged as a major industrial power. Many new states, formerly European colonies, have achieved independence. These and many other recent developments are now fully treated in the Fifth Edition of the Encyclopedia.

"Authoritative and masterful . . . an invaluable reference work which chronologically arranges the history of the world from ancient to modern times. The fifth edition is revised and enlarged with maps and genealogical tables. . . . The index itself runs 200 pages. The condensation and organization are little short of incredible. . . . All in all, the book is an indispensable reference."—Boston Globe

HOUGHTON MIFFLIN COMPANY

INDEX OF ADVERTISERS

| Advertiser                       | Pages              | Advertiser                               | Pages                     |
|----------------------------------|--------------------|--|---------------------------|
| Alfred A. Knopf                  | 19, 51, 59         | Louisiana State University Press         | 26                        |
| American Antiquarian Society     | 88                 | McGraw-Hill Book Company                 | 56, 57                    |
| American Historical Association  | 48, 80, 94         | Microfilming Corporation of America      | 65                        |
| American Library Association     | 91                 | New York University Press                | 66                        |
| Arno Press                       | 30, 31, 32, 33     | Oxford University Press                  | 2nd Cover, 12, 13, 14, 15 |
| Barnes & Noble                   | 95                 | Penguin Books, Inc.                      | 29                        |
| Basic Books, Inc.                | 85, 93             | Princeton University Press               | 4th Cover                 |
| Cambridge University Press       | 78, 84             | Quadrangle Books, Inc.                   | 28                        |
| Charles Scribner's               | 21, 22, 23, 24, 25 | Rand McNally                             | 52, 53                    |
| Columbia University Press        | 43, 62, 63, 97     | Random House                             | 18, 27, 44                |
| Cornell University Press         | 60, 61             | Redgrave Information Resources Corp.     | 87                        |
| Dryden Press                     | 10, 11             | Routledge                                | 3                         |
| Fortress Press                   | 79                 | Schocken Books                           | 83                        |
| Greenwood Press                  | 72, 73             | Spectrum Books                           | 8, 9                      |
| Gregg Press                      | 50                 | Stanford University Press                | 89                        |
| Grosset & Dunlap                 | 74                 | St. John's University Press              | 47                        |
| Harcourt Brace Jovanovich, Inc.  | 71, 76, 77         | St. Martin's Press                       | 42                        |
| Harper & Row                     | 34, 35, 36, 68, 69 | Teachers Insurance and Annuity Assn.     | 86                        |
| Harvard University Press         | 3rd Cover, 39, 70  | The American Historical Review           | 99, 103                   |
| Holt Information Systems         | 67                 | The Centre D'Etude du Quebec             | 75                        |
| Houghton Mifflin                 | 45, 101            | The Free Press                           | 40                        |
| Index of Advertisers             | 102                | The Society of American Historians, Inc. | 58                        |
| Indiana University Press         | 64                 | University of California Press           | 82                        |
| Iowa State University Press      | 98                 | University of Chicago Press              | 20                        |
| J. B. Lippincott Co.             | 4, 5, 6, 7         | University of Illinois Press             | 38                        |
| Johns Hopkins University Press   | 49, 81             | University of Missouri Press             | 96                        |
| Kennikat Press                   | 54, 55             | University of North Carolina Press       | 41                        |
| Law School of Harvard University | 90                 | University of Pittsburgh Press           | 16                        |
| Lexington Books                  | 92                 | University of Texas Press                | 17, 46                    |
| Little, Brown and Company        | 37                 | Yale University Press                    | 100                       |

If you are planning to move, please let us know six weeks before changing your address. Attach address label and fill in your name and new address below. This will ensure prompt service on your subscription.

Attach Label Here
(address label found on AHR wrapper). Send label with your name and new address to, American Historical Review, 400 A St., S.E., Washington, D. C. 20003. If a label is not available, be sure to attach your OLD address, including Zip Code number.

Name _____

New address _____

City _____

State _____ Zip _____

THE AMERICAN HISTORICAL ASSOCIATION

The American Historical Review

THE AMERICAN HISTORICAL ASSOCIATION

American University Centre
U S I S Calcutta

- 8 JAN 1973

Oxford University
Press

PAPERBACKS

Yalta

By DIANE SHAVER CLEMENS. "A brilliant reconsideration of the Yalta Conference, based on a thorough examination of the available sources, Soviet as well as Western." — Library Journal

GB 379 $2.95

Harlem Renaissance

By NATHAN IRVIN HUGGINS. "A long overdue account of one of the most exciting periods in our cultural past. It should be required reading." — The Nation

GB 384 $2.95

Scottsboro

A Tragedy of the American South

By DAN T. CARTER. "Ranks among the finest books of the decade in the field of Negro history." — AUGUST MEIER, Saturday Review

GB 363 $3.95

The Land Office Business

The Settlement and Administration of American Public Lands, 1789-1837

By MALCOLM J. ROHRBOUGH. "[He has] struck gold in mining the enormous correspondence of the General Land Office to appraise the inner working of public land administration." — PAUL W. GATES, Cornell University

GB 357 $2.50

Origins of the Fifth Amendment

The Right Against Self-Incrimination

By LEONARD W. LEVY. Winner of the Pulitzer Prize for History, 1969. Makes the experience of centuries relevant to the legal process of today.

GB 340 $3.95

"Gentlemen of Property and Standing"

Anti-Abolition Mobs in Jacksonian America

By LEONARD L. RICHARDS. This study of the structure of prejudice in the antebellum North is "a work of major importance." — DAVID BRION DAVIS

GB 347 $1.95

A Little Commonwealth

Family Life in Plymouth Colony

By JOHN DEMOS. "One of the finest pieces of local history that I have read in years." — J. H. PLUMB, Saturday Review

GB 344 $1.95

Industrial Slavery in the Old South

By RICHARD S. STAROBIN. Shows how the use of slave labor in southern industries took on political meaning before the Civil War. "An important breakthrough." — EUGENE D. GENOVESE

GB 343 $2.50

Free Soil, Free Labor, Free Men

The Ideology of the Republican Party Before the Civil War

By ERIC FONER. "Useful and fairminded . . . ought to kill some of the hoary myths about the early Republicans."

—DAVID DONALD, N.Y. Times Book Review

GB 342 $2.75

Rebellion in Black Africa

Edited and with an Introduction by ROBERT I. ROTBERG. Six essays explore representative protest movements during and after the era of colonialism.

GB 350 $2.95

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS

200 Madison Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10016

VOLUME 77 • NUMBER 5 • DECEMBER 1972

---

The American Historical Review

---

THE AMERICAN HISTORICAL ASSOCIATION

At a recent meeting the Council of the Association voted to raise annual regular dues to $25 for full professors and nonacademic members as a step toward reducing the deficit for the current fiscal year. The Council agreed that the increase should be put into effect starting with renewal notices sent out after the end of January 1973.

VOLUME 77 • NUMBER 5 • DECEMBER 1972

---

The American Historical Review

---

THE AMERICAN HISTORICAL ASSOCIATION

Managing Editor: R. K. WEBB

Associate Editor: NANCY LANE

Assistant Editors: JOHN T. APPLEBY, JANET CROLY HAYMAN, ANN HOFSTRA

Assistant Editor-Bibliographer: EDWARD C. PAPENFUSE, JR.

Editorial Assistants: JOAN ANSHELES, ROBIN E. BYRNES, ESTEN H. HARDEE

Advertising Manager: LOUISE M. DOUGLAS

Board of Editors

ALBERT FEUERWERKER
University of Michigan

KENNETH S. LYNN
Johns Hopkins University

NANCY LYMAN ROELKER
Boston University

PETER GAY
Yale University

BRYCE LYON
Brown University

GEORGE B. TINDALL
University of North Carolina

TOM B. JONES
University of Minnesota

EDMUND S. MORGAN
Yale University

GORDON WRIGHT
Stanford University

10-12-72

Contributors:

DONALD R. KELLEY, professor of history at the State University of New York at Binghamton, is the author of Foundations of Modern Historical Scholarship (New York, 1970) and a biography, François Hotman, A Revolutionary's Ordeal, being published by Princeton University Press. Mr. Kelley was a student of the late Garrett Mattingly at Columbia University and is currently visiting professor at Harvard.

STANDISH MEACHAM is the author of two books on Victorian Church history, Henry Thornton of Clapham (Cambridge, Mass., 1964) and Lord Bishop, The Life of Samuel Wilberforce (Cambridge, Mass., 1970). A professor of history at the University of Texas at Austin, Mr. Meacham is in England this year on a Guggenheim fellowship, engaged in research for a forthcoming book on English working-class attitudes during the years 1870-1914.

VOJTECH MASTNY, an assistant professor of history at Columbia and author of The Czechs under Nazi

Rule: The Failure of National Resistance, 1939-42 (New York, 1971; Ansley Award), studied in Prague, Oxford, and at Columbia, where he received his doctorate under Fritz Stern. Besides resistance and collaboration in World War II, Mr. Mastny's main interest concerns the role of East Central Europe in the great-power conflicts of the twentieth century. His forthcoming study about the interaction of Soviet diplomacy, military strategy, and guidance of the Communist parties in that part of Europe during 1941-45 attempts to add the Russian dimension to the current debate about the origins of the cold war.

ROBERT M. SLUSSER is professor of history at Michigan State University, where he teaches modern Russian history. He is the author of The Berlin Crisis of 1961 (Baltimore, 1972), an analysis of Soviet-American relations and Soviet internal policy that is planned as part of a series of studies dealing with Soviet internal and foreign policy in the Khrushchev-Kennedy era.

---

Martyrs, Myths, and the Massacre: The Background of St. Bartholomew

---

DONALD R. KELLEY

HOW, FROM A DISTANCE of four hundred years, can we obtain a clear view of the Massacre of St. Bartholomew? The refractory powers of time always present difficulties, but in this case our vision is further distorted by a screen of false and conflicting evidence and by an endless stream of partisan debate. Perhaps the answer is that we should discard altogether the idea of describing some objective set of circumstances independent of ideological presuppositions and the passions aroused in witnesses and interpreters. Perhaps we should try rather to restore the event to its various contexts, conceptual as well as historical, and from a point of view that accommodates political and religious consciousness as well as social reality, that recognizes the mythical as well as the historical dimension. For it is upon some such symbolic level that the historical significance of events is to be found.

Over the past four centuries the Massacre of St. Bartholomew has presented many faces. It has been seen as a sensational explosion of violence fired by a half-century of mounting religious hatred; as a tragedy so shocking, according to one contemporary witness, that posterity would never believe it; as a turning point in a great world conflict; as a storm center of religious polemic and a seedbed of political theories; as a legend of gigantic proportions promoted by publicists and sanctioned by men of letters; as a puzzle and topic of debate for generations of historians; as an occasion for Catholic masses, Protestant lamentations, and historical conferences.<sup>1</sup> It was all these and more. It was also an archetypal occurrence that transcended its

This paper is an offshoot of two projects, a biography, François Hotman, A Revolutionary's Ordeal, forthcoming from Princeton University Press, and a study in progress of sixteenth-century propaganda. A shorter version of this paper was read at a meeting of the Newberry Library Renaissance Conference in May 1972 devoted to "The Massacre of St. Bartholomew in Historical Perspective."

<sup>1</sup>The most important source material is the anonymous pamphlet literature, which is fairly exhaustively listed in the following publications: Robert Lindsay and John Neu, French Political Pamphlets, 1547-1648 (Madison, 1969); the Catalogue de l'histoire de France, 1 (Paris, 1845), which is a listing by shelf mark of the Bibliothèque Nationale (BN), principally the range Lb.<sup>33</sup> to Lb.<sup>38</sup>; the catalog of the Bibliothèque de l'Arsenal, unfortunately unpublished, in nine MS volumes, 8°H. 12868; and F.-A. Isambert, ed., Recueil général des anciennes lois françaises, 12 (Paris, 1822-33), numbered consecutively.

historical context—transcended it not only in the direction of the future (by endless debates over premeditation, guilt, and consequences) but also in the direction of the past (by seeming to symbolize, summarize, and confirm long-standing fears and anticipations and indeed to repeat earlier misfortunes on a grander scale). It was, in other words, an almost generic human experience that came as no surprise in the event, that followed a familiar pattern in its course, and that would be relived in various ways afterwards.

In order to suggest the basis and dimensions of this historical epiphenomenon, we must look beyond the conventional narrative and diplomatic sources that help to show (in Ranke's view) "what really happened." One of the most convenient as well as fashionable procedures is to choose some analyzable model. This seems to be all the more appropriate since the model in this instance does not have to be imported from any of the more structured social disciplines. On the contrary, it is suggested, indeed imposed upon us, by the historical context of the sixteenth-century wars of religion. Here is a clear case of history repeating itself, or at least of men seeing it as a repetition. For the witnesses, participants, and interpreters of the events of late summer 1572 knew what the phenomenon was practically before it happened: it was not a "tumult" or a "disorder" or the suppression of a "conspiracy" as various observers supposed; it was a massacre, by no means unexpected and not even the first in that generation. And they knew what part they might ultimately have to play: it was that highly stylized and stereotyped role called "martyrdom," the most exalted and yet in some ways the simplest form of sainthood. The fundamental psychological model for this phenomenon, then (again with a nominal bow to intellectual fashion), was what can only be called the martyr complex.<sup>2</sup>

The remaining problem is where to find reflections of this model, or in other words, how to gain access to this aspect of the Protestant conscience. The most obvious and direct source would seem to be that most human and down-to-earth variety of Protestant historiography, the martyrology. The tradition of latter-day martyrs was inherent in Protestant self-consciousness from the beginning—Luther's stand at Worms in 1521, so reminiscent of Hus's a century before, was potentially that of a martyr—but not for another generation did this tradition take a consciously literary form. The first fruits came within a few years and showed a pronounced family resemblance. Most significant were Jean Crespin's The History of the Martyrs and the first Latin version of John Foxe's Acts and Monuments, both appearing in 1554, in Geneva and Strasbourg respectively. Ludwig Rabe's Stories of God's

<sup>2</sup> A convenient bibliography on the question of martyrdom may be found in W. H. C. Frend, Martyrdom and Persecution in the Early Church (New York, 1967). In all the massive literature I find no useful studies from a psychohistorical or sociohistorical point of view. General Catholic treatments—of which the best is perhaps Henri Leclercq's in Fernand Cabrol and Henri Leclercq, eds., Dictionnaire d'Archéologie chrétienne et de liturgie (Paris, 1924–53), vol. 10, pt. 2—tend to be so rigidly legalistic and orthodox that Protestant experiences do not even come into the discussion.

Chosen Witnesses and Martyrs, published in Strasbourg in 1552, antedated these two but was limited to martyrs in antiquity until later, derivative editions. Also related were Heinrich Pantaleone's History of the Martyrs, Johann Sleidan's great history of the Reformation, published in Strasbourg in 1555 and soon translated into German, French, and English, and Matthias Flaccius Illyricus's Catalog of the Witnesses of Truth, published in Basel in 1556.<sup>3</sup>

Though independently conceived, these works were all products of the international Protestant community and had a collective, to some extent cooperative, character. The links between Geneva and Strasbourg, the two leading Calvinist centers, were particularly strong and were strengthened by the presence of the exiles from Marian England. Crespin was in close touch with Calvin's friend Sleidan, drew upon Sleidan's book, and in 1556 published a French translation of it in Geneva. For later versions of his own History Crespin drew also upon Foxe's concomitantly growing Book of Martyrs. Foxe himself had gone to Strasbourg in 1555 and then settled in Basel to continue his work, but he continued to receive materials from his friend Edmund Grindal, and no doubt indirectly from Sleidan. Foxe also made use of Flaccius Illyricus's Catalog, which was printed in 1556 by Foxe's own publisher, Johann Oporinus. In addition Foxe's work was continued by Pantaleone, who was also Sleidan's German translator. The relation of Rabe, a leading theologian in Strasbourg's Lutheran congregation, is not known, but in any case it seems clear that the first generation of martyrologists constituted something approaching a literary circle, a kind of Protestant pleiade of the exile circuit, which drew upon a common fund of experience, a common ideological commitment, a common historical perspective, and a common reliance upon what Foxe called the "miracle" of printing.<sup>4</sup>

In many respects the groundbreaking work was Crespin's, and for France, certainly, it provided the model. Crespin was himself an exile from the Netherlands and, along with his friend François Baudouin, had barely escaped from his native Artois with his skin. That was in 1545. Afterwards Crespin settled in Geneva, set up his printing press, and launched into his life's work. The History of Martyrs was based on a wide range of printed and unprinted sources and on several other independent works, including those of Foxe, Antoine de la Roche Chandieu, and François Hotman, the first historian of the Massacre of St. Bartholomew. Crespin also drew on the Ecclesiastical History of the Reformed Churches of France, long attributed to Theodore Beza. The History of Martyrs appeared in successively augmented and altered editions between 1554 and 1570 (the last published by Crespin) and thereafter was continued by Simon Goulart, the prolific polemicist who issued the most comprehensive edition in 1619, when he had succeeded Beza as head of the Genevan church. This book is the centerpiece, as far as France is concerned, of the modern martyrological canon.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>3</sup> Ludwig Rabe, Der heiligen aus erwählten Gottes Zeugen Bekennen und Martyren (Strasbourg, 1552), with a treatment of the modern period in the expanded edition (Strasbourg, 1571); Jean Crespin, Le Livre des martyrs ([Geneva], 1554); John Foxe, Commentarii rerum in ecclesia gestarum (Strasbourg, 1554), dedicated to Christoph von Württemberg, Aug. 31, 1554; Heinrich Pantaleone, Martyrum historia (Basel, 1563); Johann Sleidan, De Statu religionis et reipublicae, Carolo Quinto, Caesare, Commentarii (Strasbourg, Sept. 1556); Matthias Flaccius Illyricus, Catalogus testium veritatis (Basel, 1556).

<sup>4</sup> For some of these complex interrelations, see G. Moreau, "Contribution à l'histoire du livre des martyrs," Bulletin de la Société de l'histoire du protestantisme français, 103 (1957): 173-99.

Perhaps the most fundamental theme of this whole genre was, in Crespin's words, "the conformity of the modern history of the martyrs with that of antiquity." This parallel was perhaps what Lefèvre d'Étaples had in mind when he began to compile his Agonies of the Martyrs, as did Rabe, who referred explicitly to the "proto-martyrs" of antiquity. "The memory of the first persecutions," as Chandieu put it, "is a school that teaches how to remain true to one's calling." Indeed the purpose of collecting these biographical accounts included all of the basic ingredients for the humanist prescription for history. They offered "consolation," as Crespin wrote in his first preface; they constituted a treasury of exempla for imitation and a kind of moral and anagogical "mirror" for Christians; and they were commemorative, preserving for posterity the "deeds and writings" of exemplary men of faith.<sup>6</sup>

Yet there is no doubt that these humanist commonplaces were transformed by their conscription into the service of militant Protestantism. The biographical form of martyrology resembled less the de viris illustribus of classical tradition than the vitae sanctorum of the medieval Church. In each biography Crespin wrote, it was his intention to describe the doctrine as well as the life of the martyr and above all his "happy ending"; and to suit this purpose Crespin did not hesitate to stretch the already flexible standards of sixteenth-century editorship, improving in various ways upon the texts of even original documents. Chandieu took pride in declaring his "fidelity" to truth and especially to his sources, but his partisanship was still more flagrant. The purpose of his book was both to afford "profit" to his brothers and to demonstrate the justice of his "Cause" to the "poor ignorant ones" outside of it. The book was quite literally a call to arms. "We are not in this world to rest," he declared, "but rather to fight."<sup>7</sup>

<sup>5</sup> Besides the invaluable edition by Daniel Benoit of Crespin and Simon Goulart, Histoire des martyrs (Toulouse, 1885-89), see Arthur Piaget and Gabriel Berthoud, Notes sur le livre des martyrs de Jean Crespin (Neuchâtel, 1930); C.-L. Frossard, Le Livre des martyrs de Jean Crespin (Paris, 1880); and more generally, Ferdinand Vander Haeghen et al., Bibliographie des martyrologies protestants néerlandais, 2 (La Haye, 1890); also the article on Crespin in Eugène Haag and Emile Haag, eds., La France Protestante (2d ed.; Paris, 1877-88); the notes to Calvin's correspondence in Calvin, Opera quae supersunt omnia, ed. J. W. Baum, Eduard Cunitz, et al. (Strasbourg, 1863-1900), vols. 38-39; and J.-F. Gilmont, "Une édition inconnue du martyrologe de Jean Crespin," Bibliothèque d'Humanisme et Renaissance, 30 (1969): 363-71. The latter article and that by Moreau, "Contribution à l'histoire du livre des martyrs" (p. 174), refer to the work of E. E. Halkin and his students, which is important though devoted mostly to the martyrs of Belgium and the Netherlands. On Rabe's book, see Robert Foncke, Duitse Vlugschriften van de Tijd over het Proces en de Terechstelling van de Protestanten Frans en Nikolaas Thys te Mechelen (Antwerp, 1937), 60-65; and William Haller, Foxe's Book of Martyrs and the Elect Nation (London, 1963), 55-73. The other related works are Antoine de la Roche Chandieu, Histoire des persecutions et martyrs de l'église de Paris depuis l'an 1557 (Lyons, 1563), BN, Rés. Ln.<sup>25</sup>, 91; Histoire ecclésiastique des églises réformées au Royaume de France, ed. J. W. Baum and Eduard Cunitz (Paris, 1883); [François Hotman], De Furoribus Gallicis ("Edinburgh" [probably Basel], 1573); and [Hotman], Gasparis Colinii Castelonii, magni quondam Franciae amiraliis vita (hereafter Vita Colinii) (n.p., 1575).

<sup>6</sup> Crespin, Histoire des martyrs, vol. 1, prefaces of 1570 and 1554, passim; [Lefèvre d'Étaples], Agones martyrium mensi ianuarii. Libro primo (Paris, 1529) (no more published); Rabe, Heiligen aus erwählten Gottes Zeugen Bekennen und Martyren (1571), vol. 2; Chandieu, Histoire des persecutions, xiii.

The most direct source of inspiration for these martyrologies was clearly the Protestant view of ecclesiastical history, as variously expressed by Luther, Melanchthon, and Calvin. "From all authors and histories," declared Flaccius Illyricus, "it is evident that our church . . . is truly ancient and takes its origin from the time of Christ and the apostles."<sup>8</sup> In the subsequent life of this true church the persecutions of the faithful constituted a major source of continuity, which according to Crespin paralleled the progress of Grace on earth and indeed represented its carnal counterpart. "The blood of martyrs is the seed of the church" was the invariably quoted motto of Tertullian, and its life-giving force was continuous over the centuries. Moreover, like Christian tradition in general and in sharp contrast to the national orientation of pagan historiography, the history of martyrs was truly universal in scope and included, as Crespin remarked, "all conditions, ages, sexes, and nations."<sup>9</sup> It differed from medieval historiography, too, especially from the saints' lives with which it had undeniable resemblances, in that it was concerned not with the idolatrous relics but with the spiritual legacy of the faithful—with their "words and deeds." Like the view of ecclesiastical tradition held by Melanchthon and Flaccius Illyricus, the view of the Crespin-Goulart martyrology was not merely "human" but doctrinal or confessional.

Between the first, archetypal age of Christian martyrs and the moderns came a time that seemed darker to Crespin than it did to many of the most critical of humanists (which may serve as a reminder, though surely not a revelation, that the myth of the "Dark Ages" was as much a creation of the Reformation as it was of the Renaissance). After the primitive church came the papal monarchy—"la monarchie papistique" is Crespin's phrase—and then, at a still lower level, a third age ridden with Scholasticism, canon law, relic worship, and other forms of idolatry.<sup>10</sup> Throughout this period there was a tradition of "pure religion," but it was tenuous and took the form only of scattered "witnesses to the truth"—"precursors" is the word modern

<sup>7</sup> Chandieu, Histoire des persecutions, xxviii.

<sup>8</sup> Flaccius Illyricus, Catalogus testium veritatis, preface.

<sup>9</sup> Crespin, Histoire des martyrs, 1:1; Chandieu, Histoire des persecutions, lxii. See also Hans Campenhausen, Die Idee der Martyrium in der alten Kirche (Göttingen, 1964), and the references there to Augustine, Luther, and Calvin.

<sup>10</sup> Crespin, Histoire des martyrs, 1: 41; see also Heinrich Bullinger, Origines errorum (Zurich, 1549).

historians prefer for this still no less mythical phenomenon. Finally came the revival of true doctrine begun by Luther, which brought with it, according to Crespin, a renaissance of martyrdom as well.

SO MUCH FOR MARTYROLOGY as a model. The original, martyrdom itself, is more difficult to define. A legal concept, a value judgment, a psychological condition, a social role, a weapon of propaganda—again it was all these, and more. The idea, if not the terminology, long antedated Christianity. As early as the fifth century, for example, Athenians killed in war were assured of deification; and this notion of dying in battle for a just cause has always been associated with that of martyrdom.<sup>11</sup> But it was Christianity that adopted the Greek term martys to this general behavior pattern. Although the original signification was lost in the Latin West, Protestant martyrologists quite consciously, in the spirit of Biblical humanism, restored it and identified the martyrly condition with one “testifying” to the faith.<sup>12</sup> It was not the fact of death, in other words, but the inner attitude that admitted one to the pantheon of martyrs and so, though theologically this could not be explicit, to the certainty of salvation as well as earthly immortality. The vital importance of the act of testifying in early Protestantism is further highlighted by the counterconcept—“Nicodemitism” was the term coined by Calvin in 1543—referring to the concealment of one’s faith, one of the most heinous of all sins.

Martyrdom was a highly conventional as well as highly painful process: it was a form of mimesis—imitatio Christi with a vengeance. And to follow Christ, “captain of the martyrs,” as Crespin put it, entailed a heavy weight of ritual, rhetoric, etiquette, and symbolism, as reflected in interrogations, confessions of faith, execution scenes, crowd reactions, and contemporary graphic representations. The stereotyped character of the role is clearly evident in the martyrologies—not only in the “ten marks of the martyr,” which Crespin established for purposes of identification and as the Protestant equivalent of canonization, but also in the unarticulated categories, including the status of the accused and the types of punishment, which modern scholars have extracted and applied in an almost quantitative fashion.<sup>13</sup> These categories were confirmed, and in some cases created, by the more or less predictable reactions of established authority, which in France was determined to uproot all heresy. The result was to intensify the impression of Protestants that they were recapitulating the experiences of early Christians—confronting the same style of interrogation, the same inseparable charges of blasphemy and sedition, and the same sorts of repression and punishments. It may be added that they also anticipated the same kind of vengeance, that is, the decline and fall of the persecuting state; for such was the judgment often expressed by Protestants about the fate of France in the later sixteenth century.<sup>14</sup>

<sup>11</sup> Ernst H. Kantorowicz, “Pro Patria, Mori in Medieval Political Thought,” AHR, 56 (1950-51): 472; included also in his Selected Studies (New York, 1965), 308.

<sup>12</sup> See H. A. M. Hoppenbrouwers, Recherches sur la terminologie du martyre de Tertullien à Lactance (Nijmegen, 1961); and Carlo Ginzburg, Il Nicodemismo (Turin, 1970).

<sup>13</sup> Crespin, Histoire des martyrs, preface of 1570. A modern example is Piaget and Berthoud, Notes sur le livre des martyrs, drawing upon Vander Haeghen, Bibliographie des martyrologies. Such attempts deserve to be followed up by more statistically grounded studies, not only along the lines suggested by Geoffrey Nuttall, “The English Martyrs, 1535-1680,” Journal of Ecclesiastical History, 22 (1971): 191-97, but also, and indeed at the same time, along those of Lacey Baldwin Smith, “English Treason Trials and Confessions in the Sixteenth Century,” Journal of the History of Ideas, 15 (1954): 471-98.

It is not going too far to suggest that the coherence of the modern tradition of martyrs was created as much by external pressures as by the sharing of a common ideology and a common "Cause."<sup>15</sup> Catholic attempts to discredit individual martyrs only provided further publicity. Stories about last-minute recantations were always being circulated, remarked Erasmus, rejecting one such rumor about Louis Berquin, the first notable French martyr (who indeed, against Erasmus' advice, had chosen to stand upon his conscience).<sup>16</sup> Catholics were always as ready to attribute a "Virgin, intercede for me" to a man about to be killed as Protestants were to find a martyrly defiance; what counted most, however, was the fact of execution. The Catholic solution was to create a kind of countermythology about heretics and, ultimately, an "antimartyrological" tradition to undo the work of Crespin and his fellow authors.<sup>17</sup> In ideological wars, it seems, demonology has often been the response to hagiography.

This dialogue was also pursued on the official level. From the mid-1520s Protestants were plagued by a wide range of repressive legislation that constituted a kind of mirror image of their own propaganda and was an almost continuous effort to regulate their behavior on every level. The legislation was not always consistent (alternating between prescribing banishment and forbidding emigration, for example, and between controlling the printing press and abolishing it altogether), but its tone was unmistakable. Except for intermittent periods of crisis or compromise, it reflected an almost totalitarian, off-with-their-heads attitude toward heresy and disobedience that was hardly less intense than the fanaticism of the Huguenots themselves. The royal ordinances are filled with repetitive orders banning weapons, expelling vagabonds and such dangerous elements, forbidding Protestants the right to inheritance, officeholding, and burial, and prescribing death for the printing, selling, or even possession of heretical or seditious literature and for the convening of "illicit assemblies." Again and again government policy was declared to be "the extirpation and extermination" of

<sup>14</sup> See, for example, Chandieu, Histoire des persecutions, lxxv.

<sup>15</sup> "La CAUSE," i.e. of the Huguenots, became a central theme of debate between Protestants and Catholics immediately following St. Bartholomew; see especially Pierre Charpentier, Epistola ad Franciscum Portum (n.p., 1572); Franciscus Portus, Responsio (n.p., 1573); and Jean de Montluc, Oratio . . . (Paris, 1573).

<sup>16</sup> Erasmus, Opus epistolarum Des. Erasmi Roterdami, ed. P. S. Allen and H. M. Allen, 8 (Oxford, 1934), no. 2188.

<sup>17</sup> Jacques Severt, L'Anti-Martyrologie . . . (Lyons, 1622).

heresy.<sup>18</sup> The most spectacular expression of official disfavor, of course, was the unending series of executions staged as public exhibits at strategic spots, especially market places like the Place de Grève and the Place Maubert in the university section of Paris.<sup>19</sup> It was this campaign, more than anything else, that gave French Protestantism its persecution complex and Protestant propaganda its paranoid style.

From the time that the winds of Lutheran doctrine first reached France, bracing to some, to others bringing an odor of heresy and sedition, the production of martyrs became a familiar feature of religious opposition. In many cases, of course, the pattern of early Christianity was consciously and pridefully followed. From the execution of the self-styled hermit Jean Vallière on August 8, 1523, the honor roll of this special echelon of the elect grew and was carefully preserved by religious chroniclers and martyrologists. From 1534—the notorious “year of the placards,” when heretical posters were distributed in the streets of Paris and even affixed to the king’s chamber door in the castle of Amboise—the official reaction became more intense, and within a few months the list of martyrs increased considerably. It was at this time, Crespin reported, that the practice of cutting off the tongues of heretics before execution was initiated, although this symbolic act was notably unsuccessful in silencing French Protestantism in general.<sup>20</sup>

It was the “miracle” of printing that gave Protestantism its voice, but this same miracle also produced one most unattractive offshoot—the institution of preventive censorship. Book burning was by no means a Catholic monopoly, as Luther’s sensational act of throwing the corpus of canon law into the fire demonstrates, but it was specifically Protestant literature that furnished most of the fuel at the beginning. Bearing witness in the embarrassingly public form of print often entailed equally drastic retaliation by established authority; and condemning and destroying books may well be regarded as one of the preliminaries of martyrdom itself, since more than one printer and propagandist followed his books into the flames. So it was with Berquin, so it would be with Étienne Dolet (that unwilling “martyr of the Renaissance” who did in fact recant),<sup>21</sup> and so it would have been with Calvin and Beza if they had returned to France.

One crucial factor in the ideological polarization of society was the alienation of the younger generation. A year before the affair of the placards there was an indication of this alienation in an edict that sought to bring greater discipline into the university of Paris. Specifically the order banned “the impudent books of the heretics” and called for interrogation of younger students if such books were found in their possession. The edict

<sup>18</sup> Isambert, Recueil, vol. 12: no. 128 (June 10, 1525), no. 211 (Jan. 29, 1534), no. 367 (July 23, 1543), no. 382 (July 24, 1557).

<sup>19</sup> See John Viénot, Promenades à travers le Paris des martyrs, 1523–59 (Paris, 1913).

<sup>20</sup> Crespin, Histoire des martyrs, 1: 297.

<sup>21</sup> R. C. Christie, Etienne Dolet, The Martyr of the Renaissance: 1508–1546 (London, 1899).

also frowned upon long whiskers (prolixa barba) worn by masters, and it was later derided by Beza, a student in these years, as the "edict of the beards."<sup>22</sup> In the course of the reaction to the placards (in which university persons were deeply implicated), Francis I issued a special warning to the university community about the danger of heresy. "I pray that you . . . be especially solicitous of the youth," he told the faculty in the spring of 1535, "and see that they are well instructed and indoctrinated [indoctriner] so that they do not fall into the evil and forbidden opinions."<sup>23</sup>

This incipient conflict of generations affected the family as well as education. One striking but not unusual example is that of François Hotman, who was converted to the "new opinions" at precisely the time that his father was taking his place on that special tribunal of the Parlement of Paris, the Chambre ardente, which took over the official campaign of suppression in 1547. The conflict was so intense that the next spring the younger Hotman made his decision—after a crisis very much like that of his friend Beza a few months later—to break ties with his home and go into exile; and he made quite clear the significance of the martyr complex in his choice. "My father ended his career by oppressing more than a thousand martyrs," he later told Melanchthon. "As long as I was with him he tried to keep me forcibly from impiety, but God kept me for His church, and here I intend to spend the rest of my life." He denounced the way of the Nicodemite and chose Calvin, quite literally, as his new "father." "He [Hotman] abandoned the hope of a fine inheritance," Calvin later told Heinrich Bullinger, "in order to fight for Christ."<sup>24</sup> A contemporary scholar has suggested that the martyr is a kind of religious adventurer,<sup>25</sup> and it was in some such spirit that Hotman, like many another young man in these years, committed this act of rebellion.

In the spring of 1549 Hotman left Geneva (in the company of Beza, who had just decided not to go into the printing business with Crespin) to take a position in the Calvinist academy of Lausanne. Even here Hotman was not out of reach of the royal campaign of persecution. Less than four years later five students from Lausanne, on their way to join congregations in southern France, were imprisoned by the Catholic authorities of Lyons and became a cause more célèbre than that of the placards. Despite Calvin's efforts and despite pleas from various Swiss cities these young men were condemned in 1553 and, one by one, were burned at the same stake. Crespin

<sup>22</sup> Beza to Maclou Popon, May 7, 1542, in Beza, Correspondance, ed. Fernand Aubert and Henri Meylan (Paris, 1960-), 1: 43.

<sup>23</sup> Francis I, quoted in C. E. Bulaeus, Historia Universitatis Parisiensis (Paris, 1673), 6: 252-53.

<sup>24</sup> François Hotman to Melanchthon, May 24, 1556, BN, MS, Collection Dupuy, vol. 797, fol. 212v. The record of the elder Hotman's activities has been published by Nathaniel Weiss, La Chambre ardente (Paris, 1889); the son's conversion and flight may be followed through his correspondence with Calvin, published in the Opera. See Calvin to Bullinger, Nov. 25, 1549, Opera, vol. 44, no. 1324.

<sup>25</sup> Michael Walzer, The Revolution of the Saints (London, 1965), 9. This study contains many interesting suggestions concerning the psychology of martyrdom.

publicized the fate of these latter-day "martyrs of Lyons" by printing their prison correspondence with Calvin in the first edition of his History, which appeared the following year (and which provided Sleidan with his account).<sup>26</sup> Whether these letters were authentic or assembled in some way by Crespin himself, they provided most effective Protestant propaganda and took their place in the martyrological tradition.

THE CREATION OF MARTYRS seriatim was alarming enough, especially when it was the result of institutional persecution, but far worse was the creation of martyrs en masse. According to a famous distinction of the Huguenot historian Agrippa d'Aubigne, massacre victims, though their names often went unrecorded, constituted a second type of martyr, and these were still more disturbing to the Protestant conscience.<sup>27</sup> The first sensational episode was the notorious persecution of the Waldensians in Mérimole, which Crespin called "as memorable as anything within the memory of man" and in fact thought worthy of a separate volume.<sup>28</sup> In 1545 a veritable campaign of extermination was waged in which twenty-two villages were destroyed and hundreds of persons killed; others were put to flight, and many went to Geneva, as was becoming increasingly common. This episode, together with the work of the Chambre ardente, haunted Protestants with the prospect of martyrdom or exile, which represented a kind of political martyrdom. Further incidents and the repressive legislation of the 1550s served to magnify such fears among the Huguenots, as they were beginning to be called, as well as to bring civil war closer.

Such fears played a part, too, in that complex set of uprisings referred to as the Conspiracy of Amboise, which such Protestants as Hotman, Beza, and Crespin looked upon as in effect the opening phase of the wars of religion. The conspiracy, brewing already in the fall of 1559 after the death of King Henry II, aimed at breaking the power of the Guise family by gaining possession of the young King Francis II. It was further stirred up by the famous trial of Anne du Bourg, who was executed at the end of that year.<sup>29</sup> In his responses to interrogators and in his last words, widely publicized by Crespin and others, du Bourg provided a locus classicus not only for Huguenot political propaganda but also for the tradition of martyrs.

The conspiracy itself was a fiasco. Hotman, one of the conspirators as well as the historian of this attempt to overthrow the Guise "tyranny," described the terrible fate of the captured "rebels." Some of them were hanged from the parapets of the castle of Amboise and others decapitated, and Hotman quoted in particular the words of his old friend the Sieur de Villemongis:

<sup>26</sup> Crespin, Histoire des martyrs, 2: 595.

<sup>27</sup> Agrippa d'Aubigné, Histoire universelle (Paris, 1616-20), ed. Alphonse de Ruble (Paris, 1886-1909), 1: 227.

<sup>28</sup> Crespin, Histoire des martyrs, 2: 381; and Crespin, Histoire memorable de la persecution et saccagement du peuple de Merindole et Cabrieres . . . ([Geneva], 1556); see also Isambert, Recueil, vol. 12, no. 316 (Nov. 8, 1540).

<sup>29</sup> Crespin, Histoire des martyrs, 2: 675.

Fig. 1. Execution of conspirators at Amboise, 1560. Contemporary engraving. Photograph from Jean Héritier, Catherine de Medici, tr. Charlotte Haldane (New York, 1963), facing p. 208.

"Having dipped his hands in the blood of his headless companions, he lifted them as high as possible to the heavens and cried, 'Here is the blood of your children, O Lord; for this you shall be avenged.'"<sup>30</sup> This scene, depicted in an often-reproduced contemporary engraving (see fig. 1), was another to treasure in that martyrological canon that Hotman and Crespin were in the process of compiling.

The villain of this piece, of course, was the cardinal of Lorraine. He was denounced a few weeks later by Hotman as the "Tiger of France" in a pamphlet that was in effect the J'accuse of the religious wars. The cardinal, supported by his brother, the duke of Guise, was the true conspirator, Hotman charged, the one responsible for spilling the blood of so many innocents. "If Caesar was killed trying to gain the sceptre justly," he asked, "can we permit you to live, who pretend to it unjustly?" It must be added that Hotman himself was responsible for the creation of at least one more martyr, for during the summer the printer of his Tiger was seized by the police, who were apparently chasing a murderer at the time. The printer, a certain Martin Lhommet, was executed a month later in the Place Maubert near the university. Only three copies of Hotman's book seem to have survived: one in Strasbourg, one in Switzerland, and the other in Paris, which was to be discovered in the nineteenth century, reprinted, and made the center of an extensive controversy over the "freedom of the press."<sup>31</sup>

<sup>30</sup> [Hotman], L'Histoire du tumulte d'Amboyse (Strasbourg, 1560), BN, Lb.<sup>32</sup>.15; see also [Hotman], Vita Colinii, 33.

The next two years were a time of indecision, wavering duplicity, and futile attempts at compromise. Persecutions continued, especially against the Waldensians, and a recent historian has spoken with justice of "the impossible toleration of the Colloquy of Poissy" in the fall of 1561.<sup>32</sup> Few hoped to prevent war; it was only a question of time, and the time came the following spring. The spark was provided by the tragic confrontation at Vassy between a force led by the duke of Guise and a Huguenot congregation—the "Sarajevo of the religious wars," as it has been called.<sup>33</sup> As Guise and his men approached, perhaps looking for trouble, they heard singing from the Protestant church—"I am afflicted and ready to die" is one of the verses from the psalm—and were outraged at this violation. Whichever side cast the first stone, the result was seventy-four Huguenots dead or dying and a political situation out of control. "If you will forgive a snap judgment," wrote one observer, "this is the beginning of a tragedy that we shall all be playing."<sup>34</sup> No Protestant hesitated to regard the affair as a full-fledged massacre. So within a few weeks Hotman and other observers represented it, and so later it would be interpreted by Huguenot historians, again including Hotman as well as Crespin.

The blood of these martyrs rapidly nourished the seeds of civil war. Barely a month later Huguenot forces gathered at Orleans and prepared for a major conflict. Hotman was among them and made the connection most explicitly. "In this event," he remarked of the affair of Vassy, "our leaders see the signal for a general massacre being prepared by our enemies in all parts of the kingdom."<sup>35</sup> Underlying this view one may see not only a kind of conspiracy theory of history, which was to become increasingly common, but also a doctrine of political expediency, which was to become a central feature of Huguenot propaganda and self-justification.<sup>36</sup> In either case the Massacre of Vassy was transformed into a myth—not a "nonevent" but a kind of "hyper-event," which served at once as an excuse for resist-

<sup>31</sup> [Hotman], Epistre envoyée au tigre de la France (Strasbourg, 1560), ed. Charles Reade, Le Tigre de 1560 (Paris, 1875), and the offprints among Reade's papers located in Paris, Bibliothèque de la Société de l'Histoire du Protestantisme Français, MS 816, vol. 4; see also Calendar of State Papers, Venetian, 8: 234.

<sup>32</sup> Alain Dufour, "L'impossible tolérance au Colloque de Poissy," Musées de Geneve, n.s. 4 (1963): 8–11.

<sup>33</sup> H. O. Evennett, The Cardinal of Lorraine and the Council of Trent (Cambridge, 1930), 21.

<sup>34</sup> Etienne Pasquier, Les Lettres (Paris, 1617), bk. 4, no. 15; other accounts of the massacre are in Crespin and Goulart, Histoire des martyrs, 2: 209; and Memoires de Condé (London, 1743–45), 3: 111.

<sup>35</sup> Hotman to Bonifacius Amerbach, Apr. 12, 1562, Universitätsbibliothek, Basel, MS G. II. 19, fol. 148r.

<sup>36</sup> See, e.g., Advertissement sur la fausseté de plusieurs mensonges semez par les rebelles (Paris, 1562), in Lindsay and Neu, French Political Pamphlets, no. 258, which is a Catholic response to the Histoire comprenant en brief ce qui est advenu depuis le partement des sieurs de Guise . . .

ance, as a means of shifting all guilt to the Guise party, and as a most satisfactory explanation for the coming of the wars of religion.

There were other "massacres" over the next decade, of course, but Vassy remained the archetype; and for the rest of the century Huguenots operated upon the assumptions generated—or rather confirmed—by this tragedy. The Massacre at Vassy fitted in perfectly with the belief, based upon countless statements of official policy, that the government was literally intent upon the "extermination" of those of the religion. The theme recurred again and again over the next decade. The most famous illustration is the meeting in 1565 between Catherine de' Medici and the duke of Alba. Although their conversations were generally inconclusive, they immediately provoked suspicions among Huguenots about a universal Catholic conspiracy, turning upon a Paris-Madrid axis linked in turn with the Council of Trent, whose canons and decrees had been published only the year before. This meeting between Catherine and the duke of Alba has always been associated with St. Bartholomew seven years later, but it should be understood that the legend surrounding it came earlier and was in fact part of the general fear of that Florentine woman, Catherine de' Medici. Hotman later published a letter by her, supposedly written in 1569 and intercepted; and although it is undoubtedly spurious, it sounded quite convincing to her Protestant critics. "To restore the crown of France," she is supposed to have written, "there is no better way than to kill all the Huguenots."<sup>37</sup>

It was at this same time, that is, during the third war, that Admiral Gaspard de Coligny emerged as the leader of the Huguenots and as a figure of international influence. Protestants began looking to him as their savior, and indeed a number of cities and congregations placed themselves under his protection. In September he was officially condemned by the Parlement and deprived of his offices. According to this arrêt, which was printed in eight languages and widely distributed, Coligny was "giltie of traison, distourber and breaker of peace, ennemy of repos, and tranquillitie of the commonwealth: the Captain, author, and ringleder of the rebellion, conspiracie, and faction that hath bin made against the King and his State." It is very interesting to note that when Coligny perished in the Massacre of St. Bartholomew three years later, this same charge was resurrected and in fact the arrêt itself republished.<sup>38</sup>

(Orleans, 1562), BN, Lb.<sup>33</sup> 48; see also Bref discours et veritable des principales coniurations de ceux de la maison de Guyse . . . (Paris, 1565), in Lindsay and Neu, French Political Pamphlets, no. 407, one of the many pamphlets carrying on the attack inaugurated by Hotman's Tigre.

<sup>37</sup> Quoted in [Hotman], Vita Colinii, 57. On "le desseing de Bayonne" see, e.g., the Huguenot pamphlets collected as Les Requests, Protestations, remonstrances et advertissements, faits par Monseigneur le Prince de Condé . . . (Orleans, 1567), BN, Lb.<sup>33</sup> 206; and Discours au vray des conseils et moyens qu'on a tenus pour exterminer la pure doctrine . . . (Heidelberg, 1568), BN, Lb.<sup>33</sup> 195.

<sup>38</sup> Arrest de la Court de Parlement contre Gaspart de Colligny, qui fut admiral de France, mis en huict langues, a sçavoir, François, Latin, Italien, Espagnol, Allemand, Flament, Anglois et Escoçois (Paris, 1569), republished (Paris, 1574), in Lindsay and Neu, French Political Pamphlets, nos. 652, 653, 754.

In these same years there was a growing tendency among Protestants to attach these fears and threats to malicious foreign, especially Italian, influence. Among other suspected imports during the early stages of the religious wars came "Papemanía" and the practice of assassination—murder "Italian style," as Hotman's friend Henri Estienne called it—which was another source of martyrs.<sup>39</sup> Nor was the overall apprehension in any way allayed by specific pacification agreements, which on the contrary were suspected of being duplicitous arrangements made to trick Huguenots into letting down their guard. This was especially the case with the "limping and uneasy peace" of Saint-Germain of 1570, which Huguenots would later condemn as an evil trick and, according to one of Hotman's imaginative friends, as the diseased offspring of Catherine and her alleged consort, that devil of a cardinal (of Lorraine), who was accumulating his own share of "legends."<sup>40</sup>

All of these proliferating and intertwining anti-Catholic legends tended, as legends will do, to group themselves together around a more visible and concrete symbol that could serve as the center of a grander construct. The symbol that finally emerged to take this sovereign position was the figure, or at least the public image, of Catherine's countryman Machiavelli, who came to represent a kind of devilish counterpart to the Protestant martyr ideal. Machiavelli could not assume this posthumous role, however, until there was a crime worthy of his evil genius; and such a "crime" was indeed provided on August 24, 1572. Taken together, this massacre, the Protestant conspiracy theory, and the patterns of martyrdom created a mythology of monumental proportions.

It is in such a conceptual and emotional context, it seems to me, that the events surrounding and succeeding St. Bartholomew's Day 1572 must be understood; and so must the leading actors in the drama. The Huguenot chief Coligny was the very prototype of the Protestant saint, as represented in the official, and indeed hagiographical, account written by Hotman.<sup>41</sup> Coligny's days, even his meals, were filled with prayers, sermons, and psalm singing, and he was most solicitous about spreading the word through education and missionary work as well as by personal example. Yet he never ceased being a fighter, and in the name of these very ideals he had been playing a most dangerous political game, purportedly at the expense of that

<sup>39</sup> Henri Estienne, Apologie pour Hérodote, ed. Paul Ristelhuber (Paris, 1879), 1: 353; and La Papemanie de France (n.p., 1567), Arsenal, 8°H. 12774, vol. 1; see also Rabelais, Pantagruel, bk. 4, ch. 48.

<sup>40</sup> Anonymous poem, "La Paix Valois," in Le Reveille-matin des François ("Edinburgh" [Basel?], 1574); see also Legende de Charles Cardinal de Lorraine, vol. 6 of Memoires de Condé. In general, see my "Murd'rous Machiavel in France," Political Science Quarterly, 85 (1970): 545-59; and Salvo Mastellone, Venalità e Machiavellismo in Francia (1572-1610) (Florence, 1972).

<sup>41</sup> [Hotman], Vita Colinii, 130; see also Crespín and Goulart, Histoire des martyrs, 3: 663.

Tridentine "conspiracy," which by now had taken on the appearance of a Madrid-Rome axis. Indeed he was doing a bit of conspiring himself, though apparently not without royal permission, and had committed himself to supporting William of Orange's projected invasion of the Netherlands. But in July Coligny's credit had fallen off sharply when a force of Huguenot troops, sent to Mons to relieve William's lieutenant Louis of Nassau, was ambushed and slaughtered by the Spanish.

Meanwhile in Paris tensions were mounting. The scheduled wedding of Henry of Navarre and Catherine's daughter Marguerite, a kind of nuptial prefiguring of the conciliatory policy later adopted by the Politiques, was a hopeful sign; but it had to be postponed because of the death of Henry's mother, Jeanne d'Albret, in June. Stories immediately began to circulate, and to be believed by Huguenots such as Hotman, that she had been poisoned by the enemy. In such a heated atmosphere the wedding was set for August 18. Alarming rumors continued to fly, and in July Charles IX issued another in a long line of ordinances banning weapons and expelling vagabonds and mauvais garçons within twenty-four hours. Just before the wedding, it seems, Jean de Montluc, a moderate Catholic friend of the Huguenots and a diplomatic agent for Catherine, warned one of Coligny's men to get out of the city. This Coligny himself could not do, and he took up residence in a house belonging, ominously enough, to the family of Anne du Bourg. "I would rather be with you than at court," he wrote to his young and pregnant wife a few hours after the ceremony, "but I must set public advantage above private pleasure."<sup>42</sup>

The first act of the tragedy came on Friday of the same week. On that morning of August 22, as he was returning from court, Coligny was shot and seriously wounded by a certain Maurevert, called the "king's killer" because of a more successful attempt made against one of Coligny's lieutenants a few years before. The next two days Coligny spent in his quarters, attended by friends and his physician, Ambrose Paré, and visited by embarrassed members of the royal family. Coligny spoke at length and in saintly tones, providing political advice for the king, a confession of faith for his followers, and forgiveness for his would-be assassin, if not for the duke of Guise, whom he held responsible. Already, according to Hotman's secondhand account, Coligny was beginning to sound like a martyr. A royal guard was given to him but was placed under the command of an old enemy. The ban on arms was still in effect, but it did not apply to the king's men, who were rattling their weapons ostentatiously in the streets. So, as <sup>42</sup> Quoted in [Hotman], Vita Colinii, 105, but differing significantly from the extant original (which has been published in the Bulletin de la Société de l'histoire du protestantisme Français, 1 [1852]: 369) by adding a statement to the effect that the admiral would take care not to offend his enemies (presumably to offset the charges of hostility and militancy); see also Ordonnance du Roy portant injonction a tous ses subjects de vivre en amitié les uns avec les autres (Paris, 1572), Arsenal, 8°H. 12778, vol. 3.

Huguenots looked back on the situation, the trap had been set; indeed the events of that weekend all seemed to fall into one terrible pattern.

The second and successful attempt on the admiral early in the morning of August 24 set off the mythopoeic process. "I am ready for death," the admiral had said before the assassin struck, and soon the "Matins of Paris" began. "Away with him, cut of his head and handes,/ And send them as a present to the Pope," the duke of Guise has been represented as saying. The words are Christopher Marlowe's,<sup>43</sup> but the deed itself has been documented and has taken its place alongside of many other atrocity stories; babies dropped from windows, bodies stripped and thrown into the Seine, some to be seen for days afterwards, a few as far as Rouen, according to a Huguenot song. As usual Paris set the fashion for the provinces, and the attacks signaled by Coligny's murder, carried out by laborers as well as by gentlemen, spread to a dozen or so towns throughout France. Many Protestants fled into the countryside. "I am sure that the wild beasts are kinder than those in human form," Hotman remarked to a friend. Later he reported that "Huguenot-hunting"—la chasse des huguenots—was becoming a popular sport.<sup>44</sup>

In the international Protestant community the reactions included shock and outrage but little real surprise. The inhabitants of La Rochelle had been warning Coligny of some such plot for two months, Hotman had heard, and throughout France men had been saying that Coligny was deceived at court.<sup>45</sup> "What an atrocity!" was Beza's reaction to the admiral's death. "How many times have I predicted this! How many times did I warn him about it!"<sup>46</sup> Streams of refugees carried the news in greater detail, but there seems to be little doubt about the underlying cause of the massacres. The plot was "undoubtedly general and the work of the Council of Trent," declared the Council of Geneva, which indeed feared that it would extend into their own territory.<sup>47</sup> During the fall one French agent confessed under torture that the invasion would be launched from Savoy, and though the attack did not materialize, the fear continued for the rest of the century. Hotman, then exiled in Geneva, shared and broadcast this apprehension about what he called "the Tridentine web and popish alliance called the Holy League."<sup>48</sup>

<sup>43</sup> Christopher Marlowe, The Massacre at Paris, based on Hotman's well-known De Furoribus Gallicis; see also Paul Kocher, "François Hotman and Marlowe's The Massacre at Paris," PMLA, 56 (1941): 349–68.

<sup>44</sup> Hotman to Rodolphe Gualter, Nov. 5, 1573, Zentralbibliothek, Zurich, MS F. 39, fol. 214v; the same phrase is used by Nicolas Pithou, Histoire ecclesiastique de l'église pretendue reformée de la ville de Troyes, published by Charles Recordon as Le Protestantisme en Champagne (Paris, 1863), 144.

<sup>45</sup> Hotman to William of Hesse, Oct. 6, 1572, published in Ludwig Ehinger, Franz Hotmann, Beiträge zur vaterländischen Geschichte, vol. 14 (Basel, 1896), no. 24.

<sup>46</sup> Beza to Thomas Tilius, Sept. 10, 1572, published in Bulletin de la Société de l'histoire du protestantisme français, 6 (1858): 16.

<sup>47</sup> Registres du Conseil, Sept. 4, 1572, Archives d'état, Geneva, vol. 67, fol. 201r.

<sup>48</sup> Hotman to Bullinger, Oct. 25, 1572, Zentralbibliothek, Zurich, MS S. 127, fol. 95r.

One conspicuous sign of the meta-historical impact of the massacre was the extremism of the reactions to it from all quarters. The Huguenots, of course, screamed bloody murder. The leaders were all "assassins," Hotman proclaimed, "the likes of whom no age has tolerated."<sup>49</sup> And this specifically included the king, by whose "express command" the deed was admittedly done. On the other side Catholics, arguing that the attacks were designed to crush a Huguenot "conspiracy" arising from the "Theodor-Bezian infection," concluded that it was simply retribution. "There is no gallows, cross, or torture severe enough to punish the crime of a traitor or rebel," one royalist wrote.<sup>50</sup> Others celebrated the event as providential. So François de Belleforest, later one of Hotman's chief critics, declared it to be no less than a miracle; and he found this judgment to be confirmed by the appearance of the great nova (the first in modern history) of November 1572. "I know the heretics will laugh and tax me with superstition," he added.<sup>51</sup> In fact the "heretics" were not laughing and had an explanation of the phenomenon hardly less "superstitious": to them it was the Star of Bethlehem returned, and it signified the salvation to come.

Quantitative estimates were likewise inflated. The massacre was so enormous, said one commentator, "that I doubt if posterity will ever believe it."<sup>52</sup> And in fact posterity has not believed the figures given by contemporary critics. At first Beza himself cried that over 300,000 of his brothers had been killed.<sup>53</sup> Later estimates were commonly placed at 100,000 deaths and revised downwards to 50,000. A decade later a certain "N. Froumentau" published what purported to be a statistical survey of the costs, social as well as economic, of the religious wars, and his figures offer evidence of the depth of contemporary feeling if not of exact totals. By that date, 1583, Froumentau estimated that about 765,000 persons had perished in the wars; 76,010 were civilian casualties, and of these 36,000 could be classified as "massacred"; 4,500 bodies had passed Paris on the Seine, while 6,000 had been carried by the Loire. In addition he estimated that 12,000 women and girls had been raped, and he went on to remark that, since this sort of thing so often went unreported, the total was probably twice as great. If the war continued, he remarked, the total would indeed be 100,000 instead of only 36,000.<sup>54</sup>

<sup>49</sup> Hotman to Abraham Sulzer, Oct. 3, 1572, ibid., fol. 47r. See also Declaration du roy de la cause et occasion de la mort de l'admiral (Paris, 1572), in Lindsay and Neu, French Political Pamphlets, no. 729.

<sup>50</sup> Artus Desire, La Singerie des Huguenots . . . (Paris, 1574), 22; and Discours de la mort et execution de Gabriel comte de Montgomery (Paris, 1574), fol. 2v, in Lindsay and Neu, French Political Pamphlets, no. 790.

<sup>51</sup> François de Belleforest, Discours sur l'heur des presages advenus de nostre temps signifiantz la felicité de regne de nostre Roy Charles (Paris, Nov. 18, 1572), fol. 10r.

<sup>52</sup> Resolution claire et facile sur la question . . . de la prise d'armes par les inférieurs (Reims, 1577), 97, in BN, Lb.<sup>34</sup>. 103.

<sup>53</sup> Beza to Bullinger, Sept. 1, 1572, Zentralbibliothek, Zurich, A. 44, p. 679, cited by P. F. Geisendorf, Théodore de Bèze (Geneva, 1949), 306.

<sup>54</sup> The book in question is the fascinating Secret des finances de France (n.p., 1581), dedicated to Henry III, by N. Froumentau (no doubt a pseudonym), a friend of Hotman and author also

Whoever he was, Froumentau was a Huguenot and had nothing but contempt for the "Machiavellistes" who had so ravaged France. Yet, though his statistics are inflated by partisanship, it should be added that he did make some effort to indicate his sources (preuves) and often omitted provincial figures for lack of evidence, so that his conclusions are relatively far closer to reality than those of most chroniclers.<sup>55</sup> While it would be an error to take his figures at face value (as certain nineteenth-century scholars have done), it would be equally mistaken to deny this pioneering work a significant place in the history of statistics, which like other social sciences emerged at least in part from (and has never quite disassociated itself from) ideological conflict. In any case a great effort went into the making of the book, and it testifies again to the enormous intellectual impact of the wars of religion and of St. Bartholomew in particular.

In the field of political thought, of course, the impact of St. Bartholomew was even more spectacular. The massacre immediately took its place as the pivotal event in the martyrological tradition and became a central force in the flood of propaganda that poured from Protestant presses at a greater than average rate in succeeding years. It was at this point that the enlarged community of martyrs began to take on a more special political significance because of its association with the opposition party led by Henry of Navarre, who succeeded Coligny as the leader of the Huguenots. The point was made best by Beza in his Right of Magistrates, a tract so radical that he was refused permission to publish it in Geneva. "And this I conclude," he wrote, "that we must honor as martyrs not only those who have conquered without resistance, and by patience only, against tyrants who have persecuted the truth, but those also who, authorized by law and by competent authorities, devoted their strength to the defense of the true religion."<sup>56</sup> Here is expressed the complete politicization not only of the Calvinist cause of the anonymous Miroir des François . . . (Paris, 1581), Le Cabinet du roy . . . (Paris, 1581), and, if only in part, of the Reveille-matin, which is one work that estimates the massacred of St. Bartholomew as 100,000 (p. 78). The first book includes a dialogue between "Provence" and "Le Politique" (who figures also in the Reveille-matin and the Miroir des François) and a listing, province by province, of the taxes, charges, and expenditures, especially military, over the previous thirty-one years. The second book discusses the social costs, again province by province (pp. 378-79). The categories of the dead are ecclesiastics, nobles (Catholics and Huguenots distinguished), soldiers (again Catholics and Huguenots), those executed (many for lese majesty), Huguenots "massacred," foreigners, houses destroyed, villages burned and razed, and filles violees. Froumentau's Preuves (pp. 401-09) include records of the Chambre des Comptes and contrôles de la gendarmerie as well as "chronicles and memoirs," but he adds that no "proof" is needed to describe the horror of the massacres.

---

<sup>55</sup> Froumentau, Le Secret des finances, 418. The work has not received its due in the history either of economic thought or of statistics; the judgment of Fernand Faure, "France," in John Koren, ed., The History of Statistics (New York, 1918), 236-37, contradicting such credulous nineteenth-century opinions as that of Henri Baudrillart, is probably excessively severe and certainly unhistorical.

<sup>56</sup> Beza, Du Droit des magistrats (Geneva, 1574), critical edition by R. M. Kingdon (Geneva, 1970), 67, and translated in Julian Franklin, ed., Constitutionalism and Resistance in the Sixteenth Century (New York, 1969), 135.

but also of the tradition of martyrs—an unmistakable shift from passive to active resistance.

Another conspicuous by-product of St. Bartholomew was the mythology, or demonology, associated with Machiavelli, whose ideas of political behavior were widely regarded as the cause both of the massacre itself and of the political and social degeneration of France in general over the previous ten years and more. Much of this material, especially the Reveille-Matin and Hotman's French Fury, consisted of highly colored accounts of the event itself or of extravagant elegies of the "hero-martyr" Coligny,<sup>57</sup> but there was also a growing quantity of polemic and theorizing about the problem of war guilt (which has always played so fundamental a role in historical thinking) and about ideas of political resistance, constitutional government, sovereignty, and the structure of society in general. Not only the work of the Monarchomachs but also Jean Bodin's Republic, which may be taken as a response to the work of the Monarchomachs, grappled quite directly with the problems that the Massacre of St. Bartholomew defined in a way that made them impossible any longer to ignore.<sup>58</sup>

In more concretely historical terms the effect of the massacre was traumatic. Anticipated for a decade, after its coming it haunted an entire generation of Protestants, who suspected that it might be revived at any time and who were prepared, ideologically if not emotionally, to take their place among the future martyrs. Hotman, for example, having been sent into permanent exile, lived out his remaining eighteen years in almost perpetual fear that the fate he had just barely missed in 1572, and that had claimed so many of his friends, including Petrus Ramus, would overtake him. The tone of his correspondence is consistently that of a victim and even martyr. At one point he was convinced that the pope had hired a man to assassinate him, and in his last years he became obsessed with the idea of dying in battle for his Cause—one of the established "marks of martyrdom." Only the thought of his children, he said, restrained him.<sup>59</sup> In many ways his attitude was typical of the French exile community of his generation, whose politics, perspective, and very lives had been shaped by the massacre.

<sup>57</sup> See, for example, Epicedia illustri heroï Caspari Colignio . . . Beato Christi martyri, variis linguis a doctis piisq. poetis decantata (n.p., 1572), in Lindsay and Neu, French Political Pamphlets, no. 725, of which Beza's own presentation copy is in the possession of Yale University Library. Professor Samuel Kinser of Northern Illinois University points out a most interesting example of the hero-martyr dichotomy in d'Aubigné's account of Coligny's death. Following the account of Jacques-Auguste de Thou, Historiarum sui temporis opera (Frankfurt, 1614-21), 1: 993, and of [Hotman], Vita Colinii and, with some modifications [Hotman], De Furoribus Gallicis, d'Aubigné first represented the admiral, on the point of death, as adopting a hero's stance and lamenting the fact that he was about to be killed at the hands not of a "cavalier" but only of a common servant. But a few years later, in the second edition (1626), d'Aubigné changed the picture so that Coligny appeared as a passive victim, "on his knees beside his bed" and making only the martyrly comment, "My friends, save yourselves." See Histoire universelle, 3: 313.

<sup>58</sup> For discussions of this large subject, see Ralph Giesey, "The Monarchomach Triumvirs: Hotman, Beza and Mornay," Bibliothèque d'Humanisme et Renaissance, 32 (1970): 41-56; and J. H. M. Salmon, "Bodin and the Monarchomachs," in a forthcoming volume based upon the international conference on Jean Bodin held in Munich in 1970. It has recently been argued that the monarchomach author of the Vindiciae contra tyrannos (n.p., 1578) was not Philippe du Plessis Mornay but rather Johan Junius de Jonge: see Derek Visser, "Junius: The Author of the Vindiciae contra Tyrannos?" Tijdschrift voor Geschiedenis, 84 (1971): 510-25.

Situated as it was at the center of such swirling emotions, revolutionary implications, festering resentments, and indeterminate intellectual repercussions, the Massacre of St. Bartholomew became a legend almost before it happened, and it grew with the telling and with the passage of time. As it furnished a target and motive for endless polemic, so it furnished a target and motive for scholarly debate—a classic “problem” for historians, though ultimately insoluble, at least in the guild-oriented, legend-prone, history-transcending terms of sixteenth-century propaganda, from which we have hardly yet escaped.<sup>60</sup> “The blood of martyrs is the seed of the church”: it has also been fuel for the labors of generations of historians, and by now more ink than blood has flowed as a result of the events of that weekend in Paris four hundred years ago. Catholic masses have ceased, Protestant lamentations have been muted, but the historical discussion continues: such is one of the forms, it seems, that myths take in our time.

<sup>59</sup> Hotman to Simon Grynaeus, Nov. 27, 1586, in B. F. Hummel, ed., Celebrium virorum . . . epistolae ineditae (Nuremberg, 1777), 81; and Hotman to Daniel Tossanus, Feb. 26, 1588, in Hotomanorum epistolae (Amsterdam, 1700), no. 162, citing Aeneid, bk. 2, line 353.

<sup>60</sup> Herbert Butterfield, “Lord Acton and the Massacre of St. Bartholomew,” in his Man on His Past (Cambridge, 1955), 171–201, is a useful survey.

---

“The Sense of an Impending Clash”:
English Working-Class Unrest before the First World War

---

STANDISH MEACHAM

HISTORIANS WHO SET out to understand early twentieth-century England must sooner or later come to terms with George Dangerfield's Strange Death of Liberal England.<sup>1</sup> An elaborately extended metaphor, the book describes a “liberal” England that is part Gladstone and part Rupert Brooke, apparently ageless, yet doomed because unable to practice any longer the deceiving homilies it has preached for over half a century: individualism and economic servitude; self-help and deference; democracy and class-consciousness. Its death signals the birth of a new and very different England, one of strikes, suffragettes, and turmoil over Ireland, a nation as inclined to balk at compromise as was its predecessor to indulge in it.

Dangerfield appears ready to welcome this new, post-liberal England, insisting as he does that the conflicts of 1911–14, far from signs of decadence, were evidence of rebirth. Yet his dazzling impressionism is not wholly convincing. To describe Georgian England as casting off the traditions and institutions of the past implies a break with the Victorian age that had by no means come by 1914. It fails to account for the traumas of the ensuing fifty years, heralded by Strachey's Eminent Victorians and marked out by Versailles and Suez, in which the English have had to face down a far from moribund nineteenth century.

A second implication appears more plausible. At the root of Dangerfield's thesis lies his belief that Georgian unrest was all of a piece. Suffragettes, Orangemen, and syndicalists are joined together in one pattern to describe his “new” England. Most historians have agreed. They speak of a “mood” that, according to their predilections, may or may not signal the end of Victorian liberalism, but that almost invariably combines labor unrest, feminist militancy, and Irish insurrection into one general prewar cataclysm. Henry Pelling has now challenged that notion. In a chapter in his recent Popular Politics and Society in Late Victorian

<sup>1</sup> George Dangerfield, The Strange Death of Liberal England (New York, 1961; 1st ed., 1935).

Britain,<sup>2</sup> he chides historians generally and Dangerfield particularly for a readiness to see a connection where none exists. Pelling is a no-nonsense historian. For him one hard fact is worth a dozen impressionistic hypotheses. He takes actions more seriously than words. His judgments are commensurately careful and refined. He refuses to see labor unrest as part of a general protest against nineteenth-century liberalism or parliamentarianism, concluding simply that it "was only coincidental with the acute phases of the Irish and women's suffrage questions. It had its own independent and sufficient causes": primarily a low unemployment rate, which encouraged union growth, and the introduction of national insurance, which threatened union organization. "In any case, it owed little to feelings of disappointment with parliamentary institutions or existing political parties."<sup>3</sup>

Correct or not, Pelling's cold douche should compel scholars to re-think their conclusions about this complicated period. Their compulsion to do so will be fortified by their conviction that a historian's particular task is the tracing and untangling of connections. No era of English history presents a more bizarre and challenging puzzle than this one. If Dangerfield has imposed an over-elaborate design upon the facts, he has given us facts too compelling to put aside. These accounts of English men and women up in arms, dismayed and occasionally furious without knowing quite why, strike us with an immediacy—I deliberately avoid "relevancy"—born of our own more recent experiences, making us all the more anxious to understand the fiercely articulated aspirations and frustrations of another period in time.

To do so we shall begin, as Pelling does, with the labor unrest and, again as he does, with some facts. His statistics show that union membership during the years 1911-14 expanded markedly, with 1911 and 1913 experiencing the greatest percentage of growth (22 per cent and 21 per cent respectively).<sup>4</sup> Total membership in all unions rose by over 60 per cent from 1910 to 1914; membership in the so-called "new unions"—dockers, seamen, and general laborers—increased by over 300 per cent. The spread of strike activity in the 1911-14 period was just as marked. From an average of 480 strikes per year for the years 1907 to 1910, the figures leap upward: 872 in 1911, 834 in 1912, 1459 in 1913, and 972 in 1914 (a figure that would have been much higher had not England gone to war in August). Figures for the total number of working days lost are more erratic, though they are generally higher from 1911 to 1914 than from 1907 to 1910.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>2</sup> Henry Pelling, "The Labour Unrest, 1911-1914," in his Popular Politics and Society in Late Victorian Britain (London, 1968), 147-64.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid., 164.

<sup>4</sup> These and subsequent figures from the table in ibid., 149.

<sup>5</sup> Figures in thousands: 2,150 (1907); 10,790 (1908); 2,690 (1909); 9,870 (1910); 18,169 (1911);

These are clearly years of intense labor activity and unrest. By linking them to earlier periods of trade-union growth Pelling hopes to temper the impulse to treat the events of 1911-14 as unique. Although he credits syndicalism with an appeal among younger trade unionists and with some measured success within the railway unions, he will have nothing to do with the notion—suggested by Elie Halévy and subsequently elaborated by Dangerfield—that the age was one of syndicalist revolt. His caution is justified. Halévy himself notes that “during those very years in which revolutionary syndicalism was so vocal, cooperation between the trade unions and the Government became closer than before.”<sup>6</sup> Dangerfield contents himself with calling syndicalism “a convenient expression for a new energy.”<sup>7</sup> The expression was Continental in accent, if not in intent. Tom Mann, who was not embarrassed to call himself a revolutionary, preached “control of industry by ‘syndicates’ or Unions of workers, in the interest of the entire community.” Revolutionary in aim, the syndicalist movement urged the abolition of the wage system; revolutionary in method, it spurned long-term contracts between workers and masters. Syndicalists talked of an end to parliamentary government. “We shall have no need to plead with the parliamentarians to be good enough to reduce hours as the workers have been doing for fully twenty years without result. We shall be able to do this ourselves, and there will be no power on earth to stop us so long as we do not fall foul of economic principles.”<sup>8</sup>

The pronouncement borrowed its theories and tone from Europe. But, as E. H. Phelps Brown remarks, the British strikers really had very little in common with those on the Continent who seized town halls.<sup>9</sup> Lacking a revolutionary vocabulary of their own, English workers used syndicalists’ words to demand not syndicates but industrial unions and a more militant anticapitalism. Union members called for a minimum wage and for the Triple Alliance; at the same time they refused to forsake independent political action through the Labour party.<sup>10</sup> They listened to Tom Mann’s rhetoric but did not subscribe to his doctrine. No doubt, as 40,890 (1912—the year of the national coal strike); 9,800 (1913); 9,880 (1914). These figures suggest comparisons with the findings of Edward Shorter and Charles Tilly. They conclude that as organizational techniques increase, along with union membership, a strike turns from a test of endurance into a show of strength. Strikes are shorter but more frequent. Statistics for England in this period reflect the same general trend. See “The Shape of Strikes in France,” Comparative Studies in Society and History, 13 (1971): 67.

<sup>6</sup> Elie Halévy, The Rule of Democracy, 2 (London, 1952): 479.

<sup>7</sup> Dangerfield, Strange Death, 233.

<sup>8</sup> Tom Mann, Memoirs (London, 1967; 1st ed., 1923), 263, 206.

<sup>9</sup> E. H. Phelps Brown, The Growth of British Industrial Relations (London, 1965), 336. Peter Stearns, in Revolutionary Syndicalism and French Labor (New Brunswick, 1971), argues convincingly that syndicalism made far less impact upon the French working class than had been previously supposed.

<sup>10</sup> At the annual TUC meeting in 1912, delegates voted 1,693,000 to 48,000 for a resolution affirming support for independent political action and the “centralization of social and industrial questions in the hands of the Government and local authorities.” Speeches during the debate left no doubt that this was a test for or against syndicalism. B. C. Roberts, The Trades Union Congress (London, 1958), 253.

Pelling points out, the language of syndicalism appealed to those among the working class who had no sympathy for bureaucratic socialism of the Fabian stripe. But the response that appeal in turn engendered looked less like revolution than like consolidation for the purpose of more assertive and successful negotiation.<sup>11</sup>

To say that the syndicalists made little real headway is not to say that the working class remained immune from the violent fever Dangerfield claimed to have diagnosed. Pelling, not surprisingly, makes little of such notions. He is seconded by others, for example B. C. Roberts, who remarks in his history of the Trades Union Congress that though the militant spirit of the workers influenced debates, "the weight of tradition, vested interest, and the common sense of the delegates proved too great to be easily pushed aside. Strong sentiments were expressed, but no revolutionary policy was adopted, and no new faith embraced."<sup>12</sup> Phelps Brown voices surprise that England and Europe did not experience more violence, in view of the sharp check on earning power the working class sustained during the prewar years.<sup>13</sup>

The surprise of those alive then, however, was at the extent and bitterness of the disorders. Sir George Askwith, dispatched in the summer of 1911 to mediate at Hull, reported the remark of a town councilor who had experienced Paris during the Commune "and had never seen anything like this: . . . he had not known there were such people in Hull—women with hair streaming and half nude, reeling through the streets, smashing and destroying."<sup>14</sup> Those with a sense of the past might have derived consolation from the memory that working-class history in the nineteenth century was marked by violence: Captain Swing, plug plots, Sheffield outrages, Bloody Sunday. Yet the disturbances of 1911 and after seemed at the time, and contemporary descriptions make them seem now, to possess a quality of their own. Something—the ever-increasing numbers involved, the restless, never-ceasing pattern of agitations—fused them into an expression of mass dissatisfaction and mass uncertainty that was unprecedented and therefore alarming.

Nothing quite equaled the summer of 1911. Phelps Brown chronicles the events in a chapter appropriately entitled "Strife": The seamen's <sup>11</sup> See Alan Bullock's remarks regarding a 1914 speech by Ernest Bevin in favor of federation. "It underlines the preoccupation with the practical problem of organization—unity to give 'not so much a power to attack as a power to negotiate . . . the most valuable thing we can have'—as distinct from those who put in the forefront the syndicalist argument in favor of trade-union unity, the general strike as a means to the revolutionary seizure of power." The Life and Times of Ernest Bevin (London, 1960), 1:41. Stearns suggests that syndicalism, as a doctrine, could appeal only to those who—unlike almost all trade unionists—were alienated from the industrial system. "In fact," he notes with regard to France, "syndicalism was largely irrelevant precisely because the workers capable of protest, led in fact by the most skilled, accepted the industrial system." Revolutionary Syndicalism, 106.

<sup>12</sup> Roberts, Trades Union Congress, 247.

<sup>13</sup> Phelps Brown, British Industrial Relations, 336.

<sup>14</sup> Lord Askwith, Industrial Problems and Disputes (London, 1920), 150.

strike a week before the coronation in June; a railwaymen's strike—pressed by the rank and file upon the leadership—in August. Rioters shot dead by troops in Liverpool; cavalry and infantry in the streets of London; the plundering of a train in Wales; Jews driven from their shops in Ebbw Vale.<sup>15</sup> And in another part of the forest, Agadir, suffragettes in the Albert Hall, and Carson prophesying Ulster's armed rebellion. The crisis subsided, but not the mood. Ben Tillett, the dockers' leader, called for class war in his annual report of 1912.

The class war is the most brutal of wars and the most pitiless. The lesson is that, in future strikes, the strikers must protect against the use of arms, with arms; protect against shooting, with shooting; protest against violence, with violence. . . . The other lesson is that Parliament is a farce and a sham, the rich man's Duma, the employer's Tammany, the Thieves' kitchen and the working man's despot. . . . Capitalism is capitalism as a tiger is a tiger; and both are savage and pitiless towards the weak.<sup>16</sup>

Tillett was stung by the defeat his union had suffered when it failed to achieve a national stoppage in 1912. But his angry words bespeak a deeper and more widespread discontent. Evidence of it was the apparently endless, uncontrollable, predominantly unofficial series of strikes in 1913 and 1914—937 in the last six months before the outbreak of war. Unions pressed ahead with recruitment and amalgamation, the better to negotiate, but uncertain what they were negotiating for. Men and women reacted more often than not from instinct. The Triple Alliance between railwaymen, miners, and transport workers is a case in point. P. S. Bagwell, historian of the railwaymen, makes it clear that the leadership of the National Union of Railwaymen had no intention of exacerbating the class struggle "by using every strike in the coal mining, dock, and railway industries as an occasion to draft reinforcements to the strikers from the million-and-a-half trade unionists covered by the agreement." Yet the rank and file expressed the belief that—in their words—the alliance would "encourage the growth of greater solidarity and a vast improvement in the social conditions of the workers, and be a powerful lever in the course of working-class emancipation."<sup>17</sup> As Phelps Brown remarks, the agreement laid the members "under no obligation to strike together, or indeed to do anything save to consult one another before proceeding with a major issue. . . . Nonetheless it was understood to have pledged all to back the cause of each. Nothing could have been less thought out." How to explain such thoughtlessness? The generally cautious Phelps Brown begins to sound like Dangerfield.

<sup>15</sup> Phelps Brown, British Industrial Relations, 321–23.

<sup>16</sup> From the Dock, Wharf, Riverside and General Workers' Union Annual Report, quoted in Bullock, Ernest Bevin, 1:35.

<sup>17</sup> P. S. Bagwell, The Railwaymen (London, 1963), 307.

That it should ever have been adopted can be explained only by the amount of unemployment among railwaymen and the transport workers that the coal strike had caused in 1912, prompting the thought that if all must be in it together in practice they might as well go in with a will; and by the sense of an impending general clash, a civil war between capital and labour, that was strong at that time of so many clashes.<sup>18</sup>

"The sense of an impending clash" is the sense of the evidence. It would appear to call for further accounting than that provided by Pelling. We can talk of trade-union growth and development, but we need to talk of something more—the sense that sniffed that clash between capital and labor. And as we know more of that sense, we shall be better prepared to judge if it shared in that more general mood of which so many historians have felt compelled to speak.

THE SENSE MAY well have sprung from economic circumstance. The general increase in real wages enjoyed by members of the English working class during the second half of the nineteenth century had induced them to take a constantly improving standard of living for granted. As working-class incomes rose,<sup>19</sup> a significant drop in the cost of living and the importation of large quantities of cheap food combined to provide a decent life for at least some of those families upon whose labor England's industrial revolution had been built. Very suddenly, around 1900, the pattern changed. Real wages declined, production rates faltered, and Britain's balance of trade began to run against her. Prices rose steadily from the late 1890s until 1901 and again from 1907 to 1913. Total national consumption rose only three per cent faster than did population; consumption of food and clothing remained almost constant: a meager enough record under any circumstances but paltry in the extreme when compared with that of the previous thirty years. By 1914 real wages managed to catch up with the cost of living.<sup>20</sup> But the race was uneven and especially exasperating for the general worker, who, if he bothered himself at all with statistics, took little consolation from the fact that the worst was over, the worst having left him exhausted and a good deal poorer than he thought he ought to be.

Askwith, the Liberal party's peripatetic labor negotiator, did not hesitate to ascribe the workers' discontented mood to economic distress.

<sup>18</sup> Phelps Brown, British Industrial Relations, 330.

<sup>19</sup> Leone Levi, Wages and Earnings of the Working Class (London, 1885), 55. Levi estimates that from 1851 to 1881 working-class incomes rose 59 per cent. He estimates that incomes of the middle to upper classes had decreased by 30 per cent, and those of the lower middle class had increased by 37 per cent, during the same period.

<sup>20</sup> Phelps Brown, British Industrial Relations, 17. See pp. 13 ff. for a full and clear discussion of these factors. Using a 100 per cent figure as a base for 1880, Arthur L. Bowley estimated in 1920 that real wages increased to a figure of 132 per cent by 1900 but hovered between 132 and 134 per cent from 1900 to 1913. See The Change in the Distribution of the National Income, 1880-1913 (Oxford, 1920), 18.

Trade-union demonstration at the Embankment. London, ca. 1902.
Photograph: Gernsheim Collection, University of Texas.

Trade had been improving, but employers thought too much of making up for some lean years in the past, and of making money, without sufficient regard to the importance of considering the position of their work-people at a time of improvement of trade. Prices had been rising, but no sufficient increase of wages and certainly no general increase, had followed the rise.<sup>21</sup>

The argument has continued to convince most historians, though few have troubled to discover the extent to which strikes were a conscious reaction to increased living costs. Strikes that workers may have considered aggressive—demands for more take-home pay—may in fact have been unconsciously defensive reactions to a decline in real wages, of which the workers themselves were only dimly aware. Pelling, who does not put much stock in the rising-cost-of-living argument, quotes K. G. J. C. Knowles to the effect that strikes more often occur during deflationary periods, when employees are faced with the tangible problem of a wage cut.<sup>22</sup> Pelling suggests that the low unemployment figures for the years 1911 to 1914 (never higher than 3.3 per cent) explain the increased pressure of working-class demands. The masters needed the men, and the men took advantage of that need to press their claims. Pelling supports this thesis by pointing out that the two most recent periods of intensive union growth and agitation—1888–91 and 1896–1901—were also periods of full employment. Of course one can agree with Pelling without dismissing as irrelevant the factor of a decline in real wages. One can say simply that the related factors of a decline in real wages and the low rate of unemployment gave workers both their grievance and their power to articulate it.

As their demands accorded with their economic discontents, they refused any longer to countenance the nineteenth-century shibboleth that pegged wages to profits. "They held that the payment of a wage determined not by supply and demand but by human needs and common decency should be a first charge upon their industry."<sup>23</sup> To this extent they were pressing a new claim, one that Dangerfield's intuitive analysis describes well when he contrasts what he terms strikes about wages with strikes about money.

<sup>21</sup> Askwith, Industrial Problems and Disputes, 175.

<sup>22</sup> Pelling, "Labour Unrest," 150. See K. G. J. C. Knowles, Strikes: A Study in Industrial Conflict (Oxford, 1952), 223: "At the level of strikes, at any rate, Trade Unions seem to have reacted to the need for resisting a money wage decrease much more strongly than to the need for achieving a money wage increase to keep pace with the cost of living." Evidence that the workers were aware of an increasing cost of living appears in the Annual Report of the General Federation of Trades Unions for 1911, p. 6: "The case for increased wages was never stronger than it is today; trade is booming, profits are increasing, and wealth is accumulating, but wages remain almost stationary. Between 1900 and 1908 nominal wages have risen only one per cent; in London food prices have risen during the same period by nine per cent while profits have risen by twelve and a half per cent." Quoted in Alan Fox, A History of the National Union of Boot and Shoe Operatives (Oxford, 1958), 341.

<sup>23</sup> Phelps Brown, British Industrial Relations, 313.

While a strike about wages demands either a definite rise or a restoration of a definite cut, a strike about money comes from a sense of injustice. It is not specific, but incoherent and ominous. It is a voice in the wilderness, crying for recognition, for solidarity, for power. Its echoes are innumerable.<sup>24</sup>

In some industries workers continued to strike for wages; in others, as Dangerfield suggests, they struck for money. Employers understood even less than workers just what was at stake. And since they settled strikes with wage increases, they failed, naturally enough, to understand why the workers remained unsatisfied.<sup>25</sup>

There is a chance, then, that Phelps Brown's "sense of an impending clash" was rooted in something broader, if more ill-defined, than economic circumstances alone. Recognition, solidarity, and power—Dangerfield's ominous echoes—were union goals in the years 1911 to 1914 as they had been since the middle of the nineteenth century. But just as economic circumstances during those years heightened the workers' sense of economic injustice, social conditions induced them to proclaim in a more pronounced way their identity as members of a separate working class.

The twenty or thirty years before the First World War in England witnessed increasing class division. Enmity grew between employers and workmen. No longer did clever, ambitious artisans rise into the ranks of the entrepreneurial middle class, as they had with some regularity in the beginning and even the middle periods of the century. Nor could workers any longer persuade themselves of an identity of interest between capital and labor.<sup>26</sup> Factory masters gave way to directors, whose interest in their employees' welfare often amounted to indifference. Resentful of the boycotts and sympathy strikes of the "new" unionists after 1890, management obeyed the letter of the new Factory Acts, paid what the government forced it to pay in liability insurance claims, and threw itself with a will into the formation of a British Employers' Defense Union to counter union activity. Employers may have spoken with more wisdom than they knew when they observed, during negotiations with the Engineers in 1908, that demands such as the minimum wage were transforming "commercial problems into class problems."<sup>27</sup> If such was the

<sup>24</sup> Dangerfield, Strange Death, 249.

<sup>25</sup> See, in this connection, Phelps Brown, British Industrial Relations, 321. "What the men wanted [in 1913] was often hard to tell; to their employers it seemed the upheaval was simply revolutionary; but post by post and trade by trade, settlements were reached by raising wages."

<sup>26</sup> Among others, the miners had for a time argued this point in order to persuade the owners to curb outputs. "The miner would be rescued from the mire of poverty, obviously caused by too much coal on the market, and the coal-owners too would prosper exceedingly. What a striking proof it seemed to be of the identity of interest of Capital and Labour. If only the coal-owners and themselves could get together and agree to restrict production, the Law of Supply and Demand would do the rest." But once the miners began to win wage demands, they were quick to drop this argument. R. Page Arnot, The Miners (London, 1949), 1:125, 127.

<sup>27</sup> H. A. Clegg, Alan Fox, and A. F. Thompson, A History of British Trade Unions, Since 1889 (Oxford, 1964), 1: 433. The period 1900-07 did see genuine attempts on the part of both labor and management to make the system of collective bargaining work. But the general picture remains one of increasing animosity. See ibid., 362.

case, their actions as well as their employees' demands had made it so.

Sharper class distinctions manifested themselves outside the factory as well. The middle classes now spoke King's English, or at least tried very hard to; the working class did not. Middle-class parents had an average of four children; working-class parents, an average of six. In matters of pay, dress, drink—and drunkenness—health, life, and death, the classes appeared to be as far apart as they were in the 1840s and in some cases were further apart. The result was a heightened sense of class-consciousness, along with the decline and fall of that ideal which mid-Victorians had hoped might make of England one sturdy phalanx of bourgeois aspirations and sentiments. All classes now felt threatened and went on the defensive. The upper class foresaw ruin in Lloyd George's mad tax schemes; the middle class, in labor unrest and foreign competition; the working class, in a plutocracy that permitted everyone else to make money at the laborer's expense. They were at each other's throats, until one begins to suspect that only George Askwith, tirelessly and infinitely patient, could command attention and respect in every quarter.

That the working class listened to Askwith was a tribute to his personality, not his profession. He was a lawyer, at a time when laboring men had little use for the law. Their widespread mistrust of the law furthered their sense of a beleaguered "we" forced to take measures against an alien "they." Throughout the nineteenth century unions and workers had struggled for security and recognition within a hostile legal environment. Each advance appeared to produce a new set of obstacles. The Taff Vale decision of 1901, which held unions liable for damages incurred by individual members during a strike, and the Osborne judgment of 1909, which declared that unions could not levy dues for political purposes, were only the two most obnoxious in a long series of legal setbacks suffered in the years after 1890. Temperton v. Russell (1893) ruled against boycotts. Trollope v. London Building Trades Federation (1895) declared union officers who published blacklists of non-union firms and free laborers to be guilty of conspiracy. Lyons v. Wilkins (1899) pronounced against picketing, if it was determined to be "picketing to persuade"—an interpretation which inclined one judge to remark that "you cannot make a strike effective without doing more than what is lawful."<sup>28</sup> Charnock v. Court (1899) found two union men guilty of watching and besetting after attempting to persuade strikebreakers in Halifax to return to Ireland and offering to pay their fare.<sup>29</sup> Quinn v. Leathen (1901) overturned an earlier decision favoring the Boiler-makers' attempt to establish a closed shop. All the opinions showed the courts in a mood to do everything in their power to curb unions and to prohibit strikes.

<sup>28</sup> Ibid., 309. These decisions are treated in detail on pp. 308-11.

<sup>29</sup> "The effect was to render actionable any communication even of the most peaceable kind, except by letter, between strikers and men whom the employer was seeking to engage." Ibid., 309.

Hostile judgments were not the sole source of working-class disaffection for the law. Pelling takes Goldsmith's saw—"laws grind the poor and rich men rule the law"—as his text for a chapter in which he convincingly demonstrates that in many areas—debt, divorce, compensation, the selection of juries—the law conspired in explicit ways against the wage earner and the propertyless.<sup>30</sup> And with increasingly efficient law enforcement agencies, he points out, this law was increasingly brought to bear upon the resentful working class. What workers found most repellent was the obvious double standard. The Law Lords condemned the unions' boycotts and blacklists but sanctioned them when instigated by a ship-owners' cartel.<sup>31</sup> The Osborne judgment placed obstacles in the path of union officers, but not in the way of railway company directors, who wished to sit in Parliament. Tom Mann was arrested for incitement to mutiny; Sir Edward Carson sat unmolested in the House of Commons. If Ulster was to be allowed to arm, asked J. H. Thomas, why should the unions not put their funds to use as well in preparation for the revolution? So bitter were workers at their treatment by the law that when it came time to draft a bill restoring the status quo ante Taff Vale, the unions insisted that they be allowed to remain immune from the law. They would not accept from the Liberals an act that appeared to leave their fate in the hands of the judiciary.

Resentment of the law not unnaturally grew, in the minds of some, into a resentment of parliamentary politics. G. D. H. Cole and Raymond Postgate oversimplify when they suggest, in The Common People, that the workers in these years deserted the Labour party for direct action.<sup>32</sup> Once more Pelling provides the cautionary counter-evidence, balancing the party's electoral losses against its quite substantial organizational growth.<sup>33</sup> Yet some of the workers clearly felt a growing exasperation and impatience, a conviction that a Parliament in which, for example, over one-tenth of the members were railway directors really cared very little for the working class. John Hood, an outspoken employee of the Cambrian Railway, was fired after he testified before a parliamentary committee. Parliament admonished the railway but did nothing to get Hood his job back.<sup>34</sup> Mingled with the resentment was confusion as to

<sup>30</sup> Pelling, "Trade Unions, Workers and the Law," in Popular Politics, 62-81.

<sup>31</sup> Roberts, Trades Union Congress, 173, n. 1.

<sup>32</sup> G. D. H. Cole and Raymond Postgate, The Common People (London, 1938), 460.

<sup>33</sup> Pelling, "Labour and the Downfall of Liberalism," in Popular Politics, 117. Affiliated trade-union membership grew from 904,496 in 1906 to 1,572,391 in 1914. Affiliated trade councils and local branches of the Labour party rose in number during the same period from 73 to 177. The number of elected Labour party representatives on local governing bodies increased from 56 in 1907 to 184 in 1913. Pelling's source for these figures is the Labour party Annual Reports.

<sup>34</sup> Bagwell, The Railwaymen, 160-67.

the role the Labour party should play and the sort of legislation it should attempt to introduce. The election victory of 1906—even more the series of welfare measures passed in the ensuing years—appear to have taken many Labour politicians by surprise. Their campaign in 1906 had been fought on an essentially old-fashioned, radical platform: recognition of trade unions, elected school boards, free trade. Churchill and Lloyd George threw them off balance. Dished by the Liberal whizbangs, they wondered just what it was they had been elected to accomplish, and whether they were to continue to take their cue from the Liberal leadership. If that was the case, they asked themselves, how did they differ from those self-effacing Lib-Labs they had been sent to replace?

The uncertainty and frustration resulted in many cases in a general revulsion against Parliament, an institution, like the law, apparently designed by a ruling class for its own particular ends. "What is this great Parliament to whom we have entrusted our liberties composed of," asked George Baker, a member of the Miners' National Executive, during the coal strike of 1912.

It consists of six hundred and seventy men, six hundred and thirty who were capitalists and landowners, and it will be the death knell to the liberties of this movement if we hand them over to a body of this character, therefore I say we cannot hope to get much from those who represent those great interests of the country. I say that we must hold the sovereign power in our own hands.<sup>35</sup>

Parliament provided valets to assist members into their dinner jackets, Fred Jowett complained, but not with clerks to help them draft legislation. "The Statute Book has been strewn by generations of lawyer members of Parliament with pitfalls for the unwary plain man, and unless you can afford to pay for expert assistance you must flounder as best you can."<sup>36</sup> Jowett stood with Keir Hardie and Philip Snowden in denouncing the whole game of parliamentary politics. "All this jiggery-pokery of Party Government," he told the ILP in 1909, "played like a game for ascendancy and power, is no use to us."<sup>37</sup> The ways of Parliament were not the ways of the working class. Jowett proclaimed the conviction of many men and women, whose disaffection fed their class-consciousness, and that consciousness in turn helped fuel their "sense of an impending clash."

A NOT UNREASONABLE hypothesis, then, would suggest that economic realities and a heightened sense of class combined to produce the severe labor unrest that occurred in England before the First World War. It would leave unresolved, however, the further question of whether that unrest was in any way connected with concurrent agitations over Ireland and women's rights. An answer may lie in the working man's alienation from the law and from Parliament. A glance at the history of the period is enough to confirm that suffragettes and Ulsterites shared the same disaffection. Both groups considered themselves pushed by circumstances to a desperation that turned those stately institutions into irrelevant stumbling blocks. Indeed almost all that the Victorians had claimed to cherish and had been content to take for granted was in at least some measure called into question by Edwardian and Georgian facts of life. The Boers and the German navy threatened Britain's defense establishment and, worse, her very security. International competition menaced free trade. Property confronted the land tax and employers' liability. Family felt the sting of a ruthless cost of living as well as the blows of feminist warriors. Bloomsbury considered self-discipline and duty and proclaimed them repression and self-deceit. Wilde transformed the serious business of life into a quest for muffins and cucumber sandwiches. All this sent shock after shock right through society. The more stable the institution or value, the more traumatic the challenge when it came.

<sup>35</sup> R. Page Arnot, The South Wales Miners (London, 1967), 305-06.

<sup>36</sup> From the Clarion, July 24, 1908, quoted in Fenner Brockway, Socialism Over Sixty Years, The Life of Jowett of Bradford (London, 1946), 73.

<sup>37</sup> Brockway, Jowett, 104.

Working men and women found themselves, like everyone else, struggling to come to terms with a social system and a set of values that they knew were changing fast. Not only, for example, did their class-consciousness increase ("we" against "they"); the structure of the working class itself was undergoing considerable readjustment. Victorian England tended to divide the working class into two categories—artisans and laborers—a division the working class itself accepted along with everyone else, since it appeared to conform to the facts. The artisans were the men with a skill or a trade. They earned a wage that allowed them to live decently and, if there were not too many young children, in some degree of comfort. The laborers had only their strength to sell. They were the hewers and drawers, and in many industrial towns over forty per cent of their number lived in stony poverty. The line between the two castes was wide, wider than that which separated the skilled artisans from the clerks and small shopkeepers of the lower middle class. John Burns contrasted the "old" unionists (the skilled) with the "new" (the unskilled) as they appeared at the Trades Union Congress of 1890.

Physically the "old" unionists were much bigger men than the "new," and that, no doubt, is due to the greater intensity of toil during the last twenty or thirty years . . . the "old" delegates differed from the "new" not only physically but in dress. A great number of them looked like respectable city gentlemen; wore very good coats, large watch-chains and high hats—and in many cases were of such splendid build and proportions that they presented an aldermanic, not to say a magisterial dignity.

Amongst the "new" delegates not a single one wore a tall hat. They looked workmen. They were workmen. They were not such sticklers for formality or Court procedures, but were guided more by common sense.<sup>38</sup>

At past congresses the "old" men had ruled absolute. Indeed until very recent years there had been no "new" men to raise a fuss. At the very meeting Burns describes, however, the "new" men overthrew the "old." They forced through a program of socialist demands and effected the resignation of that champion of the "old," Henry Broadhurst.

Remarks of this nature argue in favor of the theory of a labor aristocracy. One equates the "old" with the "aristocrats," better paid, with a history of steady employment in a skilled industry, and content with political Lib-Labbery. This profile conforms generally to that delineated by Eric Hobsbawm in his influential article on the subject. Using as criteria "prospects of social security," "conditions of work," "relations with social strata above and below him," "general conditions of living," "prospects of future advancement," and—"incomparably the most important"—"the level and regularity of the workers' earnings,"<sup>39</sup> he has argued that one can distinguish an aristocracy that until the beginning of the twentieth century lived closer to a lower-middle than to a working-class life. Pelling challenges the argument in Popular Politics.<sup>40</sup> Hobsbawm, as a Marxist, finds the theory of a labor aristocracy a comforting one. It stands, says Pelling, as a convenient explanation of "the signs of comparative affluence in the working class, and also the presence of non-revolutionary sentiments among the workers." Pelling faults Hobsbawm for defining the aristocrats almost exclusively in terms of their wages and therefore in terms of the nature of their employment.

The wages of the individual worker do not readily provide us with an index of his relative affluence, which must depend upon the size of his family, the earnings, if any, of his wife and children, the ability of his wife as a housekeeper, and his and her financial self-discipline, foresight, intelligence, and temper.<sup>41</sup>

He contends as well that to use the concept of an aristocracy to explain working-class political quiescence flies in the face of facts which suggest that, on the contrary, it was in most cases the aristocrats—engineers like Burns, Mann, and J. L. Mahon—who were the most militant.

How can one sort all this out, in the face of accounts such as Burns's? Certainly working men themselves recognized distinctions within their own ranks, based upon all the criteria Hobsbawm lists and tempered by the circumstances Pelling cites. Further, as the two historians acknowledge, the distinctions were beginning to blur with increasing rapidity

<sup>38</sup> Quoted in Raymond Postgate, The Builders' History (London, 1923), 343.

<sup>39</sup> Eric Hobsbawm, "The Labour Aristocracy in Nineteenth-Century Britain," in his Labouring Men (London, 1964), 273.

<sup>40</sup> Pelling, "The Concept of the Labour Aristocracy," in Popular Politics, 38.

<sup>41</sup> Ibid., 52.

at the beginning of the twentieth century. Hobsbawm, the Marxist, suggests that imperialist capitalism created an "alternative hierarchy" of civil servants, clerks, and teachers that alienated the labor aristocracy from the lower middle class, of which it had been able to feel itself a part.<sup>42</sup> Hobsbawm seems to imply—although he nowhere asserts—that the result was a growing willingness on the part of labor aristocrats to identify with the interests of their less affluent brothers.<sup>43</sup>

Both Hobsbawm and Pelling discuss a second and more readily substantiated reason why the working class was growing from two classes into one: technology was making it difficult to distinguish with any assurance the skilled from the unskilled. As Pelling puts it, "The process of change gradually invaded separate crafts one after the other, reducing them all, or nearly all, to a situation in which the skill of the worker was something that could readily be 'picked up'."<sup>44</sup> Hobsbawm maintains that "the competition of machinery and the threat of down-grading" compelled some of the most "aristocratic" unions to affiliate with the Labour Representation Committee.<sup>45</sup> Burns spoke of this threat, from the point of view of the "new" and the "old," in his account of the Liverpool Congress.

There has been a lot of cant talked about the "new" and the "old" trades unionism. The difference between them, if any, is entirely due to the fact that the "old" see that labour-saving machinery is reducing the previously skilled to the level of unskilled labour, and they must, in their own interests, be less exclusive than hitherto. The "new" believe that distinctions of labour must disappear and that class prejudices that have disintegrated the Labour movement in the past must be abolished.<sup>46</sup>

The continuing introduction of new technology brought with it a breakdown of the apprenticeship system and of the implication that a man once taught his craft need never relearn it. It meant that the "unskilled," when put to work at a machine, became to that extent "skilled" and therefore indispensable. It brought the use of new materials—concrete, for example—with which the older skilled workmen were wholly unfamiliar. It dictated the substitution of cooperative for individual effort—vividly illustrated in Charles Booth's description of a locomotive

<sup>42</sup> The number of clerks in London rose from 90,000 in 1881 to 172,000 in 1911. Paul Thompson, Socialists, Liberals, and Labour: The Struggle for London, 1885-1914 (London, 1967), 14. Between 1880 and 1914 the class of occupied people receiving an "intermediate income" more than doubled, whereas the increase in the occupied population as a whole was 40 per cent. Clegg, Fox, and Thompson, History of Trade Unions, 1: 473.

<sup>43</sup> G. D. H. Cole, however, reads the evidence a different way in his Studies in Class Structure (London, 1955), 39. He believes the increased number of clerks blurred the distinctions among classes. "The upshot was a much greater differentiation within the classes of employed persons, and a blurring of the lines of division between wage- and salary-earners, and therewith between 'workers' and the 'lower middle class.'" factory.<sup>47</sup> And it plagued artisans accustomed to working at their own pace with the hated time and motion studies of scientific management.<sup>48</sup>

<sup>44</sup> Pelling, "Concept of the Labour Aristocracy," 45-46.

<sup>45</sup> Hobsbawm, "Labour Aristocracy," 289.

<sup>46</sup> Postgate, Builders' History, 343-44.

Standardization, subdivision, and mechanization disrupted working-class patterns and habits by drawing the skilled and unskilled together. The experience was bound to upset those caught up in it. And its effects manifested themselves in the strikes the workers felt increasingly compelled to call. More often than not, status was at stake, along with wages. As the unskilled worker acquired a position of some importance and security within his class, he became the more anxious to insure that black legs did not wrest it from him. Dangerfield estimates that during 1910 only 20 per cent of the strikes concerned themselves with wages; the rest arose over conditions of labor and refusal to work with non-unionists.<sup>49</sup> The dockers' major claim in 1912 was the compulsory union ticket. The rank-and-file railwaymen considered recognition a more vital goal than wage conciliation; their leaders joined the Triple Alliance from a conviction that management was systematically harassing their membership.

Status meant more than keeping the black legs at bay. There were as well the questions of the new unionists' relationship with their more "aristocratic" brothers and, among those brothers, of the need to adjust to the breakdown of specialization by craft. Unions had to redefine work patterns that had been drawn under far different conditions than those existing by 1900. Booth, writing in the nineties of the need for union regulation between workman and workman, cited the cases of the artisan or mechanic and the assistant labourer, when the latter is forbidden to use the skilled man's tools; in the definition, or attempted definition of the spheres of work of such trades as shipwrights and ships' carpenters; of mason and bricklayers where they come together, or of plumbers and fitters.<sup>50</sup>

Postgate, in his Builders' History, takes the plumbers as an instance in point.

They were unable to grapple with the difficulties involved in the new processes; their only remedy was to claim that whatever had before been done by plumbers should still be done by them, though iron or china had taken the place of lead. In 1903 they recorded, without dissatisfaction, that they had longstanding and

<sup>47</sup> Charles Booth, Labour and Life of the People of London (3d ed.; London, 1891), 9: 227.

<sup>48</sup> See Phelps Brown, British Industrial Relations, 92-98; Eric Hobsbawm, "Customs, Wages, and Work-load in Nineteenth Century Industry," in Labouring Men, 344-70.

<sup>49</sup> Dangerfield, Strange Death, 247. Phelps Brown argues that there was a decline in the usefulness of boards of conciliation and arbitration, since they were designed primarily to resolve questions of wages, not status. As status began to divide labor and management after 1900, Phelps Brown maintains that these boards, which depended on some common ground between the two sides in order to succeed, ceased to function effectively. British Industrial Relations, 143-44, 340. Knowles, however, counters with the fact that "between 1910 and 1913 the yearly average number of strikes was over twice as high as it had been between 1904 and 1909; but the number of cases settled by conciliatory methods was almost three times as high." Knowles, Strikes, 66 n.1.

<sup>50</sup> Booth, London, 9: 252-53.

bitter consequent quarrels with no less than five other crafts—whitesmiths, hot-water fitters, zinc workers and glaziers.<sup>51</sup>

Amidst these confusions over status and jurisdictions, as Phelps Brown points out, working men found it more and more difficult to determine the issues at stake or to take them to their union leadership for solution.<sup>52</sup> Hence the more than usual number of wildcat strikes during the period. The rank and file grew impatient with leadership too often insensitive to particular local difficulties and distinctions. They resented trade-union bureaucracies (here again the matter of status was an issue) that sent out agents from comfortable London headquarters to investigate conflicts whose bitterness they could not share and to propose conciliatory solutions the workers would not accept. Workers refused to sacrifice local momentum while awaiting a decision from London; South Wales miners disparaged centralized conciliation as "class collaboration."<sup>53</sup> Too often, on the other hand, rigid regulations combined with a lack of ready talent to prevent the growth of any sort of flexible negotiating system at the local level. The resulting conflicts were regularly expressed at annual meetings of the Trades Union Congress. In 1911 the cautious strike policy of the Parliamentary Committee, which blamed violence on the police and army but spoke out strongly in favor of discipline and centralization, met with defeat at the hands of the delegates. They passed instead a resolution declaring that "no effort shall be spared by the forces of organized labour to arouse and maintain the discontent of underpaid workers with their conditions, and to quicken and assist their determination to use all possible means to win for themselves a living wage."<sup>54</sup> They attacked as well a proposal supported by the Labour leadership, which called for a thirty-day notice prior to the commencement of a strike.

Uncertain as to what its place should be within the working-class hierarchy, the rapidly expanding rank and file picked a fight with its leaders over what their place had been. At stake was not so much union policy and procedure as a redefinition on the part of the working class of its own social structure. The problem was complicated by the continued prevalence of marked and galling contrasts between working-class families and neighborhoods, which neither technology nor fulminations of the Trades Union Congress had abolished. Some workers lived comfortably; one-third

<sup>51</sup> Postgate, Builders' History, 378–79.

<sup>52</sup> Phelps Brown, British Industrial Relations, 231.

<sup>53</sup> Page Arnot, The Miners, 322. See also his account of the difficulties encountered by the union leadership in settling the Cambrian strike of 1911. The Miners, 2: 71.

<sup>54</sup> From the Annual Report, 1911, quoted in Roberts, Trades Union Congress, 241.

<sup>55</sup> Of those members of the working class in the 1890s whose weekly income was less than thirty shillings, D. J. Oddy has this to say: "The individuals in these groups ate only six pounds of bread per week, and the whole diet provided less than 2000 kilo-calories a day. On the whole, what they ate was very similar to the diet of the worst group [needlewomen in London] examined by Dr. Edward Smith in 1863, except that sugar consumption was double that of the 1860's." D. J. Oddy, "Working Class Diets," Economic History Review, 23 (1970): 320.

lived below the poverty line.<sup>55</sup> A growing number sat on city councils; a majority still did not have the vote.<sup>56</sup> A handful won places in secondary schools; twelve per cent of the Middlesbrough working class could neither read nor write.<sup>57</sup> The distinctions and the jealousies engendered by "rising expectations" did nothing to simplify the job of social redefinition.

That task was but one of several workers faced as they tried to make twentieth-century sense of nineteenth-century institutions. Another was the acceptance of the changing circumstances of welfare and charity and of changing attitudes toward social service. The years 1890 to 1914 witnessed the climax of that struggle Asa Briggs has described, between the theories of the social-service state and the welfare state. Victorian England had been a social-service state, in which the upper and middle classes, through their own or the government's agency, extended helping hands to the deserving poor. Modern England is a welfare state, in which the government offers "all citizens without distinction of status or class . . . the best standards available in relation to a certain agreed range of social services."<sup>58</sup> Edwardian England straddled the two eras: the Charity Organization Society, the most sophisticated rationalization of the old; the Webbs' Minority Report, a daring blueprint for the new. And the working class was by no means ready to exchange the former for the latter.

Pelling has given us convincing evidence on that point. A chapter in Popular Politics<sup>59</sup> catalogs working-class opposition to the extension of state power, "which is generally regarded as having laid the foundations of the welfare state."<sup>60</sup> He lists the Poor Law of 1834, the Housing Acts of the 1870s, and the Education Acts of 1870 and 1880 as examples of interventionist legislation that met with working-class hostility, or indifference, or both. Such opposition, Pelling points out, went hand in hand with working-class mistrust of the law. Certain trades welcomed government-imposed safety regulations and some, but not all, unions supported bills delimiting the factory working day.<sup>61</sup> Neither political party won working-class support by promulgating elaborate programs of social reform.

When the Liberals did introduce pensions, insurance, and labor ex-

<sup>55</sup> Only 60 per cent of the males of voting age had the vote after 1885. N. Blewett, "The Franchise in the United Kingdom, 1885-1918," Past and Present, 32 (1965): 31.

<sup>57</sup> Lady Bell, At The Works (London, 1969; 1st ed., 1907), 162.

<sup>58</sup> Asa Briggs, "The Welfare State in Historical Perspective," Archives Européennes de Sociologie, 2 (1961): 228.

<sup>59</sup> Pelling, "The Working Class and the Origins of the Welfare State," in Popular Politics, 1-18.

<sup>60</sup> Ibid., 2.

<sup>61</sup> Page Arnot recounts the astonishment of Continental delegates to the Miners' International in Brussels in 1893, when two Englishmen opposed a motion to affirm the principle of the legal eight-hour day. "Both were working miners from Northumberland; and both were convinced that Parliament could not 'righteously and justly interfere with the hours of adult labour.' This reduced Emile Basley of France to 'a state of wonderment.' The amendment meant, in four words, 'objection to state intervention': from this he had presumed the representatives of Northumberland were anarchists. . . . 'What,' he asked, 'was the use of trade unionists sending representatives to parliament if, when they got there, these "anarchist" representatives were not to legislate at all?'" Page Arnot, The Miners, 1: 172.

changes, their progressivism, as we have seen, bewildered more often than it delighted the working man. The Liberal innovation most popular with the working class—old-age pensions—incurred the bitter opposition of the Friendly Societies, which saw them, as they saw national insurance, as an unwarranted and essentially unnecessary threat to their existence.<sup>62</sup> All other welfare schemes encountered at least some measure of opposition when proposed, and confusion and disappointment when enacted.<sup>63</sup> Intervention too often appeared to the working class as another name for interference.<sup>64</sup> The Poor Law had taught them that. Lady Bell, in her description of the lives of Middlesbrough iron workers, reports local disgust at a government attempt to regulate and hence improve the practice of midwifery through licensing. Since many of the midwives either forgot or refused to bother to pay their guinea fee, the practical result of this well-intentioned reform was to reduce the number of the town's practitioners.<sup>65</sup> Lady Bell concluded that social reformers lose more than they gain when they prod the worker to accept improvements he has not first been tutored to understand.

One learns after long experience that what he wants is that the next step that is of any concern to him, and that he chooses to take in his own way, should be facilitated for him; but one has to be very careful not to go a little further and make superfluous suggestions which he then, much to the discomfort of the suggester, absolutely negatives and dismisses.<sup>66</sup>

The worker had to be weaned from the belief that he would be the weaker for having accepted relief and made to see that the country might be the stronger if he would only accept his government's support. Throughout the nineteenth century the English middle class did its best to see that he learned that first lesson; now, in the twentieth, its reform-minded heirs pressed him to understand the second. That their task of re-education was arduous and frustrating speaks eloquently of the thoroughness with which the Victorian bourgeoisie catechized its working-class pupils.

Two further examples will suggest the breadth of this problem of readjustment and adaptation that the working class, along with everyone else, was forced to confront. Richard Hoggart has remarked that "the more we try to reach the core of working-class attitudes, the more surely does it appear that that core is a sense of the personal, the concrete, the local; it is embodied in the idea of, first, the family, and, second, the neighborhood."<sup>67</sup>

<sup>62</sup> Bentley B. Gilbert, The Evolution of National Insurance in Great Britain (London, 1966), 160.

<sup>63</sup> See, for example, Page Arnot, The Miners, 2: 108, 129-21, for the disappointed reaction of the miners to the Minimum Wage Act of 1912.

<sup>64</sup> Though the unions did learn that by forcing government intervention as a third party in an industry-wide strike, they could sometimes achieve victory over their employers. The miners proved the point in 1912, when they pressured the government into passing a minimum wage bill.

<sup>65</sup> Bell, At the Works, 265.

<sup>66</sup> Ibid., 98.

<sup>67</sup> Richard Hoggart, The Uses of Literacy (Boston, 1961), 32.

One discovers that core at the center of Edwardian working-class life, constantly threatened, however, by a modern sense of urban alienation. Many working men and women were born and grew up far from their subsequent homes—either in the country, in another city, or in another quarter of the same city in which they later lived. Hope of better wages, the vicissitudes of urban renewal, a growing family, the lack of work near to hand, the availability of a workers' train—these and other factors, singly or in combination, were forcing more and more members of the working class to move about. The more they moved, the more difficult it became to combat the rootlessness and loneliness of a series of flats or tiny houses, generally alike, but not for that reason any the more familiar or comforting. They fought back with ritual, creating rhythms from the events of the present and epics of everyday occurrences of the past.

There is a rhythm, but it is the rhythm of a brick world, to which those of the seasons or of the great religious festivals are only incidental. At each weekend, perhaps, there is Friday night's shopping with Mother down a shopping street that is all bustle and warmth and gregarious spending, and the trains rattle and flash past constantly. There is the whole weekend ahead, with the pictures on Saturday, or a chapel concert with a hot supper in the Sunday school room; bacon and eggs for Sunday breakfast, the big Sunday tea. Then, throughout the year, Pancake Tuesday, Voting Day, which is always a holiday, Hotcross Buns on Good Friday, the Autumn "Feast," Mischief Night, and all the weeks of cadging and collecting for Bonfire Night. It is a truly urban fire, with very little wood that has known a tree for the past few years. . . . As the fireworks run out, you bake potatoes round the fire's edges.<sup>68</sup>

Remove the reference to pictures on Saturday, and the rhythm is much like that Edwardian working-class families maintained as they faced down the facts of urban anonymity and psychological nakedness.

The rhythm implied an allotted time for pleasure. Edwardians practiced enjoyment as Victorians had preached self-denial. Here was another readjustment, and an especially difficult one for the working class to make. Once rich men and women ceased to be afraid of ostentation, they had only to begin spending the capital their Victorian forebears had felt constrained to leave untouched. A working man, on the other hand, soon found to his sorrow that to desert thrift for pleasure, even to the extent of a glass or two of beer, was to put his entire family in jeopardy. Wages of twenty-five shillings per week, each halfpenny budgeted for the necessities of life, allowed for no such indulgences.<sup>69</sup> Economic circumstances

<sup>68</sup> Ibid., 59.

<sup>69</sup> Rowntree's famous passage describing the amenities one would have to do without if one wished to live above the poverty line makes the point. "A family living upon the scale allowed for in this estimate must never spend a penny on railway fare or omnibus. They must never go into the country unless they walk. They must never purchase a halfpenny newspaper or spend a penny to buy a ticket for a popular concert. They must write no letters to absent children, for they cannot afford to pay the postage. They must never contribute anything to their church or chapel, or give any help to a neighbour which costs them money. They cannot forced him to deny himself the pleasures others were beginning to take for granted and enjoy. Lady Bell deplored the fact that no one taught the working class "the great, the much-needed lesson for both old and young, the need for self-control both in word and deed."<sup>70</sup> The middle classes, schoolmasters to the poor, were ceasing to believe the lesson. Left to themselves and encouraged by propaganda such as Robert Blatchford's Merrie England,<sup>71</sup> workers as often as not failed to learn it, until poverty descended to teach it in perhaps the only way it could still be taught.

EVERY AGE IS an age of transition, but this was transition with a vengeance. Social institutions will hold people together only as long as the people believe in the institutions' worth or in their existence. Events brought Victorian institutions into question; once questioned, they ceased to bind Englishmen as they had before. Centrifugal force—the pull away from a common acceptance of essentially middle-class Victorian assumptions—spun the English off into the separate confusions that mark the period. The Ulsterites, the suffragettes, the workers, to a lesser degree the rest of their countrymen, were looking for ways to cope with the reality of change. In this, their "revolts" had common roots, and their uncertainties fed each other. As Phelps Brown remarks: "Events which stir the emotions in the same way boost one another's signals when they are in circuit with one another, and their aggregate effect is greater than the sum of the effects they would take separately."<sup>72</sup>

The working men's "sense of an impending clash" sprang, then, from their sense of economic grievance and of class-consciousness. It was almost certainly heightened by their understandable confusion at the rapid disappearance of Victorian institutions they had taken for granted. They were upset and not at all sure what to do. So they did many apparently contradictory things at once: they struck for wages and struck for status; they sent the TUC their money and bucked its leadership; they opposed na-save, nor can they join sick club or Trade Union, because they cannot pay the necessary subscriptions. The children must have no pocket money for dolls, marbles, or sweets. The father must smoke no tobacco, and must drink no beer. The mother must never buy any pretty clothes for herself or for her children, the character of the family wardrobe as of the family diet governed by the regulation, 'Nothing must be bought but that which is absolutely necessary for the maintenance of physical health, and what is bought must be of the plainest and most economical description.' Should a child fall ill, it must be attended by the parish doctor; should it die, it must be buried by the parish. Finally, the wage-earner must never be absent from his work for a single day." B. Seebohm Rowntree, Poverty, A Study of Town Life (London, 1910), 133-34.

---

<sup>70</sup> Bell, At the Works, 220

<sup>71</sup> Blatchford included pleasure among the "mental needs of life." "As for pleasures, their name is legion. There are such pleasures as walking, rowing, swimming, football, cricket. There are the arts, and the drama. There are the beauties of nature. There are travel and adventure. Mere words cannot convey an idea of the intensity of these pleasures." Merrie England (New York, 1966; 1st ed., 1894), 20.

<sup>72</sup> Phelps Brown, British Industrial Relations, 332.

tional insurance while they collected their pensions; they voted Labour and agreed that Labour accomplished almost nothing.

Dangerfield to the contrary, there was little joy in them as they surveyed their strange-seeming world. He is mistaken when he describes them as "wanting to live, to take chances, to throw caution to the winds."<sup>73</sup> One does catch this sense in the memoirs of some of the intellectual rebels of the time. Leonard Woolf describes the excitement of taking part "in the spring-time of a conscious revolt against the social, political, religious, moral, intellectual, and artistic institutions, beliefs, and standards of our fathers and grandfathers." "It seemed," he writes, "as though human beings might really be on the brink of becoming civilized. It was partly the feeling of relief and release as we broke out of the fog of Victorianism."<sup>74</sup> Few members of the working class shared that élan. Trapped between a consciousness of "rising expectations" and an atavistic fatalism that denied the possibility of change, they could not subscribe wholeheartedly to a belief in progress and a better future. The past, though a matter of dreary, impoverished sameness, was nevertheless a matter of certainty.

Was it not uncertainty, even fear perhaps, that as much as anything drove the English worker to act as he did in those years before 1914, to spend as much time as he did on the defensive?<sup>75</sup> Until historians have studied authentic working-class sources more thoroughly than they have, the suggestion can be no more than that. A final clue may lie, however, in the words with which Barrington Moore concludes his Social Origins of Dictatorship and Democracy. "The wellsprings of human freedom lie not only where Marx saw them, in the aspirations of classes about to take power, but perhaps even more in the dying wail of a class over whom the wave of progress is about to roll."<sup>76</sup>

<sup>73</sup> Dangerfield, Strange Death, 235.

<sup>74</sup> Leonard Woolf, Beginning Again (London, 1964), 34, 36.

<sup>75</sup> Stearns argues that French workers, especially during the period 1905-10, struck most commonly in defense of what they had managed to gain in the past rather than in anticipation of what they might achieve in the future. "A large number of strikes that apparently sought higher wage rates in reality were defending accustomed levels. . . . French workers had obviously improved their standards of living in the preceding decades, but they still had not collectively displayed a commitment to steady progress in the future." Revolutionary Syndicalism, 46. The same might well have been true of English workers.

<sup>76</sup> Barrington Moore, The Social Origins of Dictatorship and Democracy (Boston, 1967), 505.

---

Stalin and the Prospects of a Separate Peace in World War II

---

VOJTECH MASTNY

THE FEAR THAT Moscow and Berlin might again come to terms preoccupied American and British statesmen long after Hitler had forced the unwilling Stalin to join the Allied coalition. In the opinion of George F. Kennan, a touchstone for appraising the wartime policies of the Americans and the British "will be found . . . in the soundness and accuracy of their fears with relation to the possibility of a separate German-Soviet peace."<sup>1</sup> The possibility never materialized; but does that mean a Russian-German rapprochement was merely an empty threat? This is indeed an important question, for the answer may influence the appraisal of both the Soviet war aims and the Western responses to them—two central themes in the current debate about the origins of the cold war.

If Stalin contemplated a separate peace at any particular moment during the war, his objectives must have been more flexible than they appear in retrospect. Any compromise with Germany would inevitably have given him considerably less territory and influence than he achieved in 1945. But was there ever a favorable situation for a compromise? And even if there was, would the Russians have discussed peace with Hitler, or would they have required his replacement by a non-Nazi government first? In either case, how much did the prospect of an armistice on the eastern front influence the policies of the Western allies? Was not Stalin himself creating a false alarm in order to exact concessions from his coalition partners?

These intriguing questions have so far received surprisingly little scholarly attention. The late Herbert Feis, for example, all but ignored them in his history of the Great Alliance.<sup>2</sup> William H. McNeill has confined his opinion to a few cautious remarks.<sup>3</sup> In the 1950s John A. Lukacs was the only one to come to grips with the problem as far as his limited evidence then allowed; he concluded that Moscow had considered the alternative of a separate peace seriously.<sup>4</sup> A few other authors have subsequently written about it, but none has done so within the broad context the subject deserves.<sup>5</sup> The shortage of reliable evidence has been the principal obstacle for historians. All their inquiries have so far depended almost exclusively upon the testimony of Peter Kleist, the less than reputable former aide of the Nazi foreign minister, Joachim von Ribbentrop. In his postwar memoirs Kleist maintained that during the war he had received several Soviet peace feelers in Stockholm.<sup>6</sup> German authors have been somewhat more inclined to take his word than have their foreign colleagues but have done little to substantiate their judgment.<sup>7</sup> It is to be regretted that the conclusive evidence from the Moscow archives may not be available for some time to come. In the meantime, however, more than has previously been known can be deduced from additional sources accessible in the West. Unpublished records of the United States Department of State and Department of the Army—particularly the military intelligence papers—captured German documents, and little-known publications from Eastern Europe are among the sources used in this essay for the first time.<sup>8</sup>

<sup>1</sup> George F. Kennan, Russia and the West under Lenin and Stalin (Boston, 1961), 362-63.

<sup>2</sup> Herbert Feis, Churchill, Roosevelt, Stalin: The War They Waged and the Peace They Sought (Princeton, 1967), 143.

<sup>3</sup> William H. McNeill, America, Britain, and Russia: Their Co-Operation and Conflict (London, 1953), 275, 324.

From the Soviet point of view a peace with Berlin would have necessarily meant two very different things before and after Stalingrad. During the period of German ascendancy it could only have entailed strategic surrender—"the orderly capitulation of the remaining forces" in order to prevent the worse consequences of a defeat.<sup>9</sup> After Stalingrad had reversed military fortunes a genuine compromise was theoretically possible. Accordingly peace prospects during the periods preceding and following that crucial turning point of the war ought to be considered separately.

No sooner did Hitler and Stalin begin to fight than they were suspected of seeking a settlement. The United States assistant secretary of state, Adolf A. Berle, Jr., for example, considered their rapprochement possible as early as July 1941; the British Embassy in Moscow expected a Soviet bid for peace

<sup>4</sup> John A. Lukacs, The Great Powers and Eastern Europe (New York, 1953), 502-24.

<sup>5</sup> See, for example, Karl-Heinz Minuth, "Sowjetisch-deutsche Friedenskontakte," Geschichte in Wissenschaft und Unterricht, 16 (1965): 38-45.

<sup>6</sup> The English translation, entitled The European Tragedy (London, 1965), is an expanded version of the original edition of Peter Kleist, Zwischen Hitler und Stalin, 1939-1945 (Bonn, 1950).

<sup>7</sup> For example, Lothar Gruchmann, Der Zweite Weltkrieg: Kriegführung und Politik (Munich, 1967), 242-43; and Boris Meissner, Russland, die Westmächte und Deutschland (Hamburg, 1954), 13-17.

<sup>8</sup> The following archival sources will be cited throughout this essay: Records of the Office of Strategic Services, record group 226, National Archives, Washington (hereafter OSS); Records of the War Department, General and Special Staffs—Military Intelligence (G-2), record group 165, Washington National Record Center (hereafter G-2); General Records of the Department of State, record group 59, National Archives (hereafter DS); Records of the German foreign office (Auswärtiges Amt), microcopy T-120, National Archives (hereafter AA); Records of the British Foreign Office, General Correspondence, FO 371, Public Record Office, London (hereafter FO); and Records of the British War Cabinet, Memoranda, CAB 66, Public Record Office, (hereafter CAB).

<sup>9</sup> Paul Kecskemeti, Strategic Surrender: The Politics of Victory and Defeat (New York, 1964), v.

two months later.<sup>10</sup> In early 1942 London was especially apprehensive about the chances of a sudden armistice.<sup>11</sup> Lord Halifax, the ambassador to Washington, repeatedly expressed his concern in private conversations.<sup>12</sup> For reasons inherent in the Soviet system, a peace initiative from Moscow was not out of the question. The Bolsheviks had proved before that the ideological antagonism between nazism and communism did not necessarily rule out collaboration. And the Russian government was under no obligation to its constituents to maintain the alliance with the West. The autocrat, who had all decisions about war and peace in his hands, could enforce his will easily, regardless of public opinion, if he chose to do so. Extensive freedom from domestic restraints was but one of the many affinities between Stalin and Hitler—the two dictators who hated but respected each other. Of the two, it was Stalin rather than Hitler who tended to underestimate the incompatibility of their respective interests. Stalin personally had a greater share than Hitler in bringing to conclusion the pact of August 1939, had benefited from it more than his Nazi counterpart, and had therefore tried to preserve it until the very last moment.

As a matter of fact, Soviet spokesmen expressed nostalgia for a modus vivendi with Berlin even after the Nazis had already violated it. On June 24, 1941, for example, the emigré leadership of the German Communist party in Moscow issued a statement in favor of an "indestructible alliance" between the German and Russian peoples.<sup>13</sup> Two days later Walter Ulbricht, that particularly faithful interpreter of Stalin's thoughts, drafted an appeal to Hitler's soldiers in which Ulbricht drew a sharp distinction between their unjustified attack on the "Fatherland of Socialism" and their struggle against the Western "plutocracies."<sup>14</sup> Although such explicit statements soon ceased, they nevertheless suggest that Stalin would have regarded a renewed understanding with Germany as both feasible and desirable. From his point of view an arrangement with the congenial Nazi dictator could still have been easier than dealing with the Western statesmen whose thinking was so alien to his own and who were particularly reluctant to grant him title to the territories he had seized in 1939 and 1940.

In early 1942 the British government was actually quite tempted to endorse Stalin's territorial claims in Eastern Europe in order to avert his <sup>10</sup> Adolf A. Berle, Jr. to J. Edgar Hoover, July 10, 1941, Foreign Relations of the United States (hereafter FRUS), 1941, 1: General, The Soviet Union (Washington, 1958), 789-90; Sumner Welles, "Two Roosevelt Decisions: One Debit, One Credit," Foreign Affairs, 29 (1950-51): 189.

<sup>11</sup> Llewellyn Woodward, British Foreign Policy in the Second World War, 2 (London, 1971): 239, 244.

<sup>12</sup> [Sumner] W[elles], memorandum on conversation with Lord Halifax, Mar. 30, 1942, FRUS, 1942, 3: Europe (Washington, 1961), 537. See also Jan Ciechanowski, Defeat in Victory (New York, 1947), 109.

<sup>13</sup> Statement printed in the journal Kommunisticheskii International (1941), no. 6-7, quoted in report no. 44338 C, OSS.

<sup>14</sup> Walter Ulbricht, "Entwurf eines Aufrufes an die deutschen Soldaten," June 26, 1941, in his Zur Geschichte der deutschen Arbeiterbewegung: Aus Reden und Aufsätzen, 2: (1933-1946), supp. 2 (Berlin, 1968): 221.

possible defection. Churchill explained the reasons to Roosevelt in unequivocal terms: "The increasing gravity of the war has led me to feel that the principles of the Atlantic Charter ought not to be construed so as to deny Russia the frontiers she occupied when Germany attacked her."<sup>15</sup> But Washington objected on both moral and practical grounds and insisted that any reference to the controversial frontiers be deleted from the final text of the British-Soviet treaty, which was signed on May 26, 1942.<sup>16</sup> The Americans were loath to bestow an air of legitimacy upon the annexations that Stalin had carried out in a particularly scandalous fashion during his collusion with Hitler. In addition they were trying to avoid the Wilsonian predicament by abstaining from any commitments that might prove embarrassing after the war.

The policy of refusing to abet Stalin's misdeeds had unquestionable virtues, but the promotion of his faith in the alliance was not one of them. On December 6, 1941, the Soviet leader told the British foreign secretary, Anthony Eden, "If our war aims were different, then there would be no alliance."<sup>17</sup> Rightly or wrongly Stalin considered the "second front" the supreme proof of cooperation,<sup>18</sup> and in his mind its absence could even have cast an altogether sinister light upon the extensive material aid he was getting. Were the Western capitalists not sending him just enough to promote a military stalemate in order to benefit later from the mutual exhaustion of both belligerents? Such a putative scheme must have seemed especially plausible to Stalin, since he himself had thought along these lines in 1939-41, as the shifting emphases of the Comintern's statements at that time indicate.<sup>19</sup> And it should be remembered that the Russians, in conformity with Marxist doctrine as they understood it, vastly exaggerated the influence that British aristocrats and American financiers who were hostile to the Soviet Union were able to exercise upon the policies of their respective governments.

In this context it matters little that political considerations did not in fact cause the repeated postponements of the landing on the Continent;<sup>20</sup> in all fairness some Western actions could have hardly failed to create an impression of duplicity. The Russians were perhaps understandably disturbed about the inability of the British to give a convincing explanation of the awkward peace mission of Rudolf Hess—admittedly a difficult thing to do—and about the unwillingness of the London government to bring the

<sup>15</sup> Churchill to Roosevelt, Mar. 7, 1942, in Churchill, The Hinge of Fate (London, 1951), 293.

<sup>16</sup> See the treaty in Louise W. Holborn, ed., War and Peace Aims of the United Nations, 1 (Boston, 1943): 235-37.

<sup>17</sup> Stalin, quoted in Woodward, British Foreign Policy, 2: 223.

<sup>18</sup> The official Soviet view is summarized in V. M. Kulish, Vtoroi front (The Second Front) (Moscow, 1960), 16-20.

<sup>19</sup> The Comintern's statements are analyzed in Kurt Krupinski, Die Komintern seit Kriegsausbruch (Berlin, 1941).

<sup>20</sup> Evidence that it was not political considerations that postponed the Allied landings appears in Maurice Matloff and Edwin S. Snell, Strategic Planning for Coalition Warfare, 1941-1942 (Washington, 1953), 217-32, 322-27.

self-appointed intermediary to trial.<sup>21</sup> Even more disconcerting was Roosevelt's unfulfilled promise to launch the invasion of Europe before 1943, a promise he had let Molotov believe was definite.<sup>22</sup> Then, too, no matter how genuine the president's desire to promote mutual trust, his volubility may have had the very opposite effect on Soviet minds ever disposed to suspect the worst.<sup>23</sup>

Thus Stalin had reasons, albeit the wrong ones, to question the motives of his allies in 1942. Yet these alone did not necessarily prompt him to desert them. Very soon after June 1941 the Nazis proved by their behavior that so long as they retained the upper hand the only peace terms the Soviet Union could expect would be complete submission. Russia's sole alternative was to fight on, and any signs of faltering resolve would have, if anything, given further encouragement to the enemy; or even worse, they might make the dreaded Western reversal of alliances a self-fulfilling prophecy. Stalin could have been exasperated with the coalition, but he had to maintain it. On balance, therefore, any Russian efforts to come to terms with Germany before Stalingrad may be dismissed as mere products of anxious imagination.

DURING THE WINTER of 1942-43 the situation changed radically. Having compelled the Nazis to retreat from the Caucasus, the Red Army encircled German forces at Stalingrad on November 23, 1942, and annihilated them by February 1, 1943. The power of the two belligerents now seemed to be almost balanced—a condition that E. A. Boltin, a leading Soviet military historian, believes lasted until mid-1943.<sup>24</sup> But although Moscow's military prospects brightened, a complete defeat of the enemy was still in the distant future, especially as long as the second front remained uncertain. Past combat experience gave every reason to believe that the path of victory would be arduous, and the Russians had already suffered appalling losses. Yet the military situation after Stalingrad offered the Soviet Union, for the first time since the beginning of the war, both the opportunity and the inducement to trade military assets for a political compromise. Soviet leaders, well versed in the Marxist notions about the interaction of war and politics, could have hardly missed that message. And indeed, an authoritative article published in January 1943 in the party journal Bolshevik indicated that they did not. Its author was none other than Colonel E. Razin, whom Stalin had chosen on other occasions as mouthpiece for his own views about military questions. The colonel affirmed that "separation of politics and strategy, and the neglect of the requirements of politics for 'purely stra-

<sup>21</sup> Woodward, British Foreign Policy, 2: 278-80.

<sup>22</sup> Feis, Churchill, Roosevelt, Stalin, 64-69.

<sup>23</sup> See Robert H. McNeal, "Roosevelt through Stalin's Spectacles," International Journal, 18 (1962-63): 194-206.

<sup>24</sup> E. A. Boltin, "Die Wesenszüge der sowjetischen Strategie in der Endphase des Grossen Vaterländischen Krieges," in Bernhard Weissel, ed., Befreiung und Neubeginn (Berlin, 1968), 65.

tegic' reasons are fraught with dangerous consequences. . . . Politics and war influence each other but they are not factors of the same order; primacy always belongs to politics."<sup>25</sup>

The obstacles to a negotiated settlement between the Soviet Union and Germany had diminished by early 1943. Although the passions aroused during the savage struggle ruled out genuine reconciliation, the enormous exertion of both belligerents was conducive to comparing the assets of imperfect peace with the liabilities of elusive victory. Aware of the opportunities, prospective mediators were readily available. Japanese diplomats repeatedly tendered their good services.<sup>26</sup> Mussolini, himself in danger of an imminent invasion by the Western Allies, implored Hitler to seek peace with the Russians.<sup>27</sup> Among the neutral countries Sweden offered a particularly convenient ambiance for preliminaries. Stockholm, easily accessible from both Moscow and Berlin, was a capital where the members of the opposing coalitions maintained extensive diplomatic and intelligence staffs.

The Soviet legation in Stockholm was headed by the colorful figure of Alexandra M. Kollontay—the aristocratic daughter of a tsarist general, a veteran Bolshevik intellectual of nonconformist leanings, and in her younger days the prophet and practitioner of unconventional views on love, sex, and family.<sup>28</sup> In fact these views, rather than diplomatic skill, had qualified her for the foreign service in the early years after the Revolution, when the Bolsheviks delighted in actions pour épater les bourgeois. Kollontay was given to emotions in politics and did not hide her Germanophobia even during the period of the official friendship from 1939 to 1941. By 1943 she had reached the age of seventy and was suffering from a heart ailment that confined her to a sanitarium away from the Swedish capital for most of the year. For a historian searching for clues of a Russian-German rapprochement, Kollontay is a great disappointment—a less effective envoy at the sensitive Stockholm post can hardly be imagined. But Stalin's highest-ranking diplomats seldom performed the most important missions. In Sweden, too, officials less colorful but more professional than Kollontay actually ran the legation. Among them was counselor Vladimir S. Semyonov, a specialist in German affairs, whose later career included such elevated functions as chief political adviser of the military government in occupied Germany and eventually deputy foreign minister. Another important official in Stockholm was Boris Yartsev, an expert on Finland, who is on record for having extended peace feelers from Stockholm to Helsinki in

<sup>25</sup> E. Razin, "Lenin o sushchnosti voyny" (Lenin on the Nature of War), Bolshevik, 19 (1943): no. 1, p. 47.

<sup>26</sup> Karl Ott to German foreign office, Mar. 3, 1942; AA, microfilm 39, frames 32999–33002; note on conversation between Ushida and German confidant, Oct. 10, 1942, ibid., frames 33417–18.

<sup>27</sup> See F. W. Deakin, The Brutal Friendship (New York, 1962), 84–88, 93–94, 102–03.

<sup>28</sup> There is a brief, semiofficial biography of Alexandra M. Kollontay by Anna M. Itkina, Revoliutsioner, Tribun, Diplomat (Revolutionary, Tribune, Diplomat) (Moscow, 1964), and a sentimental account by Kollontay's friend, Isabel de Palencia, Alexandra Kollontay: Ambassadors from Russia (New York, 1947).

late 1942.<sup>29</sup> Both Semyonov and Yartsev supposedly maintained a very close relationship with Stalin's security chief, Lavrenti P. Beria, who was known as an advocate of partnership with Germany.<sup>30</sup>

The German personnel in Stockholm were of equally high caliber, and their selection could be interpreted as a sign of Berlin's interest in a diplomatic settlement of the war. The envoy to Sweden was Hans Thomsen, who had last served as chargé d'affaires in Washington. In addition to Thomsen, in early 1943 Ribbentrop dispatched several respectable diplomats of conservative leanings to other important neutral capitals such as Madrid and Tokyo.<sup>31</sup> The German foreign minister took pride in having achieved the understanding with the Russians in 1939, and, if his postwar statements are to be trusted, he would have liked to see its renewal in 1943.<sup>32</sup> The propaganda minister, Josef Goebbels, was another prominent Nazi favorably disposed to a settlement with Moscow.<sup>33</sup>

Thriving on excitement and lucrative connections, volunteers of sometimes dubious character were at hand in wartime Sweden to facilitate liaison with friend and foe. One such individual was a certain Edgar Clauss, a nondescript businessman of Baltic-German ancestry and a temporary resident of Stockholm's Carlton Hotel. He was accompanied by a Swedish lady whom he promised to marry after his allegedly forthcoming but in fact fictitious appointment as German minister in Stockholm. Local Germans thought that he was "either a braggart or a spy," and they warned Thomsen about him.<sup>34</sup> As a matter of fact, Clauss was both. Any further inquiry into Clauss by the German legation ceased after German intelligence authorities affirmed that Clauss's activities, which were not specified, served the interests of the Reich.<sup>35</sup> But Clauss had evidently more than one iron in the fire. He is the key person in the memoirs of Peter Kleist, who used to travel frequently between Berlin and Stockholm during the war. According to Kleist it was Clauss who told him, on December 14, 1942, that the Russians wanted a separate peace. Alluding to information from the Soviet legation, Clauss said that Moscow was ready to sign an armistice in eight days if only Berlin would respond favorably.<sup>36</sup> Although the accuracy of

<sup>29</sup> Note on conversation between Ernst von Weizsäcker and Finnish minister to Berlin, Nov. 11, 1942, AA, microfilm 39, frame 33442.

<sup>30</sup> Meissner, Russland, die Westmächte und Deutschland, 14; James E. McSherry, Stalin, Hitler and Europe, 2 (New York, 1970): 17.

<sup>31</sup> Maxime Mourin, Les tentatives de paix dans la Seconde Guerre Mondiale (Paris, 1949), 144-45.

<sup>32</sup> Joachim von Ribbentrop, The Ribbentrop Memoirs, tr. O. Watson (London, 1954), 170.

<sup>33</sup> Wilfred von Oven, Mit Goebbels bis zum Ende (Buenos Aires, 1949), 97-98, 157-59; see also n. 80.

<sup>34</sup> Schönwald to German consulate in Stockholm, Mar. 23, 1942, AA, microfilm 719, frames 318871-72.

<sup>35</sup> Referred to in Wied, German legation in Stockholm, to German foreign office, May 6, 1942, ibid., frames 318869-70; and Kramarz, German foreign office, to German legation in Stockholm, June 12, 1942, ibid., microfilm 1801, frame E 034410.

<sup>36</sup> Kleist, European Tragedy, 139-41.

this assertion has not been verified, other Soviet actions at that time give it weight.

On November 6, 1942, shortly before the Red Army encircled the Germans at Stalingrad, Stalin declared in a public speech that "it is not our aim to destroy all organized military force in Germany, for every literate person will understand that this is not only impossible . . . but . . . also inexpedient from the point of view of the victor."<sup>37</sup> Stalin had already, on February 23, 1942, publicly refused "to identify Hitler's clique with the German people," suggesting "that Hitlers come and go, but the German people and the German state remain."<sup>38</sup> But now he was more specific than ever before in offering friendship to the German military, the caste from which had been recruited so many prominent Russophiles in the past. Following the Treaty of Rapallo in 1922, the German military had been the chief instigators of the deals behind the scenes that enabled them to bypass the restrictions of Versailles by secretly rearming in Russian territory and enabled the Soviet Union in return to obtain German technical assistance. In 1943 the German military were more likely than other Germans to perceive that Hitler's war was lost and to seek salvation in an understanding with Moscow in the spirit of Rapallo.

Shortly after Stalin's address of November 1942 the pattern of Moscow's daily propaganda directed at Germany changed. Until late 1942 the Soviet-sponsored "German People's Radio" had urged in crude Marxist terms that the oppressed German masses intensify the class struggle against their Fascist-capitalist masters.<sup>39</sup> By January 1943 a more sophisticated theme had been introduced. The broadcasts began to report a powerful peace movement among Germans regardless of class and political conviction.<sup>40</sup> On December 6, 1942, a clandestine conference of these Germans for peace was supposed to have met in the Rhineland, and early the following year its proceedings appeared in print in Moscow.<sup>41</sup> Included were speeches by anonymous delegates ranging from Social Democrats to "Christians," organized labor to entrepreneurs, Communists to disillusioned ex-Nazis. But except for sources of Soviet origin, there is no evidence that the meeting ever took place;<sup>42</sup> in that sense at least, the "peace movement" expressed more the Russian than the German desire for peace.

The Stockholm episode reported by Kleist, Stalin's overture to the putative military opponents of Hitler, and the promotion of the imaginary

<sup>37</sup> Stalin, "Twenty-Fifth Anniversary of the Great October Socialist Revolution," Nov. 6, 1942, in Andrew Rothstein, ed. and tr., Soviet Foreign Policy during the Patriotic War: Documents and Materials (London, 1944), 1: 49.

<sup>38</sup> Stalin, "Order of the Day of the People's Commissar for Defense," Feb. 23, 1942, in ibid., 37.

<sup>39</sup> For example, "Appell an das deutsche Volk, unterzeichnet von 158 deutschen Soldaten," in Sie kämpften für Deutschland (Berlin, 1959), 114-21; and similar appeals in Pravda, Jan. 30, Mar. 19, 1942.

<sup>40</sup> Report no. A-12777, Oct. 9, 1943, 45621 C, OSS.

<sup>41</sup> Beratung der nationalen Friedensbewegung in Deutschland (Moscow, 1943), 12-39.

<sup>42</sup> See Horst G. Duhnke, "German Communism in the Nazi Era" (Ph.D. dissertation, University of California, Berkeley, 1964), 585-86.

peace front were characteristic products of the peculiar atmosphere created by Stalingrad. They were suggestive of three possible courses that the change of military fortunes opened to the Russians. The first was accommodation with the current Nazi leadership. The second entailed partnership with a conservative German regime dominated by the army. And the third envisaged friendship with a Germany governed by a coalition reminiscent of a popular front but extended to include a wide sampling from the Center and the Right. In due course the Soviet Union was to explore all three of these options.

STALINGRAD INAUGURATED the most intriguing period of Soviet wartime diplomacy. The great battle brought a crushing defeat to Hitler but did not strengthen the solidarity of his enemies. In fact the Russians began almost immediately to put that solidarity to test. They harassed the British personnel attached to the arms convoys, interfering with their navigation and subjecting them to various indignities.<sup>43</sup> The official Soviet press was conspicuously deficient in acknowledging American lend-lease deliveries, a deficiency that prompted public criticism by the United States ambassador, William H. Standley, and an angry Russian reaction in return.<sup>44</sup> Most important, in both his public and his confidential statements Stalin indicated doubts about the suitability of the Allied coalition as a vehicle for his interests.

On February 23, 1943, Stalin's address on the Day of the Red Army did not even mention the Allies.<sup>45</sup> It presented the war as an exclusively Soviet-German affair. Stalin's words were not calculated to reassure Western military planners, many of whom feared that the Russians would stop fighting once they reached their prewar frontiers. Indeed the sharp curtailment of offensive operations by the Red Army on March 15, 1943, tended to confirm rather than to destroy that disturbing hypothesis.<sup>46</sup> The unprecedented calm that afterwards prevailed on the battlefields of the eastern front was perhaps justified by the great exertions of the recent months. But the beginning of the calm also coincided to a day with Stalin's "most emphatic warnings" in a reply to Churchill's notification of further obstacles to an early landing in Europe. The message from Moscow referred to "the great danger with which further delay in opening a second front in France

<sup>43</sup> S. W. Roskill, The War at Sea, 1939-45, 2 (London, 1950): 400-01; Woodward, British Foreign Policy, 2: 566.

<sup>44</sup> William H. Standley and Arthur A. Ageton, Admiral Ambassador to Russia (Chicago, 1955), 341-42.

<sup>45</sup> Stalin, "Order of the Day of the Red Army," Feb. 23, 1943, in Rothstein, Soviet Foreign Policy, 1: 53-57. See also Charles Bohlen, memorandum, Feb. 23, 1943, and Standley to Secretary of State, Feb. 24, 1943, FRUS, 1943, 3: The British Commonwealth, Eastern Europe, the Far East (Washington, 1963), 506-09.

<sup>46</sup> See Earl F. Ziemke, Stalingrad to Berlin: The German Defeat in the East (Washington, 1968), 118, 128-31.

is fraught."<sup>47</sup> In his efforts to accelerate the opening of the second front Stalin had issued similar warnings before. But this time the military lull, as well as the intensive peace propaganda on the "German People's Radio," gave his words a special air of urgency. The Soviet Union was demonstrating that its attitude toward Germany was not the same as that of the Western Allies. In particular it was scrupulously avoiding any association with the demand for unconditional surrender that Roosevelt and Churchill had enunciated during their conference at Casablanca in January 1943.<sup>48</sup>

So disconcerting was the behavior of the Russians that at the end of February the British government instructed its ambassador to Moscow, Sir Archibald Clark-Kerr, to inquire on the spot what Soviet intentions with Germany really were. The envoy contacted both Molotov and Stalin, but the "reply was not in very friendly terms."<sup>49</sup> The Soviet leaders evidently did not wish to prejudice their own course of action. For the moment there were still too many open questions that only time could sort out. But having had more firsthand experience with the power and determination of the enemy than the British and Americans, the Russians definitely entertained fewer illusions about the feasibility of a permanent suppression of Germany.<sup>50</sup> They preferred an indirect solution to their security problem by seeking a zone of dependent states as protection against any future attack. Poland, not Germany, was therefore the most urgent item on their agenda.

The dramatic deterioration of relations between Moscow and the Polish government in exile during the first four months of 1943 was more of Russian than of Polish making. The Soviet Union took the first decisive steps after reiterating its claims to the disputed borderland. On February 16 the Soviet deputy foreign commissar, Alexander E. Korneichuk, took a strong public stand against the Polish representatives in London because of their unwillingness to grant those claims.<sup>51</sup> And on March 1 the Russians launched the Union of Polish Patriots, an organization that could later serve as the nucleus of a puppet government.

These Soviet actions predictably caused distress in Washington and Lon-

<sup>47</sup> Churchill to Stalin, Mar. 11, 1943; Stalin to Churchill, Mar. 15, 1943, Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the U.S.S.R., ed. and tr., Stalin's Correspondence with Churchill and Attlee (New York, 1965), 106, 99-102.

<sup>48</sup> See Anne Armstrong, Unconditional Surrender (New Brunswick, 1961), 55-58; and John L. Chase, "Unconditional Surrender Reconsidered," Political Science Quarterly, 70 (1955): 258-79.

<sup>49</sup> Referred to in Woodward, British Foreign Policy, 2: 552.

<sup>50</sup> There is still no satisfactory study about the development of the wartime Soviet policy on Germany. In addition to Duhnke's dissertation on "German Communism in the Nazi Era," the most useful studies are Karl-Heinz Ruffmann, "Das Gewicht Deutschlands in der sowjetischen Aussenpolitik bis zum Ende des Zweiten Weltkrieges," Aus Politik und Zeitgeschichte (1970), no. 2, pp. 3-18; Alexander Fischer, "Antifaschismus und Demokratie: Zur Deutschlandplanung der UdSSR in den Jahren 1943-1945," in Potsdam und die deutsche Frage (Cologne, 1970), 6-33; and Ernst Deuerlein, "Das Problem der 'Behandlung Deutschlands': Umriss eines Schlagwortes des Epochenjahres 1945," Aus Politik und Zeitgeschichte (1965), no. 8, pp. 26-46.

<sup>51</sup> Alexander E. Korneichuk, "Vossoedenie ukrainskogo naroda v nedrach svoego gosudarstva" (Reunion of the Ukrainian People in the Bosom of Its State), Pravda, Feb. 20, 1943. See also TASS statement, Mar. 3, 1943, in Rothstein, Soviet Foreign Policy, 1: 264-65.

don, though not in Berlin. Moscow's insistence upon the frontier that Molotov had fixed with Ribbentrop in 1939 in fact brought back memories to the Germans of their former intimacy with Russia. But so great was the Nazis' intransigence, as well as their lack of subtlety, that they disregarded these friendly allusions. They rather chose to inflict upon the Soviet Union a major irritation. On April 13 they announced the discovery at Katyn of mass graves of murdered Polish officers and accused Moscow of responsibility for the crime. Whatever Goebbels's disposition in favor of an understanding with the Russians, he proved unable to resist this exceptional opportunity to embarrass them.

The genuine dismay and studied indignation displayed by the Soviet government, almost certainly responsible for the massacre, are hardly surprising.<sup>52</sup> More suggestive are the limits and the direction of Soviet anger. In an initial impulse to gloss over the German indiscretion the official Russian news bulletin hinted at the rather improbable explanation that the Nazis might have mistaken graves for archeological excavations.<sup>53</sup> Only when the Germans continued to insist upon their version of what had happened at Katyn did Moscow accuse them, without reservation, of the killings. At the same time, however, the Soviet government tried to divert attention from the merit of the German case in a fashion that could only give additional comfort to the Nazis.<sup>54</sup> After the Poles had proposed investigation by the International Red Cross, a proposal that Berlin promptly implemented, Moscow added insult to injury by accusing the Poles of collusion with Hitler. Worse still, the Soviet Union on April 26 broke off diplomatic relations with Poland, thus bringing the crisis to a climax.

Stalin's handling of the Katyn affair did not bar a rapprochement with Germany and may have actually served to facilitate it. There are indications of secret approaches at the very time the two belligerents were exchanging public insults. The information available is independent of that from Kleist, who did not happen to be in Stockholm in that particular period. A document in the United States Army Intelligence files mentions a communication in mid-April from Moscow to the French Communists, alerting them to be prepared for possible armistice talks.<sup>55</sup> And according to Swedish informants of the American Office of Strategic Services, such talks took place shortly thereafter.<sup>56</sup> In the latter part of April a Swede with connections at the Russian legation was said to have arranged a meeting of

<sup>52</sup> Janusz K. Zawodny summarizes the evidence in Death in the Forest (Notre Dame, 1962), 77-99.

<sup>53</sup> Bulletin of the Soviet radio, Apr. 15, 1943, in Zbrodnia katyńska w świetle dokumentów (The Katyn Crime in the Light of Documents) (London, 1948), 104.

<sup>54</sup> "Polskie sotrudniki Gitlera" (Polish Collaborators of Hitler), Pravda, Apr. 19, 1943.

<sup>55</sup> OSS report no. A-5094, May 11, 1943, USSR 3700, G-2. See also "The Problem of a Separate Peace between Germany and Russia," enclosed in A. J. Drexel Biddle to Secretary of State, June 26, 1943, 740.00119 EW/1530, DS.

<sup>56</sup> OSS report no. A-9469, Aug. 9, 1943, USSR 6900, G-2. See also Polish intelligence report no. 1297, early May 1943, ibid.

diplomats at a country estate about thirty kilometers outside of Stockholm. The participants included three unnamed German officials and, from the Soviet side, Mikhail Nikitin, Alexei Taradin, and Boris Yartsev. At one time the respective ministers, Thomsen and Kollontay, were said to have joined the discussions, which lasted for several days but did not lead to an agreement. The Germans were supposedly ready to make peace in return for a satellite Ukraine and for economic concessions in other parts of the Soviet Union, whereas the Russians insisted upon the frontier of 1941.<sup>57</sup>

This intelligence report deserves respect as the most specific contemporary piece of information about the peace feelers. Although there is no way of checking the accuracy of its details, it is quite probable that informal exchanges occurred at Soviet initiative. The pattern of Moscow's policy after Stalingrad supports rather than contradicts this speculation. It was in the spring of 1943, if ever during the war, that the time was ripe for Stalin to explore whether Berlin would be prepared to settle for what his Western allies had been so reluctant to grant him—the confirmation of the Soviet frontier of 1941. But the attitude of the Germans was altogether different from what it had been in August 1939, and they gave no sign of any willingness to restore the frontier they had violated in June 1941.

The Russian participants reportedly broke off the negotiations in Sweden at the beginning of May. In his Order of the Day on May 1 Stalin had publicly assumed a position on the subject of separate peace. He attributed the desire for a separate peace to the Nazis, who "judge their adversaries by their own standards of treachery."<sup>58</sup> He also affirmed that only unconditional surrender of the enemy could end the war, although he did not relate this demand to the Casablanca statement by Roosevelt and Churchill. Stalin's strong language suggests that he may have given up any hope of persuading the obstinate Nazis that a compromise was not only in his interest but, needless to say, also in theirs.

But there is another possible interpretation of what Stalin was saying. His statement could have been meant as an encouragement for the renewal of talks on terms more acceptable to him. The triangular nature of the Soviet-Western-German relationship was obvious, and he could alternately show a friendly face to one side or the other. His most convincing argument would have been to demonstrate to the Germans that he could obtain what he wanted from the West. From this point of view, the rather meek reaction of the British and Americans to the Katyń incident gave the impression that Stalin might be able to repair his relations with his coalition partners whenever he wanted. They had given proof of an overwhelming desire to maintain at least the appearances of Allied solidarity. And it was the appearance, though not the substance, of this solidarity that the Russians proceeded to promote during the next few weeks.

<sup>57</sup> These terms are not mentioned specifically in relation to the April talks, but they recur in intelligence reports from late 1942 to the fall of 1943. See, for example, London SI report, Nov. 3, 1942, USSR 3850, G-2; OSS report no. A-1820, Feb. 5, 1943, USSR 6900, G-2. See also Huene, Lisbon, to German foreign office, Apr. 6, 1943, AA, microfilm 39, frames 33667-68; OSS report no. A-13022-b, Oct. 13, 1943, USSR 6900, G-2; and Kleist, European Tragedy, 140.

<sup>58</sup> Stalin, "Order of the Day of the Supreme Commander-in-Chief," May 1, 1943, in Rothstein, Soviet Foreign Policy, 1: 58.

STALIN'S ADDRESS of May 1, 1943, heralded a conspicuous improvement in official Soviet behavior toward Great Britain and the United States, a difference the more striking since no particular change in the conduct of the Western Allies had prompted it. Alexander Werth, who lived in Moscow as correspondent for the Sunday Times, later recalled "the record warmth vis-à-vis Britain and America in May and June 1943."<sup>59</sup> The official press and radio prominently commemorated the anniversaries of the alliance agreements of 1942 and extolled the Allied operations in North Africa, a battlefield previously denigrated as insignificant.<sup>60</sup> Russian editorial writers ridiculed the idea of a separate peace and seconded Stalin's call for the unconditional surrender of Germany. And on May 23 the dissolution of the Comintern generated further good feelings in the West.

Yet no practical steps toward closer collaboration accompanied these friendly gestures. In particular, Stalin remained aloof to Roosevelt's urgent pleas for a tripartite summit conference that would clarify mutual war and peace goals.<sup>61</sup> It is difficult to judge to what extent Stalin's aloofness was the result of premeditation rather than of a genuine need to keep a close eye on the developments at the front—the explanation he gave to the president. As Western observers in Moscow noticed, the Russians were at that time especially nervous about the intentions of Germany.<sup>62</sup> On the one hand, the inexplicable delay of the anticipated and dreaded German summer offensive could mean that Berlin might be contemplating negotiations after all. On the other hand, however, as long as there was no positive evidence of such a readiness, Stalin had to assume that the offensive would eventually come and that he would need whatever relief his allies could give him. Whether to prompt them into action or simply to cheer up the Soviet people, the official press systematically encouraged the belief that now, after the victory in Africa, the second front was imminent.

It is against this background of inflated Russian hopes that the impact of yet another message about a delay of the cross-Channel invasion must be measured. On June 4 Roosevelt and Churchill notified their Soviet

<sup>59</sup> Alexander Werth, Russia at War, 1941-1945 (New York, 1964), 671-72.

<sup>60</sup> "Godovshchina sovetско-angliiskogo soiuзнogo dogovora" (The Anniversary of the Soviet-English Treaty of Alliance), Pravda, May 26, 1943; "Koalitsiia rozhdenaia voinoi i prizvannaia obespechit pobedonosnyi mir" (A Coalition Born of War and Destined to Secure a Victorious Peace), Voina i rabochii klass, June 15, 1943, pp. 3-9.

<sup>61</sup> Roosevelt to Stalin, May 5, 1943; Stalin to Roosevelt, May 26, 1943, Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the U.S.S.R., ed. and tr., Stalin's Correspondence with Roosevelt and Truman (New York, 1965), 63-64, 66.

<sup>62</sup> Werth, Russia at War, 674-76.

colleague that the operation could not take place before May 1944.<sup>63</sup> Stalin's fury at this new apparent procrastination at a time so critical for him is easy to imagine and justify. But as during the Katyn crisis, his reaction was reasoned rather than impulsive. He waited for a whole week, undoubtedly weighing alternative responses and considering their probable effect. In the end he expressed his intense displeasure not only in a secret message but also through an important public gesture. He recalled almost simultaneously the reputedly pro-Western ambassadors Ivan M. Maisky and Maxim Litvinov from their respective posts in London and Washington.

By mid-June, then, the brief period of Moscow's official amity with the West was over. There is no doubt that the Roosevelt-Churchill action—or rather inaction—about the second front had preconditioned the new crisis, but it was Stalin's public behavior that actually created it. He could hardly have failed to take into account the delight that evidence of Allied discord would inevitably produce in Berlin, and he may have aimed at that very effect. In any case, he again set the stage for a rapprochement with Germany, and there are indications of Russian attempts to promote it in the second half of June. On June 16 the Swedish newspaper Nya Dagligt Allehanda announced in a special edition that high Soviet and German officials had been negotiating near Stockholm.<sup>64</sup> An American intelligence report identified them as Mikhail Nikitin of the Russian legation and Paul Schmidt of the press and information section of the German foreign office, and the seaside resort of Saltsjöbaden was cited as their meeting place.<sup>65</sup> The British government, too, received information from the Swedish capital that Schmidt had met with two members of the Soviet legation in a private house and that Yartsev played the key role in the contact.<sup>66</sup> According to Kleist's somewhat different account, A. M. Alexandrov, formerly counselor at the Soviet Embassy in Berlin and head of the foreign commissariat's European division, arrived in Stockholm en route to London and tried to contact him through Clauss.<sup>67</sup> The German minister, Thomsen, also heard that the Russian diplomat was in town and that he wanted "to meet with a gentleman from the German foreign service with whom he was acquainted."<sup>68</sup>

<sup>63</sup> Roosevelt to Stalin, received June 4, 1943; Stalin to Roosevelt, June 11, 1943, Stalin's Correspondence with Roosevelt and Truman, 67–71.

<sup>64</sup> Reported in New York Times, June 17, 1943. A slightly different version appeared in the Geneva newspaper La Suisse on Oct. 2, 1943.

<sup>65</sup> OSS report no. A-9647, Aug. 9, 1943, USSR 6900, G-2; Herschel Johnson, Stockholm, to Secretary of State, June 17, 1943, ibid.

<sup>66</sup> George Wiskeman to Christopher Warner, British Foreign Office, Aug. 11, 23, 1943, N 4898/66/38, FO 371/36956.

<sup>67</sup> Kleist, European Tragedy, 144–50.

<sup>68</sup> Thomsen, Stockholm, to German foreign office, June 21, 1943, AA, microfilm 191, frames 144408–09. Basil H. Liddell-Hart, the noted British military historian who had interrogated captured German officers, claimed in his posthumously published book that negotiators, including even Ribbentrop and Molotov, had met behind the German lines near Kirovograd in June 1943. History of the Second World War (New York, 1970), 488. Because of the complete lack of supporting evidence, however, this allegation deserves little credence.

After the war this incident received a retrospective publicity in the American press. In July 1947 an article in the New York magazine Liberty added further sensational details, which the authors claimed they had acquired during "clandestine conferences with Europeans whose lives depend on anonymity."<sup>69</sup> It is interesting that the Soviet government considered this rather shabby piece of writing worthy of a prompt response. No one less authoritative than Kollontay herself was commissioned to refute the allegations. In a column printed in Izvestiia she concentrated upon a single flaw in the Liberty article: Alexandrov could not possibly have been in Stockholm at the critical time because he was serving with the Soviet legation in Australia.<sup>70</sup> But the Russian sensitivity about the subject enhances rather than reduces the possibility that Alexandrov's colleagues from the foreign commissariat had indeed tried to extend feelers in Stockholm, even though an early indiscretion apparently prevented actual contacts. Such a speculation would also explain why both the Soviet and the German governments had denied the original Swedish newspaper story so vehemently in press communiqués issued on the same day, June 18, 1943.<sup>71</sup>

But even after the embarrassment in June Moscow did not abstain from publicizing ideas suggestive of a preference for compromise over struggle to the bitter end. On June 22, 1943, the official information agency Sovinformburo commented ambiguously that "without a second front victory over Germany is impossible."<sup>72</sup> On July 1 an authoritative article in the ideological journal Voina i rabochii klass castigated Western projects for the postwar punishment of the Germans.<sup>73</sup> Its author, identified as N. Malinin, derided the theory about the collective guilt of the German people and expressed misgivings about subjecting them to reparations or even to a military occupation. Of all Soviet wartime statements this article went the farthest in hinting that the Germans might be allowed to keep some of their conquests. Questioning not only Polish but also Czechoslovak aspirations for territories that were currently part of the Reich, the author implied that even the return of the Sudetenland to Czechoslovakia was not imperative. Exactly to whom Moscow intended to address these extraordinary allurements is not altogether clear. Stalin may still have hoped that the Nazis could be persuaded to negotiate, but if he did, the advent of the German offensive on July 5 all but destroyed any such hopes. It is more likely that the article foreshadowed a change of policy that had been under preparation ever since the demise of the Comintern and for which

<sup>69</sup> Paul Schwarz and Guy Richards, "A Secret Russian Mission That Almost Changed History," Liberty, July 5, 1947, p. 26. See also similar articles by Donald B. Sanders [pseud.], "Stalin Plotted a Separate Peace," American Mercury, Nov. 1947, pp. 519-27; and Robert M. W. Kempner, "Stalin's 'Separate Peace' in 1943," United Nations World, 4 (1950): no. 3, pp. 7-9.

<sup>70</sup> Izvestiia, July 29, 1947.

<sup>71</sup> TASS statement, June 18, 1943, in Rothstein, Soviet Foreign Policy, 1: 269; New York Times, June 18, 1943.

<sup>72</sup> "Dva goda Otechestvennoi voiny Sovetskogo soiuza" (Two Years of the Patriotic War of the Soviet Union), Pravda, June 22, 1943.

<sup>73</sup> N. Malinin, "O tseliakh voiny" (Concerning the War Aims), Voina i rabochii klass, July 1, 1943, pp. 11-15.

the enemy attack provided the appropriate moment.<sup>74</sup> The formation of the Free Germany Committee on July 12 marked the beginning of the new Soviet strategy.<sup>75</sup>

Retrospective interpretations have tended to obscure the original meaning of this remarkable enterprise. Both friendly and hostile commentators have been inclined to regard the formation of the Free Germany Committee as the first step on the path that ended with the establishment of the German Communist satellite state in 1949.<sup>76</sup> But evidence that the Russians anticipated this outcome in 1943 is yet to be presented. Most contemporaries understood Russian sponsorship of the committee as a bid for partnership with German conservatives, and the Soviet Union did nothing to discourage this interpretation.<sup>77</sup> Although Communist émigrés predictably dominated the committee, its striking feature was the participation of the more moderate patriotic members who had been recruited from among the prisoners of war. Their radio appeals, urging the German army to end the war by overthrowing Hitler and withdrawing to the present frontier of the Reich, implied that this relatively modest concession would make possible a fair peace. Whether or not the Russians would have honored this implicit promise is impossible to judge. Yet by having given their blessing to the Free Germany movement they created an obstacle to a rapprochement with Hitler; they invited an understanding instead with his potential successors.

THE SOVIET VICTORY in the battle of Kursk, which ended on July 16, represents in many ways a watershed more important than Stalingrad in the history of the war. The first summertime triumph of Russian arms, it opened the perspective of their continuous and irreversible, though still far from easy, advance to the west. The Germans saw the handwriting on the wall, and doubts about the wisdom of fighting on extended this time to the highest places. Various Nazi officials, acting on their own, tried to find out about Moscow's possible terms for peace. On August 2-5, 1943, Ribbentrop's assistant Rudolf Likus went to Stockholm in order to gather information.<sup>78</sup> Two weeks later the German foreign minister sum-

<sup>74</sup> Communist Party of Germany, Directive of May 27, 1943, referred to in Bruno Löwel, "Die Gründung des NKFD im Lichte der Entwicklung der Strategie und Taktik der KPD," Beiträge zur Geschichte der deutschen Arbeiterbewegung, 5 (1963): 618-19.

<sup>75</sup> "Manifest des Nationalkomitees 'Freies Deutschland' an die Wehrmacht und an das deutsche Volk," July 12-13, 1943, in Sie kämpften für Deutschland, 146-51. The best history of the committee is Bodo Scheurig, Free Germany (Middletown, Conn., 1970).

<sup>76</sup> Representative samples of the opposing views are Gerhard Rossmann, "Die Entwicklung der Vorstellungen der KPD über den neuen Staat," Beiträge zur Geschichte der deutschen Arbeiterbewegung, 9 (1969): special no., pp. 145-62; and Peter Strassner, Verräter: Das Nationalkomitee "Freies Deutschland"—Keimzelle der sogenannten DDR (Munich, 1960).

<sup>77</sup> One of the best contemporary assessments is Arnold Wolfers, "Soviet Policy toward Germany," R & A Branch, 66834 R, OSS. For a different view, see the article by German émigré Egon Kötting [Eugen Westphal], "Nationalbolsjevism—Tysklands Framtid?" (National Bolshevism as Germany's Future?), Svensk Tidskrift, 30 (1943): 496-505.

<sup>78</sup> Rudolf Likus, note, Aug. 9, 1943, records of the German foreign office, AA, microfilm 162, frames 130779-80. See also Walter Schellenberg, The Labyrinth (New York, 1956), 370.

moned Kleist and instructed him to restore contact with Clauss.<sup>79</sup> In September Goebbels told Hitler that "we must come to an arrangement with one side or the other," and the Führer replied that "he would prefer negotiations with Stalin," although Hitler did not "believe they would be successful."<sup>80</sup>

All these half-hearted peace stirrings on the Nazi side ended in the planning stage. They sufficed, however, to cause grave concern among the men around Karl Goerdeler who hoped to extricate Germany from the war by getting rid of Hitler. One of the conspirators, Ulrich von Hassell, noted in his diary on August 15, 1943:

If Hitler comes to terms with Stalin, the resultant disaster cannot be imagined. It would be different with a decent, self-respecting Germany. This Germany would have to exploit all opportunities. There is only one expedient left—to make either Russia or the Anglo-Americans understand their interest in a sound Germany.<sup>81</sup>

Hassell, like most of his friends, would have preferred settlement with the Western powers if only they would modify their stiff demand for unconditional surrender. But at least a few members of the conspiracy favored approaches to the Soviet Union, perhaps because they hoped to find it more responsive or because they considered communism the wave of the future. In the late summer of 1943 Friedrich von der Schulenburg, the former ambassador to Russia, contemplated a secret mission to Moscow by breaking through the front lines.<sup>82</sup> There is also evidence, however inconclusive, that communist sympathies may have motivated the would-be assassin of Hitler, Claus von Stauffenberg.<sup>83</sup>

Did the Russians know about the plot against Hitler and attune their policies to the possibility of its success? From what is known about their intelligence network, it seems that until 1942 they had been informed quite accurately about what was happening in Germany. Their main source of information had been the famous espionage organization known as the Red Orchestra.<sup>84</sup> Although the standard East German book about the Red Orchestra claims that its members knew of the activities of Goerdeler's followers, it offers no specific evidence in support of this claim.<sup>85</sup> In

<sup>79</sup> Kleist, European Tragedy, 154–56.

<sup>80</sup> Goebbels, diary entry for Sept. 23, 1943, The Goebbels Diaries, tr. L. P. Lochner (Garden City, 1948), 477.

<sup>81</sup> Hassell, diary entry for Aug. 15, 1943, The Von Hassell Diaries, tr. H. Gibson (Garden City, 1947), 315.

<sup>82</sup> Ernst Kaltenbrunner to Martin Bormann, Aug. 28, 1944, in Kaltenbrunner, Spiegelbild einer Verschwörung (Stuttgart, 1961), 308–09. See also Hassell, diary entry for Dec. 5, 1943, Von Hassell Diaries, 327.

<sup>83</sup> See Hans Bernd Gisevius, To the Bitter End (Boston, 1947), 486; and Joachim Kramarz, Claus Graf Stauffenberg (Frankfurt, 1965), 175–77, 192–93. See also Hans Dress, "Fortschrittliche und reaktionäre Tendenzen in den Reformplänen des Kreisauer Kreises," in Kommission der Historiker der DDR und UdSSR, ed., Der deutsche Imperialismus und der zweite Weltkrieg (Berlin, 1961), 4: 587–606.

<sup>84</sup> The best book on the subject is Heinz Höhne, Codeword DIREKTOR: The Story of the Red Orchestra (New York, 1972).

<sup>85</sup> Karl-Heinz Biernat and Luise Kraushaar, Die Schulze-Boysen/Harnack-Organisation im antifaschistischen Kampf (Berlin, 1970), 28.

any case the Gestapo had destroyed that principal Soviet source of information by the fall of 1942.<sup>86</sup> In the trial in April 1944 of William Knöchel, a high-ranking German Communist whom Moscow had sent to Germany in January 1942 in order to organize the party underground, the Nazi court noted that before Knöchel's capture later in 1942 he had sent abroad important information about opposition currents in the country.<sup>87</sup> But this information must have been rather unsubstantial since the knowledge of it did not enable the Gestapo to track down the conspiracy.

As for 1943, Russian and East German literature, which normally plays up rather than down all types of clandestine pro-Soviet activities, has recorded only one instance of a line of communication between Berlin and Moscow in existence during that year. The exchanges began in spring, when Soviet confidants in Stockholm established contact, through a Swedish intermediary, with Anton Saefkow, a leading Communist organizer in Berlin. Saefkow is known to have met two associates of Goerdeler in June 1944, and Saefkow was aware of the plot against Hitler's life possibly as early as the end of 1943.<sup>88</sup> Saefkow may have notified the Russians of the plot, although available sources give the impression that little of substance passed through this Swedish channel.<sup>89</sup> Surviving participants in the conspiracy have all denied that any links with Moscow ever existed.<sup>90</sup> It is therefore unlikely that the Soviet anticipation of a revolt in Germany was anything but an intelligent guess, made without the benefit of knowing what was actually under way.

Just how great the Russians thought were the chances of a successful coup against Hitler is difficult to estimate. But its likelihood definitely increased after the Italians had set an example by deposing Mussolini on July 25, 1943. Since the change of government in Italy was accomplished by the ruling clique rather than by the masses, Moscow had a further reason to focus upon fomenting discontent among Germany's upper classes. Shortly after the Italian events the Soviet Union prepared to supplement the Free Germany Committee, on which Walter Ulbricht and his companions loomed perhaps too large, with the more respectable and exclusive League of German Officers. In the meantime the Russian victory at Kursk had convinced so many captured Germans that the war was lost that there was no shortage of those willing to join in this new enterprise.

Wolfgang Leonhard, who worked during the war in the Moscow offices

<sup>86</sup> David J. Dallin, Soviet Espionage (New Haven, 1955), 264-65.

<sup>87</sup> Arnold Sywottek, Deutsche Volksdemokratie: Studien zur politischen Konzeption der KPD 1935-1946 (Düsseldorf, 1971), 118, 245.

<sup>88</sup> Gerhard Rossmann, Der Kampf der KPD um die Einheit aller Hitlergegner (Berlin, 1963), 45-47, 195-96, 222, 255; Gertrud Glondajewski and Gerhard Rossmann, "Ein bedeutendes politisches Dokument des illegalen antifaschistischen Kampfes der Kommunistischen Partei Deutschlands," Beiträge zur Geschichte der deutschen Arbeiterbewegung, 8 (1966): 646-47; Allen W. Dulles, Germany's Underground (New York, 1947), 173-74.

<sup>89</sup> See Rossmann, Der Kampf der KPD, 45-47; and Otto Winzer, Zwölf Jahre Kampf gegen Faschismus und Krieg (Düsseldorf, 1955), 231.

<sup>90</sup> See Bodo Scheurig, ed., Verrat hinter Stacheldraht? (Munich, 1965), 232-35.

of the journal Freies Deutschland, later reported that the inauguration of the League of German Officers, set for September 1, had been unexpectedly postponed without a substitute date.<sup>91</sup> A few days later the journal was about to publish a startling editorial entitled "Armistice—the Demand of the Day." According to Leonhard this editorial, which omitted the customary anti-Nazi verbiage, was addressed to the men currently in power in Berlin rather than to their prospective challengers. It was withheld from publication only at the last moment, and the delayed proclamation of the league followed on September 11.<sup>92</sup>

Leonhard's assertion seems to corroborate Kleist's testimony that on September 8 the Russians again attempted to establish contacts in Sweden through Clauss.<sup>93</sup> The intermediary alerted Kleist that Vladimir Dekanozov, the former Soviet ambassador to Berlin and another of Beria's protégés, was going to visit Stockholm and was eager to meet a German negotiator. According to Clauss, Moscow merely awaited a signal from Berlin and was deeply disappointed when none came.

The coincidence of Leonhard's and Kleist's allegations is well enough known and has led to the belief that Stalin may have made a major bid for peace in September rather than in April or June 1943.<sup>94</sup> Such a conclusion is possible but not probable; for aside from the evidence previously presented of Nazi unresponsiveness, Kursk had bolstered the self-confidence of the Russians sufficiently to reduce for them the value of any deal with Hitler. The hypothesis also depends much too heavily on the veracity of the disreputable Clauss, who very likely misled both the German and the Soviet diplomats about the actual extent of his intimacy with each of them.

A more probable explanation of what happened during those first few days of September is that the presence of Ribbentrop's emissary in Stockholm, along with Clauss's grandiloquence, almost convinced the Russians that Berlin had unexpectedly changed its mind about negotiating. Then the article in Freies Deutschland would have been a tentative sign of their interest. But the hoax was exposed just in time to spare the Russians the same embarrassment they had experienced in June, when the Swedish newspaper had leaked similar shady dealings. If this was the case, then the Soviet government, though no longer itself trying to extend peace feelers to the present German regime, was in early September 1943 still willing to respond to initiatives by others.

Soon, however, even that willingness disappeared, and the experience with Clauss may have been the last blow. On September 13 Molotov re-

<sup>91</sup> Wolfgang Leonhard, Child of the Revolution (Chicago, 1958), 318–20.

<sup>92</sup> Scheurig, Free Germany, 65. See also Heinrich von Einsiedel, I Joined the Russians (New Haven, 1953), 98–106.

<sup>93</sup> Kleist, European Tragedy, 164–71.

<sup>94</sup> See, for example, Minuth, "Sowjetisch-deutsche Friedenskontakte," 38–45; and Lionel Kochan, The Struggle for Germany (New York, 1967), 96.

jected a mediation offer by the Japanese ambassador, Naotake Sato, intimating to him that whatever chances there had been of an understanding between Germany and Russia no longer existed. Molotov is quoted as having said: "Under different circumstances, the Soviet government would have considered it its duty to accept the Japanese offer of mediation."<sup>95</sup>

The rules of the diplomatic triangle now required that Stalin should attempt to improve his relations with the British and the Americans. And indeed, from September onwards, he acted to instill more life into the alliance—not only in words but also in deeds. The decisive date was September 8, when, after months of dilatory excuses, he finally consented to a conference with Roosevelt and Churchill and accepted the date they had proposed.<sup>96</sup> A week later Stalin proved that he cared more about winning their confidence than about keeping open any secret channels to the enemy: Andrei Gromyko, chargé d'affaires in Washington, duly reported the Japanese mediation offer to the secretary of state, Cordell Hull.<sup>97</sup> Equally significant, Konstantin Vinogradov of the Soviet legation in Stockholm revealed to an American colleague that "German agents and intermediaries" had recently approached Russian diplomats there—a disclosure in striking contrast to his consistent denials of such approaches in the past.<sup>98</sup>

By the fall of 1943 evidence had mounted that a peace with Hitler was impossible and his replacement by more reasonable men improbable. The Russians nevertheless abstained from endorsing the formula for unconditional surrender until after the Normandy landings in June 1944.<sup>99</sup> As long as the second front was in abeyance they avoided doing anything that would prejudice a separate arrangement with an anti-Nazi regime in case Hitler's enemies would come to power after all. But after September 1943 the Soviet Union no longer went so far as actively to prepare for such an arrangement.

THE OBVIOUS QUESTION to be asked is whether Stalin did not himself try to create a false impression of his readiness to conclude a separate peace merely to make his allies more amenable to his demands. After the war many Western authors replied in the affirmative. General Albert C. Wedemeyer, for example, concluded that the Soviet dictator "was simply holding the idea over our heads and blackmailing us to give him more aid."<sup>100</sup>

<sup>95</sup> Quoted in Toshikazu Kase, Journey to the Missouri (New Haven, 1950), 162–63.

<sup>96</sup> Stalin to Roosevelt, Sept. 8, 1943, Stalin's Correspondence with Roosevelt and Truman, 90–91.

<sup>97</sup> Gromyko to Hull, Sept. 14, delivered Sept. 16, 1943, FRUS, 1943, 3: 696–97.

<sup>98</sup> Johnson, Stockholm, to Secretary of State, Sept. 29, 1943, ibid., 698–99.

<sup>99</sup> After the Russian delegates had used delaying tactics in the European Advisory Commission for six months, they approved its draft instrument for German surrender on July 25, 1944. FRUS, 1944, 1: General (Washington, 1966), 252–54. The chief Soviet representative, Fedor Gusev, announced the confirmation of the document by his government on August 21, 1944. John G. Winant to Secretary of State, Aug. 21, 1944, ibid., 276.

<sup>100</sup> Albert C. Wedemeyer, Wedemeyer Reports! (New York, 1958), 92.

To attribute to the Russians a genuine desire for compromise with anyone would not have been compatible with the belief in their insatiable hunger for power, a belief prevalent during the cold war.

But Stalin's aptitude at deception notwithstanding, his alleged scheme to frighten his coalition partners cannot be reconciled with the evidence. Peace rumors emanated from so many different sources, independent of one another, that they could not have possibly been disseminated from one center.<sup>101</sup> In addition Stalin had strong enough reasons to refrain from mystification: planting false reports about secret dealings with the enemy could only increase the chances that the Western capitalists and their German colleagues might turn the tables on him. Accordingly the Russians coped with the many circulating rumors in a fashion calculated to discourage speculation rather than to encourage it. They ignored those rumors that were too vague or too fantastic to be taken seriously and reacted only to the ones with substance: the three abortive feelers in Stockholm and the Japanese mediation attempts were the incidents that prompted official refutations.<sup>102</sup> Thus the Soviet government tried to divert attention from what had happened rather than attract it to what had not. Those contemporaries who thought that rumors were being deliberately planted suspected a German scheme much more often than a Russian one.<sup>103</sup> But the Nazis, though no doubt eager to sow mistrust among their adversaries, were also apprehensive that such a maneuver might backfire against their own national morale. They therefore frequently denied that any peace efforts were under way, using for that purpose the foreign service of the German radio rather than the domestic news media.<sup>104</sup>

Rumors of peace feelers proliferated throughout the summer and fall of 1943 despite Russian and German efforts to suppress them. They were especially rife in Latin America, where amateurs and imposters, within and without the diplomatic corps, disseminated the most sensational stories. On September 28, 1943, for example, the newspapers in Arequipa, Peru's second largest city, announced that an armistice between Germany and Russia had just been signed.<sup>105</sup> In Switzerland there was much talk about mediation by the Vatican.<sup>106</sup> And various Eastern European sources re-

<sup>101</sup> See memorandum by Harvey H. Smith, Chief of G-2 Central European Branch, Sept. 20, 1943, Germany 6900, G-2.

<sup>102</sup> See nn. 58, 71, 97, 98; and TASS statement, July 17, 1943, in Rothstein, Soviet Foreign Policy, 1: 269. A Japanese mediation attempt in June 1943 is mentioned in Ivan Krylov [pseud.], Soviet Staff Officer (London, 1951), 241-42.

<sup>103</sup> Navy intelligence report, no. 660-43, Sept. 26, 1943, USSR 6900, G-2; information series no. 103A, Nov. 15, 1943, Germany 6900, ibid.

<sup>104</sup> Broadcasting monitoring report, Aug. 21, 1943, USSR 6900, G-2; press survey, "More Rumors on a Russo-German Peace," Oct. 8, 1943, ibid.; broadcast summary, Oct. 15, 1943, Germany 6900, ibid.

<sup>105</sup> Navy intelligence report, Oct. 15, 1943, Germany 6900, G-2. At the end of September a rumor circulated in Rome that a Soviet-German armistice would be signed on October 15. British Embassy, Bern, to British Foreign Office, Oct. 1, 1943, C 11735/55/18, FO 371/34438.

<sup>106</sup> Leland Harrison, Bern, to Secretary of State, Oct. 11, 1943, FRUS, 1943, 3: 708-09; press survey, Nov. 1943, USSR 6900, G-2. See also Bergen, Vatican, to German foreign office, May 4, 1943, AA, microfilm 39, frame 33750.

ported alleged discussions between German and Russian agents in Sofia.<sup>107</sup> No evidence has been found to substantiate any of these reports.

Paradoxically the peace scare reached its climax when the time for a Stalin-Hitler rapprochement had already passed. In August 1943, two months after the second Stockholm episode, Robert E. Sherwood reported that the atmosphere was "alarmingly reminiscent of that which preceded the Molotov-Ribbentrop pact of August 1939."<sup>108</sup> Although the Foreign Office in London received fewer reports about peace feelers in 1943 than they had in 1942, and although they discounted them as unfounded,<sup>109</sup> government officials in Washington were worried. They anxiously discussed memorandums such as "The Proper Course of Action for the United States in the Event Russia and Germany Effect a Compromise Peace."<sup>110</sup> In October Roosevelt's chief adviser, Harry Hopkins, publicly admitted that possibility and proceeded to reassure the American people. He wrote in the American Magazine: "Russia, the keystone of the war, is still fighting grimly. If we lose her, I do not believe for a moment that we will lose the war, but I would change my prediction about the time of victory."<sup>111</sup>

The presupposition that the Soviet Union had been so weakened by the war that it might seek peace because of the high price of victory was somewhat incongruously blended with the belief that her "postwar position in Europe will be a dominant one" and that "every effort must be made to obtain her friendship."<sup>112</sup> The two contradictory assumptions helped to shape the Western conviction about the necessity of concessions with respect to a postwar Russian sphere of influence in Europe. Such was the situation on the eve of the critical conferences scheduled to meet in late 1943: the conference at Moscow of foreign ministers in October and the meeting at Teheran of the Big Three a month later.

Their recent military successes notwithstanding, the Russians approached the Moscow conference from a position of weakness rather than of strength. They placed on the agenda only one item, and this item was suggestive of their uppermost priority: how to hasten the end of the war—by launching the Second Front and by other means.<sup>113</sup> Regarding political questions, they had originally wanted the meeting to be "only of

<sup>107</sup> New York Times, Oct. 23, 1943; Laukhuff memorandum on conversation at the State Department with Father Odo, Oct. 19, 1943, 740.00119 EW/1934 DS; Wellington, memorandum on conversation at the State Department with Father Odo, Nov. 18, 1943, 740.0011 EW/32140, DS; report no. A-15077, Nov. 16, 1943, OSS.

<sup>108</sup> Robert E. Sherwood, Roosevelt and Hopkins (New York, 1948), 734.

<sup>109</sup> Woodward, British Foreign Policy, 2: 560.

<sup>110</sup> Maurice Matloff, Strategic Planning for Coalition Warfare, 1943-1944 (Washington, 1959), 286-87.

<sup>111</sup> Harry Hopkins, "We Can Win in 1945," American Magazine, Oct. 1943, p. 100.

<sup>112</sup> "Russia's Position," Aug. 2, 1943, FRUS: The Conferences at Washington and Quebec, 1943 (Washington, 1970), 625.

<sup>113</sup> "The Consideration of Measures to Shorten the Duration of the War against Hitlerite Germany and Her Allies in Europe," Oct. 19, 1943, FRUS, 1943, 1: General (Washington, 1963), 771-72.

preparatory character."<sup>114</sup> But the Soviet delegation did not object to discussing such questions once they were introduced by the British and American representatives. The record of the proceedings shows that the Western delegates were at times more accommodating than the Russian delegates had apparently expected. For example, Molotov was surprised by Eden when he withdrew without debate his previous objections to the planned Soviet-Czechoslovak treaty, which would set a precedent for a client relationship between Moscow and the small nations of East Central Europe.<sup>115</sup> Similarly Secretary of State Hull tried to meet the Russian concern for security with such radical proposals about the suppression of Germany that the foreign commissar was caught unprepared.<sup>116</sup> The Western powers tried to convince Stalin that their friendship promised greater advantages than anything Berlin possibly had to offer. The Russian leader seemed convinced when, on the last day of the conference he walked up to Hull to deny "in the most sarcastic terms . . . reports . . . that the Soviet Union and Germany might agree on peace terms."<sup>117</sup> And before the heads of state met at Teheran four weeks later Stalin made another important gesture to reassure his allies.

On November 12 Molotov handed to the United States ambassador, W. Averell Harriman, a memorandum that, along with the earlier hint by Vinogradov, is the only available document of Soviet origin that directly concerns the happenings in Stockholm.<sup>118</sup> The foreign commissar stated that German agents had recently attempted to establish contact but had been immediately turned away. He mentioned Clauss and Kleist by name—an authoritative confirmation of their roles as intermediaries that bestows a measure of authenticity on Kleist's memoirs. The only discrepancy is in dates: Kleist, as well as Vinogradov, referred to early September, Molotov to mid-October. The different dating may have been necessitated by Kollontay's statement for Daily Express on October 3, in which she said, "There have never been any such feelers put by the Germans to my Legation."<sup>119</sup> Too long an interval between the event and its disclosure could also have inspired undesirable queries about the motives for the delay.

As was obviously intended, the message promoted Western trust in the Soviet ally. Though belated and originally unexpected, this was in the last analysis Moscow's most important gain from its peace overtures earlier that year. Illustrative of the extent of the trust was the consent of the United States delegation at Teheran to being housed on the premises of the Soviet Embassy, which was undoubtedly well equipped with listening

<sup>114</sup> Arkadi Sobolev to Eden, Sept. 29, 1943, annex C to memorandum no. 434, CAB 66/41.

<sup>115</sup> Summary of proceedings, session of Oct. 24, 1943, FRUS, 1943, 1: 624-27.

<sup>116</sup> Minutes of meeting, Oct. 25, 1943, ibid., 632; see also 720-23.

<sup>117</sup> Hull, memorandum, Oct. 30, 1943, ibid., 687.

<sup>118</sup> Molotov to Harriman, Nov. 12, 1943, ibid., 502-03.

<sup>119</sup> "Interview between Mr. Gordon Young and Mme Kollontay," Press Reading Bureau, Stockholm, to Political Intelligence Department, London, Oct. 7, 1943, N 5967/499/38, FO 371/36992.

devices.<sup>120</sup> Since there is no evidence that the guests took this special feature of their quarters into account, Stalin was thus given the unique opportunity to eavesdrop on their most intimate conversations.

At the Teheran conference Stalin appeared to be finally satisfied with his allies after they had demonstrated a willingness to meet him more than half way. They gave him a clear impression—clearer, again, than he had probably anticipated—that they would not obstruct his freedom of action in Eastern Europe. Concerning the all-important question of Poland, Roosevelt himself sought out the dictator to offer assurance that “personally he agreed with the views of Marshal Stalin” although Roosevelt “could not participate in any decision” because of concern for the Polish-American vote.<sup>121</sup>

The American and British statesmen hoped to win Russia’s cooperation by satisfying what they perceived as its reasonable aspirations. But in the absence of clear understandings about what exactly was reasonable, their efforts tended to stimulate Russian aspirations rather than to restrain them. If earlier in 1943 the Soviet Union had signaled to the Germans that it would have been contented with return to the status quo as it had obtained in 1941, there were no longer any such indications at Teheran. On the contrary, Stalin hinted that his goals would expand with expanding opportunities: “There is no need to speak at the present time about any Soviet desires, but when the time comes we will speak.”<sup>122</sup> At least one Western participant in the conference, Charles Bohlen, was convinced that those aspirations now extended even beyond the historic area of Russian interest. In what remains one of the best contemporary estimates of Stalin’s intent, Bohlen concluded that the Soviet Union wanted to become “the only important military and political force on the continent of Europe” by reducing the rest of it “to military and political impotence.”<sup>123</sup>

The roots of the developments that later culminated in the cold war should be sought in 1943 rather than in any other period in the history of the Great Alliance. With the cold war in mind, the significance of the separate peace prospects during that critical year is twofold. First, Stalin’s inability to obtain a relatively modest territorial settlement from Germany led him to augment his goals while he continued fighting the war. Second, the British and Americans, disturbed about his leanings toward a negotiated peace, became inclined to tolerate more ambitious Soviet goals. Their attitude encouraged Stalin to test the limits of their tolerance later on. And it was his overestimation of those limits that eventually made conflict inevitable.

<sup>120</sup> The President’s Log, FRUS: The Conferences at Cairo and Teheran, 1943 (Washington, 1961), 461–64.

<sup>121</sup> Minutes of Roosevelt-Stalin meeting, Dec. 1, 1943, ibid., 594.

<sup>122</sup> Minutes of meeting, Nov. 29, 1943, ibid., 555.

<sup>123</sup> Bohlen, memorandum, Dec. 15, 1943, ibid., 846.

---

A Soviet Historian Evaluates Stalin's Role in History

---

A Review Article by ROBERT M. SLUSSER

ROY A. MEDVEDEV. K sudu istorii (genezis i posledstviia Stalinizma). Moscow: Samizdat. 1968. Pp. 1399. Photographically reproduced. New York: Alfred A. Knopf. 1972. $20.00.

———. Let History Judge: The Origins and Consequences of Stalinism. Translated by COLLEEN TAYLOR. Edited by DAVID JORAVSKY and GEORGES HAUPF. New York: Alfred A. Knopf. 1971. Pp. xxxiv, 566, xviii. $12.50.

NIKITA KHRUSHCHEV earned his place in history twice: first, by his actions and policies as one of the most powerful Soviet political leaders over a period of many years; second, by the shock and stimulus he administered to Soviet historians with his attack on Stalin, launched in the secret speech at the Twentieth Congress of the Communist party of the Soviet Union (CPSU) in 1956 and deepened five years later at the party's Twenty-second Congress.

The complex response of Soviet historians and CPSU ideologists to Khrushchev's wide-ranging assault on Stalin's historical reputation has been analyzed by Nancy W. Heer in a work that takes the story down to mid-1967.<sup>1</sup> As of that date the great majority of Soviet historians held back from attempting a full-scale analysis of Stalin's career and crimes. When, in February 1966, twenty-five leading Soviet intellectuals, scientists, and artists addressed a letter to Leonid Brezhnev, first secretary of the CPSU, warning the party against rehabilitating Stalin at its then-imminent Twenty-third Congress, only two historians' names were included in the list of signatories.<sup>2</sup> Noting the absence of revisionist historians' names

<sup>1</sup> Nancy W. Heer, Politics and History in the Soviet Union (Cambridge, Mass., 1970). See the review by Warren B. Walsh, AHR, 77 (1972): 552-53.

<sup>2</sup> Peter Grose, "25 Soviet Intellectuals Oppose Any Elevation of Stalin's Status," New York Times, Mar. 21, 1966, p. 2. Grose mentions only eight of the signatories, among them Academician Ivan M. Maisky, who was not only a former diplomat (he had been Soviet ambassador to Great Britain from 1932 to 1943) but also a historian. See Maisky's contribution to a 1962 conference of Soviet historians, Vsesoiuznoe soveshchanie o merakh uluchsheniia podgotovki nauchno-pedagogicheskikh kadrov po istoricheskim naukam 18-21 dekabria 1962 g. (All-Union Meeting concerning Measures for Improvement of Training of Scientific-Pedagogical Cadres in Historical Sciences) (Moscow, 1964), 145-49, in which he calls for the publication of memoirs from the Stalin era, a genre to which he himself has made notable contributions. The other historian who from the list of signatories, Dr. Heer comments, "No Soviet historian in any field, and certainly not a specialist in the CPSU, could acquire the kind of social distance from politics possible for a physicist or artist."<sup>3</sup> A similar point is made in a recent review article in this journal. After summarizing evidence indicating the growing intellectual maturity and professional integrity of Soviet historians working in the pre-Soviet period of Russian history, Samuel H. Baron warns, "The constraints upon work in some of the more sensitive areas—such as the history of the Communist party of the Soviet Union, and contemporary history—have diminished little if at all."<sup>4</sup>

These observations help explain why the awesome task of writing a comprehensive historical analysis of Stalinism was finally undertaken neither by a professional historian nor by a party ideologist. Roy Medvedev, the man who successfully met Khrushchev's challenge, was trained in philosophy and made his career in the field of education.<sup>5</sup> Drawn to the study of history by Khrushchev's revelations about Stalin's crimes at the Twentieth CPSU Congress and convinced by this bold action that the party had the inner moral strength needed to slough off the Stalinist legacy and return to Leninist principles, Medvedev joined the party and embarked on the study of its history under Stalin. The actual writing of the book, however, was undertaken only in 1961, following the Twenty-second CPSU Congress.<sup>6</sup> The completion of the book in substantially the form we now have it came toward the end of 1968.<sup>7</sup>

During the long process of gestation there took place a creative interaction between the author and a small but keenly responsive circle of readers, friends, and critics, who analyzed and commented on the work in progress and in many cases provided valuable source materials for its enrichment. How could such an autonomous intellectual process, entirely lacking signed the letter, not mentioned by Grose, was Academician S. D. Skazkin, one of the leading Soviet medievalists. See Skazkin's biography in Sovetskaia istoricheskaia entsiklopediia (Soviet Historical Encyclopedia), 12 (Moscow, 1969): 942.

---

<sup>3</sup> Heer, Politics and History, 178. Dr. Heer's point is weakened but not entirely invalidated by the fact that two historians did sign the letter to Brezhnev; neither was, in her sense, a "revisionist" historian. Later in 1966 Skazkin was one of three historians who signed a letter to the RSFSR Supreme Soviet protesting the enactment of two articles in the criminal code (paragraphs 190-1 and 190-3) directed against internal political dissidents. The other historian signatories were V. M. Turok, a specialist in modern German and Austrian history, and P. I. Yakir, an intrepid critic of Stalinism and the son of a Red Army leader purged by Stalin. For a report of P. I. Yakir's arrest by the secret police, see the New York Times, June 22, 1972, p. 2. Copies of both the letter to Brezhnev and the letter to the RSFSR Supreme Soviet have been published by Radio Liberty, Munich, in its documentary series, numbers AS-159 and AS-273. I am grateful to Mr. Peter Dornan for help in locating these and other documents.

<sup>4</sup> Samuel H. Baron, "The Transition from Feudalism to Capitalism in Russia: A Major Soviet Historical Controversy," AHR, 77 (1972): 728.

<sup>5</sup> Biographical information on Medvedev is given in Professor David Joravsky's introduction, Let History Judge, x.

<sup>6</sup> See Medvedev's foreword, ibid., xxv. At the end of the work, however, Medvedev dates the beginning of the writing in August 1961 (p. 566). The Twenty-second CPSU Congress met in October 1961.

<sup>7</sup> The terminal date for composition is given as August 1968 (ibid.), but some materials were added as late as January 1969, e.g., a reference on page 455 to a review of wartime memoirs in Kommunist (1969), no. 2, p. 127.

official sanction, take place in the Soviet Union? The answer lies in the fascinating phenomenon of "Samizdat," a term coined by Soviet intellectuals on the analogy of Gosizdat (State Publishing House), to designate the "self-publication" of manuscripts that for one reason or another have not found, or are not likely to find, a regular publisher. Typed by willing volunteers, who thereby assume a direct personal risk, Samizdat manuscripts circulate on a restricted scale, known to the secret police but somehow managing to elude their controls, and providing one of the principal bases for the development of the newly self-aware, critical intelligentsia in present-day Soviet society. Medvedev intended from the outset, however, that his book should eventually be published legally in the Soviet Union, for in his view only when the party had squarely faced the historical truth about Stalin and Stalinism would it be morally strong enough to overcome the baneful consequences of his rule. Medvedev therefore submitted the manuscript on completion to the CPSU Central Committee for approval. In an action carrying grave moral implications, the party rejected Medvedev's manuscript, thereby indicating its intention of whitewashing Stalin and closing the door to unbiased historical study of his career.<sup>8</sup>

It was at just about this time that scholars in the West first learned of the existence of Medvedev's work through a brief but laudatory reference to it in another Samizdat document, a "Memorandum" by the Soviet physicist Andrei Sakharov, which the New York Times published in translation on July 22, 1968.<sup>9</sup> It is possible that Sakharov's well-intentioned reference to the book and the prominence given to it by Western news and propaganda media contributed to the decision by party authorities not to publish it in the Soviet Union.<sup>10</sup> It seems highly probable, however, that the decision by the CPSU leadership to halt the movement toward unbiased historical study of Stalin's career had been taken before Sakharov's "Memorandum" was published in the West, and in fact well before Medvedev completed Let History Judge.<sup>11</sup>

In early 1969, at a time when Medvedev was putting the finishing

<sup>8</sup> For an official history of the CPSU that deals with Stalin in the spirit approved by party ideologists, see Istoriia Kommunisticheskoi Partii Sovetskogo Soiuza v shesti tomakh (History of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union in Six Volumes) (Moscow, 1964-), especially vol. 4, pt. 2 (1970), which achieves the dubious feat of covering the period from 1929 to 1937 with only the barest allusion to the Great Purge.

<sup>9</sup> Andrei Sakharov's "Memorandum" is published in book form under the title Progress, Co-existence and Intellectual Freedom (New York, 1968). For the reference to Medvedev, see page 54. Sakharov describes the manuscript of Medvedev's book as being one-thousand pages long, a discrepancy that probably indicates he had seen only the first two parts; at the time Sakharov wrote the "Memorandum" Medvedev had not yet completed part 3, which begins on page 1031 of the Samizdat edition.

<sup>10</sup> On the difficulties caused for Medvedev by the Western publication and broadcasts of Sakharov's "Memorandum," see the book by Medvedev's twin brother, the biologist Zhores A. Medvedev, The Medvedev Papers (London, 1971), 388-89.

<sup>11</sup> A pointer to the approximate time by which the decision had been taken is the publication by Voprosy istorii in February 1968 of an article dealing in a completely Stalinist spirit with one of the purge trials in the early 1930s. See D. L. Golinkov, "Razгром ochagov vnutrennei kontrrevoliutsii v Sovetskoi Rossii" (The Destruction of Hotbeds of Domestic Counterrevolution in Soviet Russia), Voprosy istorii (1968), no. 2, pp. 148-65. Golinkov's article was the third in a series that began in the issue of December 1967.

touches on his manuscript, the authoritative CPSU theoretical journal Kommunist moved closer toward an open rehabilitation of Stalin with the publication of both a review of recent memoirs by Soviet army commanders, which gave a favorable evaluation of Stalin's role as a wartime leader,<sup>12</sup> and an article by five relatively obscure authors setting forth the principles to be observed in dealing with the history of the CPSU, in effect warning Soviet historians to cease and desist from any further analysis of the phenomenon of Stalinism.<sup>13</sup> Stung into direct action, Medvedev fired off a long letter to the editors of Kommunist in which he sharply criticized them for ignoring not only historical evidence about Stalin's crimes and blunders but also the directives of the Twentieth and Twenty-second CPSU Congresses condemning Stalin's "cult of personality." Medvedev's letter was never published by Kommunist, but it did appear, without his authorization, in Posev, an emigré journal published in West Germany.<sup>14</sup> Professor David Joravsky, in his introduction to Let History Judge, argues that it must have been the KGB that sent Medvedev's letter to Posev. Be that as it may, publication of the letter abroad was used as the pretext for expelling Medvedev from the party. Then, early in 1970 Posev published over Medvedev's name a rather crudely written article attacking the Soviet leadership as corrupt. The journal claimed that the article emanated from Samizdat sources.<sup>15</sup> Medvedev, in a letter dated March 25, 1969, to the Soviet press agency Novosti and to other news agencies, denied both that he was the author of the article and that it had ever circulated in the Soviet Union, and he charged that its publication represented "an intentional defamation."<sup>16</sup> Made acutely conscious by these developments of the danger that his long manuscript on the history of Stalinism might be published in an unauthorized and inaccurate edition in the West, and

<sup>12</sup> Ye. Boltin, "Volnuiushchie stranitsy letopisi Velikoi Otechestvennoi Voiny" (Stirring Pages in the Chronicle of the Great Fatherland War), Kommunist (1969), no. 2, pp. 119-28. For the evaluation of Stalin, see page 127.

<sup>13</sup> V. Golikov, S. Murashov, I. Chkhikvishvili, N. Shatagin, and S. Shaumian, "Za leninskuiu partiinost' v osveshchenii istorii KPSS" (For Leninist Party Spirit in the Treatment of the History of the CPSU), ibid., no. 3, pp. 67-82. For a rebuke to Soviet historians who persist in attempting to study Stalin's role in history, see page 73.

<sup>14</sup> Roy Medvedev, "Vozmozhno li segodnia' reabilitirovat' Stalina? Otkrytoe pis'mo v zhurnal 'Kommunist'" (Is It Possible to Rehabilitate Stalin Today? An Open Letter to the Journal "Kommunist"), Posev, 25 (1969): no. 6, pp. 25-30; no. 7, pp. 25-34. The editors appended a note (no. 6, p. 25), explaining that the letter had circulated inside Russia in a Samizdat edition, a copy of which reached them. According to Peter Reddaway, ed., Uncensored Russia (London, 1971), 421, 484n., Medvedev's letter first appeared in the Khronika tekushchikh sobytii (Chronicle of Current Events), a Samizdat periodical.

<sup>15</sup> R. Medvedev, "Pravda o sovremennosti" (The Truth about the Present Time), Posev, 26 (1970): no. 1, pp. 39-45.

<sup>16</sup> See Theodore Shabad, "Russian Historian Disavows Anti-Soviet Article Attributed to Him in West," New York Times, Apr. 26, 1970, p. 29. Shabad quotes from Medvedev's letter but does not give its full text. The letter in which a Posev editor attempts to justify the publication of documents from unidentified sources in Russia, which Joravsky cites in his introduction (Let History Judge, xi), was written in response not to Medvedev's letter to Novosti but to a manifesto published in Le Monde (Apr. 11, 12-13, 1970) in which Medvedev, Sakharov, and V. F. Turchin asserted that a "Letter to Brezhnev," which Posev had published over their signature, was a forgery. See "Les Savants Soviétiques et le 'Samizdat,'" Le Monde, May 6, 1970, p. 6.

blocked from publishing it in his own country, Medvedev thereupon took the weighty and responsible decision to authorize its publication abroad, but under conditions designed to ensure that it would be presented with scrupulous accuracy and in suitable form.

This prepublication background helps explain the character of Let History Judge, its author's intentions in writing it, and the form in which it is presented. Knowing that background one can better understand the moral stance of the author—that of a convinced Communist and a staunch admirer of Lenin—and its pervasive influence in the book. For it is Medvedev's underlying thesis that Stalinism was not the inevitable outcome of the political system established in Russia by Lenin and his colleagues but a monstrous distortion and perversion due in large part, though not exclusively, to fatal defects in Stalin's character. Because this thesis runs directly counter to the view, widely accepted in the West, that Stalinism was the logical consequence of Lenin's actions and policies, a number of reviewers have criticized Medvedev for what they regard as his failure to understand that link.<sup>17</sup>

This is not the place for an extended discussion of the problem, but two points should be made. First, Medvedev shows himself to be well aware of the roots of Stalinism in the policies of the early years of the Soviet regime, and although he does tend to exculpate Lenin from direct responsibility for Stalinism, he nevertheless gives the fullest and most searching analysis of this problem yet provided by any scholar. Second, acceptance of the thesis that Lenin's actions and policies led directly to those of Stalin has caused many scholars in the West to assume that the problem of the historical roots of Stalinism has been solved and no longer requires serious analysis. It is greatly to be hoped that Medvedev's treatment of the problem in Let History Judge will lead to a profound rethinking of it by Western historians and political scientists.

A closely related criticism of Medvedev's book has been that its importance lies mainly in the evidence it provides for tendencies within the present-day movement of dissident intellectuals in the Soviet Union, with the implication—sometimes made explicit—that there is little really new in what Medvedev has to tell us about the history of the Stalin era.<sup>18</sup> There can be no doubt, of course, that Let History Judge does have value for an understanding of its author's political views, but its value as a contribution to history is far greater. In the words of Edward Crankshaw, it is "the first sustained, comprehensive, closely argued critique of the genesis, development and triumph of Stalin ever to be written from the inside."<sup>19</sup>

Accepting that judgment, I shall devote the remainder of this review

<sup>17</sup> Reviews stressing this approach include those by Merle Fainsod, Book Week, Jan. 2, 1972, p. 4, and Leonard Schapiro, Sunday Times (London), Mar. 26, 1972, p. 40. For a balanced discussion of the problem, see Joravsky's introduction, Let History Judge, xii-xvi.

<sup>18</sup> See, for example, the reviews by I. F. Stone, New York Review of Books, Feb. 24, 1972, pp. 14-22; Robert H. McNeal, Russian Review, 31 (1972): 179-81; and Robert Conquest, Commentary, 53 (1972): no. 6, pp. 80-89.

<sup>19</sup> Edward Crankshaw in the Observer (London), Mar. 26, 1972, p. 36.

article to consideration of four substantive aspects of the book: the sources on which it is based; the contributions it makes to historical knowledge; certain weaknesses in the author's analysis of Stalinism due to his ignorance or neglect of non-Soviet studies; and the relationship between the original text and the edited translation.

THE RICHNESS AND DENSITY of Medvedev's book are the result in part of the author's ability to draw on an extensive body of memoirs and other materials dealing with Stalin and the Stalin era. Some of these have circulated in Samizdat editions.<sup>20</sup> Others have been published in the Soviet Union, for example, an account of imprisonment and torture during the Great Purge by the secretary of the party leader, Ya. M. Sverdlov.<sup>21</sup> Works of fiction, or historical memoirs thinly disguised as fiction, have provided valuable insights—for example, a series of stories about concentration-camp life by V. T. Shalamov.<sup>22</sup> Survivors of the purge trials of the 1930s have added their testimony; among the most important is a detailed account by M. P. Yakubovich, one of the defendants in the show trial of the so-called All-Union Bureau in 1931, which explains how the secret police worked over the defendants to prepare them for their roles in the trial.<sup>23</sup> Memoirs by Old Chekists (secret police agents whose service dates back to the early years of Soviet power) constitute a unique group of sources.<sup>24</sup>

Many of the sources used by Medvedev have been published with official approval, for example, a number of histories of Communist party organizations in the Union Republics (Medvedev uses, among others, party histories dealing with Georgia, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Kazakhstan, Kirghizia, Uzbekistan, Tadzhikistan, Estonia, Moldavia, and the Ukraine).<sup>25</sup> Published after the Twenty-second CPSU Congress and, in most instances, before the official turn toward a partial rehabilitation of Stalin, these works provide much new information on the purge in minor-

<sup>20</sup> The most extensive collection of Samizdat materials in the West is that compiled by Radio Liberty in its Arkhiv Samizdata, sets of which have been deposited at the Center for Slavic and East European Studies at Ohio State University, the Center for International Studies at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and the Library of Congress. A number of the Samizdat documents used by Medvedev, which Professor Joravsky was unable to locate, are available in the Radio Liberty archive. If a revised edition of Let History Judge is prepared, it would be desirable to provide full data on all known Samizdat sources used by the author.

<sup>21</sup> E. Ya. Drabkina, "Zimnii pereval" (Winter Solstice), Novyi mir, 44 (1968): no. 10, pp. 3-93.

<sup>22</sup> For a listing of V. T. Shalamov's stories, see Reddaway, Uncensored Russia, 476.

<sup>23</sup> For a biographical sketch of Yakubovich, one of the outstanding figures in the dissident movement in the USSR, see Khronika tekushchikh sobytii, no. 10 (Oct. 31, 1969), as translated by Peter Reddaway in Problems of Communism, Mar.-Apr. 1970, pp. 51-52, and in Uncensored Russia, 397-402. The article by Golinkov, "Razgrom ochagov vnutrennei kontrrevoliutsii v Sovetskoi Rossii," reads like an attempt to discredit Yakubovich's far more accurate account of the 1931 trial, which circulated in a Samizdat edition.

<sup>24</sup> For example, the memoirs of S. O. Gazarian, which were circulated in a Samizdat edition, and the book by F. T. Fomin, Zapiski starogo Chekista (Memoirs of an Old Chekist) (Moscow, 1962).

<sup>25</sup> See the works cited on pages 203-07 and 221 of Let History Judge.

ity regions of the USSR. And professional historians have contributed their share. Medvedev quotes with telling effect speeches made at a conference of historians held in Moscow in December 1962—at a time, that is, when the impetus given by Khrushchev to the objective historical study of the Stalin era was still strong.<sup>26</sup>

To call attention to all the new information provided by Medvedev would be a task requiring far more space than is available. Step by step, as he follows Stalin's rise to power, Medvedev adds previously unknown details or puts familiar facts in a new and more revealing light. When he reaches the Great Purge, his contributions become so numerous and cumulatively weighty that a dialectical transformation of quantity into quality takes place, and a more profound concept of the purge emerges, that of an organic process embracing every aspect of Soviet society. A particularly valuable cluster of new information surrounds the assassination of S. M. Kirov, with telling details contributed by friends, associates, and contemporaries of the fallen party leader. In this and similar sections Let History Judge creates the impression of a great collective outpouring of long-repressed memories. Sometimes Medvedev casually throws in a detail that illuminates an area previously shrouded in darkness. For example, he reports that in 1948, following the conference on biology at which T. D. Lysenko triumphantly revealed the party's endorsement of his theories, Stalin ordered A. A. Zhdanov into retirement, "using as an excuse Zhdanov's supposedly incorrect position" on doctrines espoused by Lysenko, "whom Zhdanov proposed to remove from the presidency of the Agricultural Academy."<sup>27</sup> This information (for which, unfortunately, Medvedev gives no source), together with data supplied by his brother Zhores to the effect that it was Stalin personally who approved Lysenko's report to the conference,<sup>28</sup> provides for the first time a valid basis for defining the positions of Stalin and Zhdanov in the biological controversy.

More important than any single new fact or group of facts, however, is Medvedev's profound and all-embracing grasp of the purge as a historical phenomenon. Particularly noteworthy are those sections of the book in which he analyzes the support rendered the Stalin cult by various groups in Soviet society.<sup>29</sup> Like the memoirs of Nadezhda Mandelshtam,<sup>30</sup> these sections of Let History Judge open up for historical study a wide panorama of changes in Soviet society during the Stalin era.

Medvedev takes a highly negative attitude toward non-Soviet studies of Stalin and the history of the CPSU. This attitude, needless to say, is as

<sup>26</sup> The speeches are included in Vsesoiuznoe soveshchanie. On the setting of the conference and its proceedings, see Heer, History and Politics, 145-63.

<sup>27</sup> Let History Judge, 484.

<sup>28</sup> Zhores A. Medvedev, The Rise and Fall of T. D. Lysenko, tr. I. Michael Lerner (New York, 1969), 116-17.

<sup>29</sup> See especially chapter 11, "The Conditions Facilitating Stalin's Usurpation of Power."

<sup>30</sup> Nadezhda Mandelshtam, Hope Against Hope, tr. Max Hayward (New York, 1970).

tendentious and one-sided as that of Western reviewers who find nothing new in his book. There are some areas in which non-Soviet historical scholarship has made contributions of fundamental importance to the study of the Stalin era, and by ignoring this work (or having been denied access to it) Medvedev has weakened his book. In particular his attempts to understand Stalin's motives for launching the Great Purge suffer from ignorance of some key links. Medvedev has apparently never seen, for example, the text of L. B. Kamenev's notes on his conversation with N. I. Bukharin in July 1928, a document that casts a revealing light on the struggle between Stalin and his rivals and on Stalin's character and strategy.<sup>31</sup> Similarly, Medvedev has not made adequate use of The Letter of an Old Bolshevik, and has thus missed its penetrating analysis of high-level political maneuverings in the period preceding the assassination of Kirov.<sup>32</sup> In addition Medvedev has failed to grasp the central importance of G. K. Ordzhonikidze's role in blocking Stalin's attempt to purge the party, as well as the significance of the link between Ordzhonikidze and Bukharin. Medvedev makes the assumption—plausible but erroneous—that G. G. Yagoda was a faithful executant of Stalin's orders throughout his career, thereby missing the significance of the telegram from Stalin and Zhdanov in September 1936 demanding Yagoda's ouster as chief of the NKVD.

It is a mark of Medvedev's stature as a historian, however, that he continued to deepen his understanding of Stalinism even while he was engaged in writing his book. One of the great values of the Samizdat manuscript of Let History Judge is that it enables us to follow this process in action. For example, it can be shown that Medvedev's attitude toward the problem of internal opposition to Stalin after 1929 underwent a significant change while the book was being written. The fullest treatment in the book of the case of M. N. Riutin in 1932, a turning point in the history of the party, is clearly a late insertion into the text (translation, pp. 142–43; Samizdat edition, p. 317a), which stands in striking contrast with references to Riutin elsewhere that treat the case as an unimportant and factually dubious incident (e.g. translation, p. 155; Samizdat edition, p. 344).

<sup>31</sup> Kamenev's notes on his conversation with Bukharin first appeared in an illegal underground leaflet in the USSR entitled, "K partiinym konferentsiiam: Partiia s zaviazannymi glazami vedut k novoi katastrofe" (Toward the Party Conferences: They Are Leading the Party Blindfold toward a New Catastrophe), signed "Bol'sheviki-lenintsy (Oppozitsiia)" (Bolsheviks-Leninists [Opposition]). Die Volkswille, a German Trotskyite journal, published a translation into German, from which it was retranslated into Russian and published in the Menshevik Sotsialisticheskii Vestnik, 9 (1929): no. 6 [196], pp. 10–11, under the title "Bol'sheviki o samikh sebe" (The Bolsheviks in Their Own Words). A few months later, having meanwhile obtained a copy of the original leaflet, the Sotsialisticheskii Vestnik added a brief additional section under the heading, "Dopolneniia k rasskazu Bukharina: Noch' 11–12 iulia" (Addition to Bukharin's Story: The Night of July 11–12), ibid., no. 9 [199], p. 10. There is a copy of the Russian text in the Trotsky Archive at Harvard. No complete translation into English has been published.

<sup>32</sup> The Letter of an Old Bolshevik was first published in the Sotsialisticheskii Vestnik, 16 (1936): nos. 23–24 [379–80], pp. 20–23, and 17 (1937): nos. 1–2 [381–82], pp. 17–24, under the title "Kak podgotovlialisia moskovskii protsess (Iz pis'ma starogo bol'shevika)" (How the Moscow Trial Was Prepared [From the Letter of an Old Bolshevik]). An anonymous translation (New York, 1937) has been reprinted in Boris I. Nicolaevsky, Power and the Soviet Elite (New York, 1965), 26–65. The Letter is discussed in a Samizdat publication, the Politicheskii Dnevnik, no. 25, Oct. 1966.

In regard to Soviet policy in Eastern Europe after World War II, the manuscript discloses a similar evolution in Medvedev's understanding. As originally written, the section dealing with this subject differed little from orthodox Soviet works that praise the "democratic socialist revolution" wrought in East European countries with Soviet aid.<sup>33</sup> After this section was written, however, the Dubček regime in Czechoslovakia reopened the subject of the purge trials of the early 1950s, and Medvedev inserted a long section (translation, pp. 476–77; Samizdat edition, pp. 1150–1150b)—based on articles by Eugen Loeb, one of the trial defendants, that were published in Prague in the spring of 1968—that differs sharply from the passage written earlier.

The moral to be drawn from these and similar instances is the urgent need for international cooperation among historians in studying the Stalin era. Tackling that central problem in modern Russian history is a task in which neither Soviet nor Western historians are likely to make substantial progress without the others' help.

Medvedev's book deserves and demands the most rigorous, scrupulous translating, editing, and publication. Few books in the field of Soviet history have been better or more conscientiously dealt with in this respect. The translator, the editors (especially Professor Joravsky, who assumed responsibility for the final editorial supervision), and the publisher have all met high standards, and the reader of the English-language version can rest assured that it is a substantially faithful rendering of the original text. Substantially, but not completely; and since we are dealing with a work of fundamental importance, it is necessary to note certain not entirely inconsequential differences between text and translation.

The number of actual errors is gratifyingly small. One may be mentioned for the record: a passage on page 110 of the translation reads, "And such a scapegoat was found: the specialists, the intelligentsia, who had been tainted before the Revolution" (my italics). What Medvedev wrote, however, was "And in fact such a scapegoat was provided for Stalin by specialists from among the old Russian (and Ukrainian) intelligentsia, which had taken shape before the Revolution" (Samizdat edition, p. 259, my italics).

There is a slight but perceptible difference in tone between the original text and the translation. Readers of the translation will recognize Medvedev's position as a convinced Communist, but they are not likely to realize fully the pervasive influence of this attitude, since many passages, in being edited for conciseness, have lost some of their personal flavor. Compare, for example, "In 1924 . . . Stalin did not seem dangerous" (translation, p. 28), with "In 1924 . . . Stalin did not seem dangerous for the revolution" (Samizdat edition, p. 74, my italics).

<sup>33</sup> Let History Judge, 484. The original (Samizdat edition, 1138–39) is both fuller and more orthodox in spirit than the translation.

In general, the translator and editors have shown great skill in condensing Medvedev's sometimes prolix and repetitive text without sacrificing anything essential. At times, however, the trimming process has been unduly rigorous. Consider these contrasting passages: "Old Bolsheviks now recall that Stalin had the pseudonym Vasili in 1912" (translation, p. 319); "In this connection some Old Bolsheviks recall that in 1912 Stalin, on escaping to Petersburg from exile and lodging together with Aron Sol'ts in one of the rooms at T. A. Slovatinska's, used the party pseudonym 'Vasili'" (Samizdat edition, p. 702). Or these: "P. P. Postyshev, demoted from the Politburo and the Ukrainian Central Committee to a provincial post, then arrested and shot" (translation, p. 192); "P. P. Postyshev, a popular party worker, who held the post of second secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist party of the Ukraine. (Approximately one year before his arrest Postyshev was removed from the Politburo and assigned as first secretary of the Kuibyshev obkom)" (Samizdat edition, pp. 428-29).

More serious are deletions that have removed material of substantive value. Here are some examples: (1) Entirely omitted is an impassioned outburst (Samizdat edition, p. 413; cf. translation, p. 186) on the moral duty of the Soviet historical profession to tell the full truth about the purges. (2) There seems to be no good reason for cutting out an account of the repression of M. Leiteisen, a pioneer in the study of interplanetary travel, together with that of the engineers working at a construction bureau engaged in building a flying-wing aircraft (Samizdat edition, p. 501a; cf. translation, p. 229). (3) A passage on the intervention of Stalin and the Comintern leadership into the internal political struggle in the Communist party of Czechoslovakia in the late twenties has been completely eliminated (Samizdat edition, p. 890; cf. translation, p. 387). (4) A long section has been omitted concerning a novel by H. G. Wells that depicts the moral degeneration of a revolutionary leader—clearly relevant to Stalin and so recognized by a Soviet literary scholar in a work published in 1963.<sup>34</sup>

My intention in citing these passages is not to impugn the quality of the translation and editing, which, I wish to emphasize, meet a high standard. The purpose is rather to indicate that specialists will find close study of the original manuscript indispensable. All honor, then, to the publisher, who has gone to great trouble to make available as legible as possible a copy of the Samizdat text. His services, like those of the translator and editors, are on the same high level of intellectual responsibility and devotion to the unending quest for historical truth as that of the book itself and its author.

<sup>34</sup> Samizdat edition, 744-47. See Ya. Kagarlitskii, Gerbert Uells: Ocherk zhizni i tvorchestva (Herbert Wells: An Outline of His Life and Work) (Moscow, 1963), 263-65.

---

Reviews of Books

---

GENERAL

ISAAC DEUTSCHER. Marxism in Our Time. Edited by TAMARA DEUTSCHER. Berkeley: Ramparts Press. 1971. Pp. 312. $5.95.

GEORGE LICHTHEIM. George Lukács. (Modern Masters. New York: Viking Press. 1970. Pp. xi, 146. $5.75.

ROBERT C. TUCKER. The Marxian Revolutionary Idea. (Publication of the Center of International Studies, Princeton University.) New York: W. W. Norton and Company. 1969. Pp. xi, 240. $5.95.

It is hard to say anything new about Marxism, particularly if one is trying to defend some aspect of it. Marxism has been expounded, attacked, defended, and dissected in such a perennial world-wide torrent of literature that one might well wish for a moratorium on the subject.

This is not to denigrate the importance of Marxism as a historical phenomenon of the last hundred years and more. Marxism in one reading or another has become the frame of reference of most of the labor movement and intelligentsia over a large part of the globe, not to mention its privileged position as the official philosophy in Communist countries. But critical study of Marxism has made it fairly clear that the great success of Marxism is not based so much on its logical coherence or its self-proclaimed scientific method as on an appeal that is emotional, moral, quasi religious in fact.

What emerges most clearly from the three works under review, all aiming one way or another at a positive evaluation of the doctrine, is the essentially theological character of Marxism. Though deceptively couched in the language of science, Marxism rests ultimately on an unsubstantiated assertion of faith, above all the faith that history will bring about the ultimate utopian society. Recognition of this fideistic character of Marxism helps provide a basis for understanding the development of official Soviet thought as a quasi-religious parody of scientific rationalism. Stalin did not have quite as far to go in "debasing" the original coin of Marxist doctrine as Mr. Deutscher maintains.

Flourishing as a faith movement in a supposedly scientific age, the vast influence of Marxism is all the more surprising on this account. One may fall back on the proposition that theological modes of thought—drawing from the need to believe—are imbedded in human nature and will attach themselves to whatever system of ideas happens to be popular. More specifically this trait of ideological theologizing seems to be rooted in the Continental European intellectual tradition, which apparently cannot dispense with grand system and hence remains vulnerable to the philosophical pretensions of Marxism. Two of the works under review proceed from this frame of reference: Deutscher readily admits to it, and Lichtheim deals tolerantly with Lukács's doctrinal blinders for the same reason. As for Tucker's attempt to appreciate Marx from the Anglo-American empirical standpoint, it points up another major component of Marxism's influence, equally illogical, as the doctrine of modernizing revolutionaries who hasten to "deradicalize" their faith after they take power.

Marxism in Our Time is a collection of Deutscher's lectures and essays, mainly of the mid-1960s, selected and edited by his wife after his untimely death in 1967. In subject they range from the methodology of Das Kapital and the history of Polish communism to the bureaucratization of the Russian Revolution and the rejection of Marxism by the New Left. They reveal Deutscher as beyond a doubt the most creative and articulate Marxist thinker to appear anywhere since his mentor Trotsky—but a committed Marxist, be it understood, with no intention of questioning the basic premises of his faith. Deutscher's objectivity only went as far as the condemnation of Stalinism as a perversion of the true faith.

Not as much can be said for George Lukács, the Hungarian Marxist philosopher and literary critic, who as the giant of Communist Marxism, relatively speaking, only throws into relief the short intellectual stature of the other theoreticians of communism. In George Lukács, a brief intellectual biography in the Modern Masters series, the eminent historian of Marxism and socialism George Lichtheim does his best to convey to the English-speaking reader an appreciation of Lukács's critical intelligence and his perseverance under adversity. In chapters pursuing the successive directions of emphasis in Lukács's work—literary, historical, esthetic, philosophical—Lichtheim details his long but losing struggle to maintain his intellectual individuality within the shrinking confines of his Stalinist loyalty. Tragically, Lukács's attachment to the Germanic world of reified abstractions and his fideistic commitment to Leninist Marxism sapped his resistance to the Stalinist manipulation of the doctrine (so effectively condemned by Deutscher). Except for the brief moment of revolt in Hungary in 1956, Lukács fettered himself so well that the Soviet authorities hardly needed to pull the reins on him.

Against the convoluted efforts of the two European thinkers to justify their Marxist commitments, the essays by Robert Tucker in The Marxian Revolutionary Idea convey a breeze of cool realism. In these largely reprinted articles Tucker presents an articulate but familiar review of the basic principles of Marxism and endeavors to sift out its relevance for the Anglo-American mind of today. The haul is not very great—mainly the notion of rehumanizing man by transcending the state and the division of labor—while the major political successes of Marxism Tucker recognizes to have been accomplished under conditions of backwardness contradicting the theory and vitiating the ideal. One wishes that a few social philosophers would forget Marx and start afresh to tackle the problem of the actual and the ideal.

ROBERT V. DANIELS

University of Vermont

KENNETH E. BOULDING. A Primer on Social Dynamics: History as Dialectics and Development. New York: Free Press, 1970. Pp. viii, 153. Cloth $5.95, paper $2.45.

LESLIE SKLAIR. The Sociology of Progress. (International Library of Sociology and Social Reconstruction.) [London: Routledge and Kegan Paul;] distrib. by Humanities Press, New York, 1970. Pp. xvi, 272. $10.00.

Kenneth Boulding's tract is an attack on all dialectical philosophy. In the flux of history and social dynamics he distinguishes two kinds of processes: dialectical ones centered on conflict and nondialectical, developmental, and evolutionary ones in which conflict is merely incidental. He contends that the latter has been by far the most important. In his comments on this theme, apart from saying much that is obvious to historians, he triumphantly demolishes the major tenets of Marxism. He also undertakes a cost-accounting of revolution, showing that evolution is cheaper (why did revolutions ever happen?). In conclusion he sketches a vision of a new universal humanistic history composed by man-computer teams. The appendix on Japan, "the first twenty-first century country," deals with the paradoxical appeal of Marxism in a country that "has one of the least dialectical of all histories." The tract is written in the social science jargon: "The development of democracy is the equivalent, in the sphere of social distance, to the reduction in the cost of transport and in the loss of power gradient in a geographical sphere" (p. 49); appropriately the author excels in reducing human phenomena to charts, graphs, and mathematical symbols. As for his command of historical reality one quotation suffices: "In the Soviet Union [Lenin's] war communism created a major famine and almost destroyed industrial production" (p. 93)—when in fact industry had come to a virtual standstill and famine had started even before the Bolsheviks took power.

Leslie Sklair, a sociologist at the London School of Economics, has written a more solid and ambitious work, though equally baffling to historians, defending the idea of progress as essential for the theory and practice of sociology. He begins by tracing selectively the history of the idea of progress in the context of evolving sociological thought within the Western tradition in a manner familiar and useful to practitioners of the history of ideas. His historical survey ends with a discussion of the current distrust of "progress" in the writings of Jacques Ellul, Herbert Marcuse, and Ernst Gellner, "writers so divorced from life as it is daily lived that they do not recognize material and moral progress when they see it" (p. 107). He then sets out to "demonstrate that however ideologically unfashionable and scorned theoretically the idea of progress may be, it is essential to modern social thought, and that a sociological theory of progress is not only possible but necessary." The heart of his sociological theory of progress is "the sociological ethic." It establishes norms for deciding "whether an action contributes to the satisfaction of one or more of the individual or social needs." If it does the action is progressive. It would seem that in his learned sociological terminology the author merely re-establishes the traditional liberal social gospel: When there are problems to be solved in society, the best solutions—and the most progressive—are those that satisfy more people than any other suggested solution; they offer the greatest good to the greatest number.

The author claims to have made a special contribution to sociological theory by separating "innovational" progress from "non-innovational" progress. The former refers to the contributions made by science and technology and to the awareness (since the eighteenth century) of progress based on these achievements. As for the mind-boggling notion of noninnovational progress the author supplies too few facts for clear definition. He seems unaware that changes in attitudes, creeds, and institutions also constitute innovations. European development before 1700 certainly abounds with innovations of all kinds contributing to the rising confidence expressed in the notion of progress. What makes the author's argument even more obscure is his distinction between innovativeness and inventiveness; he argues, for instance, that Meiji Japan was high in terms of innovativeness and low in inventiveness (as are most contemporary developing countries). At the end he contends that innovational and noninnovational progress can be equally progressive on the road to modernity (whatever that undefined term stands for), which is his way of admitting that under present conditions "scientific" progress may even be regressive. What then constitutes truly progressive progress in our present world this eminently Europe-centered book does not reveal.

Reclining in his armchair after reviewing these books, a historian—any historian, I dare say—will exclaim: if only these authors knew more history! To judge by these works history is not dying out among the social scientists, as has been predicted. But, by Clio, what starved and ill-shapen history sometimes emerges from their labors!

THEODORE H. VON LAUE
Clark University

BENJAMIN B. WOLMAN, editor. The Psychoanalytic Interpretation of History. Foreword by WILLIAM L. LANGER. New York: Basic Books. 1971. Pp. x, 240. $8.95.

In the first of three biographical studies in this collection Gustav Bychowski relies upon Trotsky's biography to illuminate Stalin's childhood and makes use of the "primal horde" as a theoretical model or explanatory device. He adds little to Khrushchev's analysis in terms of the "cult of personality."

Peter Loewenberg, less casual in his use of sources and psychoanalytic concepts, has been at pains to show that the "personal fantasies" of the Zionist leader, Theodor Herzl, were a "prelude to action" (p. 150). Certain of Herzl's experiences, in large part known from his Diaries and other sources, easily inferred from his fiction, indicate that he was unable to maintain ordinary personal ties of love or friendship but was able to derive an equivalent satisfaction from, on the one hand, his vision of the New Jerusalem and, on the other, "the mass response to his public utterances" (p. 179). Here Loewenberg has given considerable substance to the elusive term "charisma." He does not take up this problem from the other side, the relation of follower to leader, but he shows that Herzl, in adapting his fantasies to reality, "first codified" "a new ethos of militant resistance," a new "ego ideal" or "model of behavior," based in part on "the myth of chivalry" (pp. 169-70), in part on the internalized "values of the dominant majority" (p. 171). This "new ethos" belongs chiefly to a later period ("was adopted out of the holocaust" [p. 1969]) and was not necessarily characteristic of Herzl's mass following in his lifetime. The confusion on this point derives from the sequence in which the argument is presented, not from its substance. This small matter aside, Loewenberg's paper is a forceful demonstration of the value of a psychoanalytic approach to the study of history.

Robert Waite has tried to answer the question, "why did Hitler himself become an anti-Semite?" (p. 195). His evidence ranges from the general background—the atmosphere of Vienna, von List's anti-Semitic pamphlets—to the particular circumstances of Hitler's life. His "tentative hypothesis" is that Hitler, burdened by incestuous desires and inclined toward possibly indulging in a "monstrous sexual perversion," came to feel "a truly massive amount of self-hatred and self-loathing which he projected onto the Jews" (p. 207). The argument is plausible but too dependent on the category of an alleged personality type, the anti-Semite. This category, taken seriously, would undermine both historian and psychoanalyst. Who is the target of projected emotions, Jew or Jesuit, Free-Mason or bourgeois, is chiefly a historical question. There is certainly nothing in the "monstrous sexual perversion" that would determine a projection specifically onto the Jews. Waite adduces other evidence, chiefly in connection with the Jewish physician who attended Hitler's mother, but his question, "why did Hitler himself become an anti-Semite?" I think really begs the question.

Psychoanalytically informed biography is of limited use to the historian. As Professor Langer remarks in the foreword, "The great hope . . . must be for help in understanding the group or mass actions of the past" (p. viii). Unfortunately the four remaining papers in this collection offer no help at all.

Two contributors address themselves to theoretical and methodological problems, but to little effect. On theoretical matters Robert Waelder adds nothing to Freud, while Waelder's interpretations of historical events go little beyond casual observation. As for the strange series of minilectures offered by the editor, Benjamin Wolman, there is little to be said. Destrudo rides again.

Ronald Grimsley summarizes the views of several French literary critics more or less indebted to Freud. Robert Lifton, who draws his most telling examples from imaginative literature, has something more original to offer. He is "convinced that a universally shared style of self-process is emerging" (p. 34), a process "characterized by an interminable series of experiments and explorations—some shallow, some profound—each of which may be readily abandoned in favor of still new psychological 'quests'" (p. 37). This view is not so much argued as enlarged upon in provocative and entertaining fashion. Perhaps Lifton's shrewdest insight is that the "equation of nurturance with a threat to autonomy" is "a major theme of contemporary life" (p. 45). He intends his essay "to be no more than a preliminary statement of an idea" that he hopes "to pursue more thoroughly in the future" (p. 33). Perhaps something will come of it. Meanwhile the reader interested in history and psychoanalysis might see Loewenberg's paper recently published in the AHR (76 [1971]: 1457-1502), "The Psychohistorical Origins of the Nazi Youth Cohort." Do not skip the footnotes.

RICHARD BONINE

Dalhousie University

PAUL K. CONKIN and ROLAND N. STROMBERG. The Heritage and Challenge of History. New York: Dodd, Mead and Company. 1971. Pp. ix, 279. $4.95.

In the past historians whose creative energies had waned would occasionally pause to reflect on the history of their discipline, producing encyclopedic volumes that did little to enhance their scholarly reputations. Now much younger scholars at the height of their creative powers are expressing in print their thoughts concerning the nature of their chosen discipline, commenting on its noble heritage and uncertain future. Such a shift has probably occurred because, as Conkin and Stromberg assert in their preface, "historians today feel more disquietude than at any time in our recent past." Such a "crisis of confidence" results in, among other things, much self-analysis. It no longer suffices to let old men (or philosophers) ponder the nature of history.

As the title indicates, this particular effort to still the disquiet within the profession consists of two quite distinct parts. The first segment, written by Stromberg, is essentially a brief history of history; the second, written by Conkin, is an analytical piece similar in character to much of the literature on history written by philosophers of science.

In part 1 historians such as Herodotus and Tacitus are dealt with in a page or less each, the history of history for the entire ancient world requiring only sixteen pages. Unless the reader can bring to the material a rather substantial understanding of history and ancient cultures, it is questionable what purpose these introductory chapters serve. Anyone interested in the contribution to historical consciousness of the early Hebrews and Christians, for instance, would do much better turning to the writings of John Marcus or Paul Tillich. The treatment of historical scholarship since Ranke is more satisfactory and leads the reader into the issues that now trouble the profession. Stromberg's attempt to point out why the times are now more favorable to historical as contrasted with social science approaches is not very convincing. While the critique of scientism has accelerated of late, there is little reason to think that traditional historical approaches will be viewed as appealing alternatives.

In part 2 Conkin defines history as true stories about the past. Without raising the old relativists' doubts about an incomplete story ever being a true story, one can ask whether it is any longer adequate to equate history with the construction of narratives. Much that historians now do can be considered storytelling only if one has a most fertile imagination. But the key to Conkin's theoretical position is his attempt to establish the unique qualities of historical thinking. It places him within the confines of straight-line history as contrasted with some adventure toward a radical redefinition of historical scholarship. The focus is on epistemological questions, on matters of perceiving and knowing human experience, and on the relevance of such questions for written history. In five short, very carefully written chapters Conkin confronts the central theoretical issues associated with causation, generalization, objectivity, and the human use of history.

Many will finish this volume reassured that historians need only continue down those paths clearly laid out by their eminent predecessors; some will be less certain that this represents an adequate response to the current "crisis of confidence."

JOHN R. PALMER
University of Wisconsin,
Madison

GEORGES LEFEBVRE. La naissance de l'historiographie moderne. Preface by GUY P. PALMADE. (Nouvelle bibliothèque scientifique.) Paris: Flammarion, Éditeur. 1971. Pp. 348. 38 fr.

NORMAN F. CANTOR. Perspectives on the European Past: Conversations with Historians. New York: Macmillan Company. 1971. Pp. xix, 359, 362. Cloth $11.95, paper, in two volumes, $4.95 each.

L. P. CURTIS, JR., editor. The Historian's Workshop: Original Essays by Sixteen Historians. New York: Alfred A. Knopf. 1970. Pp. xxiv, 326. $7.95.

There was a time when historians were reluctant to write about historiography—whether in the guise of history of history, the methods of history, or philosophy of history. To judge from the pages of our professional journals this time is now over; historians are in a retrospective, analytical, and speculative mood. That is not altogether a bad thing; surely an unexamined profession is not worth pursuing. But the reflective and analytical books and articles now proliferating cannot all be magisterial contributions to our understanding of our craft. Certainly none of the three books under review is likely to advance our self-knowledge a great deal, though one of them, L. P. Curtis's collection, contains much suggestive material.

The publication of Lefebvre's course on the rise of modern historiography is largely an act of piety. The book is the "mise au point" of some of Lefebvre's last lectures at the Sorbonne in 1945 and 1946. Since Lefebvre was a great historian this posthumous collection is welcome simply as a product of his pen, especially since his lectures as printed here retain the personal tone, the informative aside, and the occasional ripe aphorism that he generally banished from his more formal work. But as a history of modern history it is a distinct disappointment: compelled to move after two introductory chapters from the Renaissance to our day in slightly more than three hundred pages, Lefebvre sounds summary, downright breathless. He treats—or rather dismisses—Jacob Burckhardt in thirteen lines; even Karl Marx, one of Lefebvre's favorites, must make do with four pages. Such a hasty overflight makes superficiality inescapable. Beyond this, for all his interest in sociological history, Lefebvre here seems distinctly old-fashioned. Perhaps if he had depended less on Eduard Fueter's antique and unreliable Geschichte der neueren Historiographie (the "classic" work that, the editor tells us, served as the basis of Lefebvre's lectures) he might have ventured more freely into new fields of interpretation. As it is, we have a useful and brief reference work with some interesting asides.

Norman Cantor's more ambitious compilation of interviews with distinguished ancient and European historians is neither brief nor particularly useful. The only value of this strange production—and it is doubtless considerable—emerges from the occasionally inspired responses to Cantor's jejune interrogatives. Thus, Leonard Krieger manages to say something new about the emergence of German nationalism, and A. William Salomone ventures some fascinating speculations about nineteenth-century European culture. There are nuggets elsewhere in this ponderous volume; since its list of thirty-two contributors reads like a Who's Who of historians—including such old masters as Ronald Syme, R. W. Southern, A. G. Dickens, Asa Briggs, and Gordon Craig—it could hardly be without them. But what purpose is this designed to serve? It cannot sustain comparison with its pendant, John A. Garraty's Interpreting American History: Conversations with Historians (1970). Garraty, after obviously doing much careful homework, asked probing questions about the state of the field, the direction of research, and the particular contribution of each respondent. The result was an informative, often highly interesting, set of conversations that stand as supplements to textbooks and specialized monographs. Cantor's compilation, on the other hand, is a rival to the textbook, rather than its companion. His brisk and perfunctory questions—"Did the rise of industry completely transform English society?"—generally elicit fragments of potted short histories on various areas of ancient and European history; we can get the same subjects treated in more lucid and orderly fashion—often by the very historians here interviewed—in other places. On occasion, indeed, some of Cantor's respondents make stabs at evaluating the historical literature, with some questionable results. Frank Manuel gives it as his opinion that "for a new student in the field" of the Enlightenment "I would say that Becker's brilliant essay is still the best single work from which to get a feel for the eighteenth century." Becker was a sensitive and literate historian, but it is precisely the "feel" of the eighteenth century that we fail to get from him—if by "feel" we mean a sense of what the age was actually about. "The Heavenly City," Manuel continues, "is a major essay: it is profoundly respected even by Europeans who have written longer works on the same subject. It has been attacked, of course, for its errors in detail, but Becker wouldn't have cared." I can only wonder at such peculiarly unprofessional idealization: the essay has been attacked for far more than "errors in detail," as Manuel must know; but even if it had been attacked only for that, Becker would have done well to care—does good history not depend on accurate detail? Of course, opinions like these are not Cantor's, the interviewer's, fault—the introduction and headnotes, on the other hand, are; apart from the factual information they contain, they are patronizing, tasteless, and embarrassing.

Curtis's collection of original essays is embarrassing as well, but on purpose. Curtis has had a new idea, which I can only applaud—to ask historians to talk freely about their "frame of reference" and their way of working that emerge in the writing of one of their books. Since historians' autobiographies are rare and on the whole unrevealing, the spectacle of a historian—or, as here, sixteen historians—in undress is bound to be a startling sight. While the essays here collected are of varying merit, the enterprise cannot help but be immensely useful; if it encourages other historians to bare their ways of thinking, their false starts, their passionate convictions and occasional disappointments, the profession will be all the richer for it.

Since the middle of the nineteenth century, since William Whewell and Claude Bernard, students of scientific procedure have argued against the Baconian notion that we compile facts first and make our theories later; in recent years philosophers, historians of science, and distinguished practitioners, like Karl Popper, Thomas Kuhn, and P. B. Medawar, have strengthened our theoretical understanding and extended our factual knowledge of how natural scientists actually work; they have firmly discriminated between the logic of science (which tells us how a statement can be proved to be true) and the psychology of scientists (which tells us how they arrive at their statements in the first place). We urgently need a similar psychology of historians—perhaps more urgently than a psychology for history, a subject that threatens to engulf us these days. A psychology of procedure requires large amounts of factual information, and the present collection of partial autobiographies makes an admirable start. Autobiography is an art, and most of Curtis's collaborators—the fifteen of fifty-two who finally accepted the editor's invitation—are a little uncomfortable with it. Yet most of them manage to be informative, if not always wholly by intention. It would be invidious to single out any particular essay as "the best"; given the nature of the enterprise, each reader must choose the essay, or essays, he finds most instructive. My own favorites are Lynn White's witty and forthright account of his growing interest in the function of technology in civilization, John William Ward's economical and self-critical reappraisal of his study of Andrew Jackson as a culture hero, and the late Joseph Levenson's thoughtful explanation of his intentions in writing his great trilogy on Confucian China. Other contributors shed light on their work—R. R. Palmer on the Age of the Democratic Revolution (1959), John Pocock on his fascination with time, George Rudé on his long-term occupation with crowds. Sometimes the light is a little lurid: in the course of psychoanalyzing his psychoanalytical biography of Lou Salome and his subsequent work on Leopold III of Belgium, Rudolph Binion casually connects literature with life through the situation of "a young lady of my close acquaintance" who "reenacted a traumatically unfulfilled love after five years of brooding over it." After she had gone "to pieces this second time round," Binion "psychoanalyzed her at her urgent request—and in the process solved, until further notice, my Lou-Leopold problem left outstanding." L. P. Curtis has opened Pandora's box; we may expect further revelations with trepidation but also with real interest.

PETER GAY

Yale University

HELMUT HIRSCH. Lehrer machen Geschichte: Das Institut für Erziehungswissenschaften und das Internationale Schulbuchinstitut. Ein Beitrag zur Kontinuitätsforschung. (Schriftenreihe zur Geschichte und politischen Bildung.) Ratingen: A. Henn Verlag. 1971. Pp. 264.

In 1969 the American Historical Association cosponsored the publication of Donald W. Robinson's As Others See Us: International Views of American History, in which successive American history topics were treated by historians from different nations. The result was a startling lesson in relativism. There are apparently several versions of the history of the French and Indian Wars: the American, the English, and the French; the Indian version remains to be written. As the international community becomes more closely knit, attempts will have to be made to give history a global perspective.

Efforts to write history without national bias began after World War I. In 1925 the Scandinavian countries concluded the first agreement for revision of textbooks by mutual discussion. In 1933 the first international treaty agreed upon by Brazil and Argentina provided for periodical textbook revision. By 1938 twenty-two nations had some form of agreement. Germany and France reached one in 1935.

This book describes one significant German attempt to play its part in textbook revisions of the post-World War II era. The origin of the International School Book Institute located at Brunswick is to be found in the Research Institute for Education founded there in 1930 by August Riegel. Riegel was later dismissed from his post by the Nazis and the institute was put in abeyance. But the library of the foreign history texts accumulated by Riegel found its way into the hands of George Eckhart and became the nucleus of the International School Book Institute he founded in 1949.

The purpose of the institute is quoted as being inspired by a Polish historian who crisply exhorted his colleagues "to try to eliminate all tendentious meanings from history." Actually the more immediate motivation was to redeem Germany from having been "diverted into narrow channels" by the Nazi interlude.

The book proceeds to describe in great detail the circumstances of the foundation and development of the institute. In furthering his work George Eckhart sought the support of several organizations both inside and outside his country. By 1965 the institute became affiliated with the Council of Europe. Its present name is Schulbuch Zentrum für Geschichte und Geographie der Länder des Europarats.

The functions of the institute consisted in organizing conferences, collecting library materials, rewriting textbooks, and making representations to other countries for rewriting textbooks. The book recounts instances of Belgian and English hostilities, the East-West controversies, and clashes with the Americans. In spite of such difficulties Eckhart, who, in addition to the directorship of the institute and a professorship at the Kant Hochschule at Brunswick, also served as member of the German Commission to UNESCO, was able through his contacts to resolve successfully mutual revision conflicts with countries such as the United States, France, Belgium, and Japan.

The book is unfortunately replete with irritating hints of the author's personal vanity as well as excessive local and institutional pride and German national patriotism. This mars not a little the fine story of a courageous and serious attempt to denationalize history.

GEORGE BEREDAY
Teachers College,
Columbia University

LOUIS GOTTSCHALK et al. The Foundations of the Modern World. (History of Mankind: Cultural and Scientific Development, Volume 4. Prepared under the auspices and with financial assistance of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization.) New York: Harper and Row for the International Commission for a History of the Scientific and Cultural Development of Mankind. 1969. Pp. xxxi, 1133. $20.00.

The volume at hand is the fourth in UNESCO's attempt to examine mankind's cultural and scientific development as a single story. Quite apart from any objections to the implied distinction between science and culture, I feel compelled to register serious doubts about the entire enterprise as conceived and executed.

First, however, one should be clear about the conception itself. The preceding volumes deal, respectively, with "Prehistory and the Beginnings of Civilization," "The Ancient World," and "The World, A.D. 400 to A.D. 1300." The succeeding two volumes are entitled "The World in the Nineteenth Century" and, forthrightly, "The Twentieth Century" (when the definition of the world obviously became complicated).

Certain problems presented by this fourth volume will be readily apparent to most students of history. The author-editors, who generously acknowledge the critical collaboration of no fewer than sixty-two consultants, including seven who appear to have been most deeply involved, were doubtless justified in treating the period 1300-1775 as one having a genuine coherence. Most of us in the European field are uneasy when we are cut off too sternly from the Middle Ages. The record of an "old Europe" often challenges our standard periodization. The troublesome question remains whether the record of other civilizations helps very much in this regard.

What is still more troublesome, however, is the decision of Professor Gottschalk and his colleagues to adopt a principle of organization that seems to me not to work. After roughly 100 pages of political summary we confront over 350 pages of religious history, sometimes tinged with metaphysics. Then, in succession, come paired chapters on political and social thought, "literary communication and belles-lettres" (an uneasy distinction), and the visual arts and music. Finally, there are 250 pages on science, technology, and education.

Granted that every historian has to make choices all the time between topical and chronological approaches, the line followed in the volume under review is so defiant of history's wholeness as to cast doubt on the very idea of a "history of mankind." To take one example, few students, reading early in the book about Jansenism as a theological position, will be able to remember its role (with Gallicanism) when they get back to seventeenth- and eighteenth-century political thought some hundreds of pages later.

The author-editors deserve credit for having faced up to this difficulty and even, in a preface "Note on the Preparation and Editing of Volume IV," having reprinted the objections of Professor Roland Mousnier. Those objections, which still appear to me valid, include the following: "The links between the facts studied in each case and those considered in other categories are rarely shown. . . . There is lacking a general view of all these human activities" (p. xviii). Professor Gottschalk answers this complaint quite reasonably by pointing out that every scheme of organization involves a trade off, a surrender of some advantages to secure others. On balance, however, it seems that Professor Mousnier is right in pressing his query: Is the only object of this exercise an encyclopedic work of random reference?

The dissatisfaction that remains with me, however, has a different source. It has to do with the very idea of "world history" dominated by the representational structure of the United Nations and written by negotiation, which has its place—elsewhere. Asian history, African history, and Latin American history all deserve to be studied rigorously in their own terms. Those terms need not, and should not, exclude careful comparisons with other fields.

What appears to me to happen, however, when sixty-five historians, including seven Russians, a Syrian, an Israeli, two Indians, five Hungarians, and two South Vietnamese, "collaborate" with dozens of other scholars from other lands is that history, as an assignment of recovery and interpretation, simply gets lost. One final illustration is in order. Perhaps, given limitations on space, British political development between 1300 and 1775 could not be assigned more than the two paragraphs it receives on page 12. But I have yet to be convinced that England in those centuries was less significant to the history of mankind, all mankind, than were Mandingo, the Mali Empire, Kano, and the Ashanti federation, dealt with earlier and at greater length (pp. 2-4).

The above expresses no racism, of any of the currently available varieties. It does express doubts about history as a product of bargaining. Soon after the Second World War some German and French historians got together, contritely, and agreed that Louis XIV was rapacious but a prince of his time. They also agreed that the Franco-Prussian War was both sides' fault. The propositions were doubtless true, but neither advanced historical studies very much. The global approach has, so far at least, offered us nothing better.

FRANKLIN L. FORD
Harvard University

Third International Conference of Economic History, Munich, 1965. Volume 2. (École Pratique des Hautes Études—Sorbonne. VI<sup>e</sup> Section: Sciences économiques et sociales. Congrès et colloques, Number 10.) Paris: Mouton & Co. 1968. Pp. 304. 48 fr.

The twenty-seven papers and the ten discussions assembled in this volume represent the combined output of only one section (Agricultural Production and Productivity) of the Third International Conference of Economic History, which met in Munich in 1965. Despite the sometimes heroic efforts of the late Jean Meuvret (who was responsible for the section) to impart cohesion to such a large and disparate body of papers, it is patently impossible to seize upon a single theme other than a common interest in the measurement of agricultural production and some explanation of the vicissitudes of agricultural growth in various areas of the world. Needless to add, all areas are not treated in proportion to their importance to agricultural history. The European world clearly dominates (twenty-one of the twenty-seven papers); Japan is represented by two papers; the United States, Mexico, Argentina, and India by one each. Without treating an international conference of historians like the Washington Naval Conference and recognizing that availability of sources and research talent must play a determining role in the assignment of papers, greater effort should still be made to solicit research from economic historians of Asia, Africa, and the Americas at future international conferences, especially in this area of agricultural economics and rural sociology. And surely, to have only two short papers on England and none on the Low Countries—the pioneers in agricultural change—is unfortunate in the extreme.

About half of the articles in the collection treat such problems as the completeness and authenticity of sources (the relative value of private account books, church dîmes, and public fiscal records), the arithmetic of crop yields (by seed, by area, by manpower), the relation of crop rotations to livestock, and the relation of area, soils, population density, and land tenures to mechanization and nonmechanical innovation. No doubt, as a result of the Munich conference we know more about how to measure productivity—at least of cereals. But with the exception of R. A. C. Parker's brief paper on the Coke estate in Norfolk, the papers treating Western Europe are not primarily concerned with landlord-tenant relations, reinvestment rates, or the broader social aspects of agricultural production. The representatives from Central and Eastern Europe, on the other hand, were less hesitant to enlarge the scope of their assignment, often tracing the agricultural history of entire countries over several centuries. Thus, V. K. Yatsounski of Moscow's Academy of Sciences presents a seventeen-page paper on Russian agricultural production from 1500 to 1917, while László Makkai of the Institute of Social Sciences in Budapest presents a nine-page résumé of Hungarian agriculture in the "era of late feudalism," that is, from 1550 to 1850. Contrast this perspective with Emmanuel Le Roy Ladurie's nine pages on "Grain Yields in Languedoc," replete with tables and tight arithmetic.

As examples of economic history pursued in Eastern Europe, consider the papers of Yatsounski and François Matejek on Russian and Czechoslovakian agriculture in the four centuries from 1550 to World War I. Their use of a threefold periodization of agrarian history—"feudal," "capitalist," and "socialist"—creates some initial difficulties, since it is not always clear whether political, ideological, or economic events determine the transition from one epoch to the next. In these two papers the emancipation of the serfs in 1848 and 1861 ushers in the époque capitaliste and initiates major changes in the rate of agricultural growth. Matejek establishes a veritable "agricultural revolution" in the thirty years after 1848, punctuated by the planting of new forage crops, the near elimination of the fallow, and the introduction of the potato and sugar beet along with expansion of such derivative Czech industries as brewing, distilling, and starch-making. Yatsounski traces a similar, if less dramatic development in Russian agriculture after 1861, but he attributes much of it to the initiative of the larger landlords rather than to Matejek's state agricultural schools, which Matejek claims spread technical know-how to the peuple. Yatsounski in fact believes that the agrarian policies of the tsarist government that aimed at increasing the number of small holdings actually "inhibited productive forces on the land." His colleague, A. M. Anfimow, makes the same observation about the Stolypin reforms of 1906-14. Matejek, on the other hand, not only refuses to condemn the small holder, but he even attributes substantial increases in bovine livestock in the 1870s to the paysan rather than to the large landlord. It would appear that Matejek shares some of Jean Meuvret's respect for "agrarian individualism"—even "petty bourgeois individualism"—as alternative promoters of agricultural growth.

Economic issues are not always kept distinct from a bias in favor of agrarian populism. All papers concerning Eastern Europe agree that serfdom was the great stumbling block to agricultural progress—so great in fact that it obscures other possible obstacles. Furthermore, I am not convinced that the system of latifundia per se (and one would like to know more about areas and management) blocked innovation on the land. Some attention should be given to the psychology of landlords. It may well be that the Polish magnates spent all of their profits from grain exports on luxury goods from the West, but, as the English example suggests, large holdings were not always starved for reinvestment capital. In one of the discussions Pierre Vilar suggested that there may have been an aristocratic laissez-aller psychology (as in Spain) that remained after the formal seigniorial system had gone but before the new "mentality of capitalist exploiter" (or entrepreneur?) had arrived. Perhaps there are landlords and there are landlords, regardless of the system of land tenure. But psychological aspects of the problem (despite the existence of voluminous private estate papers) were lightly treated, to say the least. Miklos Szuhay of the Karl Marx University in Budapest seemed to capture the main thrust of his own and his colleagues' interpretation when he concluded that "real" agricultural growth could only take place "by breaking up the system of large [private] landholdings . . . and, above all, by the socialist reorganization of agriculture." Does this mean that there are "efficient" and "inefficient" forms of large-scale agriculture? In any event, there is not much place here for the emancipated peasant, either as independent farmer or as promoter of agricultural growth.

ROBERT FORSTER
Johns Hopkins University

ROBERT SCHWOEBEL, editor. Renaissance Men and Ideas. New York: St. Martin's Press. 1971. Pp. xxii, 137. Cloth $6.00, paper $2.95.

This collection is designed "to bridge the ever-widening gap between the world of the specialized scholar and that of the undergraduate student, between the scholarly journal and the textbook." In his introduction Robert Schwoebel performs the impressive feat of touching on general problems raised by the concept of the Renaissance and bringing together the common themes of the nine articles that follow. Without talking down to the book's intended audience or making a cheap plug for the relevance of the Renaissance he indicates that thinkers of that period concerned themselves with perennially perplexing problems: "the nature and uses of power, the responsibility and possibility of education, the limits of reason, the sources of moral authority, the social and ethical implications of scientific discovery and technology." The serious but vigorous tone he sets is maintained throughout the volume; all the contributors write well and offer sound and illuminating interpretations of their material.

Renaissance Men and Ideas includes the following studies: "Renaissance Humanism: Petrarch and Valla" by Jerrold E. Seigel, "Printing and the Spread of Humanism in Germany: The Example of Albrecht von Eyb" by Rudolf Hirsch, "The English Renaissance: Sir Thomas More" by George Richard Potter, "Machiavelli" by Felix Gilbert, "Pius II and the Renaissance Papacy" by Robert Schwoebel, "Luther as Scholar and Thinker" by Lewis W. Spitz, "Copernicus and Renaissance Astronomy" by Edward Rosen, "The Paideia of a Renaissance Gentleman: Castiglione's Book of the Courtier" by Roslyn Brogue Henning, and "Montaigne on the Absurdity and Dignity of Man" by Donald M. Frame. All are of very high quality, and intelligent undergraduates should find each interesting and informative. I felt that two of the studies were especially helpful in putting more or less familiar material into a new and more viable pedagogical framework. Other essays in the volume will no doubt seem particularly enlightening to scholar-teachers with different backgrounds and interests.

Of all the contributions to a collection where the emphasis is on intellectual history Hirsch's study comes the closest to hinting at the insights that quantitative approaches can bring; it also helps to confirm Elizabeth Eisenstein's recent assertions. His thesis that Northern Europe was not as far behind Italy in concern for the classics as has usually been supposed is supported by impressive lists of German first editions of classical texts put out for the most part by printers who did not specialize exclusively in scholarly works. A consideration of the oeuvre of one early figure, Albrecht von Eyb (1420-75), suggests further that some modification of the traditional notion of a time lag in northern humanism needs to be made. Primarily a popularizer, Eyb in his Margarita poetica and Ehebuch wove together a tissue of classical citations and extracts designed for practical application. The fact that these books reached a very extensive audience (an estimated 4,000 copies of the Margarita and 7,000 of the Ehebuch were published) indicates that the new medium of printing provided some degree of exposure to humanist ideas for Germans not fortunate enough to travel to Italy or to participate in aristocratic learned sodalities.

In the study on Machiavelli we find a scholar's distillation of many years' research on a persistently puzzling subject. Not only does Felix Gilbert demonstrate complete mastery of the immense literature on Machiavelli; Gilbert provides a key to understanding why almost every intellectual generation has felt a need to reassess the meaning and intention of his works. In Gilbert's view (as in Isaiah Berlin's) modern scholarship can come closer than that of previous epochs to taking Machiavelli's stark world view at face value because the twentieth century, like the early sixteenth, is a time when old certainties no longer hold. The central consideration in Machiavelli's writings, Gilbert maintains, is power in the context of the ruler-subject relationship—power that, when effectively institutionalized, can prolong the life of a state at the apex of the inevitably recurring cycle of historical development. In Machiavelli's age "the feeling of having lost control over events was dominant": hence his obsession with the redefinition of the political world as a realm of flux and with the revaluation of "virtue" as the ability to control men and events. Gilbert's essay, along with the others in this volume, is a solid, provocative reinterpretation that has much to offer the specialist as well as the neophyte in Renaissance studies.

ANNE JACOBSON SCHUTTE
Lawrence University

J. G. ROWE and W. H. STOCKDALE, editors. Florilegium Historiale: Essays Presented to Wallace K. Ferguson. [Toronto:] University of Toronto Press, in association with the University of Western Ontario. 1971. Pp. xiii, 401. $16.50.

Sixteen scholars have contributed to honor Wallace K. Ferguson on his seventieth birthday—fourteen (one of them the honorand's brother) with articles on different aspects of the Renaissance and two as careful, imaginative editors. The product of this energy is the sort of book I like: 246 pages of text and 117 pages of notes and apparatus, not counting illustrations. Furthermore, the notes are largely to primary materials, manuscripts, and old books; and the articles bear on Ferguson's seminal work on the Renaissance and the idea of the Renaissance, in and beyond historiography. This means that the contributors have consciously worked to clarify problems Ferguson raised in his books and articles: two (Paul Kristeller and Myron Gilmore) write on Erasmus; four on humanists (Hans Baron on Petrarch, Eugene F. Rice, Jr. on Lefèvre d'Étaples, Arthur Ferguson on early Tudor humanists, and Denys Hay on the geographical humanists who contributed to "the idea of Italy"); and two (Millard Meiss and Edward Lowinsky) on the arts. Frederic Lane and Felix Gilbert offer precise delineation of problems in Venetian politics and historiography; Nicolai Rubinstein provides a quiet, brilliant analysis of Machiavelli's uses of the variously loaded word stato; J. R. Lander analyzes the relations of the first two Tudor monarchs to their troublesome (and essential) magnates; finally, J. R. Hale presents another folio on his perennial topic of Renaissance wars and rumors of wars, this time a study of the sermons dealing with warfare from the Armada to the Civil War.

The articles are very different from one another. Both Baron and Rice deal with what Renaissance scholars call "medievalism," Baron with Petrarch's Augustinianism, and Rice with Lefèvre's publications of medieval mystical texts, but Baron does not quite define the important revision of Petrarch's life that he offers, though Rice is clear about what Lefèvre's industry meant in French intellectual life. In another context Myron Gilmore presents an unquestionably disputatious Erasmus, never letting pass an opportunity in his own defense, who, at the article's end, folds his hands in the irenic gesture historians prefer to see him take. Arthur Ferguson's graceful article recapitulates much from his 1962 book but lays special stress on the English humanists' sense of history, here interpreted as man's emergence at the beginning of his development from a disagreeable state of nature, rather than as history in any modern sense.

Lane's and Gilbert's articles are models in their kinds; both show how and why things happened—why the Venetian council had to be enlarged and how that enlargement was effected; why Venetian historiography in fact took a radically new turn in the Renaissance, for reasons laid out by Mr. Lane. Meiss's article is an iconographical contribution that abides by its stated limitations; Lowinsky manages as ever to speculate beguilingly, this time via Anne Boleyn and her music man Mark Smeaton. Rubinstein's article is a model of intellectual analysis, giving far more than it promises; Lander's researches make even plainer than before the forcefulness of Henry VII in a very ticklish situation indeed. Marvin Becker's study of the "quest for identity" in the early Renaissance develops a theme on which I have earlier heard him lecture: despite citations to the right authors (Ladner, Leff, Kantorowicz, Trinkaus, Garin), the use of "in" phrases (identity crisis, ego support, socially-defined roles, civic persona, scheme of ceremonial identity), and references to topics like love, chivalry, historiography, the Church, government, and commercial enterprises, I had been unable to understand his premises or the order of his argument when I heard them spoken. Now that I read this article (note that I am not criticizing what some historians may consider sociological jargon; that I think I can understand and certainly find useful), I find that my earlier deafness has become blindness. I don't know who the early Italian Renaissance was that it should seek its identity: one has to be careful with this sort of subject, when even Huizinga often nods. Becker has, however, tried to synthesize some of the many problems Ferguson has frequently referred to: his is the zeal of the house. For its many different virtues scholars will have to use this Festschrift; what is more telling, Wallace Ferguson will use it—and what nicer present could a man hope to receive on his birthday?

†ROSALIE L. COLIE
Brown University

ERNEST F. DIBBLE and EARLE W. NEWTON, editors. Spain and Her Rivals on the Gulf Coast. (Proceedings: Second Gulf Coast History and Humanities Conference.) Pensacola: State of Florida, Department of State; Historic Pensacola Preservation Board. 1971. Pp. vi, 143. Cloth $5.00, paper $3.00.

During the three centuries of history from 1513 to the early 1800s three European powers, Spain, France, and England, contended for supremacy in the territory from the Florida peninsula to Texas. In this struggle Spain appeared first and led the way in promoting exploration and colonization, but the rival nations subsequently entered the contest for primacy and eventually made their own significant contributions in the creation of the patterns of life so characteristic today of this part of the American scene.

At the Second Gulf Coast History and Humanities Conference, held in December 1970, the five formal papers read, which constitute principally the subject matter of the present publication, are all related to the colonial beginnings of this Gulf region and are also "interdisciplinary," as a glance at their titles will reveal. They are as follows: "Gulf Coast History: An Overview" by Alfred Thomas; "French, Spanish, and English Indian Policy on the Gulf Coast, 1513-1763: A Comparison" by John J. TePaske; "Revolt in Louisiana: A Threat to Franco-Spanish Amistad" by J. Preston Moore; "The Spanish Gulf Coast Cultural Assemblage, 1500-1763" by Hale Smith; and "Gulf Coast Architecture" by Samuel Wilson, Jr. Also included is an appendix prepared by William S. Coker and Jack D. L. Holmes dealing with the sources for the history of the Spanish borderlands.

The reader of these scholarly studies is likely to increase his understanding and appreciation of the Gulf Coast and its history. Perhaps he may also come to recognize with Dr. Thomas (and as did Herbert Bolton and others, including myself years ago) the grave error of the traditional school of historians who view the origins of American civilization "almost exclusively in terms of 13 English colonies along the Atlantic Seaboard." How ironical this position is when, in fact, "the vast region from Florida to California" had its own earlier and separate colonial beginnings! It is well to add that this publication is greatly enhanced by the inclusion, in connection with Wilson's paper, of thirty-two pages of illustrations of colonial buildings, among them fortifications and other public and private structures.

VERNE E. CHATELAIN
University of Maryland

ERNEST S. DODGE. Beyond the Capes: Pacific Exploration from Captain Cook to the Challenger, 1776-1877. Boston: Little, Brown and Company. 1971. Pp. xv, 429. $12.50.

"Geography," said the eighteenth-century French explorer Louis de Bougainville, "is a science of facts" (quoted in J. C. Beaglehole, The Exploration of the Pacific [3d ed.; Stanford, 1966], 3). The history of geographical exploration is thus a branch of narrative history, nowadays out of fashion, consisting as it does of stories of high adventure, of the deeds of men who hazarded their lives to bring back the news of far-off lands. In this handsome book Ernest Dodge has told the story of the final century of geographical exploration in the Pacific by Europeans and North Americans. Beginning with the broad general outline of Pacific geography established by James Cook, Dodge groups his explorers by nationality and treats the discoveries of nearly all the major voyages through H.M.S. Challenger's circumnavigation of 1872-76. (The major omissions are Russian voyages for which there are no translated accounts.) Beaglehole's book, which served Dodge as a model, follows the three-century-long quest for Terra Australis Incognitae until Cook's facts exposed it as myth. Unlike Beaglehole, Dodge has no thread running through his account. The result is good, old-fashioned, narrative history. The author has gone directly to the explorers' accounts (or their English translations), from which he quotes liberally without interrupting the narrative flow, paying especial attention to their ethnographic observations. These tales, some lurid, some sober, were eagerly seized upon by those who stayed at home, uneasy enough about the degree of civilization in their own societies to enjoy reading about unenlightened primitives. Commerce and politics also helped launch the sailing vessels, which, as they roamed round the world, found hitherto unknown Pacific shores. Furs from the Northwest coast of North America, bêche-de-mer (an edible sea cucumber) and sandalwood from the Pacific Islands, all were exchanged in China for tea, silks, and porcelains. New geographic knowledge came also from the hunt for seals and whales. The flag followed trade into the farthest corners of the Pacific, most often to survey the coasts and make them safe for commerce, sometimes, as in the expeditions of von Bellingshausen and Wilkes, out of that pure quest for knowledge which is science.

Dodge's book is largely an account of the white man's encounter with savages, told from the white man's point of view with a few comments from the author (e.g., his condemnation of the brutality of Captain Charles Wilkes, U.S.N., in the Fiji Islands in 1840, [pp. 349-50]). Nothing is seen from the natives' viewpoint (cf. H. E. Maude, Of Islands and Men [Melbourne, 1968]), nor is the explorers' discussed critically (cf. Bernard Smith, European Vision and the South Pacific 1768-1850 [Oxford, 1960]). The author has reproduced in black and white fifty-eight representative plates from the contemporary printed narratives of the voyages he recounts; his one color plate (also the dust jacket) is an inauthentic modern painting of a Royal Navy surveying vessel. Though the maps are exceptionally well drawn they are inadequate. The reader who wants to follow the explorers' tracks to all the places Dodge mentions will need a superior atlas in front of him. Dodge provides a list of sources, arranged by chapters, in lieu of footnotes. A valuable chronological listing of voyages and their commanders, followed by an index wholly of proper names, completes the book.

HAROLD L. BURSTYN
Carnegie-Mellon University

JACQUES FREYMOND, published under the direction of. La Première Internationale: Recueil de documents. Volume 3, Les conflits au sein de l'Internationale, 1872-1873; volume 4, Les congrès et les conférences de l'Internationale, 1873-1877. Texts established and annotated by BERT ANDRÉAS and MIKLÓS MOLNÁR, with the collaboration of CAROLE WITZIG and LADISLAS MYSYROWICZ. (Publications de l'Institut Universitaire de Hautes Études Internationales, Number 48.) Geneva: the Institut. 1971. Pp. xviii, 668; 835.

Nearly ten years ago the general editor of the two tomes under review issued the first two volumes of documents bearing on the history of the International Workingmen's Association from 1864 to 1872. The volumes before us continue the record of the association to its end in 1877. The first series of documents gave us only the official proceedings of the meetings and the reports relating to them; the second supplements the official account with accessory material. With an eye to comprehensiveness the editors have included such documents as the minutes and reports of local and regional federations, circulars of dissident groups, articles written for the press by outstanding men, letters that were only peripheral to the large body, even manifestoes of seceded sects. Now pieces of this character are undoubtedly valuable, for many of them have been difficult to locate. Still it may be asked whether many of these addenda really belong in the collection under consideration. For example, are the articles of Marx and Engels on anarchism directly relevant to the documentary story of the International? The same question may be asked with respect to Cafiero's long letter of June 12, 1872, to Engels, however pertinent it is to anarchist theory. And finally does the Blanquist manifesto of 1874, Aux Communeux, which has little bearing on the International, dovetail in this assembling of papers, especially since its authors left the association some two years earlier?

These questions are not designed to derogate from the high value of the present collection. The annotations are extraordinary. There are nearly 2,100 notes spread over 390 pages. And they are not the usual notes. Many of them are longish clarifications of sources or provide biographical data on prominent and obscure members of the separate organizations, so that we have a kind of biographical dictionary of them. Much of the material was derived from manuscript papers or police records. The editors have often cited from dossiers in the Paris Prefecture of Police, and it may be assumed that they checked their findings with other sources. I still recall the amazing fantasies in such French police dossiers as those on the International in America and on Marx, alias Williams.

The present volumes span the five years following the Hague Congress, during which two battered and moribund Internationals, the centrist and the federalist, were vying for supremacy. The one was Marxist in orientation; the other, anarchist and autonomist, with the shadow of Bakunin hanging over it. The first held two congresses, one in Geneva in 1873 and another in Philadelphia in 1876. The Congress in Geneva turned out to be a fiasco, so much so that the General Council in New York was unable to get the full resolutions, not to mention a connected story of the proceedings. The Congress in Philadelphia was the swan song of the Marxist International.

The anarchist International held four congresses, starting with the one in Geneva in 1873. Despite reports of growth in Switzerland and Spain, it too was passing out. It was torn by differences over two major questions, that of public services (which inevitably brought to the fore the divisive issues of the state and political action) and that of the general strike (which many anarchists regarded as the open sesame of emancipation). By the time of the Brussels Congress of 1874 its substance was going to pieces. Two years later only a remnant organization met at Berne. Delegates of what was left of it gathered at Verviers in 1877 in preparation for a joint meeting with socialists at Ghent.

The editors were well advised to conclude the collection with the Ghent Congress. Though it does not belong in the series of meetings held by either of the two Internationals, it represented an earnest effort to restore a form of unity. In the history of socialism it stands as the forerunner of the Second International.

A word about the bibliographical equipment. The editors have apparently drawn on many libraries, archives, and special collections of unpublished papers. This in itself represents colossal industry. They have furthermore furnished us with lists of publications and periodicals, which, despite many omissions, form one of the best bibliographies on the First International I have seen. It is not too much to say that the present volumes will be a reservoir of original sources for historians of labor and social philosophy.

SAMUEL BERNSTEIN
Portland, Maine

LOUISE H. HUNTER. Buddhism in Hawaii: Its Impact on a Yankee Community. Honolulu: University of Hawaii Press. 1971. Pp. x, 266. $9.00.

Students of Hawaiian history, sociology, and politics will appreciate Buddhism in Hawaii. While its nearest counterpart, Frances Hilary Conroy's The Japanese Frontier in Hawaii (1953), deals with the interaction of the two dominant groups—the Americans and the Japanese—in the political, economic, and social scene and the rising antagonism up to 1898, Mrs. Hunter emphasizes the vicissitudes of the Japanese Buddhists from the arrival of the first group in 1868 through the tensions of the mid-1950s. Most of the first 141 men, with 6 women and 1 child, went to work on plantations. Forty of the most dissatisfied returned to Japan, 36 journeyed to the United States, while 37 sojourned in the Hawaiian Kingdom. Some of these were converted to Christianity by devout Protestant or Catholic missionaries. The Reciprocity Treaty of 1876 with the United States, heralding an enormous expansion of the sugar and related industries, pointed out the need for imported labor. King Kalakaua's visit with Emperor Meiji in 1881 resulted in a special agreement with the Japanese government for the resumption of Japanese immigration, and there followed thousands of contract laborers.

The first Buddhist priest arrived in 1889 and plans were promptly drawn for a mission hall and a Buddhist temple in the heart of Puritan Honolulu. Louise Hunter treats the initial setbacks and persistent obstacles Buddhist leadership encountered and the conflict between the Buddhist community and the Caucasian community in the changing political context of Hawaii. The narrative is neatly woven into the history of the kingdom, the republic, and the territory, along with the hatred engendered by Pearl Harbor, the mistreatment of Nisei, and World War II, which was totally disruptive of Buddhist activities. Although these activities were revived after the conflict, there was a suppression of Buddhist youth programs.

Mrs. Hunter has written a scholarly work within well-defined limits and has made a substantial contribution to the historical literature of Hawaii. Readers of her book will acquire a better understanding of the efforts and frustrations of the spokesmen of Buddhism in the Hawaiian Islands as well as an appreciation of the contribution of Buddhism to the community. "Its teaching made its followers good citizens, good neighbors, kindly men and women. No religion could be expected to do more" (p. 209).

MERZE TATE

Howard University

BERNARD FERGUSON. The Trumpet in the Hall, 1930-1958. London: Collins, 1971. Pp. 286. £2.25.

Sir Bernard Fergusson's memoirs make fascinating reading. He writes with great verve and skill, and one finishes his book with the feeling, not very common after reading the memoirs of retired soldiers, that it has certainly been worth the time. He entered the army in 1930 and retired in 1958, his career thus covering the British Army's last great war and the subsequent run-down of both that army and the empire it served. His assessment of the strange figure of Orde Wingate, under whom Fergusson served from 1942 to 1944, is very interesting, as is his account of two tours in Palestine, first as an intelligence officer in 1937-38 and then while seconded as an assistant inspector general of the Palestine police in 1947.

The book is above all an important document on the social history of the British Army in Brigadier Fergusson's time. He came, like many British regulars of the last two hundred years, from Scottish landed stock. His father and grandfather had been soldiers. When he joined the Black Watch from Sandhurst in 1931, the minimum private allowance required was £ 250 a year, and, Fergusson records, "there were at least three subalterns with private incomes of over £ 2,000 a year, . . . and one married subaltern who kept a butler." He manages to convey, better than any military memoirist I have encountered, what a small clubby world the British regular army was. The strength of the regimental tradition is also given ample illustration. "The Black Watch was more like a religion than a regiment; I certainly always thought of myself as being in the Black Watch rather than in the Army." All of this makes his account of the years after 1945 rather poignant. Officer selection procedures change, the regimental tradition comes under attack, the "American rules . . . and American jargon" of SHAPE prove that "we, the British, were in very truth the junior partners of the Americans . . . we were no longer Equal Top Nation." The book appropriately comes to an end with the tragicomic Suez operation (during which Fergusson was a rather miscast director of psychological warfare). The Trumpet in the Hall is a monument—and a farewell—to the army that Bernard Fergusson knew.

RAYMOND CALLAHAN

University of Delaware

V. L. ISRAELIAN and L. N. KUTAKOV. Diplomatiia agressorov: Germano-italo-iaponskii fashistskii blok. Istoriiia ego vozniknoveniia i krakha [The Diplomacy of the Aggressors: The German-Italian-Japanese Fascist Bloc. History of Its Rise and Fall]. Moscow: Izdatel'stvo "Nauka." 1967. Pp. 434.

This is a semipopular diplomatic history of the Axis powers from the invasion of Poland to the capitulation of Japan. It is remarkable neither for new data nor novel interpretations. Its chief interest for American historians is likely to be simply the demonstration it provides of how readily the summarized descriptions of individual events can be woven together to support different general interpretations. It shows how independent one's view of the macrocosm can be from one's view of the microcosms.

The book is framed in the orthodox Soviet Marxist-Leninist matrix of historical assumptions. The central body of the study, however, is remarkably free of obeisances to Marx and Lenin. The introductory chapter leads up to the Nazi invasion of Poland, following the conventional Soviet interpretation of 1930s diplomacy and focusing on Munich. At each critical point here a protective citation of party documents sustains the authors. The body of the study comprises twelve chapters running from fascist diplomacy during the period of "phony war," through the fall of France, the Tripartite Pact, the attack on the USSR, Japanese aggression in the Pacific, the turning of the tide of war in Russia, to the breakdown of the Axis and the end-of-war maneuvers of Axis leadership. The center of gravity of the book is, predictably and legitimately, the outlook and decisions of Axis diplomacy regarding the Soviet Union. The short conclusion draws a moral about the futile fiasco into which imperialism pushed the Axis at this juncture of the historical process, only to produce in the long range a strengthening of the forces of socialism.

The tone of the book is that of a straightforward outline without the loose edges of uncertain or perplexing areas. A clear answer is asserted for all questions. Personalities and coincidental determinants are de-emphasized, as appropriate to the philosophic stance adopted. Stalin's name appears, but infrequently and then usually in quotations from correspondence. The scope entails more survey than intensive and exhaustive historical inquiry. When one adds the characteristic of a tale fitted to a predetermined pattern that is never really questioned, there results a semblance of superficiality that is probably unavoidable given the context in which the book was produced.

But, accepting the limitations of Soviet canons of criticism and interpretation, this is not a trivial work. The twelve central chapters are not propagandistic; they proceed in a clear, professional succession, creating a coherent synthesis. Heavy reliance is placed upon the Documents of German Foreign Policy, 1918-45. Other prominent sources include the records of the International Military Tribunal for the Far East and the Nuremberg Trials, U.S. Pearl Harbor inquiry materials, and the Soviet documentary collections of the war years. German and Italian memoirs have been used, and there are occasional references to Western secondary literature. The overall impression left is of a serious historical effort by competent scholars that pushes against rather stringent ideological constraints upon historical scholarship.

DAVID D. FINLEY
Colorado College

MARK W. ZACHER. Dag Hammarskjöld's United Nations. (Columbia University Studies in International Organization, Number 7.) New York: Columbia University Press. 1970. Pp. 295. $7.00.

DAVID A. KAY. The New Nations in the United Nations, 1960-1967. (Columbia University Studies in International Organization, Number 8.) New York: Columbia University Press. 1970. Pp. xiii, 254. $10.00.

These two books, similar in weight and length, concerned with the same international organization, and published in the same series by the same publisher in the same year, could hardly be more unlike. They spring from very different investigative traditions, aspire to very different kinds of knowledge, ascribe historical momentum to very different sources, employ very different research methodologies, and arrive at very different types of conclusions, thus leaving the reviewer with very different assessments of their utility.

The Zacher monograph is best described as intellectual history. Based on a close examination of the writings and pronouncements of the United Nations' second secretary general, Zacher seeks to reconstruct the strategies and tactics employed by Hammarskjöld during his eight years in the office that are relevant to the peaceful settling of disputes, controlling the use of force, promoting arms control and disarmament, and building a more peaceful world order. In so doing Zacher implicitly ascribes historical causation to the will of individuals and relies exclusively on Hammarskjöld's views as evidence of the way in which leaders make rather than reflect the forces of history. Thus in the end Zacher is content to conclude that Hammarskjöld was an important figure in the fledgling organization over which he presided.

The Kay monograph, on the other hand, is most appropriately characterized as behavioral analysis. Based on a close, quantitative analysis of roll-call votes cast in the UN General Assembly by new (post-1960) members, Kay attempts to discern the patterns of organization and influence through which the new nations express their concerns and move toward their goals. His assessment focuses on the participation of the new nations in the consideration of decolonization, human rights, economic development, East-West differences, and organizational issues over several sessions of the General Assembly. The result is an implicit ascription of causation to the behavior of large collectivities and the political processes through which they interact. The patterns of influence uncovered by the analysis leave little room for individuals as causal agents, with the result that Kay's conclusions deal with the capacity of the new nations and the United Nations to harmonize their interests and achieve their respective aims.

For me the Kay volume has considerably greater utility than the analysis by Zacher. Both the history and the future of the United Nations strike me as lying in the actions and reactions of many people in many groups in many situations. The secretary general is not irrelevant to those interactions, and certainly every facet of the United Nations should come under scrutiny, but in the long run, if not in the short run as well, the course of international history seems likely to be shaped mainly by the convergence of forces in which the talents, aspirations, and perspectives of particular individuals are of relatively minor importance.

JAMES N. ROSENAU
Ohio State University

ANCIENT

RONALD JESSUP. South East England. (Ancient Peoples and Places, Volume 69.) New York: Praeger Publishers. 1970. Pp. 273. $8.50.

The three southeastern counties of England—Kent, Surrey, and Sussex—contain some of the most important archeological sites in the country, since they were the gateway for invaders from the Continent. Ronald Jessup's work provides a useful survey of prehistoric sites and artifacts uncovered in the region. He begins with the topological background then covers chronologically the findings from various cultures from earliest hunters and food-gatherers to the megalith builders, Bronze Age peoples, and Celts, down to the Romans. The longest chapter by far is the one on Roman Britain. The book contains seventy-five plates, a number of drawings, lists of sites and museums, and a full bibliography. Unfortunately there are no footnotes.

The absence of notes raises the question of the readership at which Jessup's book is aimed. An absence of any historical background comparable to the topological background will confound readers who are not specialists in prehistoric Britain, as will the use, without providing definitions, of technical terms such as "Hoxian Interglacial Period" or "Hallstatt culture." Nonspecialist readers will regret the scarcity of "intimate sidelights on human life" that archeological artifacts can offer. Somehow the author's imagination and literary skill are inadequate to bring the prehistoric peoples back to life for the reader. Perhaps he tried to do too much in too short a book. If he had omitted the Roman occupation, more familiar to readers, he might have had greater success with the earlier, less familiar periods.

Perhaps Jessup is aiming his work only at specialists in prehistoric archeology. Even these readers may be disappointed, since they will find few accounts of new finds, but mainly summaries of excavations already described in British archeological journals. Yet the book will earn a place on the bookshelf of the serious student of the archeology of prehistoric Britain, because it does draw together in one convenient volume descriptions of sites that otherwise would be scattered in dozens of journals and local publications.

RALPH V. TURNER
Florida State University

I. E. S. EDWARDS et al., editors. The Cambridge Ancient History. Volume 1, part 2, Early History of the Middle East. 3d ed.; New York:

Cambridge University Press. 1971. Pp. xxiii, 1058. $23.50.

Volume 1, part 2 of the new Cambridge Ancient History takes the story of the Middle East from the dawn of civilization forward to about 1750 B.C. Of its seventeen chapters, three are devoted to Egypt (Early Dynastic, Old Kingdom, Middle Kingdom), five to the lower Tigris-Euphrates valley (Protoliterate to just before the Age of Hammurabi), two to Anatolia, three to the Syria-Palestine area, and one each to Assyria, Persia, and the Aegean world along with a final chapter that deals with Indo-European origins and the impact of the Indo-European invasions upon the Middle East. Contrary to the impression of uneven distribution of bulk that these mere statistics might convey, the net result of this division of chapters is a very satisfactory balance of the material.

Nearly half a century, forty-eight years to be exact, separate this volume from volume 1 of the old edition, and one cannot resist the temptation to make certain comparisons:

Volume 1 of the first edition (1923) ran just over 700 pages and contained 17 chapters, the work of 9 contributing authors. The first volume of the new edition has been issued in parts 1 and 2 of which the latter, the one under review here, itself has 1058 pages, 17 chapters, and a total of 18 authors. In the older edition the general subject matter of the new volume 1, part 2 was covered in 400 pages. As for the bibliographies accompanying the chapters, 36 pages sufficed for volume 1 of the editio princeps; in this second part alone of the new volume 1 the bibliographies account for 112 pages.

From this it is not difficult to arrive at the conclusion that our fund of knowledge has increased not merely in bulk but also with regard to certain regions (Elam, Anatolia, Syria-Palestine) of which our view was a bit hazy fifty years ago. Moreover, where in the old edition T. Eric Peet did most of the chapters on Egypt and Stephen Langdon on Mesopotamia, we find that no fewer than six authors provided the new material on these same topics. One obvious conclusion to be drawn from this is that specialization has grown apace in the past fifty years.

On the other hand, one may ask the question "How new is this new edition?" It is called the third, and it is dated 1971. This means that its chapters, issued as separate fascicles mostly between 1961 and 1965, constituted edition two and that there was some revision before they were put together into a single volume. Careful examination does not show this revision to have been extensive except that new bibliography has been added including a few items as recent as 1968. It therefore seems fair to state that the present volume pretty much sums up scholarly knowledge and opinion as it was in 1965. The world does not stand still, and there have been some changes since that time.

These remarks are intended more as a caveat than as criticism. The new edition has been an enormous undertaking, and its preparation consumed years. Seven of the eighteen authors are now dead—most recently, C. J. Gadd in 1969, and R. DeVaux and Carl Blegen in 1971. As everybody knows, books of this sort are longer in press nowadays than used to be the case. In the edition of 1923, the bibliography included works published as recently as 1922. More important perhaps was the fact that the first edition appeared right after World War I during which scholarly activity and archeological field work had virtually come to a standstill and thus given the authors a chance to survey and judge the condition of a temporarily static field. No such opportunity was afforded the authors of the new chapters; they could look back upon their journey and describe the scenery at the point where they had left the train, but the streamliner on which they had been traveling was already miles away.

The present volume, however, is open to one general and serious criticism, and the blame originates with the excessive specialization imposed upon scholars by the growth and proliferation of the field. The old edition was intelligible to the nonspecialist historian and even the general reader, but most of the new chapters do not have these virtues. On the contrary they were written by specialists for other specialists to read. They fail to provide the overview that the nonspecialist has a right to expect in a volume of this kind, and he is in no position to judge the worth of the section he may be reading. It may be of some consolation to him to learn, however, that a certain proportion of this material, timely though it once was, will not stand the test of time and will be thrown into the discard.

An extreme, though not the only example, of topicality is afforded by James Mellaart's chapters (18 and 19a) in which an interpretation of material from a few assumed "type sites" in a virtually unexplored area is marshaled to construct hypotheses that could be negated by a few excavations on new sites in the same region. Surely our experience with Mesopotamian pottery from "type sites" as a clue to change and the identity of peoples should warn against easy acceptance of fragmentary evidence and vague similarity as historical criteria for much of anything.

Jaded perhaps by familiarity and disappointment with the fascicules that constituted the second edition, I cannot muster a great deal of enthusiasm for edition three. I have expressed my sympathy for the editors in regard to some of their problems but cannot condone a policy that allowed the authors to write for one another rather than the audience for which the CAH was originally intended.

TOM B. JONES
University of Minnesota,
Minneapolis

MORTON SMITH. Palestinian Parties and Politics That Shaped the Old Testament. (Lectures on the History of Religions, sponsored by the American Council of Learned Societies. New Series, Number 9.) New York: Columbia University Press. 1971. Pp. viii, 348. $9.00.

The thesis of this important book is that the Hebrew Bible, the "Old Testament," is the product of the victor in a prolonged conflict between two parties within Palestinian Israelite religion. "The syncretistic form of the cult" honored Yahweh along with local deities; it "was spread widely by Israelite deportation and/or emigration from the eighth century on, and evidently secured considerable adherence from gentiles." The Old Testament "representation of the Israelites as constantly in conflict with the demands of their own religion" is in fact an attack upon this "syncretistic piety" by the other side, the stricter "Yahweh alone" party; this group (at first a minority of the Israelite population) gains the support of the Persian court during the exile in the sixth century.

With the success of Nehemiah as governor in Jerusalem for the Persians, the Yahweh-alone party evolves into the "separatist party," going beyond opposing official syncretism (which had come to an end) to even more stringent demands, that is, that all who are "polluted" by the worship of other gods be barred from the Jerusalem temple and from marriage with Judeans. The separatists are supported by the Jerusalem masses and the levites; they are also apparently pro-Persian. (A mark of their success is the gradual emergence of the institution of the synagogue, which favors laity over priesthood, community assembly over temple service, and prayer in place of sacrifice; in the gentile world, too, at this time sacrifice is giving place to more "spiritual" forms of worship.) The assimilationists, on the other hand, include nearly all the priests and the gentry of Jerusalem, Judaea, and the surrounding area; they favor Egypt.

The position of this separatist Yahweh-alone group was "enhanced by the success of the literature which it produced or edited (most of the books now in the Old Testament) and by the traditional prestige of Jerusalem. Consequently the adherents of the old, popular form of the cult gradually assimilated their claims and practices to those of Jerusalem, and in effect were converted to the Yahweh-alone position." The Maccabees greatly further this process, which becomes "substantially complete" with the rabbinic Judaism of the late Roman Empire.

Smith is applying a method known already in other areas of religious studies, the identification and analysis of the various competing parties within a larger religious group; the result is a fascinating description of the ebb and flow of social, political, and religious forces particularly in the period (to which five of the seven chapters are devoted) between the fall of Jerusalem in 587 and the rise of the Maccabees in the second century B.C. He is skilled at relating political and religious developments in Palestine to those in other parts of the ancient world; his discussions of "Hellenization" and of the social stratification known from Amos and Hesiod, for example, and his presentation of Nehemiah as a classical tyrant should be read carefully by all who are interested in the Greek world.

Seldom is the Old Testament treated thus:

not as normative "sacred history," not as data for social scientific analysis, but as the product of an ancient religion, to be examined in its broad historical context as any other ancient religion would be. The emphasis on "parties" will surely be questioned: does this religion really fall so neatly into a left and right wing? Did the variations in Persian or Egyptian political influence have such strong effect upon it? If syncretistic Judaism was so common, would it really have been possible to obliterate it almost completely? But Smith presents a well-reasoned, well-documented position (nearly half the book is taken up with bibliography, indexes, and footnotes); the burden of proof is now with those who would debate him.

A. THOMAS KRAABEL
University of Minnesota,
Minneapolis

A. M. SNODGRASS. The Dark Age of Greece: An Archaeological Survey of the Eleventh to the Eighth Centuries BC. Edinburgh: University Press; distrib. by Aldine-Atherton, Chicago. 1971. Pp. xxiv, 456. $27.50.

The subtitle of this volume is far too modest. Professor Snodgrass has indeed surveyed in masterly fashion an impressive quantity of diverse and widely scattered physical remains from the period 1100–700 B.C. More than 350 sites are listed in the index, and these extend from Epirus and Macedonia in the north to Crete in the south, from Cyprus and the Asia Minor mainland in the east to the western colonies. But this is much more than a survey of the archeological evidence, for he interprets this material as he moves along, especially in the final two chapters devoted to external relations and internal development. Before reaching his own conclusions, moreover, he summarizes other interpretations that have been offered so that the reader has a good summary of the state of modern scholarship before him. The volume is logically laid out; the author considers the material in its chronological sequence and regional context, and this allows us to see both chronological development and regional diversity more clearly than has previously been the case. The text is illuminated by 138 well-placed illustrations of generally excellent quality.

Much of what Snodgrass has to say has been said before. His discussion of the pottery and the chronology derived from it is based largely on the works of Vincent Desborough and J. Nicholas Coldstream. His overall view of the Dark Age as a period of stagnation and isolation followed by the renewal of overseas contacts and several centuries of slow but steady progress until the pace of change accelerates markedly about 750 B.C., is generally similar to that advanced by Chester G. Starr. Yet the author is no slavish follower of his predecessors; he suggests numerous modifications of his own in matters both large and small. His chapter on the metal objects may be the most comprehensive discussion of this often neglected body of evidence that has yet appeared. But it is primarily in his interpretation of the archeological material that the volume will generate discussion, for many of his conclusions are original and provocative.

While Snodgrass believes that the period justly deserves the designation Dark Age he does not share the opinion that it was inaugurated suddenly by a wave of invaders from Central Europe. He finds no evidence in the physical remains that an intrusive population element was responsible for the widespread destruction that took place throughout Greece toward the end of the Bronze Age. To arrive at this conclusion he regards the presence of intrusive metal objects as insignificant when viewed against the evidence for continuity, particularly in pottery styles; and following Deshayes he rejects Desborough's notion that single burial in cist tombs is really a new phenomenon and argues that it was a carry-over from Middle Helladic times that never completely died out in the Mycenaean period. The destruction was caused, he believes, by migrating Thessalian, Boeotian, and Dorian Greeks, who were largely indistinguishable in their physical culture from the Mycenaean Greeks and who, prior to their migration, lived on the outer fringes of the Mycenaean world. Snodgrass sees Athens clearly in the vanguard throughout the Dark Age; regions outside Athens he classifies as progressive, imitative, and isolated. Athenian leadership, he suggests, may have derived from the political unification of Attica perhaps as early as the late tenth century. He would limit the period during which Greece was isolated from the outside world to hardly more than three quarters of a century between 1025 and 950 B.C. He notes that it was precisely during this period that iron artifacts begin to turn up in proportionately significant numbers in the more advanced areas of Greece, but after 950 there is a reaction against the use of iron for certain objects. He concludes that the Greeks began to work iron not because it was inherently superior to bronze but because their source of bronze ores had been cut off.

This is only a sampling of what awaits the reader of this exciting volume; it contains far more than can be dealt with here. While over-generalization from isolated finds is not always avoided, and a few slips have inevitably crept in, these are minor when viewed against the whole. Professor Snodgrass has not solved all the problems of the Dark Age, but he has risen far above the tradition of the ancient Greeks and its modern expounders. There will be many who find it difficult to accept some of his conclusions, but even his critics will have to acknowledge that he has shed much light on the Greek Dark Age. As a result, many of our fundamental beliefs about the period will have to be thoroughly re-examined.

THOMAS KELLY
University of Minnesota,
Minneapolis

HUGH LLOYD-JONES. The Justice of Zeus. (Sather Classical Lectures, Volume 41.) Berkeley and Los Angeles: University of California Press. 1971. Pp. xiv, 230. $8.50.

This volume presents a provocative if highly personal polemic against the current direction and emphases of work in Greek intellectual history from its beginnings with the Homeric poems through the philosophy of Plato in the fourth century B.C. Basically, as his title indicates, Lloyd-Jones attempts to show that the Greeks conceived of Zeus as a just god who rewarded good and punished evil; that the Greeks as early as the Iliad had a concept of justice (dike), of right and wrong; and that they conceived of the cosmos as an ordered and moral entity.

There is merit in this point of view; I have sympathy for it and would agree at many points. On Pindar, for instance, Lloyd-Jones appears to agree with me on the poet's theology ("Pindar's Second Pythian Ode," American Journal of Philology, 84 [1963]: 377-89) although he does not cite me. His work, however, largely fails because of its highly contentious style and because of a certain selectiveness of argumentation.

Lloyd-Jones develops each line of reasoning by arguing against a previous interpretation and in particular against the anthropological and psychological approaches of E. R. Dodds and A. W. H. Adkins. This is distracting in itself; but, more seriously, I feel that Lloyd-Jones has missed the general intent of his opponents and distorts the essential nature of their work. In his chapter on Sophocles he builds his argument in reaction to an article by Dodds ("On Misunderstanding the Oedipus Rex," Greece and Rome, 13 [1966]: 37-49). Dodds's intent was to criticize classical education at Oxford by analyzing the kinds of interpretation given by the undergraduates of the Oedipus Rex. His own interpretation is based on that of B. M. W. Knox (Oedipus at Thebes, [1957]). Nowhere does Lloyd-Jones cite Knox. It is certainly permissible to disagree with Knox's work but not to ignore it.

In his chapter on Homer, Lloyd-Jones shows limited understanding of the implications of oral technique. Greater understanding would in fact have buttressed his argument. Specifically Adam Parry's article "The Language of Achilles" (Transactions of the American Philological Association, 87 [1956]: 1-7) would have supported his argument about the inadequacy of deriving conceptual structure from the study of individual words.

Lloyd-Jones's knowledge, learning, and sympathy for the Greek struggle at the beginnings of Western civilization are impressive. One trusts that in the future he will rid himself of the contentious style and present us with a positive treatment of Greek thought. Classicists and ancient historians should read this work, generalists only if they are willing to read all the works Lloyd-Jones attacks.

I must in conclusion complain about the work of the University of California Press. The type is handsome and readable although the Greek, used sparsely, is badly aligned. But the notes collected at the back and numbered separately for each chapter are not provided with any headings. Consequently the search for a specific footnote is tedious and bothersome.

JOHN F. OATES
Duke University

G. E. R. LLOYD. Early Greek Science: Thales to Aristotle. (Ancient Culture and Society.) New York: W. W. Norton and Company. 1970. Pp. 156. $6.00.

JACK LINDSAY. Origins of Astrology. New York: Barnes and Noble. 1971. Pp. xii, 480. $12.75.

In his slim, clear, and cogent volume G. E. R. Lloyd presents the development of Greek science from what we can see of its beginnings through Aristotle and his most immediate successors. His work is nothing less than an excellent analysis of nonethical philosophy in this period. He includes medicine and gives much attention to astronomy but rightly shows that the epistemology and cosmology of the philosophers are central to our understanding of the problems. After the very fact of the formulation of the questions that science must answer their major achievements were the establishment of empirical research and of the importance of mathematics for understanding natural phenomena. There is a useful consideration of the degree to which experimentation and observation were employed, and sometimes misapplied, and of the degree to which they were either irrelevant or beyond the reach of the scientists of the time. For historians the discussion of the social conditions under which Greek science began and Greek doctors and philosophers worked will be of particular interest. Lloyd's comments are perceptive, and he is not tempted to go beyond the very limited evidence we have. One may regret that he has virtually nothing to say on technology—marginal to what he makes his central subject. (Technology is generally neglected in the study of Greek science as shown by the reference to the unsatisfactory work of Forbes in the bibliography as well as a pious gesture toward Lévi-Strauss for the primitives.) But more regrettable is that the limitation of the period prevents us from following Lloyd on to the great era of Hellenistic science. To lament the price of the book is only to say that one would like to see the widest use of it.

Lindsay's The Origins of Astrology is intended as a companion to his Origins of Alchemy (1970) and is generous in pages and in information, culled through wide and generally intelligent reading. The footnotes and bibliography, however, are so compressed that they are virtually useless; their purpose seems to be to assure the reader that the author has indeed read the works not to help the reader to go to them himself. Lindsay overwhelms the reader with the quantity of data, and undoubtedly his work will be a rich quarry for many a college term paper. He tries to keep the main lines of development before us and does not shirk general interpretation. He tries to make a case for Democritus as a great popularizer of Babylonian astronomy among the Greeks, but against this and for all questions of the relationship of Early Greek Philosophy and the Orient (1971), see M. L. West's new book by that title. Lindsay sees astrology, as he saw alchemy, as representing a whole view of the world in which the events of the heavens and earth are interrelated. One may demur at his notion that it flooded into Greece as a result of disillusionment with democracy after 400 B.C., but the concluding chapter in which astrology aligns itself with post-Newtonian physics gives a hint at the passionate enthusiasm that has propelled the author and the weary reader through so much dreariness.

MICHAEL H. JAMESON
University of Pennsylvania

CHESTER G. STARR. Athenian Coinage, 480-449 B.C. New York: Oxford University Press. 1970. Pp. viii, 95, 26 plates. $10.50.

The years from 480 to 449, which witnessed the development of the Athenian Empire, undeniably represent an "important but ill-lit period" in Greek history. Since contemporary evidence is extremely scanty for these years, the great abundance of Athenian coinage might seem an obvious source of illumination. But as Starr correctly observes, this material is "commonly treated as a wasteland," subject to "an amazing amalgam of views often illogical, even inconsistent," passed on without serious analysis. The consequence has been "the apparent destruction of any historical value for the coinage." Starr's object is to study the coinage for its potential value as contemporary evidence, and he begins where any solid approach must: with an attempt at classification and chronological arrangement.

An important segment of the book (chs. 2-4) is devoted to a description and systematic classification of the coinage into five groups covering 480-449, and general remarks about the vast but relatively unchanging bulk of material from 449 to the end of the century. The principles of arrangement depend largely on developments in style and particularly in design. This method seems the most feasible, since classical Athenian coins bear no date or magistrate's mark; the hoard evidence is too scanty and uncertain to permit sequential arrangement on this basis alone; and the basic elements of the coinage, Athena's head on the obverse and the owl, olive-twigg, crescent moon, and ethnic on the reverse, manifest numerous minor variations and stylistic developments. Treatment of each group includes a description of common characteristics; tabular catalog with detailed observations, weights, references to publications or collections and to plate illustrations; and a discussion of dating criteria. Starr argues cogently on the basis of the Erechtheion hoard (ca. 480) and general historical considerations (widespread Persian devastation of Attica, the need to resupply the mines with a labor-force, etc.) to a date of approximately 477 for the resumption of minting activity with a new, post-Persian War coinage (distinguished by the crescent moon and the inclusion of olive-leaves on Athena's helmet). Detailed stylistic analysis for subsequent groups follows. Two further chronological lynchpins are the Greek victory of the Eurymedon about 467 (to which is associated the brief and unusual issue of decadrachms) and the events of 449 (Peace of Callias, Congress Decree, and initiation of Pericles' building program with League funds), which necessitated the mass standardized issues that dominate the later fifth century. Starr estimates that these issues represent ninety per cent of coinage, 480-ca. 410.

This new classification leads to several interesting possibilities, including the reassignment of several issues apparently misdated in Seltman's Athens: Its History and Coinage (1924); new emphasis on the impoverishment of Athens prior to 449; the suggestion that the famous Currency Decree may have been a proposal of the Treasurers of Athena intended primarily to simplify their tasks, rather than a mark of Athenian coercion and imperialism; and the probability that Athenian coinage came to be a standard medium of exchange only after Athens had monopolized Aegean silver.

Stylistic arrangement can be impressionistic and arbitrary, but this classification is a clear, internally coherent system based on careful analysis of the numismatic evidence and broad historical perspective. Its weakest link is the terminus of 449, established by reference to historical events that are hotly debated by historians. While the argument cannot be conclusive (as Starr recognizes) it is very persuasively presented. The book is a lucid and valuable contribution demonstrating how historians and numismatists can combine their special areas of study to broaden knowledge of classical Greece.

CHARLES D. HAMILTON
University of Chicago

THOMAS FISCHER. Untersuchungen zum Partherkrieg Antiochos' VII. im Rahmen der Seleukidengeschichte. Tübingen: the Author. 1970. Pp. ix, 124. DM 12.

This is a typical German doctoral thesis in the classical history field. The author, a student of Hermann Bengtson of Munich, has collected all of the sources on the eastern aspirations of the last Seleucid ruler to attempt a reconquest of Iran, which had fallen away from the Hellenistic dynasty. His conclusions are that Antiochus VII led two expeditions, not one, against the Parthians in the period from 131 to the spring of 129 B.C. when he was killed in Parthylene instead of in Media, as most scholars have supposed. Further the Seleucid army remained intact and was again led against the Parthians by a son called Seleucus until Demetrius II usurped power from his nephew. The real catastrophe to the Seleucid army came under this Seleucus and not under Antiochus VII.

Since the classical sources are so fragmentary the historian of this period is free to speculate on the discrepancies in them. Furthermore, there are no cuneiform tablets from Mesopotamia to check the chronology of the events of 131-130 B.C., and even the dates are open to dispute. Since the sources indicate that Anti-ochus VII with a small group of followers was surprised by the Parthians and killed, Fischer assumes that the Seleucid army must have remained intact and was then led by Seleucus until he was defeated and captured. This is possible but we simply do not know. Likewise, because one source says Antiochus VII invaded Parthylene instead of Parthia, the author assumes that the Seleucid king invaded the homeland of the Parthians. But all the sources are much later than the events, and one should not count on a fine distinction in the sources rather than a not unnatural lapsus.

I can bring only one piece of evidence to counter Fischer. If Antiochus spent two winters, 130 and 129 B.C., on the Iranian plateau, the absence of his coins from the mint of Ecbatana (Hamadan) is difficult to explain. Then one would speculate otherwise than the author, but the end result was the loss of Iran forever to the Seleucids.

RICHARD N. FRYE
Harvard University

DAVID STOCKTON. Cicero: A Political Biography. New York: Oxford University Press. 1971. Pp. ix, 359. $11.25.

As consul in 63 B.C. Marcus Tullius Cicero managed to rescue Rome from the conspiracy of Catiline, an episode comparable to Everett Dirksen outfoxing Aaron Burr. An orator of great skill, vast ambition, and towering conceit (O fortunatam natam me consule Romam) Cicero was a political opportunist of middling ability and an eloquent spokesman for more powerful men. He also wrote a number of treatises, crammed with borrowed learning and banalities that impress clergymen as profound, but at least he was no Bryan—though an augur, Cicero debunked divination. It is regrettable that the self-made image of Cicero has always been admired by the type of mind that confuses American congressmen with statesmen. However, Cicero's voluminous correspondence reveals him and his society with such devastating frankness that Carcopino could argue that Augustus published it in order to discredit the old order. So much is known of the real Cicero that Professor Stockton can only make him look commendable by comparing him with a really repulsive character, Brutus, who rammed decrees through the Senate for venal personal gain and yet murdered Caesar for being "above the law." Stockton's book is a political biography aimed at undergraduates and general readers and as such is not bad, but specialists will balk at some debatable points in the first half. Despite disclaimers, the author implies that there was "a party of reform" in Republican Rome and that it was the Populares.

The second half of the book is much better and more sensible in its treatment of men and problems. What is more, Stockton writes very well—for example, Cicero "was the archetypically conservative with a small 'c.' Politics fascinated and absorbed him: the day-to-day play of affairs, the gossip, the intrigue, the formal pageant, the clash and color of personalities. Policies bored him." Good prose is no small virtue at a time when much historical writing is pedestrian and jargon-ridden, probably because of the profession's penchant for mediocrity in thought and expression. Stockton's epitaph on Cicero is superb: "His immense success as consul seduced him into entertaining ideas above his real station, leaving him with the appetite for a controlling position without the basic means to satisfy it, either in the shape of widely based political support and connections or—to be honest—the intellectual and moral equipment for such a role. For the next twenty years, 'the glory of the Nones' was to hang around his neck like a millstone dragging him further and further down." To his credit, Stockton has not told a tragic tale but an honest and instructive one with heuristic value for fields other than Roman history.

THOMAS W. AFRICA
*State University of New York,
Binghamton*

MEDIEVAL

R. W. SOUTHERN. Medieval Humanism. (Torchbook Library Edition.) New York: Harper and Row. 1970. Pp. x, 261. $9.00.

The twelve essays collected in this volume, some of them now printed or printed in full for the first time, are grouped under four headings: biographical sketches of Bede, St. Anselm, and Meister Eckhart under the heading "Three Stages of European Experience"; essays on medieval humanism, the school of Chartres, Abelard and Heloise, and Peter of Blois under "Aspects of Humanism" (the heart of the book); discussions of England's first entry into Europe in 1066 and on England's place in the twelfth-century renaissance under "Europe and the 'Other World'"; and biographical pieces on Ranulf Flambard, Henry I, and Pope Adrian IV under "Three Types of Practical Wisdom." They focus on themes that have concerned Professor Southern for some years, one of them, indeed, being "an extensive revision" of the much admired paper on Ranulf Flambard originally published in 1933 and first written, the author tells us, at the suggestion of Professor V. H. Galbraith to whom the volume is dedicated. As their titles suggest, these essays concern English history as well as Continental, the history of practical affairs as well as that of spiritual and intellectual life, broad-gauge problems of historical interpretation as well as detailed questions of manuscript provenance and textual criticism. Though I must confess to having experienced a little difficulty in discerning the "unity of theme" to which the author aspires, the "unity of treatment," on the other hand, is readily apparent. For if the subject matter of these essays reflects very well the impressive range of Professor Southern's interests, the way in which he handles it also exhibits throughout that unusual combination of bold originality with steadiness of historical judgment and reflective sensitivity to the feeling of an era that we have come to expect of his work. Nowhere is this more evident than in the numerous sections of the book concerned with biographical matters: in less than twenty pages, for example, he does more to render accessible to the modern reader both the letters of Abelard and Heloise and the personalities concealed behind them than has many a lengthier analysis.

Admiration, then, is very much in order. This is a distinguished volume. But admiration does not (and, I suspect, will not) necessarily imply agreement. There is much to provoke in these essays. Many, no doubt, will be so provoked, and most, I would guess, by the two central contributions on medieval humanism in general and on the School of Chartres in particular. For me, the latter of these, with its fascinating debunking of the special distinction traditionally accorded to the twelfth-century school at Chartres, carries conviction. But the former, with its redefinition of humanism, its depiction of Renaissance humanism as a "product of disillusion with the great projects of the recent past" (p. 60), and its insistence that "the period from about 1100 to about 1320" was "one of the great ages of humanism in the history of Europe: perhaps the greatest of all" (p. 31), however golden its vision, raises as many questions as it answers. The academic or literary view of humanism as a specific program of studies may well have its roots in the Renaissance era rather than in the conditions of the twelfth century itself, but it is no more remote from those conditions than any other view—including, perhaps, that of Professor Southern himself. It retains, moreover, the added (if fustian) advantage of providing us with an appropriate label wherewith to distinguish the approach to learning characteristic of the twelfth-century schools from that more technical and specialized approach which came to dominate in the universities of the thirteenth century. But these are big issues, and if it is the merit of this book to have raised them with such force, it is also its charm to have succeeded in doing so with such urbanity.

FRANCIS OAKLEY

Williams College

JOHN BEELER. Warfare in Feudal Europe, 730-1200. Ithaca: Cornell University Press. 1971. Pp. xvi, 272. $7.50.

Professor Beeler's book has the merit of brevity and readability. The scope of his essay, for that is what it essentially is, is enormous both in time and space. The chapters deal with Carolingian Europe, the early Capetians, Norman Italy, the Norman Conquest, crusader Syria, southern France and Christian Spain, central and northern Italy, and Germany. Moreover, he writes almost as much on the politics of war as on warfare itself. He takes an original approach, stressing the role of nonfeudal elements, of sieges as opposed to battles, of naval support, and of the terms of obligation and contract. In this he corrects traditional misunderstandings in the direction pointed by recent monographic and periodical literature. It is nevertheless difficult to assess the value of Dr.

Beeler's findings on any particular issue, as his book is practically devoid of critical apparatus. This also means that the book is of limited value to scholars, as any serious student would have to search unaided for the monographs, articles, and sources that underpin the author's findings. I will take a single example, the Normans in Sicily, as a test case. Beeler adds nothing to the material in Chalandon's monograph, which in turn (as far as the conquest of the island of Sicily is concerned) is based almost entirely on a single source, the chronicle of Geoffrey Malaterra. What Beeler gives is a brief, selective summary with stress on those elements that general accounts have usually underestimated or ignored. For the most part exact dates and details are eliminated, though, per contra, when seeking to establish a point the author will occasionally make an excursion into precise reconstruction. References to original sources, which are extremely scarce, tend to be in the form of such phrases as "it is related that . . .," and so on.

Some aspects of the subject receive little or no attention. Examples are the Peace and Truce of God, the use of parish levies, and the nature of the siege weapons employed. On the other hand, the author is trustworthy and properly cautious in dealing with numbers and composition of forces.

The only way to write about warfare in a period almost entirely lacking in record sources is by intelligent estimates of the reliability of a few chronicles written by monks remote from the business of war. Hence a major work on the subject would bristle with critical analysis and references. As it is, we have to accept Dr. Beeler's book largely on trust, an unhappy situation for the reader. It is my opinion that the essay here presented could have remained a reliable short survey, as clearly intended, without such a wholesale sacrifice of the scholarly references and criticism of sources usual in a revisionist monograph.

MICHAEL R. POWICKE
University of Toronto

Il monachesimo e la riforma ecclesiastica (1049-1122): Atti della quarta Settimana internazionale di studio, Mendola, 23-29 agosto 1968. (Pubblicazioni dell'Università Cattolica del Sacro Cuore. Contributi, Third Series. Varia, Number 7.) Milan: Editrice Vita e Pensiero. 1971. Pp. xvi, 540. L. 10,000.

This volume contains the proceedings of the fourth study week in the series organized at La Mendola by the Catholic University of the Sacred Heart in Milan. This triennial conference, like the similar gatherings at Todi and Spoleto, attracts a large and distinguished body of medievalists, and the impulse and enrichment given to the studies concerned, together with the widening of horizons and interests resulting from the contacts among scholars of many nations, cannot easily be overestimated. To those who were not fortunate enough to be present this publication will be a revelation of the wealth of scholarship that is currently being expended on monastic history. In this field the French and Belgian contribution has long been recognized, but the Italian element has increased very considerably since World War II. Professors Capitani, Fonseca, Tabacco, and Violante, together with Dom Gregorio Penco, are only five among a regiment of students of the first class engaged in monastic history. Germany and Austria have never lacked representatives, but it is good to see scholars from Central Europe, Poland, and Czechoslovakia. Even so, the roll call of La Mendola has several lacunae. Spain is not represented in strength, there are many other Cistercian and Benedictine medievalists besides Dom Jean Leclercq and Dom A. Dimier, only two English historians were present, and America had only a single, albeit a notable, representative.

The topic that binds together the individual items of the present collection is unquestionably both important and fertile. Indeed, it might almost seem to have proved itself at once too manifold and too superficially familiar to give birth to a well-proportioned, comprehensive, and deeply probing survey comparable to that of the previous conference on hermit life in the West. After all, monks and monasticism were at the very heart of the Gregorian reform; they were at once its major agents and the primary objects of attack in its prehistory. Every medievalist on a degree course could be expected to write an essay on the subject. This may explain the absence from this volume of any study of the great monastic personalities, such as Damiani, Humbert, or the Cluniac popes, and any discussion of the mutual interaction of monasticism and reform, but room might well have been found for an exposition of the programmatical monachization of the entire Church, the people of God, their worship, and their piety, which was undoubtedly a feature of the epoch and one that remained to provide a target for the Fathers of Vatican II.

Having said so much, it is time to turn to the individual contributions, which are too numerous to receive more than brief mention. The admirable opening discourse by Professor Fonseca comes nearer than any other piece to giving a survey of the whole field, and his footnotes give a fair picture of the work that is being done. Dom Grégoire of Clervaux outlines and discusses the share of Monte Cassino in the early stages of the papal reform. There is room here for a major work of scholarship that would exhibit this great abbey in its golden age, its art, its learning, and its relations with Rome and Byzantium. One short episode in its life is studied by Professor Wollasch of Fribourg, that of the papal election of Nicholas II. Professor Marselli (Rome) then provides a lengthy study of the Carthusians and a shorter one of the Cistercians. Both he and a later lecturer stress the significance of Guigo I in the history of the Charterhouse, a significance comparable to that of Stephen Harding in the history of the white monks. Professor Tabacco (Turin) then gives a clear and well-documented review of the establishment of monastic foundations by the bishops; this is followed by a review by Professor Christopher Brooke (London) of the part played by kings, especially English kings, as patrons. Professor Kloczowski gives a very welcome account, with a bibliography of Polish works, of the plantation and development of Benedictine monasteries in Poland, processes begun by St. Adalbert (d. 997), fostered by kings and bishops, largely destroyed later, and reconstituted by Duke Casimir and Boleslav the Bold, largely with the aid of monks from Bavaria.

We then pass to the realm of the mind and spirit. Dom Grégoire (Clervaux) and Professor Mollat (the Sorbonne) discuss monastic poverty and see the monks, as corporate possessioners, still aiming at the virtue of personal poverty, the way of life known to later Franciscans as usus pauper, still regarding alms and hospitality, rather than assimilation, as their duty toward material poverty, though there were many critics preparing the way for St. Francis. Dom Anselm Dimier's (Scourmont) chronological list of monastic buildings, with short comments and dates, will remain as a mine of reference, though it must have been somewhat overwhelming as a lecture. Professor Meersseman (Fribourg) provided a whiff of controversy in discussing the "monastic theology" of Dom Jean Leclercq. Meersseman had a point. There were several monks among the dialecticians (for example, Anselm and Abelard); there were the canonists, too often neglected by historians in the past; there was the intuitional or spiritual approach to theology common both to monks, such as Eadmer, and theologians, such as the Victorines. Yet in spite of this, "monastic theology" remains a significant phrase. Dom Leclercq, in the lecture that follows, met the broadside with a wave of the hand and passed on to a full and richly documented account of monastic historians and their aims. There can be no other monastic historian comparable to Dom Jean in the virtuosity with which he can produce a fresh and valuable contribution to every conference he attends. La Mendola caught him "on the hop," so to say, between Indochina and Japan, but the quality of his lecture showed no sign of fatigue. He was followed by Professor Giles Constable (Harvard), who discussed the attitude of reformers, monks, and others to the possession by monks of churches, tithes, and other spiritualia. Here attempts by theorists and rigorists to drive the monks off the rich field of spiritual income were at first partially successful, but the twelfth century saw a gradual return, even among the Cistercians, to the status quo ante. Next comes a short but remarkably taut and lucid review by Professor Duby (Aix-en-Provence) of the fluctuations between revenues in kind and in rent and the attitudes toward agrarian labor on the part of various religious orders. The Continental evidence he alleges bears out the suggestions of English economic historians that before and after the Conquest a fair proportion of the economy of monasteries rested on money. Professor Kottze (Ratisbon) looks at areas of monastic culture and suggests that while Hirsau was predominantly Augustinian in its reading, Gorze was more open to classical literature, at least in its reading habits, and that Cluny was less interested in both Fathers and classics. If the contrast of cult versus culture is too sharp a view of Cluny and Gorze, it has at least a vestige of justification.

Finally, there are four communications. Dom Penco (Finalpia) describes the function of Fruttaria (in the foothills of the Alps north of Turin) as a kind of buffer between Italian and French, reformed and unreformed, zones. W. Kurze (German Institute of Rome), with notes on the expansion and constitution of the order of Camaldoli, pleads for a critical history of the order, and J. Plocha discusses the origin (probably Bavarian) of the Polish abbey of Mogilno. Professor Capitani (Lecce) writes at some length on the imperial connections in abbeys of central and southern Italy. On an earlier page Professor Zerbi (Milan) had given a summary of the topics discussed and distributed the appropriate bouquets of commendation.

The value and interest of the lectures are greatly enhanced by the records of the discussions that followed them and that often modified or emphasized particular points made by the lecturer. The interventions of such well-known historians as Professor Raymonde Foreville (Caen) and Professor J. F. Lemarignier were particularly helpful. One wonders whether shorthand or tape recording was the medium employed in preserving these discussions, which were presumably subedited to a certain extent. In either case the reportage is good, and the rare occasions where the English, for example, makes little sense were probably due to phonetic difficulties. The printing in general, though polyglot, is practically faultless.

As the years pass and the number of such conferences multiplies, suitable topics with the requisite depth and breadth will become harder to find until after twenty years or so another generation can take a fresh look at old issues. But the pool of research and scholarship on which the organizers can now draw is so great that we need not fear for the immediate future. (The success of such meetings, so experience seems to show, is the selection of a subject of considerable depth but limited range and the provision of an assembly of limited size and scholarly competence in that subject. Crowded conferences and scattered interests make for social, rather than academic, profit.

La Mendola deserves the support of all medievalists interested in the epoch of spiritual reform and intellectual adolescence in medieval Europe.)

M. DAVID KNOWLES
Wimbledon, London

HENRY MARSH. Dark Age Britain: Some Sources of History. [Hamden, Conn.:] Archon Books. 1970. Pp. 221. $7.50.

Nine literary sources of varied character and overlapping coverage supply the bulk of our historical knowledge of Britain during the half thousand years following the Roman withdrawal. At the beginning of the period the paramount event is the adventus saxonum. Gildas, Nennius, the Annales Cambriae, and Brut y Tywysogion deal with the struggle between the Romano-British provincials and the Germanic invaders from the point of view of the former while Bede and the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle reflect English traditions. In the middle of the period interest attaches chiefly to Bede's account of the establishment and progress of Christianity among the Anglo-Saxons. During the eighth and ninth centuries the central theme is political evolution culminating in the emergence of the English kingdom under Alfred. This history is traced primarily in the Chronicle with Asser's biography of Alfred providing additional matter at the end of the period. Two post-Conquest writers, William of Malmesbury and Geoffrey of Monmouth, also contribute some information about these earlier times, perhaps drawn from lost materials, although the latter's work is more fiction than history.

Mr. Marsh discusses each of these works in sufficient detail to permit appreciation of their individuality and comparative reliability while also revealing a pattern of relationships within the group. In this regard he is open to some criticism. He appears unaware of the dependence of much of the early Chronicle on Bede, and he invokes lost British sources for evidence manifestly obtained elsewhere. Even so, and despite a regrettable puerility of style (the book is crowded with "proud armies," "ruthless adventurers," "cruel ships," ad nauseam), the author might have produced a useful popular study had he been better informed about his subject.

As it is the book offers little to the knowledgeable student, and the inexperienced student will be ill-served by exposure to its errors.

For example, Mr. Marsh is mistaken in claiming that Britons are mentioned in early English laws (p. 44); Arthur's death is not given as 570 in the Annales Cambriae (p. 82; cf. p. 51); the E rescension of the Chronicle was maintained only until 1154, not "100 years or more after the Norman conquest" (p. 93); St. Neot, whatever his date, certainly did not live "100 years and more after Asser's death" (p. 149); the Battle of Hastings was fought in October, not September (p. 155); and Harold Godwinson was not present at the Battle of Fulford (p. 156). Moreover, the genealogy and chronology of Alfred's family is incorrect (p. 173); the discussion of Manuscript A of the Annales Cambriae is nonsensical (pp. 45-46); and the St. Alban entry in the Chronicle is not "derived from a British source" (p. 95) but from Bede (bk. 1, ch. 7), who took it from a Passio Albani of which Mr. Marsh is apparently ignorant (p. 112).

In addition to blunders misprints abound: for instance, interdiction for indiction (p. 93), Britain for Briton (p. 98), 751 for 731 (p. 124), Coxson for Cotton and Beohtric for Eohric (p. 145), Arwulf for Arnulf (p. 150), Enchirdion for Enchiridion (p. 151), and Aethwulf for Aethelwulf (index). The "Note on Texts and Translations," in lieu of bibliography, overlooks several recent, now standard editions and translations, notably, Williams's Gildas, Wade-Evans's Nennius, Plummer's (and now Colgrave and Mynors's) Bede, Whitelock's Chronicle, Jane's Asser, and Campbell's Aethelweard.

RONALD D. WARE

University of Massachusetts,
Amherst

PETER CLEMOES and KATHLEEN HUGHES, editors. England before the Conquest: Studies in Primary Sources Presented to Dorothy Whitelock. New York: Cambridge University Press. 1971. Pp. xvi, 418. $23.50.

To honor Dorothy Whitelock on her seventieth birthday some of her ablest co-workers in the field of Anglo-Saxon studies have contributed twenty-two scholarly articles, which are published here along with a bibliography of Miss Whitelock's own wide-ranging works. The twenty-two articles span the variety of disciplines that are presently being directed toward the investigation of the Anglo-Saxons: history, literature, art history, place-name studies, linguistics, numismatics, paleography, and archaeology. The term "primary sources" in the subtitle embraces not only historical documents but also literary works, coins, buildings and building sites, place-names, and artifacts. Altogether these studies bear impressive testimony to the intelligence, sophistication, and scope of investigative techniques in modern Anglo-Saxon scholarship. They disclose, too, the seminal importance of Dorothy Whitelock's own contributions to Anglo-Saxon literature and history.

Compared to other collections of this sort, the present volume maintains a remarkably uniform standard of excellence. Assembled here are examples of the top drawer work of the finest scholars in the field. Peter Hunter Blair, applying shrewd critical analysis to Bede's Ecclesiastical History, suggests an important chronological revision in the relationships of Paulinus, Queen Aethelberg, and King Edwin that underlay the conversion of Northumbria, and in the process one learns more of Bede's own method of writing history. Bede's use of sources is further illuminated in Paul Meyvaert's subtle textual criticism of the Libellus Responsionum in which it is shown that Bede's text of the Libellus was not a contemporary forgery, as has been suggested, but a corrupt version of a much older original. J. M. Wallace-Hadrill deals expertly with relationships between St. Boniface and the Frankish Church and with antecedent Frankish ecclesiastical reform, giving us in the process a singularly persuasive reinterpretation of Charles Martel's confiscations of Church property. Kathleen Hughes summarizes and amplifies past scholarship on Anglo-Celtic ecclesiastical relationships after Whitby, tracing the work of Irish churchmen in England and English churchmen in Ireland and demonstrating their fruitful influences on one another up to the Synod of Chelsea in 816. Nicholas Brooks employs his intimate knowledge of the documentary sources to revise current opinion on the origin and diffusion of the threefold military obligation. Neil Ker, using rigorous techniques of handwriting analysis, finds the hand of Wulfstan the homilist, bishop of Worcester and archbishop of York, in a number of Worcester manuscripts including Hemming's cartulary. Similarly, John Pope, taking issue with Dorothy Whitelock, argues from a stylistic analysis of Aelfric's rhythmical prose that the Old English version of the Ely Privilege was composed by Aelfric himself. Stylistic analysis is deftly used in Cecily Clark's study of the pre-Conquest Anglo-Saxon Chronicle, wherein the distinction between history and annal receives valuable clarification.

These examples demonstrate both the scholarly ingenuity and the interdisciplinary range of the contributors, and the remaining pieces follow the pattern. Henry Loyn's learned and graceful state-of-the-field chapter points to the vitality and variety of Anglo-Saxon towns and suggests promising new avenues of investigation. Political theory is represented by Dorothy Bethurum Loomis's investigation of the homilist Wulfstan's ideas of polity and ecclesia, which anticipate Gregorianism in their emphasis on churchmen's role in the world and the Anglo-Norman Anonymous in their rejection of papal monarchy, but differ from both—and from Carolingian political thought—in their conclusion that bishops are the proper leaders of the Christian commonwealth. The multidisciplinary approach finds further expression in Kenneth Cameron's application of place-name evidence—specifically, the Grimston hybrids—to the problem of Scandinavian settlement in the territory of the Five Boroughs, in R. I. Page's use of inscriptions to cast light on the survival of the Scandinavian language in England, and in the chapter by Olof von Feilitzen and Christopher Blunt, which catalogs the names of moneyers on the coins of King Edgar, enabling the authors to identify a considerable number of Scandinavian and Continental personal names. Michael Dolley's chapter on the nummular brooch recently discovered at Sulgrave instructs us on the author's expert methodology no less than on the subject of his inquiry. The same is true of H. M. Taylor's innovative use of "structural criticism" to date and explain the components of the Anglo-Saxon church of St. Wystan's at Repton. The technique of identifying earlier sources in Anglo-Saxon writings is demonstrated in Janet Bately's study of classical additions to the Orosius translation and in Alistair Campbell's article on earlier heroic verse in Beowulf, which confirms his interpretation of the poem as a carefully constructed literary work rather than the product of an illiterate singer. The late Francis Wormald contributed a masterful treatment of the stylistic antecedents to the Winchester school of illumination back to the reign of Alfred. Several disciplines meet in Peter Clemoes's illustrated discussion of how contemporary visual representations and liturgical passages influenced Cynewulf's poem on the Ascension. René Derolez provides a useful study of Anglo-Saxon cartography and geographical knowledge in the course of analyzing the account of the Norwegian explorer Othere in the Old English translation of Orosius. And J. E. Cross uses a variety of literary and historical sources to investigate Anglo-Saxon attitudes on the "just war." The Festschrift concludes with an admirable article by Martin Biddle summarizing present knowledge in several fields of Anglo-Saxon archeology and urging the necessity of future interdisciplinary training such as to produce individual scholars with expertise in both history and archeology.

England Before the Conquest is not without fault. It is extraordinarily expensive, and it suffers from the organizational choppiness common to all Festschriften. Anglo-Saxon England awaits its new Stenton. But as a comprehensive and authoritative presentation of the current state of the art in Anglo-Saxon studies, this book will be essential to students and scholars of the period in all the relevant disciplines.

C. WARREN HOLLISTER
University of California,
Santa Barbara

T. B. PUGH, editor. Glamorgan County History. Volume 3, The Middle Ages: The Marcher Lordships of Glamorgan and Morgannwg and Gower and Kilvey from the Norman Conquest to the Act of Union of England and Wales. Cardiff: University of Wales Press for the Glamorgan County History Committee. 1971. Pp. xix, 704, 6 maps, 33 plates. £12.00.

This is a fascinating volume, dealing with an area and a period that offer material of deep significance: the intermingling of Norman and Anglo-Saxon with the Welsh, the contrast of upland and lowland, the workings of Marcher lordship, the growth and decline of one of the great earldoms that played a notable part in English and Welsh politics, the impact on Marcher outlook of the Edwardian conquest of North Wales, and the varied fortunes of religion and the Church. This volume also relates the vicissitudes of economic life, the rise of the gentry, and last, but by no means least, the remarkable literary tradition of Morgannwg. With regard to this tradition, Ceri M. Lewis in a fine essay has said that, among the major historic regions of Wales, Morgannwg alone can legitimately claim to have nurtured not merely one, but two great literary traditions.

A distinguished group of writers, under the able editorship of T. B. Pugh, has produced a volume that will bear comparison with the best of the Victoria County Histories. Most of the contributors are in Welsh universities, and the volume is incidentally a tribute to modern Welsh historical writing, being specially marked by researches in depth into original sources. But the editor himself is at the University of Southampton. Other writers are in London and Leeds. Michael Altschul, who writes with much authority on the lordship of Glamorgan and Morgannwg in the thirteenth and early fourteenth centuries, is at Western Reserve University in Cleveland, Ohio.

The themes touched on above show the breadth of the treatment and its value to all students of the period. The scope might conceivably have been extended a little to deal specifically with the influence on the outlook and English policy of the lords of Glamorgan, as these were affected by Welsh power in the North under Llywelyn ap Gruffydd and by the growing power of the English monarchy, especially in the reign of Edward I. Whether, and to what extent, such developments influenced the attitude of the lords of Glamorgan toward English politics it may be impossible to say. Mr. Pugh, who writes about the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries, makes no real effort to do so. He is content, for the most part, to record the ambitions and aggrandisements of the lords, pursued as relentlessly at the royal court as in Wales. He will not even concede any qualities of statesmanship to Hugh Despenser the Younger, under Edward II, challenging such veteran authorities as Stubbs and Tout.

His summary of Warwick the Kingmaker's attitude in the fifteenth century is similarly quite uncompromising: "It was defence of his own territorial interests in the Welsh Marches that compelled Warwick to become a Yorkist, and fight against the king at St. Albans on May 22" (p. 196).

This is nevertheless a memorable volume. It sums up the quite remarkable researches of the last generation and will be an indispensable vade mecum to all future scholars in the field.

B. WILKINSON

University of Toronto

F. R. H. DU BOULAY and CAROLINE M. BARRON, editors. The Reign of Richard II: Essays in Honour of May McKisack. [London:] University of London, Athlone Press; distrib. by Oxford University Press, New York. 1971. Pp. xvi, 335. $16.00.

ANTHONY GOODMAN. The Loyal Conspiracy: The Lords Appellant under Richard II. Coral Gables, Fla.: University of Miami Press. 1971. Pp. xi, 212. $7.95.

The reign of Richard II has probably received more attention from English medievalists than any other save those of the Conqueror and John. The explanation lies not only in its great events but also in its contribution to the training of English undergraduates in history. First at Manchester and then at Oxford it provided a "special subject"—the study of a short period from its sources, which forms the culmination of a history student's career at an English university. This Festschrift, commemorating the achievements of Professor McKisack, who founded such a "special subject" at London, is a testimony to the stimulus that undergraduate teaching on the reign has given to research.

A number of useful studies examine technical aspects of Richard II's diplomacy, Henry of Derby's expeditions to Prussia, the local governments of East Anglia, London chantries, and the place of the reign in Tudor and Stuart historiography. Two describe the king's relations with the leading cities of his kingdom, though in the light of Caroline Barron's examination of those with London it is difficult to accept John H. Harvey's suggestion that Richard seriously intended moving his capital to York. Three contributors have produced exceptionally valuable studies. J. J. N. Palmer discusses Richard's foreign policy after 1389, showing that it made a vital contribution to the collapse of French ambitions in Italy. The Anglo-French expedition, which was planned to go there in the spring of 1397, was intended to force on the rival popes the compromise solution to which English policy had helped convert the French. R. R. Davies illuminates the last two years of the reign, describing how Richard made Cheshire the base for a remarkable concentration of power, which, benefiting from the Arundel forfeitures, extended into Wales. For the first time we obtain precise information on the scale and expense of the famous Cheshire retinue (pp. 268-69). The value of the contribution by R. L. Storey transcends the limits of the reign. He demonstrates that the order restricting the right to grant liveries to secular peers does not deserve the attention it has received from the historians of "bastard feudalism." It was an ordinance issued by king and council after, and not a statute of, the Parliament of January 1390; nor did it deal at all with retaining. At the same time his discussion contributes to parliamentary history by exhibiting friction between Lords and Commons over the maintenance of law and order.

Other studies do not merit such praise. Barbara Harvey's discussion of the monks of Westminster and Oxford may throw useful light on the relations between monastic communities and the universities, but most of it is irrelevant to Richard II's reign. In view of V. H. Galbraith's long career of remarkable scholarship, the mixture of the amateur and the professional in his "Thoughts about the Peasants' Revolt" comes as a great disappointment. His remarks on villeinage are not rooted in a thorough knowledge of the literature. It would have been so much better if he had worked out in detail his suggestion that Walsingham was indebted to the same source as the Anonimale chronicle for his account of the revolt. Does he really consider (as p. 51 implies) that they shared the same source in their accounts of the Good Parliament? The matter is too important to be dealt with in asides. The weakest study of all is J. A. Tuck's. Padded out with references to royal patronage from the sixteenth through the eighteenth centuries, it provides a thin sketch of administrative practice that hardly accords with the promise of the title "Richard II's System of Patronage." We learn nothing of the way patronage fitted into royal policy as a whole.

The industry with which Anthony Goodman has culled the sources of the reign for his book on the Appellants is not matched by either his analytical skill or the interest of his conclusions. Roughly one-quarter of the text is a turgid survey of the events of 1387 to 1389. There follow seven chapters containing biographical studies of the Appellants and, in the case of Thomas of Woodstock and the earls of Arundel and Warwick, discussions of their landed wealth and affinities. For most of the time the connection between these and the book's main theme is not clear. Mr. Goodman may be right that Thomas of Woodstock and Mowbray needed royal patronage to maintain their position. But two pages of conclusion, containing a somewhat rhetorical question about a crise nobiliaire followed by guesses, are hardly a substitute for sustained argument. The book's title begs questions that are hardly raised and certainly not answered. How, for example, can it be reconciled with evidence that Richard was deposed for a few days? The state of the sources may make a more satisfying treatment difficult. But, even so, this effort is not worth a book.

J. M. W. BEAN
Columbia University

VEIKKO LITZEN. A War of Roses and Lilies: The Theme of Succession in Sir John Fortescue's Works. (Suomalaisen Tiedeakatemia Toimituksia, Series B, Number 173.) Helsinki: Suomalainen Tiedeakatemia. 1971. Pp. 73. 11 M.

This is a careful and detailed little study of one of the main themes in the published work of Sir John Fortescue (?1385-1473), chief justice of England, chancellor, polemicist, councilor, and political theorist. Mr. Litzen argues that the most fruitful approach to Fortescue's work is through his theories of succession. For of all his known works only one, now lost, is "irrelevant to the problems of English and French kingship." The critical problem of fifteenth-century kingship in England was that of a disputed succession, and Fortescue's explanations of what constituted the right to govern are the heart and soul of his writing. Moreover, it is by taking this angle of approach that we can best see Fortescue as a political theorist of and in his own time.

The impetus to Fortescue's serious political writing came with Richard of York's claim to the throne in October 1460, as "lawful heir of Edward III and Henry III." To the beginning of the Lancastrian exile the following year Fortescue tried to refute York's claim, principally by denying the female right to transmit a claim to the throne. In exile he became a polemicist, writing to gain the support of the king of France for his master. Upon his re-establishment—at eighty—as councilor to Edward IV he "refuted many of his old arguments," but never abandoned those essential to the "bearing of De Natura," his principal work on the succession.

Mr. Litzen is concerned with exonerating Fortescue from charges of duplicity (in serving the house whose right to kingship he had for so long denied). Mr. Litzen's judgment of Fortescue recalls that of Sir John Fortescue's own great descendant, the historian of the British Army: "He was loyal in a time of treachery, upright in a time of violence, constructive in a time of destruction, and hopeful in a time of despair."

JOSIAH BUNTING

United States Military Academy

MICHEL ROBILIN. Le terroir de Paris aux époques gallo-romaine et franque: Peuplement et développement dans la Civitas des Parisii (Seine, Seine-et-Oise). Preface by ALBERT GRENIER. 2d rev. ed.; Paris: Éditions A. et J. Picard. 1971. Pp. xiv, 6-491. 110 fr.

Some twenty years ago Michel Roblin's Le terroir de Paris marked the first basic revision of the d'Arbois de Jubainville and Camille Jullian explanation for the pattern of human settlement during the Gallo-Roman and Merovingian periods in the area around Paris as well as in most of France. This second edition, essentially an amplification of the first, incorporates the research of Roblin and fellow scholars during the intervening twenty years. Like the first it is a model of scholarship combining the knowledge and methodology of the historian, geographer, geologist, archeologist, orographist, numismatist, botanist, and zoolo-gist. Roblin's objective is to trace the origins of rural settlement, the clearing of land, the growth of villages and of hamlets, and the pattern of land and water routes. His hope has been "concrétiser l'oeuvre humaine au cours des siècles."

During the twenties when Jullian did his celebrated work on Gallo-Roman colonization he agreed with Jubainville that the names of early Frankish rural settlements or villages were derived from the names of Gallo-Roman domains whose names came from their Roman masters. Finding that numerous place names in the Merovingian and Carolingian periods ended in acus, he argued, for example, that the domain of Sabinus came to be called Sabiniacus from which were derived the French Savignac of the Midi and the Savigny of the north. There was a similar derivation for other such names in the Paris region as Orly, Passy, Antony, Bobigny, and Chevilly. If, then, the Merovingian and Carolingian estates and villages were the direct heirs of the Gallo-Roman, there was, according to Jullian, a continuity of civilization and agrarian exploitation running from antiquity up to the present day.

The research of Roblin appears to undermine the Jubainville-Jullian explanation by arguing with ample evidence that Gallo-Roman domains owed their names not only to their masters but also to common names. For example, the Latin Buxus that in French is buisson (bush or thicket) became Buxiacus and eventually Boissy or Bussy. Roblin found thirty toponyms derived from proper names as against forty derived from common names, with the origin of another ten being uncertain. He proves that many of the common names were those of streams, rivers, routes, and other parts of the physical terrain that he could not precisely date because they even antedated the Celtic or pre-Roman period. Noting also that numerous villages (communes today) around Paris were named after such saints as Etienne, Maurice, Martin, and Germain, he contends that the foundation of a church upon a certain site generally followed soon after the introduction of the cult of the saint for which the church was named. When he could date the introduction of a saint's cult into a region, he could then be reasonably accurate in his dating of the church and obtain a clearer notion of chro-nology. Such painstaking research has permitted Roblin to date the clearance of thickets and forests in the area around Paris as well as their eventual settlement and cultivation.

A treasure house of information, this convincing and perhaps definitive work on the settlement and clearance of lands of the so-called Civitas Parisiaca in the Gallo-Roman and Frankish periods contains detailed studies of all the communes in the Paris area, indexes of place and common names, an exhaustive bibliography, supplementary appendixes, and fine aerial photographs.

BRYCE LYON
Brown University

JOSEPH R. STRAYER. The Albigensian Crusades. (Crosscurrents in World History.) New York: Dial Press. 1971. Pp. 201. $7.95.

In this readable book Professor Strayer again shows the lively confidence and ease that come from long intimacy with his favorite subject, thirteenth-century France. He begins by sketching the conditions in what, following some recent French writers, he calls Occitania during the twelfth and thirteenth centuries. He briefly details the origins and beliefs of Catharism. He then proceeds to a narrative account of the events leading up to the Crusades, the wars and politics of the Crusades themselves, the final extirpation of the heretics by the Inquisition, and the absorption of Occitania by France. There is an appendix with the author's own translations of some Catharist rituals and a somewhat exiguous bibliography.

Throughout, the author judiciously avoids catharophile extremes on the one hand and apologies for papacy or monarchy on the other. It may be that the serenity of his account somewhat mutes the human agony and that he does not, beyond the conventional expression of distaste for crusaders and inquisitors, fully plumb the pathos of the exploitation of religion by Christian leaders in order to sanction violence for political ends. Yet he conveys clearly the tragic sense of good men moving—largely unwittingly and unnecessarily—to their ruin. Pedro II of Aragon, the hero of the Catholic Reconquista, slain at Muret by the Catholic forces of Simon de Montfort; Amaury de Montfort earnestly and incompetently striving to retain his father's conquests; Louis VIII's Occitan triumph of 1226 ending in his death from a fever contracted on the campaign; the well-meaning but indecisive Count Raymond VI hopelessly hoping to please the pope and the king and Simon de Montfort and his own people: in these and other incidents Professor Strayer gently holds an ironic mirror to the sad countenance of human folly.

For the author the chief importance of the Crusades lies in their political effects. They gave Occitania—and a Mediterranean coastline—to France, making that country the strongest in Europe and encouraging its rulers to press their power further than perhaps they ought to have done. At the same time the Crusades encouraged the papacy to be too dependent upon political and military power, particularly that of France. Thus the crisis of Crown and papacy that built under Louis IX and exploded under Philip the Fair was in large measure prepared by the Crusades.

The general reader and the student will be grateful for this book, the most coherent brief account of the Albigensian Crusades yet to appear.

JEFFREY B. RUSSELL
*University of California,
Riverside*

DIMITRI OBOLENSKY. The Byzantine Commonwealth: Eastern Europe, 500-1453. (History of Civilization.) New York: Praeger Publishers. 1971. Pp. xiv, 445. $15.00.

This book deals with the history of Byzantium's relations with the mostly Slavic peoples of Eastern Europe and with the Byzantine heritage shared by them. The geographic focus is on the regions now constituting Yugoslavia, Bulgaria, Romania, and Russia, but the territories of present-day Czechoslovakia and Hungary also appear. The internal history of the Byzantine Empire and of the Slavic peoples as well as relations with non-Slavic (Arab, Turkish, Western) groups are discussed only to the extent that they are indispensable for an understanding of the main theme.

The geographic setting of the book is described in highly informative and readable fashion in the first chapter. It emphasizes the physical features and the medieval road nets of the northern Balkans, of the North shore of the Black Sea, and of Russia. There follows a second chapter in which the author discusses the origins of the Slavic peoples and of some of their Turkish conquerors and their early relations with Byzantium. In the next two chapters Obolensky tells of the military, religious, cultural, and economic relations of the Byzantine Empire with the Balkan Slavs in the ninth and tenth centuries. Chapter 5 is devoted to Byzantium's relations with East Central Europe and concentrates on the missionary work of Cyril and Methodius in Moravia and on Byzantino-Magyar relations to the eleventh century. The author then turns in the sixth chapter to a consideration of the Empire's dealings with the Turks of Central Asia, the Khazars, and the Russians.

The narrative has thus reached the beginning of the eleventh century, in some cases even a later period. At this point Obolensky inserts a predominantly analytical chapter on "The Bonds of the Commonwealth," in which he describes the various types of political ties that bound the members of the Commonwealth to Byzantium—for example, the military annexation of Bulgaria by Basil II, the more tenuous subjection of Serbia, and the largely theoretical dependence of Kievan Russia. Byzantium's relations with Eastern Europe after the Fourth Crusade and the Mongol conquest of Russia are the subject of chapter 8. The three concluding chapters are again analytical and predominantly cultural. In chapter 9 Obolensky discusses the various factors facilitating or impeding the diffusion of Byzantine civilization in the Slavic world: ethnic conditions in the receiving countries; merchants, mercenaries, and monks as carriers of Byzantine civilization; geographic factors; the degree of nomadism or settled conditions; and the political organization in the Slavic countries. The tenth chapter analyzes the impact of Byzantium upon the religion and law of the Commonwealth, and the last chapter, one of the most interesting in this excellent work, literature and art. In a brief epilogue the author discusses the fate of the Byzantine heritage in the Slavic world after the Ottoman conquest of the Byzantine Empire.

The principal concept of the book, that of the Byzantine Commonwealth, is unfamiliar.

In spite of a disclaimer in the introduction one cannot help feeling that it is inspired by the model of the British Commonwealth of Nations rather than by that of the res publica Romana or of the Roman Empire (but see in this regard the interesting discussion of the possible survival of the Roman concept of foederatio on pages 276–77). Obolensky defines the Byzantine Commonwealth as "that supranational community of Christian states of which Constantinople was the centre and Eastern Europe the peripheral domain" (p. 277) and claims that "it was a real society, not a mere intellectual abstraction" (p. 3). It achieved its greatest territorial extent and unprecedented cultural and political cohesion in the early eleventh century (p. 203) and "came to a close" with the Ottoman conquest of Constantinople or somewhat later (pp. 362–63). The Byzantine Commonwealth was so real that it and its cultural centers can be mapped (see maps 7, 9, and 10). Its nature and vitality can most clearly be perceived in the realm of culture (p. 272): it created a supranational literature in Old Church Slavonic (p. 325) as well as a number of regional "recensions" of Byzantine civilization (p. 294) and permitted intellectual movements, such as Hesychasm and the thought of the school initiated by Euthymius of Trnovo, to migrate throughout its vast area. Obolensky uses the concept skillfully and discreetly, and in his hands it lends cohesion to a long work dealing with a great variety of peoples and cultures. It has its conceptual difficulties, however. Similar books could be written on Byzantium's relations with the Western and Near Eastern worlds where Byzantine civilization also had its impact. Were there additional Byzantine commonwealths in Western Europe (Venice, Southern Italy, Sicily) and in the Moslem world? Or was what Obolensky means by the term only one (largely Slavic) part of a larger whole embracing all the regions influenced at one time or another by Byzantium? Furthermore, does one do justice to the Slavic peoples by emphasizing the influence of Byzantine civilization and mentioning their pre-Byzantine or non-Byzantine traditions largely as factors facilitating or impeding Byzantinization, as Obolensky does so suggestively? Clearly the Byzantine perspective represents a healthy antidote against nationalist views of history frequently held in the Balkan countries, but it does not tell the whole story. Whatever the answer may be to theoretical reservations of this kind there can be no doubt that Byzantine relations with, and the Byzantine impact upon, Eastern Europe are a legitimate and fruitful field for investigation and that the concept of a Byzantine Commonwealth has enabled Obolensky to produce a unified and outstanding survey of the entire field.

Indeed its strength lies in the breadth of the geographic perspective, the useful synthesis of previous investigations—many of them written in Slavic languages—and the skillful alternation between narrative and analytical chapters, which makes the book a pleasure to read. It offers a rich fare of which the summary of chapters gives only a very imperfect idea. Readers will discover in it an interesting coverage of well-known episodes in Byzantine and Slavic history, such as the account of Slavic origins, or of the ecclesiastical mission of Cyril and Methodius to Moravia and of its consequences for Slavic civilization, or of the Byzantine conquest of Bulgaria in the tenth and eleventh centuries and of the conversion of Russia. Obolensky also develops many less familiar topics—for instance, the administrative and ecclesiastical reorganization of the Balkan regions reconquered from the Slavs in the ninth century, heresies such as Bogomilism, manifestations of political or cultural resistance to Byzantinization and symptoms of regional deviations from the Byzantine model, national assemblies in Serbia, the cult of rulers and royal martyrs in Russia and Serbia, regional innovations in the liturgy and art of the Slavic countries (for example, the representations of the Feast of the Protective Veil of Our Lady in Russian icon painting). It is rare indeed that one fails to find information on topics relating to Byzantino-Slavic relations. In this regard I note the absence of a reference to recent archaeological work in Moravia, which has yielded considerable information on the Christianization of the country prior to the arrival of the Byzantine missionaries or to Basil II's subjection of the autocephalous archbishopric of Ochrida in Bulgaria to the Byzantine emperor rather than to the patriarch of Constantinople.

The schematic but adequate black-and-white maps and the ninety-three clear and carefully selected photographs, frequently of insufficiently known art objects illustrating Byzantino-Slavic relations, are closely integrated with the text and facilitate its understanding. Footnotes are used sparingly. The book concludes with a suggestive and valuable bibliography of almost thirty pages where the reader will find, topically arranged, the basic literature both in Slavic and Western languages.

The book is so useful and interesting that it deserves a prominent role in the historical curriculum of American universities and colleges. It will of course serve admirably as reading matter for students interested in Byzantino-Slavic relations. But it is too stimulating to restrict its function. It should also find its place in courses devoting attention to the history of the Byzantine Empire, the Balkan Peninsula, or Russia, perhaps even in classes on Western medieval history.

PAUL J. ALEXANDER
*University of California,
Berkeley*

MODERN EUROPE

J. H. ELLIOTT. The Old World and the New, 1492-1650. (The Wiles Lectures given at the Queen's University, Belfast, 1969. Cambridge Studies in Early Modern History.) New York: Cambridge University Press. 1970. Pp. x, 118. Cloth $5.95, paper $1.95.

Most historians will agree that the discovery and settlement of the New World was one of the pivotal occurrences in modern history. But what exactly constitutes its significance? Was it the implantation of European religion, language, and culture upon a new continent, or was it the exploitation and domination of the Amerindian civilizations with European technology and institutions? The question has another side, too, and it is this to which Professor J. H. Elliott addresses himself. What was the impact—intellectual, sociological, economic, and political—of the discovery of America upon Europe?

The question is more easily formulated than answered, and it is unlikely that anyone will give a more succinct, thought-provoking, and meaningful analysis of it than Professor Elliott has done. He grapples with the puzzling problem of why the incorporation of the New World into the intellectual pattern of the Old took so long. The main impediments, as he sees them, were the people's inability to fully comprehend the new societies. This was due in part to the barriers of time, distance, sociointellectual heritage, and language. Since the process of comprehending something new and different requires the reassessment and possible abandoning of many traditional assumptions, it was difficult for European society to come to terms with America. Elliott brilliantly summarizes the process by which the Indies were gradually assimilated into the European system of thought.

He then evaluates the impact of New World silver upon the economic life of Europe and the changes in political direction brought about by the expanded area of political jurisdiction and conflict. While rejecting the notion that the Price Revolution was caused by the influx of American treasure, the author sensibly demonstrates that its presence helped keep the inflation going once it was started. Similarly, he shows that although European politics certainly was not dominated by the presence of America, by the middle of the seventeenth century America was no longer a mere appendage of the Castilian and Portuguese Crowns but had been integrated into the political-diplomatic structure of Europe.

This is a thoughtful and well-written book, which should stimulate and point the way for future study and research.

DE LAMAR JENSEN

Brigham Young University

STILLMAN DRAKE. Galileo Studies: Personality, Tradition, and Revolution. Ann Arbor: University of Michigan Press. 1970. Pp. 289. $8.50.

We have all met Galileo. General education and civilization courses, basic surveys or cultural courses in the sciences, and of course the history of science itself have introduced us to him so often that we greet him familiarly by his first name—a symbolic judgment given to no other individual in the history of modern science. But few have come to know him as well as Stillman Drake. A lifetime of scholarship devoted to the great Tuscan iconoclast has brought to light essential manuscripts and produced critical editions of key works. In addition, translations and commentaries of and upon Galileo, including the work of his as well as of our contemporaries, have created a corpus Galileanna so closely connected with Professor Drake's name that we have come to think of this distinguished scholar as a proper familiar, a timeless companion of his own hero (a Sagredo come to life!).

In these essays, whose title evokes Alexandre Koyré's brilliant pioneer Etudes Galiléennes (1939), Drake pays homage to a great historian and clearly sets out "to suggest the complementary character" (p. 14) of his own internalist and psychological method to Koyré's externalist and philosophical approach. Thus methodology sets the stage, and where Drake's concern with Personality, Tradition, and Revolution (the subtitle and true theme of his work) gives us a sketch—penciled, fuzzy at the edges, drawn to scale—in short, a sketch of a human being, Koyré's logical analysis has given us a Renaissance oil, an intellectual portrait beyond mutable experience. In our asymptotic search for truth we are indebted to both.

Of the thirteen papers assembled in this volume all but three have been published before, between 1957 and 1970, mostly in Isis, Physis, and Osiris, but also in the British Journal for the History of Science, the Journal of the History of Ideas, and in special volumes such as the Saggi su Galileo Galilei (Florence, 1967) and Art, Science and History in the Renaissance (Baltimore, 1968). Their re-issue in this volume has allowed Drake to recreate them, fusing, altering, and redrawing the scattered arguments of his earlier gleanings into substantial, independent essays of value to both general and specialized readers. Of the new pieces, "Physics and Tradition before Galileo" and "The Scientific Personality of Galileo" will be of most interest to the general reader. The former supplies a much needed narrative statement on the filiation and continuity between Galileo's ideas and sixteenth-century physical thought. The latter teaches us all, as taught we must be time and time again, that thoughtful men as well as the blind conglomerate pressures of circumstance make history, that the personality of Galileo was a significant element in his leadership of the nascent scientific community of Renaissance Europe, that a maturing scientific conscience would become a force to contend with in human affairs.

Taken together, these essays sing with the joy of scholarship, yet what we have are mainly tone poems and figured pieces; excellent though they may be, we can only hope that larger synthesizing compositions lie ahead.

HARRY WOOLF

Johns Hopkins University

CARSTEN HOLBRAAD. The Concert of Europe: A Study in German and British International Theory, 1815-1914. New York: Barnes and Noble. 1971. Pp. x, 234. $8.00.

Carsten Holbraad offers a basically well-documented study of the evolution of German and British attitudes toward the European states system in the nineteenth century, a topic of major importance to diplomatic historians increasingly concerned with changing assumptions about the nature and framework of international relations. From a historical standpoint, however, both the author's substantive presentation and his interpretation of the developments in international relations theory are undermined by methodological limitations, stemming most explicitly from his overly schematic organization and diagrammatic analysis.

The attempt to distinguish rigidly between two procedural stages—first, “collecting, analyzing, and arranging” his data and, second, logical and historical analysis—involves the author in methodological problems from the outset. The initial stage is carried out by the presentation of capsule summaries of successive individuals' ideas about the Concert of Europe, with the first half of the book for Germany (including Austria for the first part of the century) and the second half for Britain. Under each country the strands are separated rigidly into “conservative,” “balance of power,” and “progressive (i.e. federative)” categories, with additional separate sections devoted to the critics of each strand.

These basically successful summaries provide the book with a certain substantive contribution. However, the strict, catalog-type categorization proves too artificial and often prevents the exploration of the complexities and changes in attitudes of given individuals or in the relationship of the ideas to their historical environment. For instance, Gentz and Metternich fit neatly into the German “conservative” category, which is in fact formulated around their dominant view of the European Restoration, but the same category seems a less appropriate label for the subsections covering their German critics. And the “conservative” strand—both pro and con—proves less distinguishable in England, where poor Castlereagh is left somewhat stranded between categories.

When Holbraad virtually defines the nineteenth-century “balance of power” category in terms of Ranke's thought, he raises interpretive questions he does not really answer. And except in terms of his basic assumption that “ideas themselves are historical factors” (p. 113) he fails to justify his inclusion of the professors and pamphleteers who rub shoulders with diplomats and men of state in his summaries. Thus more serious conceptual difficulties arise on the author's avowed “second stage” where logical and historical analysis are his aim. Had relatively more space been devoted to this process and less to the catalog itself, many of the author's perceptive insights might have been more cogently developed. As it is there is too little concern for the political milieu of the abstracted pronouncements, so that the different strands of thought become not the historical streams the author claims but a series of cataloged ideas related to each other only in facile logical constructs and neat diagrams (pp. 106, 135, 203) rather than in terms of developing historical situations.

This problem makes it difficult for Holbraad to substantiate the underlying themes that emerge from his implicit search for the theoretical roots of the disasters that beset twentieth-century European international relations. Holbraad sees a polarity developing by the First World War between the “organizational-progressive” British attitudes that were to encourage twentieth-century federative efforts and the “imperialistic anti-European” German attitudes that were to thwart such hopes and subvert the European continent. Such themes are provocative, but few will find either convincing or clear, for instance, the charted interrelationships through which Ranke's “balance of power” ideas—“the moderate and noble ideas about European politics”—became subverted by Droysen's “nationalist criticism” and Hegel's "interstate anarchism," through the medium of Treitschke and Bismarck, so that they end up in Germany "degenerated into selfish and brutal doctrines of anti-European policy." Yet the whole course of this complicated development Holbraad is able to summarize in a brief diagram (pp. 106-07).

At a time when many historians are sympathetically looking to social-science methodology for meaningful analytic frameworks and explanatory generalizations Holbraad's book appears more as a warning about the difficulties of such approaches than incentive to use them.

PATRICIA K. GRIMSTED
Russian Institute,
Columbia University

M. I. MIKHAILOV. Istoriia Soiuza Kommunistov [The History of the Union of Communists]. (Akademiia Nauk SSSR, Institut Istorii.) Moscow: Izdatel'stvo "Nauka." 1968. Pp. 561.

This is M. I. Mikhailov's latest publication in a series of articles and monographs pertaining to the lives, activities, and teaching of Marx and Engels. As in Mikhailov's earlier works, especially in his Souiz Kommunistov—Per-vaia mezhdunarodnaia organizaciia proletariata (Moscow, 1960), in this volume the author also discusses, but in greater detail, revolutionary activities and societies in Western Europe from the 1830s to 1852. The book encompasses events preceding the formation of the Communist League in 1847 and its activities up to the dissolution of the union in 1852.

M. I. Mikhailov concentrates on the contributions by Marx and Engels in the formulation of the theory of scientific communism and their endeavors to apply it in practice. He emphasizes that Marxian scientific communism is a unity of theory and practice, and he criticizes Western Marxist writers, such as Franz Mehring and Gustav Mayer, for having failed to recognize this unity.

Organized chronologically, the book consists of three parts. The first part deals with the nature and developments of German emigré societies in Switzerland, Belgium, France, and Britain. It describes the emergence and the activities of the German People's Union, the League of the Rejected, Young Germany, and the League of the Just. The author dwells on views and activities of their prominent members and devotes a chapter to the discussion of Wilhelm Weitling's views. The second part deals with the League of Communists during the revolution of 1848 and its role and activities in Brussels, Paris, and in German cities, especially in Cologne. The third part relates the activities of the League of Communists after the revolution and its dissolution after the trial of communists in Cologne in 1852.

Written strictly from the viewpoint of Marxism-Leninism, with inevitably abundant references to Marx and Lenin, the monograph is notable for its detailed account of complex and diverse revolutionary trends in West European countries, of the natures and activities of different revolutionary societies, and of important individuals involved in them. The book is heavily documented with both primary and secondary sources. The concluding chapter, "Sources and Historiography," summarizes and gives the author's comments on many works from the 1830s to the present dealing with his subject matter. Needless to say, Marxist historians are viewed positively, while non-Marxian Western scholars or those with differing views are not treated with much tolerance. The works of East German communist writers are especially praised. Such one-sidedness detracts from the value of this comprehensive and thorough work.

The voluminous bibliography attests to the painstaking labor of the author. To the student of Marxism, and especially to those interested in the period covered, the book is valuable for reference and as an example of Soviet thought, methods of research, and evaluation.

OLGA V. VUCHICH
University of Wisconsin—
Oshkosh

JOHANNES WENZEL. Jacob Burckhardt in der Krise seiner Zeit. Berlin: VEB Deutscher Verlag der Wissenschaften. 1967. Pp. 176.

E. M. JANSSEN. Jacob Burckhardt und die Renaissance. (Jacob Burckhardt Studien, Number 1. Speculum Historiale: Studien op Geschiedtheoretisch, Geschiedfilosofisch en Ideënhistorisch Gebied, Number 5.) Assen: Van Gorcum & Comp. N.V. 1970. Pp. 260. 35 gls.

Jacob Burckhardt's historical writing subtly reflects its author's attitude toward the course that Europe was taking in his lifetime. This subjective quality provides much common ground for two books representing opposing ideological spheres.

Wenzel's scholarly, yet polemic monograph, the first comprehensive East German Marxist treatment of Burckhardt's politics, contends correctly that Basel's aloof, highly original historian was really involved if not publicly active in the crisis of the nineteenth century. Burckhardt's reaction, Wenzel argues, was not apolitisch but ideological opposition to democracy's threat to traditional Swiss patriarchal society. His efforts to transcend the crisis through asceticism and culture, as well as his pessimism concerning progress, were rooted in a mature, "reactionary" world view that recognized social evils while claiming that nothing could be done about them.

This thesis draws considerable support from Burckhardt's apparent lack of social conscience, but otherwise it limps. From either a Marxist or a liberal viewpoint Wenzel's conception of the nineteenth-century crisis is simplistic. He fails to clarify the key concept, democracy, which he applies indiscriminately to majority rule, socialism, the rise of the masses, and even diverse revolutionary movements condemned by Karl Marx. Wenzel neglects to deal with a fascinating coincidence of viewpoint in Burckhardt's and Marx's critique of the revolution of 1848, the subsequent conservative reaction, and other symptoms of social unrest. Moreover, he exaggerates the sociopolitical reasons for Burckhardt's attitude, which were important but not predominant. Werner Kaegi's monumental biography presents a more credible picture of Burckhardt, concerned mainly with teaching and other duties, engrossed in the beauty of art and nature and in the wisdom of history. Materialistic preconceptions have perhaps led Wenzel to misread the Goethean humanism in Burckhardt's life: it is likely that he pursued the Ideal more as the ultimate goal of existence than as an escape from social strife.

Its shortcomings notwithstanding, the book has scholarly merit. It reflects careful, extensive reading in the primary and secondary published sources, listed in a lengthy bibliography. It is also well written. From his unusual perspective the author sheds new, if harsh light on previously neglected facets of Burckhardt's political thought.

Where Wenzel's study is doctrinaire and one sided, Janssen's is free from bias and open to many points of view. Nevertheless, their ideas of Burckhardt in the crisis of the nineteenth century are surprisingly similar; a well-informed, reactionary conservative, committed to vigorous, intellectual resistance to the principal historical forces of his time. But, whereas the Marxist would have Burckhardt fighting for a patriarchal social order, the Dutch scholar has him living in the past, devoted to an idealized conception of the Italian Renaissance. They both underestimate the strength and consistency of his secularized Christian humanist convictions.

The first in a projected series of studies on Burckhardt's historical works, Janssen's book is intended to offer a thorough analysis of "the structure and conceptual organization" of the classic essay on the Renaissance. The text treats the more important themes roughly in their original order. A separate section, fully two-thirds of the book, contains detailed, often highly perceptive notes on a wide variety of related topics. This method, however, neglects the essay's structure as a whole. Hence Janssen's masterful analysis has a curiously unfinished quality.

Designed to complement volume 3 of Kaegi's biography of Burckhardt, Janssen's study is unconvincing at the few points where it implicitly contradicts Kaegi. Janssen fails to support, for instance, his contention that Burckhardt is a "verkehrter Pygmalion," a historicist who prefers to love a dead, idealized image of the Renaissance rather than embrace the living reality of his own time. This widely held opinion has been substantially corrected by Kaegi's stress on Burckhardt's basic good sense, as well as by Peter Gay's emphasis on Burckhardt's clear insight into the essential ambivalence of the Renaissance's relationship to modern civilization.

A product of rich erudition and sound craftsmanship, Janssen's study reflects meticulous research into Burckhardt's published writing, careful reading of Kaegi's biography, and thorough familiarity with secondary literature up to 1967 except for Gay's contribution to the Festschrift for Hajo Holborn.

CHARLES H. O'BRIEN

Western Illinois University

ARNO J. MAYER. Dynamics of Counterrevolution in Europe, 1870-1956: An Analytic Framework. New York: Harper and Row. 1971. Pp. 173. $7.00.

This book is in two respects similar to Professor Mayer's earlier works. He writes it, he says, as "a confirmed leftist critic of those Allied and American policies, both foreign and domestic, that condoned or advanced, intentionally or unintentionally, the counter-revolutionary side in the era of the communist revolution." He writes it also as a man who is aware of the danger of forcing the data to fit the construct, but who fails to guard against that danger. In one respect, however, it is different from his other writings. They are so overstuffed with data that their conclusions, though preformed, appear to result from letting the card indexes speak for themselves. Here the opposite form of self-deception is relied on: he provides no data at all, and the central thesis is no more than an assertion of political belief.

What is this central thesis? It is not that "revolution is more productive of human growth, betterment and dignity than counter-revolution," though this is one of Professor Mayer's convictions. It is not even that, in the age of the communist revolution, only communist revolution can truly be revolution. It is that in such an age of crisis politics all disagreement with or opposition to revolution must by definition be counterrevolution. Counterrevolution is not merely opposition to revolution; it is, antirevolutionary. Counterrevolution is the product of the constellation of world history and not of localized national aberrations. Whether they have been aware of it or not, "those Allied and American policies that condoned or advanced . . . the counter-revolutionary side" have inevitably developed a striking family resemblance to the policies, "both foreign and domestic," of the Nazis.

This argument is not impressive as a statement of political belief. Instead of castigating those establishments which, on his own showing, have had no choice but to become counter-revolutionary, Professor Mayer should either be organizing their liquidation, or be striving to bring to an end the age of crisis politics that has produced them. As an aid to historical understanding the argument is, I believe, worthless because it is itself a typical product of that age.

Professor Mayer is to some extent aware of this. He closes the area of crisis politics in 1956 and refrains from extending his "heuristic construct" to the problems of the Third World: so to extend it would, he says, give it "a blunted cutting edge." In fact, it would blow it sky-high. At the other extreme, in a tailpiece entitled "Internal Causes and Purposes of War in Europe, 1870-1956," he urges that the wars of this era were peculiarly the outcome of strained and unstable internal conditions; but he has to admit that his case rests on an argument that Aristotle, Bottero, Montaigne, and Bodin discussed in other ages. In this case, moreover, he has also to admit that the cutting edge cuts both ways. Unstable internal conditions disposed elites to take exceptionally drastic pre-emptive solutions. But they also disposed them to avoid recourse to war—to embrace appeasement. In the neutral vocabulary of the social sciences, which Professor Mayer has adopted in order to keep passion in control, his conclusion is that "the calculus of the internal political effects of . . . war is more likely either to deter or to encourage recourse to war in a revolutionary era and under conditions of internal instability than in times of domestic and international equipoise."

F. H. HINSLEY

St. John's College,
Cambridge

HARALD VON RIEKHOFF. German-Polish Relations, 1918-1933. Baltimore: Johns Hopkins Press. 1971. Pp. xii, 421. $15.00.

Professor von Riekhoff's scholarly monograph is testimony to the fact that good will or even a recognition of mutual need to stand together against common dangers are not the predominant qualities of statesmen, especially when dealing with problems as complex and emotionally charged as those affecting relations between Germany and Poland from 1918 to 1933. With its corridor cutting through German territory and its inclusion of lands long under German dominion, the new Poland was for Germany nothing less than a national affront, a constant reminder of a lost war and a spur to revise or abrogate altogether the humiliating conditions imposed on Germany after that war. "Even if the German government had correctly evaluated the potential of Poland as a partner and been willing to sacrifice its revisionist claims on the altar of reconciliation," Professor von Riekhoff says, "it remains open to serious question whether German popular opinion under the democratic process could have been induced to accept a solution of this nature" (p. 385).

It should have been easier and it would certainly have been politic for the Poles to seek good relations with Germany after 1918. They, after all, had "won" as a result of the First World War, and with the menace of Bolshevik Russia on their flank they might have seen their national interests best served in making every effort to reconcile Germany to the new political situation in Europe. Yet the Polish government, too, was swept along by popular fears and resentments in carrying out harsh and often vindictive measures against the German minority in Poland, and, fearing that any concessions to German revisionists would be a prelude to a fourth partition of Poland, the Polish government steadfastly opposed a readjustment of German territorial claims.

Professor von Riekhoff concludes that the history of Germany's relations with Poland during the Weimar period is a study in failure in political conception and practical application. The only redeeming grace he finds in German policy was "the firm commitment on the part of the German government to seek a revisionist solution by peaceful means," whereby it succeeded in preserving peace, however precariously, during the Weimar era (p. 386).

In the light of Professor von Riekhoff's depressing study it would seem that German-Polish tensions would never have been resolved until either or both sides had been exhausted in the conflict or until both were brought under the dominion of a superpower, as is now the case. It is a big price to pay for national pride and bigotry.

NORMAN RICH
Brown University

STANISŁAW NAWROCKI. Policja hitlerowska w tzw. Kraju Warty w latach 1939-1945 [The Nazi Police in the So-Called Wartheland, 1939-1945]. (Badania nad Okupacją Niemiecką w Polsce, Number 10.) Poznań: Instytut Zachodni. 1970. Pp. 297. Zł. 50.

JAN SZILING. Polityka okupanta hitlerowskiego wobec Kościoła Katolickiego, 1939-1945: Tzw. Okręgi Rzeszy: Gdańsk-Prusy Zachodnie, Kraj Warty i Regencja Katowicka [The Nazi Occupant's Policy toward the Catholic Church, 1939-1945: The So-Called Reichsgauen: Gdańsk-West Prussia, Warta-Land, and Katowice Regency]. (Badania nad Okupacją Niemiecką w Polsce, Number 11.) Poznań: Instytut Zachodni. 1970. Pp. 306. Zł. 60.

These two books represent volumes 10 and 11 in the series Studies on the German Occupation of Poland, which began in 1946. The first monograph deals with the role of the German police in one of the Polish provinces incorporated into the German Reich, while the other discusses Nazi policy toward the Roman Catholic Church in all Polish provinces that in the aftermath of Poland's defeat in 1939 became an integral part of the Reich.

Both books could be described basically as typical doctoral dissertations not unlike many of the Ph.D. theses written at American universities. They are loaded with lengthy and detailed footnotes; the research appears meticulous and based on original German sources; the final outcome not exactly earthshaking but not uninteresting either. In the latter respect the volume analyzing Church policy is by far more interesting than its companion volume, which adds little to our knowledge of the German rule of terror in Poland.

Since both monographs deal with rather narrow problems of interest to only a small group of historians, I shall limit myself to a few comments of a more general nature. To begin with, both books are refreshingly free of any ideological connotations and devoid of the previously obligatory and frequent references to the "classics of Marxism-Leninism" that used to be cited as ultimate authorities regardless of the subject. Second, one cannot help noticing for the umpteenth time the German thoroughness and determination to put everything down on paper with the result that the history of Nazi Germany is rapidly becoming the best-documented history of all times. Last, the volume dealing with Church policy appears to confirm once again the highly ambiguous role of the Catholic Church vis-à-vis Nazi Germany. To be sure, about one-third of all the Polish priests in the incorporated provinces perished at the hands of the Germans, yet a large number of those who survived managed without undue difficulty to accept the new reality and to collaborate with their German counterparts who in their turn acted as obedient tools of the Nazi regime in an effort to eradicate everything that was Polish. The rationale in both cases seemed to be the preservation of the Catholic Church at almost any price.

This policy of relative accommodation reappeared with equal strength in the course of Communist takeover of Poland shortly thereafter, and, once again, the Church succeeded by and large in arriving at a modus vivendi with the new rulers in the name of preserving the Church's power and influence.

ANDRZEJ KORBONSKI
University of California,
Los Angeles

ERIC ASHBY and MARY ANDERSON. The Rise of the Student Estate in Britain. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press. 1970. Pp. x, 186. $7.00.

Though the influence of universities upon students is a familiar enough theme in the history of higher education, the influence of students upon universities is little known. In tracing the rise of the student estate in modern Britain the authors depict the ways in which students have exercised their right of membership, inherent in their role as scholars, in the ancient and modern universities of Britain. Greater attention was paid to the student estate in Scotland than in England until the twentieth-century development of the provincial universities: though student unrest, albeit rare, was not unknown in nineteenth-century Oxford and Cambridge, their students possessed no rights paralleling their Scottish counterparts' right of choosing a rector, though this practice had been heavily qualified save at Glasgow. Parliamentary recognition of this franchise was conferred in 1858, and thereafter students in the four universities of Scotland were represented as well—in more than token fashion—on the university courts. Yet little was made of this opportunity by the students' elected representatives.

Of greater importance was the concurrent development in Scotland of the Students Representative Councils, which in 1889 Parliament recognized as embodying the student estate; their most effective work lay in the suggestions addressed to the Scottish academic senates concerning the teaching and discipline of the university. The gradual infiltration of such ideas south of the Tweed culminated in 1921 with the establishment of the National Union of Students, which until the late 1960s contented itself with a moderate approach to the problems raised by its members. Occasionally voices have been raised in criticism of such a vocational approach: "Direct work among the progressive forces in society . . . should be a fundamental principle for all members of the university." Those words, surprisingly, date to 1943, but the sentiment certainly echoes in our own time. Indeed, the authors conclude their historical survey with the unresolved question whether the student estate in Britain deserves representation on university councils and senates while it functions, at the same time, along trade-union lines to protect its interest against other (and possibly conflicting) interests within the university. The student estate, they argue, cannot expect the privileges of both.

With their interest in the present role of the student estate—Sir Eric Ashby was vice-chancellor of the University of Cambridge from 1967 to 1969—they supplement their historical study with what may be characterized as a tract for the times. In a final chapter, which merits inclusion in any university administrator's handbook, the authors outline a taxonomy of the "student conscience." Sympathetic to reasoned dissent, they articulate as well a strategy of "aggressive tolerance" for those who would disrupt in order to destroy. Not everyone, however, will share the authors' implicit assurance that university administrators will be able always to discriminate between legitimate protest and "campaigns of disruption." Yet in calling faculty and administrators to reflect upon the values that it is their unique lot to protect and forward Sir Eric Ashby and Miss Anderson have effectively utilized history to gain a perspective upon the troubled present of the university.

JOHN F. NAYLOR
State University of New York,
Buffalo

A. R. B. HALDANE. Three Centuries of Scottish Posts: An Historical Survey to 1836. Edinburgh: University Press; distrib. by Aldine Publishing Company, Chicago. 1971. Pp. xiv, 336. $9.75.

Mr. Haldane's volume is a welcome addition to books on the British post office. It carries the record down to 1836 when Sir Francis Freeling ended nearly forty years of service as secretary and virtual controller at the headquarters in London. Mr. Haldane has long been interested in the use of the roads in Scotland; he is a member of the legal profession (a writer to the Signet) with his offices in Edinburgh.

Postal services in Scotland began long before James VI became James I of England on the death of Queen Elizabeth in 1603. About this time the posting arrangements for mail carriage were opened to the public, and the headquarters for Scotland as well as for England were centered in London. The narrative is well organized and attractively written throughout. The chapters in the latter part of the volume following the introduction of the mail-coach services are of special interest as they are based on the abundant material available at the London headquarters but not previously used by historians. There are chapters on the town and city posts and on the country posts, with a fascinating chapter on the work of the village postmasters. There is a chapter on the posts to the Isles, another on budgetary problems, and a diverting account of "Abuses and Evasions of the Post."

Advance had been slow in the eighteenth century; there were 34 post towns at the beginning and 164 by 1800. The quarter century of war against the French Revolution and Napoleon (to 1815) had led to a much greater demand for news. Penny posts were being attached to post towns to give mail service to neighboring villages. The change was dramatic. Mail coaches were reaching speeds of nine miles an hour on the main roads, and the penny post was extending rapidly. By the time Francis Freeling died in 1836, Scotland had 250 town posts, 80 of them with penny posts. The evidence of this surprising change in the postal picture is shown in a large folding map of 1837, to be found in the pocket in the back cover. And in 1840 something like a revolution had come with the extension of the penny rate to letters posted throughout the British Isles.

This volume is well supplied with illustrations, some reprinted documents, a bibliography, and numerous footnotes. The press of the University of Edinburgh has produced an attractive book that is worthy of its contents.

HOWARD ROBINSON
Oberlin, Ohio

LACEY BALDWIN SMITH. Henry VIII: The Mask of Royalty. Boston: Houghton Mifflin Company. 1971. Pp. xii, 335. $8.95.

Lacey Baldwin Smith in this study of Henry VIII provides not a biography but "a portrait of a mind in operation." The portrait is deduced from the king's actions; he left no personal reflections on his life and, indeed, it is argued here, was incapable of original thought. Yet this is not merely a subjective view of Henry VIII: it is based on documentary evidence that in most cases convincingly supports the interpretation. The book is above all a study of the exercise of power and its effect on a highly emotional, insecure man, bound for personal and political reasons to maintain the myth of divine-right monarchy.

The need to preserve his independence dominated the king in the 1540s, the years under scrutiny here. Already the rival factions were forming, beginning the struggle for power that would erupt after his death. Henry VIII asserted his authority by manipulating people, deliberately creating fear and confusion in those nearest to him in order to discover their hidden purposes. Information was the basic instrument of coercion, and he collected it assiduously not only by this means but by the routine sifting and absorbing of the flow of detail put before him by his advisers. This knowledge, retained by an exceptionally good memory, gave Henry the professional competence in government that helped him to keep control to the very end. The legend of an idle king is here refuted. His well-attested reluctance to read and sign documents until he returned from hunting—when fatigue often became the next excuse—is seen as evidence not of slackness but of a fundamental difficulty in decision making. When the duty could no longer be postponed Henry applied to it a "structured and ritualistic" approach that evaded the responsibility of reaching a decision based on real understanding. This approach appeared most clearly in religious matters. To Henry VIII, as to many of his subjects, religion was essentially a bargain with God, both temporal happiness and eternal salvation being the reward of a scrupulous observance of God's laws. When disaster struck, the failure that had invoked the divine vengeance had to be located and removed. In Henry's case this necessity eventually drove him, fearful though he was of committing himself, to put all his trust in his own judgment. As supreme head of the Church Henry stood alone, sustained only by his high conception of the role of a Christian prince.

War was a relief from tension, an absorbing activity calling for no complex decisions. Its prime purpose was psychological: to enable the participants to achieve honor and glory. Beyond this it was held to improve the moral fiber of the nation and might indeed for a time reduce political and social discord by exporting troublemakers of all ranks. To condemn Henry's wars for their futility and waste is to judge them by modern standards—but perhaps also, one might add, by the standards of the ordinary people. The "despotism of the mind" exercised by Henry VIII over his kingdom was in essence the despotism of a king who reflected the thought patterns of the ruling classes. The new light shed on Henry VIII's personality in this compulsively readable study illuminates also the courtly society in which he lived.

HELEN MILLER
University College of North Wales

THOMAS ROGERS FORBES. Chronicle from Aldgate: Life and Death in Shakespeare's London. New Haven: Yale University Press. 1971. Pp. xx, 251. $10.00.

Mr. Forbes, professor of anatomy and teacher of the history of medicine in the Yale University School of Medicine, has, with the support of two grants from the Public Health Service, produced a book very narrowly based on four volumes of parish registers and eight volumes of parish clerks' memoranda books of the parish of St. Botolph without Aldgate, London, for the years 1558–1625; a book in which he gives data, sufficient for an article, on baptisms and burials, stillbirths, illegitimacy, age at death, causes of death by disease, and accidental and violent deaths. These straightforward demographic data, the essential part of the book, are apparently carefully compiled (in spite of a slight difficulty in transcribing accurately) and are sensibly handled; and because of the extraordinary detail the parish records give over some spans of years (cause of death and age at death, for example) the data are of unusual interest. The rest of the book is chaff. Forbes takes an antiquarian delight in collecting notices of births, sicknesses, accidents, and deaths, which he quotes frequently and at length; quotations constitute about a quarter of the book. Although he has tried to get up the age of Will Shakespeare from W. E. Lunt's History of England and A. L. Rowse's England of Elizabeth and from more specialized works that are sometimes not those most appropriate to Forbes's needs, the author's attempts to place his parochial findings in a broader social and demographic context and to relate them to public policy fail. The reader is not helped by being told that a "swaddler" in 1600 was "perhaps a Methodist preacher," that a schoolmaster at this time was "also known as an informer," that "piracy was not unusual as late as the sixteenth century," that William Sebright, having subscribed a mayoral precept to the wards in 1594, was lord mayor (as town clerk from 1574 to 1613 he regularly subscribed such precepts), or, at one point, that the parish of St. Botolph without Aldgate was "outside the city." The author generalizes from D. V. Glass's introduction to London's Inhabitants Within the Walls, 1695 to establish the relative poverty of the parish in the sixteenth century, when he might have put contemporary subsidy assessments to this and other uses. He has apparently made no use of the London Corporation records, which would have shed light on the city's concern with orphans, the poor, the sick, and other matters that he treats with crude sketchiness and unnecessary speculation. It is a pity that Forbes did not publish the demographic kernel of his book in an article, which would, I believe, have introduced to a wider, interested readership these remarkably full parish records and enabled more scholars to relate his data for a London parish to other recent local population studies.

ROBERT G. LANG
University of Oregon

S. G. CHECKLAND. The Gladstones: A Family Biography, 1764-1851. New York: Cambridge University Press. 1971. Pp. xvi, 448. $16.00.

This is a very rich book, really several books in one. It is, first of all, the history of a family—the story of how John Gladstones, who came to Liverpool from Leith in 1787 at the age of twenty-two in order to set up as a grain merchant (and who dropped the terminal “s” from his name during the same year for reasons of business convenience), raised with his second wife, Anne Robertson, a family of four sons and two daughters. As such, the book is a study in character and personality—not merely of the young William Ewart individually, but of his nurture within the family circle where his moral and intellectual outlook was shaped.

Second, the book is the history of the accumulation of a fortune. When John Gladstone started as a corn trader in Liverpool he invested £1,500 in a partnership and contracted to receive £80 a year as annual salary. When he died, in 1851, he was worth something like £750,000. Shipping and West Indian plantations played a major part in the growth of Gladstone's wealth; and Professor Checkland, a distinguished economic historian, has gone to immense and painstaking lengths to trace the history of that growth from the available business and family records. If only as a detailed study of how merchant (as distinct from industrial) capital could be built up in the early nineteenth century, this book will prove invaluable.

Urban history, social and political, is the third major theme. John Gladstone became one of the leading figures in the great trading port of Liverpool, and, as such, was closely associated with George Canning and William Huskisson. Professor Checkland gives one a vivid sense of how local rather than national issues, primarily economic, went into the making of the elder Gladstone's political stance and thus, to some extent, into the making of that of his more famous youngest son. That stance was decidedly conservative, though John Gladstone had begun his Liverpool career as an ally of the local Whig-Radicals. This book is essential reading for anyone interested in the question of how and why the greatest Liberal statesman of the nineteenth century came to be hailed at the start of his political life by Macaulay as the rising hope of “those stern and unbending Tories who follow, reluctantly and mutinously, a leader whose experience and eloquence are indispensable to them, but whose cautious temper and moderate opinions they abhor.”

Religion constitutes the fourth strand of this family biography. John Gladstone ceased to attend the Scots Kirk and, along with his second wife, became one of the chief pillars of Liverpool Evangelicalism. How could he reconcile his Evangelicalism with his ever larger slaveholding interests in the West Indies? It was this issue that involved him in a struggle with another great Liverpool family, the Croppers, who were Quaker Abolitionists, but whose own fortune came, in part, from American slave-grown cotton. It was this same issue that increased the psychological tensions within the Gladstone family. For Mrs. Gladstone was unable to reconcile herself to her husband's role as an Evangelical slaveholder.

Her health was frail, in any event. And illness is yet another theme that pervades this book. John Gladstone's first wife had died young. Anne, his eldest daughter, the “saint” of the family, died after protracted suffering at the age of twenty-seven. Her younger sister Helen was a perpetual invalid, sporadically addicted to laudanum. Spas, medicines, treatments, and physicians are constant factors in the history of the Gladstone family. So much so that, at times, one is under the illusion that one is reading a harrowing “medical” novel. The names of some of the characters, such as “Dr. Fallati,” Helen's doctor in Baden-Baden, and “Sporn,” her maid, contribute to that illusion.

Professor Checkland treats William Ewart's brothers—Tom, barrister and M.P.; Robertson, businessman and mayor of Liverpool; and John Neilson, naval officer and country gentleman—with loving attention. But it is the glimpses of the “grand young man” of the family that grip one most strongly: a poem written by him at the age of eight, after a passer-by had saved his life from the threats of an armed madman: “Oh! How would my parents grieve/ If they heard that I was dead/ Oh! How would my parents grieve/ If the black Worms rotted even my head”; a letter to his father, thirteen years later, giving thanks to God for having been beaten up in his rooms at Christ Church by a party of young men who "were living in sin and had rejected Christ as their Savior"; or the author of The State in its Relations with the Church (1838) flinging his hat into the air and shouting "Long Live Liberty!" as he went horseback-riding out of the Papal States in 1839.

To have carried off the ambitious scheme of this book with total success would have required a historian of genius and would have resulted in a classic work. The book falls short of that. The style is, at times, curiously crabbed; the long supporting cast is not always sketched as vividly as it might have been; a piling up of details occasionally threatens the total structure. But, when all is said and done, there is no doubt that this is a major achievement, indispensable for an understanding of the Gladstones and of early nineteenth-century England.

JOHN CLIVE
Harvard University

JULIA NAMIER. Lewis Namier: A Biography. New York: Oxford University Press. 1971. Pp. xvii, 347. $13.75.

Superlatives in any critical review are always suspect. Yet it is difficult to avoid using such language in commenting on a biography that is in many ways unique. There was nothing conventional about Lewis Namier, and his widow, in writing about him, has heeded his injunction to tell the truth about everything. Whether speaking of Namier's relations with his parents, the women who entered his life, or the academic and political personages who figured in it at one time or other, Julia Namier has succeeded admirably in rendering the complexity and poignancy of many of these relations. The chapters on Namier's East European childhood and youth are remarkable, not least because they so obviously anticipate many of the difficulties that Namier was to experience as an adult. The summoning up of a vanished pre-World War I Polish agricultural society is almost incidental to a larger purpose—the consideration of how a boy, reared in these circumstances, could make England his own and, in time, come to be honored as one of England's most distinguished historians. The route was never an easy one, nor did it lead straight to the fame that Namier knew mostly in his later years. Whether arguing about the settlement of frontier problems in East Central Europe in 1919 or defending Zionism a decade later, Namier was an isolated figure, always in touch with certain members of what would today be called the establishment, but never entirely a member of the club. The biography documents his passion but also the ambiguity of his position.

This work is remarkable for its candor, not simply about personal relations, which are rarely discussed so openly by a biographer, but also about the inner life of the man and the uncertainties that led him to despair and, on one occasion late in life, to the edge of suicide. Julia Namier knows how to blend the private woes of a spiritually troubled man with the public catastrophes of a time of tyranny without making either the occasion for maudlin observations about a civilization in decline. She knows how to render the health-giving properties of work without losing sight of the situations that even a conscientious commitment to work will not remedy. The man who emerges from this study is only partially recognizable in his histories; the woman who wrote this work has created a standard for biography scarcely less impressive than the one Namier so diligently sought to achieve in his histories. That is no mean accomplishment. Other generations will be grateful for this unique twentieth-century document.

STEPHEN R. GRAUBARD
Brown University

HAROLD MACMILLAN. Riding the Storm, 1956–1959. New York: Harper and Row. 1971. Pp. viii, 786. $15.00.

HAROLD WILSON. A Personal Record: The Labour Government, 1964–1970. Boston: Little, Brown and Company. 1971. Pp. 836. $15.00.

The dominant feature in these two prime ministerial memoirs is the primacy of foreign policy. Here are two men who ruled their country in periods of considerable social and political change, and they spend most of their time recording their diplomatic experiences. Their choice of emphasis is made all the odder by the fact that neither of them scored any long-term diplomatic successes, and they suffered some very visible failures.

It has been suggested that Macmillan drifted into a greater and greater concern with foreign policy in the second half of his premiership, and this tendency may in the autobiography have spread back into the earlier half. The demands of cabinet secrecy may also have had something to do with it: presumably prime ministers spend a great deal of their time reconciling ministers who disagree with one another, but they may feel they cannot talk about these disputes unless they have already come into the open, usually through a ministerial resignation. This must be particularly important for Wilson, who is still working with most of his old cabinet colleagues, but probably Macmillan also feels the demands of loyalty.

As an honorable man, Macmillan has a number of problems about Suez: he cannot tell a lie about Anglo-French involvement with Israel, he cannot denounce his old colleagues, and he can hardly pretend it never happened. On the whole he chooses the last approach; he treats the whole crisis as though it were primarily a problem in Anglo-American relations. This solves a number of difficulties: he can show, relatively easily, that United States policy was not as comprehensible or as likely to avert the danger of war as it might have been; he can totally ignore, as though it was an incidental detail, the question of "collusion"; he can dwell on the restoration of good Anglo-American relations, and more or less ignore the weakening of Britain's position in the Middle East that followed the failure of the Suez operations.

His account of the failure of the first (1956-58) round of British negotiations about the Common Market is incomplete in a rather different way. In these negotiations the British government wanted a grouping of countries that would have industrial free trade but no common tariff and no unified agricultural policy. "Plan G," which outlined this position, would have suited Britain's needs very well, but there is no indication that Macmillan ever noticed how little it would have suited the needs of the French, who agreed to industrial free trade only because of the advantages they hoped to gain from a common agricultural policy. Macmillan condemns de Gaulle for rejecting Plan G; it is quite possible that de Gaulle's tactics were devious, but they were not nearly as inexplicable as Macmillan makes them appear.

At this time his chief success was to lead the unwilling leaders of the United States, the USSR, and France to the Paris conference of 1960. As it turned out, nothing came of the conference, but it was certainly an interesting shift in international affairs. All the same, it is a little surprising that over one-eighth of the whole book is devoted to his visit to Moscow in 1959, especially as very little emerges that was not already known.

While all this was going on, people in Britain were moving from austerity to affluence. Macmillan was well aware of this at the time; he complains that his remark "You've never had it so good" was misapplied by his enemies, but he does not say what he thought about the changes of the late fifties. Perhaps his government simply decided to relax and let everybody enjoy the transformation. Macmillan disclaimed any desire to give moral leadership to the country and said that it was a problem for the archbishops, but it is not certain that the problem can be shrugged off quite so easily.

Fairly clearly Wilson would also like to avoid such difficult and intangible questions. It is quite possible that his premiership will be remembered mainly for the passage of liberalizing legislation on capital punishment, homosexuality, abortion, theatrical censorship, and so on, but practically nothing is said about these issues. Even comprehensive schools, which were part of the official program, get very little attention. Despite the title, this is as much a volume of memoirs as Macmillan's book: a more up-to-date, less histrionic account, but still an account of life seen from 10 Downing Street rather than the story of how the government did its work. There is of course a good deal more self-justification than in Macmillan's book, but then Macmillan made so few mistakes between 1956 and 1959 that he does not have to justify himself. Wilson is aware that he has a good deal to explain, and he makes a fairly good attempt at explanation. He certainly admits he made mistakes: small ones, on the less important issues, but his explanations are interesting and illuminating.

On the big issues, not surprisingly, he is less ready to admit mistakes. He explains why he made the blunder of saying, after devaluation, "The pound in your pocket has not been devalued"; he does not really face all the problems involved in refusing to devalue for so long. It sounds as though Wilson now believes the pound was overvalued in 1964 (p. 6); the interesting question is whether he believed that in 1964.

Inevitably there is a great deal about the balance of payments. It is presented surprisingly unsystematically; most of the statistics are now public knowledge, and it might have been useful to print some of the tables and provide comments on progress over the whole six-year period. This would have run against the pattern of the book: Wilson tells his story in chapters about each two- or three-month period, which is very effective for showing how a prime minister's life is made up of a diversity of unrelated problems, but carries to an extreme the impression of absence of any continuity of policy for which Wilson's government was sometimes blamed.

Despite the emphasis on the balance of payments, the book clearly concentrates on foreign policy. Some of this may be for tactical reasons—the discussions with Mansholt about the Common Agricultural Policy (p. 343) help justify his opposition to British entry to the Common Market—but most of it seems to be the simple enjoyment of feeling that he was taking part in great events. His meetings with de Gaulle are very entertaining and very well told. His obvious dislike of Ian Smith may be put into higher relief to rally his Labour followers, but seems genuine and entirely justified. His meetings with Kossygin and with Johnson do not really do credit to anyone. It now seems fairly clear that neither Wilson nor Kossygin had much power to do anything about Vietnam, but they went on behaving to each other as if they could control the whole question. It is hard to avoid a faint suspicion that part of the reason was that they wanted to keep up their prestige in front of each other.

But it is also hard to avoid the suspicion that Wilson was being deceived by Johnson: a number of Wilson's best instincts, and also a number of his worst, combined to make him singularly vulnerable to Johnson, and there is every sign that Johnson took perfectly natural advantage of this. An overvalued British pound was the first line of defense of the dollar; a Labour government that acquiesced in Vietnam was a useful item of diplomatic protection. Macmillan, or even Churchill, might have put up with such a role; the trouble is that friendship on such terms wears out, and the successor to Wilson as prime minister is a man cool enough about the United States to satisfy the discriminating taste of President Pompidou.

TREVOR LLOYD

University of Toronto

MAURICE MANNING. The Blueshirts. [Toronto:] University of Toronto Press. 1971. Pp. xi, 276. $8.50.

MARTIN WALLACE. Northern Ireland: 50 Years of Self-Government. New York: Barnes and Noble. 1971. Pp. 192. $7.25.

J. BOWYER BELL. The Secret Army: The IRA 1916-1970. New York: John Day Company. 1971. Pp. ix, 404. $8.95.

Although Mr. Manning's study of the Blueshirt movement will undoubtedly enjoy its greatest circulation among specialists in twentieth-century Irish history, it deserves a more comprehensive readership. This detailed investigation of the rise and fall of Irish "fascism" in the 1930s should interest all students of the better known and more successful varieties of fascism of about the same period.

At its inception in 1932 the parent organization of the Blueshirts fit the familiar pattern of nascent fascism: ex-army officers, convinced of an alliance between the De Valera government and the "Communist" IRA and disturbed by the threat to free speech posed by government supporters' attacks on opposition speakers, formed a protection organization. Membership was broadened, and some of the more fashionable trappings of Continental fascism (including the colored shirt) were adopted. The author tells us that for two years, as the champion of the more affluent farmer during the economic crisis of the mid-1930s, the Blueshirt movement "dominated" Irish politics. Thus the movement's sudden collapse in 1934 and the disbanding of the remnant two years later make Mr. Manning's explanation of these events an important part of the book. The specialist in European history will certainly note the failure of the Blueshirts to produce either effective leadership or a generally accepted ideology, for the ideas of the leaders, including the capital "F" fascism of a small group at the top, seem to have had little meaning to the rank and file. The author's claim that the movement failed to meet certain important criteria of interwar fascism and thus was not truly fascist is beyond dispute.

Mr. Manning has written a very good book about a "movement whose main importance lies in its uniqueness." This otherwise impressive study is marred only by a serious flaw in organization—the separation of the chronological narrative from the discussion of the movement's ideological development. The detailed study of ideology and its evolution is reserved for the penultimate chapter; some readers will prefer to begin the book there and then proceed to the opening chapters.

After reading Mr. Wallace's Northern Ireland, one is inclined to suggest that the Blue-shirt leaders of 1934, seeking a model to follow, should have paid less attention to Italian fascismo and more to Ulster Unionism. During the 1920–70 period covered by the book, Unionists controlled the government at most levels and predominated in the police, the courts, and the civil service. The Unionist formula was very simple: encourage and play upon the fears of the Protestant majority while attacking the Catholic minority as allied with "hostile" outside forces.

Mr. Wallace has produced an informative, well-written, and unpretentious work, a handbook of Ulster politics that can be read in a single sitting. The core of the book is the evolution of Northern Ireland's political parties and institutions, and the changing relations among Stormont, Westminster, and Dublin. Unfortunately since the book's completion in mid-1970, the agony of Ulster has made the modest political and institutional reforms suggested by the author appear sadly inadequate.

Mr. Bell's The Secret Army is certain to be a more controversial book than Mr. Wallace's rather bland study of Northern Ireland. Some readers will almost certainly charge The Secret Army with being a one-sided glamorization of IRA violence; others may reply that the pro-army bias is never hidden, that the book is exceptionally well researched, and that glamorizing violence by historians has been going on for centuries. It is to be hoped that this debate and the excessive emotionalism of the author's conclusions will not obscure the one indisputable merit of the book—its detailed evaluation of the IRA as a revolutionary movement. It details one of the longest histories of revolutionary activity available, and "to dig into the history of the IRA is to uncover not only what to avoid but how to persist, to endure, to suffer disaster and to maintain the ideals and the organization" (p. 374).

GALEN BROEKER
University of Tennessee

J. H. WHYTE. Church and State in Modern Ireland, 1923–1970. New York: Barnes and Noble, 1971. Pp. xii, 466. $13.50.

The extent to which the Roman Catholic Church can and does affect governmental policies in the Irish Republic is one of the most hotly debated issues of the current Irish imbroglio. Ulster Unionists charge that the southern government is a theocratic state which, if it ever gained jurisdiction over them, would promptly deprive them of their civil liberties at the bidding of cowed inquisitors. Catholic spokesmen reply that the Irish hierarchy is just another interest group like, say, the trade unions. John Whyte sets himself the task of assessing these divergent claims.

Nearly half of the book is devoted to a careful treatment of the background, course, and aftermath of the 1951 controversy over the so-called Mother and Child Scheme. Dr. Noel Browne, energetic young minister for health in a coalition government, collided head-on with the Catholic hierarchy over regulations to implement a health act of the previous government to which the bishops had expressed misgivings only after its enactment, and then only privately. Though the scheme's proposed state intervention into areas that might involve sexual morality was the most obvious source of friction, Whyte shows that the clash had much wider ramifications. Systematic Catholic social thought had come rather late to Ireland and, in the 1930s, had crystallized into a naively rigid and conservative form of the corporate thinking or "vocationalism" expounded in Pius XI's 1931 encyclical Quadragesimo Anno.

Throughout the 1940s Whyte finds trouble brewing between Catholic spokesmen obsessed with finding ways to limit state power and civil servants reacting against repeated suggestions that their really rather modest power ought to be circumscribed by a host of consultative bodies representing "vocational" groups. Dr. Browne took the "bureaucratic" side on a particular issue and found himself opposed not only by a well-defined "vocational" group, the Irish Medical Association, but also by the concerted forces of the Church. His short but brilliant ministerial career was terminated following what looked very much like an ultimatum from the hierarchy.

Though the episode certainly lends credence to the "theocratic" interpretation of Irish politics, Whyte finds considerable evidence for the other interpretation. The Mother and Child crisis represented the apogee of episcopal intervention in the politics of the Irish state. In the 1920s and 1930s, to be sure, the Free State did enact a number of elements of the Catholic moral code into law, but there is little evidence that the bishops had to apply pressure to achieve this end. On the contrary, it resulted from "general agreement in Irish society on the necessity of such measures." Since 1960, moreover, there has been a marked tendency to relax the "integralist" pattern of law and administration which assumed that to be Irish was virtually to be Catholic, and the hierarchy has in general acquiesced in this tendency.

Whyte finds that the Church's position on a continuum between theocratic dictator and just-another-interest-group is affected not only by the circumstances of the time but by the degree of episcopal consensus and the nature of the issue at stake. The state and individual public figures can, indeed, treat the bishops rather cavalierly in cases where a specifically national interest is thought to be involved. In areas such as personal morality and education, however, the hierarchy's opinion carries much more weight. Indeed, deference to the Church's claims in education was so complete until the 1960s that this topic seldom appears in the book. As education usually bulks very large in discussions of Church-state relations elsewhere, this fact deserves perhaps a bit more attention than the author gives it. Whyte concludes that there is no simple answer to the question "How much influence does the hierarchy possess in Irish politics?" but he provides a highly useful analysis of how that influence varies under the impact of different circumstances. Though denied access to ecclesiastical archives he has made valuable use of interviews and of a wide range of published materials. His judgment is invariably sound and his logic compelling. The book is required reading for anyone who hopes to understand contemporary Ireland and is the most important historical work yet to appear on the post-Reformation Catholic Church in Ireland.

DAVID W. MILLER
Carnegie-Mellon University

JEAN-PIERRE BARDET et al. Le bâtiment: Enquête d'histoire économique, XIV<sup>e</sup>-XIX<sup>e</sup> siècles. Volume 1, Maisons rurales et urbaines dans la France traditionnelle. (École Pratique des Hautes Études—Sorbonne. VI<sup>e</sup> Section: Sciences économiques et sociales. Centre de Recherches Historiques. Université de Caen, Centre de Recherches d'Histoire Quantitative. Industrie et artisanat, Number 6.) Paris: Mouton. 1971. Pp. 544. 78 fr.

This story of buildings and, to a lesser extent, the building trades is a series of five scholarly essays by members of the Centre de Recherches d'Histoire Quantitative de l'Université de Caen, whose director, Pierre Chaunu, has contributed an excellent introductory essay. It is a call to action for the current generation of historians. The message itself is not new, but it has become more insistent since the last war. We must attempt to see how the common people—those who were not politically, socially, or economically important in a prestatistical era—lived.

One of the most persistent qualities of these essays is their very tentative nature. Pierre Gouhier, for example, has investigated the cost of constructing the presbytery in eighteenth-century Normandy. He would also like to examine construction costs in general in the eighteenth-century countryside, but he has been hampered by the lack of meaningful data such as written contracts or agreements that clearly spell out the obligations of the various parties. Instead, Gouhier concludes, private contracts often were not recorded or, worse still, were oral. Furthermore, the building industry in the ancien régime was often only one segment of a barter economy. The peasant might pay for all or part of the construction of his house by providing board and room or by giving the artisan part of his crop. On the other hand, many peasant families provided the manual labor themselves, calling in specialists—masons, carpenters, etc.—only for the finishing touches. The construction cost of a presbytery, which Gouhier equates with the house of a laboureur aisé, can be determined because the construction contract had to be approved by the intendant and ratified by the Conseil du Roi. Using this more dependable although restricted data, Gouhier discovered that construction prices in the Norman countryside doubled between 1750 and 1789, conforming to the general price increase. There is no precise way, however, of correlating prices in Normandy with rural construction in general.

Hugues Neveux has utilized the especially complete fonds at Cambrai to examine the cost of construction and maintenance from about 1400 to the beginning of the eighteenth century. The dramatic rise in the price of wood, particularly oak, as well as the diffusion of stone as a building material meant that fewer wooden houses were constructed after 1650. Stone buildings, constructed to last for centuries, were increasingly erected by all segments of society. "Houses of stone became less the exclusive property of the wealthy" (p. 256). Neveux has included a number of leases showing construction costs that date to the late fourteenth century; nevertheless, he estimates that he has examined only about one per cent of the houses of Cambrai. Chaunu compares Neveux's painstaking methods with the reconstitution of families undertaken by demographers.

In addition to Chaunu's introduction, there are also contributions by Gabriel Désert and Jean-Pierre Bardet. Of particular interest to the specialist are extensive original documents that help the reader to appreciate construction procedures, prices, wages, and so forth as far back as the fourteenth century.

Building was the most important nonagricultural economic activity in Europe until the second half of the nineteenth century, yet this subject has been generally neglected by historians and economists until recently. Chaunu and his colleagues have done us a service by publishing the first results of their research and suggesting the direction such research may take in the near future. We can anticipate more studies in the future, which, one hopes, will allow us some comparison with the rather narrow investigations made in this book.

THOMAS F. SHEPPARD

College of William and Mary

J. SHIMIZU. Conflict of Loyalties: Politics and Religion in the Career of Gaspard de Coligny, Admiral of France, 1519-1572. (Travaux d'Humanisme et Renaissance, Number 114.) Geneva: Librairie Droz. 1970. Pp. 220.

The struggles between Guise and anti-Guise, Catholic and Huguenot noble factions to gain control of the French Crown in the Wars of Religion have fascinated scholars and led to a range of historical interpretation. Whereas historians in the nineteenth century emphasized the religious basis of the struggle, recently the tendency has been to stress the political issues and personal ambitions hidden under the cloak of religion. Dr. Shimizu and others believe that neither interpretation does justice to the complicated interplay of religion and politics. In this first study of Coligny in almost seventy-five years the author emphasizes the subtle intermingling of religious and political motives and demonstrates the conflicting interests and loyalties that buffeted the French nobility.

Beginning with Coligny's youth and first known contacts with the Reform, Dr. Shimizu focuses on Coligny's role at court under the Guise regime and his gradual emergence as a leader and spokesman for the Huguenot party. She concludes that Coligny's fundamental motives were political; indeed she finds evidence of personal ambition to be the consistent element in Coligny's assuming a leading role in the Huguenot movement. She sees him as a statesman, primarily, and not a man of religion. She convincingly argues that while he loyally worked for the Protestant cause, he remained indifferent to questions of religious dogma because his principle concern with religion was its role in maintaining social order and justice. Coligny's affiliation with the Bourbon-Protestant faction and his public declaration for Protestantism were thus well-timed acts of political self-preservation.

This study, modest in scope and careful in its scholarship, is not totally convincing in its conclusions. On the question of conflict of loyalties it is difficult to accept Dr. Shimizu's formulation of a conflict between religion and politics. The assertion of a conflict suggests the existence of a tension between Coligny's loyalty to the Crown and to Protestantism. Yet she makes no doctrinal case for Coligny's loyalty to the Reformed religion. The evidence she presents suggests only that Coligny single-mindedly pursued a career aimed at becoming first servant of the Crown and joined the Huguenot movement to advance his political fortune with anti-Guise factions organized to free the Crown from Guise control. Coligny was undoubtedly a religious moderate, as Dr. Shimizu argues, and it is valuable to have his political ambitions brought into focus at last. But there are points at which Coligny remains shadowy and one-dimensional. The picture of conflicting loyalty might have been sharpened if she had also considered Charlotte de Laval's spiritual influence on her husband, Coligny's correspondence with Calvin and Beza, his friendship with Renée de France, and the role of the Protestant pastor in Coligny's household.

Dr. Shimizu's scholarship is impressive; her archival evidence is precise. She has certainly examined every known letter and diplomatic dispatch and uncovered new evidence to support her argument. However, the information she has amassed appears at times to have overwhelmed her. There are several instances where lengthy digressions on questions of interpretation might have been relegated to footnotes. Elsewhere quotations could have been digested and paraphrased. But the questions she raises about political and religious motivation are important and should be applied to other personalities at Catherine de' Medici's court. Certainly Dr. Shimizu's answers help to clarify our understanding of the confused religious and political scene in sixteenth-century France.

CHARMARIE JENKINS BLAISDELL
Northeastern University

EDMUND H. DICKERMAN. Bellièvre and Villeroy: Power in France under Henry III and Henry

IV. Providence: Brown University Press. 1971. Pp. x, 200. $10.00.

Considering the extensive research upon which it is based, this book makes only a very modest contribution to the monographic literature on the reigns of Henry III and IV. Unfortunately the choice of an artificial, routine subject did less than justice to Professor Dickerman's painstaking perusal of the sources, many of which are unpublished.

The ostensible purpose is to "recreate the Weltanschauung" of these two important royal ministers by a topical presentation of their opinions on various subjects as expressed in their voluminous correspondence. Grouped into three bulky chapters (on royal government and foreign and domestic policies) are assorted nuggets of information on, for example, their reactions to dismissal by Henry III in 1588, their conventional sentiments on the horrors of war, compassion for the peasantry, acceptance of the social structure, or their concern about Henry IV's recklessness in battle. The justification for such an anthology is the assumption that Bellièvre and Villeroy "spoke for an important segment of what we today call the enlightened public." Little attempt is made, however, to keep the opinions firmly rooted in their respective historical contexts, or to compare them with differing or conflicting ideas. Divorced from the detailed, concrete circumstances to which they refer, their utterances tend to sound merely inane.

The tone, moreover, is so adulatory as to border on the hagiographic. Dickerman minimizes the overwhelming evidence that Bellièvre began to sink into illness and senility soon after his appointment as chancellor in 1599. And one would never guess that Villeroy, "the dean in chapter of all the statesmen in Christendom" (as Carew called him in 1609), was noted for his ostentatious scale of living and was rumored to be angling for a cardinal's hat.

Even this table méthodique of ministerial commonplaces would have been more useful and accessible to the scholar—the book cannot seriously be intended for any other audience—were it not for the unfortunate practice of tucking the references out of sight in unwieldy omnibus footnotes at the end of the volume, thus presenting the reader with a series of nasty little "matching tests" (some of which I confess I found insoluble).

Why these two particular royal ministers? Why not Sully, Sillery, Jeannin, Du Perron, and de Thou? They are all virtually eliminated here. I am afraid that Dickerman's book is no substitute for a biographical approach. It adds little to Kierstead's study of Bellièvre or to Sutherland's work on the secretaries of state; and for the last twenty years of Villeroy's remarkable half-century career, we are still left with the old and grossly inadequate biography by Nouaillac.

ALFRED SOMAN
Carleton College

MOHAMED EL KORDI. Bayeux au XVII<sup>e</sup> et XVIII<sup>e</sup> siècles: Contribution à l'histoire urbaine de la France. (École Pratique des Hautes Études—Sorbonne. VI<sup>e</sup> Section: Sciences Économiques et Sociales. Centre de Recherches Historiques. Civilisations et sociétés, Number 17.) Paris: Mouton. 1970. Pp. vii, 369. 48 fr.

Let us welcome eighteenth-century Bayeux into the magic circle of French cities that have inspired more than one solid study. In 1967 Olwen Hufton published a careful description of Bayeux during the last quarter of the eighteenth century; that study contained important information about the city's administration under the Old Regime and the early Revolution but slighted the analysis of population composition, demographic change, and city-hinterland relations. Mohamed El Kordi's Bayeux devotes only four or five pages to administrative matters and stops at the beginning of the Revolution; but this study runs back to 1600, deals at once with the city and its region, and provides exquisite detail on demographic structure, prices, wages, agricultural production, plus a dozen more of the items now conventionally quantified in French regional studies. El Kordi does all the analyses we have learned to expect of books issuing from the École Pratique des Hautes Études: family reconstitutions, long series of prices, studies of occupational composition, and so on. As usual, we have to endure stylish substantives like le dynamique and l'historique. And the design of the whole book is also familiar: (1) sources, (2) composition of the population, (3) demographic changes, (4) economic structure and, especially, change, (5) appendixes, mainly statistical. Every part is competent and jam-packed with information. El Kordi has followed a classic design and has done his duty by it.

The classic design has its costs. Among other things it tends to diffuse the book's argument. The student of a particular city or region finds himself in something like the position of the nineteenth-century author of a local monographie: compelled to fill a series of prescribed blanks whether or not his locale, his evidence, his subject, or his own proclivities lead him in those directions. For most of its way El Kordi's book lurches from description to description, unaided by a general argument. The conclusions El Kordi himself draws from his work are mainly descriptive: that irregularly declining mortality and high levels of immigration (especially of women) accounted for the city's growth in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries; that people of the region were probably exercising deliberate control over births fairly early in the eighteenth century; that the city and its region alike normally had to import food to survive, a general shift toward stock-raising increased the need for imports, and the urban poor suffered increasingly from the high food prices that resulted from these circumstances; that Bayeux's lace industry, despite its employment of a considerable number of local women, never had great prospects and never played a major part in the region's economy; that at Bayeux, as elsewhere, the "long" seventeenth century (up to 1720 or so) saw relatively little change in general price, wage, and income levels, while the last three quarters of the eighteenth century (especially the period after 1760) brought important rises in prices and rents, thereby depressing the real incomes of the wage-earning segments of the population. For the most part he documents these conclusions amply, carefully, and appropriately. An encyclopedic account of a middle-sized city, of its hinterland, and of its rentiers, monks, merchants, lacemakers, and poor folk takes its place on the shelf, awaiting comparison with other cities of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries.

CHARLES TILLY
University of Michigan

A. LLOYD MOOTE. The Revolt of the Judges: The Parlement of Paris and the Fronde, 1643-1652. Princeton: Princeton University Press. 1971. Pp. xiv, 407. $15.00.

Lloyd Moote's richly detailed, meticulously documented study of the mid-seventeenth-century "judges' revolt" provides us with one of our first authoritative accounts in English of the Old or Parliamentary Fronde and the succeeding civil wars in France. The title and the initial date of the book are misleading: Moote discusses not only the Parlement of Paris but the rise and decline over a fifty-year period of a broadly based "royal opposition" drawn from the ranks of the established bureaucrats (officiers) and of the well-to-do middle classes. Eloquent in their discontent, the older establishment feared the usurpations of newly appointed bureaucrats (commissaires), dreaded the loss of income through spiraling taxes, and, after 1643, deplored the bumbling mismanagement of the regency government headed by Anne of Austria and Cardinal Mazarin. Moote is severe in his judgments of the regent and her advisers: Anne "did not have the perseverance, patience, or intelligence" to guide the government (p. 68); Mazarin had "totally lost control due to his ignorance and inattention" (p. 87); Particelli d'Emery's financial schemes were tainted by corruption; and Chancellor Séguier lacked "Richelieu's firmness and tact" (p. 69). After five years of the regency's misrule a storm or revolt broke over Paris in the summer of 1648 at a time when the sovereign courts were sitting in joint conclave to draft petitions for redress of grievances. These grievances, codified in the famous Twenty-Seven Demands, urged, inter alia, the suppression of the office of provincial intendant, limitations on the arbitrary legal powers of the Crown, and an adjustment of the tax rates. In the confusion of ensuing civil wars the constitutional-administrative issues were all but lost sight of. Moote insists, however, that the judges did achieve "victory-in-defeat" by slowing down the advance of royal absolutism and by forcing reforms on the government of Louis XIV. "Without the political via media [urged by the judges], the Fronde would have been a total failure" (p. 376).

Moote's accomplishments are impressive: he has given order and emphasis to recent interpretations of the Frondes; he has probed, with insight and learning, the aims and achievements of the officers; and, above all, he has provided the judges with an updated apologia pro vitis suis.

Moote elucidates the royalist cause with less deftness than he does that of the officiers. It is difficult, for example, to penetrate the various guises taken after 1643 by the so-called conseil d'état and by the emerging "inner council," the latter probably being the Conseil d'en Haut. Moote might also have discussed roles played by the refurbished conseil privé and (after 1648) of the conseil des dépêches in their struggle with men of parlement. The portrait of the principal minister is strikingly unflattering: to say that Mazarin lacked "Richelieu's ability [in foreign affairs] to distinguish between desirable goals and attainable objectives" (p. 67) ignores the tangible gains won by Mazarin at the treaties of Westphalia; to say that "his chief weakness . . . was his incredible ignorance about internal affairs" overlooks the minister's considerable abilities as a bureaucrat; and to say that he and Anne "encouraged the upheaval [of the Frondes], just as Charles I of England and . . . Count-Duke Olivares [of Spain] had incited revolution in their countries" (p. 87) strains an analogy. Ultimately Moote might have given us a clearer and more extended discussion of royal absolutism; such a discussion seems essential to our understanding of an age in which maxims of state were hotly debated, in which the fate of a law turned on phrases like qui veut le Roy si veut la loy or Le prince . . . est une puissance publique and in which the interpretations of legibus soluta and lex regia formed the background to civil war.

JOHN C. RULE

Ohio State University

MICHEL MORINEAU. Les faux-semblants d'un démarrage économique: Agriculture et démographie en France au XVIII<sup>e</sup> siècle. (Cahiers des Annales, Number 30.) Paris: Librairie Armand Colin. 1971. Pp. 387. 45 fr.

This book includes two major articles (140 pages), and a long appendix (240 pages). The latter is a collection of diversely edited, annotated, or interpreted documents: tithe returns, agricultural and commercial inquiries, and a farmer's account. In the first major article, an expanded version of a piece that appeared earlier in the Revue Historique (1968), and was included (in translation) in Essays in French Economic History (Rondo Cameron, ed., 1970). Morineau questions the existence of an "agricultural revolution" in France in the eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries. He compares the agricultural census of 1840 with quantitative evidence on yields and productivity for the early eighteenth century. To this is added an abundant but scattered collection of evidence pointing to the same conclusion: that yields of cereals per acre or per bushel of seed stagnated during the period in question. This is excellent work, and the findings are remarkable. But to conclude from this that there was consequently no agricultural revolution underestimates the importance of new crops, particularly maize and the potato. Morineau dismisses this objection by arguing that such new crops did not truly constitute an agricultural revolution since they were not accompanied by rising incomes: the potato was a symptom of poverty rather than prosperity. But is this not begging the question?

Having argued for the absence of an agricultural revolution in France in the period 1700-1840 Morineau then argues that this casts a doubt on the existence of a "demographic revolution," since the former is supposed to have caused the latter, and he sets himself the task of justifying his doubts (the second major article). A long discussion leads him rightly into stressing diversity in the demographic history of French regions. Differences in rates of population growth in the eighteenth century are linked to the different relations between population and means of subsistence existing in the various regions at the start. He finds that, where he estimates there were large food surpluses, population growth was more rapid. On the other hand, he recognizes that rapid population growth could also be sustained on other rural, but nonagricultural sources of income, such as cottage industry. However, Morineau finds two exceptions, Languedoc and Normandy, to the positive long-run association between population growth and rural industrialization.

At this point (p. 333) he throws up his hands, and the discussion ends abruptly with the unexpected conclusion that the sources of regional demographic differences must be sought on the side of changing patterns of epidemics and contagions (i.e. unexplained exogenous forces). The study ends with a conclusion that there was neither a demographic nor an agricultural "revolution" in France until 1850 or so, only regional variations in the degree of stagnation.

An unfortunate defect of this book is its writing style. The reader is drawn into an interminable monologue with exclamations and interrogations as well as allusions, archaisms, neologisms, and colloquialisms. Going through all of that is thoroughly exhausting. Nonetheless, the primary and secondary material that the book contains will make it indispensable for specialists of French agricultural or demographic history in the period 1700-1850.

FRANKLIN MENDELS

University of Quebec

PATRICE L.-R. HIGONNET. Pont-de-Montvert: Social Structure and Politics in a French Village, 1700-1914. (Harvard Historical Studies, Volume 85.) Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press. 1971. Pp. xv, 217. $8.50.

With a sure but unobtrusive display of factual and statistical erudition based on impressive combing of national, local, and family archives, Professor Higonnet has pieced together some political and social aspects in the modern history of a village in Southern France. In the process he develops interesting generalizations about the some thousand souls inhabiting the cluster of twenty-two hamlets and central bourg, while setting the isolated community in the historical and historiographical context of France as a whole. Stressing a tripartite social structure of rural and urban "lower class," landowning peasants, and rich peasant and bourgeois "notables," the author sees a Porchnev type of late seventeenth-century class conflict insofar as the elite Protestant Montipontins stood aloof from their social inferiors' Camisard wars with Catholic state authority. Using the same social base he then shapes the community-wide support of the French Revolution around a Cobban-like theme of a bourgeois elite strengthening its traditional power. Finally he traces the results of the nineteenth-century "breakup" of the social structure: the petit bourgeois, who stayed on while the top and bottom elements vanished, proceeded to engage in radical political ideas removed from the concrete issues of their little world while socially clinging somewhat conservatively to their impoverished way of life.

Though Higonnet does balance these bold outlines with careful sifting of details, some basic questions remain. First, the village was untypical insofar as it had no resident nobility, and its pervading Protestantism also made it less typical than the author suggests. The second objection is to the book's general, though not consistent, emphasis on social structure as a key to the events of Pont-de-Montvert's history. For example, it is straining the implications of the social elite's inaction during the Camisard wars to see this as a class conflict between rich and poor. In the case of the French Revolution, the scraps of political records left for the historian do not allow much to be said of political and social interaction. And the postrevolutionary chapters combine the assumption that "attenuation of social distinctions" caused doctrinal unanimity with the quite different stress on the impact of education on society and politics.

A. LLOYD MOOTE *
University of Southern California

IRA O. WADE. The Intellectual Origins of the French Enlightenment. Princeton: Princeton University Press. 1971. Pp. xxi, 678. $20.00.

This lengthy book is the first of a projected three volumes devoted to "the reality of the Enlightenment: its origin, its development into an organic something, its consequences" (p. x). Professor Wade, well known among students of French literature for his important works on Voltaire, fears that while we know more about many particular aspects of the Enlightenment than we did fifty years ago, we may also know less about "its inner nature, its personality, its internal reality" (p. xiii). His ambition is to synthesize the partial investigations of recent decades in such a way as to reveal the true Enlightenment: the organic spirit of the age. That such an organic spirit exists (or existed), Professor Wade has no doubts. He is therefore perturbed by the fact that historians have apparently foisted their "private Enlightenments" upon the public as authentic. It may be, however, that the conscious discipline of making a "private enlightenment" public knowledge is essential to good historical writing. For Professor Wade's attempt to analyze the origins of the one true Enlightenment has produced a book that is exasperating in its pretensions, eclectic in its method, and confusing in its logic.

Professor Wade starts his book with an introductory section entitled "Enlightenments We Have Known." The first chapter, devoted to "The Changing Picture of the Enlightenment," deals instead with political and social conditions in eighteenth-century France. The burden of the argument is that historians now regard the period as more prosperous than they once did. But the exact relevance of this interpretation to the French Enlightenment is not made clear, while Professor Wade's conclusion that we have overlooked "the fact that, for Enlightened Man, it is thought which leads the world" (p. xiv) seems largely gratuitous. The second chapter of this introductory section gives a preliminary characterization of the Enlightenment for which Professor Wade is seeking origins in this volume: the Enlightenment as defined by Kant and Cassirer, for whom the problem of knowledge was the critical issue. Following the work of Henri Busson, Professor Wade traces this problem back to the Italian naturalism of the Paduan school and above all to Montaigne, whose "Que sais-je?" was to become the constant watchword of the free-thinkers and the constant challenge to the thinkers (i.e. the philosophers).

Professor Wade then marshals a rich parade of free-thinkers and thinkers in three columns: Renaissance, baroque, and classical. There is much erudition here and much fascination. But there is little that is conclusive. There is, for example, a most interesting series of vignettes of five free-thinkers (Charron, La Mothe Le Vayer, Naudé, Patin, and Sorbière). But when Professor Wade asks exactly what these writers contributed to the making of Enlightenment thought (pp. 201-06), the question gets lost in a discussion of the views of the literary historians upon which he has drawn. More crucial is the lengthy section (the longest in the book) on "The Structuring of Enlightenment Attitudes" (pp. 418-643). In effect this is a discussion of five philosophers (Malebranche, Leibnitz, Locke, Newton, and Bayle) with a brief excursus on the battle of the Ancients and Moderns and an anomalous coda on movements for reform under Louis XIV. Again, in themselves each of these discussions repays reading, for Professor Wade has read widely and thoughtfully. But taken together they do not amount to an analysis of the "structuring of Enlightenment attitudes" in any sense. Perhaps this is because Professor Wade distinguishes between structure and form, the spirit of the age developing only as "structure" takes on "organic form." But it means that many readers may remain puzzled by this book until Professor Wade's intentions become clearer in its sequel.

K. M. BAKER
University of Chicago

VINCENT W. BEACH. Charles X of France: His Life and Times. Boulder, Colo.: Pruett Publishing Company. 1971. Pp. xv, 488. $16.50.

In this study Beach has brought together research that extends over more than a decade. Some of it has been published previously, but there is much fresh material to help us better understand the contribution of Charles X (1757-1836) to the royalist counterrevolution in France.

Thirteen chapters span his life. After exploring neglected years in the dissipated court of Louis XV the narrative follows the tedium and fantasies of twenty-five years of exile and helps us to understand the problems inherent in Charles's assumption of the Restoration kingship at the age of sixty-seven. New information clarifies developments in three major areas: Charles's role in the Assembly of Notables as opponent of reform, the rationale for the coronation ritual and legislative program of his first three years as monarch, and the program and collapse of the Polignac ministry.

Throughout each of these crises and over a forty-two year period, the author remarks a stubborn consistency in Charles's political behavior. The political ideas spelled out in Charles's defense of aristocratic and monarchical privilege in the Assembly of Notables during the "pre-Revolution" remained his program for the active years of counterrevolutionary insurgency (1789-1804) as well as for the decade of furtive conspiracy that followed. And, despite expedient and sporadic support for the Charter during the Restoration, these ideas emerged again in the July decrees that precipitated the revolution of 1830. For Beach this consistency is more stubborn blindness than statesmanship, but he does recognize the king's personal involvement in an ambitious foreign policy, a successful resolution of the contested revolutionary land settlement, and the marked economic progress of the Restoration.

One of the reasons why we have not had a scholarly biography of Charles before this has been the difficulty of gathering relevant sources. It is to Beach's credit that he has been able to unearth important unpublished primary materials in special collections at the Public Record Office and the British Museum as well as in important public collections in France. These were supplemented by newspapers, records of parliamentary debate, and a large memoir literature (much of which is unfortunately either hagiographic or, as in the case of de Boigne, maliciously anecdotal). The secondary works drawn on for authority are also substantial, although they are often introduced rather ponderously through lengthy citations offered to the reader without comment. With the exception of the years 1805-13, every period of Charles's life is illuminated in some way by these materials.

A second problem for scholars has been the dullness of the man, projected to liberal critics in his own time and to posterity. Charles was a far cry from his illustrious ancestor the Sun King. Beach has overcome an understandable aversion produced by Charles's early philandering, intellectual mediocrity, and procrastination to present a fuller picture than we have previously had of the last Bourbon monarch of France.

DANIEL P. RESNICK
Carnegie-Mellon University

ROGER PRICE. The French Second Republic: A Social History. Ithaca: Cornell University Press. 1972. Pp. vii, 386. $11.50.

Not since Georges Renard contributed his volume to Jean Jaurès's Histoire socialiste almost seventy years ago has there been a serious social history of the Second Republic. And this despite the best efforts of a historical society specifically devoted to the revolution of 1848, despite a centenary celebrated amidst orgies of retrospective studies and despite a modest stream of substantial publications since 1948. Professor Price's book seeks to fill this gap.

As a social historian Price is chiefly concerned with the linkage of French society to French politics, of social structure to political dynamics. The study divides naturally into three sections of comparable length: an introductory static analysis of French society prior to the February Revolution (pp. 1-94) that distinguishes between basic structure and the disruption peculiar to the period just preceding the revolution; second, a socio-political account of the revolutionary period par excellence (February through June 1848) of which over one-third is devoted to the social analysis of the June insurrection (pp. 95-192); third, a much sketchier account of the two and one-half years separating June 1848 from December 1851 (pp. 193-326) with, again, one-third devoted to the social analysis of the coup d'état. This adds up to a highly ambitious agenda. Price has unfortunately insisted on interspersing a running commentary on Marx's views of the Second Republic's social evolution that might have made an excellent article but tends to clutter up the book.

How successful is Price's social history? Very successful in some respects and certainly very useful, particularly to nonspecialists. For one thing the author's focus is on France and not, as has been customary, on Paris. For anyone interested in a scholarly assessment of French society prior to 1848 based on the best recent regional studies, Price's introductory section is authoritative. Furthermore he is genuinely sensitive to the variety of French society and hence to the complexity of its political response. The social significance of key episodes, such as the June Days and the resistance to the coup d'état, are more fully explored than in any other comparable work. Finally, considering its broad scope, the book is remarkably free of errors.

Yet I have misgivings that I find hard to articulate, some of which have to do with style and, by implication, organization. Historians do not spoil each other in this regard, but Price's style runs from limp to soggy, with an occasional impenetrable sentence thrown in as additional challenge. The result was that I was so busy cutting my way through the underbrush that I was rarely aware how the forest was laid out. I am sure that each chapter does have an underlying outline, but it is not made apparent to the reader. Perhaps it is also the style that gets in the way of Price's overall interpretation. After giving the book two careful readings I remain unconvinced that any definable relationship between social structure and political behavior emerges. The author, following J.-A. Tudesq, begins by presenting France as a traditionalist society led by its notables, leading Price to an essentially determinist verdict on the revolution of 1848: conservatism was bound to prevail where so many had a stake, however modest, in the existing order. Yet in accounting for the radical sweep of the area of small peasant property in 1849 and the triumph of conservatism where large-scale agriculture deprived the rural masses of proprietorship, Price jettisons his earlier explanation. I guess I am worried by what I see as essentially circular reasoning. Because, for example, the Limousin votes socialist in 1849 the author is bound and determined to find reasons why the social conditions of the area make this inevitable. He would do so with equal gusto had it voted conservative. Perhaps social history must develop more sophisticated hypotheses.

One problem may be that Price does not marshal the full range of available evidence against which hypotheses ought to be tested. Price does best in his introductory chapters where he pulls together and displays the findings of some of the major recent French scholars in the field. Where he relies on his own, necessarily cursory archival research—namely for the period of the Second Republic itself—he depends additionally on standard mémoires and general histories, completely ignoring a mass of local and regional histories of the Second Republic (admittedly of unequal value). As it is, for his account of regional variations Price relies on the thin diet of the reports of the procureurs généraux and a patchwork of massive and recent doctoral theses that leave much of France blank.

Finally, I was disturbed by Price's carelessness in computing social data. Though I am much impressed by quantification as a tool of social history, the quantifiable is not always what it seems. To generalize, as Price does, about the social composition of the June insurgents from the roster of 11,642 suspects arrested requires assurance that the bulk of them were indeed participants. Even an occupational analysis of the four thousand found guilty must take into account the district-by-district incidence of the repression, the industrial geography of Paris, and similar variables. A breakdown by birth place may prove equally treacherous: Do the 449 arrests of suspects born in Moselle speak for a special Mosellois propensity to rebel? Or were Mosellois in rebellion-prone trades? Or did they just happen to lodge in some neighborhood, like the Faubourg St. Antoine, subject to unusually severe repression? Quantifiable data have to be scrutinized by conventional historical methods just as much as any other findings. It does not, alas, speak for itself.

In summary, Price is successful in providing a cogent summary of what we know about French society at mid-century and in detailing the strains within it. He is less successful in relating social change to the nature and direction of political dynamics, but this is, of course, an extraordinarily difficult task. The publisher, incidentally, should be awarded the Legion of Demerit for inventing the most inconvenient method of footnoting yet devised by the ingenuity of man.

PETER H. AMANN
University of Michigan—
Dearborn

HELMUT RUMPLER. Ministerrat und Ministerratsprotokolle 1848-1867: Behördengeschichtliche und aktenkundliche Analyse. With a foreword by FRIEDRICH ENGEL-JANOSI. (Die Ministerratsprotokolle Österreichs und der österreichisch-ungarischen Monarchie 1848-1918. First Series: Die Protokolle des österreichischen Ministerates 1848-1867. Einleitungsband.) Vienna: Österreichischer Bundesverlag für Unterricht, Wissenschaft und Kunst. 1970. Pp. 131, 4 plates. Sch. 498.

HORST BRETTNER-MESSLER, editor. Die Protokolle des österreichischen Ministerrates 1848-1867. Part 6, Das Ministerium Belcredi. Volume 1, 29. Juli 1865-26. März 1866. With an introduction by FRIEDRICH ENGEL-JANOSI. (Die Ministeratsprotokolle Österreichs und der österreichischisch-ungarischen Monarchie 1848-1918. First Series, part 6.) Vienna: Österreichischer Bundesverlag für Unterricht, Wissenschaft und Kunst. 1971. Pp. lxxxiv, 351. Sch. 950.

The protocols of the Austrian ministerial councils have long been recognized as an important source for Austrian history and have been profitably used by many scholars. A joint Austrian and Hungarian project is in progress to publish these documents in their entirety. The first series (1848-67) is being compiled by Austrian scholars, the second (1867-1918, excepting the period 1871-83) by Hungarians.

Two volumes have now appeared in print. Helmut Rumpler's slim but valuable introduction to the first series, Ministerrat und Ministerratsprotokolle, presents a cogent summary of the role and significance of the Council of Ministers. Rumpler, the general editor of the project, also discusses the organization and the guiding principles adopted for the publication of the documents—as well as some of the peculiarities and limitations of the Protokolle. Waltraud Heindl has added useful tables of the personnel of the various ministries, 1848-67. The first volume of documents, compiled by Horst Brettner-Messler, covers the first eight months of the ministry of Richard Belcredi (July 1865-March 1866). The redaction is superb and will enhance both the ease and value with which the documents can be used. The volume is nicely indexed and includes a table of contents for each protocol and a list of all participants in the councils. A bibliography of pertinent secondary works for the period is added (though it is hardly comprehensive). Each protocol is printed in full, and there are explanatory and reference notes by the compiler. Friedrich Engel-Janosi has contributed a detailed introduction.

The fifty-six protocols printed here indicate clearly the limited authority exercised by the Ministerrat. The overriding concerns for Austria in these months were the Hungarian question and the contest with Prussia in Germany. Yet the council touched only sporadically and unsystematically upon the Hungarian issue and upon foreign affairs hardly at all; only three times was foreign policy even discussed. On the other hand, a wide range of economic and social concerns were brought before the ministers. The financial plight of the Empire was a persistent and formidable problem and, as these documents reveal, was an added imperative for the resolution of the Hungarian and Austrian constitutional questions. The loan of 1865, finally negotiated with French bankers, came under such disadvantageous terms that it was openly described in the session of November 7 as "a swindle."

Conversely, this was also a period of economic expansion, and considerable information on the gradual industrialization of the Empire is available in the protocols. The extension of the railway network, the formation of a joint stock company, and numerous discussions concerning taxation policy and the promotion of various industries can be mentioned in this regard. There is also some information of use and interest on social and cultural developments in the monarchy—religious affairs, press relations, and educational questions all received attention.

As historical sources, the protocols of the Ministerrat have obvious limitations; the council shared the shadow rather than the substance of power. Nevertheless, anyone interested in the Habsburg Empire should welcome the appearance of further volumes in this project, which has been impressively inaugurated here.

RICHARD B. ELROD

Illinois State University

SAMUEL BERNSTEIN. Auguste Blanqui and the Art of Insurrection. London: Lawrence and Wishart. 1971. Pp. 364. £4.00.

A good biography of Blanqui is needed. Unfortunately Dr. Bernstein's effort, while offering some useful new information and interpretation, does not fulfill the need. The author rightly criticizes much existing work on Blanqui, both the calumnious tradition of conservative observers and a tendency among French communist writers to treat Blanquism as essentially a precursor of the Marxist movement. Utilizing an extensive manuscript collection on Blanqui, Bernstein offers a variety of personal details, including material on the huge portion of Blanqui's life that was spent in prison. Bernstein presents new material on Blanqui's judgment of events in which he participated, such as the revolution of 1848, and the author has new insight into Blanqui's political thought, stressing the conspirator's belief in the motive power of ideas and a hostility to religion and superstition that outweighed his eloquent denunciation of capitalism. Though the overall interpretation of Blanqui is familiar, he is placed more understandably in the French intellectual and political tradition. Blanqui's failure to rouse mass support is also intelligently assessed.

The approach is largely descriptive and chronological. One aside on Blanqui's psychology misfires badly. Even the description is often confused by inserted accounts of general developments in French history—developments quite familiar in outline and based on limited and often dated secondary accounts. This pattern is less pronounced in the section of the book dealing with Blanqui's activities after the 1850s. Here the Blanqui manuscripts are more detailed and revealing, and the author is more content to assume that his readers know something of the general background. Even here, however, we are treated to a number of simplistic judgments of the Second Empire and the French working class.

The descriptive approach involves considerable repetition of interpretive points. We are told and retold of Blanqui's romanticism and his inability to communicate with workers. A few other judgments are repeated without significant proof; thus the claim that Blanqui was a racist and an anti-Semite. Blanqui seems constantly to be held up to a model and found wanting: he lacked a general theory of history, he did not properly understand class structure, he was a French nationalist in the Jacobin petty bourgeois tradition, he was conspiratorial rather than systematic. He was not Marx.

The book presents some information on the formation of the Blanquist movement in the 1860s. Its career under the Third Republic is sketched, but there is no overall assessment of the impact of Blanquism on later protest movements. In sum, the book should be read by anyone interested in political and social agitation in nineteenth-century France. But one must hope that it will not impede a more analytical and broadly researched study of this archetypal revolutionary.

PETER N. STEARNS

Rutgers University

DAVID STAFFORD. From Anarchism to Reformism: A Study of the Political Activities of Paul Brousse within the First International and the French Socialist Movement, 1870-90. [Toronto:] University of Toronto Press. 1971. Pp. xiv, 367. $15.00.

Studies of nineteenth-century French anarchist and socialist movements generally treat Paul Brousse (1844-1912) as a figure of secondary importance and his Politique des possibilités, his Possibilism, as a species of political opportunism. In this carefully researched and clearly written account Dr. Stafford has endeavored to give Brousse his due, documenting his "crucial role" within the anarchist Jura Federation, the congresses of the First International, and the post-Commune French socialist movement, as well as seeking to establish a "logical line of development" that links Brousse's early anarchism with his Possibilism and to identify him as a realist and pragmatist to whom "action was the guide to theory."

During the period of his exile in Switzerland (1873-78), Brousse was indeed an intransigent, left-wing anarchist and a prominent exponent of "propaganda by the deed." The increasing isolation and general ineffectiveness of the anarchists, combined with his growing concern with the revival of the socialist movement in France, led Brousse to re-examine his doctrinal commitments. When he returned to France in 1880 he had considerably modified his revolutionary posture and was prepared to make use of legal means of action, the ballot and electoral campaigns, within the existing structure of bourgeois political institutions in order to transform society. Believing that an anarcho-communist society could be achieved in piecemeal fashion through the enactment of significant socialist measures on the local level, in municipalities and communes, Brousse and his followers gained control of the recently formed French Socialist party and, subsequently, replaced its Marxist-inspired Minimum Program with one that emphasized specific, practical, and moderate reforms. During the 1880s the Possibilist party, in contrast to the Guesdist and Blanquist parties, scored at the polls, winning seats on the Paris Municipal Council and in the Chamber of Deputies. Brousse himself became president of that council in 1905 and a deputy the following year, although his party entered a period of rapid decline after the schism that occurred at the Chatellerault Congress in 1890. This fine study is based on a number of collections of manuscript materials located in Amsterdam, Paris, Bern, Brussels, Imola, and elsewhere, private papers in the possession of the Brousse family, relevant anarchist and socialist newspapers and periodicals, as well as a wealth of other primary and secondary sources.

AARON NOLAND
City College,
City University of New York

JAMES HARDING. The Astonishing Adventure of General Boulanger. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. 1971. Pp. xii, 251. $8.95.

It would be an act of charity to omit reference to this book from serious journals of history. But Harding's Boulanger comes from a reputable old-line publishing house, which touts it as "an authoritative biography," as "a lively, yet scholarly account of the life of the original man on a white horse." Let us overlook that word "yet" and its suggestion that "scholarly" and "lively" are incompatible, and let us even concede that the "white horse" phrase is a figure of speech, inasmuch as Boulanger's black horse is justly famed. What then must we do? Responsibility to even the minimum scholarly tenets of the historical profession requires that note be taken of some of the work's serious flaws.

The total absence of any internal documentation must be deplored. There is not, in this "scholarly" work, a single note citing the author's source of information. He tells of having got from Boulanger's grandson access to the family archives, which yielded "much unpublished material which has been incorporated in this book." There is no way of telling what Harding used from the Boulanger papers and where he used it. There is also a four-page appended bibliography that contains a strange, and unclassified, mixture of primary and secondary items, of ferociously tendancés tracts and scholarly studies. The text of the biography itself is liberally sprinkled—without a clue as to their basis—with conjecture as to motives and feelings and with (imaginary?) direct dialogue.

Further, a claim to objectivity with reference to Boulanger's career cannot be accepted from an author whose total bias against the Third Republic is implicit throughout the book. Concerning prominent Republican figures of the era, unrelievedly lurid and snide characterizations—spiced with elaborate gutter anecdotes—abound. Also there seems to be no institutional or political arrangement or practice of the maligned Troisième that is not held up to ridicule. While there can be no argument ipso facto with an attempt to revise the generally held unfavorable image of Boulanger, Harding's sympathetic image lacks credibility owing to the warped context in which the general is presented. Even though this biography makes no pose of being in the "life-and-times" genre, elementary decency demands serious effort at judicious and balanced treatment of other actors in the drama and of the setting in which they moved.

Harding is not a historian, and the absence of historical perspective that mars his life of Boulanger demonstrates the hazards that await the amateur when he treats one small segment in a complicated story—in this case, the story of the survival and consolidation of the Third Republic. No serious student of French history denies the sordidness, the shockingly unethical affairs that marked the 1880s in French public life. But with Harding and his smears of Boulanger's opponents these scandals are not adequately fitted into the Third Republic's ongoing development in which these very opponents, unsavory as many were, may nevertheless be seen as having made a genuine contribution to French democracy—to the point, even, where a reputable historian such as Georges Duveau could wish that "the German Social Democrats had shown with reference to Hitler a little of the energy that the Floquets and the Constans used to contain the Boulangist flood."

Any analysis of Boulanger must sooner or later come to revolve around the celebrated episode of the coup—that wasn't and must take into account both how propitious in fact the moment was on January 27, 1889, and why the general behaved as he did. Harding with great dramatic detail builds up a scene of mob enthusiasm with strident voices urging a march on the Elysée. He portrays Boulanger as resisting the summons because to act in an overt coup went counter to the habits of discipline and obedience engrained in him as a soldier and because of his dedication to legality. Harding's alleged "revision" consists of thus minimizing Boulanger's infatuation with his mistress as the cause of his inaction. But Frederic Seager (see David B. Ralston's review of The Boulanger Affair, AHR, 75 [1970]: 1138–39) has already shattered this "romantic" version of the tale. Seager, moreover, found no evidence of appeals for going "To the Elysée!" He states categorically that "the source of the legend of a coup manqué cannot be traced to contemporary accounts" (p. 204). Surely Harding, before he asks for his study to be taken seriously, should have come to grips with Seager's well-documented contention, if with nothing else.

JEAN T. JOUGHIN
American University

H. L. WESSELING. Soldaat en krijger: Franse opvattingen over leger en oorlog, 1905–1914. (Speculum Historiale, Number 4.) Assen: Van Gorcum & Comp. N.V.; Dr. H. J. Prakke & H. M. G. Prakke. 1969. Pp. 284. 29 gls.

The author of this balanced and intelligent book confesses that he chose his subject out of a feeling of astonishment. Astonishment at the fact that in the ten years before 1914 French writers and publicists of a much wider circle than just the more traditional rightist and conservative intelligentsia and for a larger public than just the small ordinary reactionary groups started to praise the maintenance and actual use of the French army and to idealize war in general in such a way that the author rightly speaks of a "serious delusion." To describe war, for example, as a "poème indicible du sang et de beauté," as was done by E. Psichari in 1908, requires a great deal of understanding.

The first three chapters try to paint the background against which this idealization of army and war has to be set. In chapter 1 the author sketches the rather ambiguous and awkward position of the French army during the first thirty years of the Third Republic: on the one hand accepted as the inevitable and necessary means by which a defeated nation regained its position of power in the world, on the other hand distrusted and rejected by the republican bourgeoisie, an idealistic intelligentsia, and the radical socialists out of antimilitaristic and pacifistic ideals and progressive political aims. From 1900 onward, however, the author discerns a general change of mood (ch. 2) that made acceptance of the French army easy, and former differences seemed to be smoothed over. A kind of "mal du siècle," a feeling of uncertainty and insufficiency, caused a strong reaction against what was seen to be "decadent" and "weak." A younger generation, of bourgeois and labor-class origin, seemed to be exhilarated by the great colonial-imperialistic successes of France and the impressive French victories in sports events and feats of aviation. And finally the international political crises of Tangier and Agadir (ch. 3) seemed to move public opinion in France toward real sympathy for a strong French army and toward a firm interest in theories that idealized war, without, of course, ever being as fully absorbed or as intellectually stimulated by such thoughts as were the more consistent and expressive interpreters of this trend of feeling.

Perhaps one could criticize this rather long introductory part of the book for its somewhat impressionistic approach. Whether the antimilitaristic and pacifist tendencies died, as the author seems to imply by remaining silent about them for the period after 1900, remains doubtful. Whether the mood of the "mal du siècle" was as serious as the author, by an excellent choice of quotations and references, wants to suggest is still open for discussion. Whether Tangier and Agadir were really stronger stimuli for the change of mood in France than some earlier international crises is a question that can also be put with some justification. On the other hand, one is grateful that the author avoids easy monocausality and simple determinism; rather, he attempts to describe shifts of moods embedded in a network of feelings and situations that taken individually did not necessarily cause such change nor inevitably result in a general war.

The main part of the book tends also to be an attempt at understanding by description rather than explaining by analysis. It is a systematic and well-ordered demonstration of the kind of expressed feelings and mentalities, reasonings and argumentations that glorified the army as a real school for the nation (ch. 4) and that idealized war as a blessing and purification for that nation (ch. 5). The author offers no quantitative study measuring the change of public opinion—he refers with due praise to Eugen Weber's The National Revival in France, 1905-1914 (1959) to which this study could be considered to be complementary—but instead he gives a qualitative description of a climate of opinion, carried forward and supported by such well-known and important writers as Péguy, Barrès, Brunetière, Massis, or Psichari.

The last paragraph of the last chapter describes the argument "la guerre pour la guerre" as the culmination of all war idealization in its most irrational style and as the perfection of the human necessity of "vivre dangereusement" (Emile Faguet). Such thoughts in their most consequential radicality are most certainly of the utmost importance to describe and to understand because they did not die after the First World War and were certainly not the monopoly of French prewar ideology.

I. SCHÖFFER

University of Leyden

ERIKA SPIVAKOVSKY. Son of the Alhambra: Don Diego Hurtado de Mendoza, 1504-1575. Austin: University of Texas Press. 1970. Pp. xvi, 450. $10.00.

Not since the publication thirty years ago of Angel González Palencia's Vida y obras de Don Diego Hurtado de Mendoza (and for the first time in English) has there appeared a full-length biography of this important Spanish Renaissance humanist, philosopher, poet, historian, soldier, diplomat, and governor. Mrs. Spivakovsky's sympathetic treatment of Mendoza's active career does not stray far from Don Angel's distinguished work, but she does add a dimension to sixteenth-century history in her perceptive interpretation of Mendoza's role in Habsburg diplomacy.

Don Diego was a complex and sensitive personality, more responsive to the currents of thought transforming Europe in the early sixteenth century than were most servants of the Imperial Spanish crown. Yet he was staunchly traditional in his medieval conceptions of service and honor. His aggressive promotion of Charles V's interests in Italy during his ambassadorships in Venice (1539-44), Trent (1545-46), and Rome (1547-52) and his vigorous governorship of Siena (1547-52)—resulting in repeated confrontations with the pugnacious Pope Paul III and the eventual revolt of the Sienese—is vividly described by Mrs. Spivakovsky. Much less space is devoted to Mendoza's writings. This may be understandable in view of the anomalous circumstances of their composition and Mendoza's strange reluctance to claim any of his literary creations, but, it is nevertheless unfortunate that Mrs. Spivakovsky did not see fit to give more than two pages to Mendoza's famous Guerra de Granada and only the briefest mention of his many poems. From her previous articles we know that Mrs. Spivakovsky attributes the Lazarillo de Tormes to Mendoza, but she says almost nothing here about this literary classic in the context of Don Diego's public service and makes no attempt to summarize her conclusions concerning its authorship. She does affirm, however, that Mendoza's intellectual bent was in part responsible for his failings as a man of affairs.

As a study of Mendoza's diplomatic career this is a valuable addition to a fuller understanding of the man and his times. Many insights into the tempestuous struggles among Habsburg, Valois, Farnese, and Medici are revealed. The author's documentation is extensive, especially from the archives at Simancas, Florence, and Madrid, but a rather jaundiced picture of Spanish-French and Spanish-papal relations results from the almost total neglect of French and papal sources. This is doubly surprising since the French and Vatican archives are among the richest and most accessible for this period. A further dimension would be added to Mendoza's portrait and the Habsburg-Valois rivalry would certainly appear more clearly if the observations and opinions of the French ambassadors were used along with those of Mendoza and his correspondents. All of which suggests that even this fine book is not the last word either on Mendoza or on the intricacies of power politics in the sixteenth century.

DE LAMAR JENSEN

Brigham Young University

ORLANDO RIBEIRO. A evolução agrária no Portugal mediterrâneo: Notícia e comentário de uma obra de Albert Silbert. (Chorographia, Série Histórica.) Lisbon: Centro de Estudos Geográficos, Universidade de Lisboa. 1970. Pp. 226, 5 maps.

Orlando Ribeiro's little book is a commentary on and a critical evaluation of the massive two-volume (1,216-page) work of Albert Silbert, Le Portugal Méditerranéen à la fin de l'ancien régime, XVIII<sup>e</sup>—début du XIX<sup>e</sup> siècle. Contribution à l'histoire agraire comparée (Paris, 1966). Silbert's work deals with a region comprising the province of Alentejo and Lower Beira (Beira-Baixa), which together total about one-third of the whole country. This region has several distinctive geographical features, although I have some reservations about the division of Portugal into "Atlantic" and "Mediterranean" regions when the latter are, in fact, situated a long way from the sea of that name. Silbert's point of departure was the manuscript "Dicionário Geográfico" drawn up by order of Pombal after the disastrous earthquake of November 1, 1755, in order to try to ascertain the extent of the damage on a country-wide basis. As the questions were addressed to the parish priests, the replies are of unequal value, but many of them contain reliable statistics and statements concerning the local population and economy. Silbert also used a wide range of archival sources (many of them untapped before) and the relatively limited amount of printed material on Portuguese rural history that was available, supplemented, of course, by lengthy visits to the area. He was thus able to produce a work in the best tradition of the Annales school, a work densely documented from primary sources, which is essential reading for anyone concerned with Portugal in the period 1750-1850, and to which (as Ribeiro stresses) this monograph is a guide and commentary, rather than an exhaustive summary.

As the leading Portuguese historical geographer (who himself studied the same region over thirty years ago) Ribeiro is uniquely fitted to explain and evaluate the importance of Silbert's work, which Ribeiro does clearly, concisely, and fairly. Historians who cannot read Portuguese will be grateful for the twenty-five-page review in French that is reprinted at the end; but Ribeiro acknowledges that it is impossible to summarize Silbert's book adequately in this length. One of the most interesting points that emerges is the persistence of various forms of collective agrarianism in this region. Ribeiro argues cogently that they probably derive from very remote (perhaps pre-Roman) times, whereas Silbert considers them to be of relatively recent origin. Forms of land tenure and of the rotation of crops varied widely, and both authors demonstrate that the large landed estates of the Alentejo differed greatly from the latifundia of Spain and southern Italy with which they have often been compared. The social structure of the towns and countryside is analyzed in meticulous detail. Agricultural, economic, and social historians will find Orlando Ribeiro's monograph an appetizing hors d'oeuvre to Silbert's very substantial banquet.

C. R. BOXER
Yale University

J. GÉRARD-LIBOIS and JOSÉ COTOVITCH. L'an 40: La Belgique occupée. Brussels: CRISP. [1971.] Pp. 517. 480 fr. B.

The central position of the authors of L'an 40: La Belgique occupée is that the German conquest and occupation of their country in 1940 aggravated all of the problems of Belgian society and that the issues faced in the first year of the subjugation continued to be the major issues for the remainder of the war. To make clear what the problems of Belgium were in 1940 the authors have an introductory section in which they sketch in rapid fashion the question of neutrality, the Flemish-Walloon controversy, the multiple-party system, and the military predicament of a small state.

After the "war of eighteen days," the situation within the country became ever more complex because of a variety of issues. First, there was the "royal question," which revolved around the decisions of the king to be commander-in-chief of the armies in the field rather than to remain at the head of his civilian government, to call for a surrender rather than to fight on, to remain in the country and to share the fate of his people rather than to go abroad and lead a resistance government, and to seek concessions from the occupier for his people. Second, there was the knotty question of organizing an autonomous administration under German military authority and the making of inevitable compromises to keep the "Belgian" administration intact. There was the matter of getting the economy functioning in order to give people employment, even though it was known that much of the industrial production would go to Germany and that the Berlin clearing account would be used to avoid payment in full at market prices. Last, there was "la faim," which seems to have been the major catalyst in turning the people against the occupier.

All of these questions, and many more, are treated with competence and fairness. Yet the story fails to distinguish adequately between the important and the insignificant, contains such a vast amount of detail that a question may be obscured, and often leaves the reader wishing that some idea of the sequel were included in the narrative. Furthermore, the text is not easy reading. In fact, it seems to consist at times of disintegrated notes that were never reduced to a comprehensible form. The volume will, however, find a place in the literature of World War II, for it has a great reference value, is reliable, and has an excellent and extensive bibliography.

SHEPARD B. CLOUGH
Columbia University

FINN GAD. The History of Greenland. Volume 1, Earliest Times to 1700. Translated from the Danish by ERNST DUPONT. Montreal: McGill-Queen's University Press. 1971. Pp. xiii, 350. $16.50.

Scholars interested in the complex history of Greenland must not only use scant historical sources but rely upon recent archeological and anthropological information found scattered through relatively unfamiliar journals and written in Scandinavian languages with which they are often not familiar. It is thus particularly helpful to find here a brilliant synthesis of such materials written in English, which will certainly remain definitive for years to come.

Its author, Finn Gad, who has adapted this volume from his recent Danish work, which contains even fuller notes, deals with three major themes covering Greenland's history down to 1700 A.D. The first concerns itself with pre-Eskimo and Eskimo migrations into Greenland from the Northeast, which began as early as 1600 B.C. and continued with certain breaks until the more recent neo-Eskimo colonization of the island from 1200 to 1700 A.D. His second theme deals with Norse settlement from the late tenth century down to its end during the late fifteenth century. His third theme concerns the rediscovery of Greenland and its Eskimo inhabitants by Europeans during the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. Throughout, in order to explain the nature of Norse and Eskimo economy, society, and culture, the author makes use of a wealth of information derived from archeological and other research that helps illuminate many problems of Greenland's early history perplexing to scholars.

A few of his major points deserve emphasis. First of all he shows that Norse settlers arrived in Greenland during a period when it contained almost no native inhabitants, when it possessed a climate that allowed sheep and cattle to flourish, and when Norse settlers could exploit arctic resources, derived from narwhal and walrus, which were in great demand in Western Europe. Their settlements thus remained prosperous down to the thirteenth century. Only after 1200 did these Norse come in contact with neo-Eskimos, who possessed an arctic culture originating in Alaska and who were advancing down Greenland's east coast.

At first these contacts were peaceful ones and only grew hostile in the mid-fourteenth century when Eskimo pressures may have forced the abandoning of the northern Norse settlements. Whatever caused this abandonment it proved fatal to the colonists by cutting them off from those arctic products that made outside contacts with Europe profitable. Nevertheless, irregular connections with Europe were maintained for more than a century until the weakened survivors died out or were absorbed into a neo-Eskimo population that spread until it occupied the island's entire coastland.

The author believes that climatic change to colder temperatures played a role in all this by making animal husbandry increasingly difficult, by multiplying icebergs (which discouraged European mariners), and by producing a more arctic climate (which was particularly attuned to Eskimo culture). At any rate, it was a new and different Eskimo-inhabited Greenland that European whalers and explorers encountered during the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries.

ARCHIBALD R. LEWIS
University of Massachusetts,
Amherst

GUNNAR QVIST. Fredrika Bremer och kvinnans emancipation: Opinionshistoriska studier. [Fredrika Bremer and Women's Emancipation: Studies in the History of Opinions]. (Kvinnohistoriskt Arkiv, Number 8. Scandinavian University Books.) Göteborg: Akademiförlaget. 1969. Pp. viii, 296. 36 S. kr.

Gunnar Qvist's book is one of those, part historical and part literary, that at worst fall irretrievably between two stools, and at their best produce new perspectives for historians and literary scholars alike. It can be firmly placed in the latter category. It contains a wealth of clear and well-documented material on the changing position of women in Sweden in the nineteenth century, while tracing the evolution of Fredrika Bremer's own views on the subject, principally from the beginning of the 1830s to the publication of her major novel Hertha in 1856.

It has long been held that Hertha was instrumental in bringing about reforms concerning the legal status of women, in particular the provisions of a government bill automatically allowing them to attain majority without resort to a court of law. Gunnar Qvist, however, demonstrates that Fredrika Bremer's view had little or no effect on this bill, the main lines of which had been decided before the publication of Hertha. The great debate resulting from the novel was concerned more with the broader perspective of Bremer's thought, in particular her semimystical idea that woman, being the younger creation, was closer to God and therefore in a special position to bring about an ennobling of the world. It was this utopian perspective that was at the center of the controversy; in this idea Brenner was alone, deserted even by those who supported her more practical demands.

Gunnar Qvist works methodically, giving first a general historical review of the decades into which he divides Bremer's work, then examining the works themselves and comparing their implications with what she says in her private letters, and finally taking a look at the reactions of the critics. After the Hertha debate and a summary of her later views, it is, however, surprising to find a chapter on Bremer and the slave question in America. However interesting, this is not strictly speaking relevant to the rest of the book, as is perhaps implicitly accepted by the author, for he makes no reference to this chapter in his English summary. This summary is adequate, though one wishes the language had been checked by a competent English scholar.

W. GLYN JONES

University College London

JOHANNES SZIBORSKY. Die Germanisierung der Mark Brandenburg in der märkischen Geschichtsschreibung des 16. Jahrhunderts unter dem Einfluss von Humanismus und Reformation. Breslau: [the author.] 1969. Pp. 272.

This book is a doctoral dissertation completed in 1969 at the University of Giessen. As a result of World War II Sziborsky, who was born in Breslau in 1929, was forced to leave that area, which was to become part of Poland, and he moved to Westphalia in West Germany. Here he completed his university education, which included studies at Münster and Düsseldorf. As with most German doctoral dissertations the documentation for this study is impressive. The text contains 206 typewritten pages and added to this are some 28 pages of notes that contain 626 citations. These are all placed at the back of the book following the text.

The text is divided into four parts. First, there is the unnumbered Aufgabe or statement of the problem. Here the author clarifies the use of the term Germanisierung, which might be translated Germanization. This is a literary study, not a political history of Brandenburg. As a result Sziborsky assures the reader that the term Germanization must not be associated with the era of National Socialism or with earlier nationalism. From this portion he then turns to the introduction, which is an examination of medieval chronicles relating to the Germanization of Brandenburg. These include bishops' and princely records or chronicles as well as accounts of the Mark itself. From this introduction the author then turns to the main part where he examines the works of a number of writers such as Georg Sabinus, Ernst Brotuff, Wolfgang Jobst, and others. In the fourth and last part (numbered three in the book since the Aufgabe receives no numeral), Sziborsky treats modern research.

For the specialist in the German language and for the student of literary history this is a valuable study. It is easy to read and well documented, and the format and size make it easy to handle. American graduate schools might well consider changing the size and form of American doctoral dissertations and copy some of the features of those in German universities. The  $5\frac{1}{2} \times 8$  size, even though paper bound, is certainly easier to handle and to shelve than the traditional  $8\frac{1}{2} \times 11$  American dissertations. Also, the Aufgabe in this particular book presents the problem more clearly than the usual preface, and the brief autobiographical sketch of the doctoral candidate can be very interesting.

R. N. CROSSLEY

St. Olaf College

URBAN PIERIUS. Geschichte der kursächsischen Kirchen- und Schulreformation (MS germ. quart. 91 der Staatsbibliothek Preussischer Kulturbesitz). Edited and with an introduction by THOMAS KLEIN. Marburg: N. G. Elwert Verlag. 1970. Pp. 718. DM 56.

In the last third of the sixteenth century, Electoral Saxony, the homeland of the Reformation, changed its religious course several times. Although Elector August had sternly suppressed all crypto-Calvinist tendencies and had imposed the Formula of Concord as the confessional norm, his son, Elector Christian (1586-91), accepted the Reformed position and, with the help of his most prominent counselors, Nikolaus Krell and Andreas Paull, gradually opened Saxony to Calvinist influences. Professors and pastors no longer had to sign the Formula of Concord, and reforms along Calvinist lines were initiated: exorcism was eliminated, pictures were removed from churches, liturgy and ceremonies were simplified, and the christological and sacramental definitions of the Formula of Concord were rejected. These changes along Reformed lines have been called a Second Reformation. After all, as historians have already distinguished a Protestant Reformation, a Magisterial Reformation, a Catholic Reformation, a Radical Reformation, and a Third Reformation, we might as well add a Second Reformation. When Elector Christian died in 1591 the strictly Lutheran faction again seized control of the government. All Calvinist changes were immediately eliminated and the orthodox Lutheran position restored. In a fit of vengeance the most prominent Calvinist politicians were thrown into jail and Krell was executed in 1601 after ten years of imprisonment.

As superintendent at Dresden and afterward as professor of theology and general superintendent at Wittenberg, Urban Pierius (Urban Birnbaum, born in 1546 at Schwedt in Uckermark, died in 1616 at Bremen) was deeply involved in the Calvinist reforms. After the catastrophe of 1591 he occupied high positions in the Calvinist churches at Heidelberg, the Upper Palatinate, and in Bremen. It was at Bremen in or about 1608 that he wrote his History of the Reformation of Church and School in Electoral Saxony (covering the years from 1586 to 1591) in an effort to refute the violent accusations and calumnies raised against him and other Reformed theologians by Philipp Nicolai and other Lutheran authors. Pierius's History is based both on personal recollections and a considerable number of documents that had been saved before the disaster of 1591. Written in an unusually lively German style, the work is valuable because it presents a great amount of concrete information both on individuals and events, such as the characters and views of various powerful theologians and superintendents, hitherto unknown sermons held by court preachers before the Elector at Dresden, the effectiveness of censorship, or conditions at the university of Wittenberg. Although rich in factual and colorful detail, Pierius's history is strongly biased in favor of the Calvinists. And yet Pierius was such a shrewd observer and eloquent writer that one cannot help being fascinated by his book. In any case, it offers so many new and intimate facts that it is indispensable to our understanding of the fateful events in Saxony during the years from 1586 to 1591.

Lost for 250 years, the manuscript was discovered in 1962 in the collection of the former Prussian State Library by Thomas Klein, who had previously written a study of Saxony's Second Reformation. Klein has edited a slightly shortened version of the bulky manuscript, adding a fine biographical study of Pierius and an extensive bibliography. Historians of sixteenth-century Protestantism will appreciate the publication of this unusually informative manuscript.

CLAUS-PETER CLASEN
University of California,
Los Angeles

EDA SAGARRA. Tradition and Revolution: German Literature and Society, 1830-1890. (Literature and Society.) New York: Basic Books. 1971. Pp. 348. $8.95.

Few literatures provide a richer field for investigating the transition from a traditionalistic to a modern social order than nineteenth-century German literature. For the few Western nations which negotiated that transition more smoothly and successfully than Germany did, the documentation of the problems posed by modernization, problems artistic and intellectual as well as political and social, is not so searching, intensive, or dense as for nineteenth-century Germany. There the hopes and expectations, the apprehensions and disappointments, the tensions and turmoil involved in modernization came to the fore time and again at the highest creative level. This creative encounter and its uniqueness are understandable when we consider that Germans were the first in a long line of peoples, in Europe and then throughout the world, to confront modernization as a threatening challenge from without, rather than as an urge born from within. The modern had to be assimilated, selectively and piecemeal, in Germany—grafted on to a system unprepared either to accept or reject it. How leading German writers, during each of Germany's phases of development from the Biedermeier period to Bismarck, came to grips with this situation is the theme of Tradition and Revolution.

The result is one of the few comprehensive and comprehensible works on the subject in English. The author's blend of social history and literary interpretation enables the reader at all times to see the creative process not only as a passive reflection of reality, but also as an original response to it. From her discussions of individual writers and their works, many familiar to English-speaking readers, some not, we learn in each case what the landscape of the writer's vision was, how it came into being, wherein it accurately reproduced reality and wherein it transmuted reality, and what the writer's personal and artistic attitudes toward his material were. True, this book lacks the sociological acumen of a Karl Mannheim or an Ernst Kohn-Bramsted, the interpretive powers of a J. P. Stern or a Hans Mayer, and the philosophical and polemical verve of a George Lukács or a Lucien Goldmann. Still, Tradition and Revolution provides both a better understanding of nineteenth-century German history and a valuable contribution to our understanding and implementation of literature as a useful and unique source of historical documentation.

ROBERT ANCHOR

University of Southern California

JOHN R. GILLIS. The Prussian Bureaucracy in Crisis, 1840-1860: Origins of an Administrative Ethos. Stanford: Stanford University Press. 1971. Pp. xvi, 269. $8.75.

German historians and sociologists have long been concerned with the role played by the bureaucracy in Prussia's historical development. Professor Gillis's book directs our attention to the two decades that bracketed the revolution of 1848. He argues that during these critical years conflicts within the bureaucracy combined with profound social and political changes in Prussia to produce a new "administrative ethos," one that forced the bureaucracy to assume a passive and "neutral" posture, allowing it to become a tool of authoritarian governments for the remainder of the century.

During the early decades of the nineteenth century the Prussian bureaucracy was inspired by a spirit of corporatism; defined as a Beamtenstand by the Prussian Code of 1794, it was, as Otto Camphausen described it, an "aristocracy of experts." By the 1840s, however, this corporate tradition was breaking under the stress of modernization, which had necessitated the introduction of a younger group of university-trained officials who soon grew frustrated by the intense competition for positions, poor pay, and a seniority system that protected older officials and slowed promotion based on merit. These younger officials gradually abandoned the corporate image of the profession in favor of a moderately liberal one that demanded a fuller expression of civil liberties. Senior officials, on the other hand, responded to this pressure from below by imposing more difficult examinations for entrance into the civil service, by resorting to secret personnel files (Konduitenlisten) for blocking promotions, and by instituting a tighter disciplinary code. The revolution of 1848 brought this conflict into the open. Some officials wrote for liberal journals or became active in the liberal political organizations spawned by the revolution; others, especially older officials, joined conservative groups. These activities resulted in pressure for political conformity from both sides. First the liberal governments and then their conservative successors were willing to take disciplinary action against bureaucrats who endangered their programs. After Olmütz, the Manteuffel regime undertook to eliminate opposition from within the bureaucracy. In 1854 the Konduitenlisten were reintroduced, and politics became a prime consideration in promotion. Thus the failure of the revolution and the pressure of the reaction conspired to promote political obedience within the bureaucracy. Moreover, increasing professionalism fostered the expedient doctrine of political neutrality and with it, greater conformity.

Gillis's study, which draws heavily upon archival materials available in West Germany, offers significant insight into the Prussian bureaucracy during an important epoch. His last chapter, a description of the social composition of the bureaucracy from the 1850s, is especially helpful for the information it presents on the new governing class that emerged on the eve of German unification.

ROBERT M. BERDAHL

University of Oregon

WILHELM KLUTENTRETER. Die Rheinische Zeitung von 1842/43 in der politischen und geistigen Bewegung des Vormärz. Volume 1; volume 2, Dokumente. (Dortmunder Beiträge zur Zeitungsforschung, Number 10, parts 1 and 2.) [Dortmund: Verlag Fr. Wilh. Ruhfus.] 1966; 1967. Pp. 171; 173-266.

This history of Die Rheinische Zeitung, a paper that was confidently launched to match other leading journals in format, circulation, and influence, rests on a thorough knowledge of the political and intellectual milieu of the 1840s, notably in the Prussian Rhine Province. Part 2 (Dokumente) includes biographical sketches of the contributors together with a listing of the articles that each wrote, though complete certainty was difficult in some instances because all items appeared anonymously. The statutes of the newspaper company, financial statements, the publication contract, and a number of contemporary appraisals of the nature and impact of the Zeitung appear among the documents.

Originally favored by Prussia and financed by loyal bourgeois stockholders, the paper early came under the editorial control of a younger generation of Young Hegelian radicals. Karl Marx was influential from the first from behind the scenes and ultimately became its chief editor. This study should help to dispel the impression that the Zeitung experienced a distinctly radical shift under his disciplined editorship. Through a special listing of all articles dealing with press questions the author stresses the role of the paper in the discussion of the current lively issue of freedom of the press. A sample of the less favorable contemporary evaluations of the paper, other than those that came from official sources, might have been included. The journal was perhaps more widely damned than praised and may owe its immortality to the fact that it was suppressed because the "liberalized" Prussian censorship regulations judged a paper by its tendency (Tendenz).

OSCAR J. HAMMEN
University of Montana

EBERHARD KOLB. Die Kriegausbruch 1870: Politische Entscheidungsprozesse und Verantwortlichkeiten in der Julikrise 1870. Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht. 1970. Pp. 150. DM 15.80.

The controversy over responsibilities for World War I has overshadowed another similar debate that has been going on even longer. It concerns the origin of the Franco-Prussian War of 1870-71. Was it France and Napoleon III-Ollivier-Gramont who caused that war, was it Prussia and Bismarck, or was the "war guilt" shared by both sides?

Dr. Kolb acquits Bismarck of having planned the collision and places the blame for the war on the French leaders. There is nothing in the sources, he claims, to indicate that Bismarck wished to maneuver France into a war when he urged that Prince Leopold of Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen accept the candidacy to the Spanish throne. Kolb sees the key event that touched off the crisis in the warning given by the French government that France would never tolerate a Hohenzollern prince on the throne of Spain. This statement, made before a wildly cheering chamber of deputies, roused French emotions to fever pitch and deprived the government of its freedom of action.

When Prince Leopold abandoned his candidacy, Kolb continues his argument, the French leadership could not content itself with this success, but felt compelled for domestic reasons to demonstrate even more clearly France's preponderance over Prussia. This it did by asking King William I of Prussia for a pledge never to allow any Hohenzollern to ascend the Spanish throne. The request was denied, with the known consequences. Given the determination in Paris for a showdown, Kolb concludes, the Ems dispatch played but a minor role in precipitating the crisis.

Kolb argues his case with a great deal of ingenuity, but his analysis fails to convince. Apart from the fact that he passes over material that shows Bismarck's conduct in a much more unfavorable light, the available evidence is ambiguous and lends itself to various interpretations. (Josef Becker, in an essay published in Historische Zeitschrift [212 (June 1971): 529-607], examines many of the same sources that Kolb used but arrives at conclusions refuting Kolb's thesis.)

More important, Kolb all but excludes domestic considerations from his investigation. Yet there is a good deal of evidence suggesting that the completion of German unification, if it was to be achieved from above, did not permit any further delay and could be accomplished only amidst a national crisis, such as a war with France. Pressures from business circles, the prospect of a reassertion of the liberal camp, and serious threats to the budgetary arrangements concerning the army most likely also affected the chancellor's actions. In any event these factors cannot simply be brushed aside, as they are by Kolb. However, given the circumstantial nature of the evidence, the debate will doubtless continue—without ever being settled conclusively.

ANDREAS DORPALEN
Ohio State University

WINFRIED SCHÜLER. Der Bayreuther Kreis von seiner Entstehung bis zum Ausgang der Wilhelminischen Ära: Wagnerkult und Kulturreform im Geiste völkischer Weltanschauung. (Neue Münstersche Beiträge zur Geschichtsforschung, Number 12.) Münster: Verlag Aschen-dorff. 1971. Pp. viii, 293. DM 48.

The so-called "conservative revolution" of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries attacked the modern forces expressed in the French and Industrial Revolutions and preached a return to an idealized, lost world. One of the most interesting but previously neglected examples of this movement in Germany was the Bayreuth Circle, a loosely structured group of enthusiasts who propagated both Richard Wagner's artistic and national-racial ideas. Winfried Schüler's book is the first critical history of the Bayreuth Circle and is a welcome addition to the literature on the growth of radical conservatism in Imperial Germany. It is based primarily on a thorough examination of hitherto unused archival material in the Richard Wagner Gedenkstätte in Bayreuth, in the Ludwig Schemann Nachlass in Freiburg, and on an examination of the literary organ of the Bayreuth Circle, the Bayreuther Blätter.

An opening section discusses the development of Wagner's thought and the varied manifestations of the cultural reform movement in Imperial Germany. Schüler then traces the historical background of the Bayreuth Circle and presents short biographies of its leading figures, such as Cosima Wagner, Hans von Wolzogen, and Houston Stewart Chamberlain, as well as a listing of lesser-known men. The third section discusses the Weltanschauung of Bayreuth. Wagner's criticism of contemporary theater rapidly developed into a criticism of society in general. The key word in his Weltanschauung became "regeneration," and he saw an intimate connection between artistic and cultural regeneration. Schüler indicates that Wagner's theories, especially those of his last writings, were rapidly dogmatized after the composer's death.

For Wagner's disciples Bayreuth became a symbol of longed for artistic and cultural regeneration. In true Romantic fashion the Bayreuth Circle saw art as better able to penetrate to a deeper reality than other modes of knowledge and as best expressing the strivings of the Volk. For Bayreuth, key elements of regeneration became racism and anti-Semitism, since the Jews were seen as the agents of modernity in all its forms. Beginning with Wagner's essay on the Jews in music, this racism received its ideological foundation in Gobineau's works and its development into an optimistic and influential viewpoint in Chamberlain's Grundlagen des neunzehnten Jahrhunderts (1899). Such racism also led to Bayreuth's championing of a Semitic-free "Germanic Christianity."

Thus, Bayreuth cultivated many of the ideological components that helped prepare the way for National Socialism. As Schüler points out, the esthetic drive is one of the great gifts of mankind, but it is unsuitable as a foundation for metaphysical theories and political doctrines.

DONALD E. THOMAS, JR.
Virginia Military Institute

HANS GEORG LEHMANN. Die Agrarfrage in der Theorie und Praxis der deutschen und internationalen Sozialdemokratie: Vom Marxismus zum Revisionismus und Bolschewismus. (Tübinger Studien zur Geschichte und Politik, Number 26.) Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr (Paul Siebeck). 1970. Pp. xvi, 329. Cloth DM 58, paper DM 52.

The author of this seemingly specialized monograph adroitly draws out its many broader ramifications. Narrowly defined, his subject concerns the protracted debate within the German Social Democratic party over the adoption of an agrarian program in the decade 1890-1900. But Lehmann relates this internecine conflict to the broader evolution of the party toward electoral politics, the consequent need to attract new voters in a population still heavily composed of peasants, and the agonizing that resulted over what—in good conscience—the party might promise to a class Marx regarded as doomed. Reformist forces within the party gathered strength largely around this issue, and Bernstein's revisionism derived in no small part from the debate over whether the law of concentration applied to agriculture. The reformist-inspired draft program was ultimately defeated in 1895 in a triumph of Kautskian orthodoxy, which mobilized strong rank-and-file opposition against any concessions to rural property owners. This triumph, however, left the party without any agrarian program and with a sterile indifference toward peasants that most of the other Second International parties obediently copied from the German Musterpartei. It remained for Lenin, who took some part in these West European controversies, to appreciate the full value of peasant support and find the right programmatic formula for winning it. Both revisionism and Leninism thus have important roots in the agrarian debates of 1890-1900.

Originally a 1966 Tübingen dissertation, this study utilizes all the appropriate sources, published and unpublished, and skillfully weaves together several levels of analysis—rank-and-file pressures, regional and national leadership conflicts, and international influences. Lehmann writes dispassionately and well, avoiding the temptation of social-science jargon. Despite the title, his treatment of non-German countries is very meager; essentially he writes SPD party history.

Perhaps because he does not seriously treat rural social conditions, Lehmann leaves the unfortunate impression that the SPD might have turned Lenin's trick in Germany if only it had discovered his magic formula, the "correct" agrarian program. Doubtless Lenin showed great political acumen in riding to power in Russia chiefly on a massive tidal wave of rural discontent, but surely he did not create the tidal wave himself. It did not exist in the West during this period, and no programmatic or tactical legerdemain could have produced it. Thus, the Nantes agrarian program of 1894 profited the French party scarcely more than the absence of such a program did the German, and the belated 1927 statement finally adopted by the SPD was equally barren in the result. No magic formula but only a certain cluster of social conditions can transform the peasantry from an immovable object into an irresistible force.

RICHARD N. HUNT
University of Pittsburgh

URSULA FEIST and GÜNTER FEIST, editors: Kunst und Künstler: Aus 32 Jahrgängen einer deutschen Kunstzeitschrift. [Mainz:] Florian Kupferberg. 1971. Pp. 441. DM 36.

BETH IRWIN LEWIS. George Grosz: Art and Politics in the Weimar Republic. Madison: University of Wisconsin Press. 1971. Pp. xviii, 328. $12.50.

From 1902 to 1933 the Berlin periodical Kunst und Künstler was an influential voice of modern art—especially of Impressionism—in Germany. Its contributors included critics, historians, and museum officials as well as artists and architects writing on their own work and on that of their peers. As significant as its exploration of modern art throughout the world and of its historical antecedents were the journal's critical discussions of the cultural policies of succeeding German governments—patronage, purchasing practices that often betrayed a dislike of the modern and foreign, appointments to the staffs of museums and academies, and attempts at censoring art. In a volume that is produced with the same distinguished taste that marked the original issues of Kunst und Künstler, Ursula and Günter Feist have brought together a selection of articles, reviews, and illustrations that, with their careful notes and bibliography, provide an excellent introduction to the journal. In an epilogue Günter Feist traces the course of Kunst und Künstler from its beginnings to its demise when Hitler came to power. Mr. Feist's interpretations show an impressive sensitivity to the past, but his conclusions are repeatedly hobbled by unhistorical Marxist assertions. He offers a knowledgeable analysis of the journal's mission and of the campaigns that it waged; but his admiration for its achievements is tempered by his distaste for its upper-middle-class liberalism and its opposition to social criticism and participation in the class struggle, "which was and remains a necessity of our age" (p. 399). Elsewhere an essay on Van Gogh by Karl Scheffler, who edited Kunst und Künstler for twenty-eight years, is judged "unacceptable" on political grounds; and similar pronouncements intrude throughout the essay and notes. No wonder Feist, who welcomes art that supports revolution but rejects art that supports the status quo, experiences some difficulty in coming to terms with a journal that consistently held that the only judgment in art that mattered was whether it was good or bad.

In its defense of Impressionism Kunst und Künstler soon attained an impregnable intellectual position, though the public as a whole was by no means won over. The journal showed some reluctance to extend its sympathies to other modern directions—Expressionism, for instance, or to such more ephemeral movements as Dada. Some of their adherents, moreover, turned aggressively against Impressionism and its leading German representatives, who were among the journal's most valued contributors. Nevertheless Scheffler and his colleagues were sufficiently broad-minded to publish and discuss the work of the new men.

One of the radical artists who appeared in the pages of Kunst und Künstler and whom Scheffler defended against right-wing attacks was the painter and cartoonist George Grosz. Beth Irwin Lewis has written an intelligent, well-informed account of Grosz's "experience and work against the background of cultural and political life in Germany before 1933." In view of her judicious treatment of complex events it may be that the author's intentions were unduly modest. For example, disclaiming competence in handling the tools of psychohistory, she scarcely explores Grosz's psychological conflicts, though she recognizes their influence on his political attitudes as well as on his art. Here as elsewhere the important issues of his life are reported by Mrs. Lewis rather than analyzed. We might, in particular, have wished for a fuller discussion of the clash between esthetic independence and party discipline—the classic conflict of the politically engaged artist—which Grosz resolved in the early 1930s by turning away from a communism that he had come to see as basically identical with fascism. Within her self-imposed limits, however, Mrs. Lewis is successful.

Grosz's bitter drawings of officers, profiteers, and exhausted factory workers have long been valued as suggestive of the atmosphere in Berlin during and after the First World War. The pages of Kunst und Künstler open the view to another strand in the history of the Empire and the republic. The journal was a preceptor of the cultural attitudes of German—especially north-German—liberalism and was one of its most representative spokesmen. It reflected the values of a group that was to suffer total eclipse but that possessed the merit—rare in times of frenetic nationalism—of feeling and acting as Europeans as much as Germans.

PETER PARET
Stanford University

Year Book XV. (Publications of the Leo Baeck Institute.) [London:] East and West Library for the Institute; distrib. by Leo Baeck Institute, New York. 1970. Pp. xviii, 326. $9.50.

The Leo Baeck Institute is an organization dedicated to nostalgic research in the history of German Jewry. Since the number of Jews who still speak German with perfection is now shrinking rapidly, the exploration of their cultural past is almost akin to salvaging treasures from a sunken ship. The stories, raised from the bottom—cleaned, polished, and handled with loving care—are assembled into yearbooks, outfitted with bibliographies, indexes, and glossy photographs and given an inspiring theme, such as Precursors of Integration—Defiance in Destruction, the subtitle adorning the cover of volume 15.

Actually, the current yearbook is about people, most of them old friends well known to the authors and familiar to prospective readers. We meet the novelist Arnold Zweig as a disappointed emigrant in Palestine, the star of Curt Worman's essay "German Jews in Israel." The nineteenth-century banker Ludwig Bamberger and his contemporary, the publisher Leopold Sonnemann, are the centerpieces of Werner Mosse's article, "The Conflict of Liberalism and Nationalism and its Effect on German Jewry." Karl Marx is presented by Arthur Prinz in "New Perspectives" as a Jew, although some of these findings are based on papers that were previously discovered and analyzed by such investigators as Boris Nikolayevsky and Lewis Feuer. To make Marx a little more Jewish than he was, the author mistranslates Marx's reference to Disraeli as a Stammgenosse (one who is descended from the same group) as "our fellow Jew."

Twenty-seven pages are devoted to Ernst Loewenberg's memoir of the writer Jakob Loewenberg. Here we learn that "Loewenberg's childhood in a Westphalian village had given him a deep love of nature," and we are reassured that "Loewenberg was never heard to make an unfriendly remark about Eastern Jews. They were familiar to him from his early childhood."

An East German researcher, Helmut Eschwege, is featured with a discussion of the resistance of German Jews against the Nazi regime, the "first treatment at any length of the role of Jews in the German resistance movement." Eschwege opens his report with lists of Jewish Social Democrats who died in concentration camps during the 1930s and works up to the small communist Jewish cell of Herbert Baum, which set fire to a Nazi propaganda exhibit in Berlin on May 18, 1942.

Five of the ten authors in this volume are more than seventy years old. The oldest of them, Selma Stern-Taubler, "Grand Old Lady of German-Jewish Historiography," deals extensively with one of the older subjects, "The First Generation of Emancipated Jews," including especially Moses Mendelssohn. The youngest contributor, Rabbi Arthur Hertzberg, concludes the volume with a two-page reminiscence of Ernst Cassirer's last winter at Columbia University. It is a touching note. Here we see how much more can be done with a few sensitive strokes of the pen to portray a man's search for his soul than was managed in all the preceding footnote-laden articles put together.

RAUL HILBERG

University of Vermont

GEORGE W. F. HALLGARTEN. Als die Schatten fielen: Erinnerungen vom Jahrhundertbeginn zur Jahrtausendwende. [Berlin:] Ullstein. 1969. Pp. 366.

Historians familiar with George Hallgarten's works on imperialism, dictatorships, armaments races, and German National Socialism have been fully aware of his wide learning, sustained intellectual energy, readiness for scholarly debate, and continuous interest in understanding power in its many varieties and applications. He has now undertaken the venturesome and hazardous task of recounting the life story out of which his works emerged. Throughout these memoirs, from the recollections of his childhood and youth in an upper-bourgeois, assimilated Jewish family in Munich before the First World War, through the narrative of the refugee's travels and searches, to the overly detailed descriptions of lecture tours in the 1960s, the personal characteristics of the man and the scholar appear repeatedly: an awareness of inherited social status, an admiration for and a dependency on his mother, a fascination with the structure and dynamics of power (Machiavelli, Clausewitz, and Max Weber have been his favorite social-scientific authors), a tendency toward difficulties in personal relationships, and a persistent longing, only partially fulfilled, for scholarly recognition and importance.

Although the substance of the book is often intriguing and the style is smooth and even captivating, its worth for students of twentieth-century history is more difficult to evaluate. Throughout his life Hallgarten has known persons of prominence, and some of notoriety, and the pages of his memoirs are sprinkled liberally with their names—the Thomas Mann family (especially Erika and Klaus), Ludwig Ganghofer, Heinrich Himmler, Hans Pfitzner, Erich Marcks, Hermann Oncken, Max and Alfred Weber, Eckert Kehr, Richard Graf Coudenhove-Kalergi, Carlo Mierendorf, and many more. For a few of these, Hallgarten's impressions and characterizations will offer an added perspective and occasionally a new detail for future biographers. But on many others, those he knew only in passing, his comments are cursory and inconsequential. He has added to the information contained in an earlier article concerning his childhood acquaintance, Heinrich Himmler, but his mixture of reminiscence and interpretation must itself be scrutinized carefully to distinguish the subjective from the informative elements. Despite Hallgarten's inclination to comment briefly on many personalities, that is not the aspect of these memoirs which may prove to be of historical interest. It is only when his experiences fit into a broad cultural context or into social-political movements that his personal account assumes more significance. In the early chapters many of the features of the social and cultural milieu in which he grew up come through with vividness and credibility. From the account of his participation in student activities in the 1920s, both in Heidelberg and Munich, one can perceive some of the reasons why the sympathizers with the Weimar Republic, student socialists, academic republicans, and the advocates of international understanding and pacifism were not more effective. As cultural elitists and political neophytes, they talked ideas and remained socially insulated from the day-to-day realities of the world for which they were so concerned. To his credit Hallgarten does not hide these weaknesses, but he seldom explores their ramifications. It is a curious and revealing oversight, for example, that in his discussions of Weimar politics and elections he does not indicate how he voted or whether indeed he did vote.

Hallgarten has contributed his own chapters to the larger story of the vexations, anxieties, and the successes of the emigrants and exiles from a Germany that rejected them and that they could not fully comprehend. Every emigrant experience had its special perplexities, and Hallgarten's were the frequently frustrated goals of finding an appropriate position for himself and a publisher for his massive manuscript on imperialism. The publishers of this book could have enhanced its usefulness had they included an index in addition to the bibliography of Hallgarten's publications.

VERNON L. LIDTKE

Johns Hopkins University

Probleme deutscher Zeitgeschichte. (Lund Studies in International History, Number 2. Scandinavian University Books.) [Stockholm:] Lärmedelsförlagen. 1971. Pp. 266.

Probleme deutscher Zeitgeschichte is the second volume in a series of studies in "international history," a concept broadly understood by the publisher, the department of history at the University of Lund, Sweden, to include "not only foreign policy and international relations but also the history of different countries outside Scandinavia." The series encompasses a number of monographic works as well as collections of essays and shorter studies.

This volume falls into the latter category and consists of six chapters by various contributors on topics in twentieth-century German history: the German Monroe Doctrine in the Baltic Sea during the First World War; Raeder and German naval strategy; propaganda on the Reichstag fire; the Hossbach Memorandum;

Doenitz's government program in 1945; and Hitler's cultural policy after 1933.

One may, in good conscience, commend the authors in several respects. Their research is quite thorough, both in the secondary literature and the primary sources, notably the archives of the German Foreign Office and the Bundesarchiv in Koblenz. The essays are generally well written and the arguments clearly presented, and the translation into German is coherent and lucid.

Unfortunately these basic assets do not compensate for the serious deficiencies of the volume. In the first place, both collectively and individually, the essays reflect an almost antiquarian interest in Germany's recent past. Of the six, two are concerned with problems of naval history that convey a distinct impression of singular insignificance. Germany's so-called Monroe Doctrine during the First World War, for example, was certainly a matter of secondary, or even tertiary, importance at the time and ceased to have any relevance whatsoever when the German army fell apart in 1918. Similarly a study of Raeder's naval strategy and the sources of its inspiration does not add appreciably to our understanding of the more fundamental issues of twentieth-century German history. And even when the subject of discussion is a problem of more serious concern, such as the Reichstag fire, the author focuses on various contributions to the journalistic cacophony surrounding the crisis and not on the significance of the crisis itself.

Second, the collection as a whole betrays an unimaginative and almost sterile approach to some of the broader aspects of the historical discipline. In his essay on Doenitz, for example, Lennart Sjöstedt includes a somewhat self-righteous admonition on the dangers of contemporary history in which he contends that proximity in time makes it "generally more difficult to view the subject objectively" (my italics) and more likely that the author will "incline sentimentally in the one or another direction." An adequate rejoinder to this contention would transcend the limits of the present review, but for the moment it does not seem unreasonable to point out that Sjöstedt's argument is vulnerable to challenge on several grounds at least.

In conclusion one must necessarily hope that this volume will not be representative of the Lund series either in terms of the scholarly issues it raises or the more philosophical sense of the historical discipline it projects.

RICHARD M. BERNSTEIN
Wellesley College

SHLOMO ARONSON. Reinhard Heydrich und die Frühgeschichte von Gestapo und SD. (Studien zur Zeitgeschichte.) Stuttgart: Deutsche Verlags-Anstalt. 1971. Pp. 339. DM 20.

Mr. Aronson's stated objective is to add to our understanding of how the ultimate character of the Nazi state emerged, how certain aspects of the ideology and certain elements of the Nazi movement prevailed, and how the basis of the "final solution" was laid. The vehicles are a short biography of Reinhard Heydrich and a detailed study of the formative years (1931-35) of the organizations he commanded, the Nazi Security Service (SD) and the Gestapo, the political police of the Third Reich.

In fulfilling his objectives Aronson has added refinement and further substantiation to the interpretations of Hans Buchheim and Friedrich Zipfel. His account of the emergence of the SD from the swirl of competing intelligence agencies is a pioneering effort. An important contribution is the thesis that competition between the Gestapo and the SD drove them to propose increasingly radical solutions to the "Jewish problem."

The biography of Heydrich confronts us with another, unheralded objective—a convincing effort to lay to rest the persistent rumor of Heydrich's Jewish ancestry. Aronson's portrayal of Heydrich is satisfying. The man who emerges is a real, but pitiable human being rather than a demonic superman. His role during the period studied is also reduced to more realistic proportions than that usually attributed to him.

The frequently told story of the struggle for control of the police is enhanced by Aronson's analysis of what produced the final product. Traditional German bureaucratic institutions are contrasted with Himmler's innovative SS-police-concentration camp model developed in Bavaria. Both added to the ill-defined and multifaceted character of the final system. The resultant flexibility and ambiguity defeated

Heinrich Himmler's opposition and aided in the transformation of the heterogeneous personnel of the Gestapo and SD into functionaries of mass murder.

Aronson has thoroughly tested the traditional eyewitness versions of SD and Gestapo history, which previous scholars have accepted as the best available information. For this, he interviewed a much wider range of surviving participants and drew upon the core of relevant archival material available to Western scholars.

Overly detailed organizational descriptions and almost forty biographical sketches confuse the narrative. Although the personality profiles were essential to Aronson's characterizations of Gestapo and SD men, much of the detail could have been relegated to appendixes. These characterizations and the explanations of how such men were lured into their future roles are highly plausible. The small elite sample on which they are based nevertheless points to the need for a more thorough quantitative study. Even after this has been done Aronson's account will probably remain unchallenged except on minor details or subtleties of interpretation, barring some very surprising revelations from East European archives.

GEORGE C. BROWDER
State University of New York,
Fredonia

JOHN H. BACKER. Priming the German Economy: American Occupational Policies, 1945-1948. Durham: Duke University Press. 1971. Pp. 212. $6.75.

Almost a generation after the event, analysis of U.S. post-World War II occupation policy in Germany survives as at least a minor sport for both Americans and Germans as evidenced by John Gimbel's sober American Occupation of Germany (1968) and Caspar Schrenck-Notzing's far-out Charakterwäsche (1965). Where Priming the German Economy fits into the literature of the occupation is not easy to determine offhand. Although John H. Backer has done substantial research, it is not, strictly speaking, a history even of economic policy; and although Backer worked in the Economics Division, OMGUS, it is also not a memoir. It is, nevertheless, a valuable small book that future writers on the occupation will do well not to ignore.

In the first three chapters Backer gives sound, if somewhat rambling, observations on U.S. economic policies in general and their execution, particularly the famous JCS 1067, its "disease and unrest" formula, and the level of industry plans. The subsequent chapters (4 through 6) are an extended essay on the U.S. export-import program and the U.S.-British Joint Export-Import Agency. There Backer is on his home ground. As a former official of the export-import program for Bavaria he writes from experience, but he has not neglected the documents, in this case the OMGUS records in the National Archives. The result is as lucid an account of one of the least comprehensible features of the occupation as is likely to be written.

Backer is one of the few writers on the occupation who have successfully resisted the subject's built-in temptations to blanketed, and hence often pointless, negative judgments. From time to time in fact he leans too far the other way, for instance, when he writes that JCS 1067 was "no impediment to the early efforts of the American Military Government toward the reconstruction of the German economy." While it was certainly not a practical impediment, especially since the German economy was already as badly off as it would have been under JCS 1067 stringently construed, it was a psychological impediment in that it created an apparent divergence between the stated U.S. policy and the manner of its execution.

Backer is also, in my opinion, a little too willing to equate good performance with general success. True, both the food and the related export-import programs for the Germans were enlightened and constructive, but the simple fact was that both were largely exercises in futility without currency reform and superfluous after currency reform was finally achieved two or three years late.

EARL F. ZIEMKE

University of Georgia

In this slender volume the contributions of František Palacký to historiography receive their fullest appreciation in English since Francis Count Lützow wrote some seventy years ago. Those readers already acquainted with Joseph F. Zacek's articles on the nineteenth-century historian and public figure will find here more than a convenient compilation, and those not acquainted will be admirably introduced to the pre-eminent personality in the Czech national revival. An updated version of the author's doctoral dissertation, it is more elegantly written than most such endeavors.

Palacký's jousts with Habsburg censors, which prompted him vigorously to defend freedom of scholarly inquiry, exemplified the burdens of the liberal intellectual in pre-March Austria. His devastating rebuttals to German detractors of his monumental History of the Czech Nation (1836-67) established a model of combative yet objective scholarship in a national cause. His treatment of fifteenth-century Central Europe shattered hoary myths and elevated Hussitism to European and even transcendent importance. This pioneering role was imposed upon Palacký by the necessities of locating and assembling the pertinent historical sources and of creating upon that foundation the first scientific account and philosophical interpretation of Czech history.

The author views his monograph as "a partial, critical synthesis," the prelude to a full-scale biography that would draw intensively upon archival materials, but the work can stand on its own merits. It is not merely an essay in historiography and biography but also a revealing glance into a pivotal arena of awakening nationalisms. One wishes, however, that Professor Zacek had refrained from repetitively designating almost all citations of Czech scholarship since 1948 as "Marxist" or "Marxist-oriented." He could have made this obvious point more effectively in the preface or the bibliographical essay. And surely it is carrying respect for a dead hero too far when he asserts that Palacký's "broad modern historical program . . . remains the basis of contemporary Czechoslovak historiography." For better and for worse today's Czech historians have incorporated the problems, themes, and methods bequeathed them by Palacký into a different and more relevant perspective; and if Slovak historians also supposedly follow Palacký, then perhaps the author has interpreted the great historian's "program" so broadly that it acquires well-nigh universal validity.

JOSEPH FREDERICK ZACEK. Palacký: The Historian as Scholar and Nationalist. (Studies in European History, Number 5.) The Hague: Mouton. 1970. Pp. xiv, 137. 28 gls.

STANLEY B. WINTERS

Newark College of Engineering

ANTON VANTUCH and L'UDOVÍT HOLOŤÍK, editors. Der österreichisch-ungarische Ausgleich 1867: Materialien (Referate und Diskussion) der internationalen Konferenz in Bratislava 28.8.-1.9. 1967. (Slovenská Akadémia Vied, Historický Ústav.) Bratislava: Verlag der Slowakischen Akademie der Wissenschaften. 1971. Pp. 1076. 120 K.

The Habsburg monarchy died in 1918, but as yet no certifiable cause of death has been established. At first death was attributed to malignant nationalism aggravated by the First World War, but further dissection of the corpse cast doubt upon this conclusion. New evidence suggested that nationalism was not causal but part of wider processes of historical change that became compelling in the nineteenth century. This suggests that the insoluble nationality conflicts were themselves only a symptom of a systemic dysfunction brought on by the limited adaptability of the monarchy's sociopolitical structure to these processes. In the period between the two world wars research concentrated mainly on the political, diplomatic, legal, and cultural dimensions of the problem, while after World War II, Marxist-oriented historians in East Central Europe stressed long-run economic and social forces associated with the processes of modernization. The latter analysis was valuable but it remained separate until recent years. As a way of exploring the interconnection between the findings of Marxist and non-Marxist historiography, international meetings of historians were held in Budapest (1964), Bloomington, Indiana (1966), Bratislava (1967), and Vienna (1968)—to name the major ones. Each conference was held on the anniversary of what might be labeled a predisposing event, that is, an event that predisposed the Habsburg monarchy to disintegration. This volume contains the papers of the Bratislava Conference held in the summer of 1967 on the hundredth anniversary of the Compromise of 1867, which created the dual monarchy of Austria-Hungary.

The Bratislava Conference, which was sponsored by the Historical Institute of the Slovakian Academy of Sciences, brought together 140 Marxist and non-Marxist historians from 15 countries. The 42 published papers and 155 pages of discussion contain a wealth of analyses, data, bibliography, and research suggestions. On the whole the papers and discussions of this conference are free from the East-West division of earlier conferences. There are disagreements among both Marxist and non-Marxist historians, and methodological and conceptual differences tend to be of the kind about which historians generally argue. That is, they differ in their predilections for interpretations based on long-run factors as opposed to relativistic ones and the significance of that which happened as opposed to that which might have happened but did not. Progress toward integration of different lines of historical research, mutual jettisoning of outworn ideological baggage, and less apologetic stances by East Central European and Austrian historians—which are all, one hopes, irreversible trends—are attested by concluding remarks of several of the participants. For example, Jiří Kořálka, a Czech, remarks that "black-white" historical interpretations of the Habsburg monarchy have declined greatly, and he calls upon his fellow Czech historians to concern themselves with political and constitutional history more than they have in the past (p. 1041). Hans Lentze, an Austrian, calls on his compatriots to pay more attention to social and economic history (p. 1038).

The forty-two papers are grouped together under four headings according to their content. In introductory papers Josef Polišený (Prague) and Fran Zwitter (Ljubljana) maintain that the revolutions of 1848-49, which represent the beginning of the end for the Habsburg monarchy, are far more important than the Compromise of 1867, which they see as a last and negative echo of the revolution. R. A. Kann (Rutgers), on the other hand, sees little of the ideas or plans of 1848-49 in the Compromise of 1867, which he asserts was never intended to solve the nationalities problem but was meant to preserve the Habsburg monarchy and its great power position with the absolute minimum of social change necessary. Several of the participants took issue with Kann's conclusion that the compromise ought to be judged "only according to the purpose of those who created it" (p. 25).

The first group of papers examines Austro-Hungarian foreign policy from 1866 to 1870, the implications of the Compromise of 1867 for the Eastern Question, the reaction of Austria-Hungary's small southeastern neighbors, as well as the attitudes of the respective foreign offices and major newspapers of the great powers toward the compromise. In general the essays show the connection between foreign policy and domestic structure and how, for different reasons, the reorganization brought about by the compromise accorded with the interests of all of the great powers.

The second group of papers deals with social, economic, and constitutional aspects of the compromise. Walter Goldinger (Vienna) and Hans Mommsen (Heidelberg) both stress the continuation of absolutism as a logical extension of the compromise. Mommsen attributes the insolubility of the nationalities question in Austria to the quasi-constitutional and unrepresentative parliamentary system established by the constitution of December 1867, with the agreement of Austrian liberals. In separate essays Peter Hának and György Ránki (Budapest) utilize quantitative data and the concept of economic backwardness to maintain that the Compromise of 1867 was a variant of the bourgeois-capitalist transformation of state and society, which, though not the best, nevertheless was conducive to economic growth. Both historians reject the idea of a direct connection between economic growth and social and national development, a position that brought them into sharp conflict with the Romanian historian, Miron Constantinescu. George Macesich (Georgia) attempts, with the help of modern market theory (but with no empirical economic data), to confirm Oscar Jaszi's judgment that the compromise prevented the growth of an integrated economic unit. Though Macesich is less persuasive than Hának and Ránki, all three demonstrate how much can be learned from the application of modern economic analysis.

The third group of papers treats the response of the non-German and non-Magyar nationalities to the compromise and includes papers on small nationalities, such as Slovenes and Slovaks, whose efforts to protect their national identities have been ignored until very recently. Erwin Melichar (Vienna) and Július Mésároš (Bratislava) get down to the nitty-gritty of the nationalities question. Melichar, a specialist in constitutional and administrative law, uses the decisions of the Austrian Reichsgericht from 1869 to 1918 to examine the implementation of Article 19 of the Austrian Constitution of 1867, which guaranteed nationality rights. The attempts of the court to specify what constituted a denial of nationality rights reveal the strengths and weaknesses of Article 19 and of the Reichsgericht itself. In his article, which is studded with demographic tables, Mésároš analyzes the nationalities question at its most sensitive point—the growth and diffusion of educational institutions. In an innovative comparative article, Peter Sugar (Washington) compares and contrasts the reactions of the Croats, Romanians, and Slovaks in the period from 1867 to 1875. He shows that the Croats, with an "independent political history," were far better off in the cultural manifestations of their lives than the Romanians and the Slovaks, neither of whom had such a history. Paradoxically, however, the Croats, despite having "a political history," were not able to wrest much more of a substantive political nature from the Magyars than were the Slovaks and Romanians.

The papers in the fourth section concern the problem of federalism in Austria-Hungary. Hans Lentze (Vienna) concludes that a real federalization of Austria would not have been possible without depriving the Crown, the ruling classes, and the German-directed bureaucracy of their power, and that this would not have been possible without a struggle. Ferenc Pecze (Budapest) develops the thesis that the generally held view that Czech trialistic aspirations in the 1870s were frustrated by the Magyars is an oversimplification. In a paper that sparked a lively debate, Joachim Remak (Santa Barbara) argues that the monarchy in 1914 was a viable state that might have survived and transformed itself from within had it not been "killed" by bad diplomacy and the war. Set against the papers of, among others, Lentze, Pecze, Mommsen, Goldinger, and Hának, as well as the critical remarks of several discussants, Remak's argument is unconvincing.

If there is disagreement among the participants on particulars, there is some agreement on larger issues. Until the late nineteenth century the Habsburg monarchy provided a framework for economic growth, expansion of the social structure, and cultural growth that benefited all of East Central Europe. After that time, under conditions created by forces that the monarchy helped to generate and organize, in part by the Compromise of 1867, the traditional sociopolitical foundations of the Habsburg monarchy and the compromise itself became obstacles to a more equitable diffusion of economic growth as well as to fully differentiated modern social structures. Most of the participants agree that the dissolution of the monarchy was inevitable, not according to any abstract notion of historical inevitability, but only within the context of comparative and systematic studies of European social-historical development. In this context the question of the inevitability of the monarchy's dissolution is shorn of its recriminatory overtones.

We are indebted to the editors and to the Slovakian Academy of Sciences for making the papers of the conference available to a larger readership, by which I mean not only historians of the Habsburg monarchy and East Central Europe, but all historians and social scientists interested in the process of "national awakening" among small nationalities, the transition from economically underdeveloped to economically developed societies, and the problem of coordinating national societies with international or transnational organizations. All of these are now global problems, for the investigation of which these papers provide comparative instances. The value of the volume is enhanced by a list of newspapers and periodicals mentioned in the papers and discussions and by an index of names of historical personages and authors. In view of its merits, the large number of typographical errors and typographically garbled sentences may be regarded as simply annoying. The editors and the printers faced a formidable task in producing a book of essays in four languages: German (21), English (10), French (8), and Russian (3).

Robert Musil observed that "the mysteries of dualism are at least as difficult to understand as those of the Trinity." The essays in this volume leave the mysteries of the Trinity untouched, but they do illumine those of the Compromise of 1867.

SOLOMON WANK

Franklin and Marshall College

YVES COLLART. Le parti socialiste suisse et l'Internationale, 1914-1915: De l'Union nationale à Zimmerwald. (Publications de l'Institut Universitaire de Hautes Études Internationales, Number 49.) Geneva: [the Institut;] distrib. by Librairie Droz, Geneva. 1969. Pp. xi, 373. 60 fr. S.

Collart's study asks why the truce of 1914 was broken only a year later, especially by people who had supported it with full conviction in 1914. He carefully analyzes all previous research theses, checks them on the basis of any and all available sources, rejects previous theses, and carefully justifies his reasons for new interpretations. The most important point is the meaning that Collart attributes to the Conference of Lugano, which was neglected in previous research. In this conference he perceives the indispensable connection for the transition from the truce to Zimmerwald. Collart's inquiry proceeds in three stages: an analysis of the truce, an assessment of the motives and the consequences of the Conference of Lugano, and the question why the change of climate took place in 1915, manifesting itself in the Zimmerwald Conference. The author attempts to show to what extent such decisions are determined by historical constants (constants of national and international development) and where and why certain variables are decisive for the choice of a specific course.

According to Collart the salto mortale of the Swiss truce of 1914 differs from that executed by the Social Democrats of the belligerent countries. It was justified more rationally than emotionally. It was dictated by the concern for the food supplies of a country largely cut off from international supply lines. With respect to Lugano Collart considers the duty of a small, neutral state, spared by the war, to work for peace and restitution of the International to have been the main motive for the turnabout that led from the truce to Zimmerwald. Collart is correct in concentrating not merely on the fact of this change but in inquiring after the tortuous ways and the various tempi by which it took place. The author is undoubtedly justified in selecting Robert Grimm as the key figure involved in this change of climate and in attempting to throw light on his career, hitherto not at all well known. Collart nails Grimm on the formula that the struggle for international peace is identical with forcing the national class struggle. I rather doubt that the change can be explained in so monocausal a fashion. Insofar as the truce was motivated by the material safeguards of the Swiss workers, it must have lost its raison d'être to the same degree that the working masses were pauperized and proletarianized by the unsolved distribution problem.

E. GRUNER

University of Bern

BRIAN PULLAN. Rich and Poor in Renaissance Venice: The Social Institutions of a Catholic State, to 1620. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press. 1971. Pp. x, 689. $13.50.

Drawing upon a staggering amount of archival material Pullan organizes his book around three institutions that dealt with poor relief in Renaissance Venice—lay religious societies, hospitals, and moneylending. First he traces the development of the Scuole Grandi from their thirteenth-century beginnings as flagellant societies to their prestigious status as quasi-public charitable institutions. By the fourteenth century each Scuola consisted of two orders, the poor brethren who received charity and performed the devotional acts of the society, including ceremonial scourging, and the rich nonflagellating brothers who dispensed charity and took part in the pageantry of public festivals. Typically Venetian, the Scuole offered something for almost everyone—religious merit and social prestige for the rich non-nobles who ran them, charity for the respectable poor who did the work, and, as always, support for the state, for the Scuole loaned money to the treasury and provided rowers for the galleys. Only the truly unfortunate were overlooked—prostitutes, beggars, vagrants, and needy foreigners who were, literally, outcasts, for they had no access to the all-important charitable societies. Hospital care, the subject of Pullan's second section, was likewise unavailable to them, since the responsibility for institutional care was left to private societies, which naturally favored their own members. By the late fifteenth century, however, the swelling numbers of war refugees, syphilitics, and sufferers of plague and famine were forcing the attention of state officials and high churchmen. Pressed by her enemies Venice was anxious to earn divine protection by charitable acts, while Franciscan preachers and Christian humanists alike were bringing the claims of the poor and the unfortunate to public consideration. Besides, there was a perceived threat of public disorder if the poor were not regulated and provided for. On the whole the effort was to direct the poor into socially useful occupations. This led to a distinction between the deserving poor and the incorrigibly idle. In some ways the new poor laws of the sixteenth century replaced the older benign neglect with harsh treatment—Tawney's "new medicine for poverty" was not exclusively a Puritan discovery.

In the third section Pullan studies the Venetian experience with that typically late medieval remedy for poverty, the provision of cheap credit. While most of her neighbors were establishing public loan funds, the famous Monti di Pietà, Venice continued to favor another common medieval expedient, the licensing of Jewish moneylenders. Jews could also be tithed, taxed, and intermittently shaken down for contributions to the fisc. This inevitably caused them to pass the cost of doing business on to the consumer in the form of high interest rates; but after 1573, apparently to celebrate the victory of Lepanto, the Venetians hit upon the expedient of forcing the Jews to maintain a non-profit loan bank for needy borrowers, a kind of Jewish Monte di Pietà. This was not a sign of greater Venetian sympathy for the poor but rather that the state's relentless squeezing of the Jews had so dried up Jewish capital that it was no longer a significant factor to the treasury, so what was left could be diverted to loans for the poor.

Pullan's book suffers from lack of focus and excessive detail but it contributes much new material not only for the subject of poor relief but also for the history of Venetian piety, social and political organization, and the treatment of the Jews. With respect to its place in the current lively discussion of the origins of early modern philanthropy, it comes down on the side of continuity. Pullan shows that in Venice many sixteenth-century "innovations" were really efforts to revive earlier practices, that the tendency to question the spiritual value of voluntary poverty and to replace it with the new social and moral value of work was not limited to Protestant societies nor was it entirely new in the sixteenth century, and that social demands as well as evangelical doctrine could explain the formulation of a new work ethic. At the same time Pullan sees no thoroughly secular, social approach to poverty emerging among the Venetians, who continued to regard charity as a spiritual act that earned divine favor both for individuals and the state. Preservation of the existing order was ever the foremost consideration, into which the new spiritual and social values were absorbed. Was Venice unique in this? Pullan is willing to allow that it may have been, but one school of thought suggests that the subordination of welfare policy to the interests of the ruling class and "the national interest" has been and continues to be the dominant pattern in Western society.

DONALD WEINSTEIN
Rutgers University,
New Brunswick

VITTOR IVO COMPARATO. Giuseppe Valletta: Un intellettuale napoletano della fine del Seicento. Naples: Istituto Italiano per gli Studi Storici. 1970. Pp. 360. L. 5,000.

The seventeenth century in Italy between the condemnation of Galileo and the arrival of Vico has been a mare sconosciuto until recent studies of Badaloni, Mastellone, and others have shown that a good deal was going on, especially in Naples. Here a group of lawyers, including Giuseppe Valletta (1636-1714), keenly debated the issues of the day. The son of a poor tailor, Valletta became a wealthy lawyer and merchant with a keen mind and great erudition, which he applied in a number of treatises.

Comparato successfully argues that at the center of Valletta's thought was a conception of natural law derived primarily from Grotius and the late sixteenth-century French jurists, above all Bodin. In all of his thought Valletta was a man of European culture who transcended purely Italian concerns. In his political thought Valletta moved beyond traditional Italian theory, still focused on how to acquire and conserve states, to the European base of seeking the balance between the sovereign's authority and the subject's rights. Valletta argued against a monetary devaluation proposed by the Spanish government on the principle that the economy was founded on natural laws of exchange and should be allowed to function freely. In a critique of the Inquisition Valletta argued that it violated procedurally the natural right of defense and betrayed historically its roots. Sarpi had argued that the state rather than the Church should conduct it; Valletta took the critique a step further by balancing the principle of free inquiry against the duty of the public authority to maintain unity. This led logically to Valletta's defense of the right of philosophical inquiry, with its distinction between theological truth based on authority and philosophical truth founded on investigation of nature. In summary, Valletta appears as a transitional figure, anchored in Renaissance legal humanism and historical erudition while only a step away from the Enlightenment.

Comparato has combed the sources for Valletta's printed and manuscript sources, printing two of the latter in appendixes. In each chapter Comparato sets the stage by copious reference to other contemporary treatises, and he finishes by explaining the sources that went into Valletta's analysis. This is a useful and competent study in an area increasingly valued as important in the history of European thought.

PAUL F. GRENDLER
University of Toronto

DENIS MACK SMITH. Victor Emanuel, Cavour, and the Risorgimento. New York: Oxford University Press. 1971. Pp. xv, 381. $22.50.

The history of the Risorgimento has never been the same since Denis Mack Smith began revisiting it about twenty years ago. The Risorgimento was still in the midst of the neo-Marxist revisionist storm raised by the publication of Antonio Gramsci's Quaderni del Carcere (1947) when Mack Smith's disturbing monographic study in political conflict entitled Cavour and Garibaldi, 1860 (1954) and then, four years later, his general history of modern Italy brought a fresh whirlwind of historiographical controversy. Though it would be far from irrelevant to write a full critical review of Mack Smith's present book on Victor Emmanuel and Cavour, unfortunately not even a brief summary of the highlights of that controversy can be attempted here.

Following his fruitful detour into Sicilian regional history, which I feel relatively certain was both cause and effect of his immersion in Garibaldi's liberation movement of the island in 1860, Mack Smith has now returned to the high road of Italian national history running from the dead end of the revolutions of 1848-49 to the Piedmontese march on Rome in 1870. On the basis of part of the older documentation enlivened by research in hitherto unexplored or unavailable source materials from Italian, British, French, and Austrian archival collections, Mack Smith presents his findings and views, old and new, concerning the two culminating decades of the Risorgimento. This time the Italian national revolution is analyzed from a variety of aspects that, on the whole, are subsumed under "the personal contribution which two very different individuals [Victor Emmanuel and Cavour]—the two most politically powerful men of the Risorgimento—made to the way that Italy became a nation" (p. xi). Had Mack Smith been fortunate, as he had long hoped, in having access to the archives of the former Italian royal house that now lie buried at Cascais in Portugal where they were mysteriously transferred after Italy became a republic in 1946, he would undoubtedly have written a much-needed critical biography of Victor Emmanuel II. Whether or not one agrees with one of Mack Smith's major historical assumptions (and, for a variety of reasons, I do only in part), for him Victor Emmanuel ranks higher in influence as well as in position than Garibaldi and Mazzini and merely on a par with, not below, Cavour as a maker of united Italy. The impact of Victor Emmanuel's personal and dynastic legacy, almost wholly negative, persisted beyond the fall of fascism. The first king of Italy is thus studied by Mack Smith as a primal molder of policies, practices, and institutions (chiefly a powerful and "irresponsible" executive) that left an inescapable impress on subsequent national developments and that were almost deterministically crystallized into a royal "residual power," which allowed Victor Emmanuel's son and grandson to intervene decisively at crucial moments in later Italian history in support of such "strong men" as Crispi, Salandra, Mussolini, and Marshal Badoglio.

After an introductory overview of Risorgimento history from 1840 to 1870 and through fourteen self-contained but more or less interrelated essays, Mack Smith engages in a sort of clinical dissection of various aspects of his fundamental thesis on the centrality of Victor Emmanuel's negative "contribution" to the making, structuring, and activities of the Italian unitary state. In a series of masterly chapters Mack Smith re-envelops the diplomacy of the Risorgimento within the contradictions of its multiple, or at least dualistic, political leadership—Villafranca in July 1859 and Marsala in May 1860 proved only the most dramatic revelations of the nemesis that hounded the unresolved conflict between Victor Emmanuel and Cavour—and reveals that the sources of the erosive disaccord lay infinitely less in the much publicized clash of strong personalities than in recurring confrontations between the constitutional prerogatives of the king and the institutional and parliamentary responsibilities of the prime minister. For, in essence, they were engaged in the Italian version of the ancient struggle between monarchy and representative government, old dynastic ambition and emerging national interest. Thus Mack Smith subtly succeeds in stripping down some of the most resistant hagiographic veils with which a prominent sector of "traditional" Italian historiography has tended to cover up, ignore, minimize, or obviate with almost equal generosity the personal flaws and the grave, sometimes tragic, official errors of the Re Galantuomo.

In this volume practically none of the major historical viewpoints on the Risorgimento that have come to be associated with Mack Smith is either substantively or radically changed. Nevertheless, the total effect of this fascinating prismatic study of the politics of the Risorgimento has proved to be, at least for one reader, much more positive, paradoxically even in its negative emphases, than its author's general history of modern Italy. Whatever his larger intellectual and cultural interests, there can hardly be any question that Mack Smith is at his unequaled best with monographic political history, even if, as may perhaps be unavoidable for all professionals, he sometimes appears to become too enchanted and, therefore, entrapped by the very sources he can so deftly exploit. Yet even this judgment needs drastic modification, at least in the light of his superb two-volume history of modern Sicily, a miniature model of which is reproduced in the present volume with the publication, I believe for the first time in English, of his 1950 article in Italian on the peasants' revolt in Sicily in 1860. Interestingly enough, it is in this essay, which at first sight does not seem to be directly connected with the main themes of a volume on Victor Emmanuel and Cavour, that Mack Smith reiterates the core of his views on the Risorgimento. For him, the Italian national revolution is still essentially a multiple civil war, which, appropriated as it was by the forces of law and order represented by the Savoyard monarchy and the liberal middle classes, excluded the masses of the Italian people, urban and peasant alike, from "the fruits of their own success" in bringing down the institutional, social, and moral pillars of the various anciens régimes in Italy.

Mack Smith quite rightly believes that "there is no necessary reason why truth should be beautiful or simple" (p. 176). The studies in this volume make it amply evident that the "truth" about Victor Emmanuel II is almost absolutely harsher than some "traditional" Italian historians ever acknowledged—was the king perhaps "half mad," as Sir James Hudson reported from Turin to the Foreign Office at a moment of exasperation and frustration in 1862? On the other hand, when the truth about Cavour's diplomatic, political, and constitutional thought and action is pitted, as it essentially is in this volume, against the king's anachronistic and often dangerous and irresponsible activities, it shows something finer, richer, more human and historically fertile than that almost demonic face of the Machiavellian "fox" that the relatively isolated confrontation between Cavour and Garibaldi in 1860 had tended to reveal. In this volume Mack Smith has neither simplified nor beautified historical truth as he sees it. Nevertheless, by placing the "truth" within a larger context of historiographical perspectives he has tended to render his reinterpretation of the Risorgimento no less original and brilliant, but certainly mellowed and perhaps wiser than his almost single-mindedly iconoclastic earlier work in modern Italian history.

A. WILLIAM SALOMONE
University of Rochester

GIORGIO SPINI. L'Evangelo e il berretto frigio: Storia della Chiesa Cristiana Libera in Italia, 1870-1904. (Storia del movimento evangelico in Italia, Number 1.) Turin: Editrice Claudiana. [1971.] Pp. 265. Cloth L. 3,500, paper L. 2,800.

This volume dwells upon an often forgotten aspect of the Risorgimento—the Protestant awakening that accompanied the political reorganization. Specifically, it examines the development of the Free Christian Church in Italy from its appearance in 1870 to its dissolution in 1904. Identified with the Left and committed to the independence of each congregation, its ministers, as Spini shows, found themselves not only at odds with the Catholics but with the Waldenses as well, and hence determined to march their separate way.

The Free Church, according to Spini, received its inspiration from two sources: the Anglo-Saxon religious revival and the Risorgimento. Its fatal flaw was the inability to reconcile the two. Superficially the problem seemed resolved, for the foreign sponsors of the institution joined nationals in pressing for a close association with the state. The church achieved its respectability by sacrificing its vitality, for its preoccupation to please its foreign paymasters and the political establishment repelled its most devout members. Thus, though the church could boast of some two thousand communicants in the 1880s, a doubling of its membership since unification, it was no longer free or Italian.

The specialist will appreciate the detailed descriptions of the thirty communities in the church, the comprehensive coverage of the activities of their pastors, the reports of their general assemblies, and the analysis of their abortive attempt to merge with the Waldensian Church. These, when combined with the writings of a number of church members, create the picture of a dedicated group of men working against clerical pressure and widespread ignorance to effect a religious transformation.

Unfortunately Spini relies almost exclusively upon evangelical sources, and thus has produced a restricted and one-sided study of the Free Church, which after 1890 came to be called the Italian Evangelical Church. We are given but a glimpse of the manner in which the political elite, the various classes, and the vast majority of Italians reacted to that institution. Little is said of the means by which this church proposed to draw the masses away from the traditional faith and into its own ranks. What is presented, instead, is a survey of the maneuvers of its leaders and a catalog of the activities of its various congregations.

FRANK J. COPPA
St. John's University,
Jamaica, New York

Atti del XLIV Congresso di storia del Risorgimento italiano (Trieste, 31 ottobre-4 novembre 1968) (La fine della prima guerra mondiale e i problemi relativi). (Istituto per la Storia del Risorgimento Italiano. Biblioteca scientifica. Atti dei Congressi, Volume 12.) Rome: the Istituto. 1970. Pp. 269.

How much valuable work of able scholars is lost when it appears in volumes with bland serial titles such as this? Historians of Italy are doubtless attentive to publications of the Istituto per la Storia del Risorgimento, but the proceedings of its Forty-fourth Congress have a much broader appeal and suggest once more the crisis of information retrieval in this age of proliferating knowledge.

These seven papers were presented in Trieste in the autumn of 1968 when the Istituto commemorated the sesquicentennial of that Adriatic city's unification with Italy. The theme of the meetings, "La fine della prima guerra mondiale e i problemi relativi," was quite appropriate and opportune, but it becomes almost antiseptic as the subtitle of such a rich collection of information and observations. Hence one initially has the impression that the congress undertook a panoramic consideration of European events in 1918 and gave the expected emphasis to Italian affairs at the close of the war. But closer examination shows that the participants produced an excellent résumé of numerous aspects of World War I that was based on recent research. The résumé has also taken into account the significance of the forgotten, maligned, or misunderstood Italian front.

As in any such collection, the essays vary in quality, but unlike most such assemblages, each of these works has something of unusual value. Aldo Garosci, in his "Mutazioni di equilibri e ideali politici nel corso della prima guerra mondiale," has presented a truly stimulating, even seminal work, which treats anew the causes of the conflict and the alteration or adaptation of each belligerent's war aims. He has drawn most imaginatively upon Fritz Fischer and Arno Mayer, as well as Croce, and goes beyond all. Yet potentially more controversial are the assertions by the French historian Henry Contamine, who asserts that the events of the Italian front shortened the war and perhaps held the key to its outcome. His evidence and arguments will not be easily refuted.

Some vital and easily neglected aspects of the dissolution of the Austro-Hungarian Empire (for example, issues deriving from transmission of administrative responsibilities) are treated by Fritz Fellner, whose remarks spurred one listener to warn against excessive criticism of Austrian relations with the successor states of the Empire.

Luigi De Rosa has provided a sweeping view of the tragic and even cataclysmic economic consequences of the Great War. If he may be faulted for giving less attention to Russia, England, and France, De Rosa has nevertheless provided unusual information on such countries as Finland, Spain, Bulgaria, and Sweden. His conclusion on the Continental situation is most candid: Europe should have given more attention to helping itself by creating its own markets after the war. Manlio Udina, a jurist, has undertaken a similar but less penetrating analysis of the drastically altered and wrenched situation of international law and organizations in the postwar world.

Leo Valiani's lively essay on the stormy course of Italian domestic politics and foreign policy in 1918 demonstrates the fragility and uncertainty of the country's commitment to the Treaty of London long before the controversy over that pact erupted and threatened Allied solidarity at Versailles. This account ought well to be considered by any future historians of the peace conference, especially those who would reappraise America's policies toward Italy in 1919.

The late Carlo Schiffrer, in "L'attesa di Trieste," evokes the enthusiasm of Trieste on the eve of its capture by the Italian army. Still, he has not overlooked the history of the city with its Slavic minority, its vital links to its non-Italian economic hinterland, and its romantic ties to the Risorgimento, questions that have continued to make news long since 1918.

Not long ago Jean-Baptiste Duroselle remarked that a new generation of works on World War I, with a different perspective, could soon be expected. Here is some evidence of his accuracy; and it is therefore to be hoped that at least one, if not more, of these essays may become the basis for new monographs.

BENJAMIN F. BROWN
University of Kansas

STANISŁAW GRODZISKI. Historia ustroju społeczno politycznego Galicji, 1772-1848 [A History of the Social and Political Organization of Galicia, 1772-1848]. (Polska Akademia Nauk—Oddział w Krakowie. Prace Komisji Nauk Historycznych, Number 28.) Cracow: Zakład Narodowy im. Ossolińskich, Wydawnictwo Polskiej Akademii Nauk. 1971. Pp. 303. Zł. 60.

This book on Galicia pertains to Poland and to Austria, which acquired Galicia in the first and third partitions of Poland. It provides a thorough study of the historical processes in that province with a pluralistic society and diverse nationalities, religions, and economic conditions. The author, being a historian of law (a group of scholars particularly prominent in Europe) concentrates on the legal aspect of the subject.

A detailed survey of sources of law and a geographical description of the territory open this study. Then the author analyzes social relations, including the nobility; cities and burghers and their professional and occupational problems; the clergy as a social group; and peasants and the attempted reforms at their emancipation, their self-government, and their rebellion of 1846. Colonization and Germanization of Galicia and the place and fate of Jews complement this part of the book. The next part brings forth a description of religious relations followed by an analysis of political and administrative organization of Galicia in the framework of the Austrian monarchy and empire. The organization and functioning of the judicial system is a new major part of the book. The fiscal order and problems, taxation, and other economic matters are treated in the next chapter. Separate consideration is given to the organization of armed forces. One chapter is entirely devoted to an analysis of education and political thought in Galicia. The study is ended with concise conclusions and is supplied with a summary in German. All problems examined in this monograph are treated with respect to their historical development in the period from 1772 until 1848.

The study is firmly set in a broad source basis. The author fully uses archival materials as well as broad secondary sources. A fresh insight is often provided by the memoirs of contemporaries. This solid scholarly apparatus is reflected in numerous pertinent references.

This is the most up-to-date study of the problem. Together with K. Grzybowski's Galicja 1848-1914 (1959), this book completes our knowledge of that part of Poland in the period of partitions until World War I. It also contributes to a better knowledge of the Austrian Empire as well as to a deeper understanding of European history in the period of expansion of some states and in the areas of struggle of conquered nations for autonomy and their own organized way of life.

WACŁAW W. SOROKA
University of Wisconsin—
Stevens Point

LOUIS FITZGIBBON. Katyn. Introduction by CONSTANTINE FITZGIBBON. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. 1971. Pp. 285. $10.00.

During the invasion of Poland in 1939 the Russians took prisoner about fifteen thousand Polish officers and placed them in the prisoner of war camps at Kozielsk, Starobielsk, and Ostashkov. After the spring of 1940 all but a few hundred of these officers disappeared and nothing was heard of them. More than a year later, after the German invasion of the Soviet Union, the Polish exile government in London concluded an agreement with Moscow that provided for an "amnesty" for the Poles in the Soviet Union and for the formation of a Polish army there. When most of the Polish officers who had fallen into Soviet hands in 1939 failed to report to the Polish army, the Poles, naturally, inquired about them only to be told by the Soviet authorities that they knew nothing of their whereabouts. Then, on April 13, 1943, the Germans announced that they found the bodies of some forty-three hundred Polish officers buried in Katyn wood near Smolensk. Each man had been shot in the back of the head. The Germans at once accused their Soviet enemy of perpetrating this monstrous crime. The Russians immediately counter-charged that the Germans had done it. When the Polish government asked the International Red Cross to investigate the Katyn massacre, Moscow broke diplomatic relations with that government.

Louis Fitzgibbon states that he has written the book to "clear once and for all the obscurity which has shrouded for over thirty years the worst crime against prisoners-of-war ever committed, and perhaps the worst single unpunished crime in history." He has, to be sure, uncovered no new evidence, and it is doubtful that his book will have a greater impact than the books on Katyn published previously. There has been little doubt from the beginning that the Soviets perpetrated the Katyn crime. Nonetheless, this horrible deed needs to be exposed again and again. The book consists mostly of extensive quotations from the testimonies of the former Polish prisoners of war and other documents. It also contains twenty pages of most gruesome photographs and the list of the 4,143 victims identified at Katyn. This is a thorough and well-written book.

ZYGMUNT J. GASIOROWSKI
University of Georgia

FERENC A. VÁLI. Bridge across the Bosphorus: The Foreign Policy of Turkey. Baltimore: Johns Hopkins Press. 1971. Pp. xiv, 410. $12.50.

Váli's thesis is that modern Turkey pursues three fundamental goals: national security, economic development, and "Europeanization." Policies adopted in their pursuit have changed, but the goals (of which Váli approves) remain unaltered since Atatürk.

This analysis permits Váli to applaud much of current Turkish foreign policy: cordial but restrained relations with Russia, close but dignified relations with the United States, NATO membership, Common Market affiliation, limited pro-Arab support against Israel, and advocacy of peace in the Middle East. Váli supports the "magnificent scheme" to bridge the Bosphorus, to him symbolic of Turkey's third goal, to be assimilated into European civilization. Váli's research in these areas seems competent, informative, and well documented, if marred by repetition.

Váli is weaker in his attempt to provide "the proper historical setting"—fourteen pages for six hundred years of Ottoman foreign policy. Such brief coverage results from his belief that the Ottoman legacy is minimal. Ottoman policies were "hesitating, haphazard, and even irrational," dependent on "concessions, 'appeasement,' or humiliating surrender," whereas those of modern Turkey supposedly represent a near-total discontinuity. Where Váli has provided additional Ottoman historical background the results are commendable, as are his discussions of Soviet-Turkish relations and of the Cyprus issue. Where he has not, as in his sketch of economic development, his conclusions go astray. Two examples: Ottoman leaders purportedly attempted to develop military technology while ignoring overall economic and industrial development. In actuality low import duties imposed upon the Porte in 1838 frustrated an extensive Ottoman effort to initiate its own industrial revolution in the 1840s. Economic development was thereafter impossible until Turkey regained control of tariff rates in 1929. Second, in attributing the origins of étatisme exclusively to Soviet models Váli ignores traditional Ottoman state workshops and heavy industry, including shipyards, foundries, smelters and mines, and several state factories that the Republic inherited. Similarly, by arguing that Turkey's current mixed economy is Western he again slights Ottoman precedents.

Two other disappointing features deserve comment. First, the index is an economy-model list of proper nouns capitalized in the text. One looks in vain for general references to agriculture, education, industry, political parties, trade, and so on. Second, the one map is insufficient—it includes no roads, railroads, population symbols, foreign military bases, or former political boundaries, and but one river.

Important regional and place names referred to in the text are omitted. These drawbacks, while annoying, are not critical. Váli has produced a valuable work.

EDWARD C. CLARK
University of Texas,
El Paso

V. A. PETROV. Ocherki po istorii revoliutsionnogo dvizheniia v russkoi armii v 1905 g. [Essays on the History of the Revolutionary Movement in the Russian Army in 1905]. (Akademiia Nauk SSSR, Leningradskoe Otdelenie, Instituta Istorii.) Leningrad: Izdatel'stvo "Nauka." 1964. Pp. 426.

The modern period has never attracted the best Soviet historians, and in this arid field no subject has suffered more from lack of standards than the history of the army. Trained historians leave the subject to military men who regard themselves as historians. As a consequence, with the major exception of P. A. Zaionchkovskii's work on the military reforms of the 1860s and 1870s, there are no worthwhile Soviet studies on any aspect of the history of the Russian army.

Under the circumstances one opens every new book on the army with restrained hope. Petrov's book, however, disappoints even the most modest expectations. Let us take for granted the obligatory distortions (for example, the Mensheviks did nothing but undermine the revolutionary work of the Bolsheviks); even so, Petrov's inadequacy as a historian is distressing. He has no sense of what is important and what is trivial; he does not connect his little facts with larger issues; instead of constructing well-supported generalizations he paraphrases documents. Worst of all he fails to ask those questions that would make his collection of facts meaningful: did the revolutionary movement among the soldiers contribute to Russian defeat, what kind of soldiers were likely to participate in revolutionary action, how widespread was revolutionary sentiment, and why did the revolutionary movement ultimately collapse? The description of "revolutionary acts"—surely a vague concept—in regiment after regiment makes excruciatingly boring reading (for hundreds of pages).

There is, however, one fascinating chapter in the book that alone justifies the investment of two rubles and five kopeks. In great detail Petrov paraphrases eighty-four petitions prepared by soldier groups. We have so few sources on the basis of which the world view of the Russian peasant (or in this case, soldier) could be reconstructed that this contribution is very valuable. The soldiers' demands were varied: some groups protested against being used as police in putting down disturbances, while others merely wanted to receive extra pay for this duty. Some regiments wanted libraries, while others asked for free soap or higher salaries for army musicians. Reading these petitions one inevitably gains sympathy for the Russian soldier, living in terrible misery, receiving forty-five kopeks every two months, constantly humiliated and abused by his officers. One catches a glimpse of the faces of those peasants and soldiers who twelve years later would bring down the Imperial regime.

PETER KENEZ
University of California,
Santa Cruz

NEAR EAST

RICHARD G. HOVANNISIAN. The Republic of Armenia. Volume 1, The First Year, 1918-1919. (Published under the auspices of the Near Eastern Center, University of California, Los Angeles.) Berkeley and Los Angeles: University of California Press. 1971. Pp. xxiii, 547. $15.00.

The present work is the sequel to Professor Hovannisian's previous study, Armenia on the Road to Independence, 1918 (1967). Heavily documenting his book, the author presents in this the first of a projected three-volume analysis a detailed description of the trials and tribulations of the ill-fated Armenian Republic's first year (1918-19). Not only does he cover the republic's many domestic crises, but he also gives considerable treatment of its foreign relations. One can only sympathize with the enormous internal problems—lack of food and transport, disease and malnutrition, destruction and poverty on every hand—facing the republic's provisional government. The author also gives much attention to the republic's tortuous foreign relations, which only add to the complexities of its internal problems. He explores in considerable depth the republic's relations with Georgia and Azerbaidzhan, its Transcaucasian neighbors, with the pro-Muslim British forces, with the White Russian troops of General Anton Denikin, and with the hostile nationalist Turkish forces of Mustafa Kemal. Attention is given the efforts of the republic's delegation to the Paris Peace Conference, where, in conjunction with the delegation representing the Turkish Armenians, it petitioned the powers to create an integrated Armenian state consisting of the Armenian Republic, located in Russian Armenia, and Turkish Armenia, located in the Ottoman Empire. The student of the Armenian mandate question and of the endeavors of American relief workers will also find ample space devoted to their particular interests.

No filiopietistic writing pervades this study. The Armenophile will, indeed, find the author's narrative both penetrating and objective as he tries to unfold the story of the republic's efforts to survive the first crucial year. In fact, one is at times inclined to feel the author is overly critical of the republic's officials. Presented in a chronological narrative, the author, in what will undoubtedly become the definitive study of the Armenian Republic, seeks to explore and evaluate the tragic turn of events that made independence for Armenia little more than a pipe dream.

Thoroughly researched on a multiarchival scale, this study is based on the author's search in primary sources in Russian, Turkish, German, English, and Armenian archival material. This book makes it apparent that the diplomatic historian must seek answers to his questions in more than one archival source in order to make a completely objective analysis.

While the author has accomplished his purpose of presenting "a detailed, if not involved, history of the Republic of Armenia," one is inclined to wonder whether a shorter treatment would not have sufficed to cover that ill-fated republic's first year of existence. In any event, this work will answer many questions for the scholar whose interest lies in Russian and Middle Eastern studies.

THOMAS A. BRYSON
West Georgia College

MEHDI HERAVI. Iranian-American Diplomacy. Brooklyn: Theo. Gaus' Sons. 1969. Pp. 161. $6.50.

MICHAEL KAHL SHEEHAN. Iran: The Impact of United States Interests and Policies 1941-1954. Brooklyn: Theo. Gaus' Sons. 1968. Pp. xiv, 88. $5.00.

Dr. Heravi's book, while providing an adequate general survey of United States relations with Iran, is both too brief and too lacking in guiding generalizations to be recommended with enthusiasm. It lacks an overall view of the changing nature of United States motives in its relations with Iran beyond speaking of the period before World War II as one of isolationism. The book opens with a discussion of missionary activity in Iran, which states misleadingly that "the most drastic change in the Iranian mind and attitude was brought about by the establishment of the first American missionary school in 1835. . . . The first formal school for girls, which was established by the American missionaries, also greatly improved the social standards of Iran."

The book lacks analytical statements of the bases of American policies over the long period it discusses. Many of the generalizations it includes are taken from the sources used by the author. A more comprehensive approach should have come out of studying the period. Minor errors occur, such as seeing Nasir ad-Din Shah as a frustrated reformer, or speaking in the plural of tobacco concessions to British corporations. Transliteration errors are also frequent, so that we get "Valihad" for (in simplified transliteration) Valiahd, and "Gas-Ri-Shirin" for Qasr-i Shirin. The author has, however, used a great deal of documentation to present the main facts about United States-Iranian relations; and except for the period better covered by Abraham Yeselson's United States-Persian Diplomatic Relations 1883-1921 (1956), the book may be profitably referred to by students of the area as a useful general survey of the long period it covers.

Mr. Sheehan's book wisely concentrates on a far shorter period than Dr. Heravi's. Although based almost exclusively on published sources and secondary works and presenting little that is new to students of the area, the book may be recommended for its bringing together of materials that have not been systematically presented before. The major criticism to be made of it is that it generally takes U.S. policy at its own word and presents it as an increasing commitment to Iran as a bastion of the "free world," which the United States has defended against Soviet aggression. It is correctly stated that the United States took over a position formerly occupied by Great Britain in Iran, but U.S. motivations are scarcely interpreted in terms other than those used by the American authorities themselves. The expansion of U.S. commitments abroad during and after World War II cannot be adequately understood by quoting the rhetoric of American self-justification. Both military and economic expansion were in the interest of establishing the dominant power and economic interests of the United States. Aside from these caveats Mr. Sheehan's book can be recommended as a very brief and readable overview of the development of the American interest from the period of open door policies, which had long characterized U.S. policy in Iran, to the year when American control became paramount. Mr. Sheehan does not hesitate to note that the Shah's coup in 1953 against Mossadeq was engineered by the CIA, even quoting Alan Dulles as implicitly admitting this. The book's documentation of the rapid growth of U.S. influence in Iran is cogent and welcome, and its generally accurate presentation of at least the external facts of United States relations with Iran make it an appropriate introduction to the questions it discusses.

NIKKI R. KEDDIE
University of California,
Los Angeles

AFRICA

HUBERT DESCHAMPS, editor. Histoire générale de l'Afrique noire, de Madagascar et des archipels. Volume 2, De 1800 à nos jours. Paris: Presses Universitaires de France. 1971. Pp. 720.

With this volume Professor Deschamps and his colleagues complete the most significant French entry into the new generation of multi-authored, multivolumed histories of Africa. Though several of the projected entries (like the Cambridge History of Africa or the UNESCO history) are still to come, the task they face collectively and individually is that of assimilating the vast body of new research produced since the early 1950s, when Africa first emerged as a "new" field of history. The effort itself raises a whole series of crucial questions—questions that should be asked, perhaps, of more traditional fields as well, but are raised here more acutely because these new histories of continental scope are appearing on a clean slate. Who, for example, are the intended readers? What background do they have? What criteria should govern the chronological and geographical distribution of space within the book? What kind of balance can be struck between the main lines of generalization and the detailed narrative of a local scene?

Deschamps's solution for this, his second volume, was to accept the conventional periodization for recent African history—1800–80 for the last phase of precolonial Africa, 1880–1945 for the high colonial period, 1945–70 for the decolonization and the early post colonial period. Within these three periods, he briefly outlines the broader aspects of African history as a whole, leaving individual regional specialists to deal each with his own region in his own way—and all too often without reference to what was going on elsewhere.

This relative lack of uniformity between chapters makes for even more unevenness than cooperative works usually show. Some authors see their task as an ordinary textbook presentation summarizing the current literature. Others take the opportunity to write original and sometimes brilliant synthetic accounts that go beyond anything now available in print. Yves Person's treatment of the region that centered on the upper Niger basin (essentially the Manding culture area) is a contribution of that kind. So, too, is Pierre Alexandre's treatment of the equatorial forest, which traces the broad sweep of nineteenth-century history for a region usually left out of textbooks. Claude Tardits and Pierre Kalk deal with the north central savanna from Cameroon and Lake Chad east to the Republic of the Sudan, another region badly neglected in anglophone histories of Africa. Jan Vansina's survey of the southern savanna is new in another way; it is used to update the version he presented in Kingdoms of the Savanna (1966). The history of Madagascar and the Mascarene Islands is not so clear an advance on the existing literature, but it is welcome simply because it is so often neglected.

Other regional chapters are far less adequate, and here the weakness of writing without a common framework comes into its own. At worst synthesis is not even maintained at the regional level, and the regional accounts become a confusing jumble of unfamiliar names presented without explanation in the framework of a rigid narrative. The overabundance of unexplained data is especially striking in Pierre Mercier's treatment of the Guinea coast from Nigeria west to the Gold Coast, since Mercier is a sociologist; yet his account reads like an old-fashioned history text. Here and elsewhere authors who are not historians appear unfamiliar with the latest historical literature in English, as though the double barrier of language and discipline was too high a hurdle. The section on East Africa even has a remnant trace of the "Hamite" myth in the form of "caucasoid" cultural traits (pp. 265-66).

With the colonial period the organization changes. The twelve regional articles of the precolonial section are replaced by a new series centering on the colonial policy of the various European powers. This, unfortunately, shifts the emphasis to European aims and means, which must be dealt with before the authors even get around to the African reality. Most of them never reach that point, and their problem is heightened by Deschamps's allocation of space. More than half the volume is assigned to 1800-80, but only sixteen per cent to 1880-1945. In terms of pages per year, this distribution gives 4.6 for the period 1800-80, 7.4 for the period 1945-70, but only 1.7 for 1880-1945. This distribution seems to imply that the colonial period was not very important, but that assessment is never explicit, and it seems inexplicable for a book with a former colonial governor as editor and former colonial officials as at least a fifth of the other authors.

This idiosyncratic assignment of space continues in the allocations to the various colonial powers. Measured by the ratio of pages to present-day population, Liberia and the Spanish and Portuguese territories have twice the space of francophone Africa, while francophone territories in turn have double the space per capita assigned to anglophone Africa. I doubt that this was an intentional emphasis; it simply follows from the fact that it takes so much space to describe a colonial policy and administration, regardless of the number of people administered—and regardless of its actual influence on African history. The African response to these policies is seriously neglected.

The overemphasis on administrative and political history continues into the postcolonial period, joined now by occasional paragraphs on economic change. But social change, new tendencies in thought, religion, or art, and even economic change in the traditional sector are all underplayed. Instead, the emphasis of the section on 1945-70 falls very heavily on the 1960s and especially on the second half of that decade, so that history gives way to current events. More than half the discussion of Nigeria between 1945 and 1970 is devoted to the period 1966-70, explicable perhaps by the importance of the civil war, but more than half the space allotted to Ghana also deals with the period after 1960. Other spatial allocations for the colonial period are simply puzzling. It is possible that a francophone reader might want more space devoted to Madagascar than to South Africa—however difficult to justify in terms of the past or present place of either in African affairs. But why should the former British East Africa have more space than French West Africa and twice as much as British West Africa?

No reviewer has a right to ask for a book different from the one the author intended, but here is a general work, beautifully bound, printed, and illustrated. The physical setting suggests a work intended to be read now and used for reference over the years. Some of the precolonial sections have a lasting quality of the kind suggested, but the interpretation of the colonial period is just now being drastically revised by historians exploring the African side of the colonial experience. Five years from now the account given here will not be wrong, only beside the point. As for the postcolonial period, this version can hardly last beyond the time when the recent crises of the late 1960s have given way to still more recent crises of the early 1970s.

P. D. CURTIN
University of Wisconsin,
Madison

ROBERT O. COLLINS. Land beyond the Rivers: The Southern Sudan, 1898-1918. New Haven: Yale University Press. 1971. Pp. xvi, 368. $12.50.

This is the third volume of Professor Collins's comprehensive history of the Southern Sudan, a subject that he has studied in some depth for the years 1883-1918. The present work deals with the years 1898-1918. Students of African and African-Arab history will welcome this contribution to an area that is nearly unmatched in its complexity and that remains little understood despite its importance in the dynamic of Middle-Eastern and African relations. Professor Collins's interest lies primarily in diplomatic and administrative history. He notes in his preface that early in his work he came to the conclusion that "the fundamental decisions affecting the conquest and administration of the Southern Sudan during the first decade of this century were largely the result of the Anglo-Congolese dispute over the Upper Nile." This interest in diplomatic history is reflected in the latest volume of this collection, although it is balanced by a just concern with the internal administrative policies of the British in the Southern Sudan. There is little sentimentality wasted over the motivation of British officers and consequently little effort to romanticize the laborious efforts to create a sensible and orderly administration. There is, on the other hand, a consistent attempt to understand the objectives of the administrators as well as the conditions they found, in a human and material sense. "British administrators in the Southern Sudan," writes Professor Collins, "regarded their role as fundamentally political. Modernization meant the more efficient operation of the administration rather than economic growth or raising the standard of living of the Southern Sudanese. The British were rulers first and developers second." Gentlemen remained gentlemen, and basing his observations on the class background of the British administrators, Professor Collins finds that "the paternalism of the squirearchy, not the incentives of the urban merchants, guided their actions."

I have selected one passage and limited my remarks, as is obvious, with the result that readers ought to feel deprived without reading more of Professor Collins for themselves. There is much here that deserves further comment and that will doubtless be variously interpreted. It seems highly regrettable to me that a work dealing with the Southern Sudan tells us so little of that internal history which the author was also interested in. Where are the Sudanese? And what is this polite, discreet, imperialism that differs so markedly from the indifference and cruelty attributed to the others engaged in the same game—namely France and Belgium? Diplomatic and administrative histories are perhaps meant to whet the appetite particularly for those who are curious to know who the happy masses were that were being so efficiently administered.

IRENE L. GENDZIER
Boston University

D. A. LOW. Buganda in Modern History. Berkeley and Los Angeles: University of California Press. 1971. Pp. xii, 265. $8.75.

D. A. LOW. The Mind of Buganda: Documents of the Modern History of an African Kingdom. Berkeley and Los Angeles: University of California Press. 1971. Pp. xxvii, 234. $8.50.

Professor Anthony Low has given us a volume of essays and an essential collection of documents centered on the political history of Buganda. These two volumes build upon his study of the making of the Uganda Agreement (Buganda and British Overrule [1960]) and the establishment of the Uganda Protectorate (in volume 2 of Oxford History of East Africa [1965]). In the scholarly tradition of Terence Ranger, Elizabeth Chilver, Yves Person, and Jacques Berque, Low demonstrates that detailed knowledge of the internal, precolonial history of an African society provides the most powerful and coherent explanation of colonial relationships and their aftermath. The essays, Buganda in Modern History, review and gather the political continuities in the history of Buganda between the 1880s and 1960s. They serve as a commentary upon The Mind of Buganda, a collection of sixty-two documents from the past century of Buganda history, put into context by a skillful fourteen-page introduction.

At this moment, when the Eurocentric view of the "discovery of the Nile" is again being given publicity on television, Professor Low's documents forcibly call to our attention the African view of imperial rivalry and colonial rule. The view from inside looking out reveals the complexities of interaction with intrusive British values and the cost of accommodation to political and cultural hegemony. Although the Kabaka wrote in 1935 that "while boasting of having acquired Western education and civilization in an amazingly short period, we have entirely and completely ignored our native traditional customs," the documents also make clear that the Baganda achieved and wished to sustain a special political position in Uganda. They valued the symbolic, self-conscious unity provided by the "living and functioning form of the Kabakaship and Lukiiko" (the Lukiiko Memorandum, 1960), and they sensed great continuity in their four-hundred-year history.

There is a certain amount of perhaps unnecessary repetition among the seven essays, but the major insights cannot be faulted, and the total effect is cumulative. Just as in his selection of documents Professor Low sets out "the attitudes of mind which the Baganda have displayed on issues of major importance to them," so in his essays he keeps in focus the continuously complicated relationships between the Kingdom of Buganda and the larger protectorate, now the nation, of Uganda. The first essay shows clearly the political sophistication and adaptability of the Baganda in the final decades of the nineteenth century as they turn and use foreign religious elements for internal political purposes. The third essay argues that the British relied upon the "new men," the adaptive radicals, in the 1890s, but that in the changes following the Second World War the British relied upon the established leaders. Thus, at the very time when the hierarchy of senior chiefs was becoming more distant from the people, more bureaucratized, when "the personal nexus" between chiefs and people was atrophying, the British, too, failed to recognize the new generation. The fifth and sixth essays spell out the consequences: neotraditionalist dominance of the Lukiiko in 1957, the rise of new-style nationalist political parties, and the storming of the Kabaka's palace by Ugandan government troops in 1966.

Perhaps the most self-contained essay is the fourth. It deals with the Hancock achievement at the Namirembe Conference of 1954. Through a study of the personalities involved and the successive positions taken, Professor Low reveals the thought and the logic used to open the possibility of a unitary constitution for Uganda. But because the Kabaka did not understand what was at stake and preferred to think in the political metaphors of the past, "the carefully contrived opportunity was never seized, and a decade later nemesis followed."

PROSSER GIFFORD

Amherst College

NORMAN ROBERT BENNETT. Mirambo of Tanzania, 1840?-1884. New York: Oxford University Press. 1971. Pp. xiii, 191. Cloth $6.50, paper $1.95.

A recent popular approach to the study of African history has been through biography. "Every nation needs to build its history around the exploits of great men," Mr. Bennett maintains. He has here refined and added to previously published work to present an account of the life of Mirambo, a Nyamwezi leader from western Tanzania who was a prominent military figure in the 1870s and 1880s. Mirambo has been principally known as a warrior and empire-builder who was a major political force in his own day but whose empire collapsed on his death; to this picture Mr. Bennett adds material on his diplomatic dealings and his relations with African, Arab, and European personalities. Mr. Bennett's command of the European source materials, principally those from British official and missionary archives, is admirable, and there seems little doubt that he has uncovered almost all available evidence. The problem is that it is European evidence; we see Mirambo almost invariably through European eyes and in terms of his contacts with Europeans. Very little African material is used. As a contribution to nineteenth-century Tanzanian history the work is useful but as biography it is inadequate, and Mirambo remains a shadow.

MARGARET L. BATES

New College, Florida

ASIA AND THE EAST

CHANG KUO-T'AO. The Rise of the Chinese Communist Party, 1921-1927. (The Autobiography of Chang Kuo-t'ao, Volume 1.) Lawrence: University Press of Kansas. 1971. Pp. xxi, 756. $25.00.

If China has a Trotsky, it is not Liu Shao-ch'i but Chang Kuo-t'ao. Chang broke with Mao Tse-tung and left the Chinese Communist party (CCP) in 1938. His subsequent obscurity—and Mao's pre-eminence—has frustrated assessment of an outstanding revolutionist. The long-awaited publication of Chang's memoirs is an important event.

An organizer of the epoch-making student demonstration of May 4, 1919, Chang played a prominent role in the formation of the CCP. He pawned clothing to support the embryonic party organization and was a delegate to its first congress in 1921. After visiting the USSR and meeting Lenin, Chang narrowly escaped Wu P'ei-fu's brutal suppression of the Peking-Hankow railroad strike of 1923. On the evening of the historic incident of May 30, 1925, he arrived in Shanghai in time to organize the city's General Labor Union. By the conclusion of this volume he had shared in the hopes, disillusionments, fleeting victories, and bloody disasters that marked the first years of the CCP. At the age of thirty he was an established party leader.

Despite reservations, Chang welcomed Leninist organizational techniques but was shocked by the Comintern's heavy-handed intervention in the policies of the Chinese party. He recognized the fatal contradictions in Moscow's decision to integrate China's Communists into the Kuomintang. Though one may question his judgment that a bilateral united front might have led to "a normal multi-party democracy," his premonition of disaster was well founded. Yet how the Comintern developed its strangle hold over the CCP remains a mystery. Chang was not the only CCP leader to recognize the drawbacks of Moscow's stewardship. Why, then, did the party repeatedly capitulate to ill-conceived directives? In return for economic aid? (Chang says little on this.) Because the party was spellbound by the mystique of the Russian Revolution? (Chang and others who visited the USSR were disenchanted.) Was it the charisma of Soviet advisers? (Many of these men displayed abysmal ignorance of China, and even the formidable Borodin was no Rasputin.) Central to the problem is the prestigious Ch'en Tu-hsiu who became a scapegoat for Comintern failures after doggedly defending its distasteful policies. Yet after Ch'en's deposition a neophyte Comintern adviser was able to pick his successor. If anyone was in a position to understand why these things happened it was Chang Kuo-t'ao, yet his book leaves the mystery unsolved.

Chang's contributions heavily outweigh his omissions. Historians of the CCP have heretofore drawn upon party and Comintern documents. Painstaking dissection of doctrinal controversies has been highly abstract, and even Harold Isaacs's vivid Tragedy of the Chinese Revolution submerges individual protagonists in tides of mass movements. Chang has now written the most vital account of early CCP history since Isaacs's book appeared in 1938. This volume is, as A. Doak Barnett has observed, "a remarkable combination of involvement and dispassionate observation." Chang breathes life into fellow participants who have hitherto been little more than pasteboard mannequins—the imperious Comintern agent Maring, the party patriarch Ch'en Tu-hsiu, and the playboy revolutionist Ch'en Kung-po. Yet, in his guise of dispassionate observer, Chang fails to do justice to one key figure: himself. He moves through the battle-scarred landscape of the Chinese revolution noting others' foibles while his own record remains virtually unblemished. His thoughts and deeds are dutifully recorded but he remains a one-dimensional man. To bring Chang to life we will need the observations of others, including, of course, Mao Tse-tung. We eagerly await Chang Kuo-t'ao's second volume.

JOHN ISRAEL

University of Virginia

ARTHUR N. YOUNG. China's Nation-Building Effort, 1927-1937: The Financial and Economic Record. (Hoover Institution Publications 104.) [Stanford:] Hoover Institution Press, Stanford University. 1971. Pp. xx, 553. $19.50.

This is Arthur Young's third large book on the economy of China during the period of Kuomintang (Nationalist party) rule. Where his earlier books dealt with foreign economic aid to China from 1937 to 1945 and with wartime finance and inflation, the present volume is a memoir and a history of the prewar efforts of the Nationalists to transform the system of public finance inherited in 1927 from the warlord Peking governments into an instrument for achieving national unity and (it was hoped) economic development. As financial adviser to the Republic of China from 1929 to 1947, the author was more or less closely involved in the formulation of the financial policies of the Nanking and Chungking governments, so that he writes with some authority on the more technical aspects of fiscal and monetary affairs. From the records in his possession he occasionally offers valuable data not available elsewhere, for example, statements of the receipts and expenditures of the Nanking government for the fiscal years 1936 and 1937. Mr. Young, an honest reporter, acknowledges that his discussion of modernization and development (pp. 287-401) does "not have the depth of the treatment of fiscal and monetary matters with which I was concerned at first-hand and for which I have primary and often unique data."

The essential issue raised by this book is the classical one of the glass with some water in it: is what we have before us a vessel that is more accurately described as half empty or as half full? Mr. Young, in the summary passages that appear at several places in the text, agrees that the political and social development of China during the years 1927-37—which are not the main subject of his book—lagged behind the ability of the Nationalist government to rehabilitate and reorganize substantial parts of the modern sector of the economy. Thus central government revenues were increased from almost nil to one billion dollars Chinese currency, a modern budgetary and administrative system was organized, the market for internal borrowing was developed, most foreign debts in arrears were settled, the currency system was reformed and unified, a central bank was established, transport and communications were improved, and a modest program of development was begun with both domestic and foreign capital and technical aid. All were promising beginnings when compared to the period of warlordism that preceded. But, the author also notes, the rural areas were largely unchanged and their resources never tapped by the center, no substantial agrarian reform was undertaken, provincial and local governments were dominated by militarists, administration was frequently corrupt, the central government wasted its resources in civil wars, its political base was a narrowly circumscribed social elite, and the populace at large was inert and had no voice in the government.

After looking at the glass with some care Mr.

Young has decided that it was half full. Had war with Japan not come in 1937 the Kuomintang would not have been overthrown by its Communist party opponent. The prospect was for continued "evolutionary change and growth" on the basis of the relatively successful fiscal and monetary policies of the decade here considered. For many—indeed most—students of Kuomintang China, who are more skeptical about the efficacy of fiscal and monetary policy in coping with political and social crisis, the glass in question would be described as more than half empty in 1937 and leaking dangerously through numerous cracks.

ALBERT FEUERWERKER
University of Michigan,
Ann Arbor

AMERICAS

GEORGE ATHAN BILLIAS and GERALD N. GROB, editors. American History: Retrospect and Prospect. New York: Free Press. 1971. Pp. viii, 471. Cloth $7.95, paper $4.95.

In the frequency and thoroughness of their self-scrutiny American historians must surely surpass all other practitioners of their craft. Theirs is the dedicated priesthood of a cult agreed upon only one dogma, "Know thyself." This proceeds in large part no doubt from phenomena which, to a European eye, appear distinctively American—the sheer volume of academic output and the number, diversity, and wide geographical scatter of the institutions that promote it. In such a situation the provision of formal channels of communication and their maintenance by regular dredging is a convenience almost amounting to a necessity. (Which should not, incidentally, diminish anyone's gratitude, least of all that of the foreign scholar, at finding this task so conscientiously and ably done.)

But behind the bibliographer's urge to order there is also the philosophic impulse to assess and evaluate. (No accident perhaps that "clerk," in its original and derived meanings, may cover both.) That the American historian sees himself—and is seen by many, perhaps most, of his readers—as the unacknowledged legislator of his times is almost as evident as that he is deemed to be the Rhadamanthus of the national past. The pages of the Newsletter testify as vehemently to the first role as the pages of the AHR do to the second.

Moreover, the flexibility of the discipline is greater in the United States than elsewhere. It is more open to innovatory techniques and borrowed insights. There is therefore not only the social but, so to say, the technological, impact to be recorded. The American Clio is not only ready to sing songs of social significance; she is also prepared to try them on the twelve-tone scale or the Moog synthesizer. This may stimulate (it certainly does not impede) the rapid turnover of interpretations. Certainly the corpus of American history appears unique in its quick responsiveness to every shock wave that reaches it from the nation itself, so that today's national crisis becomes tomorrow's nouvelle vague of revisionism.

The authors of American History are in varying degrees responding to all these developments. They are seeking to update, in many fields, our swiftly obsolescing bibliographies. They are trying to record and relate the fresh evaluations of the American past that have been emerging in the sixties. And where relevant and practicable, they have been trying to do a historian's job on historiography, to enquire and explain where the new trends have come from, what they signify, where they may point. The result is a diversified, rich, and informative volume.

Two general impressions, irrespective of period or approach, remain from a reading of these very different essays. The first is the decline of great names. Certain figures, formative teachers, and interpreters do, of course, recur in these pages. But the age of the giants is over. There are no Turners or Beards. With the tragic losses of Hofstadter and Potter, even the ranks of the near-giants are sadly thinned. But a second impression is almost equally strong, of the great range and liveliness of the profession as a whole, of its impressive output, its restless energy, and its Oedipal addiction to patricide as a form of occupational therapy. Just as there are no giants, so there are no idols.

Less strong than an impression but more powerful than a whiff is a certain emanation from these pages of what an unkind critic would call insularity. The rich internal resources of the American past have encouraged a certain exclusive concentration, even in our ecumenical present, on the American experience. There is rather too little evidence in these pages that the American historian's curiosity follows where his civic conscience or his vacation travel might lead him, to ask how far his findings about the American past might be enriched or clarified by being brought into comparison with the experience of other peoples at other times. We all wear blinders here; no one has panoramic vision. But because the American horizon is so broad it sometimes lends itself more readily to the illusion of being the totality of the perceptible.

The ten essays that make up American History fall into two categories—the chronological and the topical. All, that is, save Lee Benson's on "Middle Period Historiography: What Is To Be Done?" This, as its Leninesque interrogative might suggest, is as much an indictment as an inquiry. The research on 1816 to 1860 has, he charges, yielded only "unsystematic and trivial" information. But when one discovers the reason for this, namely that historians have obstinately declined to become social scientists, one realizes that the indictment is general. What we have here is a hard-hitting if rather old-fashioned restatement of the case for a scientific history, which could as reasonably be applied to any other period of the American past. Which is not to deny that Benson scores some very palpable hits, especially when he directs attention to our profession's sloppy use of terms and our inveterate addiction to "proof by haphazard quotation."

Next to Benson's, the widest-ranging essays are those by Samuel P. Hays on social history and James P. Baughman on economic and business history. Hays makes the large claim that the distinctiveness of social history lies not in its subject matter but in its way of looking at the past, concerning itself with "human interaction." What? Have we all been writing social history without knowing it? Not at least in its fullest realization, for that, as we are reminded apropos of immigration history, "requires that it be freed from the particular circumstances of time and place." If that seems beyond the reach of most of us poor prisoners of the here and now, we can nevertheless endorse much of what Hays has to say about getting social history away from its emphasis on problem solving and its subservience to ideology, as also his warnings against the tendency to dichotomize.

Baughman's essay is a most illuminating survey of the ground recently cultivated by the economic historians with the new tools that they have derived from contemporary economic theory and, even more, with the new data that econometrics has put at their disposal. Here, it can hardly be disputed, there has been real progress. In 1944 the Committee on Research in Economic History of the Social Science Research Council identified three "target areas"—the roles of entrepreneurship and government in economic growth and the history of the firm. In all these, three solid advances have been made. It is not often that scholarship thus complies with its agenda.

Urban history, as a growth topic, receives appropriate scrutiny from Richard Wade, who writes not only a survey of past work and an agenda for future researchers but also a very perceptive and succinct history of American urbanization itself. For a declining trade, diplomatic history, Ernest May provides a comprehensive and far from tearful obituary, hopeful of the phoenix of international history that is rising from the ashes of the old documentation.

For many readers, however, the greatest practical utility may well be found in those essays that survey in a preponderantly bibliographical form recent work in separate periods. All these are well done, some in conspicuously comprehensive detail—like Jacob E. Cooke on the Federalist age—some with a greater freedom of choice and a more explicit commitment to one style of approach—like Gerald Grob, who hails the exhaustion of moralism in Reconstruction historiography and sees the future as belonging to a neo-David Donaldism. Thomas Barrow, surveying the colonial scene, is especially helpful in relating the significant periodical literature to the more familiar book-length studies. George Billias follows with a freshly categorized analysis of the large outpourings of the Revolutionary era, which constitute such an impressive run-up to 1976 and All That.

H. G. NICHOLAS
New College,
Oxford

HERMAN E. KROOSS and MARTIN R. BLYN. A History of Financial Intermediaries. (Random House Books in Finance.) New York: Random House. 1971. Pp. xi, 254. $7.50.

In all fields of scholarly endeavor there has recently been a growing demand for the work of the synthesizer. Specialists of all types have found it almost impossible to keep abreast of the flow of articles and books without the help of summaries and syntheses. Market demand is fortunately being met in some areas of activity, and this history of financial intermediaries provides an example. In 246 pages the reader is offered a sweeping survey of the creation, the response to environmental changes (internal and external), innovative actions, variations in growth rates, and the general performance of financial intermediaries in the history of the United States. The book deals not only with commercial banks and mutual savings banks, as had earlier similar books, but also with insurance companies, general insurance companies, investment banks, credit unions, trust companies, savings and loan associations, noninsured pension funds, and investment companies. In comprehensiveness of coverage it is unique among histories of financial institutions. Those whose activities are analyzed now hold one-half of the total wealth of the nation, a fact that indicates their importance in the economy. As measures of growth of financial intermediaries, assets of banks and insurance companies approximated ten dollars per capita in 1800, and assets of the ten discussed now amount to about five thousand dollars per capita.

Although the reader must peruse carefully rather than breezily, the authors strive successfully to keep the narrative clear and straightforward. In the preface they explain why they concentrate on participants in this segment of economic life—on borrowers and lenders and the processes by which they were brought together. The introduction contains definitions of financial intermediary, the theoretical framework utilized, what financial intermediaries do, and their historical growth. Of particular concern is innovation in three areas—those encouraging saving, those easing the borrowing of funds, and those narrowing "the gap between the saver and the investor by improving liquidity and by adding to geographic mobility" (p. 4). In eight time periods from colonial times to 1970 the extent of and variations in innovations are analyzed—among others, the surges in innovative response occurring in 1816–36 and 1945–70. Twenty-one tables and three “figures” elucidate the text. The presence of a few typographical errors does not impair effectiveness of presentation, but both the index and the bibliography are so brief that they have limited utility. Minor limitations notwithstanding, this synthesis serves to remind the economic historian that assets of financial intermediaries have grown more rapidly than those of any other sector of the American economy. From it the noneconomic historian can learn where the financial power is and the process by which it got there.

RALPH W. HIDY
Boston University

CONVERSE D. CLOWSE. Economic Beginnings in Colonial South Carolina, 1670–1730. (Tricentennial Studies, Number 3.) Columbia: University of South Carolina Press for the South Carolina Tricentennial Commission. 1971. Pp. ix, 283. $6.95.

PAUL S. TAYLOR. Georgia Plan: 1732–1752. Berkeley: Institute of Business and Economic Research, Graduate School of Business Administration, University of California. 1972. Pp. xviii, 322. $6.50.

During the third quarter of the eighteenth century the rice colonies of South Carolina and Georgia experienced an economic boom unparalleled among the British-American colonies since the emergence of the Caribbean sugar islands at the end of the seventeenth century. So great was the boom that on the eve of the Revolution the rice-producing regions of those colonies were almost certainly the most prosperous area on the British North American mainland and probably also the most promising area of agricultural investment in the whole of Britain's overseas dominions. Clearly written and thoroughly researched, these two volumes provide the fullest and most authoritative account ever published of the beginnings of this remarkable development in the socioeconomic foundations of South Carolina and Georgia.

For South Carolina those foundations were slowly laid. The central themes of its first two decades, Clowse makes clear, were the twin failures of the proprietors' elaborate schemes for the development of the colony and of the search for a commercial crop. Trade in deer-skins and in surprisingly large numbers of Indian slaves with neighboring tribes generated some profits. But as late as 1690 the economic base of the colony was extremely precarious and the population correspondingly sparse. Only after 1690 did rice gradually emerge as a primary staple that provided, together with subsidized naval stores and the Indian trade, the profits necessary for the substantial expansion of the colony between 1705 and 1715. That decade was decisive in casting the socioeconomic life of the colony into a 'West Indian mold characterized by a small, slowly growing European population; a rapidly increasing number of African slaves, who accounted for a continuing upsurge in productivity as each slave produced approximately one ton of rice annually in addition to other subsidiary products; the concentration of good rice lands into the hands of a small white elite; and the emergence of the supporting mercantile groups necessary to perform the functions required by a plantation economy. Over the next fifteen years this expansion was slowed somewhat by a series of internal problems and adverse external conditions, but the heavy importation of African slaves continued, and rice received ever greater emphasis. Though economic troubles continued to hinder the colony for another decade, by 1730 it was poised on the threshold of the great boom that began in the 1740s as Carolinians gained access to larger international rice markets and developed indigo as a profitable second staple whose production was heavily subsidized by Britain.

There are several minor problems with the Clowse volume. Unfortunately it stops a full decade before the boom got underway, once again calling into question the wisdom of using political events, in this case the end of the proprietary, to determine the limits of social or economic studies. Moreover, Clowse's explanation for the introduction of slavery (the unsuitability of the climate for white labor) and his account of where Carolinians acquired the technical knowledge to produce rice (he does not consider the likely possibility that they learned it from their African slaves) are unsatisfactory, and the hard economic data on which the study is based are disappointingly thin. Given the nature of the extant sources, however, it is doubtful that any future scholar will improve upon this study, and the author compensates for the lack of data with a series of responsible and informed projections.

Whereas the problem of the early South Carolinians was to find a viable commercial crop, the difficulty of the enterprising spirits among the first Georgians was to overcome the Trustees' opposition to their efforts to follow the Carolina example. In their attempt to create a colony of small, working farmers, the Trustees steadfastly clung to their original plan to exclude slavery, limit the size of landholdings, encourage white immigrants and the use of servant labor, and rely on public support for financing. The first twenty years of the colony's history, Taylor shows in an exhaustive and detailed narrative, were a perpetual tug of war between the Trustees and their supporters in the colony who were determined to keep Georgia from falling into the West Indian model and those other settlers who wanted desperately to emulate that model. A chronicle of the Trustees' gradual defeat on one point after another until their final relinquishment of the last important provisions of their plan in 1749, Taylor's volume is frankly revisionist in tone. He shows that the plan was more practical than earlier historians have suggested, that it worked quite well for over a decade, and that the Salzburgers, Scottish Highlanders, Dutch settlers, and other small farmers consistently supported the Trustees.

But the point is not that the plan was impractical but that it was out of harmony with the central animating spirit of the mid-eighteenth-century British Empire. For what both of these volumes illustrate so profusely is the extraordinary extent to which the momentum for colonial economic development was supplied not by proprietors or trustees in Britain but by the settlers on the spot and to which the primary impulse underlying that momentum "was not altruism or trial of a political system, but profits"—in Taylor's words, "the search for private gain." As many recent studies have implied, everywhere in the British-American colonies men's material appetites were continually whetted by the economic opportunities offered by an environment of abundance. Living next to the colony that at the very moment of the founding of Georgia was on the verge of a dizzying economic boom and in an environment that was supremely suitable for following the Carolina example, Georgians would indeed have had to be Spartan to have resisted the temptation, in Egmont's disconsolate phrase, to become "rich in the ways of other provinces."

JACK P. GREENE

Johns Hopkins University

SARAH MCCULLOH LEMMON, editor. The Pettigrew Papers. Volume 1, 1685-1818. Raleigh: State Department of Archives and History. 1971. Pp. xl, 699. $15.00.

Volume 1 of the Pettigrew Papers contains the records of the early members of the Pettigrew family of the Albemarle Sound region of North Carolina. The principal items are the correspondence of the Reverend Charles Pettigrew, North Carolina's first elected (although not consecrated) bishop of the Episcopal Church and a successful colonial planter, and his only surviving son Ebenezer, an imaginative and prosperous planter himself.

After a brief but informative introduction by Dr. Sarah McCulloh Lemmon, biographer of Charles Pettigrew and the last of a series of editors who have worked on the papers, the records begin with wills dated 1685 and 1753; then follows the late eighteenth-century correspondence, which comprises the first section of the Papers. The records tell the story of an educated Philadelphian who came to eastern North Carolina and with devotion to the church and to his own business affairs rose quickly to a place of prominence in the Edenton area. The death of Charles Pettigrew's first wife, his remarriage, and the establishment of an estate on the southern part of the Albemarle Sound are recounted in a series of letters that includes a wealth of materials for the social historian. Matters relating to colonial religion, health and medicine, plantation management, travel, and postal customs emerge from the letters as does the story of strong men and women wrestling the best life possible in a difficult land.

The after-effects of the American Revolution reflected in the Papers include a movement toward internal improvements (including canal building), the problems encountered as the Anglican Church became the Protestant Episcopal Church, the political struggles of the new nation—with the Pettigrews predictably Federalist—and the flourishing of educational institutions. The Pettigrew sons went to the newly founded University of North Carolina, where the father's concern for his sons' morals was reinforced by their reports of life in Chapel Hill in the 1790s. "Cursing & swearing is carried on here to the greatest perfection" with the students preferring Thomas Paine's deistic Age of Reason "to all the books that were ever wrote since the creation of the World." Other impediments to learning included a dancing school, six or more boys to a room, a scarcity of books and beds, poor food, and "innumerable" chinchies.

Pettigrew shortly withdrew his sons from the university only to have his oldest son die, perhaps of one of the innumerable fever epidemics that regularly swept the region. Ebenezer then joined his father on his increased holdings in Tyrrel County south of the Albemarle Sound, and they engaged in the growing of rice and wheat. Ebenezer applied himself to correspondence with his friends and the development of machinery and buildings to handle the culture and harvest of the plantation products. Ebenezer's marriage to his cousin provided him with an opportunity to build a large new home and furnish it with the best that could be provided by his New York factor. His correspondence with his wife, who spent the winters with her family in New Bern, shows him to be a kindly master, husband, and father. His devotion to his lands and his family frequently tore him emotionally between his desires to have his loved ones with him and his concern for their health and isolation at his home near Lake Phelps.

Above all, the excellently edited and indexed Pettigrew Papers reveal the difficulties that had to be surmounted by even the most prosperous Americans of the early national period. In addition to the intimate details of life in the Albemarle Sound region, student life at the early University of North Carolina and at Princeton is related in the letters of children, relatives, and friends. Views are provided of Haiti, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Norfolk. The difficulties of transacting business at long distance, with poor mail service, no dependable way to transmit money or goods, and inordinate time consumed by even the most simple of transactions, make one marvel at the determination and abilities of the Pettigrews and of those like them who not only survived but prospered. Volume 1 ends in December 1818, significantly, with the purchase of a slave. Succeeding volumes from the North Carolina Department of Archives and History (which, incidentally, has provided this monumental volume for "the actual cost of printing only") should provide further valuable insight into the Pettigrew family and the region, state, and nation in which they lived.

J. EDWIN HENDRICKS

Wake Forest University

DOUGLAS SLOAN. The Scottish Enlightenment and the American College Ideal. (Teachers College Studies in Education.) [New York:] Teachers College Press, Teachers College, Columbia University. 1971. Pp. xi, 298. $10.00.

In this mistitled collection of seven essays Douglas Sloan has limited himself to the "thoughts and careers of representative individual educators who were related to the [Presbyterian] academy and early Princeton traditions" instead of appraising the "full impact of Scotland upon the American college." His book is the weaker for it, since most of his subjects are well known (as his excellent bibliographical essay shows), and his presentation of them is seriously flawed.

The basic problem is that he has tried to demonstrate that eighteenth-century American higher education was influenced by the universities of Scotland and the ideas of Scottish intellectuals—a proposition whose meaning is far from clear (if not nebulous) and the logical conditions for proving which are exacting (if not impossible). (See Quentin Skinner, "The Limits of Historical Explanation," Philosophy, 58 [July 1966]: 199–215.) Mr. Sloan has neither clarified the one nor satisfied the other, and accordingly his text is fraught with "maybe," "probably," and "seems to have been." When evidence for the influence of or upon his subject peters out, he retreats to lists of the man's former students, who in later life "seem to have" borne the intellectual characteristics chosen as "representative." Because of the slippery nature of what he is trying to prove, he is effectively forced to accept any and all suggestions of connection between his subjects to such an extent that he never dismisses or discounts evidence even after warning of its possible bias or weakness. In short, the author would have been well advised to heed Hume's warning that mere contiguity in time and space (or similarity) is not sufficient evidence of cause and effect (or "influence").

The book is further marred by an egregious Whiggism. According to Mr. Sloan the Scottish universities were consistently "modern" and "progressive"—which is usually equated with "public service," "utilitarianism," or "reform"—and this in spite of three "watershed" reforms that were never executed. Mr. Sloan seems to have written from the liberal-progressive belief that the burden of proof for change is on conservatives, not reformers, a position that is least valid in education whose very responsibility is the preservation of social ideals.

JAMES AXTELL
Yale University

ROBERT ZEMSKY. Merchants, Farmers, and River Gods: An Essay on Eighteenth-Century American Politics. Boston: Gambit. 1971. Pp. xiii, 361. $10.00.

A blend of political history and historical political science, this book discusses Massachusetts politics between 1730 and 1755, using an analysis of legislative decision making as a focal point. Zemsky finds that by comparison with its modern counterparts the Massachusetts Assembly's organization was primitive, with no standing committees, no seniority system, few rules, and debates that actually influenced how members voted. Decision making in this body was orderly not because it was institutionalized, but because the committees that drafted legislation and the debates preceding enactment were dominated by a stable group of leaders—distinguished by social status rather than legislative experience and by the related ability to acquire the contacts, the calculated mode of behavior, the understanding of patronage politics, and the pragmatic approach that united professional politicians. Potential leaders, usually men from distinguished families, representatives of coastal towns, or graduates of colonial colleges, emerged upon first appearance in the house, while others, once identified as back-benchers, remained without substantial power throughout their legislative careers.

Such a system worked because the central government concerned itself with defense, justice, taxation, currency manipulation, and little else. The agrarian majority in Massachusetts tolerated the political dominance and officeholding monopoly of upper-class leaders in return for a narrowly defined public policy that served its interests. Although deference to social status influenced electoral behavior as well as legislative leadership, politics remained responsive because professional politicians recognized the limits of deference and took popular positions on sensitive issues in order to preserve their autonomy on other measures. By analyzing the relationships among legislators in the house and between legislators and their constituencies this study adds much to our understanding of colonial political processes.

Zemsky is penetrating as a historical political scientist, but he is less successful at more traditional political history. His interpretations are conventional, rely heavily on standard sources, and, moreover, are flawed with minor errors. Many of the book's weaknesses, however, stem from a major organizational problem. Like many historians who use extensive quantitative sources, the author felt constrained to restrict his presentation of statistical evidence in the interest of historical artistry and has relegated the numbers to an appendix. This decision is counterproductive because statistical analyses provide the most original and suggestive material in the study and the most concise means of supporting major interpretations. A series of biographical sketches provides a partial substitute for the absent quantitative evidence, but they are lengthy, repetitious, and digressive, creating an impression of padding. In marked contrast, the statistical appendix is clear and forceful. Historians should profit from Zemsky's conclusions about political behavior and his methodological discussions, but it is hoped that they will avoid his method of presentation.

EDWARD M. COOK, JR.
University of Chicago

RICHARD HOFSTADTER. America at 1750: A Social Portrait. New York: Alfred A. Knopf. 1971. Pp. xvi, 293, xiii. $6.95.

This book was not complete when Richard Hofstadter died in October 1970. What appears under the title America at 1750 is in fact an unfinished section of a volume intended to be the first of three on the history of the United States from around 1750 to the recent past. In a prospectus written for his publisher Hofstadter explained that each volume would run to around 500,000 words and would cover a period of around seventy-five years. The decision to publish this fragment, apparently made after Hofstadter's death, was sound, for although the work is incomplete it has unity, and it has what one would expect of its author—fresh insights and literary grace.

In substance the book is a social history of the thirteen continental colonies at 1750: there are chapters on population and immigration, white servitude, the slave trade, black slavery, the middle class, the churches, the Great Awakening, and the effect of the Awakening on the churches and the larger society. These are all familiar subjects in the social history of early America, and much of what is said about them is also familiar. For example, in his discussion of the colonial population, Hofstadter emphasized the connection of immigration to economic growth. In his description of the organization of the slave trade he repeated Philip Curtin's findings that in the long history of the trade the territory of the United States received slightly less than five per cent of all slaves brought to the New World. And, to give one other example of familiar material in the book, the discussion of the Great Awakening makes a good deal of lay-clerical conflict, itineracy, and the separation of churches under revivalistic strains.

Yet, the book has its own freshness, in part because of Hofstadter's conception of social history. There is throughout the book a clear, though largely unstated, concern for social psychology. The social history that the book tells is the history of attitudes, feelings, values, and the psychology of groups as much as it is the description of the "objective" conditions of society, such as numbers of immigrants, rates of economic growth, amounts of property held, and class organization. Consider, for example, the long-standing assumption of colonial historians that middle-class values pervaded all classes of white society. Hofstadter accepted that assumption—both upper and lower classes looked to the middle, he wrote, because the middle class was large, assertive, and energetic. If this is one of the "facts" of social history Hofstadter's insight into the way the upper class was recruited from the middle, which carried its bourgeois standards upward, is important and suggestive.

The emphasis on church history as a means of revealing social development is also interesting. The methods of analysis in the book are not new here—much of the recent writing on churches and revivalism is replete with a sense of the connections between religion and politics and the coming of the American Revolution. And indeed, Hofstadter in the last three chapters of America at 1750 resorted to biographical and narrative techniques that are reminiscent of those in his The American Political Tradition (1948). There are, for example, shrewd assessments of the revivalists—the portraits of Jonathan Edwards and Gilbert Tennent are vivid, and the accounts of George Whitefield and James Davenport are remarkably sensitive and gentle.

In these vignettes, and in the narrative, the book provides a valuable analysis of the effects of the Awakening on society and in particular the meaning of the event for civic life. Here Hofstadter looked forward to the American Revolution. What he wrote was fragmentary, but provocative in the best sense. One hopes that other scholars will follow his lead, amplifying and perhaps qualifying his insights. In the process the full value of America at 1750 should become obvious.

ROBERT MIDDLEKAUFF
University of California,
Berkeley

RICHARD BAUMAN. For the Reputation of Truth: Politics, Religion, and Conflict among the Pennsylvania Quakers, 1750-1800. Baltimore: Johns Hopkins Press. 1971. Pp. xviii, 258. $10.00.

Richard Bauman is the most recent in a long line of historians and sociologists who have sought to understand what happens when a group of people who have foresworn worldly involvement, power, and material gain—in this case the Quakers of Pennsylvania—are obliged to assume power, employ it, and reconcile its uses with their religious ideology. By studying the leaders of Quaker society in eighteenth-century Pennsylvania Bauman is able to define three types of behavioral response “among the politically relevant Quakers”: (1) the “politicians,” who embraced the world, enthusiastically engaged in politics, and accommodated their religious principles accordingly; (2) the “reformers,” who called for a withdrawal from politics and worldly affairs and a return to the inward-looking, self-abnegating life of the First Publishers of the Truth; and (3) the “politiques,” who sought the via media, hoping to maintain the faith of the founders by using political power to convert the surrounding society to the Quaker ideal. Bauman follows two generations of historians in arguing that for the first half of the eighteenth century Quaker leaders in Pennsylvania mastered the world of business and politics and accommodated their religious views to this worldly success, but that in the second half of the century, with the pressure of war and internal dissension increasing, the “reformers” began to dominate the Quaker leadership and brought a revitalization of the movement through their re-emphasis of the doctrine of meekness and social service rather than the exercise of political power. Others—such as Rufus Jones, Frederick Tolles, and Sydney James—have been at pains to point this out for many years. Bauman’s contribution consists in clarifying the different responses of Quaker leaders to the time of troubles after 1750, in re-emphasizing that the reformers who counseled a withdrawal from politics were still acting politically since they too were bent on influencing the “setting and pursuit of public goals,” and in reminding us that, as Quakers struggled during and after the American Revolution to find an outlet for their political energies that would not conflict with their religious testimony, they discovered a commitment to the oppressed and disinherited members of their society that has ever since given them an influence in moral stewardship out of all proportion to their numbers.

The author’s attempt to use anthropological theory to explain the several reactions of Quaker leaders to political responsibilities is not especially fruitful. Interdisciplinary analysis requires more than the frequent use of terms such as “role strain,” “processual analysis,” and “adaptations of belief systems”; and in the end this work gains little by reference to the work of political anthropologists. Historians have long known what Friends themselves so clearly expressed—that for Quakers it was extraordinarily difficult in the strife-filled second half of the eighteenth century to exercise political power while remaining true to the original religious commitment of the Society of Friends.

GARY B. NASH
University of California,
Los Angeles

THOMAS FLEMING. The Man Who Dared the Lightning: A New Look at Benjamin Franklin. New York: William Morrow and Company. 1971. Pp. x, 532. $12.50.

In the early 1960s Thomas Fleming’s Now We Are Enemies came to my attention; a treatment of the battle of Bunker and Breed’s Hills. It was evident that the author had the ability to write attractively and to hold his readers’ attention. In The Man Who Dared the Lightning Fleming gives further indication of his talents as a historical popularizer. Both a novelist and historical interpreter, Fleming has not bound himself by some of the rules of writing and documentation followed by others. On the first page of the text, for example, he sets the tone by describing what happens in all thunderstorms as if he were observing the particular squall during which Franklin performed his electrical experiment with the kite. “From bright June sunshine, the sky above hot, muggy Philadelphia began changing to a sour gloomy gray. . . . Windows slammed, tradesmen shut doors . . . , mothers hastily called children indoors, and idlers vanished from street corners.” As the storm broke, “Franklin asked if everything was ready. William nodded” (p. 3). Or (p. 53), “and then with a small shrewd smile [Franklin] noted. . . .” These points are obviously incapable of documentation, but Fleming uses such devices with surprising effect. Beyond cavi, Fleming’s story is the best written of the many available Franklin books. His novelistic style gives a good mixture of interest, lightness, humor, and serious, well-documented reporting. Fleming is aware of both recent and older treatments of Franklin's career and uses them well. Fleming occasionally relies on inadequate materials; his coverage of Pennsylvania politics would have been vastly improved by using William S. Hanna, Benjamin Franklin and Pennsylvania Politics (1964) rather than the source listed in Fleming's bibliography.

There are a few minor errors, as where Fleming refers (p. 14) to Paxton and Donegal "townships" in Pennsylvania. According to James Hutson, a former assistant editor of the Franklin Papers, they were not "townships" but counties. One finds an occasional questionable emphasis, as when Fleming indicates that by the time of the Declaration of Independence, Franklin had turned his back on "founding a Western colony" (p. 329). Then later Fleming tells us that Franklin continued his speculative interests well into the war years, and the records indicate that as late as 1788, in a letter to Charles Thomson, Franklin still sought a western tract.

Since it appeared, Carl Van Doren's Benjamin Franklin (1964) has been the standard, broad treatment. Less encyclopedic by design, Fleming's study omits much of Franklin's early life and lays less stress on his subject's multifaceted interests, which Van Doren was at such pains to cover thoroughly. Save in a few areas, The Man Who Dared the Lightning may now well supersede Van Doren's work as the most widely used biography of Franklin's career.

CECIL B. CURREY
University of South Florida

this disappointing volume were not able to devote as much time to the editing of the work as they did to its compilation, for the former does not match the latter. The introduction is too brief to be satisfactory, and it contains inconsistencies that could have been resolved as well as a glaring typographical error on page xvii that certainly should have been caught and corrected. A seventeen-page section of identifications of persons and places at the end of the book is some help. In the absence of a substantial narrative and analytical introduction, this publication might at least have been the occasion for a comprehensive bibliography of the North Carolina Regulator movement but instead only a very inadequate two-page section on sources is offered. Fortunately, there is an index. All in all, though, this work is an inferior piece of scholarly editing. But why should this be so when both the publisher and the editors, who are well qualified for the task, are capable of much better? The answer—undue haste—is revealed in the foreword. The volume was rushed through to completion in less than a year and a half in order to be published "to coincide with the observance of the two-hundredth anniversary of the Battle of Alamance" (May 16, 1771), the climactic event of the Regulator movement. The objective is a laudable one, but Alamance and the Regulator movement as a whole would have been better memorialized by delaying publication beyond the anniversary in order to produce a scholarly work worthy of the importance of the historical event.

RICHARD MAXWELL BROWN
College of William and Mary

WILLIAM S. POWELL et al., editors. The Regulators in North Carolina: A Documentary History, 1759-1776. Raleigh: State Department of Archives and History. 1971. Pp. xxxix, 626. $12.50.

The chief virtue of this bulky volume is that it brings together for convenient reference in one book many significant documents on the North Carolina Regulator movement that were hitherto accessible in various volumes of The Colonial Records of North Carolina (1886-90), in the British Public Record Office, and elsewhere. It is unfortunate that the compilers of LOUIS DE VORSEY, JR., edited and with an introduction by. De Brahm's Report of the General Survey in the Southern District of North America. (Tricentennial Edition, Number 3.) Columbia: University of South Carolina Press for the South Carolina Tricentennial Commission. 1971. Pp. xvi, 325. $12.95.

This is a splendid work: a little-known report by a remarkable cartographer and observer, edited with scholarly depth and sensitivity and printed in a handsome and sturdy form. The author of the report, William Gérard De Brahm, was a German immigrant who became surveyor-general of South Carolina, Georgia, and finally, following the Peace of Paris in 1763, surveyor-general for the entire Southern District of North America. He was erudite to the point of pedantry, self-assured to the point of arrogance. He quarreled with colonial governors over his authority; he built forts in the wilderness and fortifications in the cities; he proposed grandiose engineering works that would have bankrupted the tiny English colonies. Nevertheless, he was a superior man who deserved the confidence placed in him by King George III. His contributions are several. He was, as one expert has put it, "the first strictly scientific cartographical expert to practice his art in the Carolinas." His maps, plans, and surveys of the little-known region of Florida acquired by the English Crown in 1763 provided the detailed knowledge necessary for intelligent planning for the area by the English government. Second, De Brahm's description of the natural history of the region and the potential uses to which its resources could be put were a needed corrective to the harsh and unscientific judgments of previous observers. One wonders today at the inability of early travelers in Florida (and in the Southwest, for that matter) to see through the least attractive features of these areas to their potential values. De Brahm was one of those able to look beyond the barren sandy beaches and swarming mosquitoes to the rich storehouse that Florida was. Yet even De Brahm concluded that "I cannot expect my eight years Experience on sandy Soil should be sufficient to out-do the . . . many thousand years entertained Notion" against such a soil. Third, De Brahm was an acute observer of Indian life and not only wrote perceptive comments about the Indians of the Southeast but included a "Compendium of the Cherokee Tongue in English." His surveys of South Carolina, Georgia, and East Florida published here omit only his "Ephemeris" or daily record of weather conditions during certain years, and certain mathematical computations and tables. Twenty-nine maps and sketches demonstrate his skill as a draftsman and cartographer. A solid fifty-seven-page introduction, based on exhaustively mined manuscript sources in England and America, makes the book not merely an edited document but an account of De Brahm in America. However unlike his fellow Americans, whether for his specialized calling or even for his mystical writings, De Brahm's story is a fascinating one never before told in such detail. De Vorsey has himself realized his modestly stated hope that the book will lead to a fuller discovery and appreciation of De Brahm's career in America.

WILCOMB E. WASHBURN
Smithsonian Institution

DAVID JOHN JEREMY, editor. Henry Wansey and His American Journal, 1794. (Memoirs of the American Philosophical Society, Volume 82.) Philadelphia: the Society. 1970. Pp. xvii, 186. $7.00.

Progressive Wiltshire clothier, rational Dissenter, Whig, antiquarian, and avid traveler, Henry Wansey was, as a friend said, "always on the fidget." He made the most of a two-month visit to the United States in the summer of 1794, reading about the country beforehand, posing questions to answer, and keeping a careful diary as he traveled from Halifax to Philadelphia. His powers of observation were aided by a fair and open mind. His findings, in the form of an unpolished diary, were published in 1796, followed by a second edition in 1798.

Wansey's business interests prompted his trip, and the principal value of his Journal lies in its description of the American textile industry. He concluded about Americans that, "with all their improvements, they must yet for a long time come to John Bull for his cloth, for at least half a century to come." The Journal also includes information and commentary on, among other things, ocean travel, the American landscape, commodity and land prices, pronunciation, climate, public figures, and prospects for the country.

Although often cited, the Journal was not reprinted until David Jeremy, curator of the Merrimack Valley Textile Museum, produced this incontestably definitive edition. The lengthy introduction acquaints the reader thoroughly with the man through whose eyes he sees the country. The editor has endeavored, with considerable success, to trace every reference in the text. His footnotes correct, explain, and amplify, sometimes unnecessarily. The text, containing perhaps 60,000 words, appears crowded out by the footnotes. There are also maps, illustrations, a genealogy, bibliography, and index. The reader may feel he has to fight his way through all these aids to find the Journal. Nonetheless, by his exhaustive efforts, Mr. Jeremy, with the American Philosophical Society, has made this valuable account not only available, but presented it in a form immensely more useful than the original edition.

JOHN BORDEN ARMSTRONG
Boston University

PETER P. HILL. William Vans Murray, Federalist Diplomat: The Shaping of Peace with France, 1797-1801. [Syracuse:] Syracuse University Press. 1971. Pp. ix, 241. $8.50.

This book serves a dual purpose: it provides the first biographical study of William Vans Murray, a Federalist congressman and diplomat from Maryland's Eastern Shore, and a re-examination of the politics and diplomacy of the Quasi-War with France. Murray, who left insufficient material for a full-scale biography, played an important role in President John Adams's search for an honorable reconciliation with France. Peter P. Hill has used Murray's career as a vehicle for an account of that search.

As the American minister to the Netherlands, Murray became the key figure in the secret diplomacy that gave Adams the assurances he required before he would send his second diplomatic mission to Paris, this time to negotiate successfully an end to hostilities that had erupted into undeclared naval war after the XYZ Affair. Murray also served effectively as a member of the three-man commission that made the peace convention with the new French government of Napoleon Bonaparte and, alone, ably represented his country in the difficult exchange of ratifications at Paris before his recall by President Jefferson in 1801.

In a volume published in 1966 Alexander DeConde considered the politics and diplomacy of the Quasi-War, including Murray's role. Although Hill's work does not supplant DeConde's more extensive study of that subject, it is a useful supplement. By Hill's careful examination of Adams's motives and conduct, in which Hill draws upon Stephen G. Kurtz's observations about naval preparedness as an adjunct to Adams's diplomacy, the author adds convincing touches to DeConde's portrayal of the president. By Hill's analysis of Murray's life and career, including his association with the Adams family, before President Washington appointed him minister to The Hague in 1797, Hill also helps to explain why Adams had such confidence in Murray as an agent of his policy of peace. In sum, in his biographical treatment of Murray, Hill has furnished a well-researched and well-written case study of one of those "Adams Federalists," as Manning J. Dauer called them, upon whom the president relied as he doggedly pursued his "middle course" amid partisan passions that could have driven him to the side of Britain or of France.

ARTHUR A. RICHMOND III
U.S. Naval Academy

HASKELL M. MONROE, JR. and JAMES T. MCINTOSH, editors. The Papers of Jefferson Davis. Volume 1, 1808-1840. (Supported by the William Stamps Farish Fund. Sponsored by William Marsh Rice University and the Jefferson Davis Association.) Baton Rouge: Louisiana State University Press. 1971. Pp. xvi, 594. $15.00.

To students of the Civil War era, few of the major editorial enterprises now under way are of as much interest as the papers of Jefferson Davis. Hitherto the only comprehensive edition of the works of the Confederate president has been Jefferson Davis: Constitutionalist, the ten-volume compilation edited by Dunbar Rowland in 1923. Though still valuable, Rowland's work does not measure up to modern standards of historical editing, and since its publication large numbers of new Davis letters have been discovered, notably those edited by Hudson Strode in Jefferson Davis: Intimate Letters (1966). Increasingly, historians have felt the need for a complete, accurate compilation that will permit them to study the complex mind and the troubled heart of one of the most puzzling figures in American history.

The publication of the first volume of The Papers of Jefferson Davis gives reason to hope that the need will be met. Though it covers only the thinly documented period of Davis's childhood, his education at Transylvania and West Point, his military experiences in the West, his tragic first marriage, and his resignation from the army, this installment of what is projected as a twenty to twenty-five volume series includes hundreds of hitherto unpublished Davis documents. Just how this new material will affect interpretations of Davis's career is not easy to predict. The hortatory introductory remarks in this volume by Bruce Catton and Frank E. Vandiver make no attempt to evaluate the documents; and the editors, Haskell M. Monroe, Jr. and James T. McIntosh, have limited themselves to a brief discussion of technical problems of editorial method.

Even without a proper introduction, the documents themselves call for rethinking of problems in Davis's early career. Why was this Mississippi youth at the age of nine sent away to a Catholic school in Kentucky "without my mother's knowledge or consent"? Why did this boy, educated in the North at the nation's expense, so early espouse Southern and sectional sentiments? As a student at West Point he spoke scornfully of "the Yankee part of the corps," who were not "such associates as I would at present select." During the Nullification crisis he was prepared to resign his army commission "rather than be employed in the subjugation or coercion of a State of the Union." How much of Davis's success or failure as Confederate president was determined by the friends and enemies he made as a young officer in the West? As early as 1835 he became strongly attached to Lucius B. Northrop, whom Davis praised as "a very active and Efficient Officer"; thirty years later he was still trying to defend the incompetent Northrop, whom he had insisted upon naming commissary-general of the Confederacy.

If the documents in this first volume illuminate important facets of Davis's personality, the elaborate editorial apparatus that accompanies them resolves a number of disputed questions about Davis's early life. For instance, the editors seem to have settled the long controversy about the date of Davis's birth, which the Confederate president himself remembered incorrectly. Similarly they establish that, contrary to popular tradition, it was "most unlikely" that Davis had any part in the fighting during the Black Hawk War. In a courteous, unobtrusive way they have corrected dozens of errors, large and small, in the previously published versions of Davis's letters. Giving the source of each document reproduced, they have wherever possible identified every person, place, and incident mentioned. A full chronology of Davis's early life and an elaborate Davis genealogy prepared by Kirk Bentley Barb add to the usefulness of this volume.

Just because this first installment of Davis's papers is so valuable, one could wish that it were more so. Unfortunately most of the 535 documents here reproduced with such loving care have not the slightest biographical or historical significance. Hundreds of the entries consist of monthly reports on the conduct of West Point cadets, of post returns from all the forts where Davis was stationed, of pay vouchers and registers of payments to officers, and of other similar, formal documents that should, at most, have been calendared. Most of the letters addressed to Davis in this volume deserve the same treatment; they consist largely of routine acknowledgments of correspondence by war department officials. Indeed, it would probably have been advisable to calendar most of the eighty letters by Davis himself, about two-thirds of which are brief routine notes transacting army business. It is hard to see how any future historian or biographer will ever need such documents as Davis's letter to William B. Lewis, dated September 27, 1833, which reads in full: "Herewith I have the honor to transmit to you an account current with vouchers covering the amount of funds acknowledged to be the U. States in my last recruitg. account."

The editorial apparatus attached to these letters is also unnecessarily burdensome. Of course it is useful to have every person mentioned in these pages identified, but is it necessary to have a four-hundred-word biographical sketch of Winfield Scott or a two-hundred-word précis of Martin Van Buren's career? The editors of The Papers of Jefferson Davis surely do not need to summarize the Dictionary of American Biography. Full identification of minor and obscure persons is more defensible, but too often Monroe and McIntosh are excessively detailed. For instance, the Indian trader Peter Pauquette, incidentally mentioned only once in this volume, rates a three-hundred-word footnote, bolstered by the citation of no fewer than nine sources.

Furthermore, the pages of this volume are cluttered by excessive notes. Not content with identifying each person when he is first mentioned, Monroe and McIntosh drop a footnote referring back to this biographical sketch when the same name appears in any subsequent document. Thus Peter Hagner, the third auditor of the treasury who acknowledged many of Davis's reports as quartermaster, is identified in footnotes no fewer than twenty-two times. Since this volume has an admirably complete and accurate index, there is no reason for such a superfluity of cross-references.

Behind these criticisms lies a sense of urgency on the part of the practicing historian, who sees all too many of our major editorial enterprises bogged down in trivia and enmeshed in technicalities. If publication of scholarly editions of the papers of notable Americans is to be completed within the lifetime of any subscriber to this issue of the American Historical Review, the editors must begin to move with greater speed and with greater selectivity.

DAVID HERBERT DONALD
Johns Hopkins University

MICHAEL P. CONZEN. Frontier Farming in an Urban Shadow: The Influence of Madison's Proximity on the Agricultural Development of Blooming Grove, Wisconsin. (Logmark Editions.) Madison: State Historical Society of Wisconsin for the Department of History, University of Wisconsin. 1971. Pp. xviii, 235. $10.00.

Blooming Grove, Wisconsin, is the township immediately east of Madison, and this book assesses certain aspects of the township's agricultural history between 1835 and 1880. As the title indicates, the author investigates the growing impact of the capital city on the farming township. He does so through a quantitative analysis of major economic factors from the time the federal government first sold the land until the last manuscript census was available. He considers such problems as land ownership and use, the types of people who settled and stayed on the land, the size and value of farms, kinds of production, and marketing. Not surprisingly Conzen finds that Madison consistently exerted significant influence on Blooming Grove.

The book reflects meticulous research, with numerous maps, tables, and graphs amplifying the text. Throughout the book the author's research design dominates the material, and the mechanics of presentation protrude unnecessarily. There is no question that the study proves its points. It tests various theses related to the data and makes appropriate comparisons with agricultural developments in neighboring areas. In this way it makes a contribution in establishing the particularities of economic growth in a limited region. Against such concrete information further comparisons may be made.

My reservations about the book are two. The author assumes that the reader is completely familiar with the extensive technical jargon associated with Conzen's quantitative approach to historical analysis, and he does not bother to make logical explanations where they are needed. For instance, only on the next-to-last page does he explain "cohort analysis," a model he uses frequently in the book. More fundamental is the fact that for all the specificity of data and scientific treatment of economic development, the reader comes away with scant sense of the human beings who labored the earth of Blooming Grove. The study has scientific sterility, to be sure, but it evokes too little of the past.

WALTER RUNDELL, JR.
University of Maryland

ERLING A. ERICKSON. Banking in Frontier Iowa, 1836-1865. Ames: Iowa State University Press. 1971. Pp. x, 183.

For almost three decades the people of Iowa struggled to create a safe banking system, defined by the author as "a sound paper currency." From the beginning of white settlement the attitude prevailed that credit was bad for farmers and honest men in general; banks, the agencies of credit, should not be tolerated. Four recognizably distinct periods with differing systems followed, including a period of eleven years in which all "banks of issue" were prohibited. The soundest paper currency was obtained after the establishment of the national bank system in 1863. Failure of earlier systems and the necessity for change resulted largely from the increasing complexity of the Iowa economy, a widespread demand for more rapid development, and the growth of a national rather than local market for both agricultural produce and purchased commodities.

In a detailed, clearly organized, and well-written monograph Erickson presents the story in six chapters, followed by a brief, well-considered "overview" in which he relates the changes to state party politics: "Old school" Democrats (by one of the paradoxes of American historical vocabulary they are the "radicals") opposed all banks; Whigs favored an elastic currency regulated by a national bank; conservative Democrats stood between them. His general approach and conclusions are for the most part in line with the work of Bray Hammond rather than A. M. Schlesinger, Jr. and other pro-Jackson historians.

The study is based on extensive research in published sources and secondary works and an astonishing amount of manuscript material. The author suggests that his generalizations "are probably true for a number of other frontier states." This may well be so, but the scene is far different from that shown, for example, by William H. Brantley for frontier Alabama. The genre of state banking history, although well established and perhaps somewhat rigid, is far from exhausted. Interesting illustrations, excellent footnotes, a series of appendixes, a bibliography of over three hundred items, and a dependable index complete this valuable work.

HARRY R. STEVENS
Ohio University

DONALD JACKSON and MARY LEE SPENCE, editors. The Expeditions of John Charles Frémont. Volume 1, Travels from 1838 to 1844, and map portfolio. Urbana: University of Illinois Press. 1970. Pp. xlv, 854; map portfolio, pp. 16, 5 maps. $22.50 the set; map portfolio only, $10.00.

Anyone who ever read an American history textbook should be remotely familiar with the glamorous John Charles Frémont, and most of those who have gone beyond the survey level can appreciate his contributions as an explorer and map maker at a time when thousands of migrants, promoters, and politicians were hungry for information about the West. With the possible exception of the president of the United States, few Americans were better known in the early 1840s. But like most men dramatically elevated to the status of a hero Frémont turned out to be a mere mortal with feet of clay. His rise to fame following the 1842 expedition to South Pass and the one a year later to Oregon and California was meteoric, but almost everything attempted after 1847 in the fields of finance, exploration, politics, and military leadership seemed to end in disappointment, failure, or outright disaster.

The first of the projected three volumes of Frémont's expeditions probably will not make the best-seller list, but any collection of Western Americana will be incomplete without this very attractive publication. Even more handsome is the accompanying Portfolio, which contains the famous 1843 map by Joseph N. Nicollet of the hydrographical basin of the upper Missouri. The most significant of the remaining four facsimile reproductions is the Frémont map of 1845. This detailed work was compiled with the help of Charles Pruess and soon became the base for subsequent explorers to expand the boundaries of cartographic knowledge of the Far West.

Volume 1 in the current series presents a total of 137 thoroughly annotated documents, most of which are hitherto unpublished letters. Interspersed with these are extensive selections from Frémont's Memoirs, which only carry the story of his life to 1847 and his ill-fated appointment as governor of California by Commodore Robert F. Stockton. The principal events of his remaining forty-three years were faithfully chronicled by his adoring Jessie, but the sequel was never published. The well-written biographical essay included by the editors in the introduction to The Expeditions is disappointingly sketchy. For however Frémont's character was flawed by vanity, his monumental successes and failures have never made dull reading.

The various documents in the first volume reveal the explorer's wide range of scientific knowledge, and the carefully selected excerpts from the Memoirs are still fascinating to read. In comparison with the turgid style that characterized much exploration literature of the early nineteenth century Frémont's writing remains a model of clarity and smoothness. On the other hand, the many "tables of meteorological observations" are not nearly as exciting to read today as the New York City Telephone Directory. But to have excluded such valuable scientific information from this publication, especially after Frémont's long and painstaking efforts in collecting it, would have been a serious omission.

W. EUGENE HOLLON
University of Toledo

NANCY NICHOLS BARKER, translated and edited with an introduction by. The French Legation in Texas. Volume 1, Recognition, Rupture, and Reconciliation. With a foreword by JOHN CONNALLY. Austin: Texas State Historical Association. 1971. Pp. 357. $12.00.

In the spring of 1838 at the request of the Texas agent to Britain and France, James Pinckney Henderson, the French Foreign Ministry began consideration of the recognition of the Republic of Texas. In September a young clerk in the French embassy in Washington, known as Alphonse DuBois de Saligny, was instructed to make a tour of inspection in Texas. He arrived in February 1839 and left in May for Europe, recommending strongly that France grant recognition to Texas. A treaty of recognition was signed on September 25, 1839, and the following month Saligny was named chargé d'affaires in Texas. He reached Houston in January 1840 and took up the duties of France's representative in Texas, which he was to manage intermittently until the annexation of Texas to the United States.

This volume is a record of his correspondence from May 1838 to August 1842. A projected second volume will cover the remaining period. The source of the letter is the archives of the French Foreign Ministry: nine bound volumes of political correspondence and one of commercial correspondence. Dr. Nancy Barker, the editor of this work, undertook the no doubt agonizing task of translating these from microfilm copies. A specialist in French history, she is unusually well equipped to explain the European nuances and overtones in the correspondence, and she has done a creditable job of handling the Texas angles, although here and there a few relatively unimportant weaknesses can be found. The two-volume work, when finished, will contain approximately half of the total correspondence. The editor has selected letters and passages from letters that seemed to be the most significant and has included brief abstracts of the omitted portions.

An even greater contribution than her annotated translations, however, is her praiseworthy introduction, which traces the life of Saligny and puts him and the French legation in proper perspective. Until this work relatively little was known about the man who styled himself a count and stalked pompously on and off the stage of Texas history. Dr. Barker shows that he was born plain Jean Pierre Isidore Alphonse Dubois, that he was frequently untrustworthy, that he was something of a rascal, and that his letters and reports from Texas were unreliable.

It is this very lack of reliability that makes one wonder if this monumental work was really worth the doing. I would have much preferred to read a scholarly synthesis by Dr. Barker of Texas-French relations.

The whole effort to produce this and the volume to come appears to be some sort of special cause. The French ambassador personally presented the microfilm to the Austin Public Library; John Connally wrote a nice but needless forward; the volume is handsomely designed and beautifully printed and bound—at a production cost of probably twice the usual; and volume 1 was released with a grand fanfare but, naturally, without index or bibliography.

SEYMOUR V. CONNOR
Texas Tech University

HENRY B. COMSTOCK. The Iron Horse. New York: Thomas Y. Crowell Company. 1971. Pp. 228. $17.50.

A long century ago the sound of the locomotive whistle was one of the more exciting sounds in America. Not only were railroads then playing a vital role in our national development, but more specifically the steam locomotive was wooing youngsters from both farm and town toward a new-found interest in mechanics and the practical arts. The Iron Horse carries the history of the steam locomotive in our country from Colonel John Stevens's midget engine, built and run on his Hoboken, New Jersey, estate in 1825, to the 604-ton, 133-foot "Big Boy" built for the Union Pacific in the early months of World War II.

In the century and a third between the first American locomotives and the full acceptance of the diesel, about 180,000 steam locomotives were built in the United States. As the author traces the early history of railroad motive power he presents much new biographical material about such early engine builders as Peter Cooper, Horatio Allen, John B. Jervis, Isaac Dripps, Matthias W. Baldwin, Henry R. Campbell, William Norris, and Ross Winans. Well before the Civil War locomotive builders had solved the basic mechanical problems of steam locomotion and had added such functional accessories as oil headlights, sand domes, bells, whistles, and cabs. As the growing transportation needs of the nation demanded ever larger locomotives and the introduction of such features as new wheel arrangements, "three-cylinder compounds," and the articulated Mallet, most railroad mechanical departments still were insisting on their own individualistic whims in engine design. Only during the days of federal control in World War I was there any degree of standardization in locomotive design and construction. The basic decision of early diesel manufacturers to standardize their product no doubt hastened the acceptance of this new form of motive power in the mid-twentieth century.

Drawing upon his long experience as a technical illustrator the author has enriched his text with more than two hundred drawings and illustrations. Much of the rich anecdotal material Comstock has included has not previously appeared in the standard secondary histories of the industry. A ten-page glossary of terms is helpful, but the bibliography is very brief and does not even include the valuable 1968 work on locomotives by John H. White, Jr. But the faults in this volume are few. Even though primarily written for the railroad buff The Iron Horse can be a valuable volume for any student interested in the technical and industrial history of the United States.

JOHN F. STOVER
Purdue University

MORRIS F. TAYLOR. First Mail West: Stagecoach Lines on the Santa Fe Trail. Albuquerque: University of New Mexico Press. 1971. Pp. 253. $10.00.

The history of the Santa Fe Trail before the Mexican War has long been familiar through the work of the contemporary historian Josiah Gregg and that of subsequent writers who have drawn upon and supplemented his Commerce of the Prairies (1844). It is not generally realized, however, that the Santa Fe Trail continued to be of great importance until 1880 when the services of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad rendered passenger, freight, and mail service over the old trail obsolete and unprofitable. Professor Taylor has filled a definite gap in knowledge by providing a history of the thirty-year period from 1850 to 1880 during which the Santa Fe Trail continued to be a vital link in the transportation system of the far southwest.

The history of stagecoach and mail service in these years is presented with the easy authority of one who knows his subject as the author unfolds the story of Waldo, Hall and Company, Hockaday and Hall, Hall and Porter, the Santa Fe Stage Company, and finally, Barlow, Sanderson and Company. The material for the work has been gleaned from a great variety of scattered contemporary and primary sources and has been blended with skill to form a connected account.

Among the points made by the author the following may be of interest. In a sense, the Santa Fe Trail may be viewed as a continuation of the National Road. A large number of pioneer Jewish merchants participated in the trade. After William Bent abandoned it in 1849 Bent's Old Fort was for many years used as a stagecoach station.

A good map and a few interesting illustrations are provided. The index and bibliography are excellent. The University of New Mexico Press has furnished a handsome cover and jacket, and both printing and paper are of a quality that matches the research and narrative skill of the author.

HARVEY L. CARTER
Colorado College

H. CRAIG MINER. The St. Louis-San Francisco Transcontinental Railroad: The Thirty-fifth Parallel Project, 1853-1890. Lawrence: University Press of Kansas. 1972. Pp. viii, 236. $8.50.

The purpose of the St. Louis-San Francisco Railroad was to establish a snow-free route to the coast that would have an advantage over other railroads in tapping the vast commerce that was expected to develop between San Francisco and the Asian countries. The building of a railroad along the thirty-fifth parallel was a project that became involved in many financial, legal, and competitive problems. The project suffered from faulty administration, labor troubles, Indian disputes, and the disruption brought on by the Civil War. Although involved in many construction problems the Frisco eventually became a successful railroad and has become a good investment for the stockholders. The road had several changes in name—the Southwest Branch Railroad, the Southwest Pacific Railroad Company, the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad, the South Pacific Railroad Company, and the St. Louis and San Francisco Railway Company.

Writing the history of some railroads has been difficult because of a lack of records. Professor Miner, as a result of persistent research, found newspapers, government documents, diaries, and corporate records. Some of the material was located in old railroad warehouses and basement vaults of corporate office buildings. The book is illustrated with two maps and sixteen pictures of locomotives and persons connected with the railroad.

JOHN H. KRENKEL
Arizona State University

NORMAN E. TUTOROW. Leland Stanford: Man of Many Careers. Menlo Park, Calif.: Pacific Coast Publishers. 1971. Pp. xiii, 317. $9.95.

Leland Stanford, as the subtitle of this book suggests, had interests other than railroading. But it was in the business of transportation that he made his money; and, like many another nineteenth-century tycoon, he spent in a manner that both interested him and at the same time afforded him a claim either to philanthropy or the advancement of learning. These endeavors, in turn, earned for him sufficient prominence that his adopted State of California accorded him the traditional honor of a place in the U.S. Senate. There was even a brief "Stanford-for-President" boom as a final accolade.

In an effort to describe the usually neglected aspects of Stanford's career the author has compartmentalized Stanford's various enterprises, giving a good deal of attention to some of the lesser-known portions of it. For example, a chapter is devoted to the magnate's role as a country squire: he invested a great deal of money in horseflesh, developed some prizewinning trotters, and gained a name as a breeder of superior animals. In his efforts to learn more about the mechanics of trotting Stanford spent considerable money in setting up a battery of cameras designed to record each motion of a moving horse. As a result he contributed to what would later be the motion picture industry.

Another of the railroad prince's efforts was to capture the title of Wine King of California, and into that enterprise he poured money with a reckless abandon. Some nine million dollars later the gentleman farmer was forced to recognize that money could not buy everything; the quality of his wine fell short of the anticipated goal. He then turned to brandy and in turning it out at a rate of 1,400 gallons a day could claim title to the world's largest distiller of grape brandy.

As a very rich man Stanford followed the path of his nineteenth-century fellows, traveling abroad in search of culture, dabbling in politics, and building mansions befitting of his position, but in founding a university as a memorial to his lost son he gained a peg or two on the others, many of whose names are today relatively obscure. In reviewing his subject's career the author candidly admits that the man "hovered on the edge of greatness, but never quite made it." Agreed, but one has to admit that in spending his money Stanford did a better job than a great many of his contemporaries. And in telling us about it, Professor Tutorow has made a contribution.

ROBERT G. ATHEARN
University of Colorado

History of the Supreme Court of the United States. Volume 6, Reconstruction and Reunion, 1864-88. Part 1. By CHARLES FAIRMAN. (The Oliver Wendell Holmes Devise.) New York: Macmillan Company. 1971. Pp. xix, 1540. $30.00.

This book deserves, indeed requires, a category more than a review. In its 1,500-plus pages Professor Fairman has created the equivalents of a half-dozen ordinary monographs; a useful collective biography of Chief Justice Salmon P. Chase and his brethren; several legal treatises; a substantial documents-case source book blessed with rich headnotes; and, in the extensive footnoting, a treasury of bibliography, comment, criticism, lore, and wisdom. Yet this is only the first of two parts—i.e., volumes—allotted to Fairman for the Reconstruction period, in the eleven-volume Supreme Court history underwritten by the devise of the late Oliver Wendell Holmes, Jr.

I wish that Fairman had reached print a bit sooner. Literally on the day after I mailed off to a publisher my manuscript on Civil War and Reconstruction constitutional impacts, the review copy of Fairman's Reconstruction and Reunion came in. Available earlier, its information and judgments would have greatly eased my way.

This almost-immovable feast will guide and inform generations to come; any serious collection or library worth using will have a copy. Determined readers, blessed with good eyesight and sturdy bookrests, will exploit it as a standard by which to measure others' more modestly conceived efforts. Where else can one find appreciation of the 1867 Bankruptcy Act, or two hundred pages of minutely detailed coverage and analysis of mid-nineteenth-century municipal bond controversies, so long forgotten by other constitutionalists that our best present textbooks in that specialization ignore even the leading case, Gelpcke v. Dubuque (1863)? It is essential to understanding of Reconstruction alternatives to note, as Fairman has, that Lincoln's contemporaries were almost as vitally concerned about debt repudiations by Northern communities as about Southern state secessions and restorations; after Appomattox, more concerned. This duality of concerns was so deep among law men at least that the United States Supreme Court reporter saw fit especially to note in the preface to the 1863 Reports how, in holding Dubuque to payment, the national Court was preserving essential morality that Iowa had failed to nurture. As Reconstruction matters worked out, this tenacious dualism was to prevent Republicans from attending with full hearts and minds to Southern questions, as Dubuque-like Northern concerns gradually took precedence.

Similarly, it is basic to useful insights into the Supreme Court's Reconstruction history to understand legal-judicial procedures and the technicalities of pleadings, the mysterious science by which ostensibly workaday private interests and relationships became transformed through litigation into public law. Professor Fairman, the distinguished biographer of Justice Miller and the worthy contender against Justice Black on the question of whether the Fourteenth Amendment carried national Bill of Rights constraints against states, is one of the few scholars who could have coped with the task. His Reconstruction and Reunion is a monumental achievement.

But, the question persists, achievement in what? Constitutional history? If so, then Professor Fairman's definition of the field is the widest-ranging since 1902, when Francis Thorpe, asking "What is a Constitutional History of the United States?" (Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, 19 [1902]: 259-65), suggested that its sources included national and state constitutions, derivative statutes, legislative records, and, of course, the "mass of authoritative exposition by the courts." Untroubled by the mountains of printed data included in his free-swinging definition, Thorpe asserted that "the entire testimony bears back to principles of government, few in number and comprehensive in character." And, he concluded, "A constitutional history is the narrative of the apprehension and application of these principles by the American people" (p. 259).

Thorpe's fin-de-siècle confidence concerning basic constitutional principles failed to inspire derivative histories of those principles or of their primary expounder, the Supreme Court. During ensuing decades raiders from present-minded political science and law departments on campuses so transformed constitutional inquiries that by 1963 Professor Paul Murphy pleaded in this journal that it was "time to reclaim" the specialty for history and historians ("Time to Reclaim: The Current Challenge of American Constitutional History," 69 [1963-64]: 64-79).

Professor Fairman's Reconstruction volume will advance the ongoing reclamation if historians are not misled by its encyclopedic size and comprehensiveness into assuming that the book is constitutional history's final massive marker. Fairman labored to praise constitutional scholarship not to bury it, to augment understanding not to enlarge obsequies, and to loose constitutional history in Clio's many-roomed house not to constrain it.

In some instances Fairman's freedom to include great data masses enriched the whole. Publishing economics may make this the last time that an author, impressed with the passionate quality of scholarship on a point under consideration, felt free to employ, fairly casually, more than a dozen pages for quotations of pertinent contemporary newspaper comment (pp. 343-55). In many others less inclusiveness and far tighter editorial control would have greatly improved the book's quality and utility. In search of rich lodes, one must push through many pages of inappropriate impediments. As examples, Fairman includes descriptions of the Court's seating arrangements; the floor plan of its chambers, statuary, and other decorations; robing-room situation; and members' reading and work habits. The filing systems the Court clerk and marshal developed receive attention. One can defend the unstinted detail Fairman employed on the basis that technical legal procedures are often the heart of substantive constitutionalism, ignored only at peril. But procedure is not trivia.

Fairman's Reconstruction sins only in minor terms. Often provocative, insightful, and thoughtful, it marches generally in step with the impressive recent reconsiderations of men and measures of Republicans during the Reconstruction era, yet fails to analyze adequately the aspirations, alternatives, and achievements of the framers and ratifiers of the Thirteenth through Fifteenth Amendments and derivative legislation.

This being so, I wonder why, considering Fairman's policy (p. xix) deliberately to keep references sparse, he troubled to cite Bentley's defective Freedmen's Bureau study and failed to note Kutler's more useful inquiries into Court numbers, ex parte McCardle, and Reconstruction politics? That Justice Miller should have understood Negroes because he was a Kentuckian (p. 124) is a quaintly antique suggestion. In light of Fairman's sensitivity to the national Court's bootstrapping role concerning Iowa's remissness in failing to check Dubuque, I wonder at his flat reaction to the high judges' equally adventurous jurisdictional stand concerning Missouri's test oath constitutional requirement (pp. 244-45). I regret the curiously thin treatment Fairman gave to the Johnson impeachment (pp. 521-27); its constitutional and legal history rates far fuller attention. Fairman's decision was unwise to wait for pages 334-43 before offering lucid discussion of Reconstruction options and alternatives available in the 1860s to national policy makers in light of existing institutions, resources, and limitations—constitutional and otherwise. That sage analysis deserved front-of-the-book space.

But an imperial adventure deserves consideration on its terms not by a carper's tight horizons. I welcome, though I am troubled by, Fairman's Reconstruction and Reunion and wait eagerly its promised companion "part."

HAROLD M. HYMAN
Rice University

ROBERT HIGGS. The Transformation of the American Economy, 1865-1914. (The Wiley Series in American Economic History.) New York: John Wiley and Sons. 1971. Pp. xv, 143. $5.95.

In recent years economic historians, old and new, have improved in substantial ways our knowledge of the early nineteenth-century American economy. Most of this research has been guided by an interest in explaining the origins of rapid industrialization and of the growth of income that was one of the most attractive aspects of that complex historical process. When and why, scholars have repeatedly asked, did that process begin? So intent have they been on answering these questions that they have given little attention to later, equally important economic developments. As a result, we now know more about the workings of the economy in the twenty years before the Civil War than in the several decades that followed 1865. The appearance of Robert Higgs's study is therefore welcome, especially insofar as the volume is likely to arouse new interest in the modern American economy.

In this slim book the author gives us a series of discrete essays in search of a synthesis. After explaining his analytical framework, which is based on neoclassical economic theory (with a few special flourishes), Higgs attacks the problems of relating urbanization, health care, invention, and information exchange to the country's rapid growth. There is a brief digression on the antebellum years, a section in which the author seems to follow Stuart Bruchey's treatment of the importance of property rights without, curiously, mentioning Bruchey. Higgs also explores the increased productivity and multiplying problems of the farmer, and he concludes with an examination of America's unequal distribution of wealth and welfare.

The book is well written and is clearly intended for historians, not economists. Any reasonably intelligent reader will encounter no problems in following the author's analyses. Indeed much of the book is elementary and familiar; historians will not be too surprised when they read about the end of the frontier and the rise of the city in the years 1865-1914. More novel are the author's comments on the sources of increased productivity and the economic significance of improved health care and of new means of transmitting information. These are subjects that will doubtless receive considerable attention in the future, and Higgs will be responsible for the direction this research takes.

For the present, however, his treatment of these and other related problems is mildly disappointing. All too often the author follows an elaborate explanation of hypothetical consequences with an admission that the evidence needed to test his ideas does not exist. In other cases the available data seem to indicate that the most important effects fell outside of the book's time period. Instead of this kind of particularistic probing, what we obviously need is a synthesis—something comparable to Douglass North's volume on the period 1790-1860; but all that Higgs gives us is a theory grounded in the assumption that America had a relatively efficient market economy and that static theory therefore provides the best means of analyzing change. Having admitted that the market worked rather well, however, we still need to know what the major determinants and long-run consequences of economic growth were. Numerous scholars have suggested that some dramatic changes took place in the economy around the end of the nineteenth century. Unfortunately Higgs has not addressed himself to the questions they have raised, and we can only hope that his book will be followed by another that will apply the author's substantial talents to this more challenging task.

LOUIS GALAMBOS

Johns Hopkins University

SHERRY H. OLSON. The Depletion Myth: A History of Railroad Use of Timber. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press. 1971. Pp. xvi, 228. $9.00.

One hundred years ago and for many decades thereafter presumably knowledgeable persons predicted an imminent and inevitable "timber famine" in America. In one of her pungent sentences Mrs. Olson states that "the crisis never came to pass" (p. 2). The precise reasons why it did not come to pass have never been this clearly analyzed. The author, who teaches in the department of geography and environmental engineering at Johns Hopkins University, hews straight to the mark and clears away hoary misconceptions and confused thinking based on plain ignorance of the facts. She says of her analysis that "it differs critically from the classic fairy tale of American history and the traditional foresters' version of forest history" (p. 7). That it does.

Since the railroads once consumed from one-fifth to one-fourth of the nation's annual timber production, she presents data concerning railroad use of timber as a case history to show exactly what happened and why and how expert and popular opinions concerning timber depletion led to misdirected and costly public and private policies. She reviews the whole gamut of forest policy, sparing not even the revered Gifford Pinchot, whose advice concerning "good forestry" was too dogmatic and based on the European experience with silviculture and fire protection. Far more attention should have been given to wood utilization for, "Use alone can create value." Conservationists erred in confusing the growing of trees with the economic facts of supply and demand.

The incisive and valid conclusions reached are backed by impeccable analysis of abundant data, well documented. This diminutive but significant book contains eight illustrations, twenty-six figures (maps and graphs), and five tables. It offers a fresh approach to an important subject, and the findings can offer guidelines for anyone concerned with current problems of resource management, whether animal, vegetable, mineral, soil, or water. It is hoped that the book will become available in paperback form at a much reduced price.

FRED W. KOHLMAYER

Illinois State University

ALBRO MARTIN. Enterprise Denied: Origins of the Decline of American Railroads, 1897-1917. New York: Columbia University Press. 1971. Pp. xiv, 402. $10.95.

Professor Martin believes that the physical and financial demolition of the American railroad system was begun in the years 1906-17 by "archaic Progressives" who were in turn manipulated by organized labor and industrial and agricultural shippers. He does not mince words: "What I have to relate is a story of the most intense frustration of the human spirit; of the brutal substitution of petty consistency for a sensible pragmatism; of the unconscionable elevation, by the government of a republic, of one set of interests over another and over the general welfare; and of a self-serving and all but cowardly refusal to face public duty." His heroes are the frustrated managers of such roads as the Pennsylvania, the Illinois Central, and the Santa Fe; his devils are the misguided initiators and inept administrators of public policy during the Roosevelt, Taft, and Wilson administrations.

The thesis of this book is clearly stated: Following the reorganizations of the 1890s, the fundamental need of American railroads was for investment capital to enable them to rebuild and modernize. Among those roads that accounted for "most of the tonnage and passengers, if not the total route mileage," an "advanced technology and an amazingly vital railroad management stood fully ready." But after 1906 public policy became increasingly unresponsive to the needs of these strong, soundly managed roads in that it fomented high labor costs and refused to grant general rate increases. The result was that the flow of investment funds available to the railroads did not keep pace with demands placed upon them. This combination of a cost-price squeeze and a lag in new investment caused profits to disappear after 1911 and paved the way for the eventual collapse of the the system of private management of the railroads. In this scenario the Hepburn Act of 1906 and the Mann-Elkins Act of 1910 appear not as milestones in the government regulation of economic activity but as the gravestones of responsible private enterprise.

The proof of this thesis rests upon two quantitative estimates and a qualitative appraisal of the public policy options available at the time. Professor Martin begins with a comparison of the total annual output of freight and passenger services ("demands on the system") with the annual net new investment in railroads ("the absolute volume of national resources going to increase the capacity and efficiency of the system") in the base period 1905-07. He then computes, year by year for the period 1898-1915, what the annual net new investment would have been if it had been of the same magnitude in relation to the base period as was transportation output. These estimates lead him to the conclusion that the relationship between the trendlines of railroad transportation output and net annual new investment was "rational" in the 1898-1906 period and "irrational" thereafter. In short there was after 1906 a very large "annual and cumulative deficiency" in the flow of funds into the railroad system.

These calculations are justified in an eleven-page appendix, but it would be a mistake to consider them either the last word on the subject or the bedrock of Professor Martin's case. The major burden of his argument is found in his text, which seeks to prove that public policy makers understood these economic relationships and their implications, had alternatives available to them that would have benefited the railroads and the nation, but consciously chose and implemented policies that had opposite and detrimental effects.

Professor Martin has filed a brief seeking an indictment for conspiracy against the public officials of the Progressive era. He argues his plea with gusto and conviction. To this member of the audience his evidence still remains circumstantial and inferential. If one believes in such conspiracies, one will find Professor Martin's evidence admissible and his conclusions irrefutable. If one does not believe in such conspiracies, one must render a Scotch verdict at best. But one must admire the diligence and skill with which Professor Martin builds his case. He is certainly the most able advocate the railroads have had, then or since.

JAMES P. BAUGHMAN
Harvard University

JOHN B. RAE. The Road and the Car in American Life. Cambridge, Mass.: MIT Press. 1971. Pp. xiv, 390. $12.00.

In an age of often misguided criticism and rejection of industrial society, Professor Rae's study defends the automobile-highway system by looking at its history. On sturdy democratic grounds he rejects the idea of banning cars in Yellowstone even though they take two million tourists there each year with destructive effects. He takes a negative view of user taxes or of adopting highway revenues for other uses (a "breach of faith" with road-users and a form of discriminatory taxation banned by some states). He finds that new highways raise land values, though some people suffer (the depredations of "eminent domain" are not described). "Planned obsolescence" is "an overworked expression"; city congestion existed before the automobile; and the urban freeways take up less street space than conventional roads (despite exaggerated claims of how much of Los Angeles the car consumes). The car has brought a disastrous decay of public mass transport and has accelerated suburbanization. Professor Rae gives a needed argument in favor of the much-maligned suburbs of today. Above all, the gist of his argument is that the automobile-highway system exists because the market society chose it. People want it—here and in other nations.

Having a point of view helps the author to pull together this interesting and clearly written study of the interaction of the mass-produced car and the hard-surfaced, high-speed highway in recent history. Extending his study of 1965 (The American Automobile), his first eighty pages summarize familiar historical facts, while the bulk of the book concerns events since 1930. Rae touches briefly upon many topics, such as the role of highways in ancient empires, English and French road-building in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, turnpikes, and the eclipse of highways by railroads. Here readers will be reminded of Robert Fogel's more technical argument on the hidden costs of railroads; we see how railroads choked off facilities—good roads, inns, restaurants.

After 1900 people knew how to build roads well; they did not do so. The bicycle mania of the 1880s and 1890s got people out on the primitive dirt highways and created a road lobby (groups like the League of American Wheelmen, described already by Philip Mason). Farm pressure for local market roads and the automobile brought the real beginnings of state and national legislation. Rural Free Delivery (general by 1900) also helped. Professor Rae traces the history of public highway policy from the first federal act of 1902. Major developments after 1930 were the pioneering "parkways" built by the states, the turnpike revival of the 1950s, the California freeways, and the interstate highways built under the Federal-Aid Act of 1956, which will cover the nation with 41,000 miles of superhighway.

Professor Rae is at his best in economic description and explanation; he is less concerned with the social impact of the new system, though he suggests its dimensions: the life-style based on the car ("Drive-in America"); the elimination of rural-urban distinctions ("Rurban" America); the greater opportunities and rootlessness of motorized Americans. Though he describes the enrichment of rural life there is still more to be said about this "flexible, multiple-use vehicle," this private room on wheels, that has given Americans such cheap personal mobility. Its heritage has been ambiguous.

PETER D'A. JONES
*University of Illinois,
Chicago*

BARBARA W. TUCHMAN. Stilwell and the American Experience in China, 1911-45. New York: Macmillan Company. 1971. Pp. xv, 621. $10.00.

Barbara W. Tuchman has brought her considerable talent and audience to the subject of American-Chinese relations at an important time. This work, like her earlier books on the balance of terror in World War I European diplomacy, will have a wide impact on popular perception of present problems.

Despite, or because of, its broad compass, this mass-market historiography breaks certain rigorous research rules. Mrs. Tuchman does not branch out far from the papers of public and visible men. She has not delved deeply into scholarly, periodical literature nor explored exciting interdisciplinary suggestions about the professional, military aristocracy into which her subject fits. Finally, she is too trusting of secondary materials on many of her period's leaders and events.

Mrs. Tuchman is far too skillful at her genre to dwell on these problems inherent within it.

She culls so much from the sources she uses, paints such a vivid canvas, and fixes so well upon important conclusions. Further research, indeed, would probably not challenge the book's already well-quoted summation, "China was a problem for which there was no American solution."

In the context of these strengths and weaknesses in a book that will have a wide reading, it is important to examine its intent and ask basic interpretive questions about its significance. Stilwell is both a biography and a policy study. Its central figure is both a man and an archetype. As Theodore White's 1948 publication of The Stilwell Papers had already proven, General "Vinegar" Joe provided more than enough material, observation, participation, and disposition for reporter and biographer. He is a worthy match for the author's talents. She takes hold of the young Stilwell before 1900, his plebe year at West Point, and refuses to let go for nearly half a century through to the four-star general's receipt of his Combat Infantryman Badge a day before his death in October 1946.

Against this Stilwell setting Barbara Tuchman has chosen to trace the general outline of United States-Chinese relations in which the general played a major role as a military liaison officer in the 1940s. In the effort to capture the "American experience" in China in the light of one career, however responsive and representative, the author finds her most serious problems. No individual in either society, not even Stilwell, transcends effectively the period from the onset of Chinese revolution in 1911 to the end of Japanese war in 1945. Stilwell, the man, was, after all, just a bystander in the early years. Stilwell, the book, gets to the Sino-Japanese War (1937) by great leaps and bounds—27 of its 35 years in but 164 of its 531 textual pages. One must question whether the jump from Yuan Shih-K'ai in 1911 to Chiang Kai-shek in the 1940s, or from William Howard Taft to Franklin Delano Roosevelt, can be made with such dispatch. Given the book's concluding doubt about an American solution, it might be asked whether Chiang or Roosevelt or Stilwell, for all his idiosyncracies, were not acting out the last scenes of a drama foreshadowed in its less intense, earlier acts.

Even the hero's personal magnetism acts to subvert rather than overcome the problems of generalization. Stilwell is so dynamic one almost forgets that there were other "attachés"—military and diplomatic, public and private, economic and religious—with other varieties of experience. Such characters pass through the broad, effective Tuchman panorama, but as passive participants in the Stilwell theater. They were, in reality, of course, the active agents of American material and culture. Given a historical and not biographical focus, Stilwell's experience is more a product of them than theirs is of him. The book's effort is a noble one, but it shows the need for more analysis of the component parts of American foreign policy. The shared assumptions and attitudes of all Americans in China gave United States policy its functional definition into which Stilwell's own role fit so well.

One critic concerned with the endless desert footage of a contemporary film classic commented he searched for more "Lawrence" and less "Arabia." The opposite is true here. We now have had sufficient Stilwell. We need to search about for more China, and indeed for more America if we are to go beyond biography to understand as well as describe the nature of "the American experience in China."

JERRY ISRAEL

Northern Illinois University

HAROLD SEYMOUR. Baseball: The Golden Age. New York: Oxford University Press. 1971. Pp. viii, 492. $12.50.

The author of this book has a Cornell Ph.D., has taught college-level history for fifteen years, and displays many of the hallmarks of the serious academic scholar. He has put his book together in an orderly fashion (particularly in comparison with some sportswriters' books); and he discusses the sort of thing that is of interest to historians even if they happen not to be baseball buffs: organized baseball's commercial structure, its almost total authority over players, its cynical attitude toward a trusting public, and its reflection of the varied social and economic changes in the nation at large. Seymour handles all these themes skillfully, especially his analysis of the game's business operations, but he occasionally strains for a pretentious academic posture that has the effect of making a mountain out of a pitcher's mound. He has directed this book to the general reader and has omitted footnotes; a bibliographical section at the end is generally helpful but leaves the reader uninformed as to the specific source for many of the author's most important statements.

Seymour is not only a scholar but a baseball nut: he was batboy for the Brooklyn Dodgers in the 1920s, played the game in high school and college, and has coached, umpired, and scouted. He was a youthful admirer, or at least observer, of the men he writes about here. Half memoir and half popular history, his book is vastly superior to the usual gee-whiz banalities of the daily sports page. Like most sports fans, Seymour is often nostalgic, especially about the goings-on at Ebbets Field, but he is never uncritical. He is that rare person, a batboy-turned-iconoclast, and his book is full of unsentimental revelations: baseball owners in the good old days were as greedy as they are now, Ty Cobb was psychotic, Babe Ruth was uncontrollably and childishly self-indulgent, the great 1927 Yankees achieved superiority by raiding the impecunious and approachable Red Sox for all their best players, the "Black Sox" of 1919 were indeed crooked but so were scores of other players who never got caught, and Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis (the first baseball commissioner) was an arbitrary old martinet.

Seymour approaches his material with the raised eyebrow of the skeptic, not the open mouth of the credulous. "To call professional baseball a sport and the players and owners sportsmen," he writes, "is to use language so loosely as to divest it of meaning. Games staged for money are not played for fun." Baseball is really "a boy's game played by grown men for a living and run by promoters for a profit." But, he adds, it is after all "a cut above sticking barbs into bulls, or having two men batter each other in a ring until one drops unconscious."

Seymour has previously written Baseball: The Early Years, covering the late nineteenth century. A third volume on the recent history of the game is in preparation.

ROBERT L. BEISNER
American University

CHARLES LARSEN. The Good Fight: The Life and Times of Ben B. Lindsey. Chicago: Quadrangle Books. 1972. Pp. xi, 307. $10.00.

Ben Lindsey (1869-1943) was a rather simple man in basic intellect and character who had a highly complex career, being a juvenile court judge in Denver, a participant in Progressive politics, a voyager on the Ford peace ship, an advocate during the 1920s of changes in the institution of marriage, and a California Superior Court judge in the 1930s. An individual of great renown in his lifetime, Lindsey became unknown to the public and neglected by scholarship within a generation after his death. Charles Larsen's study, an authorized, but "not an official biography," attempts to reclaim Lindsey from undeserved obscurity and generally accomplishes its task, especially, for the post-1914 aspects of his career.

The earlier portions of the book are disappointing. The chapters on Lindsey's youth and the establishment and operation of the juvenile court offer little information or interpretation not in Lincoln Steffens's Upbuilders (1909) and the judge's own autobiographies. Larsen does not sufficiently place Lindsey's juvenile court work within a context of national trends, nor does Larsen discuss the weaknesses of this institution, a topic that has received much recent attention. Considerable space is given, however, to Lindsey's reflections on the 1912 presidential candidates. Yet, as the author admits, being judge of the Denver Juvenile Court was Lindsey's "chief role in life."

The book improves markedly as it proceeds and is particularly insightful on Lindsey's activities in the 1920s as a marriage and sex reformer. Larsen exaggerates, perhaps, in describing the judge as the "Prophet of the Jazz Age," or a "spokesman for . . . 'Flaming Youth,'" the more so since Larsen has demonstrated the moderateness of Lindsey's program. Here, as on the Ku Klux Klan skirmish, the 1929 disbarment, and the California comeback, there is more detail and analysis.

Larsen's laborious research is based on the immense, though inadequately organized, Lindsey manuscript collection in the Library of Congress. Larsen has also made good use of "the dwindling but helpful group" who knew the man. The overall perspective is favorable to Lindsey, but the biographer is aware of his subject's limitations. The same perspective is applicable to the biography. It is a well-researched and well-written book that fills a gap in the bibliography of reform and will help restore Lindsey to importance, but it is a book flawed by its perfunctory treatment of the pre-World War I phase of his Denver career.

PETER GREGG SLATER
Dartmouth College

RICHARD B. HENDERSON. Maury Maverick: A Political Biography. Foreword by JOE B. FRANTZ. Austin: University of Texas Press. 1970. Pp. xxiii, 386. $8.50.

"Two cowboys can ride herd a whole lot better than one," FDR once wrote to Maury Maverick in a sincere compliment to the aggressive, hard-driving little Texas congressman who had given the president's New Deal program a needed lift on more than one occasion. Maverick served only two terms in Congress, but he attracted more attention during his four years in the House of Representatives than many congressmen who have service records that span a score of years. But this was Maverick's style. As one of the leading members of the San Antonio Citizens League he helped oust a political machine described by one Texas politician as being capable of giving "Tammany Hall of New York lessons when it comes to holding crooked elections and counting candidates out who have been honestly elected." As an astonishingly liberal Southerner he organized a group of like-minded congressmen into a determined little voting bloc shortly after his arrival in Washington as a newly elected freshman congressman. After his defeat for re-election in 1938 Maverick won a term as mayor of San Antonio and did so much to modernize this beautiful but neglected city that John Gunther concluded that Maverick was "incontestably the best mayor San Antonio ever had." Even as head of one of the many wartime agencies, the Smaller War Plants Corporation, Maverick caught the nation's attention during World War II with his campaign against deadly bureaucratic jargon, coining the word "gobbledygook" to describe it.

Chronicling the colorful Maverick's political career has provided Henderson with a difficult challenge. Although asserting in his preface that Maverick's family urged him to paint an objective picture of the outspoken Texan, warts and all, it is obvious that the biographer is much taken with his never-commonplace subject. Maverick's "volatile nature," as James A. Farley described it, had led Maverick to make some undeniably outrageous remarks, yet Henderson could almost always find excuses for the congressman's rough language, often employing such delicate phrases to describe it as "affectionate profanity" or "studied irreverence." But in truth Maverick was an attractive subject. An ardent New Dealer after President Roosevelt began to see that the days of his reform program were numbered, Maverick never weakened in his resolve and was willing to be a party maverick (his grandfather contributed the word to our lexicon) if necessary. Perhaps even more admirable was his devotion and effectiveness as a civil libertarian. Roger N. Baldwin, director of the American Civil Liberties Union, paid him the highest of tributes: "Among the handful of civil rights champions in Congress over the years, Maury stands out as the most devoted and the most skillful in achieving what he went after."

Henderson has written a compelling and well-documented monograph. He might have been more effective in relating Maverick with his times, thus achieving a smoother narrative, but the book is nevertheless a substantial contribution to the historiography of the Roosevelt-Truman era. An attractive volume with a section of photographs and a foreword written by Joe B. Frantz in his delightfully humorous style, Henderson's biography is also a fine reference book with a good bibliography and a functional index, always helpful to a historian in a hurry.

ROBERT W. LARSON
University of Northern Colorado

RICHARD M. FREELAND. The Truman Doctrine and the Origins of McCarthyism: Foreign Policy, Domestic Politics, and Internal Security, 1946-1948. New York: Alfred A. Knopf. 1972. Pp. xii, 419, xii. $10.00.

This book, originally a doctoral dissertation under the direction of Gabriel Kolko, is an interesting and somewhat distinctive New-Left interpretation of the genesis of McCarthyism.

A scholarly polemic of a nature currently fashionable, it will, I suppose, be praised and damned in accord with already established views on the school of thought it represents. But the book is sufficiently provocative to merit serious consideration on its own and should be read by anyone interested in the cold war and American civil liberties.

Professor Freeland's thesis is that after the war the Truman administration became convinced that massive economic aid to Western Europe was necessary to develop American economic and strategic interests (largely the former) on the Continent. In order to build sympathy in Congress and throughout the nation for the Marshall Plan, administration officials mounted an anti-Communist propaganda offensive that produced a rigidly anti-Russian foreign policy and inadvertently paved the way for Joe McCarthy. In one year, from March 1947 to March 1948, the attitude of the American people toward the Soviet Union shifted dramatically; the public debate on the Marshall Plan was the "main battle" in the forging of a cold-war outlook that plunged us into the hysteria of the early 1950s and continued with sufficient force to commit us to Vietnam. Singled out for special attention are the Federal Employee Loyalty Program, the attorney general's list, efforts to deport "subversive" aliens, administration support of the House Committee on Un-American Activities, the release of various diplomatic documents that appeared to reveal Soviet hostility and imperialism, and the dispatch of the Freedom Train—a device that attempted, according to Freeland, to elevate the Truman Doctrine to the level of the Constitution.

Numerous efforts have been made, of course, to pin the blame for the cold war and McCarthyism on Truman, and this study suffers from some of the defects of its predecessors. It underestimates the role of Congress in the drive for internal security legislation, minimizes Truman's contributions to the defense of civil liberties, exaggerates the political uses of anti-Communism prior to Dewey's defeat, and, above all, makes little effort to describe those events at home and abroad that might have given Americans good reason to fear Communist aggression and subversion. Still, Freeland raises numerous questions about the Marshall Plan and its advocates that need answers. And the extent of the author's research is to be applauded: he combed the Truman Library, the Library of Congress, and other archives for relevant materials; interviewed Clark Clifford; and read widely in the literature of the period under examination. Much of the evidence needed to prove anything conclusively about the events covered in this book remains beyond the reach of scholars, but Professor Freeland is to be congratulated for posing a challenging thesis that should stimulate historians for a long while.

THOMAS C. REEVES
*University of Wisconsin—
Parkside*

GRAHAM T. ALLISON. Essence of Decision: Explaining the Cuban Missile Crisis. (Written under the auspices of the Faculty Seminar on Bureaucracy, Politics, and Policy of the Institute of Politics, John Fitzgerald Kennedy School of Government, Harvard University.) Boston: Little, Brown and Company. 1971. Pp. xii, 338. $4.50.

LOUISE FITZSIMONS. The Kennedy Doctrine. New York: Random House. 1972. Pp. 275. $7.95.

JAMES E. MCSHERRY. Khrushchev and Kennedy in Retrospect. Palo Alto, Calif.: Open-Door Press. 1971. Pp. 233. $8.95.

Partisans of the tragically short Kennedy administration have often singled out the president's handling of the 1962 Cuban missile crisis as his finest hour in the field of foreign affairs. In the ten years following those thirteen days when the world's two most powerful nations "paused at the nuclear precipice," critics of the Kennedy mystique have raised serious questions about the necessity and wisdom of that policy. Only one of these books deals exclusively with the missile crisis, but all three, for quite different reasons, consider it the touchstone of Kennedy's foreign policy and a "major watershed in the Cold War."

Because of its analytical complexity Allison's book deserves a brief summary. Writing under the auspices of the Faculty Seminar on Bureaucracy, Politics, and Policy of the Institute of Politics in the John Fitzgerald Kennedy School of Government at Harvard, Allison describes the decision-making process during the Cuban missile crisis in the United States and the Soviet Union by assigning three hypothetical analysts to interpret the event using three different conceptual models. First there is the classical or "rational actor" model, which is most often employed by diplomatic historians to explain foreign-policy decisions. It is based on calculating what rational, strategic choices would be made by key individuals for their nations without reference to any of the internal, personal, or bureaucratic machinations within their respective governments. Viewed from this conceptual frame of reference, the missile crisis, it is assumed, can best be explained in terms of value-maximizing choices like the following: the Soviets attempted to place defensive and offensive missiles in Cuba in order to obtain missile-power parity with the United States; the American government responded with a blockade as the logical middle course between doing nothing and invading Cuba; this in turn shifted the burden of further escalation back to the Soviets, who finally withdrew their missiles not because of the blockade itself, as most published accounts have claimed, but because it was coupled with the implicit threat of an air strike or land attack.

The second process model is one developed by organizational theorists and economists. It assumes that international politics is made up of organizational outputs that are invariably standardized and sluggish in times of crisis because they are based on routines (SOPs) for dealing with standard or normal day-to-day situations. From this vantage point, the actions of the United States and the Soviet Union do not have to be molded to fit a particular rationale. Therefore what started out to be either an attempt to bridge the missile gap or simply an attempt to defend Cuba (with the emplacement of defensive [SAMs] and offensive missiles [MRBMs]) was complicated and confounded by competition between the GRU, the KGB, the Air Defense Forces, and the Strategic Rocket Forces. Each agency did what it knew best to do without concern for internal consistency or adherence to the same security standards. Allison suggests it is possible that IRBMs, instead of only MRBMs, were installed by the Strategic Rocket Forces without Khrushchev's direct knowledge.

According to this second process model the United States chose to blockade Cuba out of confusion arising over intelligence information because of competition between the CIA and the Air Force and because of a misunderstanding between civilian and military leaders over the effectiveness of a "surgical" versus a "massive" air strike against Cuba. Finally the Soviets withdrew their missiles, partially because of the confusion created by the few top Soviet officials who actually were aware of their emplacement and partially because actions by competing agencies created a contradictory situation in which the left hand of the USSR did not know what the right one was doing. So just as "Kennedy was beginning to wobble, Khrushchev folded" because of internal problems of communication and coordination.

The third process model describes the bargaining games played by top policy makers based on their unequal positions of power within governmental circles. According to this pluralist model foreign-policy decisions are the product of decentralized coordination (shared power) of the various pressures emanating from representatives of interest groups inside and outside of government. Using this conceptual approach Allison speculates that the Soviet Union placed its missiles in Cuba as the result of pulling and hauling among select members of the Presidium about which we do not as yet have enough public information for documentation. But there is already an abundance of this type of evidence for the United States in the published personal accounts of the meetings of the ExCom (Executive Committee of the National Security Council), which Kennedy created to deal with the crisis.

This third model questions whether the Soviet missiles in Cuba actually affected the nuclear balance of power and instead concentrates on the idea that, because Cuba was already a "political Achilles' heel" as a result of the Bay of Pigs fiasco, practically all of the influential forces represented in the ExCom pushed Kennedy in the direction of strong action. From the beginning, therefore, there was little chance of negotiating through straight diplomatic channels, especially in view of the argument that such normal diplomacy would allow time for the missiles to become operational. Thus, the blockade was really a "collage" decision, arising less out of organizational sluggishness and confusion and more out of intense bargaining and pressure tactics within the ExCom. Likewise, the Soviets possibly decided to withdraw not because of the blockade or because of the subsequent ultimatum, but because of a tacit sense of partnership and mutual consideration between Kennedy and Khrushchev, which led them to establish direct lines of communication to avoid misunderstanding each other's intentions. This ultimately led to a private deal between them, which Robert Kennedy personally conveyed to Soviet Ambassador Anatoly Dobrynin (after delivering the official ultimatum): namely that American missiles in Turkey and Italy would be removed "within a short time after the crisis was over."

There is no doubt that Allison's multiconceptual approach adds new insights and speculative dimensions to our understanding of the complex process of decision making during foreign-policy crises which will prove invaluable for analyzing present and future ones. This study asks that diplomatic historians stop assuming that rational goals account for a nation's choice of action and begin to concentrate on the intragovernmental factors that determine any given foreign-policy outcome. However, it should be noted that the second and third models require information not readily, if ever, available about recent developments in foreign affairs, let alone past ones. Also, as far as the Cuban missile crisis is concerned, none of Allison's hypothetical analysts address themselves to the nagging question of the role that the forthcoming congressional elections may or may not have played either within the ExCom itself or among the much smaller group of the president's personal advisers. None of the process models, with the possible exception of the third one, seems to be designed to account for the ubiquitous ways in which "important interest groups" (technically outside of government, like various segments of the business community) influence diplomatic decisions.

Allison would have us believe that the formulation of foreign policy, at least in time of extreme crisis, is conducted by small ad hoc groups in both the Soviet Union and the United States, which attempt to cut themselves off from governmental bureaucracy and other influential pressure groups. Yet his evidence in the case studies for the second and third process models suggests how impossible this attempt proves in practice, since "members of any organization, particularly career officials, come to believe that the health of their organization is vital to the national interest . . . [and] the President and senior players will almost always be concerned about domestic implications." There is no confusion, however, about the different lessons drawn from the three process models. While the first one leads to the conclusion that nuclear crises are manageable, the second and third ones clearly demonstrate how easy it would be for nations to stumble into a nuclear exchange because of the heretofore little understood risks in the decision-making process during diplomatic crises.

To Louise FitzSimons all the foreign-policy actions of the Kennedy administration add up not only to a defense of the international status quo, but also to an intensification of the cold war through the introduction of counterinsurgency tactics and nuclear brinkmanship. With particular reference to the emplacement of Soviet missiles in Cuba FitzSimons concludes that the crisis was as dangerous as it was unnecessary. These same charges were made by I. F. Stone and Ronald Steel several years ago and are based on the argument that Kennedy arbitrarily raised the incident to a high-level crisis because of his excessive concern for his own and his country's prestige (in the wake of the Bay of Pigs and his poor showing at Vienna with Khrushchev) and because of the November mid-term elections. Thus he bypassed traditional diplomatic contacts in favor of "eye-ball to eye-ball" confrontation. Like Stone and Steel, FitzSimons reaches this conclusion through logical deduction (Allison's model 1) rather than through documentary proof or detailed analysis of the decision-making process.

Generally speaking, FitzSimons too narrowly ascribes to the Kennedy administration alone an "untenable globalism" that led to "increased areas of conflict, to a heightening of the arms race, and to American concern with and involvement . . . in the affairs of almost every country of the world." This is in essence the Kennedy Doctrine. It is based on the assumption that since "we can . . . we should affect the course of events around the globe." While Kennedy indeed was a cold warrior it is questionable whether his counterrevolutionary foreign policies were qualitatively (rather than simply quantitatively) different from all such presidential warriors since 1945. Richard J. Walton's book, Cold War and Counterrevolution (1972), is more balanced and better documented on this point.

Aside from exaggerations about how Kennedy exacerbated the cold war single-handedly, FitzSimons, a former foreign affairs officer for the Atomic Energy Commission and staff assistant in the Senate, generally makes judicious use of all the published secondary accounts of the Kennedy years plus congressional documents, the oral history collection at the JFK Library, and the one-volume Bantam edition of the Pentagon Papers. For obvious reasons this work does not accord equal attention to the more positive aspects of Kennedy's policies in Africa and Latin America. For other areas of the world, however, it provides a needed counterweight to the over-apologetic accounts of Kennedy's foreign policy by Sorensen, Schlesinger, Hilsman, and others, which have been the standard fare to date. She also rightly laments the fact that Kennedy used his charisma to stimulate cold war attitudes among Americans rather than to eradicate them.

In contrast to the works of Allison and FitzSimons, the McSherry book is an intellectual disaster. It is both the author's and publisher's intent to present "a serious, conservatively oriented book," despite the difficulties inherent in doing so because of the "growth of lock-step liberalism in the past thirty years." Unfortunately they have not succeeded. Based on inadequate research (primarily newspaper accounts and a handful of secondary sources) this book does not attempt the systematic analysis of the diplomatic relationship between Kennedy and Khrushchev that the title implies. Instead, the president surfaces only sporadically in what is really a superficial summary of Soviet policy from 1957 to 1964.

A former State Department intelligence specialist during the Eisenhower administration, McSherry drags out all of the cold war clichés from the domino theory to the fact that all Communist nations are equally untrustworthy and only understand force. Hence, approving of Kennedy's forceful handling of the Cuban missile crisis, McSherry views it simplistically as a personal attempt by Khrushchev "to expose Uncle Sam as toothless and feeble" under the leadership of a young "tissue-paper president." The writing is disjointed and rambling, which makes the vague and poorly documented charges against Khrushchev and "mush-minded" American liberals all the less convincing. Contrary to his intent McSherry has not strengthened the scholarly reputation of the Far Right with this book.

JOAN HOFF WILSON
California State University,
Sacramento

LYNDON BAINES JOHNSON. The Vantage Point: Perspectives of the Presidency, 1963-1969. New York: Holt, Rinehart and Winston. 1971. Pp. x, 636. $15.00.

LADY BIRD JOHNSON. A White House Diary. New York: Holt, Rinehart and Winston. 1970. Pp. ix, 806. $10.95.

Historians will long quarrel about the extent to which ghosts intrude between the authors of these two books and the published works, but such quibbling will be beside the point. Each book says what its author wants to have said, and each, beyond question, has the flavor, both linguistic and moral, of its author. The nearly simultaneous publication so soon after the event reveals a joint urgent need for apologia, but neither does this diminish the significance of the two books. Indeed the manner in which the apologiae are presented enhances the significance of these court reminiscences.

Mrs. Johnson (one might say "Ms." in deference to the South, but that would be mistaken as a nod to Women's Lib, whose principles seem to be pretty well rejected by Lady Bird Johnson's whole approach to her husband and family) recounts that on their arrival at the White House on December 7, 1963, "Mr. West was waiting at the door for us. . . . He has worked at the White House for twenty-three years and is now Head Chamberlain." Conversely, for January 20, 1969, Lyndon Johnson reflects: "the last morning I would wake up in this room, the last day I would live in this house. It was the day the mantle of the American Presidency would be shifted, in one of the greatest pageants of our democracy, from my shoulders to those of Richard Nixon. . . . Even in those final hours there could be no departure from the routine. Presidents come and go, but the Presidency goes on without interruption."

Despite the intense interest in the politics of the Johnson regime, I suspect that the long-range historical interest of these two documents will lie far more in what they reveal about the nature of the American presidency than in anything they can tell us about the politics of the Great Society or the "war" in Vietnam. President Johnson refers to the "pageants" of the American democracy, but what he really seems to be saying is: "The king is dead; long live the king." The principal qualification, perhaps, is that being still alive, he can take several sharp pokes at the succeeding monarch for allegedly undercutting Johnson's Vietnam diplomacy during the extended lame-duck period.

We read in these records the account not just of a democratic presidency (in all its facets) but of an imperial democracy. It is impossible not to recall the strictures of Woodrow Wilson's favorite constitutional commentator, Walter Bagehot, who argued the desirability of separating the "dignified" from the "efficient" elements in a constitution. Wilson, for all his basic conservatism, never quite grasped this point, although he did see the point about the need to create "responsible government" by offering to resign upon defeat—and, perhaps not surprisingly, it was his second Southern successor, Johnson, who put the precept into practice. And Johnson put it into practice principally because Wilson, F. D. Roosevelt, and Harry Truman—his prime mentors in the presidential craft—had presided over the evolution of America from an expansionist to a defensive empire. Johnson, in a very real sense, suffered the consequences of presiding over a sated empire—an empire that had never suffered a serious military defeat (bar the controversial outcome of 1812–14), an empire that had enforced its sphere of influence in the Americas, made the Pacific "an American lake," and accepted from declining European empires the responsibility of keeping secure a world-wide market society. Defeat in these circumstances left no alternative to abdication.

For the real history of the Vietnam War one has to go to other sources. But for the impact of the war (and of crises in the Caribbean, the Middle East, and Central Europe) upon the presidency these two books will remain primary sources. Mrs. Johnson's book, especially, records the interlocking burdens imposed upon the president by virtue of his being at once head of state and chief executive. Her account of the White House as court, despite her own remarkable sharing of the burdens and opportunities, leaves no doubt about the immense extra drain on one man's energies (and competence?) when he has to be both king and prime minister. And the "dignified" as opposed to the "efficient" aspect of his office was intensely absorbing for Lyndon Johnson.

A world-shocking tragedy shot Johnson into an office for which, in ordinary circumstances, he would have been as well prepared as had been most of his predecessors. But the circumstances cast him in the role of "populist" usurper. A prince had been murdered, and the horrified chorus of criticism seems, in retrospect, to have been more paranoiac than any paranoia as yet ascribed to American populists. It is little wonder that both of the Johnson books devote much space to their relationship with the Kennedys—which both books depict as one of warm mutual regard. Nor is it surprising that Lyndon Johnson (like the first Roosevelt) swore to carry out his assassinated predecessor's policies intact. In the domestic field, as Johnson records with loving attention, he accomplished this—with more success than would likely have been the case had the event in Dallas never occurred (although Johnson does not put it quite this way). In the field of foreign affairs, Johnson is even more careful to point to the unbroken thread of policy: "I would devote every hour of every day during the remainder of John Kennedy's unfulfilled term to achieving the goals he had set. That meant seeing things through in Vietnam as well as coping with the many other international and domestic problems he had faced. I made this promise not out of blind loyalty but because I was convinced that the broad lines of his policy, in Southeast Asia and elsewhere, had been right. They were consistent with the goals the United States had been trying to accomplish in the world since 1945."

The circumstances of the succession account for much, as does the nature of the office itself. Yet the background of the Johnsons themselves and the felt need to "justify" the South also bulk large. Lyndon Johnson was deeply concerned with this latter problem (as was his wife, whose favorite politician seems to be Harry Truman). LBJ puts it this way: "The burden of national unity rests heaviest on one man, the President. . . . One reason the country could not rally behind a Southern President, I was convinced, was that the metropolitan press of the Eastern seaboard would never permit it. My experience in office had confirmed this reaction. I was not thinking just of the derisive articles about my style, my clothes, my manner, my accent, and my family—although I admit I received enough of that kind of treatment in my first few months as President to last a lifetime. I was also thinking of a more deep-seated and far-reaching attitude—a disdain for the South that seems to be woven into the fabric of Northern experience."

LBJ certainly brought with him to the White House much that shocked the Eastern establishment. But he also brought a Southern political know-how that in sheer managerial skill should have put that establishment to shame. What the cold-war liberal sophisticates of the East seemed not to recognize, and what is made very clear in The Vantage Point, is that the Southern populist had bought their own goals. What he brought to the job was a power of simplification that the Easterners found distasteful and even vulgar. In following through the logic of their own policies the usurping president revealed the limits of power and the need to call upon an essentially illiberal patriotism to justify contradictions between foreign and domestic actions. "Those who created division," writes Johnson, "who opposed decisions, and who made it more difficult to accomplish the job need to reflect on the consequences of their actions." Ultimately he refuted the doubters by very simple questions: "I wonder what the reaction would have been in the America of 1969 if Soviet cosmonauts had planted their red flag on the moon."

KENNETH MCNAUGHT
University of Toronto

HERBERT L. MATTHEWS. A World in Revolution: A Newspaperman's Memoir. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. 1971. Pp. 462. $12.50.

Herbert Matthews was one of those fascinating men who made history while writing it. He repeatedly took positions and reported events that engendered strong reactions by governments and the public. Accused of being pro-fascist for his reports on the Italo-Ethiopian War, attacked by conservatives and Catholics for his reports of Loyalist activities during the Spanish Civil War, and widely condemned as having helped hoodwink the American government into believing Castro was not a Communist, Matthews has written an impressionistic memoir of his own career as a reporter for the New York Times—a career that clearly places him within the mainstream of American liberalism.

The book consists of a series of interesting and well-written chapters, each dealing with a country he covered as a reporter. Though he bases his comments largely on his own experiences he does not limit himself to just the time he spent there. Rather, he perceptively uses his past experiences as a means of commenting broadly on each nation and the world at large. His recollection of the ignorance of Hindu and Muslim peasants about the activities of Gandhi and the Muslim League during World War II becomes an opportunity to comment on nationalism as a middle-class emotion and concept. Accusations of bias in his reporting on the Spanish Civil War and the Italo-Ethiopian War bring on a discussion of how a good reporter must combine bias and factual honesty. A brief and relatively quiet tour in Italy from 1939 until 1941 provides the backdrop to an incisive and enlightening interpretation of Italian politics from Mussolini to Togliatti. Through all of this a number of themes are dominant. Matthews is clearly disillusioned with ideology. Communism (he sees all post-Lenin Communists as counterrevolutionaries), fascism, capitalism, socialism—they all seem irrelevant in the face of rampant nationalism. (Spaniards fought each other with little thought given to ideology.) His archenemy is authoritarianism, regardless of the disguise. And his faith is in the young radicals who may not be right but must create their own world in which to live.

The book also provides only a limited amount of useful primary source material, for Matthews has written nine other books in which most of his reminiscences of the three great crises he covered—Abyssinia, the Spanish Civil War, and Castro—are fully recorded. He does relate the details of a fascinating interview between Ernest Bevin and Arthur Sulzberger on the subject of Truman's recognition of Israel, and there are also occasional quotes and short stories that catch the historian's eye; for example, when Matthews quotes (by hearsay) Robert Murphy in 1944 as saying that communism in Italy was no problem since the Communists "are now part of the democratic community" (p. 137). The real scholarly value of this book, however, is for historians of American journalism. Matthews states at the beginning that he is happy to report at last on his two great struggles (the Spanish Civil War and Castro) with "his" newspaper with complete candor. He defends his "honest bias" and accuses the paper of failing to live up to its own credo when it suppressed his reports on Castro. Yet this is clearly criticism from a member of the family. Equally intriguing is the insight this provides into the relationship between the reporter, who sees only part of the whole but knows what he sees, and the publisher-editor who looks at the whole but sees nothing for himself. During the Spanish Civil War the New York Times incensed Matthews when the editors chose to give equal weight to reports on the Loyalists from Matthews at the front and to reports on the Rebels based on official press releases. Then during the early years of Castro in Cuba the paper took the other position and "muzzled" Matthews, in spite of (or because of?) his exclusive access to Castro and other Cuban government leaders. There are other curious revelations, particularly Matthews's offer in 1962 to Ambassador Thomas Mann to report back any items of interest that came up during his projected talks with the Cuban leaders; that is, he would check back with the CIA!

There is no doubt that much of this book is an attempt at self-justification by Matthews, particularly regarding his relationship to Castro, and on that subject Matthews's arguments are persuasive. The popular notion of Matthews single-handedly influencing the State Department's image of Castro is asinine on the face of it. The book is also an earnest plea for the value and validity of newspaper reporting. He quotes Arthur Schlesinger, Jr.'s comment before the American Historical Association to the effect that, after having served in the White House, he would no longer take newspaper and magazine articles seriously. Matthews archly points out that if one "cannot distinguish good journalism from bad, or trustworthy newspapermen from phonies, he should not try to write contemporary history" (p. 8). But for Herbert Matthews separating the honest from the dishonest in the stories he covered is simple, for he knows what he saw. For historians it is not so easy, for like publishers and editors, we must look at all sides and always through the eyes of others.

WARREN F. KIMBALL
Rutgers University,
Newark

ROBIN W. WINKS. The Blacks in Canada: A History. New Haven: Yale University Press. 1971. Pp. xvii, 546. $15.00.

This is the first comprehensive history of Canadian Negroes—from the arrival of the first African slave in New France in 1628 to the scattered stirrings of black protest activity in the late 1960s. It is an extraordinary achievement, impressive as much for its wide-ranging breadth as for its scholarly depth and thoughtful insights. It is far more than black history, moreover, for Professor Winks deals importantly with Canadian, Canadian-American, and French and British imperial history as well. The black presence in Canada has never been as significant as in the United States, from which many Negroes originally came, for blacks have never amounted to more than five per cent of the population of any province and only about two per cent of the nation as a whole. Scattered from the Maritimes to Vancouver, the product of several distinct waves of immigration widely separated in time and area, for the most part poorly educated and overwhelmingly lower-class throughout their history, isolated both from the dominant bicultural white society and from each other, Canadian Negroes have had even less success than their black brothers in the United States in gaining an acceptable and accepted place in Canadian life. Too few in number to have more than local visibility, too scattered to have an effective press or national leaders and organizations, the blacks have largely been ignored by white Canadians, who smugly and erroneously assumed that racial problems and prejudice existed only south of their border. In Winks, Canada's blacks have found a sympathetic and indefatigable chronicler, who over more than a decade mastered an enormous range of chiefly unpublished sources scattered throughout Canada and the United States as well as in the United Kingdom, France, the West Indies, and even West Africa. Since only about half of his research materials were incorporated into this book, Winks has deposited his notes, correspondence, and other papers, including early and more extensively documented drafts of the manuscript, in the Schomburg Collection of the New York Public Library for use by other scholars. Although he modestly points out that because of its pioneering character this cannot be regarded as a definitive study, it is unlikely to be replaced soon. Indeed, it may become a Canadian equivalent to Gunnar Myrdal's epochal An American Dilemma, by calling attention to the long and as yet unrealized struggle of Canadian Negroes to become Negro Canadians.

E. DAVID CRONON
University of Wisconsin,
Madison

FREDRICK B. PIKE. Hispanismo, 1898-1936: Spanish Conservatives and Liberals and Their Relations with Spanish America. (International Studies of the Committee on International Relations, University of Notre Dame.) Notre Dame: University of Notre Dame Press. 1971. Pp. xx, 486. $15.00.

The year 1898 brought to an end Spain's overseas empire and stimulated Spanish intellectuals and statesmen to probe the causes of national decadence and to reappraise their country's place in world affairs. This year of disaster and despair for Spain has been chosen by Fredrick B. Pike as the point of departure for an examination of the theory and practice of Pan-Hispanism. In scope this work is much broader than would appear from the narrow definition implied by the title. Not only does the author deal with material going back to the 1870s, but he explores in considerable detail intellectual, social, political, and religious problems of Spain during the past century.

Focusing upon the bitter debate between conservative and liberal Pan-Hispanists, the author depicts an international movement that was more significant for rhetoric than for practical achievements. Liberals and conservatives, while differing on religious and social issues, agreed on the need to preserve a hierarchically and organically structured society. Democracy and materialism, in their view of the world, were the archenemies of the Hispanic raza. If Latin Americans wished to defend themselves from the twin threats of Yankee imperialism and social revolution, in the opinion of hispanistas, they were urged to cultivate the traditional values of Spanish spirituality.

Although the ranks of Pan-Hispanic advocacy included such prestigious figures as Rafael Altamira, Ramón Mendéndez Pidal, Miguel Unamuno, Antonio Maura, and Ramiro de Maeztu, the movement never enjoyed more than limited success. From time to time important Spanish Americans like Rubén Darío, José Enrique Rodó, Marcelo T. Alvear, and Manuel Gálvez showed interest in hispanismo, but the establishment of close political, economic, and cultural ties between Spain and her former colonies eluded the advocates of Hispanic cordiality.

Pike puts his finger on the basic shortcomings of Spanish leadership. An abrasive paternalism toward America alienated potential friends of Spain. Unseemly quarrels among conservatives and liberals reduced effectiveness. Lack of a sustained governmental commitment and Spanish weakness as a world power handicapped hispanoamericanistas in their efforts to compete with the United States and European powers in Latin America. The gradual drift of hispanista ideology to the political right limited the movement's appeal almost entirely to the most conservative elements in the New World.

The documentation offered by Professor Pike is extensive, varied, and convincing. Historical interpretations are perceptive and judicious throughout. An attempt to show connections between twentieth-century hispanismo and the Pan-Hispanic movement before 1870 would have given greater historical depth to this study, but this is a minor criticism that subtracts little from the overall excellence of Mr. Pike's scholarship.

MARK J. VAN AKEN
California State University,
Hayward

DAVID GREEN. The Containment of Latin America: A History of the Myths and Realities of the Good Neighbor Policy. Chicago: Quadrangle Books. 1971. Pp. xiii, 370. $10.00.

This is a troubling book, though not entirely for the reasons the author intended. Part of the difficulty may be that David Green attempted to analyze several somewhat different, if related topics and did not altogether succeed with any of them. The preface, for instance, promises a revisionist analysis of "the myths and realities of the Good Neighbor Policy," but it is regrettable that the author tells us little new about this promising topic.

Green also discusses recent United States foreign economic policy and economic relations with Latin America. There is worthwhile material in chapter three on the Inter-American and Export-Import banks, chapter 4 (perhaps the best in the book) on the economic impact of the war, and parts of chapters 7 and 8. Elsewhere the author fails to provide a systematic economic analysis, despite his underlying and unproven assumptions about United States economic motives.

Green's arresting major contention is that the United States feared and persistently attempted to thwart Latin American nationalistic movements. He holds the New Deal's "relationship to private interests" responsible for the ultimate "tragedy," though at one point he concedes that the intentions of Presidents Roosevelt and Truman were benevolent. Otherwise Green implies insistently that even the motives were wrong. Thus he asserts that the United States consciously "retained effective control" over Cuba after 1933 and that Secretary Hull was primarily interested in securing markets.

Here Green largely ignores the effect of the depression on Washington's policies and misrepresents Hull's ultimate goals. Later he reads economic expansionism into Roosevelt's remark that "Dr. Win-the-War" had to replace "Dr. New Deal." Again Green claims that the United States subsequently neglected Latin America because of a shift "by mid-1944" of "economic resources into Western Europe for anti-Russian activities." Truman accordingly appears as a man of views "crude in the extreme" who preferred "confrontation," while Bernard Baruch (whose influence Green exaggerates), Nelson Rockefeller, and Arthur Vandenberg figure variously among the cast of villains. With even scantier evidence Green disposes of President Kennedy as a conscious heir to an antinationalist policy and an advocate of "containing" Latin America through the Alliance for Progress.

Insufficient research partly explains some of Green's errors, as in his misleading account of wartime Argentina. But the book also suffers from indiscriminating idealization of nationalism and from an unfortunate attempt to prove too much. Green, however, has properly identified an important opportunity for historical analysis and criticism of policy. This challenge remains for scholars.

PAUL S. HOLBO
University of Oregon

BRIAN R. HAMNETT. Politics and Trade in Southern Mexico, 1750-1821. (Cambridge Latin American Studies, Number 12.) New York: Cambridge University Press. 1971. Pp. viii, 214. $12.50.

This important study concerns the attempt to control the lucrative cochineal trade of Oaxaca. It not only provides considerable information about the economic and political aspects of the eighteenth-century Bourbon reform program and its implementation but also gives a thorough discussion of the dye trade, which was, after bullion, the most important product exported from New Spain in the colonial era.

The red-dye cochineal was controlled by merchants in Mexico City, who, working closely with firms in Spain and through the local alcaldes mayores, exploited Indian labor, financed the cultivation and manufacture of the dye, and marketed the product in Europe. Cochineal brought such handsome profits to the merchants and production boomed to such an extent that the metropolitan government, ever desirous of more revenue, attempted to smash their monopoly and to tax the production by implementing administrative reforms and free trade. Hamnett explores in detail the many facets of the struggle to control the cochineal industry: the reform-minded administrators versus the traditionalist bureaucrats; the Mexico City merchants versus the Veracruz Consulado; the Creole interests of the independence era versus the peninsulars; and the Church hierarchy in Oaxaca, which first supported the reform government and the intendancy system, thinking the Indians would be less exploited, and later threw its support to those elements within the government that wished to see the trade continued under the control of the Mexico City merchants.

All the while Oaxacan cochineal production was falling drastically, from a high of one and one-half million pounds in 1774 to 300,000 pounds in 1821. The drop was caused in part by government action, the insecurity of commerce between Spain and her possessions during the colonial wars, the chaotic economic conditions resulting from the struggle for independence, and ultimately the competition presented by other areas into which cochineal cultivation was introduced.

Hamnett has based his study largely on archival materials in Spain and Mexico. Lacking only in some analysis of the grass-roots implications, particularly within the Indian society, of this politico-economic struggle the work is otherwise thorough and excellent.

CHARLES R. BERRY

Wright State University

MOISÉS GONZÁLEZ NAVARRO. Raza y tierra: La guerra de castas y el henequén. (Centro de Estudios Históricos, New Series, Number 10.) [México, D. F.:] Colegio de México. 1970. Pp. x, 392.

Previous works by this outstanding Mexican historian have been noted for methodical and objective use of primary sources and first-hand statistical data, for example, Estadísticas sociales del Porfiriato (1956), El Porfiriato. La vida social (Volume 4 of Historia moderna de México [1959]), or La colonización en México (1960). One can now add another title to this list of basic reference works for modern Mexican history. Raza y tierra is based on archival searches in Mexico City, Merida, La Habana, Madrid, in the Foreign Office in London, and on an impressive number of printed reports, contemporary accounts, and secondary works. In the author's usual style—a kind of military ordering of all relevant information—the text is tightly packed with factual footnoted information and then reinforced with statistical tables and a rear-guard appendix of supporting documents, all serving to give an impression of overwhelming evidence.

Raza y tierra is actually four interrelated studies in Yucatecan history. The first one traces the unfolding of the tragic Caste War that burst into flames in 1848 and finally sputtered out in the early twentieth century. This part of the book serves as an important supplement to Nelson Reed's The Caste War of Yucatan (1964). The second study represents rare archival research on the Yucatecan slave traffic to Cuba, 1848–61. British abolitionist policy inhibited this business, but, according to González Navarro, it was the triumph of Juárez and, more important, the rise of labor-hungry henequen plantations that actually put an end to it. The third part is concerned with labor conditions and labor legislation in Yucatan. Here the author demonstrates that in spite of reforms that modified Indian peonage obligations, Mexican gachupines continued the Spanish colonial tradition of hacienda managers acting with police powers to pursue runaways, vagrants, and debtors and to administer corporal punishment. An old Spanish proverb still described the system: "Los indios no oyen sino por las nalgas." In essence there is agreement with the account of Indian servitude given by John K. Turner in his sensational exposé Barbarous Mexico (1911). The final section provides a statistically detailed account of henequen production and agrarian reform in Yucatan from the revolution of 1910 to the present, with emphasis on monoculture, collectivized ejidos, and peasant proprietorship.

Documentary attachments, a full bibliography, and an index by name and subject add the finishing touches to this scholarly production. Any shortcomings in a work by González Navarro must be taken with its virtues. The writer lets the facts, wet or dry, speak for themselves and only rarely splices in his own interpretive opinions, impressions, or comments.

ARTHUR F. CORWIN

University of Connecticut

RALPH DELLA CAVA. Miracle at Joazeiro. (Institute of Latin American Studies, Columbia University.) New York: Columbia University Press. 1970. Pp. xiv, 324. $9.95.

There is no greater test of the historian's craft than the need to sift through conflicting and highly partisan secondary sources. To be the first investigator who also consults unpublished documents is an even greater opportunity. Ralph della Cava has met the challenge admirably in this painstakingly researched monograph.

Miracle at Joazeiro reconstructs the story of an extraordinary popular religious movement in an interior town of the impoverished northeastern Brazilian state of Ceará between 1889 and 1934. The central figure was Padre Cícero, a devout and remarkably long-lived priest, twice excommunicated for failing to obey the ecclesiastical authorities who had declared fraudulent the "miracles" alleged to have occurred at the humble cleric's mass. Despite condemnation by the "Romanizing" Church, Padre Cícero rapidly became a saint to the thousands of destitute pilgrims who flocked to Joazeiro. In time the venerated priest became the most powerful political figure in the northeast and a fierce promoter of his adopted city of Joazeiro. Not surprisingly, he acquired many enemies, both among the clergy and outside observers who insisted on seeing only "fanaticism" in a movement whose deep social roots della Cava mentions briefly. The author has purposely avoided emphasizing the colorful folkloric aspects, despite obvious sympathy for the underprivileged masses for whom the movement meant most. Instead he concentrates on the difficult task of reconstructing the complex political history of Padre Cícero's relations with the "Romanizing" clergy of the contemporary Brazilian church, the state and national political elites, and José Marrocos and Floro Bartholomeu, the ambitious laymen who played such a key role in building the legendary priest's secular power.

The story is set clearly in the context of regional and national change, both political and economic. The author convincingly demonstrates how the "dualistic" hypothesis of a "civilized coast" and a "primitive interior" is refuted by the case of Joazeiro, which showed close connections with a regional economy and a national political system. Equally important, Miracle at Joazeiro offers fascinating insights into the structure and use of power in a community of the Brazilian northeast during the Old Republic (1889-1930). One finishes this book with the conviction that it is the most objective and carefully documented political history of the movement that could now be written. Its analytical clarity and restrained style were made possible by the consultation of unpublished documents and oral testimony available only to a patient researcher willing to settle down in an interior city and listen.

THOMAS E. SKIDMORE
University of Wisconsin,
Madison

ADLAI F. ARNOLD. Foundations of an Agricultural Policy in Paraguay. (Praeger Special Studies in International Economics and Development.) New York: Praeger Publishers. 1971. Pp. xx, 294. $17.50.

An attempt to establish bases upon which an agricultural policy may be developed for Paraguay is certain to encounter monumental difficulties. To explain these obstacles, the author provides a short geographical description of the country, a brief summary of political history, and a disappointing history of land tenure. These three introductory chapters fail to provide the background needed for understanding contemporary conditions. If the reader will turn first to Joseph Pincus, The Economy of Paraguay, published in this series in 1968, the gap can be filled, and Arnold's study will serve as an excellent elaboration of agricultural problems touched upon briefly by Pincus.

Justification for the book is found in the last four chapters. An examination of the minifundia-latifundia problem and the work of the Institute of Rural Welfare (IBR) suggests that there is no immediate prospect that the IBR can fulfill its mission. A chapter on "Paraguayan Plans for Economic Development and their Implementation" describes the objectives of three plans launched in 1965, 1967, and 1969. The last of these plans could result in great benefits if accompanied by what would be miraculous changes in Paraguayan bureaucracy. The problems have been identified, the solutions have been plotted; but implementation has failed miserably, except in a few cases such as road building.

The heart of the volume is chapter 6, "An Approach to Agricultural Development." Here the author correctly endorses the agricultural infrastructure approach that emphasizes transportation, storage, many government services, and extensive contributions from the private sector. The concluding chapter attributes Paraguay's backwardness primarily to its "turbulent history" in which there was almost no road building and property rights were concentrated in very few hands. Most readers with a firm grasp of Paraguayan history will agree with the conclusion that "a strong central government may be the only alternative to anarchy and chaos" (p. 160).

One should emphasize that this is not a history of Paraguayan agriculture but an elaboration of what Paraguay must do in order to develop its agricultural resources. The author, who served in Paraguay with USAID from 1965 to 1970, has a thorough understanding of problems faced by agrarian reformers. His analysis of Paraguay's principal agrarian laws and the plan for 1969-73 show that Paraguayans know what to do; but it also raises the question of whether they will do it. The author is understandably pessimistic.

HARRIS GAYLORD WARREN
Santa Fe, New Mexico

---

Communications

---

A communication will be considered only if it relates to an article or review published in this journal; publication of such a communication or of any part of it is solely at the editors' discretion. Limitations of space require that a communication concerning a review be no longer than the review to which it refers and in no case longer than 500 words. Communications concerning articles or review articles may be no more than 1,000 words, and the editors reserve the right to impose a lower limit. The schedule of publication and the time needed to send a communication to the author of the article or review in question for such reply as he may care to make virtually preclude the possibility of publication in the issue following that in which the original article or review appeared. Unless, in the editors' judgment, some major scholarly purpose is served, rejoinders will not be published.

TO THE EDITOR:

In its two central points Henry F. May's review of my An Unsettled People (AHR, 77 [1972]: 578-81) rather oversteps reasonable bounds. He appears to wish that I had written a different category of book, and—much worse because less obvious—he complains that the one I did write fails to prove a thesis that is, however, no part of it.

The book is frankly a synthetic effort; why should it not include "textbook topics" or cite "standard secondary works"? (It draws on primary sources, too, and could have cited more of them, but Professor May misreads my introductory remarks on sources and citations.) The critical question here surely is not whether the data, or even parts of the argument, are already familiar—indeed, the more familiar the better, if the sense made of them is fresh and valid. If a reviewer claims to find little more in a synthesis of social history than "the old miscellany," he might at least be expected to give a few examples of its failure to integrate conventional topics (Professor May merely names a few of the latter). But I may misconstrue his point. Elsewhere in the review he quite effectively summarizes, with overall approval, the synthesis of leading topics, both novel and familiar. Perhaps he would have preferred a monograph, such as he urges me to write, or else a historiographical disquisition on other people's theories, models, and controversies, though he does not specify what "new ideas, information, and events" one should consider. But there is more than one way to ask "one's own questions" of history, and I hope the book will suggest some to monograph writers and followers of trends.

Professor May's other stumbling block is his recollection, flattering but unfortunate, of a conservative social hypothesis that I proposed in 1960 (AHR, 65 [1959-60]: 495-514). As he observes (quoting that article at much greater length than the book), it included a three-phase cycle running from colonial stability through nineteenth-century instability, anxiety, and reaction and back once again to relative stability in the twentieth century. The article may have been an "arresting skeleton," but the book written in the intervening eleven years does not, I think, represent arrested development; it explicitly reverses the last part of the 1960 scheme. The first two parts, fleshed out, remain generally acceptable to Professor May. But when he comes to the last phase, he complains not only that the proof which he so long though skeptically awaited is missing, but that the book actually proves "again and again" that, just as he suspected, American society has not perceptibly regained stability. (He also chides me for having failed to re-examine my hypothesis!) But the book is not the article, and sufficient to each are the errors thereof.

The most casual reader might well discount, on Professor May's own evidence, the first of his objections. But as it would take a reading of the book itself to reveal that his second line of criticism misrepresents its revised but still radically conservative argument, I trust that the review will dissuade no one from examining it.

ROWLAND BERTHOFF
Washington University

PROFESSOR MAY REPLIES:

I hope the same.

HENRY F. MAY
*University of California,
Berkeley*

TO THE EDITOR:

I hope you will allow me to correct an egregious lapse in my review essay on Stuart parliamentary history (AHR, 77 [1972]: 705-14). The sentence in question read: "Bernard Bailyn has recently stimulated a major re-examination of the American Revolution by suggesting that Locke really did matter to the colonists"—the very reverse of Bailyn's thesis. What I should have written is that political ideas really did matter, not Locke, and I must apologize to Professor Bailyn for misrepresenting his views.

THEODORE K. RABB
Princeton University

Other Books Received

Books listed were received by the AHR between May 1 and July 15, 1972. Books that will be reviewed are not listed, but listing does not preclude subsequent review.

GENERAL

ALEXANDER, EDWARD PORTER (ed., with an introd.). The Journal of John Fontaine: An Irish Huguenot Son in Spain and Virginia, 1710-1719. Williamsburg: Colonial Williamsburg Foundation; distrib. by the University Press of Virginia. 1972. Pp. xii, 190. $4.95.

ALVES, RUBEM A. Tomorrow's Child: Imagination, Creativity, and the Rebirth of Culture. New York: Harper and Row. 1972. Pp. 210. $6.95.

ANDERSON, M. S. The Ascendancy of Europe: Aspects of European History, 1815-1914. [London:] Longman. 1972. Pp. xi, 332. £1.75.

BARLETTA, EDVIGE ALEANDRI (ed.). La depositaria del concilio di Trento. Vol. 1, Il registro di Antonio Manelli, 1545-1549. Ministero dell'Interno, Pubblicazioni degli archivi di stato. Fonti e sussidi, No. 1. Archivio di stato di Roma. Rome: the Ministero. 1970. Pp. xi, 435. L. 5,500.

BARRINGER, RICHARD E., with the collaboration of ROBERT K. RAMERS. War: Patterns of Conflict/Technical Manual. Cambridge, Mass.: MIT Press. 1972. Pp. vi, 127. $5.95.

BORI, PIER CESARE. Koinōnia: L'idea della comunione nell'ecclesiologia recente e nel Nuovo Testamento. Testi e ricerche di Scienze religiose pubblicati a cura dell'Istituto per le Scienze religiose di Bologna, No. 7. Brescia: Paideia Editrice. 1972. Pp. 134. L. 2,000.

BOWETT, D. W. The Search for Peace. The World Studies Ser. Boston: Routledge and Kegan Paul. 1972. Pp. xiii, 236. $8.25.

BUTTERFIELD, SIR HERBERT. The Discontinuities between the Generations in History: Their Effect on the Transmission of Political Experience. The Rede Lecture, 1971. New York: Cambridge University Press. 1972. Pp. 34. $1.65.

CÉSAIRE, AIMÉ. Discourse on Colonialism. Tr. by JOAN PINKHAM. New York: Monthly Review Press. 1972. Pp. 79. Cloth $4.95, paper $1.45.

DARCY, SAM. Late Afternoon for the Nation-State: A Study of the Origins, Growth, Present Position, and Possible Future of the Nation-State as a Form of Social Organization. New York: Cromwell Books. 1972. Pp. v, 408. $8.95.

DEXTER, BYRON (ed.), assisted by ELIZABETH H. BRYANT and JANICE L. MURRAY. The Foreign Affairs 50-Year Bibliography: New Evaluations of Significant Books on International Relations, 1920-1970. New York: R. R. Bowker for the Council on Foreign Relations. 1972. Pp. xxviii, 936. $34.50 postpaid.

FELDMAN, BURTON, and RICHARDSON, ROBERT D. The Rise of Modern Mythology, 1680-1860. Bloomington: Indiana University Press. 1972. Pp. xxvii, 564. $19.95.

FENNELLY, JOHN F. Twilight of the Evening Lands: Oswald Spengler—A Half Century Later. New York: Brookdale Press. 1972. Pp. vii, 181. $5.95.

GALBREATH, ROBERT (ed.). The Occult: Studies and Evaluations. [Bowling Green, Ohio: Bowling Green University Popular Press. 1972. Pp. 126. $1.50.

GARRATY, JOHN A., and GAY, PETER (eds.). A History of the World. Vol. 1, The World to 1500; Vol. 2, Toward Modernity; Vol. 3, The Modern World. New York: Harper and Row. 1972. Pp. xvi, 505; xvi, 308; xvi, 412. $5.50 each.

GAY, PETER, and CAVANAUGH, GERALD J. (eds.). Historians at Work. In 2 vols. New York: Harper and Row. 1972. Pp. xx, 431; x, 406. $15.00 each.

GUTERMAN, SIMEON L. From Personal to Territorial Law: Aspects of the History and Structure of the Western Legal-Constitutional Tradition. Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press. 1972. Pp. v, 7-326. $10.00.

KAVOLIS, VYTAUTAS. History on Art's Side: Social Dynamics in Artistic Efflorescences. Ithaca: Cornell University Press. 1972. Pp. vi, 222. $8.50.

KEOHANE, ROBERT O., and NYE, JOSEPH S., JR. (eds.). Transnational Relations and World Politics. Written under the auspices of the Center for International Affairs, Harvard University. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press. 1972. Pp. xxix, 428. $15.00.

KIRBY, J. L. (ed.). Annual Bulletin of Historical Literature. No. 55, Dealing for the Most Part with the Publications of 1969. [London:] Historical Association. 1972. Pp. 188. £1.

- KORS, ALAN C., and PETERS, EDWARD (eds. with an introd.). Witchcraft in Europe, 1100-1700. Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press. 1972. Pp. viii, 382. $17.50.
- KRANZBERG, MELVIN, and DAVENPORT, WILLIAM H. (eds.). Technology and Culture: An Anthology. New York: Schocken Books. 1972. Pp. vii, 9-364. $10.00.
- KRIVATSY, PETER (comp.). A Catalogue of Incunabula and Sixteenth Century Printed Books in the National Library of Medicine. 1st Supplement. DHEW Publication No. (NIH) 71-296. Bethesda, Md.: U.S. Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, Public Health Service, National Institute of Health, National Library of Medicine. 1971. Pp. v, 51. $2.75.
- KURIHARA, KENNETH K. Essays in Macrodynamic Economics. Under the patronage of the Economic Growth Institute, State University of New York at Binghamton. Albany: State University of New York Press. [1972.] Pp. 160. $7.50.
- LAFFEBER, WALTER. America, Russia, and the Cold War, 1945-1971. America in Crisis. 2d ed.; New York: John Wiley and Sons. 1972. Pp. 339. Cloth $7.95, paper $3.50. See rev. of 1st ed. (1967), AHR, 74 (1968-69): 113.
- LANGER, WILLIAM L. (comp. and ed.). An Encyclopedia of World History, Ancient, Medieval, and Modern, Chronologically Arranged. 5th rev. ed.; Boston: Houghton Mifflin. 1972. Pp. xxxix, 1569. $17.50. See rev. of 1st ed. (1940), AHR, 46 (1940-41): 847.
- LEISS, WILLIAM. The Domination of Nature. New York: George Braziller. 1972. Pp. xii, 242. $6.95.
- LOUGEE, ROBERT W. Midcentury Revolution, 1848: Society and Revolution in France and Germany. Civilization and Society: Studies in Social, Economic, and Cultural History. Lexington, Mass.: D.C. Heath. 1972. Pp. vii, 199.
- LYONNET, STANISLAO. Il Nuovo Testamento alla luce dell'Antico: Lezioni. Associazione Biblica Italiana, Studi biblici pastorali, No. 3. VII Settimana Biblica del Clero, Napoli, luglio 1968. Brescia: Paideia. 1972. Pp. 149. L. 1,500.
- MARX, KARL, and ENGELS, FREDERICK. On Colonialism: Articles from the New York Tribune and Other Writings. New York: International Publishers. 1972. Pp. 382. Cloth $7.50, paper $2.65.
- MILLETT, ALLAN R., and COOLING, B. FRANKLIN, III (comps.). Doctoral Dissertations in Military Affairs: A Bibliography. Bibliography Ser., No. 10. Manhattan: Kansas State University Library. 1972. Pp. v, 153. $5.00.
- MONTAGNINI, FELICE. Rom. 5, 12-14, alla luce del dialogo rabbinico. Associazione Biblica Italiana, Supplementi alla Rivista biblica, No. 4. Brescia: Paideia. 1971. Pp. 83. L. 1,000.
- MUENSTERBERGER, WARNER, and ESMAN, AARON H. (eds.). The Psychoanalytic Study of Society. Vol. 5. New York: International Universities Press. 1972. Pp. 258. $12.00.
- OLNEY, JAMES. Metaphors of Self: The Meaning of Autobiography. [Princeton:] Princeton University Press. 1972. Pp. xi, 342. $12.50.
- PITT, DAVID C. Using Historical Sources in Anthropology and Sociology. Studies in Anthropological Method. New York: Holt, Rinehart and Winston. 1972. Pp. viii, 88.
- RISTOW, WALTER W. (comp.). A la Carte: Selected Papers on Maps and Atlases. Washington: Library of Congress. 1972. Pp. x, 232. $4.00.
- SAHLINS, MARSHALL. Stone Age Economics. Chicago: Aldine-Atherton. 1972. Pp. xiv, 348. $8.95.
- SCHULZ, GERHARD. Revolutions and Peace Treaties, 1917-1920. Tr. by MARIAN JACKSON. London: Methuen; distrib. by Barnes and Noble, New York. 1972. Pp. vi, 258. $12.50. See rev. of German ed. (1967), AHR, 73 (1967-68): 443.
- SHORT, JAMES F., JR., and WOLFGANG, MARVIN E. (eds.). Collective Violence. Law in Action. Chicago: Aldine-Atherton. 1972. Pp. viii, 387. Cloth $12.50, paper $4.95.
- SPITZ, LEWIS W. (ed.). The Northern Renaissance. Sources of Civilization in the West. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice-Hall. 1972. Pp. x, 179. Cloth $5.95, paper $2.95.
- STEARNS, PETER N. The European Experience since 1815. New York: Harcourt Brace Jovanovich. 1972. Pp. xx, 476.
- STIPP, JOHN L., et al. The Rise and Development of Western Civilization. Vol. 2. 2d ed.; New York: John Wiley and Sons. 1972. Pp. xix, 853. Cloth $11.95, paper $8.95.
- WOLFE, MARTIN (ed.). The Economic Causes of Imperialism. Major Issues in History. New York: John Wiley and Sons. 1972. Pp. x, 184. Cloth $7.50, paper $3.50.

ANCIENT

COMBÈS, ROBERT. La République à Rome (509-29 av. J.-C.). SUP: "L'historien," 9. Paris: Presses Universitaires de France. 1972. Pp. 200. 14 fr.

Mélanges de préhistoire, d'archéocivilisation et d'ethnologie, offerts à André Varagnac. Preface by GABRIEL MARCEL. École Pratique des Hautes Études—VI<sup>e</sup> Section, Centre de Recherches Historiques. Bibliothèque générale. Paris: SEVPEN. 1971. Pp. xii, 735.

PALANQUE, JEAN-RÉMY. Le Bas-Empire. "Que sais-je," No. 1455. Paris: Presses Universitaires de France. 1971. Pp. 127.

SALONEN, ARMAS. Die Ziegeleien im alten Mesopotamien. Suomalaisen Tiedeakatemian Toimituksia, Ser. B., No. 171. Helsinki: Suomalainen Tiedeakatemia. 1972. Pp. 206, 52 plates. 52 M.

Sylloge Nummorum Graecorum: The Collection of the American Numismatic Society. Pt. 2, Lucania. New York: American Numismatic Society. 1972. 38 plates. $25.00.

MEDIEVAL

BASIN, THOMAS. Histoire de Louis XI. Vol. 3 (1477-1483). Ed. and tr. by CHARLES SAMARAN and MO-

NIQUE-CÉCILE GARAND. Les classiques de l'histoire de France au Moyen Âge, No. 30. Paris: Société d'Édition "Les Belles Lettres." 1972. Pp. xii, 462.

HOLT, JAMES C. (ed.). Magna Carta and the Idea of Liberty. Major Issues in History. New York: John Wiley and Sons. 1972. Pp. viii, 192. Cloth $7.50, paper $3.50.

MYERS, A. R. London in the Age of Chaucer. The Centers of Civilization Ser., Vol. 31. Norman: University of Oklahoma Press. 1972. Pp. xi, 236. $3.50.

ROBERTSON, WILLIAM. The Progress of Society in Europe: A Historical Outline from the Subversion of the Roman Empire to the Beginning of the Sixteenth Century. Ed. and with an introd. by FELIX GILBERT. Classic European Historians. Chicago: University of Chicago Press. 1972. Pp. xxvii, 185. $9.00.

SANUDO TORSELLO, MARINO. Liber Secretorum Fidelium Crucis super Terrae Sanctae Recuperatione et Conservatione, Quo et Terrae Sanctae Historia ab Origine & Eiusdem Vicinarumque Provinciarum Geographica Description Continetur. Reprint of 1611 ed. Toronto: Toronto University Press. 1972. Pp. xix, 312. $45.00.

TIPTON, C. LEON (ed.). Nationalism in the Middle Ages. European Problem Studies. New York: Holt, Rinehart and Winston. 1972. Pp. 116.

WOLF, GUNTHER (ed.). Zum Kaisertum Karls des Grossen: Beiträge und Aufsätze. Wege der Forschung, No. 38. Darmstadt: Wissenschaftliche Buchgesellschaft. 1972. Pp. 441.

BRITISH COMMONWEALTH AND IRELAND

Archives: Mirror of Canada Past. Archives: Miroir du passé du Canada. [Toronto:] University of Toronto for the Public Archives of Canada. 1972. Pp. 313. $7.50.

BAILEY, ALFRED GOLDSWORTHY. Culture and Nationality: Essays. The Carleton Library No. 58. Toronto: McClelland and Stewart. 1972. Pp. 224. $4.50.

BINDOFF, S. T., and BOULTON, JAMES T. (eds.). Research in Progress in English and Historical Studies in the Universities of the British Isles. New York: St. Martin's Press. 1971. Pp. viii, 109. $5.95.

BUMSTED, J. M. (ed.). Canadian History before Confederation: Essays and Interpretations. Georgetown, Ont.: Irwin-Dorsey. 1972. Pp. viii, 514. $6.50.

DOLAN, J. R. English Ancestral Names: The Evolution of the Surname from Medieval Occupations. New York: Clarkson N. Potter; distrib. by Crown Publishers, New York. 1972. Pp. xvi, 381. $10.00.

EDDY, SPENCER L., JR. The Founding of The Cornhill Magazine. Ball State Monograph No. 19. Publications in English, No. 13. Muncie, Ind.: Ball State University. 1970. Pp. ix, 49.

General Inventory: Manuscripts. Vol. 5, MG26-MG27. Ottawa: Public Archives of Canada, Manuscript Division. 1972. Pp. viii, 243.

GREAVES, C. DESMOND. The Irish Crisis. New York: International Publishers. 1972. Pp. 222. $2.65.

HODGINS, BRUCE, and PAGE, ROBERT (eds.). Canadian History Since Confederation: Essays and Interpretations. Georgetown, Ont.: Irwin-Dorsey. 1972. Pp. viii, 607. $7.50.

JARMAN, T. L. Socialism in Britain: From the Industrial Revolution to the Present Day. The Men and Ideas Ser. New York: Taplinger. 1972. Pp. 224. $6.50.

JOSEPH, B. L. Shakespeare's Eden: The Commonwealth of England, 1558-1629. History and Literature. New York: Barnes and Noble. 1971. Pp. 368. Cloth $12.00, paper $5.00.

LAROCHE, LÉONIDAS. Le second registre de Tadoussac, 1668-1700: Transcription. Département des Sciences Humaines de l'Université du Québec à Chicoutimi. Montreal: Presses de l'Université du Québec. 1972. Pp. xiv, 214, 2 maps. $6.00.

LECKY, W. E. H. A History of Ireland in the Eighteenth Century. Abridged and with an introd. by L. P. CURTIS, JR. Classics of British Historical Literature. Chicago: University of Chicago Press. 1972. Pp. lii, 513. $15.00.

LLOYD, ALAN. The King Who Lost America: A Portrait of the Life and Times of George III. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday. 1971. Pp. x, 369. $7.95.

London Sunday Times INSIGHT TEAM. Northern Ireland: A Report on the Conflict. New York: Random House. 1972. Pp. 316. Cloth $7.95, paper $1.95.

MARX, ROLAND. Le déclin de l'économie britannique (1870-1929). Dossiers Clio. [Paris:] Presses Universitaires de France. 1972. Pp. 96.

NAISAWALD, L. VANLOAN. In Some Foreign Field: The Story of Four British Graves on the Outer Banks. Winston-Salem, N.C.: John F. Blair. 1972. Pp. xiii, 80. $2.95.

NEATBY, HILDA. The Quebec Act: Protest and Policy. Canadian Historical Controversies. Scarborough, Ont.: Prentice-Hall of Canada. 1972. Pp. 142. Cloth $4.95, paper $2.25.

SAINTY, J. C. (comp.). Treasury Officials, 1660-1870. Office-Holders in Modern Britain, Vol. 1. [London:] University of London, Institute of Historical Research, Athlone Press. 1972. Pp. xiv, 161. £4.50.

STRACHAN, MICHAEL, and PENROSE, BOIES (eds.). The East India Company Journals of Captain William Keeling and Master Thomas Bonner, 1615-1617. Publication from the James Ford Bell Library at the University of Minnesota. Minneapolis: University of Minnesota Press. 1971. Pp. 237. $10.75.

TUCKER, ALBERT. A History of English Civilization. New York: Harper and Row. 1972. Pp. x, 726. $12.95.

WOLFE, DON M. Milton and His England. Princeton: Princeton University Press. 1971. Pp. unnumbered. $10.00.

YOUNGS, JOYCE (comp. for the Local History Committee of the Historical Association). Local Record Sources in Print and in Progress, 1971-72. Helps for Students of History, No. 85. [London:] Historical Association. 1972. Pp. 24. 36p.

FRANCE

CONLON, PIERRE M. Prélude au siècle des Lumières en France: Répertoire chronologique de 1680 à 1715. Vol. 3, 1700-1707. Histoire des idées et critique littéraire, vol. 121. Geneva: Librairie Droz. 1972. Pp. 555.

MOREAU, J. Dictionnaire de géographie historique de la Gaule et de la France. Paris: Éditions A. et J. Picard. 1972. Pp. xx, 423, 4 maps. 78 fr.

SIMON, WALTER (ed.). French Liberalism, 1789-1848. Major Issues in History. New York: John Wiley and Sons. 1972. Pp. 163. $6.95.

SOMAN, ALFRED. De Thou and the Index: Letters from Christophe Dupuy (1603-1607). Études de philologie et d'histoire, 26. Geneva: Librairie Droz. 1972. Pp. 108.

VEAUCE, EUGÈNE DE. Les masques mortuaires de Napoléon: Le point de la question. With an introd. by PAUL FLEURIOT DE LANGLE. Paris: La Pensée Universelle. 1971. Pp. 121. 18 fr.

NORTHERN EUROPE

EAGLEY, ROBERT V. (ed. and tr. with an introd.). The Swedish Bullionist Controversy: P. N. Christiernin's Lectures on the High Price of Foreign Exchange in Sweden (1761). Memoirs of the American Philosophical Society, Vol. 87. Philadelphia: the Society. 1971. Pp. viii, 119. $2.00.

HEIKKINEN, ANTERO. Paholaisen liittolaiset: Noita- ja magiakäsityksiä ja -oikeudenkäyntejä Suomessa 1600-luvun jälkipuoliskolla (n. 1640-1712) [Allies of the Devil: Notions of Witchcraft and Demonic Magic and Trials for Witchcraft and Demonic Magic in Late 17th-Century Finland (ca. 1640-1712)]. Historiallisia Tutkimuksia, No. 78. Helsinki: Suomen Historiallinen Seura. 1969. Pp. 394.

HØEG, TOM ARBO, and WASBERG, GUNNAR CHRISTIE (eds.). Industriens historie i Norge: En bibliografi. History of Norwegian Industry: A Bibliography. With an Index of Literature in English, French, and German. Oslo: Norges Industriforbund. 1972. Pp. 172.

JÖRBERG, LENNART. 100 Jahre schwedischer Wirtschaft. Kölner Vorträge zur Sozial- und Wirtschaftsgeschichte, No. 14. Cologne: Forschungsinstitut für Sozial- und Wirtschaftsgeschichte an der Universität zu Köln. 1971. Pp. 47.

VĪKSNIŅŠ, N. Latvijas vēsture jaunā gaismā: Neklāstienē lekcijas Latvijas vēsturē Latviešu kultūras seminārā (1960.-1967.g.) [History of Latvia in a New Light: Lectures in absentia in Latvian History in a Seminar on Latvian Culture (1960-1967)]. Oak Park, Ill.: Krolla Kultūras Biroja. 1968. Pp. 510. $8.00.

GERMANY, AUSTRIA, AND SWITZERLAND

ANCHOR, ROBERT. Germany Confronts Modernization: German Culture and Society, 1790-1890. Civilization and Society. Lexington, Mass.: D.C. Heath. 1972. Pp. 151.

FELDMAN, GERALD D. (ed.). German Imperialism, 1914-1918: The Development of a Historical Debate. Major Issues in History. New York: John Wiley and Sons. 1972. Pp. ix, 221. Cloth $7.50, paper $3.50.

MEDLICOTT, W. N., and COVENEY, DOROTHY K. (eds.). Bismarck and Europe. Documents of Modern History. New York: St. Martin's Press. 1972. Pp. xii, 180. $8.95.

PRICE, ARNOLD H. (comp.). The Federal Republic of Germany: A Selected Bibliography of English-Language Publications, with Emphasis on the Social Sciences. Washington: Library of Congress. 1972. Pp. ix, 63. 70 cents.

EASTERN EUROPE

BARNSTONE, WILLIS (ed.). Eighteen Texts: Writings by Contemporary Greek Authors. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press. 1972. Pp. xxii, 187. $7.95.

LUPU, IOAN, et al. (comps.). Bibliografia analitică a periodicelor românești [Analytical Bibliography of Romanian Periodicals]. Vol. 2, pt. 3-a, 1851-1858. Biblioteca Academiei Republicii Socialiste România și Institutul de Istorie "Nicolae Iorga" al Academiei de Științe Sociale și Politice. Bucharest: Editura Academiei Republicii Socialiste România. 1972. Pp. 961-1344. Lei 41.

ULČ, OTTO. The Judge in a Communist State: A View from Within. [Athens:] Ohio University Press. 1972. Pp. xiv, 307. $8.75.

SOVIET UNION

RAUCH, GEORG VON. A History of Soviet Russia. Tr. by PETER and ANNETTE JACOBSON. 6th ed.; New York: Praeger. 1972. Pp. xiv, 541. Cloth $12.00, paper $5.95. See rev. of 1st ed. (1957), AHR, 63 (1957-58): 127.

SOLZHENITSYN, ALEXANDER. A Lenten Letter to Pimen, Patriarch of All Russia. Tr. by KEITH ARMES. Commentary of WASSILIJ ALEXEEV. Ed. by THEOFANIS G. STAVROU. Minneapolis: Burgess Publishing Co. 1972. Pp. 12. $2.95.

SYMMONS-SYMONOLEWICZ, KONSTANTIN (tr. from the Russian, ed., and with an introd.). The Non-Slavic Peoples of the Soviet Union: A Brief Ethnographical Survey. Meadville, Pa.: Maplewood Press. 1972. Pp. viii, 168. $4.50.

NEAR EAST

BAR-ZOHAR, MICHAEL. Spies in the Promised Land: Iser Harel and the Israeli Secret Service. Boston: Houghton Mifflin. 1972. Pp. viii, 292. $7.95.

FORREST, A. C. The Unholy Land. Old Greenwich, Conn.: Devin-Adair. 1972. Pp. xiv, 178. $5.95.

LANDAU, JACOB M. (ed.). Man, State, and Society in the Contemporary Middle East. Man, State, and Society. New York: Praeger. 1972. Pp. viii, 532. $13.50.

TURKI, FAWAZ. The Disinherited: Journal of a Palestinian Exile. New York: [Monthly Review Press.] 1972. Pp. 156. $5.95.

ASIA

BHARGAVA, K. D. (ed.). Calendar of Persian Correspondence. Vol. 11, 1794-95. [New Delhi:] National Archives of India. [1969.] Pp. xxxvi, 423, xxxiv. $9.00.

DAMPIER, ROBERT. To the Sandwich Islands on H.M.S. Blonde. Ed. by PAULINE KING JOERGER. Honolulu: University Press of Hawaii for Friends of the Library of Hawaii. 1971. Pp. x, 131. $10.00.

HANE, MIKISO. Japan: A Historical Survey. [New York:] Charles Scribner's Sons. 1972. Pp. xiv, 650. Cloth $15.00, paper $6.50.

HARRISSON, TOM and BARBARA. The Prehistory of Sabah. Sabah Society Journal, Vol. 4, Monograph. Kota Kinabalu, Sabah, Malaysia: the Society. 1971. Pp. xviii, 272. M$10.00.

HELLMANN, DONALD C., et al. Forecast for Japan: Security in the 1970's. Ed. by JAMES WILLIAM MORLEY. Princeton: Princeton University Press. 1972. Pp. 249. $9.50.

HINTON, WILLIAM. Turning Point in China: An Essay on the Cultural Revolution. New York: Monthly Review Press. 1972. Pp. 112. Cloth $5.95, paper $1.75.

Japan. OECD Economic Surveys. [Washington:] Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development. 1972. Pp. 78. $1.00.

KAUL, B. M. Confrontation with Pakistan. New York: Barnes and Noble. 1972. Pp. xx, 338. $11.50.

KOFFSKY, PETER L. The Consul General's Shanghai Postal Agency, 1867-1907. Smithsonian Studies in History and Technology, No. 13. Washington: Smithsonian Institution Press. 1972. Pp. v, 46. 60 cents.

LIN, LIM YOON (ed.). Trends in the Philippines: Proceedings and Background Paper. [Singapore:] Singapore University Press for the Institute of Southeast Asian Studies. 1972. Pp. 130. S$7.00.

MEYER, MILTON W. History of the Far East. College Outline Ser. New York: Barnes and Noble. 1972. Pp. ix, 438. $2.95.

MINAMI, HIROSHI. Psychology of the Japanese People. Tr. by ALBERT R. IKOMA, under the auspices of the East-West Center. [Toronto:] University of Toronto Press. 1971. Pp. xvii, 177. $9.00.

MORAES, DOM. The Tempest Within: An Account of East Pakistan. New York: Barnes and Noble. 1971. Pp. x, 103. $5.50.

National Register of Private Records. No. 1, pt. 1, Descriptive List of Documents in the Kapad Dwara Collection, Jaipur (Based on the Information Received from Rajasthan in 1959-60). [New Delhi:] National Archives of India. 1971. Pp. xiv, 202.

NORDBERG, MICHAEL. Asiens historia: Från forntiden till 1914. Stockholm: Natur och Kultur. 1971. Pp. 426.

WHITE, EDWIN LEE. Ten Thousand Tons by Christmas. New York: Vantage Press. 1970. Pp. 187. $3.75.

UNITED STATES

BALDWIN, LELAND D. Reframing the Constitution: An Imperative for Modern America. Santa Barbara, Calif.: ABC-CLIO. 1972. Pp. xiv, 145. Cloth $15.00, paper $5.50.

BEARSS, EDWIN C. (ed.). A Louisiana Confederate: Diary of Felix Pierre Poché. Tr. from the French by EUGENIE WATSON SOMDAL. Natchitoches: Louisiana Studies Institute, Northwestern State University. 1972. Pp. x, 352. $9.95.

BERNSTEIN, BARTON J., and MATUSOW, ALLEN J. (eds.). Twentieth-Century America: Recent Interpretations. 2d ed.; New York: Harcourt Brace Jovanovich. 1972. Pp. ix, 582. $5.95.

BROGAN, JAMES E. (ed.). The American's Search for Identity: A Reader. New York: Harcourt Brace Jovanovich. 1972. Pp. xiv, 432. $9.95.

BURCH, PHILIP H., JR. The Managerial Revolution Reassessed: Family Control in America's Large Corporations. Lexington Books. Lexington, Mass.: D.C. Heath. 1972. Pp. xi, 195. $12.50.

CHAPPELL, GORDON. The Search for the Well-Dressed Soldier, 1865-1890: Developments and Innovations in United States Army Uniforms on the Western Frontier. Museum Monograph No. 5. Tucson: Arizona Historical Society. 1972. Pp. iii, 51. $2.50.

CIRINO, ROBERT. Don't Blame the People. New York: Random House. 1971. Pp. 339. Cloth $8.95, paper $2.45.

CLAR, C. RAYMOND. Quarterdeck and Spanish Grants. Felton, Calif.: Glenwood Publishers. 1971. Pp. xv, 155. $10.50.

COSTELLO, DAVID F. The Desert World. New York: Thomas Y. Crowell. 1972. Pp. 264. $7.95.

CURRY, RICHARD O., and BROWN, THOMAS M. (eds.). Conspiracy: The Fear of Subversion in American History. New York: Holt, Rinehart and Winston. 1972. Pp. xi, 302.

DAVIS, JAMES W. National Conventions: Nominations under the Big Top. Politics in Government Ser. Woodbury, N.Y.: Barron's Educational Ser. 1972. Pp. viii, 116. $1.25.

EBERT, CORA (comp. and ed.). Mitchell Manor: An Account of Waverly Senior Citizens. [Waverly, Iowa:] Waverly Senior Citizens. 1972. Pp. 67. $6.80.

FISHER, LOUIS. President and Congress: Power and Policy. New York: Free Press. 1972. Pp. xvi, 347. $7.95.

FITE, GILBERT C., and GRAEBNER, NORMAN A. Recent United States History. New York: Ronald Press. 1972. Pp. x, 901.

FRASER, WALTER J., JR. William Henry Ruffner: A Southern Liberal in the North. The Citadel Monograph Ser., No. 9. [Charleston:] The Citadel. 1972. Pp. 29.

- GAINES, PIERCE WELCH (comp.). Political Works of Concealed Authorship Relating to the United States, 1789-1810, with Attributions. 3d rev. ed.; Hamden, Conn.: Shoe String Press. 1972. Pp. xx, 226. $10.00.
- GILLON, EDMUND V., JR. Victorian Cemetery Art. Dover Books on Architecture. New York: Dover Publications. 1972. Pp. xiii, 173. $4.00.
- GREENE, A. C. The Santa Claus Bank Robbery. New York: Alfred A. Knopf. 1972. Pp. viii, 267. $6.95.
- GRIFFITH, LUCILLE. Alabama: A Documentary History to 1900. Rev. ed.; University: University of Alabama Press. 1972. Pp. ix, 677. $15.00.
- GUNN, CLARA A. Vacationscape: Designing Tourist Regions. Studies in Tourism-Recreation No. 1. Austin: Bureau of Business Research, University of Texas. 1972. Pp. ix, 238. $8.00.
- HARSTAD, PETER T. (ed.). Reminiscences of Oscar Sonnenkalb, Idaho Surveyor and Pioneer. Pocatello: Idaho State University Press. 1972. Pp. 66.
- HENDERSON, CHARLES P., JR. The Nixon Theology. New York: Harper and Row. 1972. Pp. xii, 210. $6.95.
- HINE, ROBERT V., and LOTTINVILLE, SAVOIE (eds.). Soldier in the West: Letters of Theodore Talbot during His Services in California, Mexico, and Oregon, 1845-53. The American Exploration and Travel Ser., Vol. 61. Norman: University of Oklahoma Press. 1972. Pp. xxv, 210. $7.95.
- HOLSTRUM, GARY L., with the assistance of W. REED WILLIAMS. Activities and Resources of the Galveston Bay. Area Economic Survey No. 33. Austin: Bureau of Business Research, Graduate School of Business, University of Texas. 1971. Pp. xv, 39. $2.00.
- HORNSBY, ALTON, JR. The Black Almanac. Woodbury, N.Y.: Barron's Educational Ser. 1972. Pp. xxiv, 212. $2.95.
- JACKSON, BRUCE (ed.). Wake Up Dead Man: Afro-American Worksongs from Texas Prisons. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press. 1972. Pp. xxii, 326. $14.95.
- JENKINS, ROY. Afternoon on the Potomac? A British View of America's Changing Position in the World. The Henry L. Stimson Lectures, Yale University, 1971. New Haven: Yale University Press. 1972. Pp. 59. $3.95.
- JONES, GEORGE FENWICK, and HAHN, MARIE (tr. and ed.). Detailed Reports on the Salzburger Emigrants Who Settled in America . . . Edited by Samuel Ullsperger. Vol. 3, 1736. Wormsloe Foundation Publications, No. 11. Athens: University of Georgia Press. 1972. Pp. xx, 348. $10.00. See rev. of vol. 1 (1968), AHR, 74 (1968-69): 703.
- KELSEY, DARWIN P. (ed.). Farming in the New Nation: Interpreting American Agriculture, 1790-1840. Publication of the Agricultural History Society, Vol. 46, No. 1. Washington: the Society. 1972. Pp. ii, 239. $5.00.
- KONVITZ, MILTON R. (ed.). The Recognition of Ralph Waldo Emerson: Selected Criticism since 1837. Ann Arbor: University of Michigan Press. 1972. Pp. xvi, 224. $8.50.
- LEDER, LAWRENCE H. America—1603-1789: Prelude to a Nation. Minneapolis: Burgess Publishing Co. 1972. Pp. xi, 300. $10.95.
- LEDER, LAWRENCE H. (ed.). Dimensions of Change: Problems and Issues of American Colonial History. Minneapolis: Burgess Publishing Co. 1972. Pp. vii, 244. $4.95.
- LEVY, LEONARD W. Judgments: Essays on American Constitutional History. Chicago: Quadrangle Books. 1972. Pp. viii, 341. $12.50.
- LOTTICH, KENNETH V. New England Transplanted: A Study of the Development of Educational and Other Cultural Agencies in the Connecticut Western Reserve in Their National and Philosophical Setting. N.p.: Royal Press. 1971. Pp. 314.
- MCHENRY, ROBERT, and VAN DOREN, CHARLES (eds.). A Documentary History of Conservation in America. Introd. by LORUS and MARGERY MILNE. New York: Praeger. 1972. Pp. xviii, 422. $13.50.
- MARCUS, ROBERT D., and BURNER, DAVID (eds.). America since 1945. New York: St. Martin's Press. 1972. Pp. 273. $3.50.
- [NEWTON, HUEY P.] To Die for the People: The Writings of Huey P. Newton. Introd. by FRANZ SCHURMANN. New York: Random House. 1972. Pp. xxii, 232. Cloth $7.95, paper $1.95.
- PENICK, JAMES L., JR., et al. (eds.). The Politics of American Science: 1939 to the Present. Rev. ed.; Cambridge, Mass.: MIT Press. 1972. Pp. viii, 453. $3.95.
- PIKE, KERMIT J. A Guide to the Manuscripts and Archives of the Western Reserve Historical Society. Cleveland: Western Reserve Historical Society. 1972. Pp. xviii, 425.
- PITTSBURGH SECTION, NATIONAL COUNCIL OF JEWISH WOMEN, under the direction of AILON SHILOH. By Myself I'm a Book! An Oral History of the Immigrant Jewish Experience in Pittsburgh. Waltham, Mass.: American Jewish Historical Society. 1972. Pp. xxii, 166. $6.50.
- POURADE, RICHARD F. Anza Conquers the Desert: The Anza Expeditions from Mexico to California and the Founding of San Francisco, 1774 to 1776. Copley Book. [Los Angeles: Ward Ritchie Press.] 1971. Pp. viii, 216. $12.50.
- QUINT, HOWARD H., et al. (eds.). Main Problems in American History. In 2 vols. The Dorsey Ser. in American History. 3d ed.; Homewood, Ill.: Dorsey Press. 1972. Pp. xii, 406; xi, 419. $5.50 each.
- RADOSH, RONALD, and ROTHBARD, MURRAY N. (eds.). A New History of Leviathan: Essays on the Rise of the American Corporate State. New York: E.P. Dutton. 1972. Pp. ix, 265. $3.45.
- REIMERS, DAVID M. (ed.). Racism in the United States: An American Dilemma? American Problem Studies. New York: Holt, Rinehart and Winston. 1972. Pp. 121.

RESEARCH AND POLICY COMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE FOR ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT. Reducing Crime and Assuring Justice: A Statement on National Policy. [New York: the Committee.] 1972. Pp. 86. $1.50.

RIBICOFF, ABRAHAM. America Can Make It! New York: Atheneum. 1972. Pp. 242. $6.95.

SAFIRE, WILLIAM. Eye on Nixon: A Photographic Study of the President and the Man. Ed. by JULIE NIXON EISENHOWER. New York: Hawthorn Books. 1972. Pp. 128. $5.95.

SCHLEBECKER, JOHN T., and PETERSON, GALE E. Living Historical Farms Handbook. Smithsonian Studies in History and Technology, No. 16. Washington: Smithsonian Institution Press. 1972. Pp. iii, 91. 65 cents.

SCOTT, PETER DALE. The War Conspiracy: The Secret Road to the Second Indochina War. Indianapolis: Bobbs-Merrill. 1972. Pp. xxv, 238. $7.50.

SHAW, ROBERT B. History of the Comstock Patent Medicine Business and Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills. Smithsonian Studies in History and Technology, No. 22. Washington: Smithsonian Institution Press. 1972. Pp. 48. 65 cents.

SMITH, PAUL H. (comp.). English Defenders of American Freedoms, 1774-1778: Six Pamphlets Attacking British Policy. Washington: Library of Congress. 1972. Pp. 231. $2.75.

SPELLER, JON P. The Panama Canal: Heart of America's Security. New York: Robert Speller and Sons. 1972. Pp. ix, 164. $5.95.

SPILLER, ROBERT E., and WILLIAMS, WALLACE E. (eds.). The Early Lectures of Ralph Waldo Emerson. Vol. 3, 1838-1842. Cambridge, Mass.: Belknap Press of Harvard University Press. 1972. Pp. xxiv, 590. $20.00.

TICE, GEORGE A. Paterson. New Brunswick: Rutgers University Press. 1972. Pp. not numbered. Cloth $17.50, paper $9.00.

United States. OECD Economic Surveys. [Washington] Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development. 1972. Pp. 57. $1.00.

WATSON, RICHARD A. Promise and Performance of American Democracy. New York: John Wiley and Sons. 1972. Pp. xvi, 619. Cloth $9.50, paper $6.95.

WEBER, RALPH E. (ed.). As Others See Us: American History in the Foreign Press. New York: Holt, Rinehart and Winston. 1972. Pp. xii, 361.

WHALEN, RICHARD J. Catch the Falling Flag: A Republican's Challenge to His Party. Boston: Houghton Mifflin. 1972. Pp. viii, 308. $6.95.

WILLIAMS, ROBERT P. By the Bulls That Redamed Me: The Odyssey of Matthew Lyon. New York: Exposition Press. 1972. Pp. 204. $6.50.

WINSOR, JUSTIN (ed.). The American Revolution: A Narrative, Critical and Bibliographical History. New York: Bicentennial Sons of Liberty Publication; distrib. by Land's End Press, New York. 1972. Pp. 777, 266, appendix. $19.95.

WITT, SHIRLEY HILL, and STEINER, STAN (eds.). The Way: An Anthology of American Indian Literature.

Marc Corporation Book. New York: Alfred A. Knopf. 1972. Pp. xxix, 261. Cloth $7.95, paper $1.95.

LATIN AMERICA

AL'PEROVICH, M. S. Ispanskaia Amerika v bor'be za nezavisimost' [Spanish America in the Struggle for Independence]. Moscow: Izdatel'stvo "Nauka." 1971. Pp. 221.

AL'PEROVICH, M. S., and SLEZKIN, L. IU. Novaia istoriia stran Latinskoi Ameriki [A New History of the Countries of Latin America]. Moscow: Izdatel'stvo "Vysshiaia Shkola." 1970. Pp. 382.

BLAKEMORE, HAROLD, and SMITH, CLIFFORD T. (eds.). Latin America: Geographical Perspectives. London: Methuen; distrib. by Barnes and Noble, New York. 1971. Pp. viii, 598. $19.00.

DELFAR, HELEN (ed., with. introds.). The Borzoi Reader in Latin American History. Vol. 1, From the Colonial Period to Independence; vol. 2, The Nineteenth and Twentieth Centuries. New York: Alfred A. Knopf. 1972. Pp. viii, 214; ix, 294.

HUMBOLDT, ALEXANDER VON. Political Essay on the Kingdom of New Spain. The John Black translation (abridged). Ed. with an introd. by MARY MAPLES DUNN. Borzoi Books on Latin America. New York: Alfred A. Knopf. 1972. Pp. 242. $4.95.

KARNES, THOMAS L. (ed. and with narrative). Readings in the Latin American Policy of the United States. Tucson: University of Arizona Press. 1972. Pp. xii, 302. $4.95.

LEONARD, IRVING A. (ed. with an introd.). Colonial Travelers in Latin America. Borzoi Books on Latin America. New York: Alfred A. Knopf. 1972. Pp. x, 235. $4.95.

LÓPEZ URRUTIA, CARLOS. La escuadra chilena en México (1822): Los corsarios chilenos y argentinos en los mares del norte. Introd. by FERNANDO ALLEGRIA. Biblioteca antartica (Pocket), 18. Buenos Aires: Editorial Francisco de Aguirre. 1971. Pp. xxi, 133. $1.00.

MOORE, O. ERNEST. Haiti: Its Stagnant Society and Shackled Economy. A Survey. Exposition-University Book. New York: Exposition Press. 1972. Pp. x, 281. $8.00.

National Directory of Latin Americanists: Biographies of 2,695 Specialists in the Social Sciences & Humanities. Comp. by the Hispanic Foundation Reference Department. Hispanic Foundation Bibliographical Ser., No. 12. 2d ed.; Washington: Library of Congress. 1971. Pp. 684. $4.25.

PAULSTON, ROLLAND C. Society, Schools and Progress in Peru. The Commonwealth and International Library. Education and Educational Research. Oxford: Pergamon Press. 1971. Pp. xxiv, 312. £4.50.

QUARTIM, JOÃO. Dictatorship and Armed Struggle in Brazil. Tr. by DAVID FERNBACH. New York: Monthly Review Press. 1971. Pp. 250. $6.95.

SCHMITT, KARL M. (ed. with an introd.). The Roman Catholic Church in Modern Latin America. Borzoi Books on Latin America. New York: Alfred A. Knopf. 1972. Pp. x, 225. $4.95.

STEDMAN, J. G. Narrative of a Five Years' Expedition against the Revolted Negroes of Surinam on the Wild Coast of South America from the Years 1772 to 1777. Elucidating the History of That Country & Describing Its Productions, viz. Quadrupedes, Birds, Reptiles, Trees, Shrubs, Fruits, & Roots; with an Account of the Indians of Guiana and Negroes of Guinea. Reprint; Amherst: University of Massachusetts Press. 1972. Pp. xviii, 480. $20.00.

Index to American Historical Review, Volume 77

Compiled by JOHN T. APPLEBY

The titles of articles in the AHR are printed in italics; titles of books reviewed are in quotation marks. The reviewer of a book is designated by (R); communications by (C).

Aalto, Frederick J. (R), 535
 Aandahl, Fredrick (R), 121
 Abernathy, George R., Jr. (R), 134
 Abolitionism: Porter, "The Abolition of the Slave Trade in England, 1784-1807," 143
 Abrahamse, Dorothy de F. (R), 1112
 Ackroyd, P. R., and Evans, C. F. (eds.), "The Cambridge History of the Bible," 1: 94
 "Acta Musei Napocensis," 7, ed. by Daicovicu et al., 806
 "Acton, Lord, and Richard Simpson, The Correspondence of," 1, ed. by Altholz and McElrath, 146
 "Acton, Lord: The Decisive Decade, 1864-1874. Essays and Documents," by McElrath et al., 146
 Adams, Arthur E. (R), 551
 Adams, Geoffrey (R), 154
 Adams, Richard Newbold, "Crucifixion by Power," 1188
 Adams, W. E. (R), 1136
 Addy, George M. (R), 160
 Adkins, A. W. H., "From the Many to the One," 1095
 Adler, Dorothy R., "British Investment in American Railways, 1834-1898," ed. by Hidy, 484
 Adler, Friedrich, 1152
 "Administrative History of India, 1834-1947: General Administration," by Misra, 570
 "Admiralty Jurisdiction and Practice since 1800, The Development of: An English Study with American Comparisons," by Wiswall, 515
 Adshead, S. A. M., "The Modernization of the Chinese Salt Administration, 1900-1920," 564
 Africa, Thomas W. (R), 1423
 "Africa, Colonialism in, 1870-1960," 2, ed. by Gann and Duignan; 3, ed. by Turner, 1164
 "Africa and Its Explorers: Motives, Methods, and Impact," ed. by Rotberg, 813
Africa and the Caribbean in the Atlantic Slave Trade, by Sheridan, 15-35
 "African Education, Essays in the History of," ed. by Battle and Lyons, 815
 "African Societies in Southern Africa: Historical Studies," ed. by Thompson, 822
 "Afrique noire, de Madagascar et des archipels, Histoire générale de l'," ed. by Deschamps, 1:556; 2:1490
 "Age of Energy: Varieties of American Experience, 1865-1915," by Jones, 836
 Agrarian history: Catanach, "Rural Credit in Western India, 1875-1930," 570; Friedrich, "Agrarian Revolt in a Mexican Village," 850; Hammen, Marx and the Agrarian Question, 679-704; Landsberger (ed.), "Latin American Peasant Movements," 604; Lehmann, "Die

Agrarfrage in der Theorie und Praxis der deutschen und internationalen Sozialdemokratie: Vom Marxismus zum Revisionismus und Bolschewismus," 1471; Male, "Russian Peasant Organization before Collectivisation," 178; Merrillat, "Land and the Constitution in India," 570; Powell, "Political Mobilization of the Venezuelan Peasant," 605; Ribeiro, "A evolução agrária no Portugal mediterrâneo," 1464
 Agricultural history: Arnold, "Foundations of an Agricultural Policy in Paraguay," 1531; Conzen, "Frontier Farming in an Urban Shadow," 1508; Mendras, "The Vanishing Peasant," tr. by Lerner, 160; Morineau, "Les faux-semblants d'un démarrage économique," 1454; Murray, "The First European Agriculture: A Study of the Osteological and Botanical Evidence until 2000 BC," 1088; "Third International Conference of Economic History, Munich, 1965," 2: 1407; Volin, "A Century of Russian Agriculture," 178
 Agulhon, Maurice, "Une ville ouvrière au temps du socialisme utopique," 156; "La vie sociale en Provence intérieure au lendemain de la Révolution," 1134
 Agus, Irving A., "The Heroic Age of Franco-German Jewry," 760
 "Ahmedabad: A Study in Indian Urban History," by Gillion, 569
AHR and the AHA: An Editorial, 967-76
 Akashi, Yoji, "The Nanyang Chinese National Salvation Movement, 1937-1941," 565
 Akenson, Donald H. (R), 153
 Akintoye, S. A., "Revolution and Power Politics in Yorubaland 1840-1893," 818
 "Albigensian Crusades," by Strayer, 1433
 Albright, William Foxwell (deceased), 866
 Alexander, James W. (R), 124
 Alexander, Paul J. (R), 1433
 Alexander, Thomas B. (R), 210
 "Alexander and the Hellenistic World," by Welles, 752
 "Algarve económico; Para o estudo de, durante o século XVI," by Romero Magalhães, 162
 "Alienation of Church Wealth in Mexico: Social and Economic Aspects of the Liberal Revolution, 1856-1875," by Bazant, ed. and tr. by Costeloe, 849
 Allardyce, Gilbert (R), 529
 "Alliance Politics," by Neustadt, 489
 "Allied Intervention in Russia," by Bradley, 183
 Allison, Graham T., "Essence of Decision," 1521
 Alouche, Richard, "Evolution d'un centre de villégiature au Liban (Broummana)," 184
 "Als die Schatten fielen: Erinnerungen vom Jahrhundertbeginn zur Jahrtausendwende," by Hallgarten, 1474
 "Alsace, Histoire de l'," ed. by Dollinger, 478
 Altholz, Josef L., and McElrath, Damian (eds.), "The Correspondence of Lord Acton and Richard Simpson," 1: 146

- Amann, Peter H. (R), 1457
 Ambrose, Stephen E. (R), 122
 "America at 1750: A Social Portrait," by Hofstadter, 1502
American Civil War Considered as a Crisis in Law and Order, by Paludan, 1013-34
 "American Education: The Colonial Experience, 1607-1783," by Cremin, 198
 "American Empire: The Political Ethics of Twentieth-Century Conquest," by Swomley, 228
 "American History: Retrospect and Prospect," ed. by Billias and Grob, 1495
 "American Journalism, Development of," by Kobre, 118
 "American Mysticism: From William James to Zen," by Bridges, 201
 "American Place-Names: A Concise and Selective Dictionary for the Continental United States of America," by Stewart, 196
 "American Puritanism: Faith and Practice," by Rutman, 581
 American Revolution: Brown, "Carl Becker on History and the American Revolution," 113; Fast, "The Crossing," 203; Mintz, "Gouverneur Morris and the American Revolution," 203; Morgan (ed.), "Naval Documents of the American Revolution," 5: 831
 "American Shakers: From Neo-Christianity to Presocialism," by Desroche, tr. and ed. by Savacool, 586
 "Americans at Home: From the Colonists to the Late Victorians. A Pictorial Source Book of American Domestic Interiors with an Appendix on Inns and Taverns," by Peterson, 583
 "Americans in India, 1784-1860," by Bhagat, 567
 "Americas and Civilization," by Ribeiro, tr. by Barrett and Barrett, 844
 "America's Heroes: The Changing Models of Success in American Magazines," by Greene, 118
 Ameringer, Charles D. (R), 829
 Aminoff, C. G., "Nyupsatta truppförband i Finland 1770-1808," 1138
 "An quarante: La Belgique occupée," by Gérard-Libois and Gotovitch, 1465
 "Anarchici e anarchia nel mondo contemporaneo: Atti del Convegno promosso dalla Fondazione Luigi Einaudi (Torino, 5, 6 e 7 dicembre 1969)," 733
 "Anatomy of a Scientific Institution: The Paris Academy of Sciences, 1666-1803," by Hahn, 1130
 Anchor, Robert (R), 168, 1468
 Andersen, Valdemar, "Den jyske hedekolonisation," 802
 Anderson, Edgar, "Senie kurzemnieki Amerikā un Tobāgo kolonizacija," 120; (R), 533
 Anderson, M. S., and Hatton, Ragnhild (eds.), "Studies in Diplomatic History," 773
 Anderson, Mary, and Ashby, Eric, "The Rise of the Student Estate in Britain," 1442
 Andrews, Herbert D. (R), 112
 Andrews, J. Cutler (R), 118, 741
 Andrews, K. R. (R), 826
 "Angola," by Wheeler and Pélissier, 820
 "Angola, Education in, 1878-1914: A History of Culture Transfer and Administration," by Samuels, 815
 "Anne, Queen," by Green, 137
 Ansel, Bernard D. (R), 851
 Anthropology: Berkner, The Stem Family and the Development Cycle of the Peasant Household: An Eighteenth-Century Austrian Example, 398-418; Kroeber, Theodora, "Alfred Kroeber," 222
 "Anti-Appeasers: Conservative Opposition to Appeasement in the 1930s," by Thompson, 1127
 "Anti-Poor Law Movement, 1834-44," by Edsall, 1125
 "Apes and Angels: The Irishman in Victorian Caricature," by Curtis, 519
 Apt, Leon (R), 1114
 "Aragonese-Catalan Empire, The Rise of the, 1200-1350," by Shneidman, 126
 Arbena, Joseph L. (R), 605
 Archaeology: Berger (ed.), "Scientific Methods in Medieval Archaeology," 492; Clark, "The Prehistory of Africa," 812; Cunliffe, "Fishbourne," 758; Jessup, "South East England," 1416; Snodgrass, "The Dark Age of Greece," 1419; Wightman, "Roman Trier and the Treveri," 757
 "Archaic Community of the Romans," by Palmer, 755
 "Archaic Roman Religion," by Dumézil, tr. by Krapp, 1099
 Architecture: Bardet et al., "Le bâtiment," 1: 1450; Goldthwaite, The Florentine Palace as Domestic Architecture, 977-1012; Turner, "Town Defences in England and Wales," 1105
 "Aristote, Le Livre de Politiques d'," by Oresme, ed. by Menut, 125
 "Armenia, The Republic of," 1, by Hovannisian, 1488
 "Arms, Men and Governments: The War Policies of Canada, 1939-1945," by Stacey, 232
 Armstrong, John A. (R), 182, 546
 Armstrong, John Borden (R), 1505
 Arnold, Adlai F., "Foundations of an Agricultural Policy in Paraguay," 1531
 Arnold, Herbert A. (R), 175
 "Arnold, Thurman, Social Critic: The Satirical Challenge to Orthodoxy," by Kearny, 227
 Aronson, Shlomo, "Reinhard Heydrich und die Frühgeschichte von Gestapo und SD," 1476
 "Art of the Old West: From the Collection of the Gilcrease Institute," by Rossi and Hunt, 1172
 Ashby, Eric, and Anderson, Mary, "The Rise of the Student Estate in Britain," 1442
 Ashton, Robert, et al., "The English Civil War and After, 1642-1658," ed. by Parry, 134
 "Asia in the Making of Europe," 2, book 1, by Lach, 482
 Askling, John (deceased), 872
 Aspinall, A. (ed.), "The Correspondence of George, Prince of Wales 1770-1812," 7 and 8: 516
 "Astrology, Origins of," by Lindsay, 1421
 "Asylum, The Discovery of the: Social Order and Disorder in the New Republic," by Rothman, 585
 Athearn, Robert G., "Union Pacific Country," 590; (R), 1512
 "Athenian Coinage, 480-449 B.C.," by Starr, 1421
 "Athens, Ancient, Pictorial Dictionary of," by Travlos, 1097
 "Athens, Fifth-Century, The New Politicians of," by Connor, 1097
 Atkinson, Dorothy, and Emmons, Terence (R), 178
 Atkinson, Geoffroy, and Keller, Abraham C., "Prelude to the Enlightenment," 798
 "Atoms and Powers: An Essay on Newtonian Matter-Theory and the Development of Chemistry," by Thackray, 746
 Attanasio, Salvator. See Rossi, Paolo
 "Atti del XLIV Congresso di storia del Risorgimento italiano (Trieste, 31 ottobre-4 novembre 1968) (La fine della prima guerra mondiale e i problemi relativi)," 1485
 "Augsburg, Die Reichsstadt, im 18. Jahrhundert: Verfassung, Finanzen und Reformversuche," by Bátori, 1142
 "Augustus," by Jones, 1101
 "Auschwitz, The Twisted Road to: Nazi Policy toward German Jews, 1933-1939," by Schleunes, 543
 "Australia, New Zealand, and the United States: A Survey of International Relations, 1941-1968," by Reese, 487
 Avagliano, Lucio, "Alessandro Rossi e le origini dell'Italia industriale," 806
 "Aviation: An Historical Survey from Its Origins to the End of World War II," by Gibbs-Smith, 747
 "Avignon Papacy, 1305-1403," by Renouard, tr. by Bethell, 1106
 Axtell, James (R), 1500

- Ayandele, E. A., "Holy Johnson," 817
 Ayerst, David, "The Manchester Guardian: Biography of a Newspaper," 793
 "Azionisti, cattolici e comunisti nella Resistenza," by Valiani et al., 1158
- Bachrach, Bernard S. (R), 757
 "Back to Africa: A History of Sierra Leone and Liberia," by West, 817
 Backer, John H., "Priming the German Economy," 1476
 Backhaus, Helmut, "Reichsterritorium und schwedische Provinz," 129
 Bagwell, Philip S., and Mingay, G. E., "Britain and America 1850-1939," 121
 Bahne, Siegfried (ed.), "Origines et débuts des partis communistes des pays latins (1919-1923)," 505
 Bailey, W. W. (deceased), 1205
 Bainton, Roland H., "Erasmus of Christendom," 128
 Baker, Derek, and Cuming, G. J. (eds.), "Councils and Assemblies," 1089
 Baker, K. M. (R), 1456
 Baker, Maury (R), 1188
 Baker, William J. (R), 149
 Bako, Elemer (R), 167
 Balabkins, Nicholas, "West German Reparations to Israel," 1094
 Bald, Detlef, "Deutsch-Ostafrika 1900-1914," 558
 Ballard, Martin (ed.), "New Movements in the Study and Teaching of History," 1084
 "Banking in Frontier Iowa, 1836-1865," by Erickson, 1508
 Bannon, John Francis, "The Spanish Borderlands Frontier, 1513-1821," 196
 Barany, George (R), 474, 731
 Barber, Richard, "The Knight and Chivalry," 1105
 Bardet, Jean-Pierre, et al., "Le bâtiment," 1: 1450
 Barker, A. J., "The War against Russia, 1854-1856," 180
 Barker, Arthur E. (R), 511
 Barker, Nancy Nichols (tr. and ed.), "The French Legation in Texas," 1: 1510
 Barkin, Kenneth D., "The Controversy over German Industrialization, 1890-1902," 540
 Baron, Samuel H., The Transition from Feudalism to Capitalism in Russia: A Major Soviet Historical Controversy. A Review Article, 715-29
 "Barotseland, The Elites of, 1878-1969: A Political History of Zambia's Western Province," by Caplan, 821
 Barrett, Linton Lomas, and Barrett, Marie McDavid. See Ribeiro, Darcy
 Barron, Caroline M., and Du Boulay, F. R. H. (eds.), "The Reign of Richard II," 1430
 Barros, James, "The League of Nations and the Great Powers," 1118
 Barzun, Jacques, History: The Muse and Her Doctors, 36-64
 "Baseball, American," 2, by Voigt, 218
 "Baseball: The Golden Age," by Seymour, 1518
 "Basle and France in the Sixteenth Century; The Basle Humanists and Printers in Their Contacts with Francophone Culture," by Bietenholz, 770
 Bass, Herbert J. (R), 213
 Bates, Margaret L. (R), 1493
 "Bates, Henry Walter: Naturalist of the Amazons," by Woodcock, 854
 "Bâtiment: Enquête d'histoire économique, XIV<sup>e</sup>-XIX<sup>e</sup> siècles," 1, by Bardet et al., 1450
 Batori, Ingrid, "Die Reichsstadt Augsburg im 18. Jahrhundert," 1142
 Battle, Vincent M., and Lyons, Charles H. (eds.), "Essays in the History of African Education," 815
 "Battle Stalin Lost: Memoirs of Yugoslavia, 1948-1953," by Dedijer, 1160
- Baughman, James P. (R), 1516
 Bauman, Richard, "For the Reputation of Truth," 1502
 Baxter, Annette K. (R), 594
 "Bayeux au XVII<sup>e</sup> et XVIII<sup>e</sup> siècles: Contribution à l'histoire urbaine de la France," by El Kordi, 1453
 "Bayreuther Kreis von seiner Entstehung bis zum Ausgang der Wilhelminischen Ära: Wagnerkult und Kulturelreform im Geiste völkischer Weltanschauung," by Schüler, 1471
 Bazant, Jan, "Alienation of Church Wealth in Mexico," ed. and tr. by Costeloe, 849; "Los bienes de la Iglesia en México (1856-1875)," 849
 Beach, Vincent W., "Charles X of France," 1457
 Bean, J. M. W. (R), 1430
 Beardsley, Edward H. (R), 739
 Beattie, J. M. (R), 512, 1121
 "Bebel, August: Briefwechsel mit Karl Kautsky," by Karl Kautsky, Jr., 1116
 Beck, Henry G. J. (R), 1089
 Becker, Josef, et al., "Das kaiserliche Deutschland," ed. by Stürmer, 538
 Becker, Mervin B. (R), 768
 "Becker, Carl, on History and the American Revolution," by Brown, 113
 "Becket, Thomas," by Knowles, 124
 Beddie, James S. (R), 544
 "Bede, The World of," by Hunter Blair, 124
 Beecher, Jonathan, and Biennu, Richard (tr. and ed.), "The Utopian Vision of Charles Fourier," 779
 Beeler, John, "Warfare in Feudal Europe, 730-1200," 1424
 "Behavioral Approach to Historical Analysis," by Berkhofer, 445
 Behrens, Hedwig, "Mechanikus Franz Dinnendahl (1775-1826), Erbauer der ersten Dampfmaschinen an der Ruhr," 1142
 Beinfeld, Solon (R), 748
 Beisner, Robert L. (R), 1518
 Bell, J. Bowyer, "The Secret Army," 1448
 Bellamy, J. G., "The Law of Treason in England in the Later Middle Ages," 498
 Bellanger, Claude (C), 858
 "Bellèvre and Villeroy: Power in France under Henry III and Henry IV," by Dickerman, 1452
 Benedict, Michael Les (R), 211
 "Bengal, Renaissance in: Quests and Confrontations, 1800-1860," by Poddar, 568
 "Bengal, The Economic History of, 1793-1848," 3, by Sinha, 568
 Benko, Stephen, and O'Rourke, John J. (eds.), "The Catacombs and the Colosseum," 756
 Bennett, Norman Robert, "Mirambo of Tanzania, 1840?-1884," 1493; (R), 823
 "Bentham, Jeremy, The Mind of," by Manning, 141
 Bentley, Arthur F., 1085
 Benz, Wolfgang, "Süddeutschland in der Weimarer Republik," 542
 Berdahl, Robert M., New Thoughts on German Nationalism, 65-80; (R), 1469
 Bereday, George (R), 1405
 "Bereit für Deutschland! Der Patriotismus deutscher Juden und der Nationalsozialismus. Frühe Schriften 1930 bis 1939: Eine historische Dokumentation," by Schoeps, 543
 Berg, Walter L. (R), 843
 Bergamini, David, "Japan's Imperial Conspiracy," 1169
 Berger, Carl, "The Sense of Power," 599
 Berger, Rainer (ed.), "Scientific Methods in Medieval Archaeology," 492
 Berkhofer, Robert F., Jr., "A Behavioral Approach to Historical Analysis," 445
 Berkner, Lutz K., The Stem Family and the Development Cycle of the Peasant Household: An Eighteenth-Century Austrian Example, 398-418

- Berlin, Charles (ed.), "Studies in Jewish Bibliography, History, and Literature in Honor of I. Edward Kiev," 1207
- "Berlin, Imperial," by Masur, 803
- Berman, William C., "The Politics of Civil Rights in the Truman Administration," 1181
- Bernstein, Barton J. (R), 1183
- Bernstein, Richard M. (R), 1475
- Bernstein, Samuel, "Auguste Blanqui and the Art of Insurrection," 1460; (R), 1412
- "Bernstein, Eduard: Briefwechsel mit Friedrich Engels," ed. by Hirsch, 170
- Berry, Charles R. (R), 1529
- Berthoff, Rowland, "An Unsettled People," 578; (R), 585; (C), 1533
- Berton, Pierre, "The National Dream," 600
- Bethell, Denis. See Renouard, Yves
- Betts, John Rickards (R), 218; (deceased), 613
- Betts, R. R., "Essays in Czech History," 545
- "Between Old and New: The Ottoman Empire under Sultan Selim III, 1789-1807," by Shaw, 555
- "Between Philosophy and History: The Resurrection of Speculative Philosophy of History within the Analytic Tradition," by Fain, 110
- Between Science and Art: A Review Article*, by Donald, 445-52
- "Beveridge, Albert J.: American Nationalist," by Braeman, 1074
- "Beyond the Capes: Pacific Exploration from Captain Cook to the Challenger," by Dodge, 1411
- "Beyond the Revolution: Bolivia since 1952," ed. by Malloy and Thorn, 856
- "Beyond the River and the Bay: Some Observations on the State of the Canadian Northwest in 1811, with a View to Providing the Intending Settler with an Intimate Knowledge of That Country," by Ross, 232
- Bhagat, G., "Americans in India, 1784-1860," 567
- "Bible, The Cambridge History of the," 1, ed. by Ackroyd and Evans, 94; 2, ed. by Lampe, 100; 3, ed. by Greenslade, 106
- "Bienes de la Iglesia en México (1856-1875): Aspectos económicos y sociales de la Revolución liberal," by Bazant, 849
- Bienvenu, Richard, and Beecher, Jonathan (tr. and ed.), "The Utopian Vision of Charles Fourier," 779
- Bietenholz, Peter G., "Basle and France in the Sixteenth Century," 770
- Billias, George Athan (R), 831; and Grob, Gerald N. (eds.), "American History," 1495
- "Bills and Acts: Legislative Procedure in Eighteenth-Century England," by Lambert, 1121
- Binger, Carl, "Thomas Jefferson," 204
- Birn, Raymond (R), 774
- Bishai, Wilson B. (R), 554
- Bismarck, Otto von: Pflanze, Toward a Psychoanalytic Interpretation of Bismarck, 419-44; Wittenberg, "Bismarcks politische Persönlichkeit im Bilde der Weimar-Republik: Eine ideengeschichtliche Beleuchtung einer politischen Tradition," 1: 542
- Bitterli, Urs, "Die Entdeckung des schwarzen Afrikaners," 559
- Bitton, Davis (R), 1114
- Bjork, Kenneth O. (R), 164
- Black, Antony, "Monarchy and Community," 762
- "Black Infantry in the West, 1869-1891," by Fowler, 837
- "Black Legend in England: The Development of Anti-Spanish Sentiment, 1558-1660," by Maltby, 785
- "Blacks in Canada: A History," by Winks, 1527
- Blackton, Charles S. (R), 825
- Blair, Leon Borden, "Western Window in the Arab World," 487; (R), 816
- Blaisdell, Charmarie Jenkins (R), 1451
- Blake, Robert, "The Conservative Party from Peel to Churchill," 518
- "Blanqui, Auguste, and the Art of Insurrection," by Bernstein, 1460
- Blendon, Edith James (R), 605
- Blodgett, Geoffrey (R), 217
- Blomquist, Thomas W. (R), 766
- "Blood and Gold: Hungarians in Australia," by Kunz, 825
- "Blueshirts," by Manning, 1448
- "Blum, Robert: Vom Leipziger Liberalen zum Märtyrer deutschen Demokratie," by Schmidt, 1143
- Blyn, Martin R., and Krooss, Herman E., "A History of Financial Intermediaries," 1497
- Boardman, Eugene (R), 187
- Boeck, George A. (R), 1179
- Boegehold, Alan L. (R), 1097
- Bøggild-Andersen, C. O., "Hannibal Sehested," 1; 2, ed. by Degn, 162
- "Bolivia: The Uncompleted Revolution," by Malloy, 856
- Bolt, Christine, "Victorian Attitudes to Race," 149
- "Bonaventure, St., The Theology of History in," by Ratzinger, 762
- Bonazzi, Tiziano, "Il sacro esperimento," 581
- Bonine, Richard (R), 1401
- Bonner, Thomas N. (R), 593
- "Book Collecting, On: The Story of My Drake Library," by Kraus, 508
- Booth, Alan R. (R), 821
- Booth, Christopher C., and Corner, Betsy C. (eds.), "Chain of Friendship," 137
- Borton, Hugh (R), 192
- Bosher, J. F., "French Finances, 1770-1795," 155
- Boudreau, Joseph A. (R), 602
- Boüard, Michel de (ed.), "Histoire de la Normandie," 478
- "Boulanger, General, The Astonishing Adventure of," by Harding, 1461
- Boulding, Kenneth E., "A Primer on Social Dynamics," 1400
- "Bourassa, Henri, and the Golden Calf: The Social Program of the Nationalists of Quebec (1900-1914)," by Levitt, 601
- Bourne, Richard, "Political Leaders of Latin America," 603
- Bowen, Ralph H. (R), 537
- Bowman, Francis J. (R), 120
- Boxer, C. R. (R), 117, 531, 823, 1464
- Boyce, Gray C. (R), 495
- Boyd, George A. (deceased), 1205
- Boyer, Carl B. (R), 746
- Bracher, Karl Dietrich, "The German Dictatorship," tr. by Steinberg, 172
- Bracke-Desrousseaux, A. M. See Luxemburg, Rosa
- Brading, D. A., "Miners and Merchants in Bourbon Mexico, 1763-1810," 848
- Bradley, John, "Allied Intervention in Russia," 183
- Braeman, John, "Albert J. Beveridge," 1074
- "Brandenburg, Mark, Die Germanisierung der, in der märkischen Geschichtsschreibung des 16. Jahrhunderts unter dem Einfluss von Humanismus und Reformation," by Sziborsky, 1467
- Brandes, Joseph, and Douglas, Martin, "Immigrants to Freedom," 216
- Branson, Noreen, and Heinemann, Margot, "Britain in the 1930's," 796
- Branyan, Robert L., and Larsen, Lawrence H., "The Eisenhower Administration, 1953-1961," 1182
- Bratianu, Georges I., "La mer Noire," 809
- Braudy, Leo, "Narrative Form in History and Fiction," 730
- Braunthal, Gerard (R), 1154
- Brazão, Eduardo, "Présence du Portugal en Belgique (De Philippe d'Alsace à Léopold I.)," 801
- "Brazil, A History of," by Burns, 853

- "Brazil, The Political System of: Emergence of a 'Modernizing' Authoritarian Regime, 1964-1970," by Schneider, 855
- Brazill, William J., "The Young Hegelians," 735
- Breck, Allen D. (R), 762
- "Bredt, Joh. Victor, Erinnerungen und Dokumente von, 1914 bis 1933," ed. by Schumacher, 541
- Breen, T. H., "The Character of the Good Ruler," 1175; (R), 198
- "Bremer, Fredrika, och kvinnans emancipation: Opinionshistoriska studier," by Qvist, 1466
- "Bretagne, Histoire de la," ed. by Delumeau, 478
- Brettner-Messler, Horst (ed.), "Die Protokolle des österreichischen Ministerrates 1848-1867," pt. 6, 1: 1459
- "Bridge across the Bosphorus: The Foreign Policy of Turkey," by Váli, 1487
- Bridges, Hal, "American Mysticism," 201; (R), 834
- Brieger, Gert H. (R), 740
- Brilliant, Richard (R), 758, 1097
- "Britain, India, and the Arabs, 1914-1921," by Busch, 1093
- "Britain and America 1850-1939: A Study of Economic Change," by Bagwell and Mingay, 121
- "Britain and the Australian Colonies, 1818-1831: The Technique of Government," by Eddy, 484
- "Britain in the 1930's," by Branson and Heinemann, 796
- "British Army: Civil-Military Relations, 1885-1905," by Hamer, 520
- "British Investment in American Railways, 1834-1898," by Adler, ed. by Hidy, 484
- "British Policy in the Arab World, Foundations of: The Cairo Conference of 1921," by Klieman, 523
- "British Press and Germany, 1936-1939," by Gannon, 797
- "British Social Policy, 1914-1939," by Gilbert, 151
- "Brittany, Ducal, 1364-1399: Relations with England and France during the Reign of Duke John IV," by Jones, 1107
- Broeker, Galen (R), 522, 1448
- Bronte, Sicily, 1154
- Brooks, George E. (R), 817
- Brousse, Paul, 1461
- Browder, George C. (R), 1476
- Brower, Daniel R. (R), 180
- Brown, Benjamin F. (R), 804, 1485
- Brown, Dec, "Bury My Heart at Wounded Knee," 589
- Brown, Elizabeth A. R. (R), 499
- Brown, Harcourt (R), 799
- Brown, Richard H. (R), 1084
- Brown, Richard Maxwell (R), 1504
- Brown, Robert E., "Carl Becker on History and the American Revolution," 113
- Browning, Robert, "Justinian and Theodora," 1112
- Brückmann, J. (R), 127
- Brundage, James A., "Medieval Canon Law and the Crusader," 1104
- "Brunelleschi: Studies of His Technology and Inventions," by Prager and Scaglia, 1112
- Brunhumer, Walter J. (R), 772
- Bryan, William Jennings, 217
- Bryer, Anthony (R), 1109
- Bryson, Thomas A. (R), 1488
- Bucer, Martin, 1113
- Buchanan, R. H., et al. (eds.), "Man and His Habitat," 254
- Bucher, Erwin, "Die Geschichte des Sonderbundskrieges," 1152
- "Buddhism in Hawaii: Its Impact on a Yankee Community," by Hunter, 1413
- Buenos Aires as a Commercial-Bureaucratic City, 1880-1910: Characteristics of a City's Orientation*, by Scobie, 1035-74
- "Buganda, The Mind of: Documents of the Modern History of an African Kingdom," by Low, 1492
- "Buganda in Modern History," by Low, 1492
- Bugg, James L., Jr. (R), 204; (C), 1194
- Bulgakov, V. F., "The Last Year of Leo Tolstoy," tr. by Dunnigan, 549
- Bullough, D. A., and Storey, R. L. (eds.), "The Study of Medieval Records," 493
- Bunselmeyer, Robert E. (R), 487
- Bunting, Josiah (R), 1431
- "Burckhardt, Jacob, und die Renaissance," by Janssen, 1438
- "Burckhardt, Jakob, in der Krise seiner Zeit," by Wenzel, 1438
- Burks, Ardath W. (R), 567
- Burks, David D. (R), 228
- Burns, E. Bradford, "A History of Brazil," 853
- Burns, James MacGregor (C), 859
- Burr, Aaron, 204
- Burstyn, Harold L. (R), 1411
- Burton, E. Milby, "The Siege of Charleston, 1861-1865," 211
- "Bury My Heart at Wounded Knee: An Indian History of the American West," by Brown, 589
- Busch, Briton Cooper, "Britain, India, and the Arabs, 1914-1921," 1093
- Business history: Behrens, "Mechanikus Franz Dinnendahl (1775-1826), Erbauer der ersten Dampfmaschine an der Ruhr," 1142; Cell, "English Enterprise in Newfoundland 1577-1660," 741; Hamnett, "Politics and Trade in Southern Mexico, 1750-1821," 1529; Jenkins, "The Welsh Woollen Industry," 786; King, "Joseph Stephen Cullinan," 591; Ponting, "The Woollen Industry of South-west England," 786; Saporì (ed.), "Libro Giallo della Compagnia dei Covoni," 1109; Seligman, "The Potentates," 1173; Tutorow, "Leland Stanford," 1512
- Butler, Jeffrey (R), 822
- Butt, John (ed.), "Robert Owen," 515
- Byzantium: Browning, "Justinian and Theodora," 1112; "Dumbarton Oaks Papers," 23 and 24: 1109; Dvornik, "Byzantine Missions among the Slavs: SS. Constantine-Cyril and Methodius," 500; Lemerle et al. (eds.), "Actes de Lavra," pt. 1, 1 and 2: 501; Obolensky, "The Byzantine Commonwealth: Eastern Europe, 500-1453," 1433; Sharf, "Byzantine Jewry: From Justinian to the Fourth Crusade," 499; "Travaux et mémoires," 4: 1110
- "Caesars diplomatische Tätigkeit im Gallischen Krieg," by Szidat, 1100
- Caine, Stanley P., "The Myth of a Progressive Reform," 592
- Cairns, John C. (R), 1137
- Calam, John, "Parsons and Pedagogues," 202
- Callahan, Raymond (R), 794, 1414
- Calvin, John, 772
- "Calvinismus und Territorialstaat: Regierung und Zentralbehörden der Kurpfalz 1559-1619," by Press, 1138
- "Cambridge Ancient History," 1, pt. 1, "Prolegomena and Prehistory," ed. by Edwards et al., 490; pt. 2, "Early History of the Middle East," ed. by Edwards et al., 1416
- "Cambridge History of Islam," 1 and 2, ed. by Holt et al., 115
- Cambridge History of the Bible*, by Smith, Funkenstein, and Marty, 94-109
- "Cambridge History of the Bible," 1, ed. by Ackroyd and Evans, 94; 2, ed. by Lampe, 100; 3, ed. by Greenslade, 106
- "Cameralismo e l'assolutismo tedesco: Dall'arte di governo alle scienze dello Stato," by Schiera, 130

- Cameron, Kenneth Walter (R), 201
 Campbell, Charles S. (R), 744
 Campbell, Stanley W., "The Slave Catchers," 209
 "Canada's First Century, 1867-1967," by Creighton, 598
 "Canadian Frontier, 1534-1760," by Eccles, 595
 Cantor, Norman F., "Perspectives on the European Past," 1403
 "Cape Good Hope, 1652-1702: The First Fifty Years of Dutch Colonisation as Seen by Callers," tr. by Raven-Hart, 823
 "Capital Investment in Great Britain, Aspects of, 1750-1850: A Preliminary Survey," ed. by Higgins and Pollard, 1121
 Caplan, Gerald L., "The Elites of Barotseland, 1878-1969," 821
 Cares, Paul B. (R), 141
 "Carnot, Lazare," by Gillispie, 799
 Carr, Dorothy, and Dickens, A. G. (eds.), "The Reformation in England," 453
 Carter, Harvey L. (R), 1510
 Case, Lynn M. (R), 1115
 Cassels, Alan (R), 1156
 "Catacombs and the Colosseum: The Roman Empire as the Setting of Primitive Christianity," ed. by Benko and O'Rourke, 756
 Catanach, I. J., "Rural Credit in Western India, 1875-1930," 570
 "Catholicism and Political Development in Latin America," by Turner, 846
 Catling, Harold, "The Spinning Mule," 786
 Cavarinos, Constantine, "Modern Greek Thought," 1159
 Cecil, Lamar (R), 168
 Cell, Gillian T., "English Enterprise in Newfoundland 1577-1660," 741
 "Central Africa: The Former British States," by Gann, 560
 "Chain of Friendship: Selected Letters of Dr. John Fothergill of London, 1735-1780," ed. by Corner and Booth, 137
 "Challenge of the Prairie: Life and Times of Red River Pioneers," by Drache, 207
 Chamberlin, Eugene K. (R), 1187
 Chang Kuo-t'ao, "The Rise of the Chinese Communist Party, 1921-1927," 1493
 "Change and Apathy: Liverpool and Manchester during the Industrial Revolution," by Vigier, 140
 Chapman, Brian, "Police State," 742
 Chapman, J. K. (ed.), "A Political Correspondence of the Gladstone Era," 792
 Chapman, Stanley D. See Wohl, A. S.
 Charachidzé, Georges, "Introduction à l'étude de la féodalité géorgienne (Le code de Georges le Brillant)," 502
 "Character of the Good Ruler: A Study of Puritan Political Ideas in New England, 1630-1730," by Breen, 1175
 Charanis, Peter (R), 770
 "Charles III of Spain, King: An Enlightened Despot," by Petrie, 160
 "Charles X of France: His Life and Times," by Beach, 1457
 "Charleston, The Siege of, 1861-1865," by Burton, 211
 Charova, Kroumka, et al. (eds.), "Études historiques à l'occasion du XIII<sup>e</sup> Congrès International des Sciences Historiques—Moscou, août 1970," 5: 615
 Chase, Eugene P. (deceased), 1205
 Chatelain, Verne E. (R), 1411
 Chaunu, Pierre, "La civilisation de l'Europe des Lumières," 774
 Checkland, S. G., "The Gladstones," 1445
 Cherepanov, A. I., "Severnii pokhod Natsional'no-revolutsionnoi armii Kitaia (Zapiski voennogo sovetnika)," 1167
 Cheyette, Fredric (R), 759
 "Chilean Politics, 1920-1931: The Honorable Mission of the Armed Forces," by Nunn, 1190
 "China, Communist, 1949-1969: A Twenty-Year Appraisal," ed. by Trager and Henderson, 1167
 "China's Nation-Building Effort, 1927-1937: The Financial and Economic Record," by Young, 1494
 "China's World: The Foreign Policy of a Developing State," by Simmonds, 190
 "Chinese Communist Party, The Rise of the, 1921-1927," by Chang, 1493
 Chinese Revolution of 1911: Lee, "Foundations of the Chinese Revolution, 1905-1912 (An Historical Record of the T'ung-meng Hui)," 187; Rankin, "Early Chinese Revolutionaries," 187
 "Chinese Revolutionaries, Early: Radical Intellectuals in Shanghai and Chekiang, 1902-1911," by Rankin, 187
 "Chinese Salt Administration, The Modernization of the, 1900-1920," by Adshead, 564
 Chiu, S. M. (R), 190
 "Chivalry, The Age of: Manners and Morals, 1000-1450," by Wood, 1105
 Cholvy, Gérard, "Géographie religieuse de l'Hérault contemporain," 1117
 "Christian Tradition: A History of the Development of Doctrine," 1, by Pelikan, 1102
 Christopher, John B. (R), 811
 "Chronicle from Aldgate: Life and Death in Shakespeare's London," by Forbes, 1444
 "Church and State in Modern Ireland, 1923-1970," by Whyte, 1449
 "Church and the Two Nations in Medieval Ireland," by Watt, 764
 Church history: Bauman, "For the Reputation of Truth," 1502; Benko and O'Rourke (eds.), "The Catacombs and the Colosseum," 756; Bonazzi, "Il sacro esperimento," 581; Calam, "Parsons and Pedagogues," 202; Crowther, "Church Embattled: Religious Controversy in Mid-Victorian England," 147; Desroche, "The American Shakers," tr. and ed. by Savacool, 586; Dvornik, "Byzantine Missions among the Slavs," 500; Isichei, "Victorian Quakers," 148; Lemerle et al. (eds.), "Actes de Lavra," pt. 1, 1 and 2: 501; Mason, "Frontiersmen of the Faith," 1178; Pelikan, "The Christian Tradition," 1: 1102; Pilcher, "Samuel Davies," 830; Rutman, "American Puritanism," 581; Sawatzky, "They Sought a Country," 1187; Shaloff, "Reform in Leopold's Congo," 561; Spini, "L'Evangelo e il berretto frigio," 1484; Young et al., "The Victorian Crisis of Faith," ed. by Symondson, 147
 "Cicero: A Political Biography," by Stockton, 1423
 "Cinderella Service: British Consuls since 1825," by Platt, 789
 "Cities of the Prairie: The Metropolitan Frontier and American Politics," by Elazar, 200
 "City Politics: A Study of Léopoldville, 1962-63," by La Fontaine, 819
 "Civil Rights in the Truman Administration, The Politics of," by Berman, 1181
 Civil War: Burton, "The Siege of Charleston, 1861-1865," 211; Klement, "The Limits of Dissent," 211; Nevins, "The War for the Union," 3 and 4: 832; Paludan, The American Civil War Considered as a Crisis in Law and Order, 1013-34; Still, "Iron Afloat," 834
 "Civil War in South Russia, 1918: The First Year of the Volunteer Army," by Kenez, 551
 "Civilisation de l'Europe des Lumières," by Chaunu, 774
 "Civilizations, The Nature of," by Melko, 1083
 Clark, Dora Mae (R), 1122
 Clark, Edward C. (R), 1487
 Clark, J. Desmond, "The Prehistory of Africa," 812
 Clark, John G. (ed.), "The Frontier Challenge," 207
 Clark, Ronald W., "Einstein," 748

- Clarke, P. F., "Lancashire and the New Liberalism," 793
 Clasen, Claus-Peter (R), 771, 1139, 1467
 Claster, Jill N. (R), 764
 Clemoes, Peter, and Hughes, Kathleen (eds.), "England before the Conquest," 1428
 Cline, Catherine Ann (R), 561
 Clive, John (R), 1445
 Clough, Shepard B. (R), 806, 1465
 Clover, Frank M., "Flavius Merobaudes," 1103; (R), 756
 Clowse, Converse D., "Economic Beginnings in Colonial South Carolina, 1670-1730," 1498
 Coghlan, Francis (R), 741
 Cohen, Herbert C. (deceased), 872
 Cohen, Stephen P., "The Indian Army," 1171
 Cole, David C., and Lyman, Princeton N., "Korean Development," 567
 Coleman, Peter J. (R), 576
 Colie, Rosalie L. (R), 1410
 Coligny, Gaspard de, 1451
 Collart, Yves, "Le parti socialiste suisse et l'Internationale, 1914-1915," 1480
 Colleges and universities: Ashby and Anderson, "The Rise of the Student Estate in Britain," 1442; Sloan, "The Scottish Enlightenment and the American College Ideal," 1500
 Collins, Robert O., "Land beyond the Rivers," 1491
 Colmenares, Germán, "La provincia de Tunja en el Nuevo Reino de Granada," 852
 Colonies and colonization: Andersen, "Den jyske hedekolonisation," 802; Anderson, "Senic kurzemnieki Amerikā un Tobāgo kolonizācija," 120; Bald, "Deutsch-Ostafrika 1900-1914," 558; Eddy, "Britain and the Australian Colonies, 1818-1831," 484; Gailey, "The Road to Aba," 818; Gann and Duignan (eds.), "Colonialism in Africa, 1870-1960," 2: 1164; Goldsworthy, "Colonial Issues in British Politics, 1945-1961: From 'Colonial Development' to 'Winds of Change'," 523; Hausen, "Deutsche Kolonialherrschaft in Afrika," 558; Heussler, "British Tanganyika," 820; Nutting, "Scramble for Africa," 561; Pomfret and Shumway, "Founding the American Colonies, 1583-1660," 194; Raven-Hart (tr.), "Cape Good Hope, 1652-1702," 823; Saint-Lu, "Condition coloniale et conscience créole au Guatemala (1524-1821)," 1187; Scham, "Lyautey in Morocco," 816; Shaloff, "Reform in Leopold's Congo," 561; Swinfen, "Imperial Control of Colonial Legislation, 1813-1865," 144; Tetzlaff, "Koloniale Entwicklung und Ausbeutung: Wirtschafts- und Sozialgeschichte Deutsch-ostafrikas 1885-1914," 558; Turner (ed.), "Colonialism in Africa, 1870-1960," 3: 1164; Verlinden, "The Beginnings of Modern Colonization: Eleven Essays with an Introduction," tr. by Freccero, 117
 Colton, Joel (R), 158
 "Coming Apart: An Informal History of America in the 1960's," by O'Neill, 1183
 "Commercial Relations between British Overseas Territories and South America, 1806-1914: An Introductory Essay," by Keeble, 144
 "Commissariat of Enlightenment: Soviet Organization of Education and the Arts under Lunacharsky, October 1917-1921," by Fitzpatrick, 550
 "Common Scientist in the Seventeenth Century: A Study of the Dublin Philosophical Society, 1683-1708," by Hoppen, 797
 "Commoner: William Jennings Bryan," by Wilson, 217
 Communism: Bahne (ed.), "Origines et débuts des partis communistes des pays latins (1919-1923)," 505; Chang, "The Rise of the Chinese Communist Party, 1921-1927," 1493; Davidson, "The Communist Party of Australia: A Short History," 575; Dedijer, "The Battle Stalin Lost," 1160; Deutscher, Isaac, "Lenin's Childhood," 548; id., "Marxism in Our Time," ed. by Tamara Deutscher, 1399; Freymond (ed.), "La Première Internationale," 3 and 4: 1412; Haithcox, "Communism and Nationalism in India: M. N. Roy and Comintern Policy, 1920-1939," 573; Hammen, Marx and the Agrarian Question, 679-704; Hirsch (ed.), "Eduard Bernsteins Briefwechsel mit Friedrich Engels," 170; Horne, "The Terrible Year," 1135; Hsiung, "Ideology and Practice," 1167; Lichtheim, "George Lukács," 1399; Medvedev, "K sudu istorii (Genezis i posledstviia Stalinizma)," 1389; id., "Let History Judge," 1389; Mikhailov, "Istoriia Soiuza Kommunistov," 1438; Slusser, A Soviet Historian Evaluates Stalin's Role in History: A Review Article, 1389-98; Thomas, "Louise Michel," 1135; Trager and Henderson (eds.), "Communist China, 1949-1969," 1167; Tucker, "The Marxian Revolutionary Idea," 1399
 "Communist China's Policy toward Laos: A Case Study, 1954-67," by Lee, 190
 Comparato, Vittor Ivo, "Giuseppe Valletta," 1482
 Comstock, Henry B., "The Iron Horse," 1510
 Conacher, J. B. (R), 518
 "Concert of Europe: A Study in German and British International Theory, 1815-1914," by Holbraad, 1437
 "Conciencia histórica norteamericana sobre la Revolución de 1910," by Meyer, 828
 Condon, M. D. (deceased), 1205
 Cone, Carl B. (R), 789
 "Conflict of Loyalties: Politics and Religion in the Career of Gaspard de Coligny, Admiral of France, 1519-1572," by Shimizu, 1451
 Conkin, Paul K., and Stromberg, Roland N., "The Heritage and Challenge of History," 1402
 "Conkling, Roscoe, of New York: Voice in the Senate," by Jordan, 835
 Connor, Seymour V. (R), 1510
 Connor, W. Robert, "The New Politicians of Fifth-Century Athens," 1097
 Conroy, Hilary (R), 229
 "Conscience nationale en France pendant les guerres de religion (1559-1598)," by Yardeni, 1129
 "Conservative Party from Peel to Churchill," by Blake, 518
 Constantelos, Demetrios J. (R), 499
 "Constantine the Great," by Smith, 758
 "Constitutional Polity," by Schubert, 841
 "Constructive Revolutionary: John Calvin & His Socio-Economic Impact," by Graham, 772
 "Containment of Latin America: A History of the Myths and Realities of the Good Neighbor Policy," by Green, 1529
 Contopoulos, M. (deceased), 1205
 "Contribuables parisiens à la fin de la Guerre de Cent Ans: Les rôles d'impôt de 1421, 1423 et 1438," by Favier, 499
 Conzen, Michael P., "Frontier Farming in an Urban Shadow," 1508
 Cook, Edward M., Jr. (R), 1501
 Cooper, George B. (R), 143
 Coox, Alvin D. (R), 1169
 Coppa, Frank J. (R), 1484
 Corner, Betsy C., and Booth, Christopher C. (eds.), "Chain of Friendship," 137
 Corning, L., Jr. (deceased), 1205
 Corwin, Arthur F. (R), 1530
 Costeloe, Michael P. See Bazant, Jan
 Costigan, Giovanni (R), 519
 "Councils and Assemblies: Papers Read at the Eighth Summer Meeting and the Ninth Winter Meeting of the Ecclesiastical History Society," ed. by Cuming and Baker, 1089
 "Counter Reformation," by Dickens, 453
 Courtemanche, Regis A. (R), 781

- "Covoni, Libro Giallo della Compagnia dei," ed. by Saporì, 1109
 Cowan, L. Gray (R), 557
 Cowen, David L. (R), 838
 Cowling, Maurice, "The Impact of Labour, 1920-1924," 795
 Craig, Albert M., and Shively, Donald H. (eds.), "Personality in Japanese History," 565
 Craig, Hardin, Jr. (deceased), 252
 Crane, Robert I. (R), 570
 Creel, Herrlee G., "The Origins of Statecraft in China," 1: 563
 Creighton, Donald, "Canada's First Century, 1867-1967," 598
 Cremin, Lawrence A., "American Education," 198
 "Crisis of Parliaments: English History, 1509-1660," by Russell, 783
 "Crisis Politics in Pre-war Japan: Institutional and Ideological Problems of the 1930s," by Shillony et al., ed. by Wilson, 191
 "Cromer in Egypt," by Marlowe, 186
 "Cromwell, Thomas, and the English Reformation," by Dickens, 453
 Cronon, E. David (R), 221, 1527
 "Crossing," by Fast, 203
 Crossley, R. N. (R), 1467
 Crowther, M. A., "Church Embattled," 147
 "Crucifixion by Power: Essays on Guatemalan National Social Structure, 1944-1966," by Adams, 1188
 Cruickshank, C. G., "The English Occupation of Tournai, 1513-1519," 504
 "Cuba, Slave Society in, during the Nineteenth Century," by Knight, 848
 "Cuba: The Pursuit of Freedom," by Thomas, 847
 "Cullinan, Joseph Stephen: A Study of Leadership in the Texas Petroleum Industry, 1897-1937," by King, 591
 Cuming, G. J., and Baker, Derek (eds.), "Councils and Assemblies," 1039
 Cunliffe, Barry, "Fishbourne," 758
 Cunliffe, Marcus (R), 113
 Cunningham, Noble E., Jr. (R), 1174
 Curato, Federico (ed.), "Gran Bretagna e Italia nei documenti della missione Minto," 2d ser., 1 and 2: 1115
 Current, Richard N. (R), 587
 Currey, Cecil B. (R), 1503
 Curtin, P. D. (R), 1490
 Curtis, L. P., Jr., "Apes and Angels," 519; (ed.), "The Historian's Workshop," 1403
 Curtis, Mark H. (R), 132
 Curtis, Michael (ed.), "People and Politics in the Middle East," 810
 Cutter, Donald C. (R), 196
 Cuttino, G. P. (R), 493
 "Czech History, Essays in," by Betts, 545
 "Czechoslovak Experiment: 1968-1969," by Sviták, 1161
 Dabney, Virginius, "Virginia," 1174
 Dahmus, Joseph (R), 764
 Daicovicu, C., et al. (eds.), "Acta Musei Napocensis," 7: 806
 Dain, Norman, "Disordered Minds," 585
 "Dalrymple, Alexander (1737-1808) and the Expansion of British Trade," by Fry, 138
 Daniels, Jonathan, "Ordeal of Ambition," 204
 Daniels, Robert V. (R), 1399
 Dannenfeldt, Karl H. (R), 1138
 "Dark Age Britain: Some Sources of History," by Marsh, 1427
 "Dark Age of Greece: An Archaeological Survey of the Eleventh to the Eighth Centuries BC," by Snodgrass, 1419
 Darrouzès, Jean. See Tornikès, Georges
 "Darwins Theorie und der deutsche Vulgärmaterialismus im Urteil deutscher katholischer Zeitschriften zwischen 1854 und 1914," by Dörpinghaus, 537
 Das Gupta, Jyotindra, "Language Conflict and National Development," 572
 Davenport, F. Garvin, Jr., "The Myth of Southern History," 221
 Davidson, Alastair, "The Communist Party of Australia," 575
 "Davies, Samuel: Apostle of Dissent in Colonial Virginia," by Pilcher, 830
 Davis, Calvin D. (R), 223
 Davis, Harold Eugene (R), 1184
 Davis, Richard W., "Dissent in Politics, 1780-1830," 1123
 "Davis, Jefferson, The Papers of," 1, ed. by Monroe and McIntosh, 1506
 Dawn, C. Ernest (R), 185, 810
 "Dawson, Sir William: A Life in Science and Religion," by O'Brien, 843
 "De Regnorum Iustitia: O el control democrático," by Roa Dávila, ed. by Pereña et al., 530
 Deak, Istvan (R), 1151
 "Debates of the Legislative Assembly of United Canada," 1, ed. by Nish, 597
 "De Brahms Report of the General Survey of the Southern District of North America," ed. by De Vorsey, 1504
 Debus, Allen G., "Science and Education in the Seventeenth Century," 511
 Dedijer, Vladimir, "The Battle Stalin Lost," 1160
 Degn, Ole. See Bøggild-Andersen, C. O.
 Deininger, Jürgen, "Der politische Widerstand gegen Rom in Griechenland, 217-86 v. Chr.," 753
 Deininger, Whitaker T. (R), 1084
 Deist, Wilhelm (ed.), "Militär- und Innenpolitik im Weltkrieg 1914-1918," 1145
 Dekmejian, R. Hrair, "Egypt under Nasir," 811 della Cava, Ralph, "Miracle at Joazeiro," 1531
 Delumeau, Jean (ed.), "Histoire de la Bretagne," 478
 Delzell, Charles F. (R), 1158
 Demography: Forbes, "Chronicle from Aldgate," 1444; Hayden, "New South Wales Immigration Policy, 1856-1900," 825; Kulha, "Karjalaisen siirtoväen asuttamisesta käyty julkinen keskustelu vuosina 1944-1948," 167; Kunz, "Blood and Gold," 825; London, "Non-White Immigration and the 'White Australia' Policy," 825; Morineau, "Les faux-semblants d'un démarrage économique," 1454; Roblin, "Le terroir de Paris aux époques gallo-romaine et franque," 1432
 Denisoff, R. Serge, "Great Day Coming," 1180
 "Denmark," by Glyn Jones, 164
 "Depletion Myth: A History of Railroad Use of Timber," by Olson, 1515
 "Depretis, Agostino, La formazione politica di," by Talamo, 804 de Roover, Raymond (deceased), 1202
 Deschamps, Hubert (ed.), "Histoire générale de l'Afrique noire, de Madagascar et des archipels," 1: 556; 2: 1490
 Desroche, Henri, "The American Shakers," tr. and ed. by Savacool, 586
 Deutsch, Harold C. See Groscurth, Helmuth
 "Deutsch-Ostafrika 1900-1914: Eine Studie über Verwaltung, Interessengruppen und wirtschaftliche Erschliessung," by Bald, 558
 "Deutsche Baltikumpolitik zwischen Brest-Litovsk und Compiègne: Ein Beitrag zur 'Kriegszielsdiskussion'," by Volkmann, 171
 "Deutsche Kolonialherrschaft in Afrika: Wirtschaftsinteressen und Kolonialverwaltung in Kamerun vor 1914," by Hausen, 558
 Deutscher, Isaac, "Lenin's Childhood," 548; "Marxism in Our Time," ed. by Tamara Deutscher, 1399
 "Deutschland und die Vereinigten Staaten 1933-1939:

- Wirtschaft und Politik in der Entwicklung des deutsch-amerikanischen Gegensatzes," by Schröder, 121
- "de Valera, Eamon," by Longford and O'Neill, 524
- Devèze, Michel, "L'Europe et le monde à la fin du XVIII<sup>e</sup> siècle," 776
- De Vorse, Louis, Jr. (ed.), "De Brahm's Report of the General Survey in the Southern District of North America," 1504
- Devotional Revolution in Ireland, 1850-75*, by Larkin, 625-52
- DiBacco, Thomas V. (C), 860
- Dibble, Ernest F., and Newton, Earle W. (eds.), "Spain and Her Rivals on the Gulf Coast," 1411
- Dickens, A. G., "The Counter Reformation," "The English Reformation," "Lollards and Protestants in the Diocese of York, 1509-1558," "Martin Luther and the Reformation," "Reformation and Society in Sixteenth-Century Europe," "Thomas Cromwell and the English Reformation," 453; and Carr, Dorothy (eds.), "The Reformation in England," 453
- Dickens, A. G., and the Men of the Sixteenth Century: A Review Article*, by Morrissey, 453-62
- Dickerman, Edmund H., "Bellière and Villeroi," 1452
- Dillen, J. G. van, "Van rijkdom en regenten," 531
- "Dinkelsbühl, Untersuchungen zur Geschichte der Reformation in der ehemaligen freien Reichsstadt," by Seubert, 802
- "Dinnendahl, Mechanikus Franz (1775-1826), Erbauer der ersten Dampfmaschine an der Ruhr: Leben und Wirken aus zeitgenössischen Quellen," by Behrens, 1142
- "Diplomatic History, Studies in: Essays in Memory of David Bayne Horn," ed. by Hutton and Anderson, 773
- "Diplomatiia agresorov: Germano-italo-iaponskii fashistskii blok. Istoriia ego vozniknoveniia i krakha," by Israëlian and Kutakov, 1414
- "Disaster at Bari," by Infield, 749
- "Disordered Minds: The First Century of Eastern State Hospital in Williamsburg, Virginia, 1766-1866," by Dain, 585
- "Dispatches with Related Documents of Milanese Ambassadors in France and Burgundy, 1450-1483," 1 and 2, ed. by Kendall and Ilardi, 495
- "Dissent in Politics, 1780-1830: The Political Life of William Smith, MP," by Davis, 1123
- Diwald, Hellmut. See Gerlach, Ernst Ludwig von
- Dodge, Ernest S., "Beyond the Capes," 1411
- Dörpinghaus, Hermann Josef, "Darwins Theorie und der deutsche Vulgärmaterialismus im Urteil deutscher katholischer Zeitschriften zwischen 1854 und 1914," 537
- Dollinger, Philippe (ed.), "Histoire de l'Alsace," 478
- Donald, David Herbert, Between Science and Art: A Review Article, 445-52; (R), 1506
- "Donets'ka Oblast'," ed. by Ponomar'ov et al., 546
- Dorpalden, Andreas (R), 538, 1143, 1470
- Dougall, Richardson (R), 750
- Douglas, Martin, and Brandes, Joseph, "Immigrants to Freedom," 216
- Douglas, Roy, "The History of the Liberal Party, 1895-1970," 1126
- Douglas-Hamilton, James, "Motive for a Mission," 1149
- Downey, Glanville (R), 1102
- Drache, Hiram M., "The Challenge of the Prairie," 207
- Drake, Stillman, "Galileo Studies," 1436
- "Drake, Sir Francis: A Pictorial Biography," by Kraus, 508
- Drew, K. F. (R), 761
- "Drôle de guerre: La vie-politique en France, 2 septembre 1939-10 mai 1940," by Rossi-Landi, 1136
- "Dublin Castle and the 1916 Rising," by Ó Broin, 522
- Dublin Philosophical Society, 797
- Du Boulay, F. R. H., and Barron, Caroline M. (eds.), "The Reign of Richard II," 1430
- Dudley, Donald R., "The Romans," 755
- Duggan, Paul R. (R), 171
- Duignan, Peter, and Gann, L. H. (eds.), "Colonialism in Africa, 1870-1960," 2: 1164
- Dulles, John W. F. (R), 855
- Duly, Leslie Clement (R), 573
- "Dumbarton Oaks Papers," 23 and 24: 1109
- Dumézil, Georges, "Archaic Roman Religion," tr. by Krapp, 1099
- Dunham, Harold H. (deceased), 243
- Dunham, William Huse, Jr. (R), 510, 1106
- Dunn, Richard S. (R), 194
- Dunnigan, Ann. See Bulgakov, V. F.
- Dupont, Ernst. See Gad, Finn
- Dvornik, Francis, "Byzantine Missions among the Slavs," 500
- Dybdahl, Vagn, "Partier og erhverv," 533
- "Dynamics of Counterrevolution in Europe, 1870-1956: An Analytic Framework," by Mayer, 1440
- "Eagles on the Crescent: Germany, Austria, and the Diplomacy of the Turkish Alliance, 1914-1918," by Weber, 131
- "Early Stuart Studies: Essays in Honor of David Harris Willson," ed. by Reinmuth, 133
- Eaves, Richard Glen, "Henry VIII's Scottish Diplomacy, 1513-1524," 1118
- Eccles, W. J., "The Canadian Frontier, 1534-1760," 595
- Economic history: Adler, "British Investment in American Railways, 1834-1898," ed. by Hidy, 484; Avagliano, "Alessandro Rossi e le origini dell'Italia industriale," 806; Backer, "Priming the German Economy," 1476; Bagwell and Mingay, "Britain and America 1850-1939," 121; Bardet et al., "Le bâtiment," 1: 1450; Barkin, "The Controversy over German Industrialization, 1890-1902," 540; Baron, The Transition from Feudalism to Capitalism in Russia: A Major Soviet Historical Controversy. A Review Article, 715-29; Bhagat, "Americans in India, 1784-1860," 567; Boshier, "French Finances, 1770-1795," 155; Brading, "Miners and Merchants in Bourbon Mexico, 1763-1810," 848; Clowse, "Economic Beginnings in Colonial South Carolina, 1670-1730," 1498; Dillen, "Van rijkdom en regenten," 531; Erickson, "Banking in Frontier Iowa, 1836-1865," 1508; Favier, "Les contribuables parisiens à la fin de la Guerre de Cent Ans," 499; Feldbæk, "India Trade under the Danish Flag, 1772-1808," 824; Finn, "The Norman Conquest and Its Effects on the Economy," 497; Furtado, "Economic Development of Latin America," tr. by Macedo, 845; Gould, "The Great Debasement," 784; Hansen, "Early Industrialisation in Denmark," 534; Hartwell (ed.), "The Industrial Revolution," 139; Hermanns, "Die Handelskammer für den Kreis Mülheim am Rhein (1871-1914) und die Wirtschaft des Köln-Mülheimer Raumes," 169; Hicks, "A Theory of Economic History," 1087; Higgins and Pollard (eds.), "Aspects of Capital Investment in Great Britain, 1750-1850," 1121; Higgs, "The Transformation of the American Economy, 1865-1914," 1514; Hughes, "Industrialization and Economic History," 1087; Keeble, "Commercial Relations between British Overseas Territories and South America, 1806-1914," 144; Krooss and Blyn, "A History of Financial Intermediaries," 1497; Milward, "The New Order and the French Economy," 159; Myers, "A Financial History of the United States," 197; Nightingale, "Trade and Empire in Western India, 1784-1806," 824; O'Brien, "J. R. McCulloch," 145; Ponko, "The Privy Council and the Spirit of Elizabethan Economic Management, 1558-1603," 507; Romero Magalhães, "Para o estudo de Algarve económico durante o século XVI," 162; Schwarzkopf, "Die

- Rechnungslegung des Humbert de Plaine über die Jahre 1448 bis 1452," 761; Semmel, "The Rise of Free Trade Imperialism," 513; Shunkov et al. (eds.), "Perekhod ot feodalizma k kapitalizmu v Rossii," 715; Sinha, "The Economic History of Bengal, 1793-1848," 3: 568; Stromer, "Oberdeutsche Hochfinanz, 1350-1450," 761; Taylor, "Georgia Plan," 1498; "Third International Conference of Economic History, Munich, 1965," 2: 1407; Young, "China's Nation-Building Effort, 1927-1937," 1494
- Eddy, J. J., "Britain and the Australian Colonies, 1818-1831," 484
- Edsall, Nicholas C., "The Anti-Poor Law Movement, 1834-44," 1125
- Education: Battle and Lyons (eds.), "Essays in the History of African Education," 815; Cremin, "American Education," 198; Debus, "Science and Education in the Seventeenth Century," 511; Fitzpatrick, "The Commissariat of Enlightenment," 550; Hurt, "Education in Evolution: Church, State, Society and Popular Education, 1800-1870," 1124; Moltmann and Reimers (eds.), "Zeitgeschichte im Film- und Tondokument," 473; O'Malley (ed.), "The History of Medical Education: An International Symposium Held February 5-9, 1968," 739; Samuels, "Education in Angola, 1878-1914," 815
- "Edward VI: The Threshold of Power. The Dominance of the Duke of Northumberland," by Jordan, 132
- Edwards, I. E. S., et al. (eds.), "The Cambridge Ancient History," 1, pt. 1, 490; pt. 2, 1416
- Egbert, Donald Drew, "Social Radicalism and the Arts," 777
- "Egypt under Nasir: A Study in Political Dynamics," by Dekmejian, 811
- "Einstein: The Life and Times," by Clark, 748
- "Eisenhower Administration, 1953-1961: A Documentary History," by Branyan and Larsen, 1182
- Eisenstein, Elizabeth L. (C), 859
- Ekman, Ernst (R), 162, 533
- "Ekspansionistskaia politika SShA v nachale XX veka," by Zubok, 219
- Elazar, Daniel J., "Cities of the Prairie," 200
- "Elizabethan Privy Council in the Fifteen-seventies," by Pulman, 508
- "Elizabethan Recusancy in Cheshire," by Wark, 785
- El Kordi, Mohamed, "Bayeux au XVII<sup>e</sup> et XVIII<sup>e</sup> siècles," 1453
- Ellersieck, Heinz E. (R), 129, 534
- Elliott, J. H., "The Old World and the New, 1492-1650," 1435
- Ellis, Edward Robb, "A Nation in Torment," 226
- Elrod, Richard B. (R), 1459
- Elton, G. R., "Political History," 445
- Embree, Ainslie T. (R), 568, 745
- Emmanuel, Isaac S. and Suzanne A., "History of the Jews of the Netherlands Antilles," 1 and 2: 851
- Emmons, Terence, and Atkinson, Dorothy (R), 178
- "Empereur insolite: Rodolphe II de Habsbourg (1552-1612)," by Erlanger, 1150
- "Emperors and Biography: Studies in the Historia Augusta," by Syme, 1101
- "End of a Tradition: Culture Change and Development in the Municipio of Cunha, São Paulo, Brazil," by Shirley, 1189
- "Ende auf dem Balkan 1944/45: Die militärische Räumung Jugoslawiens durch die deutsche Wehrmacht," by Hnilicka, 782
- "Engels, Friedrich: Briefwechsel mit Eduard Bernstein," ed. by Hirsch, 170
- "England before the Conquest: Studies in Primary Sources Presented to Dorothy Whitelock," ed. by Clemoes and Hughes, 1428
- "English Civil War and After, 1642-1658," by Ashton et al., ed. by Parry, 134
- "English Reformation," by Dickens, 453
- "English Society, Modern: History and Structure 1850-1970," by Ryder and Silver, 146
- "Engraved America: Iconography of America through 1800," by Glaser, 479
- "Enquêtes et documents," 1: 615
- "Entdeckung des schwarzen Afrikaners: Versuch einer Geistesgeschichte der europäisch-afrikanischen Beziehungen an der Guineaküste im 17. und 18. Jahrhundert," by Bitterli, 559
- "Enterprise Denied: Origins of the Decline of American Railroads, 1897-1917," by Martin, 1516
- Erasmus, Desiderius: Bainton, "Erasmus of Christendom," 128; Peremans, "Erasmus et Bucer d'après leur correspondance," 1113
- Erdmann, Yella, "Der livländische Staatsmann Johann Reinhold von Patkul," 533
- Erickson, Erling A., "Banking in Frontier Iowa, 1836-1865," 1508
- Erikson, Erik H. (C), 860
- Erlanger, Philippe, "L'empereur insolite," 1150
- "Essence of Decision: Explaining the Cuban Missile Crisis," by Allison, 1521
- "Essex, Robert, Earl of," by Lacey, 509
- "Etudes historiques 1970 publiées à l'occasion du XIII<sup>e</sup> Congrès International des Sciences Historiques par la Commission Nationale des Historiens Hongrois," 1: 616
- "Etudes historiques à l'occasion du XIII<sup>e</sup> Congrès International des Sciences Historiques—Moscou, août 1970," 5, ed. by Charova et al., 615
- "Europe et le monde à la fin du XVIII<sup>e</sup> siècle," by Devèze, 776
- "European Socialists and the American Promised Land," by Moore, 121
- "Evangelo e il berretto frigio: Storia della Chiesa Cristiana Libera in Italia, 1870-1904," by Spini, 1484
- Evans, C. F., and Ackroyd, P. R. (eds.), "The Cambridge History of the Bible," 1: 94
- Evans, Emyr Estyn, 254
- Evans, Geraint N. D. (deceased), 1198
- Evans, J. A. S. (R), 758
- "Evolução agrária no Portugal mediterrâneo: Notícia e comentário de uma obra de Albert Silbert," by Ribeiro, 1464
- "Evolution d'un centre de villégiature au Liban (Broummana)," by Alouche, 184
- Fagan, Brian M. (R), 556
- "Failure of Independent Liberalism, 1930-1941," by Lawson, 842
- Fain, Haskell, "Between Philosophy and History," 110
- Fairman, Charles, "History of the Supreme Court of the United States," 6, pt. 1: 1512
- Fak'ary, Majid, "A History of Islamic Philosophy," 553
- Falconeri, G. Ralph (R), 191
- "Families against the City: Middle Class Homes of Industrial Chicago, 1872-1890," by Sennett, 212
- "Fanon," by Geismar, 814
- Farinacci, Roberto, 1157
- Fascism: Fornari, "Mussolini's Gadfly," 1157; Glaus, "Die Nationale Front," 1154; Manning, "The Blueshirts," 1448; Sarti, "Fascism and the Industrial Leadership in Italy, 1919-1940: A Study in the Expansion of Private Power under Fascism," 545; Sechi, "Dopoguerra e fascismo in Sardegna," 178; "Toscana nel regime fascista (1922-1939)," 1156
- Fast, Howard, "The Crossing," 203
- "Faux-semblants d'un démarrage économique: Agriculture et démographie en France au XVIII<sup>e</sup> siècle," by Morineau, 1454

- Favier, Jean, "Les contribuables parisiens à la fin de la Guerre de Cent Ans," 499
- "Federal Concept in Canada, The Emergence of the, 1839-1845," by Ormsby, 597
- Fedyshyn, Oleh S., "Germany's Drive to the East and the Ukrainian Revolution, 1917-1918," 182
- "Feedback Control, The Origins of," by Mayr, 738
- "Feedback Mechanisms in the Historical Collections of the National Museum of History and Technology," by Mayr, 738
- Feeney, William R. (R), 1159
- Fehrenbacher, Don E. (R), 832
- Feilchenfeldt, Konrad, "Varnhagen von Ense als Historiker," 536
- Feist, Ursula, and Feist, Günter (eds.), "Kunst und Künstler," 1472
- Feldbæk, Ole, "India Trade under the Danish Flag, 1772-1808," 824
- Feldstein, Stanley, "Once a Slave," 209
- Felix, David, "Walther Rathenau and the Weimar Republic," 1147; (R), 1148
- "Féodalité géorgienne, Introduction à l'étude de la (Le code de Georges le Brillant)," by Charachidzé, 502
- Ferguson, J. Wilson (R), 1118
- Ferguson, John, "The Religions of the Roman Empire," 1102
- Ferguson, Wallace K., 1410
- Fergusson, Bernard, "The Trumpet in the Hall, 1930-1958," 1414
- Ferrell, Robert H. (R), 230
- Ferrill, Arthur (R), 755
- Fetter, Bruce (R), 819
- Feuerwerker, Albert (R), 1494
- Fields, A. Belden, "Student Politics in France," 529
- Fifoot, C. H. S., "Frederic William Maitland," 791
- "Film- und Tondokument, Zeitgeschichte im: 17. historische, pädagogische und sozialwissenschaftliche Beiträge," ed. by Moltmann and Reimers, 473
- "Financial History of the United States," by Myers, 197
- "Finanzpolitik des Deutschen Reiches von 1903 bis 1913: Eine Studie zur Innenpolitik des Wilhelminischen Deutschland," by Witt, 171
- Finley, David D. (R), 1414
- Finn, R. Welldon, "The Norman Conquest and Its Effects on the Economy," 497
- Florentino, J. A. (deceased), 1205
- First, Ruth, "Power in Africa," 814
- "First Mail West: Stagecoach Lines on the Santa Fe Trail," by Taylor, 1510
- Fischer, David Hacker, "Historians' Fallacies," 113
- Fischer, Thomas, "Untersuchungen zum Partherkrieg Antiochos' VII. im Rahmen der Seleukidengeschichte," 1422
- "Fishbourne: A Roman Palace and Its Garden," by Cunliffe, 758
- Fisher, J. R., "Government and Society in Colonial Peru," 855
- Fitzgibbon, Louis, "Katyn," 1486
- Fitzgibbon, Russell H. (R), 847
- Fitzpatrick, John J. (C), 1194
- Fitzpatrick, Sheila, "The Commissariat of Enlightenment," 550
- Fitzsimons, Louise, "The Kennedy Doctrine," 1521
- Fitzsimons, M. A. (R), 797
- Flammer, Philip M. (R), 747
- Fleming, Thomas, "The Man Who Dared the Lightning," 1503
- Florence, Ronald, "Fritz," 1152
- Florentine Palace as Domestic Architecture*, by Goldthwaite, 977-1012
- "Florilegium Historiale: Essays Presented to Wallace K. Ferguson," ed. by Rowe and Stockdale, 1410
- Floyd, Troy S. (R), 1187
- "For the Reputation of Truth: Politics, Religion, and Conflict among the Pennsylvania Quakers, 1750-1800," by Bauman, 1502
- Forbes, Thomas Rogers, "Chronicle from Aldgate," 1444
- Ford, Franklin L. (R), 1406
- "Foreign Relations of the United States, 1946," 2, "Council of Foreign Ministers," 3, "Paris Peace Conference: Proceedings," 4, "Paris Peace Conference: Documents," 230
- Fornara, Charles W., "Herodotus," 1096
- Fornari, Harry, "Mussolini's Gadfly," 1157
- Forster, D. F., and Pickersgill, J. W., "The Mackenzie King Record," 3 and 4: 602
- Forster, Kent (R), 166
- Forster, Robert (R), 478, 1407
- Fortescue, Sir John, 1431
- "Foster, Vere, 1819-1900: An Irish Benefactor," by McNeill, 153
- Fothergill, John, 137
- Fotiev, Cyril (R), 547
- "Foundations of an Agricultural Policy in Paraguay," by Arnold, 1531
- "Foundations of the Chinese Revolution, 1905-1912 (An Historical Record of the Tung-meng Hui)," by Lee, 187
- "Foundations of the Modern World," by Gottschalk et al., 1406
- Founding Fathers and Slavery*, by Freehling, 81-93
- "Founding the American Colonies, 1583-1660," by Pomfret and Shumway, 194
- "Fourier, Charles, The Utopian Vision of: Selected Texts on Work, Love, and Passionate Attraction," tr. and ed. by Beecher and Bienvenu, 779
- Fourth and the Fourteenth Centuries*, by Strayer, 1-14
- Fowler, Arlen L., "The Black Infantry in the West, 1869-1891," 837
- Fox, Edward Whiting, "History in Geographic Perspective," 1086
- "Fox, Charles James, and the Disintegration of the Whig Party, 1782-1794," by Mitchell, 142
- "France and the Eighteenth-Century Corsican Question," by Hall, 1132
- "France devant l'opinion canadienne (1760-1815)," by Galarneau, 596
- "Franciaország és a keleti biztonság 1931-1936," by Ormos, 506
- "Franco's Spain, The Origins of: The Right, the Republic and Revolution, 1931-1936," by Robinson, 161
- Franklin, William M. (R), 1092
- Franklin, Benjamin: Fleming, "The Man Who Dared the Lightning," 1503
- "Frankreich und die deutschen Protestanten: Die Bemühungen um eine religiöse Konkordie und die französische Bündnispolitik in den Jahren 1534/35," by Seidel, 1114
- Frantz, Joe B. (R), 591
- Freccero, Yvonne. See Verlinden, Charles
- "Free Press/Free People: The Best Cause," by Hohenberg, 741
- "Free Trade Imperialism, The Rise of: Classical Political Economy, the Empire of Free Trade and Imperialism, 1750-1850," by Semmler, 513
- Freehling, William W., The Founding Fathers and Slavery, 81-93
- Freeland, Richard M., "The Truman Doctrine and the Origins of McCarthyism," 1520
- Freeman, A. Z. (R), 1105
- Freeman, Richard, "Repentance and Revolt," 445
- Frei Montalva, Eduardo, 603
- "Frémont, John Charles, The Expeditions of," 1, ed. by Jackson and Spence, 1509
- "French Democratic Left, 1963-1969: Toward a Modern Party System," by Wilson, 1137

- "French Finances, 1770-1795: From Business to Bureaucracy," by Bosher, 155
- "French Legation in Texas," 1, ed. and tr. by Barker, 1510
- French Revolution: Markov, "Exkurse zu Jacques Roux," 1133
- "French Second Republic: A Social History," by Price, 1457
- "French Society, Conflicts in: Anticlericalism, Education and Morals in the Nineteenth Century. Essays," ed. by Zeldin, 1134
- Freund, William, 789
- Freymond, Jacques (ed.), "La Première Internationale," 3 and 4: 1412
- Friedrich, Paul, "Agrarian Revolt in a Mexican Village," 850
- "Friendship under Stress: U.S.-Swiss Relations 1900-1950," by Meier, 1092
- Fries, Sylvia Doughty (C), 608
- "Fritz: The Story of a Political Assassin," by Florence, 1152
- "From Anarchism to Reformism: A Study of the Political Activities of Paul Brousse within the First International and the French Socialist Movement, 1870-90," by Stafford, 1461
- "From Columbus to Castro: The History of the Caribbean, 1492-1969," by Williams, 1185
- "From the Dreadnought to Scapa Flow: The Royal Navy in the Fisher Era, 1904-1919," 5, by Marder, 794
- "From the Many to the One: A Study of Personality and Views of Human Nature in the Context of Ancient Greek Society, Values, and Beliefs," by Adkins, 1095
- "From the Small Town to the Great Community: The Social Thought of Progressive Intellectuals," by Quandt, 221
- "Frontier Challenge: Responses to the Trans-Mississippi West," ed. by Clark, 207
- "Frontier Farming in an Urban Shadow: The Influence of Madison's Proximity on the Agricultural Development of Blooming Grove," by Conzen, 1508
- "Frontière franco-belge, Genèse de la: Les variations des limites septentrionales de la France de 1659 à 1789," by Girard d'Albissin, 153
- "Frontiersmen of the Faith: A History of Baptist Pioneer Work in Texas 1865-1885," by Mason, 1178
- Fry, Howard T., "Alexander Dalrymple (1737-1808) and the Expansion of British Trade," 138
- Frye, Bruce B. (R), 541
- Frye, Richard N. (R), 1422
- Frykenberg, Robert Eric, The Partition of India: A Quarter Century After: A Review Article, 463-72
- Funkenstein, Amos, et al., The Cambridge History of the Bible, 94-109
- Furtado, Celso, "Economic Development of Latin America," tr. by Macedo, 845
- Gad, Finn, "The History of Greenland," 1, tr. by Dupont, 1465
- "Gage, Thomas, in Spanish America," by Newton, 845
- Gailey, Harry A., "The Road to Aba," 818; (R), 561
- Galambos, Louis (R), 1514
- Galarneau, Claude, "La France devant l'opinion canadienne (1760-1815)," 596
- "Galicij, Historia ustroju spoleczno politycznego, 1772-1848," by Grodzinski, 1486
- "Galileo Studies: Personality, Tradition, and Revolution," by Drake, 1436
- "Gandhi in South Africa: British Imperialism and the Indian Question, 1860-1914," by Huttenback, 745
- Gann, Lewis H., "Central Africa," 560; "Guerrillas in History," 737; and Duignan, Peter (eds.), "Colonialism in Africa, 1870-1960," 2: 1164
- Gannor, Franklin Reid, "The British Press and Germany, 1936-1939," 797
- Gardiner, C. Harvey, "William Hickling Prescott," 827
- Gardinier, David E. (R), 487
- Garfield, James A., 213
- Gargan, Edward T. (R), 1134
- Garrett, John, "Roger Williams," 198
- Garrett, Shirley S., "Social Reformers in Urban China," 187
- Garsoïan, Nina G. (R), 1110
- "Gascony, English, 1399-1453: A Study of War, Government and Politics during the Later Stages of the Hundred Years' War," by Vale, 495
- Gasiorewski, Zygmunt J. (R), 1486
- Gasster, Michael (R), 187
- Gaston, Paul M. (R), 221
- Gatewood, Willard B., Jr., "Theodore Roosevelt and the Art of Controversy," 223
- "Gaullism: The Rise and Fall of a Political Movement," by Hartley, 1137
- Gay, Peter (R), 1403
- Geismar, Peter, "Fanon," 814
- Gendzier, Irene L. (R), 185, 1491
- "Generations: A Historical Method," by Mariás, tr. by Raley, 730
- "Gentlemen Negotiators: A Diplomatic History of the First World War," by Zeman, 486
- "George, Prince of Wales 1770-1812, The Correspondence of," 7 and 8, ed. by Aspinall, 516
- "Georgia Plan: 1732-1752," by Taylor, 1498
- Gérard-Libois, J., and Gotovitch, José, "L'an 40," 1465
- Gerhard, Dietrich (ed.), "Ständische Vertretungen in Europa im 17. und 18. Jahrhundert," 1140; (C), 609
- Gerlach, Ernst Ludwig von, "Von der Revolution zum Norddeutschen Bund," 1 and 2, ed. by Diwald, 536
- "German Dictatorship: The Origins, Structure, and Effects of National Socialism," by Bracher, tr. by Steinberg, 172
- German Nationalism, New Thoughts on*, by Berdahl, 65-80
- "German-Polish Relations, 1918-1933," by Von Riekhoff, 1440
- "Germany's Drive to the East and the Ukrainian Revolution, 1917-1918," by Fedysyn, 182
- Gibbs-Smith, Charles Harvard, "Aviation," 747
- Gidney, James B. (R), 831
- Gifford, Prosser (R), 1492
- Gilbert, Bentley B., "British Social Policy, 1914-1939," 151; (R), 146, 1123
- Gilbert, Charles (R), 197
- Gilbert, Felix (R), 734
- Gillion, Kenneth L., "Ahmedabad," 569
- Gillis, John R., "The Prussian Bureaucracy in Crisis, 1840-1860," 1469
- Gillispie, Charles Coulston, "Lazare Carnot," 799; (R), 1130
- Gipsor, Lawrence Henry (deceased), 243
- Girard d'Albissin, Nelly, "Genèse de la frontière franco-belge," 153
- Girdner, Audrie, and Loftis, Anne, "The Great Betrayal," 229
- "Gladstone Era, A Political Correspondence of the: The Letters of Lady Sophia Palmer and Sir Arthur Gordon, 1884-1889," ed. by Chapman, 792
- "Gladstones: A Family Biography, 1764-1851," by Checkland, 1445
- "Glamorgan County History," 3, ed. by Pugh, 1429
- Glaser, Lynn, "Engraved America," 479
- Glaus, Beat, "Die Nationale Front," 1154
- Glazer, Walter S. (R), 212
- Glyn Jones, W., "Denmark," 164; (R), 1466
- Godecnot, Jacques (C), 858
- Goedicke, Hans, "The Report about the Dispute of a Man with His Ba," 750

- "Gold, Glory, and the Gospel: The Adventurous Lives and Times of the Renaissance Explorers," by Wright, 503
- Goldsworthy, David, "Colonial Issues in British Politics, 1945-1961," 523
- Goldthwaite, Richard A., The Florentine Palace as Domestic Architecture, 977-1012
- González Navarro, Moisés, "Raza y tierra," 1530
- "Good Fight: The Life and Times of Ben B. Lindsey," by Larsen, 1519
- Goodman, Anthony, "The Loyal Conspiracy," 1430
- Goodrich, Carter (deceased), 244
- Gordon, Sir Arthur, 792
- Gordon, Donald C. (R), 138
- Gordon, Harold J., Jr. (R), 1146
- Gorman, Joseph Bruce, "Kefauver," 1181
- Gotovitch, José, and Gérard-Libois, J., "L'an 40," 1465
- Gottfried, Paul (R), 730
- Gottschalk, Louis, et al., "The Foundations of the Modern World," 1406
- Gough, Barry M., "The Royal Navy and the Northwest Coast of North America, 1810-1914," 744
- Gould, J. D., "The Great Debasement," 784
- Gould, Lewis L., New Perspectives on the Republican Party, 1877-1913: A Review Article, 1074-82
- Govorchin, Gerald Gilbert (R), 1160
- Grabill, Joseph L., "Protestant Diplomacy and the Near East," 831
- Graebner, Norman A. (R), 231
- Graham, Loren R. (R), 746
- Graham, Otis L., Jr., (R), 223, 842
- Graham, W. Fred, "The Constructive Revolutionary," 772
- "Gran Bretagna e Italia nei documenti della missione Minto," 2d ser., 1 and 2, ed. by Curato, 1115
- "Grand Old Party: Political Structure in the Gilded Age, 1880-1896," by Marcus, 213
- Graubard, Stephen R. (R), 143, 1127, 1446
- "Great Betrayal: The Evacuation of the Japanese-Americans during World War II," by Girdner and Loftis, 229
- "Great Britain, the Danish-German Conflict and the Danish Succession, 1850-1852: From the London Protocol to the Treaty of London (the 2nd of August 1850 and the 8th of May 1852)," by Hjelholt, 505
- "Great Day Coming: Folk Music and the American Left," by Denisoff, 1180
- "Great Debasement: Currency and the Economy in Mid-Tudor England," by Gould, 784
- "Great Depression: Essays and Memoirs from Canada and the United States," comp. by Hoar, 577
- "Great Divide: Britain-India-Pakistan," by Hodson, 463
- "Great Illusion, 1900-1914," by Hale, 780
- Greaves, R. W. (R), 140, 1123
- "Greek and Roman Artillery: Technical Treatises," by Marsden, 751
- "Greek Science, Early: Thales to Aristotle," by Lloyd, 1421
- "Greek Thought, Modern: Three Essays Dealing with Philosophy, Critique of Science, and Views of Man's Nature and Destiny," by Cavarnos, 1159
- Green, David, "Queen Anne," 137
- Green, David, "The Containment of Latin America," 1529
- Green, Robert W. (R), 772
- Greenberg, Louis M., "Sisters of Liberty," 158; (R), 1135
- Greene, Jack P. (R), 1498
- Greene, Theodore P., "America's Heroes," 118
- "Greenland, The History of," 1, by Gad, tr. by Dupont, 1465
- Greenslade, S. L. (ed.), "The Cambridge History of the Bible," 3: 106
- Greenwood, David, "William King," 136
- Gregory, Henry, 574
- Grendler, Paul F. (R), 1482
- "Greville, Fulke, Lord Brooke, 1554-1628: A Critical Biography," by Rees, 507
- Griffiths, C. Warren (deceased), 1205
- Grimm, Harold J. (R), 476
- Grimsted, David, Rioting in Its Jacksonian Setting, 361-97
- Grimsted, Patricia K. (R), 1437
- Grob, Gerald N., and Billias, George Athan (eds.), "American History," 1495
- Grodziski, Stanislaw, "Historia ustroju społeczno politycznego Galicji, 1772-1848," 1486
- Groscurth, Helmuth, "Tagebücher eines Abwehroffiziers 1938-1940," ed. by Krausnick and Deutsch, 175
- "Grosz, George: Art and Politics in the Weimar Republic," by Lewis, 1472
- Gruen, Erich S. (R), 754
- Grunebaum, G. E. von, "Classical Islam," tr. by Watson, 554; (ed.), "Theology and Law in Islam," 808; (deceased), 1198
- Gruner, Erich, "Die schweizerische Bundesversammlung 1920-1968," 1153; (ed.), "Die Schweiz seit 1945," 1153; (R), 1480
- "Guatemala, Condition coloniale et conscience créole au (1524-1821)," by Saint-Lu, 1187
- "Guerrillas in History," by Gann, 737
- Guevara, Che, 603
- Guiral, Pierre (C), 858
- Gupta, Brijen K. (R), 569
- Guske, Claus, "Das politische Denken des Generals von Seeckt," 1146
- "Habsburgerreiches, Die Auflösung des: Zusammenbruch und Neuorientierung im Donauraum," ed. by Plaschka and Mack, 176
- "Habsburgs and Europe, 1516-1660," by Koenigsberger, 1150
- Haddad, George M., "Revolutions and Military Rule in the Middle East," 2, pt. 1: 1163
- Haddad, Robert M., "Syrian Christians in Muslim Society," 185
- Hahn, Roger, "The Anatomy of a Scientific Institution," 1130
- Haitheox, John Patrick, "Communism and Nationalism in India," 573
- "Haiti: The Politics of Squalor," by Rotberg, 1186
- "Halberstädter Bischofschronik, Die älteste," by Jäschke, 769
- Haldane, A. R. B., "Three Centuries of Scottish Posts," 1443
- Hale, Oron J., "The Great Illusion, 1900-1914," 780; (R), 131
- Hall, H. Duncan (R), 789
- Hall, Marie Boas (R), 511
- Hall, Thadd E., "France and the Eighteenth-Century Corsican Question," 1132; (R), 1132
- Hallgarten, George W. F., "Als die Schatten fielen," 1474
- Halpern, Paul G., "The Mediterranean Naval Situation, 1908-1914," 781
- Halpine, Charles G., 210
- Halstead, John P. (R), 813
- Hamalainen, Pekka Kalevi (R), 166, 534, 1138
- Hamby, Alonzo L., The Vital Center, the Fair Deal, and the Quest for a Liberal Political Economy, 653-78; (R), 1182
- Hamer, W. S., "The British Army," 520
- Hamerow, Theodore S. (R), 536, 1144
- Hamilton, Alexander: Daniels, "Ordeal of Ambition," 204; Lycan, "Alexander Hamilton & American Foreign Policy: A Design for Greatness," 205
- Hamilton, Charles D. (R), 1421
- Hamilton, Edward P. (deceased), 1205
- "Hammarskjöld, Dag: United Nations," by Zacher, 1415

- Hammen, Oscar J., Marx and the Agrarian Question, 679–704; (R), 735, 1469
- Hamnett, Brian R., "Politics and Trade in Southern Mexico, 1750–1821," 1529
- Hanchett, William, "Irish," 210
- "Hand, Learned: Court," by Schick, 224
- "Handelskammer für den Kreis Mülheim am Rhein (1871–1914) und die Wirtschaft des Köln-Mülheimer Raumes," by Hermanns, 169
- Hanke, Lewis (R), 827
- Hanlon, Sister Joseph Damien (R), 785
- Hanna, William S. (R), 203
- "Hanoverian London, 1714–1808," by Rudé, 788
- Hansen, Reimer, and Jürgensen, Kurt (eds.), "Historisch-politische Streiflichter," 1207
- Hansen, Roger D., "The Politics of Mexican Development," 850
- Hansen, Svend Aage, "Early Industrialisation in Denmark," 534
- Harcourt, Felice (ed. and tr.), "Memoirs of Madame de La Tour du Pin," 527
- Harding, James, "The Astonishing Adventure of General Boulanger," 1461
- "Harlem Renaissance," by Huggins, 1179
- Harnetty, Peter (R), 568
- Harootunian, H. D. (R), 565
- Harrison, J. F. C., "The Early Victorians, 1832–1851," 790
- Harrison, John P. (R), 845
- Hart, Jim Allee, "Views on the News," 118
- Hartley, Anthony, "Gaulism," 1137
- Hartwell, R. M. (ed.), "The Industrial Revolution," 139; and Higgs, Robert (C), 237
- "Harvest of Hellenism: A History of the Near East from Alexander the Great to the Triumph of Christianity," by Peters, 1098
- Hatton, Ragnhild, and Anderson, M. S. (eds.), "Studies in Diplomatic History," 773
- Haupt, Georges. See Medvedev, Roy A.
- Hausen, Karin, "Deutsche Kolonialherrschaft in Afrika," 558
- Hauser, Walter (R), 1171
- Haverkamp, Alfred, "Herrschaftsformen der Frühstauffer in Reichsitalien," 1 and 2: 766
- Hawkes, James R. (R), 179
- Hawkins, Thomas, "Lebesgue's Theory of Integration," 746
- Hay, Stephen (R), 573
- Hayden, Albert A., "New South Wales Immigration Policy, 1856–1900," 825
- Hayden, J. Michael (R), 1130
- Hazlehurst, Cameron, "Politicians at War, July 1914 to May 1915," 521
- Headley, John M. (R), 803
- Heald, Morrell (C), 860
- "Health, Ministry of, The Struggle for the, 1914–1919," by Honigsbaum, 151
- Hedinger, Hans-Walter, "Subjektivität und Geschichtswissenschaft," 110
- Heeney, Brian (R), 514
- Heer, Nancy Whittier, "Politics and History in the Soviet Union," 552
- "Hegel's 'Philosophy of Right,' Critique of," by Marx, tr. by Jolin and O'Malley, ed. by O'Malley, 1092
- Heilbron, John L. (R), 748
- Heinemann, Margot, and Branson, Noreen, "Britain in the 1930's," 796
- Heinrichs, Waldo H., Jr. (R), 489
- Heintzen, E. H. (deceased), 1205
- Helde, Thomas T. (R), 171
- Helmstadter, R. J. (R), 148
- "Héloïse et Abélard," by Pernoud, 764
- Hemming, John, "The Conquest of the Incas," 827
- Henderson, Richard B., "Maury Maverick," 1520
- Henderson, William, and Trager, Frank H. (eds.), "Communist China, 1949–1969," 1167
- Hendricks, J. Edwin (R), 1499
- Henry, Charles E., 213
- "Henry VIII: The Mask of Royalty," by Smith, 1443
- "Henry VIII's Scottish Diplomacy, 1513–1524: England's Relations with the Regency Government of James V," by Eaves, 1118
- "Hérault contemporain, Géographie religieuse de l'," by Cholvy, 1117
- Heravi, Mehdi, "Iranian-American Diplomacy," 1489
- Herbert, Sandra (R), 1091
- "Heritage and Challenge of History," by Conkin and Stromberg, 1402
- Herlihy, David (R), 1109
- Hermanns, Heinz, "Die Handelskammer für den Kreis Mülheim am Rhein (1871–1914) und die Wirtschaft des Köln-Mülheimer Raumes," 169
- "Herodotus: An Interpretative Essay," by Fornara, 1096
- "Heroic Age of Franco-German Jewry: The Jews of Germany and France of the Tenth and Eleventh Centuries, Pioneers and Builders of Town-Life, Town-Government and Institutions," by Agus, 760
- Herreshoff, David (R), 121
- Herrick, Francis H. (R), 1124
- "Herrschaftsformen der Frühstauffer in Reichsitalien," 1 and 2, by Haverkamp, 766
- Herskovits, Jean (R), 818
- "Herter, Christian A.," by Noble, 231
- Hess, Andrew C. (R), 555
- "Hess: The Man and His Mission," by Hutton, 1149
- Heussler, Robert, "British Tanganyika," 820; (R), 575, 817
- "Heydrich, Reinhard, und die Frühgeschichte von Gestapo und SD," by Aronson, 1476
- Hicks, John, "A Theory of Economic History," 1087
- Hidy, Muriel E. See Adler, Dorothy R.
- Hidy, Ralph W. (R), 1497
- Higgins, J. P. P., and Pollard, Sidney (eds.), "Aspects of Capital Investment in Great Britain, 1750–1850," 1121
- Higgs, Robert, "The Transformation of the American Economy, 1865–1914," 1514; and Hartwell, R. M. (C), 237
- Higham, John, "Writing American History," 113
- Higham, Robin (R), 840; (C), 864
- Higonnet, Patrice L.-R., "Pont-de-Montvert," 1455
- Hilberg, Raul (R), 543, 1473
- Hill, Peter P., "William Vans Murray, Federalist Diplomat," 1506
- Hills, Richard L., "Power in the Industrial Revolution," 786
- Himmelfarb, Gertrude (R), 146, 736
- "Himmler, Heinrich: A Nazi in the Making, 1900–1926," by Smith, 1144
- Hinsely, F. H. (R), 1440
- Hirsch, Felix E. (C), 862
- Hirsch, Helmut, "Lehrer machen Geschichte," 1405; (ed.), "Eduard Bernsteins Briefwechsel mit Friedrich Engels," 170
- Hirshfield, Daniel S., "The Lost Reform," 593
- "Hispanismo, 1898–1936: Spanish Conservatives and Liberals and Their Relations with Spanish America," by Pike, 1528
- "Historians' Fallacies: Toward a Logic of Historical Thought," by Fischer, 113
- "Historian's Workshop: Original Essays by Sixteen Historians," ed. by Curtis, 1403
- "Historical and Philosophical Perspectives of Science," ed. by Stuewer, 255
- Historiography: Ballard (ed.), "New Movements in the Study and Teaching of History," 1084; Barzun, History: The Muse and Her Doctors, 36–64; Berkhofer, "A

- Behavioral Approach to Historical Analysis," 445;
 Billias and Grob (eds.), "American History," 1495;
 Braudy, "Narrative Form in History and Fiction," 730;
 Brown, "Carl Becker on History and the American Revolution," 113; Cantor, "Perspectives on the European Past," 1403; Conkin and Stromberg, "The Heritage and Challenge of History," 1402; Curtis (ed.), "The Historian's Workshop," 1403; Donald, Between Science and Art: A Review Article, 445-52; Elton, "Political History," 445; Fain, "Between Philosophy and History," 110; Feilchenfeldt, "Varnhagen von Ense als Historiker," 536; Fischer, "Historians' Fallacies," 113; Fornara, "Herodotus," 1096; Freeman, "Repentance and Revolt," 445; Gardiner, "William Hickling Prescott," 827; Hedinger, "Subjektivität und Geschichtswissenschaft," 110; Heer, "Politics and History in the Soviet Union," 552; Higham, "Writing American History," 113; Hirsch, "Lehrer machen Geschichte," 1405; "Historische Forschungen in der DDR, 1960-1970," 112; Hölzle, "Idee und Ideologie," 110; Jäschke, "Die älteste Halberstädter Bischofschronik," 769; Kliuchevskii, "Pis'ma, dnevniki, aforizmy i mysli ob istorii," ed. by Nechkina, 181; Kramer-Schlette, "Vier augsburger Chronisten der Reformationszeit," 803; Lefebvre, "La naissance de l'historiographie moderne," 1403; Lehtinen, "Suomen varhaishistorian ja ristiretkikauden kuvasta urkonpuhdistus- ja suurvälta-aikana," 534; Loebel (ed.), "100 Jahre deutsche Geschichte," 1144; McKisack, "Medieval History in the Tudor Age," 783; Marias, "Generations," tr. by Raley, 730; Perkin (ed.), "History," 1084; Pospelov, "Problemy istorii (Stat'i i rechi)," 474; Ratzinger, "The Theology of History in St. Bonaventure," 762; Stretton, "Political Sciences," 445; Várkonyi, "A pozitivisták történetelmélet," 731; Wolman (ed.), "The Psychoanalytic Interpretation of History," 1401; Zacek, "Palacký," 1477
 "Historisch-politische Streiflichter: Geschichtliche Beiträge zur Gegenwart," ed. by Jürgensen and Hansen, 1207
 "Historische Forschungen in der DDR, 1960-1970: Analysen und Berichte. Zum XIII. Internationalen Historikerkongress in Moskau 1970," 112
 "History: An Introduction for the Intending Student," ed. by Perkin, 1084
 "History, Man, & Reason: A Study in Nineteenth-Century Thought," by Mandelbaum, 734
History: The Muse and Her Doctors, by Barzun, 36-64
 "History in Geographic Perspective: The Other France," by Fox, 1086
 Hitchins, Keith (R), 806
 "Hitler Youth and Catholic Youth 1933-1936: A Study in Totalitarian Conquest," by Walker, 173
 Hjelholt, Holger, "Great Britain, the Danish-German Conflict and the Danish Succession, 1850-1852," 505
 Hnilicka, Karl, "Das Ende auf dem Balkan 1944/45," 782
 Hoar, Victor (comp.), "The Great Depression," 577
 "Hoar, George Frisbie, and the Half-Breed Republicans," by Welch, 1074
 Hockerts, Hans Günter, "Die Sittlichkeitsprozesse gegen katholische Ordensangehörige und Priester, 1936/1937," 1148
 Hodson, H. V., "The Great Divide," 463
 Hölzle, Erwin, "Idee und Ideologie," 110
 Hofstadter, Richard, "America at 1750," 1502
 Hohenberg, John, "Free Press/Free People," 741
 Holbo, Paul S. (R), 1529
 Holbraad, Carsten, "The Concert of Europe," 1437
 Holden, Louise P. (deceased), 252
 "Hollar, Wenceslaus: Delineator of His Time," by Van Erde, 1119
 Hollister, C. Warren (R), 1428
 Hollon, W. Eugene (R), 1509
 Holmes, William F., "The White Chief," 214
 Holotik, L'udovit, and Vantuch, Anton (eds.), "Der österreichische-ungarische Ausgleich 1867," 1478
 Holt, P. M., et al. (eds.), "The Cambridge History of Islam," 1 and 2: 115
 Honigsbaum, Frank, "The Struggle for the Ministry of Health, 1914-1919," 151
 Hood, Sinclair, "The Minoans," 1095
 Hooker, J. R. (R), 560
 Hoppen, K. Theodore, "The Common Scientist in the Seventeenth Century," 797
 Horn, David Bayne, 773
 Horne, Alistair, "The Terrible Year," 1135
 Hornsby, Alton, Jr. (C), 234
 Horwitz, Henry (R), 137
 "House of Commons 1715-1754," 1 and 2, by Sedgwick, 512
 "House of Commons 1604-1610," by Notestein, 705
 "House of Commons in the Eighteenth Century," by Thomas, 512
 Houseman, Philip J. (R), 1190
 "Housing, Working-Class, The History of: A Symposium," by Wohl et al., ed. by Chapman, 1123
 Hovannisian, Richard G., "The Republic of Armenia," 1: 1488
 Howe, Daniel Walker, "The Unitarian Conscience," 206
 Howell, George, 150
 "Howells, William Dean: An American Life," by Lynn, 837
 Hoyt, E. S. (deceased), 1205
 Hsiung, James Chieh, "Ideology and Practice," 1167
 Hu, C. T. (R), 1167
 Hudson, Michael C. (R), 184
 Huggins, Nathan Irvin, "Harlem Renaissance," 1179
 Hughes, J. R. T. (R), 121
 Hughes, Jonathan, "Industrialization and Economic History," 1087
 Hughes, Kathleen, and Clemoes, Peter (eds.), "England before the Conquest," 1428
 Hughes, Paul L. (R), 508
 Hughes, Thomas Parke, "Elmer Sperry," 840
 "Humbert de Plaine, Die Rechnungslegung des, über die Jahre 1448 bis 1452: Eine Studie zur Amtsführung des burgundischen Maître de la Chambre aux Deniers," by Schwarzkopf, 761
 "Hundert Jahre deutsche Geschichte," ed. by Loebel, 1144
 Hunt, David C., and Rossi, Paul A., "The Art of the Old West," 1172
 Hunt, Richard N. (R), 1471
 Hunter, Louise H., "Buddhism in Hawaii," 1413
 Hunter Blair, Peter, "The World of Bede," 124
 Hurt, John, "Education in Evolution," 1124
 Hurwitz, Samuel J. (R), 151; (deceased), 245
 Huthmacher, J. Joseph (R), 1181
 Huttenback, Robert A., "Gandhi in South Africa," 745; (R), 567
 Hutton, J. Bernard, "Hess," 1149
 Huzar, Eleanor G. (R), 1095
 Hybertson, Larry D. (R), 1112
 Hyman, Harold M. (R), 1512
 "Idee und Ideologie: Eine Zeitkritik aus universalhistorischer Sicht," by Hölzle, 110
 "Ideology and Practice: The Evolution of Chinese Communism," by Hsiung, 1167
 Iggers, Georg G. (R), 110
 Ildardi, Vincent, and Kendall, Paul M. (eds.), "Dispatches with Related Documents of Milanese Ambassadors in France and Burgundy, 1450-1483," 1 and 2: 495
 "Immigrants to Freedom: Jewish Communities in Rural New Jersey since 1882," by Brandes and Douglas, 216
 "Imperial Control of Colonial Legislation, 1813-1865: A Study of British Policy towards Colonial Legislative Powers," by Swinfin, 144

- "Imperialism," by Lichtheim, 733
 "Imperialism and Chinese Nationalism: Germany in Shantung," by Schrecker, 485
 "Imperialistischeskie derzhavy i Vostochnaia Evropa (1945-1965)," by Orlik, 488
 "Incas, The Conquest of the," by Hemming, 827
 "India Trade under the Danish Flag, 1772-1808: European Enterprise and Anglo-Indian Remittance and Trade," by Feldbæk, 824
 "Indian Army: Its Contribution to the Development of a Nation," by Cohen, 1171
 Indians: Brown, "Bury My Heart at Wounded Knee," 589; Hemming, "The Conquest of the Incas," 827; Kelly, "Navajo Roundup," 212
 "Industrial Revolution," ed. by Hartwell, 139
 "Industrialisation, Early, in Denmark," by Hansen, 534
 "Industrialization, German, The Controversy over, 1890-1902," by Barkin, 540
 "Industrialization and Economic History: Theses and Conjectures," by Hughes, 1087
 Infield, Glenn B., "Disaster at Bari," 749
 Inglis, Brian, "Men of Conscience," 514
 "Insanity and Idiocy in Massachusetts: Report of the Commission on Lunacy, 1855," by Jarvis, 585
 "Intellectual Origins of the French Enlightenment," by Wade, 1456
 "Intelligentsiia v Rossii vo vtoroi polovine XIX veka," by Leikina-Svirskaja, 180
 "International Affairs, Survey of, 1962," by Watt, 750
 "Interregnum of Despair: Hoover, Congress, and the Depression," by Schwarz, 226
 "Intervention and Negotiation: The United States and the Dominican Revolution," by Slater, 228
 "Iran: The Impact of United States Interests and Policies 1941-1954," by Sheehan, 1489
 "Iranian-American Diplomacy," by Heravi, 1489
 "Ireland, Northern: 50 Years of Self-Government," by Wallace, 1448
 "Ireland since the Famine," by Lyons, 1127
 "Irish: Charles G. Halpine in Civil War America," by Hanchett, 210
 Iriye, Akira (R), 219
 "Iron Afloat: The Story of the Confederate Armorclads," by Still, 834
 "Iron Horse," by Comstock, 1510
 "Irreconcilables: The Fight against the League of Nations," by Stone, 223
 Isherwood, Robert (R), 798
 Isichei, Elizabeth, "Victorian Quakers," 148
 Islam: Fakhry, "A History of Islamic Philosophy," 553; Grunebaum, "Classical Islam: A History, 600-1258," tr. by Watson, 554; Grunebaum (ed.), "Theology and Law in Islam," 808; Holt et al. (eds.), "The Cambridge History of Islam," 1 and 2: 115
 Israel, Jerry (R), 1517
 Israel, John (R), 189, 565, 1493
 "Israel: A Society in Transition," by Segre, 185
 Israeli, V. L., and Kutakov, L. N., "Diplomatia agressorov," 1414
 Issel, William H. (R), 1085
 "Italie et la Palestine, 1914-1920," by Minerbi, 1156
 "Italy Chooses Europe," by Willis, 1159
 Itzkowitz, Norman, and Mote, Max (ed. and tr.), "Mubadele—An Ottoman-Russian Exchange of Ambassadors," 131
 Jackson, Donald, and Spence, Mary Lee (eds.), "The Expeditions of John Charles Frémont," 1: 1509
 Jackson, W. Turrentine (R), 207, 590
 Jacobsen, Hans-Adolf (ed.), "Hans Steinacher, Bundesleiter des VDA 1933-1937," 544
 Jacobsen, J. V., S. J. (deceased), 252
 Jaenen, Cornelius J. (R), 596
 "Järnvägarna och det allmänna: Svensk järnvägsolitik fram till 1890," by Oredsson, 165
 Jäschke, Kurt-Ulrich, "Die älteste Halberstädter Bischofschronik," 769
 Jakle, John A. (R), 196
 James, D. Clayton, "The Years of MacArthur," 1: 215
 Jameston, Michael H. (R), 1421
 Janowski, James P. (R), 523
 Janssen, E. M., "Jacob Burckhardt und die Renaissance," 1438
 "Japanese Oligarchy and the Russo-Japanese War," by Okamoto, 191
 "Japan's Imperial Conspiracy," by Bergamini, 1169
 "Japan's Postwar Defense Policy, 1947-1968," by Weinstein, 193
 "Japan's Radio War on Australia, 1941-1945," by Meo, 575
 Jarvis, Edward, "Insanity and Idiocy in Massachusetts," 585
 "Jazz Style in Kansas City and the Southwest," by Russell, 1179
 "Jefferson, Thomas: A Well-Tempered Mind," by Binger, 204
 Jeffrey, William H. (R), 607
 Jenkins, J. Geraint, "The Welsh Woollen Industry," 786
 Jensen, De Lamar (R), 530, 1435, 1463
 Jensen, Richard, "The Winning of the Midwest," 1074
 Jeremy, David John (ed.), "Henry Wansey and His American Journal, 1794," 1505; (R), 786
 Jessner, Sabine (R), 1153
 Jessup, Ronald, "South East England," 1416
 Jewish history: Agus, "The Heroic Age of Franco-German Jewry," 760; Balabkins, "West German Reparations to Israel," 1094; Berlin (ed.), "Studies in Jewish Bibliography, History, and Literature in Honor of I. Edward Kiev," 1207; Brandes and Douglas, "Immigrants to Freedom," 216; Katz, "Jews and Freemasons in Europe, 1723-1939," tr. by Oschry, 1114; Litvinoff (ed.), "The Letters and Papers of Chaim Weizmann," ser. A, 2: 748; Schleunes, "The Twisted Road to Auschwitz," 543; Schoeps, "Bereit für Deutschland!" 543; Segre, "Israel," 185; Sharf, "Byzantine Jewry," 499; Smith, "Palestinian Parties and Politics That Shaped the Old Testament," 1418; "Year Book XV," 1473
 John, James J. (R), 1103
 Johnson, Christopher H. (R), 156
 Johnson, H. B., Jr. (R), 503
 Johnson, Hubert C. (R), 1140
 Johnson, J. K. (ed.), "The Letters of Sir John A. Macdonald, 1836-1857," 517; and Stelmack, Carole B. (eds.), "The Letters of Sir John A. Macdonald, 1858-1861," 517
 Johnson, Lady Bird, "A White House Diary," 1524
 Johnson, Lyndon Baines, "The Vantage Point," 1524
 Johnson, Paul B. (R), 796
 "Johnson, Holy: Pioneer of African Nationalism, 1836-1917," by Ayandele, 817
 Johnston, C. M. (R), 595
 Jolin, Annette. See Marx, Karl
 Jones, A. H. M., "Augustus," 1101
 Jones, Howard Mumford, "The Age of Energy," 836
 Jones, Michael, "Ducal Brittany, 1364-1399," 1107
 Jones, Peter d'A. (R), 484, 1516
 Jones, Thomas, "Whitehall Diary," 1 and 2, ed. by Middlemas, 152
 Jones, Tom B. (R), 1416
 Jones, Wilbur Devereux (R), 516
 Joravsky, David, "The Lysenko Affair," 807; (R), 550. See also Medvedev, Roy A.
 Jordan, David M., "Roscoe Conkling of New York," 835
 Jordan, W. K., "Edward VI," 132

- Jorrín, Miguel, and Martz, John D., "Latin-American Political Thought and Ideology," 1184
- Joughin, Jean T. (R), 1461
- Jürgensen, Kurt, and Hansen, Reimer (eds.), "Historisch-politische Streiflichter," 1207
- Julku, Kyösti, "Die revolutionäre Bewegung im Rheinland am Ende des achtzehnten Jahrhunderts," 2: 168
- "Justice of Zeus," by Lloyd-Jones, 1420
- "Justinian and Theodora," by Browning, 1112
- "Jyske hedekolonisation," by Andersen, 802
- "K sudu istorii (Genezis i posledstviia Stalinizma)," by Medvedev, 1389
- "Kaiser, Könige und Päpste: Gesammelte Aufsätze zur Geschichte des Mittelalters," 3, by Schramm, 127
- "Kaiserliche Deutschland: Politik und Gesellschaft 1870-1918," by Becker et al., ed. by Stürmer, 538
- Kaldis, William Peter (R), 1159
- Kaminsky, Howard (R), 1106
- Kaplan, Morton A., "On Historical and Political Knowing," 1084
- Kargon, Robert H. (R), 797
- "Karjala idän ja lännen välissä," 1, by Kirkinen, 532
- "Karjalaisen siirtoväen asuttamisesta käyty julkinen keskustelu vuosina 1944-1948," by Kulha, 167
- Karl, Barry D. (R), 227
- "Katyn," by Fitzgibbon, 1486
- Katz, Jacob, "Jews and Freemasons in Europe, 1723-1939," tr. by Oschry, 1114
- Kaukiainen, Jyrjö, "Suomen talonpoikaipurjehdus 1800-luvun alkupuoliskolla (1810-1853)," 166
- Kautsky, Karl, Jr., "August Bebel's Briefwechsel mit Karl Kautsky," 1116
- "Kautsky, Karl et Luise, Lettres à," by Luxemburg, tr. by Stehoupak and Bracke-Desrousseaux, 1116
- Kay, David A., "The New Nations in the United Nations, 1960-1967," 1415
- Kay, Richard (R), 762
- Kearny, Edward N., "Thurman Arnold, Social Critic," 227
- Keddie, Nikki R. (R), 1489
- Keeble, T. W., "Commercial Relations between British Overseas Territories and South America, 1806-1914," 144
- "Kefauver: A Political Biography," by Gorman, 1181
- Keller, Abraham C., and Atkinson, Geoffrey, "Prelude to the Enlightenment," 798
- Kelley, Donald R., Martyrs, Myths, and the Massacre: The Background of St. Bartholomew, 1323-42
- "Kellogg, John Harvey, M.D.," by Schwarz, 838
- Kelly, Alfred H. (R), 224
- Kelly, Lawrence C., "Navajo Roundup," 212
- Kelly, Thomas (R), 752, 1419
- Kemnitz, Thomas Milton (R), 515
- Kendall, Paul M., and Iardi, Vincent (eds.), "Dispatches with Related Documents of Milanese Ambassadors in France and Burgundy, 1450-1483," 1 and 2: 495
- Kenez, Peter, "Civil War in South Russia, 1918," 511; (R), 1488
- "Kennedy Doctrine," by Fitzsimons, 1521
- Kent, George O. (R), 781
- Kent, Raymond K., "Early Kingdoms in Madagascar, 1500-1700," 823
- Kerne, Sterling J. (R), 486
- Kerr, D. G. G. (R), 232
- "Khrushchev and Kennedy in Retrospect," by McSherry, 1521
- Kiev, I. Edward, 1207
- Kimball, Elisabeth G. (ed.), "Records of Some Sessions of the Peace in the City of Lincoln, 1351-1354, and the Borough of Stamford, 1351," 1106
- Kimball, Warren F. (R), 1526
- King, John O., "Joseph Stephen Cullinan," 591
- King, Lester S. (ed.), "Mainstreams of Medicine," 254
- "King, Mackenzie, Record," 3 and 4, by Pickersgill and Forster, 602
- "King, William: Tory and Jacobite," by Greenwood, 136
- Kingdon, Robert M. (R), 525
- Kinnear, Michael (R), 521
- Király, Béla K. (R), 783
- "Kirchen in Russland: Berichte; Dokumente," by Simon, 547
- "Kirchliche Politik zwischen Rom, Berlin und Trier 1876-1888: Die Beilegung des preussischen Kulturkampfes," by Weber, 539
- Kirkinen, Heikki, "Karjala idän ja lännen välissä," 1: 532
- Kirkland, Edward C. (R), 1173
- Kirwan, Albert D. (R), 214; (deceased), 1200
- Kish, George (R), 738
- Klein, Thomas. See Pierius, Urban
- Kleinfeld, Gerald R. (R), 1152
- Klement, Frank L., "The Limits of Dissent," 211
- Klieman, Aaron S., "Foundations of British Policy in the Arab World," 523
- Klingenstein, Grete, "Staatsverwaltung und kirchliche Autorität im 18. Jahrhundert," 1150
- Kliuchevskii, V. O., "Pis'ma, dnevniki, aforizmy i mysli ob istorii," ed. by Nechkina, 181
- Klutentreter, Wilhelm, "Die Rheinische Zeitung von 1842/43 in der politischen und geistigen Bewegung des Vormärz," 1 and 2: 1469
- Knapp, Thomas A. (R), 1148
- Knight, Franklin W., "Slave Society in Cuba during the Nineteenth Century," 848
- Knight, Frida, "University Rebel," 789
- "Knight and Chivalry," by Barber, 1105
- Knoll, Paul W. (R), 500
- Knowles, David, "Thomas Becket," 124; (R), 1425
- Knudson, Jerry (R), 856
- Kobre, Sidney, "Development of American Journalism," 118
- Koch, Adrienne (deceased), 246
- Koehl, Robert (R), 173, 1144
- Koenig, Duane (R), 1154
- Koenig, M. L. (deceased), 252
- Koenigsberger, H. G., "The Habsburgs and Europe, 1516-1660," 1150
- Kohlmeyer, Fred W. (R), 1515
- Kolb, Eberhard, "Die Kriegsausbruch 1870," 1470
- Kolehmainen, John I. (R), 532
- Kolinski, C. J. (R), 801
- Kollman, Eric C. (R), 1147
- Korbonski, Andrzej (R), 1441
- "Korean Development: The Interplay of Politics and Economics," by Cole and Lyman, 567
- Koss, Stephen E. (R), 1126
- "Kourion, The Inscriptions of," by Mitford, 491
- Kraabel, A. Thomas (R), 1418
- Kramer-Schlette, Carla, "Vier augsburger Chronisten der Reformationszeit," 803
- Krapp, Philip. See Dumézil, Georges
- Krasil'nikov, A. N., "Vneshniaia politika Anglii i leiboristskaia partiia (1951-1964)," 488
- Krasuski, Jerzy, "Podzia i Niemiec NRD i NRF w latach 1949-1955," 175
- Kraus, Hans P., "On Book Collecting," "Sir Francis Drake," 508
- Krausnick, Helmut. See Groscurth, Helmuth
- Krenkel, John H. (R), 1511
- Kress, Paul F., "Social Science and the Idea of Process," 1085
- "Kriegsausbruch 1870: Politische Entscheidungsprozesse und Verantwortlichkeiten in der Julikrise 1870," by Kolb, 1470
- "Kriegsministeriums, K. K., Geschichte des," 2, by Wagner, 1143

- "Krisenherde des Kaiserreichs, 1871-1918: Studien zur deutschen Sozial- und Verfassungsgeschichte," by Wehler, 538
- Kroeber, Theodora, "Alfred Kroeber," 222
- "Kroeber, Alfred: A Personal Configuration," by Theodora Kroeber, 222
- Krooss, Herman E., and Blyn, Martin R., "A History of Financial Intermediaries," 1497
- Krueger, Hilmar C. (R), 765
- Kubitschek, Juscelino, 603
- Kulha, Keijo K., "Karjalaisen siirtoväen asuttamisesta käyty julkinen keskustelu vuosina 1944-1948," 167
- "Kunst und Künstler: Aus 32 Jahrgängen einer deutschen Kunstzeitschrift," ed. by Feist and Feist, 1472
- Kunz, Egon F., "Blood and Gold," 825
- "Kuo Mo-jo: The Early Years," by Roy, 564
- "Kursächsischen Kirchen- und Schulreformation, Geschichte der," by Pierius, ed. by Klein, 1467
- Kusín, Vladimír V., "The Intellectual Origins of the Prague Spring," 1161
- Kutakov, L. N., and Israelian, V. L., "Diplomatiia agressorov," 1414
- Labor: Mattila, "Työmarkkinasuhteiden murros Suomessa," 535; Ridley, "Revolutionary Syndicalism in France," 527; Robin, "Radical Politics and Canadian Labour, 1880-1930," 601; Stearns, "Revolutionary Syndicalism and French Labor," 527
- "Labour, The Impact of, 1920-1924: The Beginning of Modern British Politics," by Cowling, 795
- Lacerda, Carlos, 603
- Lacey, Robert, "Robert, Earl of Essex," 509
- Lach, Donald F., "Asia in the Making of Europe," 2, book 1, 482
- La Fontaine, J. S., "City Politics," 819
- "Lagarde, Georges de, Liber Memorialis," 254
- Lamar, Howard R. (R), 1172
- Lambert, Sheila, "Bills and Acts," 1121
- Lampe, G. W. H. (ed.), "The Cambridge History of the Bible," 2: 100
- "Lancashire and the New Liberalism," by Clarke, 793
- "Lancaster, Thomas of, 1307-1322: A Study in the Reign of Edward II," by Maddicott, 498
- "Land and the Constitution in India," by Merrillat, 570
- "Land beyond the Rivers: The Southern Sudan, 1898-1918," by Collins, 1491
- Landauer, Carl (C), 861
- Landen, Robert G. (R), 555
- Lander, J. R. (R), 494
- Landsberger, Henry A. (ed.), "Latin American Peasant Movements," 604
- Lang, Robert G. (R), 1444
- Langer, William L. (C), 1195
- "Language Conflict and National Development: Group Politics and National Language Policy in India," by Das Gupta, 572
- Laqueur, Walter (R), 777
- Larkin, Emmet, The Devotional Revolution in Ireland, 1850-75, 625-52
- Larsen, Charles, "The Good Fight," 1519
- Larsen, Lawrence H., and Branyan, Robert L., "The Eisenhower Administration, 1953-1961," 1182
- Larson, Robert W. (R), 1520
- Latham, Robert, and Matthews, William (eds.), "The Diary of Samuel Pepys," 1-3: 135
- "Latin America, Economic Development of: A Survey from Colonial Times to the Cuban Revolution," by Furtado, tr. by Macedo, 845
- "Latin American Peasant Movements," ed. by Landsberger, 604
- "Latin-American Political Thought and Ideology," by Jorrín and Martz, 1184
- "La Tour du Pin, Madame de, Memoirs of," ed. and tr. by Harcourt, 527
- Laux, James M. (R), 159
- "Lavra, Actes de," pt. 1, 1 and 2, ed. by Lemerle et al., 501
- Lawson, R. Alan, "The Failure of Independent Liberalism, 1930-1941," 842
- "League of Nations and the Great Powers: The Greek-Bulgarian Incident, 1925," by Barros, 1118
- Lean, E. Tangye, "The Napoleonists," 154
- "Lebesgue's Theory of Integration: Its Origins and Development," by Hawkins, 746
- Lee, Chae-jin, "Communist China's Policy toward Laos," 190
- Lee, Maurice, Jr. (R), 509
- Lee, Ta-ling, "Foundations of the Chinese Revolution, 1905-1912 (An Historical Record of the T'ung-meng Hui)," 187
- Lefebvre, Georges, "La naissance de l'historiographie moderne," 1403
- Legal history: Bellamy, "The Law of Treason in England in the Later Middle Ages," 493; Brundage, "Medieval Canon Law and the Crusader," 1104; Fairman, "History of the Supreme Court of the United States," 6, pt. 1: 1512; Kimball (ed.), "Records of Some Sessions of the Peace in the City of Lincoln, 1351-1354, and the Borough of Stamford, 1351," 1106; Pallister, "Magna Carta," 510; Sayers, "Papal Judges Delegate in the Province of Canterbury, 1198-1254," 763; Schick, "Learned Hand's Court," 224; Wiswall, "The Development of Admiralty Jurisdiction and Practice since 1800," 515
- Lehmann, Hans Georg, "Die Agrarfrage in der Theorie und Praxis der deutschen und internationalen Sozialdemokratie, 1471
- "Lehrer machen Geschichte: Das Institut für Erziehungswissenschaften und das Internationale Schulbuchinstitut. Ein Beitrag zur Kontinuitätsforschung," by Hirsch, 1405
- Lehtinen, Erkki, "Suomen varhaishistorian ja ristiretkikauden kuvasta uskonpuhdistus- ja suurvalta-aikana," 534
- "Leibnitiana, Studia: Supplementa," 4: 772
- Leikina-Svirskaja, V. R., "Intelligentsiia v Rossii vo vtoroi polovine XIX veka," 180
- Lemerle, Paul, et al. (eds.), "Actes de Lavra," pt. 1, 1 and 2: 501
- Lemmon, Sarah McCulloh (ed.), "The Pettigrew Papers," 1: 1499
- "Lenin's Childhood," by Deutscher, 548
- "Leopold's Congo, Reform in," by Shaloff, 561
- Léopoldville, 819
- Lerner, Jean. See Mendras, Henri
- Lerner, Warren (R), 1117
- "Let History Judge: The Origins and Consequences of Stalinism," by Medvedev, tr. by Taylor, ed. by Joravsky and Haupt, 1389
- "Lettres et discours," by Georges and Dëmétrios Tornikès, ed. and tr. by Darrouzès, 770
- Levack, Brian P. (R), 133, 783
- Leventhal, F. M., "Respectable Radical," 150
- Levey, M. (deceased), 252
- Levitt, Joseph, "Henri Bourassa and the Golden Calf," 601
- Lewis, Archibald R. (R), 809, 1107, 1465
- Lewis, Beth Irwin, "George Grosz," 1472
- Lewis, John Wilson (ed.), "Party Leadership and Revolutionary Power in China," 1167
- Lewis, W. S., et al. (eds.), "Horace Walpole's Correspondence with Sir Horace Mann and Sir Horace Mann the Younger," 9-11: 1122
- Li, Tien-yi (R), 485
- "Liberal Party, The History of the, 1895-1970," by Douglas, 1126

- Lichtheim, George, "Imperialism," 733; "George Lukács," 1399
- Liddell Hart, B. H., "History of the Second World War," 122
- Lidtkje, Vernon L. (R), 1116, 1474
- Liebel, Helen P. (R), 169, 1142
- "Limits of Dissent: Clement L. Vallandigham & the Civil War," by Klement, 211
- Limoges, Camille, "La sélection naturelle," 1091
- Limoli, Donald A. (R), 177
- Lincoln, Abraham: Wright, "Lincoln & the Politics of Slavery," 208
- Lindgren, Raymond E. (R), 165, 802
- Lindsay, Jack, "Origins of Astrology," 1421
- Lindsey, Ben B., 1519
- Link, Arthur S., et al., (eds.), "The Papers of Woodrow Wilson," 9: 217
- Link, Edith M. (R), 1142
- Linz, Juan J. (R), 800
- Lister, Raymond, "Antique Maps and Their Cartographers," 738
- Literary history: Atkinson and Keller, "Prelude to the Enlightenment," 798; Bulgakov, "The Last Year of Leo Tolstoy," tr. by Dunnigan, 549; Lynn, "William Dean Howells," 837; Raitt, "Prosper Mérimée," 157; Sagarra, "Tradition and Revolution," 1468; Stock, "The Life of Ezra Pound," 594; Sziborsky, "Die Germanisierung der Mark Brandenburg in der märkischen Geschichtsschreibung des 16. Jahrhunderts unter dem Einfluss von Humanismus und Reformation," 1467; Woodring, "Politics in English Romantic Poetry," 143
- Litvinoff, Barnet (ed.), "The Letters and Papers of Chaim Weizmann," ser. A, 2: 748
- Litzen, Veikko, "A War of Roses and Lilies," 1431
- Llewellyn, Peter, "Rome in the Dark Ages," 765
- Lloyd, G. E. R., "Early Greek Science," 1421
- Lloyd, Trevor (R), 1446
- Lloyd-Jones, Hugh, "The Justice of Zeus," 1420
- Loebel, Hansgeorg (ed.), "100 Jahre deutsche Geschichte," 1144
- Loewenberg, Peter (C), 240, 1193, 1197
- Loftis, Anne, and Girdner, Audrie, "The Great Betrayal," 229
- Lo Giudice, Giuseppe, "Comunità rurali della Sicilia moderna," 1154
- "Lollards and Protestants in the Diocese of York, 1509-1558," by Dickens, 453
- Lombardi, John V., "The Decline and Abolition of Negro Slavery in Venezuela, 1820-1854," 605
- London, H. I., "Non-White Immigration and the 'White Australia' Policy," 825
- Longford, Earl of, and O'Neill, Thomas P., "Eamon de Valera," 524
- Lopez, Robert S. (R), 1086
- "Lost Reform: The Campaign for Compulsory Health Insurance in the United States from 1932 to 1943," by Hirshfield, 593
- Loubère, Leo A. (R), 1134
- Lougee, R. (R), 539
- "Louis XIV and the Craft of Kingship," ed. by Rule, 526
- "Lourmarin in the Eighteenth Century: A Study of a French Village," by Sheppard, 1132
- Love, Joseph L., "Rio Grande do Sul and Brazilian Regionalism, 1882-1930," 854; (R), 1189
- Low, D. A., "Buganda in Modern History," 1492; "The Mind of Buganda," 1492
- "Loyal Conspiracy: The Lords Appellant under Richard II," by Goodman, 1430
- "Ludwigs des Frommen, Geschichtsschreibung und Staatsauffassung im Zeitalter," by Wehlen, 768
- Lukacs, John (R), 1083
- "Lukács, George," by Lichtheim, 1399
- Lumby, E. W. R., and Mansergh, Nicholas (eds.), "The Transfer of Power 1942-7," 1: 463
- Lunenfeld, Marvin, "The Council of the Santa Hermandad," 530
- "Luther, Martin, and the Reformation," by Dickens, 453
- Luvaas, Jay (R), 215
- "Luxembourg, Marie de, duchesse douairière de Vendôme, comtesse douairière de St.-Pol, comtesse douairière d'Enghien, dame de La Fère, et son temps," by Thelliez, 1128
- Luxemburg, Rosa, "Lettres à Karl et Luise Kautsky," tr. by Stchoupak and Bracke-Desrousseaux, 1116
- Luxenburg, Norman (R), 488
- "Lyautey in Morocco: Protectorate Administration, 1912-1925," by Scham, 816
- Lycan, Gilbert L., "Alexander Hamilton & American Foreign Policy," 205
- Lyman, Princeton N., and Cole, David C., "Korean Development," 567
- Lynd, Staughton (R), 1180
- Lynn, Kenneth S., "William Dean Howells," 837
- Lyon, Bryce (R), 1432
- Lyons, Charles H., and Battle, Vincent M. (eds.), "Essays in the History of African Education," 815
- Lyons, F. S. L., "Ireland since the Famine," 1127
- "Lysenko Affair," by Joravsky, 807
- Lytle, Scott H. (R), 527
- McAkie, J. G. (deceased), 614
- "MacArthur, The Years of," 1, by James, 215
- McClellan, Woodford D. (R), 180
- McClelland, Charles E. (R), 1143
- McCreary, Eugene C. (R), 473
- McCulloch, Samuel Clyde (R), 575
- "McCulloch, J. R.: A Study in Classical Economics," by O'Brien, 145
- "Macdonald, Sir John A., The Letters of," "1836-1857," ed. by Johnson; "1858-1861," ed. by Johnson and Stelmack, 517
- Macedo, Suzette. See Furtado, Celso
- McElrath, Damian, and Altholz, Josef L. (eds.), "The Correspondence of Lord Acton and Richard Simpson," 1: 146; et al., "Lord Acton," 146
- McGill, Barry (R), 793
- McGill, William J. (R), 1150
- McGreevey, William P. (R), 850
- McGregor, Malcolm F. (R), 1096
- McIntosh, James T., and Monroe, Haskell M., Jr. (eds.), "The Papers of Jefferson Davis," 1: 1506
- Mack, Karlheinz, and Plaszka, Richard Georg (eds.), "Die Auflösung des Habsburgerreiches," 176
- Mack Smith, Denis, "Victor Emanuel, Cavour, and the Risorgimento," 1482
- MacKendrick, Paul (R), 491
- McKeon, Robert M. (R), 738
- McKisack, May, "Medieval History in the Tudor Age," 783. See also 1430
- McLellan, David, "The Young Hegelians and Karl Marx," 735
- MacLeod, Murdo J. (R), 1186
- McLeod, W. (R), 751
- McLoughlin, William G. (C), 237
- Macmillan, Harold, "Riding the Storm, 1956-1959," 1446
- McNaught, Kenneth (R), 577, 1524
- McNeal, Robert H. (R), 548
- McNeill, Mary, "Vere Foster, 1819-1900," 153
- McNicol, Robert E. (R), 1185
- McPherson, James M. (C), 235
- McSherry, James E., "Khrushchev and Kennedy in Retrospect," 1521
- McVeigh, Donald R. (deceased), 1205
- "Madagascar, Early Kingdoms in, 1500-1700," by Kent, 823

- Maddicott, J. R., "Thomas of Lancaster, 1307-1322," 498
 Madison, Kenneth G. (R), 504
 Maehl, William Henry, Jr. (R), 792
 "Magna Carta: The Heritage of Liberty," by Pallister, 510
 "Mainstreams of Medicine: Essays on the Social and Intellectual Context of Medical Practice," ed. by King, 254
 Mair, Paul Hektor, 803
 "Maitland, Frederic William: A Life," by Fifoot, 791
 Major, Kathleen, 493
 "Makhno, Nestor: The Life of an Anarchist," by Peters, 183
 Malament, Barbara (R), 521, 795
 Male, D. J., "Russian Peasant Organization before Collectivisation," 178
 Malloy, James M., "Bolivia," 856; and Thorn, Richard S. (eds.), "Beyond the Revolution," 856
 Maltby, William S., "The Black Legend in England," 785
 "Man and His Habitat: Essays Presented to Emyr Estyn Evans," ed. by Buchanan et al., 254
 "Man Who Dared the Lightning: A New Look at Benjamin Franklin," by Fleming, 1503
 "Manchester Guardian: Biography of a Newspaper," by Ayerst, 793
 "Mandel, Georges, and the Third Republic," by Sherwood, 158
 Mandelbaum, Maurice, "History, Man, & Reason," 734
 Mandell, Richard D., "The Nazi Olympics," 174
 Mangelsdorf, Paul C. (R), 1088
 Mango, Cyril (R), 501
 Mann, Sir Horace, 1122
 "Mannerheim: The Years of Preparation," by Screen, 166
 Manning, D. J., "The Mind of Jeremy Bentham," 141
 Manning, Helen Taft (R), 597
 Manning, Maurice, "The Blueshirts," 1448
 Mansergh, Nicholas, and Lumby, E. W. R. (eds.), "The Transfer of Power 1942-7," 1: 463
 "Maps, Antique, and Their Cartographers," by Lister, 738
 Marcopoulos, George J. (R), 1118
 Marcus, Robert D., "Grand Old Party," 213
 "Marcus Aurelius: Aspects of Civic and Cultural Policy in the East," by Oliver, 753
 Marder, Arthur J., "From the Dreadnought to Scapa Flow," 5: 794
 Margolis, Macy J. (deceased), 1201
 Marias, Julián, "Generations," tr. by Raley, 730
 Maritime history: Kaukiainen, "Suomen talonpoikaistorioiden 1800-luvun alkupuoliskolla (1810-1853)," 166
 Markov, Walter, "Exkurse zu Jacques Roux," 1133
 Marlowe, John, "Cromer in Egypt," 186
 Marraro, Howard R. (ed.), "L'unificazione italiana vista dai diplomatici statunitensi," 4: 1155
 Marsden, E. W., "Greek and Roman Artillery," 751
 Marsh, Henry, "Dark Age Britain," 1427
 Marsh, Peter T. (R), 147
 Marshall, Peter (R), 144
 Martí-Ibáñez, Félix (deceased), 1205
 Martin, Albro, "Enterprise Denied," 1516
 Marty, Martin E., et al., The Cambridge History of the Bible, 94-109
Martyrs, Myths, and the Massacre: The Background of St. Bartholomew, by Kelley, 1323-42
 Martz, John D., and Jorin, Miguel, "Latin-American Political Thought and Ideology," 1184
 Marx, Karl, "Critique of Hegel's 'Philosophy of Right,'" tr. by Jolin and O'Malley, ed. by O'Malley, 1092
Marx and the Agrarian Question, by Hammen, 679-704
 "Marxian Revolutionary Idea," by Tucker, 1399
 "Marxism in Our Time," by Isaac Deutscher, ed. by Tamara Deutscher, 1399
 Mason, Zane Allen, "Frontiersmen of the Faith," 1178
 "Mason, George, The Papers of, 1725-1792," 1-3, ed. by Rutland, 583
 Mastny, Vojtech, Stalin and the Prospects of a Separate Peace in World War II, 1365-83
 Masur, Gerhard, "Imperial Berlin," 803
 Matthews, Herbert L., "A World in Revolution," 1526
 Matthews, William, and Latham, Robert (eds.), "The Diary of Samuel Pepys," 1-3: 135
 Mattila, Aarne, "Työmarkkinasuhteiden murros Suomessa," 535
 "Maverick, Maury: A Political Biography," by Henderson, 1520
 May, Henry F. (R), 578; (C), 1534
 "May Movement: Revolt and Reform. May 1968—the Student Rebellion and Workers' Strike—the Birth of a Social Movement," by Touraine, tr. by Mayhew, 529
 Mayer, Arno J., "Dynamics of Counterrevolution in Europe, 1870-1956," 1440
 Mayhew, Leonard F. X. See Touraine, Alain
 "Mayo documental," 11 and 12: 607
 Mayr, Otto, "Feedback Mechanisms in the Historical Collections of the National Museum of History and Technology," 738; "The Origins of Feedback Control," 738
 Mazour, Anatole G. (R), 181
 Mazrui, Ali A., and Rotberg, Robert I. (eds.), "Protest and Power in Black Africa," 557
 Mazzoleni, Jole, "Paleografia e diplomatica e scienze ausiliarie," 1103
 Meacham, Standish, "The Sense of an Impending Clash": English Working-Class Unrest before the First World War, 1343-64
 Mead, Sidney E. (R), 830
 Medical history: Dain, "Disordered Minds," 585; Hirshfield, "The Lost Reform," 593; Honigsbaum, "The Struggle for the Ministry of Health, 1914-1919," 151; Jarvis, "Insanity and Idiocy in Massachusetts," 585; O'Malley (ed.), "The History of Medical Education: An International Symposium Held February 5-9, 1968," 739; Paul, "A History of Poliomyelitis," 740; Schwarz, "John Harvey Kellogg, M.D.," 838; Walter, "S. Weir Mitchell, M.D.—Neurologist," 839
 "Medicine, Science, and Culture: Historical Essays in Honor of Owsei Temkin," ed. by Stevenson and Multhauf, 255
 "Medieval Canon Law and the Crusader," by Brundage, 1104
 "Medieval History in the Tudor Age," by McKisack, 783
 "Medieval Humanism," by Southern, 1423
 "Medieval Records, The Study of: Essays in Honour of Kathleen Major," ed. by Bullough and Storey, 493
 "Mediterranean Naval Situation, 1908-1914," by Halpern, 781
 Medvedev, Roy A., "K sudu istorii (Genezis i posledstviia Stalinizma)," 1389; "Let History Judge," tr. by Taylor, ed. by Joravsky and Haupt, 1389
 Meier, August (R), 1179
 Meier, Heinz K., "Friendship under Stress," 1092; (R), 1152
 Melka, Robert L. (deceased), 1201
 Melko, Matthew, "The Nature of Civilizations," 1083
 "Mellan nykonservatism och liberalism: Idébrytningar inom högern och bondepartierna 1918-1934," by Torstendahl, 165
 Mellander, G. A., "The United States in Panamanian Politics," 1188
 Mellon, Stanley (R), 157
 "Men of Conscience," by Inglis, 514
 Mendel, Arthur P. (R), 549
 Mendels, Franklin (R), 1454
 Mendoza, Don Diego Hurtado de, 1463
 Mendras, Henri, "The Vanishing Peasant," tr. by Lerner, 160

- Menut, Albert Douglas. See Oresme, Nicole
- Meo, L. D., "Japan's Radio War on Australia, 1941-1945," 575
- "Mer Noire: Des origines à la conquête ottomane," by Bratianu, 809
- "Merchants, Farmers, and River Gods: An Essay on Eighteenth-Century American Politics," by Zemsky, 1501
- "Mérimee, Prosper," by Raitt, 157
- Merk, Frederic, "Fruits of Propaganda in the Tyler Administration," 1177
- "Merobaudes, Flavius: A Translation and Historical Commentary," by Clover, 1103
- Merrill, Horace Samuel, and Merrill, Marion Galbraith, "The Republican Command, 1897-1913," 1074
- Merrillat, H. C. L., "Land and the Constitution in India," 570
- Merry, Henry J., "Montesquieu's System of Natural Government," 1131
- Metcalf, Thomas R. (R), 571
- "Metz, La Réforme à," 1, by Tributou de Morembert, 525
- "Mexican Development, The Politics of," by Hansen, 850
- "Mexican Economy: Twentieth-Century Structure and Growth," by Reynolds, 850
- Mexican Revolution: Meyer, "Conciencia histórica norteamericana sobre la Revolución de 1910," 828; Ulloa, "La Revolución intervenida," 829
- Meyer, Alfred G. (R), 170, 1092
- Meyer, Eugenia, "Conciencia histórica norteamericana sobre la Revolución de 1910," 828
- Meyer, Frank S. (deceased), 1205
- "Michel, Louise: Ou la Velléda de l'anarchie," by Thomas, 1135
- Middlekauff, Robert (R), 1502
- Middlemas, Keith. See Jones, Thomas
- "Midwest, The Winning of the: Social and Political Conflict, 1888-1896," by Jensen, 1074
- Mikhailov, M. I., "Istoriia Soiuzna Kommunistov," 1438
- "Militär- und Innenpolitik im Weltkrieg 1914-1918," ed. by Deist, 1145
- Military history: Aminoff, "Nyuppsatta truppsförband i Finland 1770-1808," 1138; Barker, "The War against Russia, 1854-1856," 180; Beeler, "Warfare in Feudal Europe, 730-1200," 1424; Bucher, "Die Geschichte des Sonderbundskrieges," 1152; Cherepanov, "Severnnyi pokhod Natsional'no-revoliutsionnoi armii Kitaia (Zapiski voennogo sovetnika)," 1167; Cohen, "The Indian Army," 1171; Fergusson, "The Trumpet in the Hall, 1930-1958," 1414; Fischer, "Untersuchungen zum Partherkrieg Antiochos' VII. im Rahmen der Seleukidengeschichte," 1422; Fowler, "The Black Infantry in the West, 1869-1891," 837; Gann, "Guerrillas in History," 737; Hamer, "The British Army," 520; James, "The Years of MacArthur," 1: 215; Kolb, "Die Kriegausbruch 1870," 1470; Marsden, "Greek and Roman Artillery," 751; Morton, "Ministers and Generals," 599; O'Ballance, "The War in the Yemen," 555; Petrov, "Ocherki po istorii revoliutsionnogo dvizheniia v russkoi armii v 1905 g.," 1488; Stepan, "The Military in Politics: Changing Patterns in Brazil," 606; Wagner, "Geschichte des K. K. Kriegsministeriums," 2: 1143; Weinstein, "Japan's Postwar Defense Policy, 1947-1968," 193; Wesseling, "Soldaat en krijger," 1462; Wright and Paszek (eds.), "Science, Technology, and Warfare," 1090
- Mill, John Stuart, and Mill, Harriet Taylor, "Essays on Sex Equality," ed. by Alice S. Rossi, 736
- Millar, Fergus (R), 753
- Miller, Daniel A., "Sir Joseph Yorke and Anglo-Dutch Relations, 1774-1780," 141
- Miller, David W. (R), 1449
- Miller, Helen (R), 1443
- Miller, Lillian B. (R), 583
- "Milton and English Art," by Pointon, 511
- Milward, Alan S., "The New Order and the French Economy," 159
- Miner, H. Craig, "The St. Louis-San Francisco Transcontinental Railroad," 1511
- Minerbi, Sergio I., "L'Italie et la Palestine, 1914-1920," 1156
- "Miners and Merchants in Bourbon Mexico, 1763-1810," by Brading, 848
- Mingay, G. E., and Bagwell, Philip S., "Britain and America 1850-1939," 121
- "Ministerrat und Ministerratsprotokolle, 1848-1867: Behördengeschichtliche und aktenkundliche Analyse," by Rumpfer, 1459
- "Ministers and Generals: Politics and the Canadian Militia, 1868-1904," by Morton, 599
- "Minoans: The Story of Bronze Age Crete," by Hood, 1095
- Mintz, Max M., "Gouverneur Morris and the American Revolution," 203
- "Miracle at Joazeiro," by Della Cava, 1531
- "Mirambo of Tanzania, 1840?-1884," by Bennett, 1493
- Misra, B. B., "The Administrative History of India, 1834-1947," 570
- Mitchell, David, "1919," 1117
- Mitchell, L. G., "Charles James Fox and the Disintegration of the Whig Party, 1782-1794," 142
- "Mitchell, S. Weir, M.D.—Neurologist: A Medical Biography," by Walter, 839
- Mitford, T. B., "The Inscriptions of Kourion," 491
- Moeller, Beverley Bowen, "Phil Swing and Boulder Dam" 1178
- Molho, Anthony (R), 1108
- Mollat, Michel, and Wolff, Philippe, "Ongles bleus, Jacques et Ciampi," 494
- Moltmann, Günther, and Reimers, Karl Friedrich (eds.), "Zeitgeschichte im Film- und Tondokument," 473
- "Monachesimo e la riforma ecclesiastica (1049-1122): Atti della quarta Settimana internazionale di studio, Mendola, 23-29 agosto 1968," 1425
- "Monarchy and Community: Political Ideas in the Later Conciliar Controversy, 1430-1450," by Black, 762
- Monroe, Haskell M., Jr., and McIntosh, James T. (eds.), "The Papers of Jefferson Davis," 1: 1506
- Montague, Ludwell L. (deceased), 1205
- Monter, E. William (R), 770
- "Montesquieu's System of Natural Government," by Merry, 1131
- "Montréal, Histoire de," by Rumilly, 596
- Mooney, Chase C. (R), 209
- Moore, J. P. (R), 855
- Moore, John C. (R), 1128
- Moore, R. Laurence, "European Socialists and the American Promised Land," 121
- Moorhead, Max L. (R), 845
- Moote, A. Lloyd, "The Revolt of the Judges," 1454; (R), 1132, 1455
- Morgan, William James (ed.), "Naval Documents of the American Revolution," 5: 831
- Morineau, Michel, "Les faux-semblants d'un démarrage économique," 1454
- Morris, Richard B. (R), 205
- "Morris, Gouverneur, and the American Revolution," by Mintz, 203
- Morrison, Elting E. (R), 591
- Morrissey, Thomas E., A. G. Dickens and the Men of the Sixteenth Century: A Review Article, 453-62
- Morse, John D. (ed.), "Prints in and of America to 1850," 480
- Morton, Desmond, "Ministers and Generals," 599
- Mosely, Philip E. (deceased), 867
- Mosse, George L. (R), 1094

- Mote, Max, and Itzkowitz, Norman (ed. and tr.), "Mubadele—An Ottoman-Russian Exchange of Ambassadors," 131
- "Motive for a Mission: The Story behind Hess's Flight to Britain," by Douglas-Hamilton, 1149
- "Mouvements nationaux d'indépendance et classes populaires aux XIX<sup>e</sup> et XX<sup>e</sup> siècles en Occident et en Orient," 743
- Mowat, Charles Loch (deceased), 247
- "Mubadele—An Ottoman-Russian Exchange of Ambassadors," ed. and tr. by Itzkowitz and Mote, 131
- Muir, Bruce, "The Puzzled Patriots," 575
- Muldoon, James (R), 1104
- Multhauf, Robert P., and Stevenson, Lloyd G. (eds.), "Medicine, Science, and Culture," 255
- Mulvey, Helen F. (R), 1127
- Munz, Peter (R), 766
- Murray, Jacqueline, "The First European Agriculture," 1088
- Murray, Robert Cornelius (deceased), 1205
- "Murray, Hubert: The Australian Pro-Consul," by West, 573
- "Murray, William Vans, Federalist Diplomat: The Shaping of Peace with France, 1797–1801," by Hill, 1506
- Music: Denisoff, "Great Day Coming," 1180; Russell, "Jazz Style in Kansas City and the Southwest," 1179
- "Mussolini's Gadfly: Roberto Farinacci," by Fornari, 1157
- Myer, Dillon S., "Uprooted Americans," 229
- Myers, Margaret G., "A Financial History of the United States," 197
- "Myth of a Progressive Reform: Railroad Regulation in Wisconsin, 1903–1910," by Caine, 592
- Nada, Narciso (ed.), "Le relazioni diplomatiche fra l'Austria e il Regno di Sardegna," 1st ser., 3: 504
- Nadel, George H. (R), 730
- Nadzhafov, D. G., "Narod SShA protiv voyny i fashizma, 1933–1939," 219
- Naidis, Mark (R), 570
- "Naissance de l'historiographie moderne," by Lefebvre, 1403
- Najita, Tetsuo (R), 193
- Namier, Julia, "Lewis Namier," 1446
- "Namier, Lewis: A Biography," by Julia Namier, 1446
- "Nanyang Chinese National Salvation Movement, 1937–1941," by Akashi, 565
- "Napoleonists: A Study in Political Disaffection, 1760–1960," by Lean, 154
- Narochitskii, A. L., et al. (eds.), "Vneshniaia politika Rossi XIX i nachala XX veka," 1st ser., 7: 179
- "Narod SShA protiv voyny i fashizma, 1933–1939," by Nadzhafov, 219
- "Narrative Form in History and Fiction: Hume, Fielding, & Gibbon," by Brady, 730
- Nash, Gary B. (R), 1502
- Nash, Gerald D. (R), 1178
- "Nation in Torment: The Great American Depression, 1929–1939," by Ellis, 226
- "National Dream: The Great Railway, 1871–1881," by Berton, 600
- "Nationale Front: Eine schweizer faschistische Bewegung, 1930–1940," by Glaus, 1154
- Nationalism: Akashi, "The Nanyang Chinese National Salvation Movement, 1937–1941," 565; Ayandele, "Holy Johnson," 817; Berdahl, New Thoughts on German Nationalism, 65–80; Haithcox, "Communism and Nationalism in India," 573; "Mouvements nationaux d'indépendance et classes populaires aux XIX<sup>e</sup> et XX<sup>e</sup> siècles en Occident et en Orient," 743; Singh, "Nationalism and Social Reform in India," 571; Symmons-Symonolewicz, "Nationalist Movements: A Comparative View," 743
- "Navajo Roundup: Selected Correspondence of Kit Carson's Expedition against the Navajo, 1863–1865," by Kelly, 212
- Naval history: Gough, "The Royal Navy and the Northwest Coast of North America, 1810–1914," 744; Halpern, "The Mediterranean Naval Situation, 1908–1914," 781; Kraus, "Sir Francis Drake," 508
- Nawrocki, Stanisław, "Policja hitlerowska w tzw. Kraju Warty w latach 1939–1945," 1441
- Naylor, John F. (R), 523, 1442
- Nazism and Nazi Germany: Aronson, "Reinhard Heydrich und die Frühgeschichte von Gestapo und SD," 1476; Bracher, "The German Dictatorship," tr. by Steinberg, 172; Groscurth, "Tagebücher eines Abwehroffiziers 1938–1940," ed. by Krausnick and Deutsch, 175; Hockerts, "Die Sittlichkeitsprozesse gegen katholische Ordensangehörige und Priester, 1936/1937," 1148; Jacobsen (ed.), "Hans Steinacher, Bundesleiter des VDA 1933–1937," 544; Mandell, "The Nazi Olympics," 174; Nawrocki, "Policja hitlerowska w tzw. Kraju Warty w latach 1939–1945," 1441; Schleunes, "The Twisted Road to Auschwitz," 543; Schöps, "Bereit für Deutschland!" 543; Scholl, "Students against Tyranny," tr. by Schultz, 173; Smith, "Heinrich Himmler," 1144; Sziling, "Polityka okupanta hitlerowskiego wobec Kościoła Katolickiego, 1939–1945," 1441; Walker, "Hitler Youth and Catholic Youth 1933–1936," 173
- Nechkina, M. V. See Kliuchevskii, V. O.
- Negro history: Fowler, "The Black Infantry in the West, 1869–1891," 837; Huggins, "Harlem Renaissance," 1179; Lombardi, "The Decline and Abolition of Negro Slavery in Venezuela, 1820–1854," 605; Rice, "The Negro in Texas, 1874–1900," 837; Winks, "The Blacks in Canada," 1527; Wolters, "Negroes and the Great Depression: The Problem of Economic Recovery," 226
- Neil, Robert O. (R), 172
- Nelson, Benjamin. See Rossi, Paolo
- Nelson, Lynn H. (R), 126
- Neth, Ulrich, "Standesherrn und liberale Bewegung," 168
- "Netherlands Antilles, History of the Jews of the," 1 and 2, by Emmanuel and Emmanuel, 851
- Neumann, William L. (deceased), 868
- Neustadt, Richard E., "Alliance Politics," 489
- Nevins, Allan, "The War for the Union," 3 and 4: 832; (deceased), 869
- "New Deal and the Last Hurrah: Pittsburgh Machine Politics," by Stave, 594
- "New Movements in the Study and Teaching of History," ed. by Ballard, 1084
- "New Order and the French Economy," by Milward, 159
- "New South Wales Immigration Policy, 1856–1900," by Hayden, 825
- "Newfoundland, English Enterprise in, 1577–1660," by Cell, 741
- Newspapers and periodicals: Ayer, "The Manchester Guardian," 793; Feist and Feist (eds.), Kunst und Künstler, 1472; Gannon, "The British Press and Germany, 1936–1939," 797; Greene, "America's Heroes," 118; Hart, "Views on the News," 118; Hohenberg, "Free Press/Free People," 741; Klutentretter, Die Rheinische Zeitung von 1842/43 in der politischen und geistigen Bewegung des Vormärz, 1 and 2: 1469; Kobre, "Development of American Journalism," 118; Matthews, "A World in Revolution," 1526; Redondo, "Las empresas políticas de José Ortega y Gasset," 800
- Newton, Earle W., and Dibble, Ernest F. (eds.), "Spain and Her Rivals on the Gulf Coast," 1411
- Newton, Norman, "Thomas Gage in Spanish America," 845

- Nicholas, David (R), 477
 Nicholas, H. G. (R), 1495
 Nichols, J. Alden (R), 540
 Nightingale, Pamela, "Trade and Empire in Western India, 1784-1806," 824
 "Nineteen-nineteen: Red Mirage," by Mitchell, 1117
 Nish, Elizabeth (ed.), "Debates of the Legislative Assembly of United Canada," 1: 597
 "Nkrumah, Kwame: The Anatomy of an African Dictatorship," by Omari, 814
 Noble, G. Bernard, "Christian A. Herter," 231
 Noether, Emiliana P. (R), 178, 1156
 Noland, Aaron (R), 1461
 "Non-White Immigration and the 'White Australia' Policy," by London, 825
 Norling, Bernard, "Timeless Problems in History," 1083
 "Norman Conquest and Its Effects on the Economy: 1066-86," by Finn, 497
 "Normandie, Histoire de la," ed. by Bouïard, 478
 "Normanni in Italia: Linee di ricerca sui primi insediamenti," 1, by Tramontana, 1107 Norris, James D., and Shaffer, Arthur H. (eds.), "Politics and Patronage in the Gilded Age," 213
 "North America, Sixteenth Century: The Land and the People as Seen by the Europeans," by Sauer, 826
 Notestein, Wallace, "The House of Commons 1604-1610," 705
 Novak, Steven J. (C), 239
 "Nürnberg: Geschichte einer europäischen Stadt," ed. by Pfeiffer, 476
 "Nürnberg, Geschichte, in Bilddokumenten," ed. by Pfeiffer and Schwemmer, 476
 Nugent, W. T. K. (R), 217
 Nunn, Frederick M., "Chilean Politics, 1920-1931," 1190
 Nutting, Anthony, "Scramble for Africa," 561
 "Nyupsatta truppförband i Finland 1770-1808: Administrativ historia och personal," by Aminoff, 1138
 Oakley, Francis (R), 1423
 Oates, John F. (R), 1420
 O'Ballance, Edgar, "The War in the Yemen," 555
 Obelkevich, James (R), 1117
 "Oberdeutsche Hochfinanz, 1350-1450," by Stromer, 761
 Obolensky, Dimitri, "The Byzantine Commonwealth," 1433
 O'Brien, Charles F., "Sir William Dawson," 843
 O'Brien, Charles H. (R), 1438
 O'Brien, D. P., "J. R. McCulloch," 145
 O Broin, Leon, "Dublin Castle and the 1916 Rising," 522
 "Ocherki po istorii revoliutsionnogo dvizheniia v russkoi armii v 1905 g.," by Petrov, 1488
 O'Connor, John T. (R), 153
 "Österreichische-ungarische Ausgleich 1867: Materialien (Referate und Diskussion) der internationalen Konferenz in Bratislava 28.8.-1.9. 1967," ed. by Vantuch and Holotik, 1478
 Ogelsby, J. C. M. (R), 1188
 Okamoto, Shumpei, "The Japanese Oligarchy and the Russo-Japanese War," 191
 "Old-Age Politics in California: From Richardson to Reagan," by Putnam, 224
 "Old World and the New, 1492-1650," by Elliott, 1435
 Oliver, James H., "Marcus Aurelius," 753
 Olsen, Donald J. (R), 788
 Olson, Sherry H., "The Depletion Myth," 1515
 O'Malley, C. D. (ed.), "The History of Medical Education," 739
 O'Malley, Joseph. See Marx, Karl Omari, T. Peter, "Kwame Nkrumah," 814
 "On Historical and Political Knowing: An Inquiry into Some Problems of Universal Law & Human Freedom," by Kaplan, 1084
 "Once a Slave: The Slaves' View of Slavery," by Feldstein, 209
 O'Neill, Thomas P., and Longford, Earl of, "Eamon de Valera," 524
 O'Neill, William L., "Coming Apart," 1183
 "Ongles bleus, Jacques et Ciompi: Les révolutions populaires en Europe aux XIV<sup>e</sup> et XV<sup>e</sup> siècles," by Mollat and Wolff, 494
 Oost, Stewart Irvin (R), 753
 "Ordeal of Ambition: Jefferson, Hamilton, Burr," by Daniels, 204
 Oredsson, Sverker, "Järnvägarna och det allmänna," 165
 Oresme, Nicole, "Le Livre de Politiques d'Aristote," ed. by Menut, 125
 "Organizing African Unity," by Woronoff, 814
 "Origines et débuts des partis communistes des pays latins (1919-1923)," ed. by Bahne, 505
 Orlik, I. I., "Imperialisticheskie derzhavy i Vostochnaia Evropa (1945-1965)," 488
 Orlow, Dietrich (R), 174
 Ormos, Mária, "Franciaország és a keleti biztonság 1931-1936," 506
 Ormsby, William, "The Emergence of the Federal Concept in Canada, 1839-1845," 597
 O'Rourke, John J., and Benko, Stephen (eds.), "The Catacombs and the Colosseum," 756
 "Ortega y Gasset, José, Las empresas políticas de: 'El Sol', 'Crisol', 'Luz' (1917-1934)," by Redondo, 800
 Osborne, John W., "The Silent Revolution," 139
 Oschry, Leonard. See Katz, Jacob
 Osterloh, Karl-Heinz, "Joseph von Sonnenfels und die österreichische Reformbewegung im Zeitalter des aufgeklärten Absolutismus," 130
 "Out of Time, Out of Place: Henry Gregory and the Benedictine Order in Colonial Australia," by Shanahan, 574
 "Owen, Robert: Aspects of His Life and Work. A Symposium," ed. by Butt, 515
 "Pacis Westphalicae, Acta," Ser. III-A, 4, pt. 1, ed. by Wolff, 1139
 Page, Stanley W. (C), 1191
 Painting and sculpture: Feist and Feist (eds.), "Kunst und Künstler," 1472; Glaser, "Engraved America," 479; Lewis, "George Grosz," 1472; Morse (ed.), "Prints in and of America to 1850," 480; Peterson, "Americans at Home," 583; Pointon, "Milton & English Art," 511; Rossi and Hunt, "The Art of the Old West," 1172; Strong, "Tudor and Jacobean Portraits," 1 and 2: 1119; Van Eerde, "Wenceslaus Hollar," 1119
 "Palacký: The Historian as Scholar and Nationalist," by Zacek, 1477
 Paleography: Bullough and Storey (eds.), "The Study of Medieval Records," 493; Mazzoleni, "Paleografia e diplomatica e scienze ausiliarie," 1103; Mitford, "The Inscriptions of Kourion," 491
 "Palestinian Parties and Politics That Shaped the Old Testament," by Smith, 1418
 Pallister, Anne, "Magna Carta," 510
 Palmer, John R. (R), 1402
 Palmer, Lady Sophia, 792
 Palmer, R. R. (R), 776
 Palmer, Robert E. A., "The Archaic Community of the Romans," 755
 Paludan, Phillip S., The American Civil War Considered as a Crisis in Law and Order, 1013-34
 Panting, G. E. (R), 601
 "Paoli, Pasquale: An Enlightened Hero, 1725-1807," by Thrasher, 177
 "Papal Judges Delegate in the Province of Canterbury, 1198-1254: A Study in Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction and Administration," by Sayers, 763

- "Papers Presented at the Second Annual New Jersey History Symposium Held December 5, 1970, at the State Museum, Trenton, under the Auspices of the New Jersey Historical Commission," 1208
- Paret, Peter (R), 1090, 1472
- "Paris, Le terroir de, aux époques gallo-romaine et franque: Peuplement et défrichement dans la Civitas des Parisii (Seine, Seine-et-Oise)," by Roblin, 1432
- Paris Academy of Sciences, 1130
- Parker, Garland G. (R), 815
- Parker, Harold T. (R), 155
- Parker, William N. (R), 1087
- Parkes, Henry Bamford (deceased), 1201
- Parliament and Society in Early Stuart England: The Legacy of Wallace Notestein. A Review Article*, by Rabb, 705-14
- "Parliament of 1621: A Study in Constitutional Conflict," by Zaller, 705
- "Parliament of 1624: Politics and Foreign Policy," by Ruigh, 705
- Parry, R. H. See Ashton, Robert
- "Parsons and Pedagogues: The S.P.G. Adventure in American Education," by Calam, 202
- "Partherkrieg Antiochos' VII. im Rahmen der Seleukidengeschichte, Untersuchungen zum," by Fischer, 1422
- "Parti socialiste suisse et l'Internationale, 1914-1915: De l'Union nationale à Zimmerwald," by Collart, 1480
- "Partier og erhverv: Studier i partiorganisation og byerhvervenes politiske aktivitet ca. 1880-ca. 1913," by Dybdahl, 533
- Partition of India: A Quarter Century After: A Review Article*, by Frykenberg, 463-72
- "Partition of India: Policies and Perspectives, 1935-1947," ed. by Philips and Wainwright, 463
- "Party Leadership and Revolutionary Power in China," ed. by Lewis, 1167
- Paszek, Lawrence J., and Wright, Monte D. (eds.), "Science, Technology, and Warfare," 1090
- "Patkul, Johann Reinhold von, Der livländische Staatsmann: Ein abenteuerliches Leben zwischen Peter dem Grossen, August dem Starken und Karl XII. von Schweden," by Erdmann, 533
- Patterson, James T. (R), 226
- Paul, Arnold M. (R), 841
- Paul, John R., "A History of Poliomyelitis," 740
- Payne, Howard C. (R), 742
- Pearson, Charles Henry, 573
- Pearson, L. B., "Words and Occasions," 602
- Pearson, Lionel (R), 752
- Pease, Otis A. (R), 592
- Pegues, Franklin J. (R), 497, 1107
- Pelikan, Jaroslav, "The Christian Tradition," 1: 1102
- Pélissier, René, and Wheeler, Douglas L., "Angola," 820
- "People and Politics in the Middle East," ed. by Curtis, 810
- "Pepys, Samuel, The Diary of: A New and Complete Transcription," 1-3, ed. by Latham and Matthews, 135
- "Perekhod ot feodalizma k kapitalizmu v Rossii: Materialy vsesoiuznoi diskussii," ed. by Shunkov et al., 715
- Peremans, Nicole, "Erasmus et Bucer d'après leur correspondance," 1113
- Pereña, Luciano. See Roa Dávila, Juan
- Perkin, Harold (ed.), "History," 1084
- Pernoud, Régine, "Héloïse et Abélard," 764
- Perón, Eva, 603
- Perry, Elisabeth Israels (R), 526
- Perry, J. C. (R), 193
- "Personal Record: The Labour Government, 1964-1970," by Wilson, 1446
- "Personality in Japanese History," ed. by Craig and Shively, 565
- Persons, Stow (R), 586
- "Perspectives on the European Past: Conversations with Historians," by Cantor, 1403
- "Peru, Colonial, Government and Society in: The Intendant System, 1784-1814," by Fisher, 855
- Pessen, Edward (C), 611
- Peters, Edward, "The Shadow King," 759
- Peters, F. E., "The Harvest of Hellenism," 1098; (R), 553, 808
- Peters, Victor, "Nestor Makhno," 183
- Peterson, Harold F. (R), 603
- Peterson, Harold L., "Americans at Home," 583
- Petrie, Sir Charles, "King Charles III of Spain," 160
- Petrov, V. A., "Ocherki po istorii revoliutsionnogo dvizheniia v russkoi armii v 1905 g.," 1488
- "Pettigrew Papers," 1, ed. by Lemmon, 1499
- Pfeiffer, Gerhard (ed.), "Nürnberg," 476; and Schwemmer, Wilhelm (eds.), "Geschichte Nürnbergs in Bilddokumenten," 476
- Pfanzte, Otto, Toward a Psychoanalytic Interpretation of Bismarck, 419-44
- Phelps, Reginald H. (R), 542
- Philanthropy: Pullan, "Rich and Poor in Renaissance Venice," 1481
- Philips, C. H., and Wainwright, Mary Doreen (eds.), "The Partition of India," 463
- "Philosophy, Technology, and the Arts in the Early Modern Era," by Rossi, tr. by Attanasio, ed. by Nelson, 1112
- "Philosophy of India and Its Impact on American Thought," by Riepe, 201
- Pickersgill, J. W., and Forster, D. F., "The Mackenzie King Record," 3 and 4: 602
- Pierard, Richard V. (R), 559
- Pierius, Urban, "Geschichte der kursächsischen Kirchen- und Schulreformation," ed. by Klein, 1467
- Pierson, Coen Gallatin (deceased), 1205
- Pike, Fredrick B., "Hispanismo, 1898-1936," 1528
- Pike, Ruth (R), 162
- Pilcher, George William, "Samuel Davies," 830; (R), 202
- Pinckney, Paul J. (C), 234
- Pipes, Richard, "Struve," 1162
- "Pisa, Studi sulle istituzioni comunali a: Città e contado, consoli e podestà, secoli XII-XIII," by Volpe, 1108
- "Pis'ma, dnevniki, aforizmy i mysli ob istorii," by Kliuchevskii, ed. by Nechkina, 181
- Plaschka, Richard Georg, and Mack, Karlheinz (eds.), "Die Auflösung des Habsburgerreiches," 176
- Platt, D. C. M., "The Cinderella Service," 789
- Poddar, Arabinda, "Renaissance in Bengal," 568
- "Podzia ł Niemiec NRD i NRF w latach 1949-1955," by Krasuski, 175
- Pointon, Marcia R., "Milton & English Art," 511
- "Police State," by Chapman, 742
- "Policja hitlerowska w tzw. Kraju Warty w latach 1939-1945," by Nawrocki, 1441
- "Poliomyelitis, A History of," by Paul, 740
- "Polish Civilization, Studies in: Selected Papers Presented at the First Congress of the Polish Institute of Arts & Sciences in America, November 25, 26, 27, 1966, in New York," ed. by Wandycz, 255
- "Political History: Principles and Practice," by Elton, 445
- "Political Leaders of Latin America: Che Guevara, Alfredo Stroessner, Eduardo Frei Montalva, Juscelino Kubitschek, Carlos Lacerda, Eva Perón," by Bourne, 603
- "Political Mobilization of the Venezuelan Peasant," by Powell, 605
- "Political Sciences: General Principles of Selection in Social Science and History," by Stretton, 445
- Political theory: "Anarchici e anarchia nel mondo contemporaneo," 733; Black, "Monarchy and Community," 762; Breen, "The Character of the Good Ruler," 1175; Chapman, "Police State," 742; Hamby,

- The Vital Center, the Fair Deal, and the Quest for a Liberal Political Economy*, 653-78; Jorin and Martz, "Latin-American Political Thought and Ideology," 1184; Litzén, "A War of Roses and Lilies," 1431; Manning, "The Mind of Jeremy Bentham," 141; Marx, "Critique of Hegel's 'Philosophy of Right'," tr. by Jolin and O'Malley, ed. by O'Malley, 1092; Merry, "Montesquieu's System of Natural Government," 1131; Oresme, "Le Livre de Politiques d'Aristote," ed. by Menut, 125; Osterloh, "Joseph von Sonnenfels und die österreichische Reformbewegung im Zeitalter des aufgeklärten Absolutismus," 130; Peters, "The Shadow King," 759; Roa Dávila, "De Regnorum Iustitia," ed. by Pereña et al., 530; Schiera, "Il cameralismo e l'assolutismo tedesco," 130; Wehlen, "Geschichtsschreibung und Staatsauffassung im Zeitalter Ludwigs des Frommen," 768
- "Politicians at War, July 1914 to May 1915: A Prologue to the Triumph of Lloyd George," by Hazlehurst, 521
- "Politics and History in the Soviet Union," by Heer, 552
- "Politics and Patronage in the Gilded Age: The Correspondence of James A. Garfield and Charles E. Henry," ed. by Norris and Shaffer, 213
- "Politics and Trade in Southern Mexico, 1750-1821," by Hamnett, 1529
- "Politics in English Romantic Poetry," by Woodring, 143
- "Politische Widerstand gegen Rom in Griechenland, 217-86 v. Chr.," by Deininger, 753
- "Polityka okupanta hitlerowskiego wobec Kościoła Katolickiego, 1939-1945: Tzw. Okręgi Rzeszy: Gdańsk-Prusy Zachodnie, Kraj Warty i Regencja Katowicka," by Sziling, 1441
- Pollard, Sidney, and Higgins, J. P. P. (eds.), "Aspects of Capital Investment in Great Britain, 1750-1850," 1121
- Pomeroy, Earl (R), 224
- Pomfret, John E., and Shumway, Floyd M., "Founding the American Colonies, 1583-1660," 194
- Ponko, Vincent, Jr., "The Privy Council and the Spirit of Elizabethan Economic Management, 1558-1603," 507
- Ponomar'ov, P. O., et al. (eds.), "Donets'ka Oblast'," 546
- "Pont-de-Montvert: Social Structure and Politics in a French Village, 1700-1914," by Higonet, 1455
- Ponting, Kenneth G., "The Woollen Industry of South-west England," 786
- Poppino, Rollie E. (R), 606
- Porter, Dale H., "The Abolition of the Slave Trade in England, 1784-1807," 143
- Porter, Kenneth Wiggins (R), 837
- Pospelov, P. N., "Problemy istorii (Stat'i i rechi)," 474
- "Potentates: Business and Businessmen in American History," by Seligman, 1173
- "Pound, Ezra, The Life of," by Stock, 594
- Powell, John Duncan, "Political Mobilization of the Venezuelan Peasant," 605
- Powell, William S., et al. (eds.), "The Regulators in North Carolina," 1504
- "Power in Africa," by First, 814
- "Power in the Industrial Revolution," by Hills, 786
- Powicke, Michael R. (R), 1105, 1424
- Poynter, J. R. (R), 1125
- "Pozitivista történetnézet," by Várkonyi, 731
- "Prag und Wien 1848: Probleme der nationalen und sozialen Revolution im Spiegel der Wiener Ministerratsprotokolle," by Prinz, 1151
- Prager, Frank D., and Scaglia, Gustina, "Brunelleschi," 1112
- "Prague Spring, The Intellectual Origins of the: The Development of Reformist Ideas in Czechoslovakia 1956-1967," by Kusín, 1161
- Prall, Stuart E. (R), 507
- Prang, Margaret (R), 602
- Prawdin, Michael, "Marie de Rohan, Duchesse de Chevreuse," 1130
- "Prehistory of Africa," by Clark, 812
- "Première Internationale," 3 and 4, ed. by Freymond, 1412
- "Prescott, William Hickling: A Biography," by Gardiner, 827
- "Présence du Portugal en Belgique (De Philippe d'Alsace à Léopold I.)," by Brazão, 801
- Press, Volker, "Calvinismus und Territorialstaat," 1138
- Preston, Richard A. (R), 232, 599
- Preu, Georg, 803
- Price, Roger, "The French Second Republic," 1457
- "Pride's Purge: Politics in the Puritan Revolution," by Underdown, 1120
- "Priming the German Economy: American Occupational Policies, 1945-1948," by Backer, 1476
- "Prints in and of America to 1850," ed. by Morse, 480
- Prinz, Friedrich, "Prag und Wien 1848," 1151
- Pritchard, James B. (R), 490
- "Privy Council and the Spirit of Elizabethan Economic Management, 1558-1603," by Ponko, 507
- "Probleme deutscher Zeitgeschichte," 1475
- "Problemy istorii (Stat'i i rechi)," by Pospelov, 474
- "Professor of Democracy: The Life of Charles Henry Pearson, 1830-1894, Oxford Don and Australian Radical," by Tregenza, 573
- Prosser, Jeanne Melchior (deceased), 248
- "Protection, The Politics of: Lord Derby and the Protectionist Party, 1841-1852," by Stewart, 1125
- "Protest and Power in Black Africa," ed. by Rotberg and Mazrui, 556
- "Protestant Diplomacy and the Near East: Missionary Influence on American Policy, 1810-1927," by Grabill, 831
- "Protokolle des österreichischen Ministerrates 1848-1867," pt. 6, 1, ed. by Brettner-Messler, 1459
- "Provence intérieure, La vie sociale en, au lendemain de la Révolution," by Agulhon, 1134
- Prucha, Francis Paul (R), 212, 589
- "Prussian Bureaucracy in Crisis, 1840-1860: Origins of an Administrative Ethos," by Gillis, 1469
- "Psychoanalytic Interpretation of History," ed. by Wolman, 1401
- "Ptolemaic Itanos and Hellenistic Crete," by Spyridakis, 752
- Pugh, T. B. (ed.), "Glamorgan County History," 3: 1429
- Pullan, Brian, "Rich and Poor in Renaissance Venice," 1481
- Pulleyblank, E. G. (R), 563
- Pulman, Michael Barraclough, "The Elizabethan Privy Council in the Fifteen-seventies," 508
- Putnam, Jackson H., "Old-Age Politics in California," 224
- "Puzzled Patriots: The Story of the Australia First Movement," by Muirden, 575
- Quandt, Jean B., "From the Small Town to the Great Community," 221
- "Quest for National Efficiency: A Study in British Politics and Political Thought, 1899-1914," by Searle, 793
- Quinn, Herbert F. (R), 601
- Qvist, Gunnar, "Fredrika Bremer och kvinnans emancipation," 1466
- Rabb, Theodore K., Parliament and Society in Early Stuart England: The Legacy of Wallace Notestein. A Review Article, 705-14; (C), 1534
- "Radical Politics and Canadian Labour, 1880-1930," by Robin, 601
- Radwan, Ann Bos (R), 824
- Rae, John B., "The Road and the Car in American Life," 1516
- Raitt, A. W., "Prosper Mérimée," 157

- Raley, Harold C. See Marías, Julián
 Ramsay, Robert G. (deceased), 1205
 Rankin, Mary Backus, "Early Chinese Revolutionaries," 187
 Rath, R. John (R), 504
 "Rathenau, Walther, and the Weimar Republic: The Politics of Reparations," by Felix, 1147
 Ratzinger, Joseph, "The Theology of History in St. Bonaventure," 762
 Raven-Hart, R. (tr.), "Cape Good Hope, 1652-1702," 823
 "Raza y tierra: La guerra de castas y el henequén," by González Navarro, 1530
 "Rebellion in Black Africa," ed. by Rotberg, 557
 "Records of Some Sessions of the Peace in the City of Lincoln, 1351-1354, and the Borough of Stamford, 1351," ed. by Kimball, 1106
 Redondo, Gonzalo, "Las empresas políticas de José Ortega y Gasset," 800
 Rees, Joan, "Fulke Greville, Lord Brooke, 1554-1628," 507
 Reese, Trevor B., "Australia, New Zealand, and the United States," 487
 Reeves, Thomas C. (R), 835, 1520
 "Reformation and Society in Sixteenth-Century Europe," by Dickens, 453
 "Reformation in England: To the Accession of Elizabeth I," ed. by Dickens and Carr, 453
 "Reformers in the Wings," by Steinmetz, 771
 "Regulators in North Carolina: A Documentary History, 1759-1776," ed. by Powell et al., 1504
 "Reichsterritorium und schwedische Provinz: Vorpommern unter Karls XI. Vormündern (1660-1672)," by Backhaus, 129
 Reilly, Bernard F. (R), 530
 Reimers, Karl Friedrich, and Moltmann, Günther (eds.), "Zeitgeschichte im Film- und Tondokument," 473
 Reinmuth, Howard S., Jr. (ed.), "Early Stuart Studies," 133; (R), 784
 Reinmuth, Howard S., Jr. (R), 784
 Reinmuth, O. W. (R), 1099
 "Relazioni diplomatiche fra l'Austria e il Regno di Sardegna," 1st ser., 3, ed. by Nada, 504
 Religion: "Cambridge History of the Bible," 1, ed. by Ackroyd and Evans, 94; 2, ed. by Lampe, 100; 3, ed. by Greenslade, 106; Cuming and Baker (eds.), "Councils and Assemblies," 1089; Dickens and Carr (eds.), "The Reformation in England," 453; Dickens, "Lollards and Protestants in the Diocese of York 1509-1558," 453; Dickens, "Martin Luther and the Reformation," 453; Dickens, "Reformation and Society in Sixteenth-Century Europe," 453; Dickens, "The English Reformation," 453; Dickens, "Thomas Cromwell and the English Reformation," 453; Dumézil, "Archaic Roman Religion," tr. by Krapp, 1099; Ferguson, "The Religions of the Roman Empire," 1102; Grabill, "Protestant Diplomacy and the Near East," 831; Haddad, "Syrian Christians in Muslim Society," 185; Hunter, "Buddhism in Hawaii," 1413; Kelley, Martyrs, Myths, and the Massacre: The Background of St. Bartholomew, 1323-42; Morrissey, A. G. Dickens and the Men of the Sixteenth Century: A Review Article, 453-62; O'Brien, "Sir William Dawson," 843; Peremans, "Erasme et Bucer d'après leur correspondance," 1113; Pierius, "Geschichte der kursächsischen Kirchen- und Schulreformation," ed. by Klein, 1467; Press, "Calvinismus und Territorialstaat," 1138; Schwarzbach, "Voltaire's Old Testament Criticism," 154; Seubert, "Untersuchungen zur Geschichte der Reformation in der ehemaligen freien Reichsstadt Dinkelsbühl," 802; Simon, "Die Kirchen in Russland," 547; Smith, Funkenstein, and Marty, The Cambridge History of the Bible, 94-109; Steinmetz, "Reformers in the Wings," 771; Strayer, "The Albigenian Crusades," 1433; Tribut de Morembert, "La Réforme à Metz," 1: 525; Wolff (ed.), "Acta Pacis Westphalicae," Ser. III-A, 4, pt. 1: 1139; Yardeni, "La conscience nationale en France pendant les guerres de religion (1559-1598)," 1129
 Rem, Wilhelm, 803
 Remak, Joachim (R), 780
 "Renaissance Men and Ideas," ed. by Schwoebel, 1409
 Renouard, Yves, "The Avignon Papacy, 1305-1403," tr. by Bethell, 1106
 Rentz, George (R), 115
 "Repentance and Revolt: A Psychological Approach to History," by Freeman, 445
 "Report about the Dispute of a Man with His Ba," by Goedicke, 750
 "Republican Command, 1897-1913," by Merrill and Merrill, 1074
Republican Party, New Perspectives on the, 1877-1913: A Review Article, by Gould, 1074-82
 "Republics in Ancient India: C. 1500 B.C.-500 B.C.," by Sharma, 1170
 Resnick, Daniel P. (R), 154, 1457
 "Respectable Radical: George Howell and Victorian Working Class Politics," by Leventhal, 150
 "Revolt of the Judges: The Parlement of Paris and the Fronde, 1643-1652," by Moote, 1454
 "Revolución intervenida: Relaciones diplomáticas entre México y Estados Unidos (1910-1914)," by Ulloa, 829
 "Revolution and Chinese Foreign Policy: Peking's Support for Wars of National Liberation," by Van Ness, 190
 "Revolutionäre Bewegung im Rheinland am Ende des achtzehnten Jahrhunderts," 2, by Julku, 168
 "Revolutionary Syndicalism and French Labor: A Cause without Rebels," by Stearns, 527
 "Revolutionary Syndicalism in France: The Direct Action of Its Time," by Ridley, 527
 "Revolutions and Military Rule in the Middle East," 2, pt. 1, by Haddad, 1163
 Rexine, John E. (R), 1102
 Reynolds, Clark W., "The Mexican Economy," 850
 "Rheinische Zeitung von 1842/43 in der politischen und geistigen Bewegung des Vormärz," 1 and 2, by Klutentreter, 1469
 Rhoads, Edward (R), 564
 Riasanovsky, Nicholas V. (R), 779
 Ribeiro, Darcy, "The Americas and Civilization," tr. by Barrett and Barrett, 844
 Ribeiro, Orlando, "A evolução agrária no Portugal mediterrâneo," 1464
 Rice, Lawrence D., "The Negro in Texas, 1874-1900," 837
 Rich, Norman (R), 1440
 "Rich and Poor in Renaissance Venice: The Social Institutions of a Catholic State, to 1620," by Pullan, 1481
 "Richard II, The Reign of: Essays in Honour of May McKisack," ed. by Du Boulay and Barron, 1430
 Richmond, Arthur A., III (R), 1506
 "Riding the Storm, 1956-1959," by Macmillan, 1446
 Ridley, F. F., "Revolutionary Syndicalism in France," 527
 Riepe, Dale, "The Philosophy of India and Its Impact on American Thought," 201
 Riggs, A. R. (R), 583
 Rimmer, Gordon (R), 139, 1121
 "Rio Grande do Sul and Brazilian Regionalism, 1882-1930," by Love, 854
Rioting in Its Jacksonian Setting, by Grimsted, 361-97
 "Rising Sun: The Decline and Fall of the Japanese Empire, 1936-1945," by Toland, 192
Risorgimento: Mack Smith, "Victor Emanuel, Cavour, and the Risorgimento," 1482
 Rivlin, Helen Anne B. (R), 186
 Roa Dávila, Juan, "De Regnorum Iustitia," ed. by Pereña et al., 530

- "Road and the Car in American Life," by Rae, 1516
 "Road to Aba: A Study of British Administrative Policy in Eastern Nigeria," by Gailey, 818
 Robbins, Caroline (R), 137, 775
 Roberts, David (R), 790
 Robin, Martin, "Radical Politics and Canadian Labour, 1880-1930," 601
 Robinson, Howard (R), 1443
 Robinson, Richard A. H., "The Origins of Franco's Spain," 161
 Robinton, Madeline R. (R), 152, 515
 Roblin, Michel, "Le terroir de Paris aux époques gallo-romaine et franque," 1432
 Rockland, Michael Aaron (tr.), "Sarmiento's Travels in the United States in 1847," 195
 Roelker, Nancy L. (R), 1129
 "Rohan, Marie de, Duchesse de Chevreuse," by Prawdin, 1130
 "Romagna medievale," by Vasina, 768
 Roman Catholic Church: Bazant, "Alienation of Church Wealth in Mexico," ed. and tr. by Costeloe, 849; id., "Los bienes de la Iglesia en México (1856-1875)," 849; Black, "Monarchy and Community," 762; Cholvy, "Géographie religieuse de l'Hérault contemporain," 1117; Della Cava, "Miracle at Joazeiro," 1531; Dickens, "The Counter Reformation," 453; Dörpinghaus, "Darwins Theorie und der deutsche Vulgärmaterialismus im Urteil deutscher katholischer Zeitschriften zwischen 1854 und 1914," 537; Hockerts, "Die Sittlichkeitsprozesse gegen katholische Ordensangehörige und Priester, 1936/1937," 1148; Knowles, "Thomas Becket," 124; Larkin, The Devotional Revolution in Ireland, 1850-75, 625-52; "Monachesimo e la riforma ecclesiastica (1049-1122)," 1425; Renouard, "The Avignon Papacy, 1305-1403," tr. by Bethell, 1106; Sayers, "Papal Judges Delegate in the Province of Canterbury, 1198-1254," 763; Shanahan, "Out of Time, Out of Place," 574; Sziling, "Polityka okupanta hitlerowskiego wobec Kościoła Katolickiego, 1939-1945," 1441; Turner, "Catholicism and Political Development in Latin America," 846; Walker, "Hitler Youth and Catholic Youth 1933-1936," 173; Wark, "Elizabethan Recusancy in Cheshire," 785; Watt, "The Church and the Two Nations in Medieval Ireland," 764; Weber, "Kirchliche Politik zwischen Rom, Berlin und Trier 1876-1888," 539; Whyte, "Church and State in Modern Ireland, 1923-1970," 1449
 Romani, George T. (R), 527
 "Romans: 850 B.C.-A.D. 337," by Dudley, 755
 "Romans, The Ancient," by Starr, 754
 "Rome in the Dark Ages," by Llewellyn, 765
 Romero Magalhães, Joaquim Antero, "Para o estudo de Algarve económico durante o século XVI," 162
 "Roosevelt, Theodore, and the Art of Controversy: Episodes of the White House Years," by Gatewood, 223
 Ropp, Theodore (R), 737
 Rose, Linda C. (R), 1093
 Rosenau, James N. (R), 1415
 Rosenthal, Frank (R), 216
 Rosenthal, Joel T. (R), 498
 Roskill, S. W. (C), 863
 Ross, Eric, "Beyond the River and the Bay," 232
 Ross, Stanley R. (R), 604
 Ross, Steven T. (R), 1133
 Rossetti, Gabriella, "Società e istituzioni nel contado lombardo durante il Medioevo," 1: 766
 Rossi, Alice S. See Mill, John Stuart
 Rossi, Joseph (R), 1155
 Rossi, Paolo, "Philosophy, Technology, and the Arts in the Early Modern Era," tr. by Attanasio, ed. by Nelson, 1112
 Rossi, Paul A., and Hunt, David C., "The Art of the Old West," 1172
 "Rossi, Alessandro, e le origini dell'Italia industriale," by Avagliano, 806
 Rossi-Landi, Guy, "La drôle de guerre," 1136
 Rotberg, Robert L., "Haiti," 1186; "Joseph Thompson and the Exploration of Africa," 813; (ed.), "Africa and Its Explorers," 813; (ed.), "Rebellion in Black Africa," 557; and Mazrui, Ali A. (eds.), "Protest and Power in Black Africa," 557
 Rothman, David J., "The Discovery of the Asylum," 585
 "Roux, Jacques, Exkurse zu," by Markov, 1133
 Rowe, J. G., and Stockdale, W. H. (eds.), "Florilegium Historiale," 1410
 Rowen, Herbert H. (R), 773
 Roy, David Tod, "Kuo Mo-jo," 564
 Roy, M. N., 573
 "Royal Navy and the Northwest Coast of North America, 1810-1914: A Study of British Maritime Ascendancy," by Gough, 744
 Rubenstein, J. H. (deceased), 1205
 Rubinstein, William D. (C), 609
 Rudé, George, "Hanoverian London, 1714-1808," 788
 Ruder, Judith, and Silver, Harold, "Modern English Society," 146
 Rudolf II of Habsburg, 1150
 Rudwick, Elliott (R), 1181
 Ruigh, Robert E., "The Parliament of 1624," 705
 Rule, John C. (ed.), "Louis XIV and the Craft of Kingship," 526; (R), 1454
 Rumilly, Robert, "Histoire de Montréal," 596
 Rumlper, Helmut, "Ministerrat und Ministerratsprotokolle, 1848-1867," 1459
 Rundell, Walter, Jr. (R), 207, 1508
 "Rural Credit in Western India, 1875-1930: Rural Credit and the Co-operative Movement in the Bombay Presidency," by Catanach, 570
 Russell, Conrad, "The Crisis of Parliaments," 783
 Russell, Jeffrey B. (R), 1433
 Russell, Ross, "Jazz Style in Kansas City and the Southwest," 1179
 "Russian Agriculture, A Century of: From Alexander II to Khrushchev," by Volin, 178
 "Russian Peasant Organization before Collectivisation: A Study of Commune and Gathering 1925-1930," by Male, 178
 "Russo-German War, 1941-45," by Seaton, 781
 Rutland, Robert A. (ed.), "The Papers of George Mason, 1725-1792," 1-3: 583
 Rutman, Darrett B., "American Puritanism," 581; (R), 1175
 Sachse, William L. (R), 135
 "Sacro esperimento: Teologia e politica nell'America puritana," by Bonazzi, 581
 Safford, Frank R. (R), 852
 Sagarra, Eda, "Tradition and Revolution," 1468
 "Saint Louis-San Francisco Transcontinental Railroad: The Thirty-fifth Parallel Project, 1853-1890," by Miner, 1511
 Saint-Lu, André, "Condition coloniale et conscience créole au Guatemala (1524-1821)," 1187
 Sakmyster, Thomas L. (R), 506
 Saladino, Salvatore (R), 1157
 Salomone, A. William (R), 1482
 Samuels, Michael Anthony, "Education in Angola, 1878-1914," 815
 Sánchez, José M. (R), 161
 "Santa Hermandad, The Council of the: A Study of the Pacification Forces of Ferdinand and Isabella," by Lunenfeld, 530
 Saponi, Armando (ed.), "Libro Giallo della Compagnia dei Covoni," 1109

- "Sardegna, Dopoguerra e fascismo in: Il movimento autonomistico nella crisi dello Stato liberale (1918-1926)," by Sechi, 178
- Sardesai, D. R. (R), 513
- "Sarmiento's Travels in the United States in 1847," tr. by Rockland, 195
- Sarti, Roland, "Fascism and the Industrial Leadership in Italy, 1919-1940," 545
- Sauer, Carl Ortwin, "Sixteenth Century North America," 826
- Saul, Norman (R), 131
- Savacool, John K. See Desroche, Henri
- Sawatzky, Harry Leonard, "They Sought a Country," 1187
- Sayers, Jane E., "Papal Judges Delegate in the Province of Canterbury, 1198-1254," 763
- Scaglia, Gustina, and Prager, Frank D., "Brunelleschi," 1112
- Scham, Alan, "Lyautey in Morocco," 816
- Schick, Marvin, "Learned Hand's Court," 224
- Schiera, Pierangelo, "Il cameralismo e l'assolutismo tedesco," 130
- Schleunes, Karl A., "The Twisted Road to Auschwitz," 543
- Schmidt, Frederick H. (C), 1193
- Schmidt, Siegfried, "Robert Blum," 1143
- Schmitt, Karl M. (R), 849
- Schmokel, Wolfe W. (R), 558
- Schneider, Ronald M., "The Political System of Brazil," 855
- Schöffner, I. (R), 1462
- Schoeps, Hans-Joachim, "'Bereit für Deutschland!'" 543
- Scholl, Inge, "Students against Tyranny," tr. by Schultz, 173
- Scholz, Bernhard W. (R), 769
- Schramm, Percy Ernst, "Kaiser, Könige und Päpste," 3: 127
- Schrecker, John E., "Imperialism and Chinese Nationalism," 485
- Schröder, Hans-Jürgen, "Deutschland und die Vereinigten Staaten 1933-1939," 121
- Schubert, Glendon, "The Constitutional Polity," 841
- Schüler, Winfried, "Der Bayreuther Kreis von seiner Entstehung bis zum Ausgang der Wilhelminischen Ära," 1471
- Schultz, Arthur R. See Scholl, Inge
- Schumacher, Martin (ed.), "Erinnerungen und Dokumente von Joh. Victor Bredt, 1914 bis 1933," 541
- Schutte, Anne Jacobson (R), 1409
- Schwarz, G. M. (R), 165
- Schwarz, Jordan A., "The Interregnum of Despair," 226
- Schwarz, Richard W., "John Harvey Kellogg, M.D.," 838
- Schwarzbach, Bertram Eugene, "Voltaire's Old Testament Criticism," 154
- Schwarzkopf, Ursula, "Die Rechnungslegung des Humbert de Plaine über die Jahre 1448 bis 1452," 761
- "Schweiz seit 1945: Beiträge zur Zeitgeschichte," ed. by Gruner, 1153
- "Schweizerische Bundesversammlung 1920-1968: L'Assemblée fédérale suisse 1920-1968," by Gruner, 1153
- Schwemmer, Wilhelm, and Pfeiffer, Gerhard (eds.), "Geschichte Nürnbergs in Bilddokumenten," 476
- Schwoebel, Robert (ed.), "Renaissance Men and Ideas," 1409
- "Science, Technology, and Warfare: The Proceedings of the Third Military History Symposium, United States Air Force Academy, 8-9 May 1969," ed. by Wright and Paszek, 1090
- Science and technology: Catling, "The Spinning Mule," 786; Clark, "Einstein," 748; Debus, "Science and Education in the Seventeenth Century: The Webster-Ward Debate," 511; Dörpinghaus, "Darwins Theorie und der deutsche Vulgärmaterialismus im Urteil deutscher katholischer Zeitschriften zwischen 1854 und 1914," 537; Drake, "Galileo Studies," 1436; Gillispie, "Lazare Carnot," 799; Hahn, "The Anatomy of a Scientific Institution," 1130; Hawkins, "Lebesgue's Theory of Integration," 746; Hills, "Power in the Industrial Revolution," 786; Hoppen, "The Common Scientist in the Seventeenth Century," 797; Hughes, "Elmer Sperry," 840; Joravsky, "The Lysenko Affair," 807; Limoges, "La Sélection naturelle," 1091; Lindsay, "Origins of Astrology," 1421; Lloyd, "Early Greek Science," 1421; Mayr, "Feedback Mechanisms in the Historical Collections of the National Museum of History and Technology," 738; id., "The Origins of Feedback Control," 738; O'Brien, "Sir William Dawson," 843; Prager and Scaglia, "Brunelleschi," 1112; Rossi, "Philosophy, Technology, and the Arts in the Early Modern Era," tr. by Attanasio, ed. by Nelson, 1112; Thackray, "Atoms and Powers," 746
- "Scientific Methods in Medieval Archaeology," ed. by Berger, 492
- Scobie, James R., Buenos Aires as a Commercial-Bureaucratic City, 1880-1910: Characteristics of a City's Orientation, 1035-74, (R), 853
- "Scottish Enlightenment and the American College Ideal," by Sloan, 1500
- "Scottish Posts, Three Centuries of: An Historical Survey to 1836," by Haldane, 1443
- "Scramble for Africa: The Great Trek to the Boer War," by Nutting, 561
- Screen, J. E. O., "Mannerheim," 166
- Schwarz, G. M. (R), 505
- Seager, Robert, II (R), 1177
- Searle, G. R., "The Quest for National Efficiency," 793
- Seaton, Albert, "The Russo-German War, 1941-45," 781
- Seaver, James E. (R), 1101
- Seaver, Paul S. (C), 234
- Sechi, Salvatore, "Dopoguerra e fascismo in Sardegna," 178
- "Secret Army: The IRA 1916-1970," by Bell, 1448
- Sedgwick, Romney, "The House of Commons 1715-1754," 1 and 2: 512
- "Seeckt, Generals von, Das politische Denken des: Ein Beitrag zur Diskussion des Verhältnisses Seeckt-Reichswehr-Republik," by Guske, 1146
- Segre, V. D., "Israel," 185
- "Shested, Hannibal: En dansk Statsmand," 1 and 2, by Bøggild-Andersen, 162
- Seidel, Karl Josef, "Frankreich und die deutschen Protestanten," 1114
- "Sélection naturelle: Étude sur la première constitution d'un concept (1837-1859)," by Limoges, 1091
- Seligman, Ben B., "The Potentates," 1173
- Semmel, Bernard, "The Rise of Free Trade Imperialism," 513; (R), 145, 733
- Sender, Clemens, 803
- "Senie kurzemnieki Amerikā un Tobāgo kolonizacija," by Anderson, 120
- Sennett, Richard, "Families against the City," 212
- "Sense of an Impending Clash": English Working-Class Unrest before the First World War, by Meacham, 1343-64
- "Sense of Power: Studies in the Ideas of Canadian Imperialism, 1867-1914," by Berger, 599
- Seubert, Josef, "Untersuchungen zur Geschichte der Reformation in der ehemaligen freien Reichsstadt Dinkelsbühl," 802
- "Svernnyi pokhod Natsional'no-revolutsionnoi armii Kitaia (Žapiski voennogo sovetnika)," by Cherepanov, 1167
- Sewell, Richard H. (R), 208
- "Sex Equality, Essays on," by Mill and Mill, ed. by Rossi, 736

- Seymour, Harold, "Baseball," 1518
 "Shadow King: Rex Inutilis in Medieval Law and Literature, 751-1327," by Peters, 759
 Shaffer, Arthur H., and Norris, James D. (eds.), "Politics and Patronage in the Gilded Age," 213
 Shaloff, Stanley, "Reform in Leopold's Congo," 561
 Shammas, Carole (R), 785
 Shanahan, Mary, "Out of Time, Out of Place," 574
 Sharf, Andrew, "Byzantine Jewry," 499
 Sharma, J. P., "Republics in Ancient India," 1170
 Shaw, Joseph W. (R), 1095
 Shaw, Stanford J., "Between Old and New," 555
 Sheehan, Michael Kahl, "Iran," 1489
 Sheppard, Thomas F., "Lourmarin in the Eighteenth Century," 1132; (R), 1450
 Sheridan, James E. (R), 564
 Sheridan, Richard B., Africa and the Caribbean in the Atlantic Slave Trade, 15-35; (R), 848
 Sherk, Robert K. (R), 755
 Sherwood, John M., "Georges Mandel and the Third Republic," 158
 Shillony, Ben-Ami, et al., "Crisis Politics in Pre-war Japan," ed. by Wilson, 191
 Shimizu, J., "Conflict of Loyalties," 1451
 Shinnie, P. L. (R), 750
 Shirley, Robert W., "The End of a Tradition," 1189
 Shively, Donald H., and Craig, Albert M. (eds.), "Personality in Japanese History," 565
 Shklar, Judith N. (R), 1131
 Shneidman, J. Lee, "The Rise of the Aragonese-Catalan Empire, 1200-1350," 126; (R), 760
 Showalter, Dennis (R), 542
 Shryock, Richard Harrison (deceased), 1203
 Shumway, Floyd M., and Pomfret, John E., "Founding the American Colonies, 1583-1660," 194
 Shunkov, V. I., et al. (eds.), "Perekhod ot feodalizma k kapitalizmu v Rossii," 715
 "Sicilia moderna, Comunità rurali della: Bronte (1747-1853)," by Lo Giudice, 1154
 Sih, Paul K. T. (ed.), "The Strenuous Decade," 189
 Silbert, Albert, 1464
 "Silent Revolution: The Industrial Revolution in England as a Source of Cultural Change," by Osborne, 139
 Silver, Harold, and Ryder, Judith, "Modern English Society," 146
 Simmonds, J. D., "China's World," 190
 Simon, Gerhard, "Die Kirchen in Russland," 547
 Simon, Paul L. (R), 594
 Simon, Walter G. (R), 498
 Simon, Walter M. (deceased), 872
 "Simpson, Richard, and Lord Acton, The Correspondence of," 1, ed. by Altholz and McElrath, 146
 Sinel, Allen (R), 550
 Singh, Sita Ram, "Nationalism and Social Reform in India," 571
 Sinha, Narendra Krishna, "The Economic History of Bengal, 1793-1848," 3: 568
 Sinnigen, William G. (R), 1103
 "Sisters of Liberty: Marseille, Lyon, Paris and the Reaction to a Centralized State, 1868-1871," by Greenberg, 158
 "Sittlichkeitsprozesse gegen katholische Ordensangehörige und Priester, 1936/1937: Eine Studie zur nationalsozialistischen Herrschaftstechnik und zum Kirchenkampf," by Hockerts, 1148
 Skidmore, Thomas E. (R), 1531
 Sklair, Leslie, "The Sociology of Progress," 1400
 Slater, Jerome, "Intervention and Negotiation," 228
 Slater, Peter Gregg (R), 1519
 Slavery: Campbell, "The Slave Catchers: Enforcement of the Fugitive Slave Law, 1850-1860," 209; Feldstein, "Once a Slave," 209; Freehling, The Founding Fathers and Slavery, 81-93; Knight, "Slave Society in Cuba during the Nineteenth Century," 848; Lombardi, "The Decline and Abolition of Negro Slavery in Venezuela, 1820-1854," 605; Sheridan, Africa and the Caribbean in the Atlantic Slave Trade, 15-35; Wright, "Lincoln & the Politics of Slavery," 208
 Sloan, Douglas, "The Scottish Enlightenment and the American College Ideal," 1500
 Slusser, Robert M., A Soviet Historian Evaluates Stalin's Role in History: A Review Article, 1389-98
 Smith, Bernard (R), 482
 Smith, Bradley F., "Heinrich Himmler," 1144
 Smith, Carleton Sprague (R), 195
 Smith, Cortland V. (deceased), 1205
 Smith, Goldwin (R), 144
 Smith, John Holland, "Constantine the Great," 758
 Smith, Lacey Baldwin, "Henry VIII," 1443
 Smith, Morton, "Palestinian Parties and Politics That Shaped the Old Testament," 1418; et al., The Cambridge History of the Bible, 94-109
 Smith, Robert Worthington (R), 142
 Smith, Van Mitchell (R), 814
 Smith, William, MP, 1123
 Smith, Wilson (R), 206
 Smyth, Howard M. (R), 749
 Snodgrass, A. M., "The Dark Age of Greece," 1419
 Snyder, Henry L. (R), 136
 Snyder, Louis L. (R), 743
 "Social Dynamics, A Primer on: History as Dialectics and Development," by Boulding, 1400
 "Social Radicalism and the Arts: Western Europe. A Cultural History from the French Revolution to 1968," by Egbert, 777
 "Social Reformers in Urban China: The Chinese Y.M.C.A., 1895-1926," by Garrett, 187
 "Social Science and the Idea of Process: The Ambiguous Legacy of Arthur F. Bentley," by Kress, 1085
 Socialism: Collart, "Le parti socialiste suisse et l'Internationale, 1914-1915," 1480; Kautsky, Karl, Jr., "August Bebel's Briefwechsel mit Karl Kautsky," 1116; Luxemburg, "Lettres à Karl et Luise Kautsky," tr. by Stchoupak and Bracke-Desrousseaux, 1116; Moore, "European Socialists and the American Promised Land," 121; Stafford, "From Anarchism to Reformism," 1461
 "Società e istituzioni nel contado lombardo durante il Medioevo: Cologno Monzese," 1, by Rossetti, 766
 "Sociology of Progress," by Sklair, 1400
 Soffer, Reba N. (R), 793
 "Soiuza Kommunistov, Istoriia," by Mikhailov, 1438
 "Sōkagakkai and Mass Society," by White, 193
 Solberg, Carl (R), 846
 Solberg, Winton U. (R), 581
 "Soldaat en krijger: Franse opvattingen over leger en oorlog, 1905-1914," by Wesseling, 1462
 Soman, Alfred (R), 1452
 Somers, Dale Alan (deceased), 1205
 "Son of the Alhambra: Don Diego Hurtado de Mendoza, 1504-1575," by Spivakovsky, 1463
 "Sonderbundskrieges, Die Geschichte des," by Bucher, 1152
 "Sonnenfels, Joseph von, und die österreichische Reformbewegung im Zeitalter des aufgeklärten Absolutismus: Eine Studie zum Zusammenhang von Kameralwissenschaft und Verwaltungspraxis," by Osterloh, 130
 "South Carolina, Colonial, Economic Beginnings in, 1670-1730," by Clowse, 1498
 "South East England," by Jessup, 1416
 Southern, R. W., "Medieval Humanism," 1423
 "Southern History, The Myth of: Historical Consciousness in Twentieth-Century Southern Literature," by Davenport, 221

- "Sovetskaiia intelligentsiia (Istoriia formirovaniia i rosta 1917-1965 gg.)," ed. by Vorozheikin et al., 550
- "Spain and Her Rivals on the Gulf Coast," ed. by Dibble and Newton, 1411
- "Spanish Borderlands Frontier, 1513-1821," by Bannon, 196
- Spanish Civil War: Robinson, "The Origins of Franco's Spain," 161
- Spector, Stanley (R), 562
- Spence, Mary Lee, and Jackson, Donald (eds.), "The Expeditions of John Charles Frémont," 1: 1509
- "Sperry, Elmer: Inventor and Engineer," by Hughes, 840
- Spini, Giorgio, "L'Evangelo e il berretto frigio," 1484
- "Spinning Mule," by Catling, 786
- Spivakovsky, Erika, "Son of the Alhambra," 1463
- Spring, David (R), 1125
- Spyridakis, Stylianos, "Ptolemaic Itanos and Hellenistic Crete," 752
- "Staatsverwaltung und kirchliche Autorität im 18. Jahrhundert: Das Problem der Zensur in der theserianischen Reform," by Klingenstein, 1150
- Stacey, C. P., "Arms, Men and Governments," 232
- "Städewesen in Europa, Forschungen zum," 1, by Stooß, 477
- "Ständische Vertretungen in Europa im 17. und 18. Jahrhunderts," ed. by Gerhard, 1140
- Stafford, David, "From Anarchism to Reformism," 1461
- Stalin and the Prospects of a Separate Peace in World War II*, by Mastny, 1365-88
- Stalin's Role in History, A Soviet Historian Evaluates: A Review Article*, by Slusser, 1389-98
- "Standesherrn und liberale Bewegung: Der Kampf des württembergischen standesherrlichen Adels um seine Rechtsstellung in der zweiten Hälfte des 19. Jahrhunderts," by Neth, 168
- "Stanford, Leland: Man of Many Careers," by Tutorow, 1512
- Starobin, Joseph R. (R), 505
- Starr, Chester G., "The Ancient Romans," 754;
- "Athenian Coinage, 480-449 B.C.," 1421; (R), 473
- "Statecraft in China, The Origins of," 1, by Creel, 563
- Stave, Bruce M., "The New Deal and the Last Hurrah," 594
- Stchoupak, Nadine. See Luxemburg, Rosa
- Stearns, Peter N., "Revolutionary Syndicalism and French Labor," 527; (R), 1460
- Steele, Arthur R. (R), 854
- "Steinacher, Hans, Bundesleiter des VDA 1933-1937: Erinnerungen und Dokumente," ed. by Jacobsen, 544
- Steinberg, Jean. See Bracher, Karl Dietrich
- Steinmetz, David C., "Reformers in the Wings," 771
- Stelter, Gilbert (R), 200
- Stem Family and the Development Cycle of the Peasant Household: An Eighteenth-Century Austrian Example*, by Berkner, 398-418
- Stenton, Doris Mary (R), 791
- Stepan, Alfred, "The Military in Politics," 606
- Stern, Fritz (R), 803
- Stevens, Harry R. (R), 1508
- Stevens, S. K. (R), 1176
- Stevenson, Lloyd G., and Multhaus, Robert P. (eds.), "Medicine, Science, and Culture," 255
- Stewart, Alice R. (R), 517
- Stewart, George R., "American Place-Names," 196
- Stewart, Robert, "The Politics of Protection," 1125
- Stewart, Zeph (R), 1098
- Still, William N., Jr., "Iron Afloat," 834
- "Stilwell and the American Experience in China, 1911-45," by Tuchman, 1517
- Stock, Noel, "The Life of Ezra Pound," 594
- Stockdale, W. H., and Rowe, J. G. (eds.), "Florilegium Historiale," 1410
- Stocking, George W., Jr. (R), 222
- Stockton, David, "Cicero," 1423
- Stone, Ralph, "The Irreconcilables," 223
- Stoob, Heinz, "Forschungen zum Städewesen in Europa," 1: 477
- Storey, R. L., and Bullough, D. A. (eds.), "The Study of Medieval Records," 493
- Stover, John F. (R), 1510
- Strauss, Gerald (R), 802, 1433
- Strayer, Joseph R., The Fourth and the Fourteenth Centuries, 1-14; "The Albigenian Crusades," 1433
- "Strenuous Decade: China's Nation-Building Efforts, 1927-1937," ed. by Sih, 189
- Stretton, Hugh, "The Political Sciences," 445
- Stroessner, Alfredo, 603
- Stromberg, Roland N. (R), 141; and Conkin, Paul K., "The Heritage and Challenge of History," 1402
- Stromer, Wolfgang von, "Oberdeutsche Hochfinanz, 1350-1450," 761
- Strong, Roy, "Tudor and Jacobean Portraits," 1 and 2: 1119
- "Struggle for the Snowy: The Background of the Snowy Mountains Scheme," by Wigmore, 576
- "Struve: Liberal on the Left, 1870-1905," by Pipes, 1162
- "Student Estate in Britain, The Rise of the," by Ashby and Anderson, 1442
- "Student Politics in France: A Study of the Union Nationale des Étudiants de France," by Fields, 529
- "Students against Tyranny: The Resistance of the White Rose, Munich, 1942-1943," by Scholl, tr. by Schultz, 173
- Stürmer, Michael. See Becker, Josef
- Stuewer, Roger H. (ed.), "Historical and Philosophical Perspectives of Science," 255
- Sturtevant, William C., and Washburn, Wilcomb E. (R), 479
- "Subjektivität und Geschichtswissenschaft: Grundzüge einer Historik," by Hedinger, 110
- "Süddeutschland in der Weimarer Republik: Ein Beitrag zur deutschen Innenpolitik 1918-1923," by Benz, 542
- Sullivan, Richard E. (R), 768
- "Suomen talonpoikaistoriikki 1800-luvun alkupuoliskolla (1810-1853)," by Kaukiainen, 166
- "Suomen varhaishistoria ja ristiretkikauden kuvasta uskonpuhdistus- ja suurvalta-aikana," by Lehtinen, 534
- "Supreme Court of the United States, History of the," 6, pt. 1, by Fairman, 1512
- "Susquehanna Company Papers," 10 and 11, ed. by Taylor, 1176
- Sviták, Ivan, "The Czechoslovak Experiment," 1161
- Swartz, Marvin, "The Union of Democratic Control in British Politics during the First World War," 521
- Sweet, Paul R. (R), 536
- Swinfen, D. B., "Imperial Control of Colonial Legislation, 1813-1865," 144
- "Swing, Phil, and Boulder Dam," by Moeller, 1178
- Swomley, John M., Jr., "American Empire," 228
- Syme, Sir Ronald, "Emperors and Biography," 1101
- Symmons-Symonowicz, Konstantin, "Nationalist Movements," 743
- Symondson, Anthony. See Young, Robert M.
- "Syrian Christians in Muslim Society: An Interpretation," by Haddad, 185
- Sziborsky, Johannes, "Die Germanisierung der Mark Brandenburg in der märkischen Geschichtsschreibung des 16. Jahrhunderts unter dem Einfluss von Humanismus und Reformation," 1467
- Szidat, Joachim, "Caesars diplomatische Tätigkeit im Gallischen Krieg," 1100
- Sziling, Jan, "Polityka okupanta hitlerowskiego wobec Kościoła Katolickiego, 1939-1945," 1441
- Szporluk, Roman (R), 1161

- "Tagebücher eines Abwehroffiziers 1938-1940: Mit weiteren Dokumenten zur Militäropposition gegen Hitler," by Groscurth, ed. by Krausnick and Deutsch, 175
- Talamo, Giuseppe, "La formazione politica di Agostino Depretis," 804
- Talman, James J. (R), 600
- Tambs, Lewis A. (R), 854
- "Tanganyika, British: An Essay and Documents on District Administration," by Heussler, 820
- Tannenbaum, Edward R. (R), 545, 733
- Tate, Merze (R), 1413
- Taylor, Colleen. See Medvedev, Roy A.
- Taylor, Morris F., "First Mail West," 1510
- Taylor, Paul S., "Georgia Plan," 1498
- Taylor, Robert J. (ed.), "The Susquehanna Company Papers," 10 and 11: 1176
- Temkin, Owsei, 255
- "Terrible Year: The Paris Commune, 1871," by Horne, 1135
- Terrou, Fernand (C), 858
- Tetzlaff, Rainer, "Kolonial Entwicklung und Ausbeutung," 558
- Thackray, Arnold, "Atoms and Powers," 746
- Thelander, Theodore A., Jr. (deceased), 248
- Thelliez, C., "Marie de Luxembourg, duchesse douairière de Vendôme, comtesse douairière de St.-Pol, comtesse douairière d'Enghien, dame de La Fère, et son temps," 1128
- "Theology and Law in Islam," ed. by Grunebaum, 808
- "Theseus, The Quest for," by Ward et al., 473
- "They Sought a Country: Mennonite Colonization in Mexico," by Sawatzky, 1187
- Tholfsen, Trygve R. (R), 150
- Thomas, Donald E., Jr. (R), 1471
- Thomas, Edith, "Louise Michel," 1135
- Thomas, Hugh, "Cuba," 847
- Thomas, John L. (R), 836
- Thomas, Lewis H. (R), 598
- Thomas, P. D. G., "The House of Commons in the Eighteenth Century," 512
- Thompson, Larry V. (R), 175
- Thompson, Leonard (ed.), "African Societies in Southern Africa," 822
- Thompson, Neville, "The Anti-Appeasers," 1127
- "Thomson, Joseph, and the Exploration of Africa," by Rotberg, 813
- Thorn, Richard S., and Malloy, James M. (eds.), "Beyond the Revolution," 856
- Thrasher, Peter Adam, "Pasquale Paoli," 177
- Tignor, Robert L. (R), 116
- "Tikhookeanskaia politika SShA, 1941-1950," by Vorontsov, 219
- Tilly, Charles (R), 1453
- "Timeless Problems in History," by Norling, 1083
- Toland, John, "The Rising Sun," 192
- Tolles, Frederick B. (R), 198
- "Tolstoy, Leo, The Last Year of," by Bulgakov, tr. by Dunnigan, 549
- Toma, Peter A. (R), 807
- Tompkins, C. David, "Senator Arthur H. Vendenberg," 591
- Tornikès, Georges and Dèmètrios, "Lettres et discours," ed. and tr. by Darrouzès, 770
- Torrey, Gordon H. (R), 1163
- Torstendahl, Rolf, "Mellan nykonservatism och liberalism," 165
- "Toscana nel regime fascista (1922-1939): Convegno di studi promosso dall'Unione Regionale delle Province Toscane, dalla Provincia di Firenze e dall'Istituto Storico per la Resistenza in Toscana, Firenze, Palazzo Riccardi, 23-24 maggio 1969," 1156
- Toumanoff, Cyril (R), 502
- Touraine, Alain, "The May Movement," tr. by Mayhew, 529
- "Tournai, The English Occupation of, 1513-1519," by Cruickshank, 504
- "Town Defences in England and Wales: An Architectural and Documentary Study, AD 900-1500," by Turner, 1105
- Tracy, James D. (R), 128, 1113
- "Trade and Empire in Western India, 1784-1806," by Nightingale, 824
- "Tradition and Revolution: German Literature and Society, 1830-1890," by Sagarra, 1468
- Trager, Frank H., and Henderson, William (eds.), "Communist China, 1949-1969," 1167
- Tramontana, Salvatore, "I Normanni in Italia," 1: 1107
- "Transfer of Power 1942-7," 1, ed. by Mansergh and Lumby, 463
- "Transformation of the American Economy, 1865-1914," by Higgs, 1514
- Transition from Feudalism to Capitalism in Russia: A Major Soviet Historical Controversy. A Review Article*, by Baron, 715-29
- Transportation: Adler, "British Investment in American Railways, 1834-1898," ed. by Hidy, 484; Athearn, "Union Pacific Country," 590; Berton, "The National Dream," 600; Caine, "The Myth of a Progressive Reform," 592; Comstock, "The Iron Horse," 1510; Martin, "Enterprise Denied," 1516; Miner, "The St. Louis-San Francisco Transcontinental Railroad," 1511; Olson, "The Depletion Myth," 1515; Oredsson, "Järnvägarna och det allmänna," 165; Rae, "The Road and the Car in American Life," 1516; Taylor, "First Mail West," 1510
- "Travaux et mémoires," 4: 1110
- Travlos, John, "Pictorial Dictionary of Ancient Athens," 1097
- "Treason, The Law of, in England in the Later Middle Ages," by Bellamy, 498
- Tregenza, John, "Professor of Democracy," 573
- Tribout de Morembert, Henri, "La Réforme à Metz," 1: 525
- Trickett, A. Stanley (R), 574
- "Trier, Roman, and the Treveri," by Wightman, 757
- "Truman Doctrine and the Origins of McCarthyism: Foreign Policy, Domestic Politics, and Internal Security, 1946-1948," by Freeland, 1520
- Trumpener, Ulrich (R), 1145
- "Trumpet in the Hall, 1930-1958," by Fergusson, 1414
- Tuchman, Barbara W., "Stilwell and the American Experience in China, 1911-45," 1517
- Tucker, A. V. (R), 520
- Tucker, Robert C., "The Marxian Revolutionary Idea," 1399
- "Tudor and Jacobean Portraits," 1 and 2, by Strong, 1119
- "Tunja, La provincia de, en el Nuevo Reino de Granada: Ensayo de historia social (1539-1800)," by Colmenares, 852
- Turner, Frederick C., "Catholicism and Political Development in Latin America," 846
- Turner, H. E. (R), 596
- Turner, Hilary L., "Town Defences in England and Wales," 1105
- Turner, Ralph V. (R), 1416
- Turner, Victor (ed.), "Colonialism in Africa, 1870-1960," 3: 1164
- Tutorow, Norman E., "Leland Stanford," 1512
- Tylecote, R. F. (R), 492
- "Tyler Administration, Fruits of Propaganda in the," by Merk, 1177
- "Työmarkkinasuhteiden murros Suomessa: Tutkimus työntekijäin pyrkimyksistä osallistua työehtojen määräämiseen 1880-luvulta vuoden 1905 suurlakkoon," by Mattila, 535

- "Ukrainskoi RSR, Istoriia mist i sil," 546
 Ulloa, Berta, "La Revolución intervenida," 829
 Underdown, David, "Pride's Purge," 1120
 "Unificazione italiana vista dai diplomatici statunitensi," 4, ed. by Marraro, 1155
 "Union of Democratic Control in British Politics during the First World War," by Swartz, 521
 "Union Pacific Country," by Athearn, 590
 "Unitarian Conscience: Harvard Moral Philosophy, 1805-1861," by Howe, 206
 "United Nations, The New Nations in the, 1960-1967," by Kay, 1415
 "United States in Panamanian Politics: The Intriguing Formative Years," by Mellander, 1188
 "University Rebel: The Life of William Frend (1757-1841)," by Knight, 789
 "Unsettled People: Social Order and Disorder in American History," by Berthoff, 578
 "Uprooted Americans: The Japanese Americans and the War Relocation Authority during World War II," by Myer, 229
 Urban history: Agulhon, "Une ville ouvrière au temps du socialisme utopique," 156; Alouche, "Evolution d'un centre de villégiature au Liban (Broummana)," 184; Bátor, "Die Reichsstadt Augsburg im 18. Jahrhundert," 1142; Elazar, "Cities of the Frontier," 200; El Kordi, "Bayeux au XVII<sup>e</sup> et XVIII<sup>e</sup> siècles," 1453; Favier, "Les contribuables parisiens à la fin de la Guerre de Cent Ans," 499; Gillon, "Ahmedabad," 569; Higonet, "Pont-de-Montvert," 1455; La Fontaine, "City Politics," 819; Llewellyn, "Rome in the Dark Ages," 765; Masur, "Imperial Berlin," 803; Pfeiffer and Schwemmer (eds.), "Geschichte Nürnbergs in Bilddokumenten," 476; Pfeiffer (ed.), "Nürnberg," 476; Rudé, "Hanoverian London, 1714-1808," 788; Rumilly, "Histoire de Montréal," 596; Scobie, Buenos Aires as a Commercial-Bureaucratic City, 1880-1910: Characteristics of a City's Orientation, 1035-74; Sennett, "Families against the City," 212; Sheppard, "Lourmarin in the Eighteenth Century," 1132; Shirley, "The End of a Tradition," 1189; Stooß, "Forschungen zum Städtewesen in Europa," 1: 477; Travlos, "Pictorial Dictionary of Ancient Athens," 1097; Vigier, "Change and Apathy," 140; Volpe, "Studi sulle istituzioni comunali a Pisa," 1108
 "Utopia and Reform in the Enlightenment," by Venturi, 775
 Vale, M. G. A., "English Gascony, 1399-1453," 495
 Váli, Ferenc A., "Bridge across the Bosphorus," 1487
 Valiani, Leo, et al., "Azionisti, cattolici e comunisti nella Resistenza," 1158
 Vallandigham, Clement L., 211
 "Valletta, Giuseppe: Un intellettuale napoletano della fine del Seicento," by Comparato, 1482
 Van Aken, Mark J. (R), 844, 1528
 Van Ness, Peter, "Revolution and Chinese Foreign Policy," 190
 "Van rijkdom en regenten: Handboek tot de economische en sociale geschiedenis van Nederland tijdens de republiek," by Dillen, 531
 "Vandenberg, Senator Arthur H.: The Evolution of a Modern Republican, 1884-1915," by Tompkins, 591
 Vanderwood, Paul J. (R), 828
 Van Eerde, Katherine S., "Wenceslaus Hollar," 1119
 "Vanishing Peasant," by Mendras, tr. by Lerner, 160
 Vansina, Jan (R), 812
 "Vantage Point: Perspectives of the Presidency, 1963-1969," by Johnson, 1524
 Vantuch, Anton, and Holotik, L'udovít (eds.), "Der österreichische-ungarische Ausgleich 1867," 1478
 Vardaman, James Kimble, 214
 Várkonyi, Ágnes R., "A pozitivisták történetelmélet," 731
 "Varnhagen von Ense als Historiker," by Feilchenfeldt, 536
 Vasina, Augusto, "Romagna medievale," 768
 "Venezuela, The Decline and Abolition of Negro Slavery in, 1820-1854," by Lombardi, 605
 Venturi, Franco, "Utopia and Reform in the Enlightenment," 775
 Verlinden, Charles, "The Beginnings of Modern Colonization," tr. by Freccero, 117
 "Victor Emanuel, Cavour, and the Risorgimento," by Mack Smith, 1482
 "Victorian Attitudes to Race," by Bolt, 149
 "Victorian Crisis of Faith: Six Lectures," by Young et al., ed. by Symondson, 147
 "Victorian Quakers," by Isichei, 148
 "Victorians, The Early, 1832-1851," by Harrison, 790
 "Vier augsburger Chronisten der Reformationszeit: Die Behandlung und Deutung der Zeitgeschichte bei Clemens Sender, Wilhelm Rem, Georg Preu und Paul Hektor Mair," by Kramer-Schlette, 803
 "Vietnam and the Chinese Model: A Comparative Study of Ngu-yên and Ch'ing Civil Government in the First Half of the Nineteenth Century," by Woodside, 562
 "Views on the News: The Developing Editorial Syndrome, 1500-1800," by Hart, 118
 Vigier, François, "Change and Apathy," 140
 "Ville ouvrière au temps du socialisme utopique: Toulon de 1815 à 1851," by Agulhon, 156
 "Virginia: The New Dominion," by Dabney, 1174
Vital Center, the Fair Deal, and the Quest for a Liberal Political Economy, by Hamby, 653-78
 "Vneshniaia politika Anglii i leiboristskaia partiia (1951-1964)," by Krasil'nikov, 488
 "Vneshniaia politika Rossii XIX i nachala XX veka: Dokumenty Rossiiskogo Ministerstva Inostrannykh Del," 1st ser., 7, ed. by Narochitskii et al., 179
 Vogt, Martin (ed.), "Die Entstehung des Youngplans, dargestellt vom Reichsarchiv 1931-1933," 1148
 Voigt, David Quentin, "American Baseball," 2: 218
 Volin, Lazar, "A Century of Russian Agriculture," 178
 Volkmann, Hans-Erich, "Die deutsche Baltikumpolitik zwischen Brest-Litovsk und Compiègne," 171
 Volpe, Gioacchino, "Studi sulle istituzioni comunali a Pisa," 1108
 "Voltaire's Old Testament Criticism," by Schwarzbach, 154
 "Von der Revolution zum Norddeutschen Bund: Politik und Ideengut der preussischen Hochkonservativen, 1848-1866," 1 and 2, by Gerlach, ed. by Diwald, 536
 Von Laue, Theodore H. (R), 1162, 1400
 von Riekhoff, Harald, "German-Polish Relations, 1918-1933," 1440
 Vorontsov, V. B., "Tikhookeanskaia politika SShA, 1941-1950," 219
 Vorozheikin, I. E., et al. (eds.), "Sovetskaia intelligentsiia (Istoriia formirovaniia i rosta 1917-1965 gg.)," 550
 Vuchich, Olga V. (R), 1438
 Wade, Ira O., "The Intellectual Origins of the French Enlightenment," 1456
 Wagle, N. K. (R), 1170
 Wagner, Walter, "Geschichte des K. K. Kriegsministeriums," 2: 1143
 Wainwright, Mary Doreen, and Philips, C. H. (eds.), "The Partition of India," 463
 Waite, P. B. (R), 597
 Waite, R. G. L. (R), 1149
 Walker, Franklin A. (R), 183
 Walker, Lawrence D., "Hitler Youth and Catholic Youth 1933-1936," 173
 Walker, Peter F. (R), 839

- Wallace, L. P. (deceased), 252
 Wallace, Martin, "Northern Ireland," 1448
 Wallace, Paul (R), 572
 Wallace, Willard M. (R), 203
 "Walpole, Horace: Correspondence with Sir Horace Mann and Sir Horace Mann the Younger," 9-11, ed. by Lewis et al., 1122
 Walsh, Warren B. (R), 552
 Walter, Richard D., "S. Weir Mitchell, M.D.—Neurologist," 839
 Wandycz, Damian S. (ed.), "Studies in Polish Civilization," 255
 Wank, Solomon (R), 1478
 "Wansey, Henry, and His American Journal, 1794," ed. by Jeremy, 1505
 "War against Russia, 1854-1856," by Barker, 180
 "War for the Union," 3 and 4, by Nevins, 832
 "War of Roses and Lilies: The Theme of Succession in Sir John Fortescue's Works," by Litzen, 1431
 Ward, Anne G., et al., "The Quest for Theseus," 473
 Ware, Ronald D. (R), 124, 1427
 "Warfare in Feudal Europe, 730-1200," by Beeler, 1424
 Wark, K. R., "Elizabethan Recusancy in Cheshire," 785
 Warren, Harris Gaylord (R), 1531
 Washburn, Wilcomb E. (R), 1504; and Sturtevant, William C. (R), 479
 Washington, Patty Willis (deceased), 249
 Waskovich, George (deceased), 249
 Watson, Katherine. See Grunebaum, G. E. von
 Watt, D. C., "Survey of International Affairs, 1962," 750
 Watt, J. A., "The Church and the Two Nations in Medieval Ireland," 764
 Weber, Christoph, "Kirchliche Politik zwischen Rom, Berlin und Trier 1876-1888," 539
 Weber, Frank G., "Eagles on the Crescent," 131
 "Webster, Daniel, The Papers of, on Microfilm," ed. by Wiltse, 587
 Wehlen, Wolfgang, "Geschichtsschreibung und Staatsauffassung im Zeitalter Ludwigs des Frommen," 768
 Wehler, Hans-Ulrich, "Krisenherde des Kaiserreichs, 1871-1918," 538
 Weinstein, Donald (R), 1481
 Weinstein, Martin E., "Japan's Postwar Defense Policy, 1947-1968," 193
 Weisenburger, Francis Phelps (R), 1178; (C), 236
 "Weizmann, Chaim, The Letters and Papers of," ser. A, 2, ed. by Litvinoff, 748
 Welch, Richard E., Jr., "George Frisbie Hoar and the Half-Breed Republicans," 1074
 Welles, C. Bradford, "Alexander and the Hellenistic World," 752
 "Welsh Woollen Industry," by Jenkins, 786
 Wenzel, Johannes, "Jakob Burckhardt in der Krise seiner Zeit," 1438
 Wernert, Karl (deceased), 252
 Wesseling, H. L., "Soldaat en krijger," 1462
 West, Francis, "Hubert Murray," 573
 West, Richard, "Back to Africa," 817
 "West German Reparations to Israel," by Balabkins, 1094
 "Western Window in the Arab World," by Blair, 487
 Weston, Corinne Comstock (R), 1120
 Wheeler, Douglas L., and Pélissier, René, "Angola," 820
 White, James W., "The Sōkagakkai and Mass Society," 193
 White, John A. (R), 183
 White, Lynn, jr. (R), 125
 White, Peter (R), 1101
 "White Chief: James Kimble Vardaman," by Holmes, 214
 "White House Diary," by Johnson, 1524
 "Whitehall Diary," 1 and 2, by Jones, ed. by Middlemas, 152
 Whitelock, Dorothy, 1428
 Whiteside, Andrew G. (R), 176
 Whyte, J. H., "Church and State in Modern Ireland, 1923-1970," 1449
 Widmer, Eric (R), 1167
 Wightman, Edith Mary, "Roman Trier and the Treveri," 757; (R), 1100
 Wigmore, Lionel, "Struggle for the Snowy," 576
 Wilkinson, B. (R), 495, 1429
 Williams, Eric, "From Columbus to Castro," 1185
 Williams, Roger L. (R), 158
 "Williams, Roger: Witness beyond Christendom, 1603-1683," by Garrett, 198
 Willis, F. Roy, "Italy Chooses Europe," 1159
 Willson, David Harris, 133
 Wilson, Charles Morrow, "The Commoner," 217
 Wilson, Frank L., "The French Democratic Left, 1963-1969," 1137
 Wilson, George M. See Shillony, Ben-Ami
 Wilson, Harold, "A Personal Record," 1446
 Wilson, Henry S. (R), 818
 Wilson, Joan Hoff (R), 1521
 Wilson, Woodrow: Link et al. (eds.), "The Papers of Woodrow Wilson," 9: 217
 Wiltse, Charles M. (ed.), "The Papers of Daniel Webster on Microfilm," 587; (ed.), "Guide and Index to the Microfilm," 587
 Wines, Roger (R), 1150
 Winks, Robin W., "The Blacks in Canada," 1527
 Winters, Stanley B. (R), 1477
 Wise, F. S. (deceased), 1205
 Wiswall, F. L., Jr., "The Development of Admiralty Jurisdiction and Practice since 1800," 515
 Witt, Peter-Christian, "Die Finanzpolitik des Deutschen Reiches von 1903 bis 1913," 171
 Wittenberg, Erich, "Bismarcks politische Persönlichkeit im Bilde der Weimar-Republik," 1: 542
 Wittke, Carl (deceased), 249
 Wittkower, Rudolf (deceased), 614
 Wohl, A. S., et al., "The History of Working-Class Housing," ed. by Chapman, 1123
 Wolfe, Martin (R), 130
 Wolff, Fritz (ed.), "Acta Pacis Westphalicae," Ser. III-A, 4, pt. 1: 1139
 Wolff, Philippe, and Mollat, Michel, "Ongles bleus, Jacques et Ciampi," 494
 Wolman, Benjamin B. (ed.), "The Psychoanalytic Interpretation of History," 1401
 Wolters, Raymond, "Negroes and the Great Depression," 226
 Women: Qvist, "Fredrika Bremer och kvinnans emancipation," 1466
 Wood, Charles T., "The Age of Chivalry," 1105
 Wood, Joseph M. (R), 524
 Woodcock, George, "Henry Walter Bates," 854
 Woodfill, Walter L. (R), 1119
 Woodring, Carl, "Politics in English Romantic Poetry," 143
 Woodside, Alexander Barton, "Vietnam and the Chinese Model," 562
 Woodward, Sir Ernest Llewellyn (deceased), 250
 Woody, Robert H. (R), 211
 Woolf, Harry (R), 1436
 "Woollen Industry of South-west England: An Industrial, Economic and Technical Survey," by Ponting, 786
 "Words and Occasions: An Anthology of Speeches and Articles Selected from His Papers," by Pearson, 602
 "World in Revolution: A Newspaperman's Memoir," by Matthews, 1526
 World War I: "Atti del XLIV Congresso di storia del Risorgimento italiano (Trieste, 31 ottobre-4 novembre 1968) (La fine della prima guerra mondiale e i problemi relativi)," 1485; Deist (ed.), "Militär- und Innenpolitik im Weltkrieg 1914-1918," 1145; Zeman, "The Gentlemen Negotiators," 486

- World War II: Douglas-Hamilton, "Motive for a Mission," 1149; Fitzgibbon, "Katyn," 1486; Gérard-Libois and Gotovitch, "L'an 40," 1465; Hnilicka, "Das Ende auf dem Balkan 1944/45," 782; Hutton, "Hess," 1149; Infield, "Disaster at Bari," 749; Israelian and Kutakov, "Diplomatiia agressorov," 1414; Liddell Hart, "History of the Second World War," 122; Marder, "From the Dreadnought to Scapa Flow," 5: 794; Mastny, Stalin and the Prospects of a Separate Peace in World War II, 1365-88; Meo, "Japan's Radio War on Australia, 1941-1945," 575; Milward, "The New Order and the French Economy," 159; Muirden, "The Puzzled Patriots," 575; Seaton, "The Russo-German War, 1941-45," 781; Stacey, "Arms, Men and Governments," 232; Toland, "The Rising Sun," 192; Valiani et al., "Azionisti, cattolici e comunisti nella Resistenza," 1158
- Woronoff, Jon, "Organizing African Unity," 814
- Wright, Gordon (R), 160
- Wright, John S., "Lincoln & the Politics of Slavery," 208
- Wright, Louis B., "Gold, Glory, and the Gospel," 503; (R), 508
- Wright, Marcia (R), 820, 1164
- Wright, Monte D., and Paszek, Lawrence J. (eds.), "Science, Technology, and Warfare," 1090
- "Writing American History: Essays on Modern Scholarship," by Higham, 113
- Yanaga, Chitoshi (R), 191
- Yardeni, Myriam, "La conscience nationale en France pendant les guerres de religion (1559-1598)," 1129
- "Year Book XV," 1473
- "Yemen, The War in the," by O'Ballance, 555
- "Yorke, Sir Joseph, and Anglo-Dutch Relations, 1774-1780," by Miller, 141
- "Yorubaland, Revolution and Power Politics in, 1840-1893: Ibadan Expansion and the Rise of Ekitiparapo," by Akintoye, 818
- Young, Arthur N., "China's Nation-Building Effort, 1927-1937," 1494
- Young, Charles R. (R), 763
- Young, D. Murray (R), 484
- Young, Robert M., et al., "The Victorian Crisis of Faith," ed. by Symondson, 147
- "Young Hegelians," by Brazill, 735
- "Young Hegelians and Karl Marx," by McLellan, 735
- "Youngplans, Die Entstehung des, dargestellt vom Reichsarchiv 1931-1933," ed. by Vogt, 1148
- Zacek, Joseph Frederick, "Palacký," 1477; (R), 545
- Zacher, Mark W., "Dag Hammarskjöld's United Nations," 1415
- Zaller, Robert, "The Parliament of 1621," 705
- Zeeveld, W. Gordon (R), 783
- Zeldin, Theodore (ed.), "Conflicts in French Society," 1134
- Zeman, Z. A. B., "The Gentlemen Negotiators," 486
- Zemsky, Robert, "Merchants, Farmers, and River Gods," 1501
- Ziemke, Earl F. (R), 1476
- Zubok, L. I., "Ekspansionistskaia politika SShA v nachale XX veka," 219

---

The American Historical Association

---

Founded in 1884. Chartered by Congress in 1889

Office: 400 A Street, S.E., Washington, D.C. 20003

President: Thomas C. Cochran, University of Pennsylvania

Vice-President: Lynn White, jr., University of California, Los Angeles

Treasurer: Elmer Louis Kayser, George Washington University

Executive Secretary: Paul L. Ward

Assistant Executive Secretary: John J. Rumbarger

MEMBERSHIP: Persons interested in historical studies, whether professionally or otherwise, are invited to membership. The present membership is about 18,000. Members elect the officers by ballot.

MEETINGS: The Association's annual meeting takes place on December 28–30. The meeting in 1972 will be held in New Orleans. Many professional historical groups meet within or jointly with the Association at this time. The Pacific Coast Branch holds separate meetings on the Pacific Coast and publishes the Pacific Historical Review.

PUBLICATIONS AND SERVICES: The American Historical Review is published five times a year and sent to all members. It is available by subscription to institutions. The Association also publishes its Annual Report, the AHA Newsletter, a variety of pamphlets on historical subjects, and bibliographical and other volumes. To promote history and assist historians, the Association offers many other services. It also maintains close relations with international, specialized, state, and local historical societies through conferences and correspondence.

PRIZES: The Herbert B. Adams Prize of $300 awarded annually for a first book in the field of European history. The Troyer Steele Anderson Prize awarded every ten years to the person whom the Council of the Association considers to have made the most outstanding contribution to the advancement of the purposes of the Association during the preceding ten years (next award, 1980). The George Louis Beer Prize of $300 awarded annually for a first book on any phase of European international history since 1895. The Albert J. Beveridge Award of $5,000 given annually for the best book on the history of the United States, Canada, or Latin America. The Albert B. Corey Prize, sponsored jointly by the AHA and the Canadian Historical Association, of $1,000 awarded biennially for the best book on the history of Canadian-American relations or the history of both countries (next award, 1974). The John H. Dunning Prize of $300 awarded in the even-numbered years for a book on any subject relating to American history. The John K. Fairbank Prize in East Asian History of $500 awarded in the odd-numbered years beginning in 1969. The Clarence H. Haring Prize of $500 awarded every five years to that Latin American who has published the most outstanding book in Latin American history during the preceding five years (next award, 1976). The Robert Livingston Schuyler Prize of $500 awarded every five years for the best work in modern British and Commonwealth history (next award, 1976). The Watumull Prize of $1,000 awarded in the even-numbered years for a work on the history of India originally published in the United States.

DUES: Annual regular dues are $20.00, student (faculty signature required), emeritus, and spouse $10.00, and life $400. All members receive the American Historical Review, the AHA Newsletter, and the program of the annual meeting.

CORRESPONDENCE: Inquiries should be addressed to the Executive Secretary at 400 A Street, S.E., Washington, D.C. 20003.

---

The American Historical Review

---

Founded in 1895

The AHR is sent to all members of the American Historical Association; information concerning membership will be found on the preceding page. The AHR is also available to institutions by subscription. There are two categories of subscription:

CLASS I: American Historical Review only, United States, Canada, and Mexico $25.00, foreign $27.00.

CLASS II: American Historical Review, the AHA Newsletter, and the program of the annual meeting of the Association, United States, Canada, and Mexico $30.00, foreign $32.00.

Single copies of the current issue and back issues in and subsequent to volume 71 (1965-66) can be ordered from the Business Manager of the Association at $6.00 per copy. Issues prior to volume 71 should be ordered from Kraus Reprint Corporation, 16 East 46th Street, New York, N.Y. 10017.

Correspondence regarding contributions to the American Historical Review and books for review should be sent to the Managing Editor, 400 A Street, S.E., Washington, D.C. 20003. Unsolicited book reviews or review articles are not accepted; a statement concerning reviewing policy will be found in the issue for December 1970, vol. 75, pp. 1889-91. Preliminary inquiries concerning articles are not necessary, though authors may find them useful. Attention is urged, however, to a statement concerning the kinds of articles the AHR ordinarily will and will not publish; it appears in the issue for October 1970, vol. 75, pp. 1577-80. The entire text, including footnotes, of manuscripts submitted for publication must be prepared in double-spaced typescript, with generous margins to allow for copyediting. Footnotes should be numbered consecutively throughout and should appear in a separate section at the end of the text. The editors of the AHR are the final arbiters of length, grammar, usage, and the laws of libel; articles will be edited to conform to AHR style in matters of punctuation, capitalization, and the like. The editors may suggest other changes in the interests of clarity and economy of expression, but such changes are never made without consultation with authors. There is no official style sheet for the American Historical Review, but a convenient general guide is A Manual of Style, published by the University of Chicago Press.

An armchair seafarer's guide through two centuries on the high seas.

"Life at sea was hard and uncertain in the days of sailing vessels. Many a young man's career was cut short by a fall from aloft. Sometimes a wave swept a deck clean, taking overboard an unfortunate sailor who could not find a hand for himself as well as one for the ship. But some went to sea all their lives, never encountered a real hazard, and died peacefully in retirement." Thirty Years of The American Neptune.

Readers of The American Neptune have been tasting the spray, braving the storms, smelling the water-warped wood, feeling the dizziness from seasickness and grog, following the lore through the years of Neptune's publication. To commemorate its thirtieth year, former editor Ernest S. Dodge has selected 25 articles published in the journal that represent a cross-section of the journal's appeal to armchair seafarers.

No seafarer, armchair or otherwise, will want to be without it.

Thirty Years of
The American Neptune
by Ernest S. Dodge
$10.00

Harvard University
Press

Cambridge, Mass. 02138

New Paperbacks

Feminism and Family Planning in Victorian England

J. A. and OLIVE BANKS

Paper $2.75 (Cloth $4.50)

"An excellent short study. . . ."

—Choice

Ireland's English Question

Anglo-Irish Relations

1534-1970

PATRICK O'FARRELL

Paper $3.95 (Cloth $11.50)

"An outstanding contribution. . . ."

—Choice

The Victorian Underworld

KELLOW CHESNEY

Paper $3.95

"A solid and substantial work. . . ."

—Howard Mumford Jones

Bittersweet Encounter

The Afro-American and the American Jew

ROBERT G. WEISBORD

and ARTHUR STEIN

Foreword by C. Eric Lincoln

Paper $2.95

Selected by Choice as one of the Outstanding Academic Books for 1972.

Examination copies are available when requested on academic letterhead. Write to Dept. 123

Schocken Books

200 Madison Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10016

3

New Hardcover Books

Russian Rebels

1600-1800

PAUL AVRICH

"I find Paul Avrich's book quite excellent." —Leonard Schapiro

"The first and only comprehensive account of a very important—and timely—subject." —Marc Raeff

Bibliog./notes/index/

illus./LC 72-79444

$10.00

White Savage

The Case of John Dunn Hunter

RICHARD DRINNON

"Richard Drinnon's WHITE SAVAGE: The Case of John Dunn Hunter is revisionist history at its best. Mr. Drinnon shows the possibilities of a Western history that regards the Indian as a human being, and sees the continuity between nineteenth and twentieth century American imperialism." —Henry Nash Smith

Bibliog./notes/index/

maps/LC 72-79445

$12.50

The Legacy of the German Refugee Intellectuals

ROBERT BOYERS, editor

The influence of the Weimar era on American intellectual life reflected in essays by Walter Kaufmann, Rudolf Arnheim, George L. Mosse, George Steiner, Jurgen Habermas, and others.

Illustrated/LC 73-185326

$10.00

from your bookseller or

Schocken Books

200 Madison Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10016

DOCTOR KANE OF THE ARCTIC SEAS

George W. Corner

Elisha Kent Kane (1820-57) was a national hero of 19th-century America. Doctor and naval officer, his rash adventures took him around the world. This is the story of his most celebrated exploits: two perilous expeditions which set a pattern for Arctic exploration that has lasted until modern times. $10.00

THE HISTORY OF THE WORLD

SIR WALTER RALEGH

Edited by C. A. Patrides

Sustained extracts from the first edition of 1614, including the celebrated Preface and preserving Raleigh's grand design. "A new edition of Raleigh's History is welcome . . . C. A. Patrides gives us the essence of it."—Times Literary Supplement $15.00

JOSEPH FELS AND THE SINGLE-TAX MOVEMENT

Arthur Power Dudden

This account of the messianic leader, after Henry George, of the single-tax land-reform movement and champion of diverse causes "nicely illuminates the complexity of early twentieth-century reform . . . This engaging biography resurrects a life clearly worth remembering."—Pennsylvania Magazine of History and Biography $10.00

FROM THE MOLLY MAGUIRES TO THE UNITED MINE WORKERS

The Social Ecology of an Industrial Union, 1869-1897

Harold W. Aurand

Recreating the total milieu of this period, Aurand explores the roots of today's often violent mining unions. ". . . a contribution to our understanding of the early rise of unionism in a vital and trouble-ridden industry."—Monthly Labor Review $10.00

Temple University Press

Philadelphia, Pa. 19122

"In the vast collection of books on the American Civil War, there is no book like this one."

—BRUCE CATTON

"Monumental . . . The last word . . . a priceless reference book."—Robert D. Hoffsommer, Civil War Times Illustrated.

"Recommended . . . An encyclopedic daily running account of the war."—Library Journal.

"Of permanent value . . . It is no exaggeration whatever to say that this man knows more facts about the Civil War than any other man who has ever lived . . . He has also succeeded admirably in putting the results of his knowledge into lucid prose. Professor Long has taken on an important job and he has done it admirably."—Bruce Catton 1156 pages • 8 pages of maps • complete index by dates • special studies covering the facts and figures of population, casualties, and the economics of the war • complete bibliography of Bruce Catton's Centennial History of the Civil War, for which Mr. Long served as Director of Research • $17.50.

THE CIVIL WAR
DAY BY DAY
AN ALMANAC
1861 1865
E. B. LONG with Barbara Long
FOREWORD BY
BRUCE CATTON

Doubleday & Company, Inc., Garden City, N. Y. 11530

DOUBLEDAY

CANFIELD PRESS makes history . . .

OCCUPIED AMERICA: THE CHICANO'S STRUGGLE TOWARD LIBERATION

By Rodolfo Acuña

This is a strongly worded yet extensively documented historical analysis of the domestic colonization of Mexican Americans in the U.S. and their efforts to achieve recognition and equality within today's society. Traces Chicano history from early American "land grabs" in the Southwest (1836) to recent agricultural strikes, and discusses the political organization and specific problems of the urban Chicano. 228 pp./Paper/$4.95/September 1972

---

RETRACING OUR STEPS: STUDIES IN DOCUMENTS FROM THE AMERICAN PAST

By Myron A. Marty and H. Theodore Finkelston

Source documents from the major periods of American history provide the framework for this unique study of our nation's past. Each of the thirty-three chapters centers around a particular episode in U.S. history, and includes introductory material by the authors, a central or "core" document, and a cluster of shorter, related documents. Each chapter also includes discussion starters, carefully selected and annotated bibliographies, and headnotes to each reading. By focusing on specific events and people, the authors have succeeded in presenting an in-depth study of our past that is at the same time highly relevant to contemporary movements and ideas in America. Vols. I and II: 448 pages/Paper/$4.95 each/1972

---

DREAM ON, AMERICA: A HISTORY OF FAITH AND PRACTICE

By Frederick Gentles and Melvin Steinfield

Evaluates the history of the American dream from its earliest European backgrounds to the present and future with original essays by the editors, followed by contemporary articles from periodicals and selections from original source material. Includes the background of the American dream in ancient and medieval worlds; contributions to the dream from the Puritan, Revolutionary, Constitutional, and Civil War periods; and discussion of the American dream in light of social protests, the myth of the melting pot, the Welfare State, and the imperialism, wars, and turmoil of recent decades. A final chapter looks at the prospects for the future of the American dream. Vols. I and II: paper/$4.50 each/1971
 One-Volume Edition: paper/$6.95/1971

Canfield Press, A Department of Harper & Row, Publishers, Inc., 850 Montgomery St.
 San Francisco, Ca. 94133

At a very special discount through March 1, 1973.

Great Atlas of the World

JOHAN BLAEU. Le Grand Atlas ou Cosmographie Blaviane. 12 VOLUMES.

Barnes & Noble Books announces that the monumental 12-volume publishing achievement — Johan Blaeu's Great Atlas of the World — is available for a limited time at a substantial savings — 25% discount off the list price.

Johan Blaeu collaborated with international artists, engravers, and scholars in 17th century Amsterdam — then the center for international cartographic knowledge — and produced what is acknowledged to be one of the most important and magnificent atlases ever published. The 609 fully engraved double-page maps depicting all of the then known world are each accompanied in French text by a geographical and historical description.

Johan Blaeu's Great Atlas of the World is unquestionably an essential primary resource for students and scholars in geographic, cartographic, and historical studies.

Descriptive brochure upon request.

List price $850.00 less 25% discount: $637.50. No shipping or handling charges. This special offer is limited to orders received by March 1, 1973.

EMANUEL BOWEN and THOMAS KITCHIN

Introduction by J. B. Harley and Donald Hodson

THE ROYAL ENGLISH ATLAS:

18th Century County Maps of England and Wales

First published in 1762, The Royal English Atlas presented in one elegant folio volume the best contemporary maps of the English counties and of North and South Wales in a standard format. The present exact facsimile contains 44 finely engraved maps, distinguished not only by the wealth of their geographical detail but by the beauty of their craftsmanship.

1762. Reprinted 1972. Various pp. (folio)

$35.00

G. R. P. LAWRENCE

CARTOGRAPHIC METHODS

This volume explains many of the techniques and methods of map study, starting from the basic requirements of any map representation. A summary is provided of the various types of maps available in Britain and of the major mapping organizations in Western Europe.

A list of up-to-date references is given and a number of illustrative map extracts.

1972. 80pp. Illustrations. Tables. Methuen Cloth $8.00 University Paperback $3.25

FRANCIS JOHN MONKHOUSE and HENRY ROBERT WILKINSON

MAPS & DIAGRAMS: Their Compilation and Construction

This extensively revised and up-dated 3rd edition should stand in its present form for many years. This edition contains much new information about the new developments in tools, materials, techniques and methods. Emphasis is placed upon the increasing need for a discerning use of statistical techniques in view of the growing amount of data available for map-making. New maps and diagrams plus a new extended index are added.

3rd revised enlarged edition. 1971. 522pp. Illustrations. Maps. Methuen Cloth $11.25

University Paperback $5.50

1817

Harper & Row, Publishers, Inc./Barnes & Noble Books

10 East 53d Street New York, New York 10022

THE AMERICAN HERITAGE SERIES

General Editors Leonard W. Levy & Alfred Young

THE SOUTH SINCE RECONSTRUCTION edited by Thomas D. Clark

62 primary documents on economic, social, and political evolution in the course of Southern development through the last century. 667 pages; cloth $10.00; paper $6.50.

THE MIND OF THE FOUNDER: Sources of the Political Thought of James Madison edited by Marvin Meyers

From the revolution to the age of Jackson, few men were more at the pulse of young America's growth than James Madison. 576 pages; cloth $10.00; paper $4.95.

CONTEMPORARY AMERICAN PROTESTANT THOUGHT edited by William R. Miller

Covers the gamut from militant Christianity, moral relativism, and gnosticism to McLuhan's theory of sensory form. 567 pages; cloth $9.50; paper $4.75.

THEORIES OF EDUCATION IN EARLY AMERICA 1655-1819 edited by F. Wilson Smith

28 Primary documents significant to educational theory during this period of America's growth. 432 pages; cloth $10.00; paper $4.75.

REPRINTS IN THE HISTORY OF SCIENCE

Selected by

Theodore M. Brown & Thomas S. Kuhn

Build a syllabus uniquely your own with facsimile reproductions of scholarly articles from more than 90 leading journals, including full publication data and original pagination reprinted in an 8½" x 11" format to fit standard two- or three-ring binders. Available individually or as collated sets at no extra charge. $.60 to $1.20 each.

AVAILABLE NOW

OUR KNOWLEDGE OF THE HISTORICAL PAST

by Murray C. Murphey

The nature of historical knowledge and the extent to which techniques of social scientists apply to the problems of historians. Stresses that because history deals with the past, the historian is at a disadvantage (especially regarding the sampling and measurement techniques available to anthropologists and sociologists). 218 pages; cloth $6.50.

THE THEORY AND PRACTICE OF HISTORY,

by Leopold von Ranke edited by Georg G. Iggers and Konrad von Moltke

Ranke's basic theoretical concerns and their impact on his historical practice. Includes the first inexpensive abridged edition of HISTORY OF THE POPES, his most widely read work in the English-speaking world in the nineteenth century . . . plus "The Great Powers" and "A Dialog on Politics," two of his best essays on history and politics. 572 pages; cloth $15.00; paper $7.50.

The Bobbs-Merrill Company, Inc.
College Division / Indianapolis, Indiana 46268

Any reseller is free to charge whatever price it wishes for our books.

Portrait of a Decade

Roy Stryker and the Development of Documentary Photography in the Thirties

F. JACK HURLEY. The story of Roy Stryker—director of the historical section of the Farm Security Administration—and the most talented team of its kind ever assembled: photographers Walker Evans, Dorothea Lange, Arthur Rothstein, Ben Shahn, and others. Generously illustrated with more than 100 photos depicting America during the Great Depression. 224 pages, illus., $12.95

The South and the Concurrent Majority

DAVID M. POTTER. Edited by Don E. Fehrenbacher and Carl N. Degler. In these important lectures Professor Potter gives a cogent analysis of the political devices the South used to maintain a position of power in the national government for nearly a century. 104 pages, $4.95

The Great South

EDWARD KING. Edited by W. Magruder Drake and Robert R. Jones. The most comprehensive and unbiased account ever written of the South's social, economic, and political condition in the late Reconstruction era. The great asset of this new facsimile edition is the full scholarly introduction. Comprehensive index.

Library of Southern Civilization
880 pages, illus., $20.00

Brokenburn

The Journal of Kate Stone, 1861-1868

Edited by JOHN Q. ANDERSON. "The chief contribution of the diary is the light it throws on an obscure area of the Confederacy. Restricted in locale, it might be presumed to have a limited appeal. This is not the case—chiefly because Kate wrote so well, was so much involved in what was going on, and revealed so much of herself."

—Frank E. Vandiver

Back in print in the Library of Southern Civilization 424 pages, $8.95

Another Look at the Twentieth-Century South

GEORGE E. MOWRY. The author questions the uniqueness of the Southern experience, examines the paradox of recent Southern conservatism, and gives a bold analysis of the persistent white Southern elite.

104 pages, $4.95

Louisiana  State University Press
Baton Rouge 70803

Capitol Studies

A New Biannual

---

JOURNAL OF HISTORY,
POLITICS, ART AND ARCHITECTURE

---

Featuring articles on the National Capitol and the Congress

---

Subscription Rate: Individual—$4.00 per year
Institutional—$6.00 per year

(Make check payable to the U.S. Capitol Historical Society)

---

U.S. CAPITOL HISTORICAL SOCIETY, 200 MARYLAND AVENUE, N.E.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20515

Cornell
University
Press

Three New Books in THE SOURCES OF HISTORY SERIES . . .

Medieval Wales

By R. IAN JACK. This book is a survey of the sources of Welsh history for the period 400-1542. Examined and appraised are literary sources, the official records of Wales and the manner of their preservation, the records of the English government, archives of individuals and corporations, ecclesiastical records, the antiquaries, archaeology and numismatics, and cartography and place-names.

$9.75 cloth; $4.50 paper

Early Christian Ireland

By KATHLEEN HUGHES. Covering the sources of Irish history from prehistoric times to about 1100, this eminently useful survey describes and evaluates the various kinds of material available, the problems they present, and the sorts of questions they answer. The author devotes a chapter each to archaeology, secular laws, ecclesiastical legislation, the annals, secular literature, ecclesiastical learning, hagiography, art and architecture, and eleventh- and twelfth-century history and compilations.

$11.50 cloth; $4.95 paper

The United States, 1790-1890

By W. R. BROCK. In this study of the proper use of historical evidence, the author has organized his material topically rather than by the kinds of sources themselves. After a general introduction entitled "Purposes and Principles," he devotes a section each to records of national growth, the government of the Union, the life of the people, and the American mind.

Forthcoming

PREVIOUSLY PUBLISHED IN THE SERIES . . .

England, 1200-1640

by G. R. ELTON $7.50 cloth; $3.95 paper

Historical Demography

by T. H. HOLLINGSWORTH $10.50 cloth

Great Britain since 1914

by C. L. MOWAT $6.75 cloth; $3.45 paper

The Western European Powers, 1500-1700

by CHARLES CARTER $8.75 cloth; $4.50 paper

Cornell University Press ITHACA AND LONDON

Cornell
University
Press

and Three New European and American History Titles . . .

Austria, Great Britain, and the Crimean War

The Destruction of the European Concert

By PAUL W. SCHROEDER. In this major reappraisal of Crimean War diplomacy, based on extensive unpublished archival material, the author argues that the war was the result of a clash between two conflicting diplomatic approaches—Austria's traditional diplomacy and Great Britain's new tactics of confrontation. His absorbing narrative account shows that while Austria tried by diplomatic means to avert war with Russia and settle the Eastern question, Britain led the Western powers to block all efforts for peace, seeking instead a prestigious military victory that would establish her leadership in a new and progressive Europe.

$19.50

The Politics of Jacksonian Finance

By JOHN M. McFAUL. Emphasizing the central role played by party politics, this book analyzes the major banking and currency controversies of the Jacksonian era. The author describes the aims, actual operation, and successes and failures of Jacksonian banking policy. He argues convincingly that political rather than economic considerations determined the shaping of this policy.

$9.75

Marxism and the Origins of British Socialism

The Struggle for a New Consciousness

By STANLEY PIERSON. The development of British socialism in the last decades of the nineteenth century is here viewed from a new perspective. Arguing that it can best be understood by analyzing the interaction between Marxist theory and British traditions of social thought, the author shows how Marxist ideas entered Britain, were modified and adapted, and inspired a popular movement. Included are intellectual portraits of such major figures as Thomas Carlyle, John Ruskin, William Morris, Henry Mayers Hyndman, and Sidney Webb, as well as of less prominent leaders.

$10.75

Cornell University Press ITHACA AND LONDON

CORPUS REFORMATORY ITALICORUM and BIBLIOTECA SERIES

The CORPUS, a series under the general editorship of Luigi Firpo and Giorgio Spini in collaboration with Antonio Rotondò and John Tedeschi, makes available in critical editions the opera omnia of the Italian Protestant reformers of the sixteenth century, individuals who played an important role in the transmission to northern Europe of the thought and literature of Renaissance Italy. A supplementary series—the BIBLIOTECA—includes monographs, bibliographies, and archival material (especially Inquisitorial trials and registers) which can properly be considered as instruments for the study of the Italian Reformation. These systematic collections—published in collaboration with The Newberry Library—may well serve to change the frequently inadequate scholarly treatment of religious reform and unrest in Italy during the sixteenth century. Text is published in the language of the original manuscript; commentary is in the language of the volume editor.

CAMILLO RENATO: OPERE, DOCUMENTI E TESTIMONIANZE

Edited by Antonio Rotondò

This, the first volume of the CORPUS, contains the known writings and letters of Renato (died c. 1575), a former Franciscan who became one of the leaders of the Radical Reformation in southern Switzerland.

LC 72-3454 ISBN 0-87580-034-3 $17.50s

BENEDETTO DA MANTOVA: BENEFICIO DI CRISTO

Edited by Salvatore Caponetto

The second volume of the CORPUS contains a tract generally considered to be the doctrinal manifesto of the early Italian Reformation. Only recently, however, has research uncovered the identity of its author and the northern Protestant currents that influenced his work.

LC 72-3471 ISBN 0-87580-035-1 $30.00s

I COSTITUTI DI DON PIETRO MANELFI

Edited by Carlo Ginzburg

The first volume published in the BIBLIOTECA series contains the critical edition of the several depositions made by the Anabaptist Manelfi before the Bolognese and Roman Inquisitions in 1551. Manelfi's revelations virtually provided officials with a map of heretical Italy at mid-century.

LC 72-3473 ISBN 0-87580-510-8 (paper) $5.00s

ERETICI ITALIANI IN MORAVIA, POLONIA, TRANSILVANIA

By Domenico Caccamo

(1558-1611)

Caccamo continues the research of the late Delio Cantimori into the activities in exile of the Italian religious radicals of the sixteenth century who, in eastern Europe, laid the foundations of that religious system first known as Socinianism (after Faustus Socinus) and much later in modified form as Unitarianism.

LC 72-3474 ISBN 0-87580-511-6 (paper) $17.50s

...TO ILLUMINATE THE PAST ...TO UNDERSTAND THE PRESENT

THE SPIRITUAL CRISIS OF THE GILDED AGE

Paul A. Carter

The spiritual convulsions of a society—one recently emerged from a terrible civil war, dominated by the technology of a new materialism, and shaken by the theological implications of Darwinism—are the subject matter of this book. America was building more churches than ever before and liking them less; skepticism and anticlericalism swept through the established orthodoxies in both urban and rural communities; decay and revival occurred side by side with a peculiar flamboyance—more often than not through the operation of common forces. The parameters for the study of the spiritual crisis of the gilded age encompass all of America's religious and intellectual factions from 1865 to 1895.

xiv + 285 pages, illustrations, notes, bibliography, index.
LC-72-156938 ISBN 0-87580-026-2 $8.50

BARTOLOMÉ DE LAS CASAS IN HISTORY

Toward an Understanding of the Man and His Work (1474-1566)

Edited by Juan Friede and Benjamin Keen

Bartolomé de Las Casas was honored by both Church and State in his own time. His greatness has continued to expand for nearly 500 years as scholars all over the world in growing numbers recognize the significance of his work. Possibly the first official spokesman for human rights in the New World but certainly the most powerful foe of the governmental-military-industrial complex in Overseas Spain, the clérigo Las Casas—wealthy planter, owner of slaves, encomendero—renounced slavery in 1514; a second conversion in 1522 caused him to don Dominican robes and take the vow of poverty. Until the day of his death, Las Casas fought for the rights of the Indians. Today, the name of Las Casas is coupled with those of such Renaissance humanist contemporaries as Erasmus and Thomas More; to read Las Casas's opposition to the destruction of the Indians (1542) within the context of events in Southeast Asia is a "backward look into our own future."

xiv + 619 pages, maps, illustrations, bibliography, index.

LC 76-157648 ISBN 0-87580-025-4 $20.00

DON BARTHELEMI DE LAS CASAS

NORTHERN ILLINOIS UNIVERSITY PRESS
DeKalb, Illinois 60115

Now Available from Arno Press

American Women images and realities

A 44-title reprint collection which focuses on the indelible mark made by American women on our nation's history.

Advisory Editors:

Annette K. Baxter. Professor of History and Chairman of the American Studies and the Women's Studies Faculty at Barnard College.

Leon Stein. Editor of "Justice," the official publication of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union. He is the author of The Triangle Fire (1962) and Medal for a Union (1964).

Among the titles included in this important new collection are:

Women's Work in Municipalities

by Mary Ritter Beard

$15.00

The Condition of Women in the United States

by Madame Blanc

$13.00

The Female Preacher

by Almond H. Davis

$7.00

|  |         |
|--|---------|
| The American Woman: The Feminine Side of a Masculine Civilization |         |
| by Ernest R. Groves   | $20.00 |
| Equal Suffrage  |         |
| by Helen L. Summers   | $12.00 |
| Women Wage-Earners  |         |
| by Helen Campbell   | $14.00 |
| Women, Church and State   |         |
| by Matilda Joslyn Gage  | $24.00 |
| Diary of a Southern Refugee During the War                        |         |
| by Judith W. McGuire  | $16.00 |
| Women and the West: A Short Social History                        |         |
| by William Forrest Sprague  | $13.00 |
| The Life and Times of Anne Royal                                  |         |
| by Sarah Harvey Porter  | $13.00 |
| The Part Taken by Women in American History                       |         |
| by Mrs. John A. Logan   | $41.00 |
| Woman's Work In America   |         |
| edited by Annie Nathan Meyer                                      | $20.00 |

The complete AMERICAN WOMEN collection is available, until January 1, 1973, at the special introductory price of $650. The price thereafter will be $765.

All books in the collection may be purchased separately.

For a complete descriptive brochure of this collection, write to

Arno Press

A New York Times Company

330 Madison Avenue

New York, New York 10017.

Now Available from Arno Press

Technology and Society

A 53-title reprint collection which documents the vital relationship between the development of technology and the evolution of American society.

Among the industries considered are those related to agriculture, the automobile, electricity, the telephone and telegraph, railroads, and metals.

Advisory Editor for the collection is Daniel J. Boorstin, author of The Americans and Director of the National Museum of History and Technology, Smithsonian Institution.

Among the titles included in this important new collection are:

American Agricultural Implements

by Robert L. Ardrey

$12.00

Alcoa, An American Enterprise

by Charles C. Carr

$8.00

The Electric-Lamp Industry

by Arthur A. Bright

$25.00

|   |         |
|---|---------|
| The Evolution of Industry  |         |
| by Henry Dyer  | $14.00 |
| The Story of the Atlantic Telegraph  |         |
| by Henry M. Field  | $20.00 |
| A Descriptive and Historical Account of Hydraulic and OtherMachines for Raising Water, Ancient and Modern |         |
| by Thomas Ewbank   | $27.00 |
| The Story of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, 1827-1927  |         |
| by Edward Hungerfield  | $22.00 |
| The Brass Industry in the United States  |         |
| by William G. Lathrop  | $11.00 |
| Memoirs of Eli Whitney, ESQ.   |         |
| by Denison Olmsted   | $7.00  |
| The New Epoch: As Developed by the Manufacture of Power  |         |
| by George S. Morison   | $8.00  |
| Lowell, As it Was, and As It Is  |         |
| by Henry A. Miles  | $11.00 |

The complete TECHNOLOGY AND SOCIETY collection is available, until January 1, 1973, at the special introductory price of $925. The price thereafter will be $1,054.

All books in the collection may be purchased separately.

For a complete descriptive brochure of the collection, write to

Arno Press

A New York Times Company
330 Madison Avenue
New York, New York 10017.

HOOVER INSTITUTION PRESS

A Chinese-English Dictionary of Communist Chinese Terminology

DENNIS DOOLIN AND CHARLES P. RIDLEY. 1973. This dictionary is intended for the reader or translator of current Chinese documents and is concerned primarily with words and phrases either coined or given new currency by the Chinese Communist Party and the government of the People's Republic of China. P124. 600 p. Hard. $27.50

Chinese Historiography on the Revolution of 1911

A Critical Survey and a Selected Bibliography

WINSTON HSIEH. 1973. Examines the 20th-century output of Chinese historians—both Republican and Communist—on the 1911 Revolution and shows that the interpretation of historical events has usually been colored by political ideology or political myth. S34. 100 p. Hard, $4.50

China's Khrushchev

A Political Biography of Liu Shao-ch'i

TIEN-MIN LI. 1973. The definitive biography of Liu Shao-ch'i. The book traces Liu's life as a Communist from 1921–70, along with the development of the Chinese Communist Party during those years. P123. 200 p. Hard, about $7.50

Race and Politics in Urban Malaya

ALVIN RABUSHKA. 1973. Offers a systematic analysis of the attitudes of the Malayan man-in-the-street towards questions of race and politics. This book is based on the author's own Gallup-type public opinion poll—the first such ever taken in Malaya. S35. 120 p. Hard, $6.50

Hoover Institution Press
Stanford University, Stanford, California

HOOVER INSTITUTION PRESS

World Communism; A Handbook, 1918-1965

WITOLD S. SWORAKOWSKI (ed.). 1973. The Handbook, covering the years 1918-1965, gives an encyclopedic treatment of past developments in the international communist movement through historical profiles of each of the national communist parties and international communist front organizations.

P108. 550 p. Hard, $25.00

Yearbook on International Communist Affairs: 1972

RICHARD F. STAAR (ed.). 1972. The only comprehensive, country-by-country survey of what is happening in the communist world.

P118. 708 p. Hard, $25.00

The Yearbook is extremely valuable as a single authoritative source of an enormous number of facts which are otherwise scattered in all sorts of publications of varying reliability and accessibility, and its annual appearance will make it increasingly valuable in the future.

The Times Literary Supplement

Biographical Dictionary of the Comintern

BRANKO LAZITCH. 1973. Over 700 biographical sketches of members of the Comintern, from its founding until its dissolution. Included are three hundred individuals who comprised the Comintern's overall directorate—its Executive Committee, Executive Committee Presidium, Executive Committee Secretariat, and Control Commission.

P121. 500 p. Hard, $15.00

Marx's Theory of Exchange: Alienation and Crises

PAUL CRAIG ROBERTS AND MATTHEW A. STEPHENSON. 1973. This study shows that Marx was an organizational theorist who found the essence of capitalism to be exchange, which creates a separation between the production and use of economic goods. In this separation lies the source of economic crises and alienation.

S36. 100 p. Hard, $5.50

Hoover Institution Press
Stanford University, Stanford, California

HOOVER INSTITUTION PRESS

Western Technology and Soviet Economic Development, 1945-1965

ANTONY C. SUTTON. 1973. This is the third volume of an analysis of the impact of Western technology and skills on the industrial development of the Soviet Union from 1917 until 1965. The hypothesis of the series is that the absorption of Western technology and skills has been by far the most significant factor in the development of the Soviet economy. P113. 500 p. Hard, $15.00

Industrial Management in the Soviet Union

The Role of the CPSU in Industrial Decision-making, 1917-1970

WILLIAM J. CONYNGHAM. 1973. Studies the role of a revolutionary political party during forced industrialization. The author concludes that the Party performed important functions of mobilization during the early phase of industrialization but that its role has become increasingly marginal.

P116. 370 p. Hard, $9.50

The Stalinist Terror in the Thirties

Documentation in the Soviet Press

BORYS LEVYTSKY. 1973. This book is a series of biographies of over 200 Soviet leaders liquidated during the Stalinist purges. P126. 500 p. Hard, $14.50

Memoirs of Nicolas de Basily

NICOLAS DE BASILY. 1973. Nicolas de Basily was a highly placed member of the Russian foreign service in the years before the 1917 Revolution and drafted the abdication statement of Tsar Nicolas II. His memoirs give a vivid impression of both domestic and foreign policy developments in Russia between 1900 and 1917, particularly in the last months of the monarchy.

P125. 150 p. Hard, $6.00

Guide to Hungarian Studies

ELEMÉR BAKÓ. 1973. A bibliography of extensive and diversified material intended to provide a well-balanced, reliable, and practical tool for the English-reading public, particularly scholars and college students.

B52. 1218 p. Hard, $35.00

Hoover Institution Press
Stanford University, Stanford, California

For January Classes
D.C. Heath Announces New Editions in Two Distinguished Series . . .

---

PROBLEMS IN AMERICAN CIVILIZATION

- The Yalta Conference, Second Edition—Richard F. Fenno, Jr.
- Korea: Cold War and Limited War, Second Edition—Allen Guttman
- The Abolitionists: Immediatism and the Question of Means, Second Edition—Hugh Hawkins
- Woodrow Wilson and the Paris Peace Conference, Second Edition—N. Gordon Levin, Jr.
- The Causes of the American Civil War, Second Edition—Edwin C. Rozwenc
- Reconstruction in the South, Second Edition—Edwin C. Rozwenc
- Jackson vs. Biddle's Bank: The Struggle Over the Second Bank of the United States, Second Edition—George Rogers Taylor

PROBLEMS IN EUROPEAN CIVILIZATION

- The Russian Revolution and Bolshevik Victory, Second Edition—Arthur E. Adams
- From Nuremberg to My Lai—Jay W. Baird
- The Scramble for Africa: Causes and Dimensions of Empire, Second Edition—Raymond F. Betts
- The Greatness of Louis XIV: Myth or Reality?, Second Edition—William F. Church
- The Stalin Revolution: Foundations of Soviet Totalitarianism, Second Edition—Robert V. Daniels
- Otto von Bismarck: A Historical Evaluation, Second Edition—Theodore S. Hamerow
- The Fall of France, 1940: Causes and Responsibilities, Second Edition—Samuel M. Osgood
- The Thirty Years' War, Second Edition—Theodore K. Rabb
- Peter the Great Changes Russia, Second Edition—Marc Raeff
- The Reformation: Basic Interpretations, Second Edition—Lewis W. Spitz

*For more information on these series, call D.C. Heath toll free at 800-225-1388.
In Massachusetts call 1-800-842-1211.*

D.C. Heath and Company

125 Spring Street
Lexington, Massachusetts 02173

D. C. HEATH

AND COMPANY ...

THE WESTERN TRADITION, THIRD EDITION

Eugen Weber, University of California, Los Angeles

This inclusive two-volume collection of important readings and documents—political, economic, cultural, religious, social—covers the span of recorded history. Included are both classic selections and many lesser known works and passages that illuminate the times: what people did, thought, said, and how they lived.

Vol. I: From the Ancient World to Louis XIV

Vol. II: From the Enlightenment to the Present

1972 Paper 1,519 total pages

Available separately: From the Renaissance to the Present

1972 Paper 722 pages

AN INTRODUCTION TO CHINESE CIVILIZATION

John Meskill, Barnard College

with J. Mason Gentzler, Kwang-chih Chang, Nai-Ruenn Chen,

Yu-kuang Chu, Morton H. Fried, Chi-ming Hou, Charles O. Hucker,

Chu-tsing Li, Rhoads Murphey, Burton Watson, and C. K. Yang

This text combines a cultural history of the whole span of Chinese civilization, traditional and modern, with a separate set of essays by established scholars examining distinguishing patterns of Chinese society. Essay subjects include archeology, pre-modern economics, language, anthropology, modern economic development, political institutions, art, geography, literature, and the social functions of religion.

1972 Paper 640 pages

MODERN EUROPEAN SOCIAL HISTORY

Robert J. Bezucha, Northwestern University

1972 Paper 386 pages

COMING SOON ...

WESTERN CIVILIZATION: AN URBAN PERSPECTIVE

F. Roy Willis, University of California, Davis

A comprehensive study of Western civilization focusing on the achievements of the great cities of the Western world and their directive force in shaping history. The author probes deeply into economic and social structure, religion, government and political theory, concepts of beauty and attempts to realize them. Instructor's Manual.

Vol. I: From the Rise of Athens through the 17th Century

Vol. II: The 17th Century to the Contemporary Age

Spring 1973 Paper 800 total pages

...FOR DEFINITIVE
HISTORY

THE AMERICAN PAGEANT: A HISTORY OF THE REPUBLIC, FOURTH EDITION

Thomas A. Bailey, Stanford University

The brilliance and life of the narrative, the prominence given to human roles, and the skillful presentation of a mature and realistic interpretation of American history have made this text one of the most successful American history surveys. Now in its fourth edition, the book is updated and expanded with chapters on the Johnson and Nixon years. Student Guidebook and Instructor's Manual.

1971 Two-volume Paper or One-volume Cloth 1068 total pages

CONFLICT AND CONSENSUS IN AMERICAN HISTORY, THIRD EDITION

Allen F. Davis, Temple University

Harold D. Woodman, Purdue University

The readings in this two-volume collection are grouped around critical problems in American history and united by the theme: Has change come about through evolution or revolution?

Vol. I: Conflict and Consensus in Early American History

Vol. II: Conflict and Consensus in Modern American History

1972 Paper 1054 total pages

THE CIVIL WAR AND RECONSTRUCTION,
 SECOND EDITION

J. G. Randall, late of the University of Illinois

David Donald, The Johns Hopkins University

The standard text on one of the most controversial periods in American history. No other book available today can match its comprehensiveness and readability.

1969 Cloth 866 pages

For more information on these and other history texts from D. C. Heath, call us toll free at:

800-225-1388.

In Massachusetts call 1-800-842-1211.

D.C. Heath and Company

125 Spring Street

Lexington, Massachusetts 02173

SHIPPING, MARITIME TRADE AND THE ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT OF COLONIAL NORTH AMERICA

JAMES F. SHEPHERD and GARY M. WALTON

Using quantitative analysis, the authors of this close examination of the North American colonial economy from the mid-17th century to the Revolution place in perspective the importance of increasing market trade and regional specialization, and the pace and pattern of the economic development in general. $14.50

CHRONICLE INTO HISTORY

LOUIS GREEN

A study of the interpretation of history in Florentine 14th-century chronicles. The author explores both the response of the vernacular chroniclers to the problems they faced in writing history and the process by which the assumptions and corresponding outlook of the age were transformed from essentially medieval values into the intellectual attitudes of the early Renaissance. (Cambridge Studies in Early Modern History) $13.95

LAW AND SOCIETY IN THE VISIGOTHIC KINGDOM

P. D. KING

A searching investigation into the structure and ethos of Visigothic society as it is revealed in the legal and other sources of the time. The picture which emerges reflects the striking extent to which the Roman world lived on in the West after the Empire's political demise. The study provides a wealth of information on everyday Visigothic life. (Cambridge Studies in Medieval Life and Thought) $21.00

ISLAMIC HISTORY A.D. 600-750 (A.H. 132)

M. A. SHABAN

"A fascinating, controversial interpretive essay on the period from the time of Muhammad to the Abbasid revolution and downfall of the Omayyads."—Library Journal. "A new and illuminating perspective of the early years of Islamic history."—The New Middle East. $12.50

AFRICA SINCE 1800

ROLAND OLIVER & ANTHONY ATMORE

New Second Edition

Cloth $11.95 Paper $3.75

A HISTORY OF EAST AFRICA

ZOE MARSH & G. W. KINGSNORTH

New Fourth Edition

Cloth $9.50 Paper $3.95

CRUSADING WARFARE 1097-1193

R. C. SMAIL

First Paperback Edition

$6.95

Cambridge University Press

32 East 57th Street, New York, N.Y. 10022

The CENTRE D'ETUDE DU QUEBEC

Cameron Nish

Director

WISHES TO ANNOUNCE A SPECIAL SALE!

IN ORDER THAT THE GREATEST POSSIBLE
NUMBER OF RESEARCHERS AND LIBRARIES
MAY ACQUIRE THE FIRST THREE VOLUMES
OF THE PUBLISHED

DEBATES OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF UNITED CANADA

1841-1867

Elizabeth Nish, editor

Vol. I: 1841, 1099 pp. (Publication price: $35.00) ..... $30.00

Vol. II: 1842, 466 pp. (Publication price: $20.00) ..... $17.50

Both Volumes: $40.00

Vol. III: 1843, 1308 pp. .... $15.00

---

PLEASE ADDRESS ORDERS FOR INDIVIDUAL VOLUMES
OR PERMANENT ORDERS TO:

Les Presses de l'Ecole des Hautes Etudes Commerciales
5255 Avenue Decelles (bureau 4010)
Montréal 250, Canada

J.H. HEXTER

A DISTINGUISHED SCHOLAR ANALYSES
16th CENTURY THINKING ABOUT POLITICS
AND 20th CENTURY THINKING ABOUT HISTORY.

THE VISION OF POLITICS ON THE EVE OF THE REFORMATION

More, Machiavelli, Seyssel

In these penetrating studies, Professor Hexter seeks to capture the perception of politics of three extraordinarily acute thinkers of early sixteenth-century Europe. He applies an exhaustive contextual analysis to the utopian vision of Thomas More (in Utopia), the predatory vision of Niccolo Machiavelli (in The Prince), and the constitutional vision of Claude de Seyssel (in The Monarchy of France). Their diverse views — elucidated by Professor Hexter with clarity and impeccable scholarship — provide a major contribution to our understanding of the antecedents of modern political thought.

November $8.50

THE HISTORY PRIMER

"A genuine tour de force; more than just a guide for the beginner. . . . A spirited vindication of history for what it is, a humane inquiry into the human past, as well as an equally vigorous attack upon those who would make history what it is not, namely a science. . . . Historians, Hexter believes, must confront their readers with the realization that human situations involve more than just a series of problems to be solved or 'explained'. . . . [A] tightly argued . . . frequently witty book . . . I would . . . especially recommend [it] to all those involved in the teaching of history, either in colleges or secondary schools."—F. X. J. Homer, Ph.D.

$10.00

BASIC BOOKS, INC. 10 East 53rd St., New York 10022

---

NEW FROM BASIC BOOKS

THE FASCIST EXPERIENCE

Italian Society and Culture, 1922-1945

by EDWARD R. TANNENBAUM. There have been many political studies of Italian Fascism, but little examination of its social context. Here, Professor Tannenbaum rediscovers the perspective of the Italians who actually experienced it as an anti-Communist movement of national social renewal. Based on hundreds of interviews with people of all classes, this highly original book offers a convincing picture of how the Italians experienced Fascism. $12.50

IMMIGRANT WORKERS

Their Impact on American Labor Radicalism

by GERALD ROSENBLUM. Why is the American labor movement substantially more conservative than its counterparts in other Western societies? The answer, writes Professor Rosenblum, lies in the large numbers of foreign-born laborers who arrived at the same time the country began large-scale modernization. These immigrants, isolated in their ethnic ghettos, were content to seek gains from their working environment. January/$8.95

THE NAMES OF KINGS

The Parisian Laboring Poor in the Eighteenth Century

by JEFFRY KAPLOW. Professor Kaplow's intriguing study tells how and why the relatively passive working poor developed the political consciousness that led them to participate in the essentially bourgeois French Revolution. Painting a broad and richly detailed panorama of the daily life of the Parisian working class—their religiosity, ideals, and customs—he describes the awakening that marked the beginnings of significant social change in the West. January/$7.95

TO SAVE A NATION

American Counter-Subversives, the New Deal, and the Coming of World War II

by GEOFFREY S. SMITH. This cogently argued analysis has special significance for an American public currently preoccupied with the limits of dissent and the civil rights of dissidents. Looking back to the days before World War II, Professor Smith shows how the fascist ideologies of Father Coughlin, Bund-leader Fritz Kuhn, and others created serious problems for respectable isolationists—and provided the Roosevelt administration with evidence to stimulate national anxieties that frightened the U.S. into war. February/$10.00

BASIC BOOKS, INC.

10 East 53rd St., N. Y., N. Y. 10022

---

Available for second semester —
AMERICA SINCE 1945

edited by Robert D. Marcus and David Burner
State University of New York at Stony Brook

"I am much impressed with the coverage and emphases. The book meets a genuine need and, in my opinion, is without peer on today's market."

—Harold Dean Cater, Hillsdale College

"I like the blend of primary and secondary materials, the contemporaneity of the interpretative articles, and the orchestration of foreign policy, politics, and the social milieu—all in a crisp little volume that could be easily integrated into the American history survey or a course in 20th Century America."

—Stuart Rochester, Loyola College

"Provides a perspective on recent history that is not found elsewhere in such a compact manner."

—Lawrence R. Goebel, Rider College

"A stimulating set of selections and penetrating analysis of developments since the end of World War II."

—David Lindsey, California State University, Los Angeles

"An excellent selection with helpful commentary."

—Stacy Cole, Ohlone College

"A judiciously chosen group of readings."

—Mark T. Gilderhus, Colorado State University

CONTENTS

Part I, 1945-1952. Russia and the Cold War, Averell Harriman; The Cold War: A Revisionist View, David Horowitz; To Secure These Rights, The President's Committee on Civil Rights, 1947; Truman and Domestic Politics: The Election of 1948, Richard Kirkendall; Truman and Foreign Policy: The Korean War, Walter LaFeber

Part II, 1952-1959. Nixon Agonistes: The Checkers Speech, Garry Wills; The Army-McCarthy Hearings; The Underestimation of Dwight D. Eisenhower, Murray Kempton; Eisenhower Revisited—A Political Genius? A Brilliant Man? Richard H. Rovere; The Feminine Mystique, Betty Friedan; The Texture of Poverty, Michael Harrington

Part III, The 1960's. Kennedy: A Cold Warrior, David Burner; The Port Huron Statement, Students for a Democratic Society; Building the Great Society: The Case of Equal Rights, James Sundquist; Lyndon Johnson and Vietnam: 1968, Townsend Hoopes; One Morning in the War, Richard Hammer; Violence in Chicago, 1968: The Walker Report; Youth as a Stage of Life, Kenneth Keniston
Published, 1972 228 pages $3.50

If you would like to consider America Since 1945 for class adoption, please write for a complimentary examination copy to Robert Caldwell,

ST. MARTIN'S PRESS, College Department
175 Fifth Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10010

Forthcoming paperbacks

SOCIALISM SINCE MARX:

A Century of the European Left

Leslie Derfler

Florida Atlantic University

Socialism Since Marx is an examination of the activities of the European left during the last one hundred years. Professor Derfler has chosen to emphasize the history of socialist movements rather than the history of socialist thought because he feels that what the European left has done is at least as important as what it has said. Using a comparative and topical approach, he explores the ways in which the development and activities of the various European socialist movements were similar and identifies and explains their dissimilarities, which often resulted from their differing milieus.

C O N T E N T S

The Preconditions; The Rise of Social Democracy; The Return to Revolution; Socialism and Nationalism; Socialism and Communism; Socialism and Fascism; Contemporary Socialism

February, 1973 about 224 pages paperbound, $3.95 (probable)

THE RENAISSANCE IN PERSPECTIVE

Philip L. Ralph

The Renaissance in Perspective is designed to give students an understanding and appreciation of the essential character of the Renaissance and of its place in the Western historical experience. Dr. Ralph does not attempt to examine all the political intricacies of the Renaissance or catalogue innumerable names and events. Instead, he offers a concise survey of the political developments of the period as background for his more extended examination of Renaissance society, thought, and creative activity. Though necessarily treating Italy most fully, he also considers Renaissance developments in Northern Europe.

December, 1972 about 224 pages paperbound, $2.95 (probable)

ST. MARTIN'S PRESS, College Department
175 Fifth Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10010

1973 History texts

American History

AN INTERPRETIVE HISTORY OF AMERICAN FOREIGN RELATIONS, *Revised Edition

WAYNE S. COLE, University of Maryland

Retains the distinctive characteristics of the first edition while including developments in American foreign relations from 1968 through the Presidential election of 1972. Paperback

EXPLORATION IN HISTORICAL STUDIES:

A Strategy for Grounded Inquiry

GENE WISE, Western Reserve University

Case studies analyze the behavior of the Progressive historical form through the writings of Frederick Jackson Turner, Vernon Louis Parrington, Lionel Trilling, Reinhold Niebuhr, R. W. B. Lewis, and Perry Miller. Paperback

★ DORSEY ★

European History

THE MEDIEVAL WEST, 400-1450:

A Preindustrial Civilization

DAVID NICHOLAS, University of Nebraska

A basic survey of Western medieval history, political, institutional, and particularly social and economic conditions.

Paperback

A HISTORY OF EUROPE IN THE TWENTIETH CENTURY

DAVID E. SUMLER, University of Illinois

Based on the latest research, this text is a reflective history of twentieth century Europe emphasizing questions of historical controversy and issues relevant to contemporary politics and society. Paperback

Write for examination copies for college adoption

THE DORSEY PRESS Homewood, Illinois 60430

MACMILLAN'S NEW HISTORY TEXTS

RENAISSANCE EUROPE: 1300-1517

By Ernst Breisach, Western Michigan University
1973, approx. 512 pages, prob. $10.95

THE REFORMATION ERA: 1500-1650

Second Edition

By Harold J. Grimm, The Ohio State University
1973, approx. 700 pages, prob. $9.95

RACISM IN CALIFORNIA: A Reader in the History of Oppression

Edited by Roger Daniels, State University of New York at Fredonia, and Spencer C. Olin, Jr., University of California, Irvine
1972, 345 pages, paper, $3.95

SOURCE PROBLEMS IN AMERICAN HISTORY

Edited by Armin Rappaport, University of California, San Diego, and Richard Traina, Wabash College
1972, 492 pages, paper, $5.25

THE WHITE RESPONSE TO BLACK EMANCIPATION: Second-Class Citizenship in the United States Since Reconstruction

By Sig Synnestvedt, State University of New York at Brockport
1972, 248 pages, paper, $3.95

For further information write to:

THE MACMILLAN COMPANY
Department C

Riverside, New Jersey 08075

In Canada, write to Collier-Macmillan Canada, Ltd.,
1125B Leslie Street, Don Mills, Ontario

MACMILLAN'S OTHER TEXTS

NEITHER BLACK NOR WHITE: Slavery and Race Relations in Brazil and the United States

By Carl N. Degler, Stanford University
1971, approx. 302 pages, cloth, $6.95, paper, $2.95

MODERN CHINA: An Interpretive Anthology

Edited by the late Joseph R. Levenson, University of California, Berkeley
1971, approx. 236 pages, paper, $3.95

MODERN INDIA: An Interpretive Anthology

Edited by Thomas R. Metcalf, University of California, Berkeley
1971, approx. 320 pages, paper, $3.95

EUROPE IN THE NINETEENTH CENTURY: A History

By Brison D. Gooch, University of Connecticut
1970, 540 pages, $9.95

REVOLUTION: A Reader

Edited by Bruce Mazlish, Arthur D. Kaledin, and David B. Ralston, all, Massachusetts Institute of Technology
1971, approx. 533 pages, paper, $5.95

THE AMERICAN PAST: Conflicting Interpretations of the Great Issues

Third Edition

Edited by Sidney Fine and Gerald S. Brown, both, The University of Michigan
Volume I: 1970, 652 pages, paper, $5.50
Volume II: 1970, 594 pages, paper, $5.50

FOR YOUR HISTORY COURSES

INTERPRETING AMERICAN HISTORY:

Conversations with Historians

Edited by John A. Garraty, Columbia University

Volume I: 1970, 367 pages, paper, $4.95

Volume II: 1970, 334 pages, paper, $4.95

PERSPECTIVES ON THE EUROPEAN PAST:

Conversations with Historians

Edited by Norman F. Cantor, State University of New York at Binghamton

Volume I: 1971, approx. 359 pages, paper, $4.95

Volume II: 1971, approx. 362 pages, paper, $4.95

THE EUROPEAN PAST

Second Edition

Edited by Shepard B. Clough, Columbia University; Charles Warner,
University of Kansas; Peter Gay, Yale University; and John M. Cammett,
The City University of New York

Volume I: Reappraisals in History from the Renaissance Through Waterloo

Volume II: Reappraisals in History Since Waterloo

Volume I: 1970, 438 pages, paper, $4.95

Volume II: 1970, 481 pages, paper, $4.95

THE WORLD SINCE 1919

Eighth Edition

By Walter Consuelo Langsam and Otis C. Mitchell, both, University of Cincinnati
1971, 743 pages, $10.95

For further information write to:

THE MACMILLAN COMPANY

Department C

Riverside, New Jersey 08075

In Canada, write to Collier-Macmillan Canada, Ltd.,
1125B Leslie Street, Don Mills, Ontario

Oxford University Press

American Urban History

An Interpretive Reader with Commentaries

Second Edition

Edited by ALEXANDER B. CALLOW, Jr., University of California, Santa Barbara. Including eighteen interpretive essays new to the second edition, this volume illuminates critical periods and problems in American urban history from the colonial era to the present.

Spring 1973

675 pp.

prob. $5.95

American Negro Slavery

A Modern Reader

Second Edition

Edited by ALLEN WEINSTEIN, Smith College, and FRANK OTTO GATELL, University of California, Los Angeles. Since the publication of the first edition of this popular book, the debate over slavery has continued. The second edition includes the best of the new essays on slavery and reflects the recent emphasis on the social history of the slave.

Spring 1973

375 pp.

cloth $7.50 paper $2.95

American Vistas

Volume I: 1607-1877 Volume II: 1877-to the Present

Edited by LEONARD DINNERSTEIN, University of Arizona, and KENNETH T. JACKSON, Columbia University. "These two anthologies provide an excellent collection. . . . The selections vividly reveal the historical basis of social concerns of significant American writers, and enable students to understand that literature is inextricably wedded to its social context."—CURTIS W. ELLISON, Miami University, Ohio

1971

Vol. I, 224 pp.

Vol. II, 304 pp.

paper, each $2.25

The Growth of American Politics

A Modern Reader

Volume I: Through Reconstruction Volume II: Since the Civil War

Edited by FRANK OTTO GATELL; PAUL GOODMAN, University of California, Davis; and ALLEN WEINSTEIN. "By far the best collection of essays on the history of American political behavior in existence."—Peyton McCrary, University of Minnesota. A one-volume abridged edition, Readings in American Political History, featuring twenty-three essays, is also available. (1972, 544 pp., paper $3.95)

1972

Vol. I, 528 pp.

Vol. II, 544 pp.

cloth, $12.50 each paper, $3.95 each

The Growth of the American Republic

Sixth Edition

By SAMUEL ELIOT MORISON, HENRY STEELE COMMAGER, and WILLIAM E. LEUCHTENBURG. "The most stimulating and comprehensive text available today."—SAMUEL F. WELLS, JR., University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill. "The latest edition seems extensively revised and includes considerable material on minority groups in historical perspective. . . ."—ABRAHAM HOFFMAN, University of Oklahoma

1969

Vol. I, 1002 pp.

Vol. II, 993 pp.

text edition $9.95 each trade edition, boxed set $35.00

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS

200 Madison Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10016

Oxford University Press

A World History

Second Edition

By WILLIAM H. McNEILL, University of Chicago. "Exceptionally fine job with a view toward students' current interest in Asia and Africa within McNeill's historical framework. Splendid achievement."—WALTER J. KELLY, Chicago State University
1971 560 pp. cloth $15.00 paper $5.95

Readings in World History

Edited by WILLIAM H. McNEILL and others. These ten paperbound volumes illustrate key points in the history of the world: 1. The Origins of Civilization (1968, $1.50) 2. The Ancient Near East (1968, $1.50) 3. The Classical Mediterranean World (1969, $1.75) 4. Classical India (1969, $1.50) 5. Classical China (1970, $1.95) 6. The Islamic World (1972, $1.95) 7. China, India, and Japan: The Middle Period (1971, $2.50) 8. Medieval Europe (1971, $1.95) 9. Modern Asia and Africa (1971, $2.50) 10. Modern Europe and America (1973, $1.95)

Early Man

By CHESTER G. STARR, University of Michigan. Early Man explores the earliest stages of human history through the Persian Empire. Approximately ninety photographs, maps, and charts, as well as a bibliography, are included.
Spring 1973 175 pp. illus. cloth $8.95 paper $3.50

The Ancient Greeks

By CHESTER G. STARR. "The book is most informative, accurate and is attractive to the non-specialist. The illustrations are beautiful! It will be valuable as a supplement in a history course."—Ruth Pavlantos, Gettysburg College
1971 280 pp. photographs; maps; charts cloth $8.95 paper $3.50

The Ancient Romans

By CHESTER G. STARR. "[Starr] has achieved lucidity without excessive oversimplification. The problem confronting an ancient historian and the tentativeness of conclusions are emphasized—a feature uncommon in introductory books. As an initial exposure to Roman history for younger students this volume has few peers."—Erich S. Gruen, American Historical Review
1971 264 pp. illus. cloth $8.95 paper $3.50

The Crusades

By HANS EBERHARDT MAYER, University of Kiel; translated by JOHN GILLINGHAM, London School of Economics and Political Science. Dr. Mayer combines a narrative account of the Crusades with analysis of their cultural and political background and discussion of controversial issues. He questions some previously accepted interpretations and presents a new treatment of such topics as the problem of Indulgence.
1972 256 pp. 3 maps cloth $10.25 paper $3.95

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS
200 Madison Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10016

Oxford University Press

The Prophet Harris

By GORDON M. HALIBURTON, University of Botswana, Lesotho, and Swaziland. William Wade Harris, an itinerant preacher on the West Coast of Africa, effected massive conversions to Christianity, changing the course of colonialism in West Africa. From research and interviews, the author has drawn a compelling picture of this extraordinary man.

Spring 1973      175 pp.      20 illus.      cloth $6.75    paper $1.95

The Sword of Truth

The Life and Times of the Shehu Usuman dan Fodio

By MERVYN HISKETT. At the center of a revolutionary movement in Hausaland in the early nineteenth century was a Moslem divine and literary figure, the Shehu Usuman dan Fodio, whose fight to reform Islam led to the establishment of the Hausa theocratic state. The author has drawn from primary sources to bring to light this crucial figure in West African history.

February 1973      175 pp.      maps; photographs    cloth $6.50    paper $2.25

Segregated Sabbaths

Richard Allen and the Rise of Independent Black Churches, 1760-1840

By CAROL V. R. GEORGE, State University of New York, Oswego. Richard Allen was an early nineteenth century Black churchman who served as the organizer and first Bishop of the African Methodist Episcopal Church. He also called the first meeting of the National Negro Convention Movement, a group which continued to function as a meeting place for Black abolitionists and community leaders. Both Allen's ideological commitment and his socio-political involvement make him an important historical figure.

May 1973      225 pp.      cloth $7.50    paper $2.25

From Slavery to Public Service

Robert Smalls 1839-1915

By OKON EDET UYA, University of Wisconsin.

1971      187 pp.      cloth $6.00    paper $1.95

The Rise of Modern China

By IMMANUEL C. Y. HSÜ, University of California, Santa Barbara.

1970      848 pp.      44 illus.      14 maps trade edition $14.50    text edition $9.95

Readings in Modern Chinese History

Edited by IMMANUEL C. Y. HSÜ.

1971      720 pp.      paper $7.50

The Growth and Culture of Latin America

Second Edition

Vol. I: From Conquest to Independence

Vol. II: The Continuing Struggle for Independence

By DONALD E. WORCESTER and WENDELL G. SCHAEFFER, both of Texas Christian University.

Volume I 1970      528 pp.      paper $4.95

Volume II 1971      640 pp.      paper $5.50

One-volume edition 1971      1,172 pp.      cloth $20.00

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS

200 Madison Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10016

Oxford University Press

Victor Emanuel, Cavour, and the Risorgimento

By DENIS MACK SMITH. "To reject an orthodoxy and establish a new interpretation, as Mr. Mack Smith has done, is indubitably the mark of an outstanding and truly creative historian. He has made himself the master of a field. Whatever he has learnt from others, it is due to him that a traditional view of the Risorgimento must now be banished from teaching."—Times Literary Supplement. 4 illus., 4 maps. $22.50

Aymer de Valence, Earl of Pembroke 1307-1324

Baronial Politics in the Reign of Edward II

By J. R. S. PHILLIPS. The accepted interpretations of the reign of Edward II are examined, based on existing evidence and material not previously available. The period is approached through the career of one of the most prominent magnates, and the traditional belief that the leading magnates formed a consistent baronial opposition to the monarchy is proven invalid. 11 figures, 3 maps. $22.00

Ptolemaic Alexandria

Volume I: Text; Volume II: Notes; Volume III: Indexes

By P. M. FRASER. The achievements of Alexandrian civilization in science, learning, and literature are examined in relation to its social background—its topography, civic organizations, constitutional history, commerce, and religious cults. The notes contain references and quotations from ancient sources, literary, documentary and archaeological, together with some interpretive material. Map, 3 plates. In three volumes, $85.00

The Tio Kingdom of the Middle Congo 1880-1892

By JAN VANSINA, University of Wisconsin. Based on intensive field research and a detailed study of rich documentary sources, this volume reconstructs and analyzes the political and economic organization of the Tio kingdom at the end of the nineteenth century. 17 maps; 7 figs; 4 plates. $25.25

Chronology of African History

By G. S. P. FREEMAN-GRENVILLE, State University of New York, New Paltz. This comprehensive chronology gives, in tabular form, the known or approximate date of every important event in African history between c. 1000 B.C. and 1871. It enables the reader to see at a glance the course of events in different regions of Africa as well as the main events in the rest of the world. Prob. $17.00

The Emin Pasha Relief Expedition 1886-1890

By IAIN R. SMITH. The Emin Pasha Relief Expedition is probably the best-documented expedition that ever went through Africa in the nineteenth century. This book gives an account of the expedition, utilizing the varied and extensive documentary evidence which approaches the expedition from many points of view. 6 plates, 3 maps. (Oxford Studies in African Affairs). $22.00

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS
200 Madison Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10016

A. L. Rowse
THE ELIZABETHAN RENAISSANCE
The Life of the Society

"There are few scholars who know the intriguing and complicated life of Renaissance England so well, and few historians of any period who can make the people of the past come so vividly to life. Beneath every paragraph there is a solid basis of learning; and yet Dr. Rowse is such a lively and witty writer that one absorbs the results of his learning with ease and pleasure. This is social history at its finest."

—Gilbert Highet

"So tightly packed with fascinating facts and fresh material that anyone at all seriously interested in Elizabethan England should delight in it."

—Orville Prescott

"In nine crisply written chapters covering the Renaissance impulse, court, town, class, food, sex, sport, custom and mentality, Rowse illuminates the Elizabethan cultural and spiritual expansion. . . . Its appearance whets the appetite for the concluding volume, The Cultural Achievement."

—Choice $12.50

Just published
A. L. Rowse
THE ELIZABETHAN RENAISSANCE
The Cultural Achievement

The summation of his lifelong study of Elizabethan literature, art and thought. $12.50

A. L. Rowse
THE EXPANSION OF
ELIZABETHAN ENGLAND

A description of the Elizabethan's worldwide voyages.

Lyceum Ed. $3.95 paper

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS
 597 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK, NEW YORK 10017

S. L. A. Marshall

CRIMSONED PRAIRIE

This history of the Indian wars on the Great Plains is the first to provide a thorough analysis of military tactics. From visits to the sites of principal battlefields and from the often conflicting battle reports, General Marshall provides an account of what probably actually happened, comparing military problems with those faced by the army today in Vietnam. $8.95

Geoffrey Bennett

NELSON THE COMMANDER

A major biography by a professional naval officer gives a unique picture of Nelson's place in the Napoleonic Wars and his influence on subsequent naval history. Based on a wealth of documents and eye-witness accounts, the book describes and analyzes Nelson's many triumphs and sets them against his failures. $12.00

Ellis Rivkin

THE SHAPING OF JEWISH HISTORY

A Radical New Interpretation

"Rivkin's challenging study abounds in striking insights."

—Robert Gordis, New York Times Book Review

"Not only illuminates Jewish history but the entire sweep of Western civilization."

—Robert Kirsch, Los Angeles Times

$7.95

Michael Grant

ROMAN MYTHS

A survey of the myths that underlay Roman culture and served political ends. $10.00

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS

597 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK, NEW YORK 10017

Elizabeth Burton

THE PAGEANT OF EARLY VICTORIAN ENGLAND

"An engaging affirmation of Victorian fashions and lifestyles . . . the day-to-day life of the gentlefolk . . . the author's leisurely, attentiveness . . . evokes the gas-lit streets, the hansom cabs and the enormous optimism and vitality of the epic with considerably authenticity."—The Kirkus Reviews $7.95

Milton Waldman

THE LADY MARY

A sensitive historical portrait of Mary Tudor presents in detail her many-sided preparation as heir-presumptive to the crown and the five years of her reign. $7.95

New Scribner Library paperbacks

David Green

QUEEN ANNE

The definitive biography.

$2.95

Dee Brown

THE YEAR OF THE CENTURY

Account of the 100th anniversary celebration of the United States.

$3.95

Corinne Jacker

THE BLACK FLAG OF ANARCHY

History of anti-statism in the U.S.

$2.65

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS

597 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK, NEW YORK 10017

Edwyn Gray

THE KILLING TIME

The U-Boat War 1914-1918

An account of the Kaiser's attempt to destroy the British Empire by Submarine warfare. $7.95

Edwyn Gray

THE UNDERWATER WAR

Submarines, 1914-1918

Story of the British Submarine Service in World War I. $6.95

Ian Fellowes-Gordon

THE MAGIC WAR

The Battle for North Burma

Story of the campaign to recapture Northern Burma from the Japanese during World War II. $6.95

John Strawson

THE BATTLE FOR THE ARDENNES

An account of Hitler's last desperate gamble in 1944. $8.95

H. Essame

THE BATTLE FOR EUROPE 1918

The last year of World War I described in human as well as strategic terms. $10.00

Eloise Engle & Lauri A. Paananen

THE WINTER WAR

The Russo-Finnish Conflict, 1939-1940

The Finnish people's defense of their country in a war that influenced the course of World War II. $8.95

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS

597 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK, NEW YORK 10017

Two New Pamphlet Series

AMERICAN HISTORICAL ASSOCIATION

AHA PAMPHLETS-narrative and critical essays, including bibliographical guides, on topics in history

- 101 The American Frontier Thesis: Attack and Defense by Ray Allen Billington
- 212 The Progressive Era, 1900-20: The Reform Persuasion by George E. Mowry
- 222 Far Western Frontiers by Harvey L. Carter
- 240 The Indian in American History by William T. Hagan
- 241 The Peopling of America: Perspectives on Immigration by Franklin D. Scott
- 403 The Reformation by Harold J. Grimm
- 427 Russia since 1917: The Once and Future Utopia by George Barr Carson, Jr.

DISCUSSIONS ON TEACHING-essays on approaches to history in the classroom

- 1 Elements of Historical Thinking by Paul L. Ward

These titles available September 1, 1972; price $1.00 each

The American Historical Association
Pamphlet Orders B
400 A Street, SE
Washington, D.C. 20003

PLEASE SEND TO:

NAME (PLEASE PRINT) _____

ADDRESS _____

_____
ZIP CODE _____

I enclose $ _____ (check or money order; no stamps please) in payment for the _____ pamphlets indicated below:

AHA PAMPHLETS 101___ 212___ 222___ 240___ 241___ 403___ 427___

DISCUSSIONS ON TEACHING 1___

(PREPAYMENT MUST ACCOMPANY ORDER)

"A joy to read... Suddenly we find ourselves getting a fresh understanding of the men and events involved"

—from the Foreword by Bruce Catton

Voices of 1776

BY RICHARD WHEELER

Foreword by Bruce Catton 24 illustrations $10.00

Voices of 1776 is an eye witness history of the American War for Independence. From the words of those who were there, Richard Wheeler has created a vibrant retelling of one of history's greatest narratives.

George Washington and Gentleman Johnny Burgoyne, Ethan Allen and

Benedict Arnold, John André and John Paul Jones—all are here, famous and infamous, along with the men in the ranks who fought to make America free. Mr. Wheeler's own passages link the quotations together into a narrative that has both the sweep of an epic and the immediacy of a personal journal.

"This collection of presidential portraits is a dignified and worthy tribute to the lofty office upon which they focus."

—from the Introduction by Henry F. Graff

Profiles & Portraits of American Presidents & Their Wives By Margaret Bassett

With an Introduction on the Presidency by Henry F. Graff, Chairman, Department of History, Columbia University

From George and Martha Washington to Richard and Pat Nixon, a richly detailed biographical history of the Presidency told through their private lives and those of their wives. Margaret Bassett has based her revealing study on the published memoirs that emerged from each administration as well as on unpublished historical documents and contemporary newspapers and magazines.

$10.00

 THOMAS Y. CROWELL COMPANY

666 Fifth Avenue, New York, New York 10019

---

JUST OUT FROM FORTRESS PRESS

---

IMPERIAL CITIES AND THE REFORMATION

Three Essays by Bernd Moeller

The Reformation and its progress through Europe are seen here in a new and dynamic way. Bernd Moeller does not treat the Reformation as an isolated phenomenon, but places it firmly in the context of political and social history. He illustrates how various groups of humanists fostered or retarded this movement, and why certain imperial cities were drawn to Luther's reforms over those of Zwingli and Bucer.

Appearing for the first time in English, these essays make available Moeller's innovative approach and sound scholarship. Students of urban history, sociology, political science, and church history will find this volume both intriguing and invaluable. $3.25

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY IN THE UNITED STATES

The Development of Church-State Thought since the Revolutionary Era

by Elwyn A. Smith

Church-state relations in America have never before been surveyed from the viewpoint of religious liberty. Elwyn Smith fills this gap and sharpens our understanding of such issues as religious tolerance, church taxation, and state aid to parochial schools. The author delves into three major traditions in American church-state thought: the separatist sects in colonial days, the Catholic bid for recognition in the 1800's, and recent resorting to legal solutions for church-state questions.

This milestone in American studies illuminates the entire background of religious liberty while raising poignant questions about future interaction of religion and civil authority. Many streams of American life are brought together, giving the book equal value for lawyers, political scientists, and historians. $10.95

DIVINE HUMANNESS

Towards an empirical theology in the light of the controversy between Luther and Erasmus

by Aarne Siirala

"Divine Humanness is an original and brilliant interpretation of Luther . . . One must hope that his book will be read not only by theologians but also by thinkers in the social sciences."

Gregory Baum, O.S.A.
St. Michael's College, Toronto
Dr. Siirala vitalizes theology by introducing to it insights from the sciences and humanities, and from such men as Marx, Freud, Polanyi, and Wittgenstein. Building on Luther's thought, the author calls theology from a static revelation or church-centeredness to a dynamic life-centeredness. Historians, theologians, and social scientists will be startled and intrigued by Siirala's creative application of the most up-to-date thinking on the nature of man and of historical research to today's crises. $6.50

At all bookstores

Fortress Press

2900 Queen Lane
Philadelphia, Pennsylvania 19129

It is apparent that the ## Economic History

of any nation, is a directive force upon the total history of that country and indeed of the world. Social history, political history and even population statistics are intimately tied to the economy.

Today, we are especially aware of the inter-relationship as we look at the place of the United States in the world economy and at the effect of the economic health of any one nation upon the entire world. The ever enlarging circle of influence caused by isolated economic events is impressive when one regards the overall picture.

Write for our two new catalogs which present a collection of economic periodicals and serials that provide the necessary perspective for that picture, the comprehensive study of economics and of the world history.

Kraus Reprint Co.

Marketing Department
Millwood, New York 10546

IL VIAGGIO VIVACE

A HUMANITIES STUDYTOUR Summer 1973

A cultural tour of Italy from June 28 to July 27. This unusual Studytour will be personally led by Dr. David Stone, Dean, College of Music, Temple University, and has been arranged for those interested in Italian music, art and culture. From Sicily to Como, the emphasis is on the out-of-the-way and the unusual with musical events ranging from opera to local music and dancing. Four (4) credits, or audit. From Philadelphia approximately $1,700.00.

This Studytour affords opportunities for academic and professional growth within the framework of an exciting and stimulating travel experience. The program offers comprehensive sightseeing and evening entertainment throughout. All prices quoted based on existing tariffs as of Oct. 1 and subject to change.

For Humanities Studytour Brochure Write: Director of Summer Sessions, Temple University, Phila., PA 19122.

TEMPLE UNIVERSITY

of the Commonwealth System of Higher Education

original source materials

the motives
the labors
the impact of our forebears

Britannica brings history home.

The voices of America talk straight to your students. Living experiences from diaries, letters, speeches, songs, and poems make American history personal, thus involving, for any student.

The Annals of America — 1100 authors dramatize American life, action, and thought from 1493. 18 well-illustrated volumes, plus 2-volume Conspectus and an Index, are superb as supplementary text or as reference resource.

Through Makers of America, 85 separate ethnic, religious, and national minorities that make the U.S. their home voice their American experience. In 10 volumes, over 700 selections make clear our ethnic pluralism.

In The Negro in American History, the men who made black history bring their times and actions alive. Beginning with 1567, the 195 original selections in these three volumes bring special insight to our racial present and future.

Voices to make a point are in the Fascicles, 32-page paperbacks drawn from The Annals of America. Each student can have original material about a period, topic, or theme.

In one volume, Selected Readings on Great Issues in American History traces the flow of American events and issues through original materials. Selected Readings is thought-provoking as a basic or supplemental text.

EBE ENCYCLOPAEDIA BRITANNICA EDUCATIONAL CORPORATION

Reference Division • Dept. AH • 425 N. Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Ill. 60611

Please send me detailed information on:

☐ The Annals of America

☐ Makers of America

☐ The Negro in American History

☐ Fascicles

☐ Selected Readings on Great Issues in American History

Name (PLEASE PRINT)

School

School Address

City State Zip

AH

Harbrace History of England

CHARLES GRAY, JOHN L. C. HARRISON

J. R. LANDER, and PETER STANSKY

Written by four eminent scholars in British history, the Harbrace History of England takes the student from the beginnings of English history to the present. The authors follow a largely interpretative approach: while adhering to a traditional chronological framework, they focus on important topics and problems in order to give the student a better understanding of man and his society. They treat major social, economic, and cultural developments as well as political affairs, and provide realistic descriptions of social and governmental institutions, including evaluations of both their strengths and their weaknesses.

704 pages (probable) Publication: Spring 1973

A Brief History of Western Man

Second Edition

THOMAS H. GREER

A clear, concise view of the most significant and relevant experiences of Western man, this highly successful textbook focuses on the major events, institutions, ideas, and creative works that have shaped and expressed our civilization. In preparing the Second Edition, Professor Greer carefully revised the text in the light of the latest scholarly findings and rewrote his material, where necessary, for greater clarity and precision. In addition, he added important new sections to the final chapter, reflecting the rapid pace of change in the modern world.

Completely redesigned and reset for this edition, the book contains 40 time lines to help strengthen the student's sense of chronology, and an illustration program of 70 halftones and 20 maps. Paperbound. 546 pages $5.95

The European Experience Since 1815

PETER N. STEARNS

A stimulating, incisive analysis of modern European history, this book surveys major developments from the Congress of Vienna to the present. Professor Stearns takes as his theme the modernization of Europe; he defines what the people of Europe have been and what they have become, giving special emphasis to social and intellectual history and the evolution of popular culture. His approach is largely supranational, stressing comparative history rather than giving a nation-by-nation summary. The book is illustrated with approximately 50 maps, photographs, and cartoons; there are suggestions for further reading at the end of each chapter and chronological tables at the back of the book.

Paperbound. 476 pages. $5.95

The Other Side of Western Civilization

READINGS IN EVERYDAY LIFE

Volume I edited by STANLEY CHODOROW

Volume II edited by PETER N. STEARNS

This two-volume collection of readings offers important insights on a number of vital but often neglected aspects of the history of Western civilization. The readings, drawn from both primary and secondary sources, focus on the tangible character of everyday life; they discuss such significant topics as urban life, rural and peasant life, the role of women, the treatment of minorities, sports, crime and deviance, and education. The editors have provided introductions and annotated bibliographies for each part, headnotes for the selections, and a general introduction for each volume.

Volume I: Paperbound. 352 pages (probable)

Volume II: Paperbound. 416 pages (probable)

Publication: January 1973

The Mainstream of Civilization

JOSEPH R. STRAYER, HANS W. GATZKE,

E. HARRIS HARBISON, and EDWIN L. DUNBAUGH

This concise yet thorough introduction to the history of the Western world has won high praise for its clear exposition, authoritative scholarship, and comprehensive coverage. With an extensive program of maps, photographs, and time lines; boxed quotations from contemporary sources; and annotated lists of suggestions for further reading. Instructor's Manual with Tests available. 870 pages. $11.50

Also available in a two volume, paperback format:

Part One: TO 1715

552 pages. $6.25

Part Two: SINCE 1660

472 pages. $6.25

Western Civilization Since 1500

JOSEPH R. STRAYER, HANS W. GATZKE,

E. HARRIS HARBISON, and EDWIN L. DUNBAUGH

Chapters 16 through 34 of The Mainstream of Civilization, with a new Prologue that summarizes the major developments before 1500 and a revised Epilogue that carries the narrative through 1970. 558 pages. $8.95

HARCOURT BRACE JOVANOVIICH, INC.

New York/Chicago/San Francisco/Atlanta

IMPORTANT HISTORY BOOKS FROM PRAEGER

---

THE LONG MARCH TO POWER A History of the Chinese Communist Party, 1921-72

James Pinckney Harrison

Using Chinese, Soviet, and Western sources, Harrison traces the history of the Chinese Communist Party from the first appearance of Marxists in China to the present. He analyzes the influence of the Soviet Party, relations between Party and army in China, and the long Chinese Communist struggle to win power and rule their country.

Praeger Library of Chinese Affairs
669 pp., 8 pp. illus., bibliog., index
LC 77-168338 $18.50 cloth/$6.95 paper

THE CHINESE HIGH COMMAND A History of Communist Military Politics, 1927-71

William W. Whitson, with Chen-hsia Huang

In this pioneering work, Whitson traces the evolution of a complex balance-of-power system among regional military forces, examines the impact of functional specializations and different generations on political-military relations, and suggests the character of China's leadership after Mao.

Praeger Library of Chinese Affairs
512 pp., maps, charts, bibliog., index
LC 73-121851 $20.00

THE MONGOLS IN HISTORY

Bertold Spuler

Tells the full story of the evolution of the Mongols from primitive, nomadic tribes to rulers of the Eastern world—and of their ultimate decline to a satellite of Soviet Russia. The author unfolds all the fascinating political, cultural, ethnic, religious, and military facts while exploding many widely held myths.

176 pp., end-paper map, LC 70-154351
$8.50

THE CRUSADERS' KINGDOM

Joshua Prawer

Arguing that the kingdom of the Crusaders is not only the first European colonial society but also the beginning of continuing expansionism, the author gives us the first full-length study of what a twelfth and thirteenth century colony looked like. He covers all aspects in showing exactly how it developed and functioned.

553 pp., bibliog., index, LC 72-77069
$18.50

FRANCE IN THE TWENTIETH CENTURY

Philip Ouston

An incisive, comprehensive view of France—describing the roles of agriculture, industry, commerce, religion, class structure, technological progress, the origins and operation of France's Republican Constitution, civil administration, education, traditions, and much more.

288 pp., 15 line drawings, LC 72-76972
$10.00

EUROPE IN THE TWENTIETH CENTURY

George Lichtheim

One of the major scholarly works of the decade—a crisp, lucidly written analysis of major currents in European life since 1900. Covers the wars, economic cycles, social and political upheavals, problems facing the "New Europe," and everything else needed for a solid overview of the dynamic continent. "An interpretive history of ideas, a dazzling intellectual fireworks display."—Library Journal

424 pp., 32 illus. (6 maps), bibliog., index
LC 70-187278 $12.95

praeger

111 Fourth Avenue, New York, New York 10003

FAIRBANK REISCHAUER CRAIG

EAST ASIA: TRADITION AND TRANSFORMATION

Announcing a new one-volume introduction to the history of East Asia by China expert John K. Fairbank; former United States Ambassador to Japan, Edwin O. Reischauer; and Harvard University professor Albert M. Craig. Their text explores the development of East Asian civilization with emphasis on distinctive aesthetic, intellectual, and institutional achievements. (About 800 pages. Available February 1973.)

HOUGHTON MIFFLIN

Publisher of The American Heritage Dictionary of the English Language.
Boston 02107 / Atlanta 30324 / Dallas 75235 / Geneva, Ill. 60134 / New York 10036* / Palo Alto 94304

* Effective March 1, 1973 — Pennington-Hopewell Road, Hopewell, N.J. 08525

HARPER & ROW PULLS authoritative scholarship

---

PROBLEMS IN LATIN AMERICAN HISTORY The Modern Period

Joseph S. Tulchin, Editor

A problems book for courses in Latin American history since independence, this volume treats most of the major issues in contemporary Latin America, often in novel or controversial ways. Interdisciplinary in approach, the book draws on primary and secondary source materials and combines chronological history with analytical materials. Several of the contributors are Latin American scholars who provide fresh perspectives. Issues such as the consequences of independence, U.S.-Latin American conflict, export economics, militarism, slavery, revolutionary ideology, liberalism vs. conservatism, and the populist regimes of Perón and Vargas are discussed. Tentative: 448 pp.; $4.50: paper. January, 1973.

A DIPLOMATIC HISTORY OF EUROPE SINCE THE CONGRESS OF VIENNA

Revised Edition

René Albrecht-Carrié

"To cover such an immense field as the general diplomatic history of Europe with such completeness in some 650 pages is a notable achievement; so is the style, which succeeds in imparting interest to a long, complex and intractable narrative."—Times Literary Supplement, London (on the first edition) / The Revised Edition includes new material through 1971. Tentative: 752 pp.; $5.95: paper. February, 1973.

SOURCES OF ENGLISH CONSTITUTIONAL HISTORY, Revised Edition

Carl Stephenson and Frederick George Marcham, Editors

Now in two volumes, this well-established collection of documents relating to the development of English society and its political and judicial institutions is the only work of its kind. Vol. I: From A.D. 600 to the Interregnum; Vol. II: From the Interregnum to the Present. Vol. I: 502 pp.; $6.95: paper. Vol. II: 451 pp.; $6.95: paper. August, 1972.

IT ALL TOGETHER . . . and literary excellence

---

MODERN EUROPE

Peter Gay and R. K. Webb

Superb writing by two of America's most distinguished historians is a prominent feature of this broadly conceived and cohesive history of Europe since the Renaissance. An extensive introductory essay reviews the legacy of the ancient and medieval world, and a long epilog deals with postwar Europe. Cultural and intellectual history is emphasized throughout, while the traditional fields of politics, the economy, and diplomacy are treated fully and with close attention to recent historiography, which is also highlighted in judiciously selected lists of readings. To challenge student thought, the book offers definite judgments (and some personal asides) about specific events. Combining narrative and analysis, its expository logic clarifies the entire sweep of modern European history. Europe is viewed as a whole, and events in different countries are compared, not merely outlined as a series of parallel developments. The discussion of Russia and Eastern Europe is unusually comprehensive. There are extensive, well-designed two-color maps, a number of which are accompanied by essays. Available in one or two volumes. Complete work: Tentative: 1,152 pp.; $12.95: cloth. Two-volume edition—Vol. I: Modern Europe to 1815; Vol. II: Modern Europe Since 1815: Each—Tentative: 576 pp.; $6.95: paper. Vol. I ready January, 1973. Vol. II and the one-volume edition ready March, 1973. Instructor's Manual.

PERSPECTIVES IN WESTERN CIVILIZATION: Essays from *Horizon

William L. Langer, Editor

In two volumes, these thirty-five historical essays span topics from earliest times to the present. Distinguished for their historical content and literary style, the selections are vivid and authoritative accounts of important episodes in European history. Each—288 pp.; $3.25: paper. 1972.

HARPER & ROW, PUBLISHERS
1817 10 E. 53d Street, New York 10022

Pacific Estrangement Japanese and American Expansion, 1897–1911

Akira Iriye

Here is the first comprehensive study of relations between Japan and the United States at the beginning of the twentieth century—when tension and estrangement were developing. The author analyzes Japanese-American animosity as the two countries expanded in the Pacific and East Asia. Harvard Studies in American–East Asian Relations, 2. $12.00

Japan's First Student Radicals

Henry DeWitt Smith II

Employing both a historical and sociological approach, Mr. Smith analyzes the dramatic course of the leftist student movement in Japan between the two world wars. He focuses on the Shinjinkai (New Man Society) at Tokyo Imperial University, which he believes is vital to the understanding of Japan's recent student movement. Harvard East Asian Series, 70. $16.00

Buddhism Under Mao

Holmes Welch

This illustrated volume details the problems Buddhism presented to the Chinese Communists and how they solved them. It describes such areas as the protection and suppression of Buddhist institutions and explains what dictated the Communists' approach to the institutions. Preceding volumes in the trilogy here completed are The Practice of Chinese Buddhism 1900–1950 and The Buddhist Revival in China (HUP 1967, 1968). Harvard East Asian Series, 69. $15.00

Athenian Bronze Allotment Plates

John H. Kroll

During the fourth century B.C., Athenians selected their juries and certain officials by a mechanical procedure of drawing lots, one of which had been issued to every Athenian adult male. The first comprehensive study of these allotment plates includes an illustrated catalogue of the almost 200 extant plates as well as evidence for otherwise unattested constitutional reforms. Loeb Classical Monographs. $20.00

HARVARD

HARVARD UNIVERSITY PRESS, 79 GARDEN STREET, CAMBRIDGE, MASSACHUSETTS 02138

"Taft emerges
in three dimensions
all the way."***

Mr. Republican

A BIOGRAPHY OF ROBERT A. TAFT

By James T. Patterson

Brown University

Given full access to the Taft papers, the author has produced the first and only work that can be described as definitive.

Marked by an exceptional intelligence, independence and vigor, Senator Taft appeared to lesser minds a paradox: he was a political conservative yet a strong advocate of public housing, racial justice, and equitable taxation.

Professor Patterson offers a revealing study of the personal and political life of a man who, though denied nomination for the Presidency, was honored as "Mr. Republican" until his tragic and untimely death.

**Publishers Weekly*

"A well-researched biography of one of the most important and independent political leaders of this century. Patterson not only analyzes Taft's political career, but also perceptively delineates his character. Reflecting a mature understanding of the appropriate psychological theories, Patterson makes judgments and interpretations that make this well-written book more than a traditional political biography . . . The book also gives new insight into the Republican party of the period. Patterson has effectively used all the appropriate archival and manuscript collections, including the huge Taft collection, to write this scholarly and so far the best biography of Taft."

— PROF. HUBERT HUMPHREYS, Library Journal

768 pages • Illustrated with photographs • Index • At your bookseller, $12.50

HOUGHTON MIFFLIN COMPANY

Books from North Carolina

---

Sugar and Slaves

The Rise of the Planter Class in the English West Indies, 1624-1713

by Richard S. Dunn

"... a definite contribution to the understanding of a much-neglected and exceedingly important phase of American history as well as of English history." — Carl Bridenbaugh.

Recipient of the Jamestown Foundation Award for 1972.

379 pages

6" x 9"

$11.95

---

The Faithful Shepherd

A History of the New England Ministry in the Seventeenth Century

by David D. Hall

During the course of the seventeenth century the New England ministry returned the church to the forms and doctrines that had existed in an earlier Europe before immigration to America. This close examination of the Americanization of a European institution offers many new insights into America's religious history.

328 pages

6" x 9"

$11.95

---

Bonnin and Morris of Philadelphia

The First American Porcelain Factory, 1770-1772

by Graham Hood

Foreword by Robert J. Charleston

Students of early American decorative arts and the colonial American economy will find of interest this carefully researched, well-illustrated monograph in which the author proves that Bonnin and Morris produced fine bone china in Philadelphia some fifty years before experts had believed it was manufactured in America.

152 pages

6" x 9"

$6.95

---

All of the above books are published for the Institute of Early American History and Culture at Williamsburg, Virginia.

THE UNIVERSITY OF NORTH CAROLINA PRESS
Chapel Hill, North Carolina 27514

MAN'S MEMORY OF THE 20TH CENTURY

THE NEW YORK TIMES
PRESENTS THE FIRST MAJOR
ORAL HISTORY PROGRAM —
THE COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY
ORAL HISTORY
COLLECTION: PART ONE

It seems like only yesterday that Professor Allan Nevins of Columbia University created the very concept of oral history when he cited the need to preserve the memories of living Americans.

Today, some 55,000 type-script pages (about 200 interviews) from the world's best known cache of oral memoirs, The Columbia

Collection, are available to researchers — on microfiche, in your library. The New York Times is now micropublishing this material as Part One of Columbia's Oral History Collection — the memories of men and women who led significant lives, or were close to the world movers of our time.

PRIMARY SOURCE MATERIALS
AVAILABLE FOR THE FIRST TIME

The list of memoirists in Part One ranges from authors and diplomats to political reformers and labor leaders...

...from educators, social workers and civic leaders to jurists, cabinet ministers and feminists. Literally thousands of recollections of people and thousands of remembrances of events.

Among the memoirists in Part One are Maxwell Anderson, Marquis W. Childs, W.E.B. Du Bois, Dorothy Canfield Fisher, Felix Frankfurter, Herbert Lehman, Reinhold Niebuhr, Henry L. Stimson, Norman Thomas and Roy Wilkins.

MULTIPLE-ACCESS INDEXING

In addition to offering nearly 650 microfiche, The Times will publish a multiple-access, hard-copy index of some 1,000 pages... accessible by (1) name of the memoirist; (2) names of people remembered; (3) subjects dealt with in interviews.

BEGINNING OF AN IMPORTANT
ONGOING PROGRAM

Part One of the Columbia

Oral History Collection is the beginning of a continuing program. The Times will soon publish further selections from the Columbia Collection — as well as other oral history projects.

For complete information and a catalogue of Part One, write to Microfilming Corporation of America, Dept. JA, 21 Harristown Road, Glen Rock, N. J. 07452; or call (201) 447-3000.

THE NEW YORK TIMES
ORAL HISTORY PROGRAM

new harper paperbacks

AMERICA

A Dutch Historian's View from Afar and Near

Johan Huizinga. Edited and Translated by Herbert H. Rowen. "The value of these essays lies in Huizinga's unusual questions and the often unexpected answers they give rise to. . . . They are the product of a highly individual mind."—from the Introduction

TB/1680 $3.95

THE UNITED STATES AND WORLD WAR II

A. Russell Buchanan, ed. A comprehensive collection of documents that trace the events that occurred immediately before and during the war. This book is not only illustrative of that era, but an invaluable inducement to further study.

HR/1707 $3.45

THE COLD WAR

Walter Lippmann. With an essay by George Kennan and an introduction by Ronald Steel. "To read [this book] today is not to burrow into yesterday's newspaper, but to plunge into the heart of an impassioned and vital argument. . . . Walter Lippmann's analysis not only illuminated the past . . . but elucidates the consequences of the failure to learn from it."—from the Introduction

TB/1723 $2.95

RELIGION IN THE AMERICAN EXPERIENCE

The Pluralistic Style

Robert T. Handy, ed. ". . . Any effort to understand what religion has meant historically on the American scene must assess what influences the pluralistic setting has had on the religious life and thought of individualized groups."—from the Introduction

SOCIAL CHANGE IN AMERICA

The Twentieth Century

Thomas C. Cochran. A history that emphasizes changes in the socially conditioned habits of behavior that form the basic institutions, not just the politics, prominent men, and arresting events so often featured by other studies of modern American history.

TB/1691 $2.75

WE'RE IN THE MONEY

Depression America and Its Films

Andrew Bergman. ". . . The kind of book that both old film buffs and the new post grads of 'Sesame Street' can really enjoy. It makes history fun [and] enables teachers and students to test out their own assumptions about . . . the 30s."—Robert Geller, Center for the Study of Understanding Media

CN/270 $3.95

SINCE YESTERDAY

The 1930s in America

Frederick Lewis Allen. "Vividly and with great skill he marshalls the men, the mountebanks, the measures, and the events of American life and causes them to march before us in orderly panathenaic procession."—Saturday Review

P/256 $1.25

For a complete catalog, write

Harper & Row

Paperback Dept.
10 E. 53d St., New York 10022

For each examination copy marked TB, HR, or CN, please enclose seventy-five cents ($.75) for postage and handling costs.

New from Columbia

PUBLIC PAPERS OF THE SECRETARIES-GENERAL OF THE UNITED NATIONS

Volume 2: Dag Hammarskjöld, 1953-1956

ANDREW W. CORDIER and WILDER FOOTE, Editors

The second volume in this series, and the first of four to be devoted to Hammarskjöld, covers a key period in his development of the office and its influence on the foreign policy of all nations. $22.50

HISTORY OF PORTUGAL:

Volume II: From Empire to Unitary State

ANTONIO H. de OLIVIERA MARQUES

This second volume of an important new history chronicles the desperate struggle of an underdeveloped country to keep pace with the growth of the rest of western Europe. Covering events from the forging of a third empire in Africa to the Republic and World War I, this readable yet scholarly history captures Portugal's vigorous and tenacious spirit. $15.00

POLITICAL GROUPING IN THE CZECHOSLOVAK REFORM MOVEMENT

VLADIMIR KUSIN

A detailed study of the many politically active groups in the Prague Spring of 1968. Reform-oriented, the groups rigidly opposed a new kind of Communist control, but had no time to establish other organizational patterns. Political and Social Processes in Eastern Europe $11.00

SOCIAL CHANGE AND STRATIFICATION IN POSTWAR CZECHOSLOVAKIA

JAROSLAV KREJCI

A study of basic changes in the structure of Czechoslovak society after World War II. The measures responsible for ethnic and socio-economic changes are reviewed; stratification patterns are analyzed in economic, legal, and social terms.

Political and Social Processes in Eastern Europe $11.00

JEWISH NOBLES AND GENIUSES IN

MODERN HUNGARY

WILLIAM O. McCAGG, JR.

A stimulating essay in social history that attempts to analyze the reasons why Hungary's nineteenth and early twentieth century bourgeoisie gave birth to a generation of internationally-known scientists.

East European Monographs

$9.00

COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY PRESS

Address for orders: 136 South Broadway, Irvington, New York 10533

for college staff members—
Low-Cost
Peace of Mind
—from TIAA

$50,000 of life insurance costs less than $100 at age 30.

That's right! For a man, age 30, the annual premium for a 20-Year Home Protection policy providing $50,000 initial amount of insurance is $159.00. The first-year dividend, based on our current dividend scale, is $61.50, making a net payment of $97.50. Dividends, of course, are not guaranteed.

The Home Protection plan is level premium Term insurance providing its largest amount of protection initially, reducing by schedule each year to recognize decreasing insurance needs. This is just one example of the many low-cost TIAA plans available.

If you need more protection for your family, ask us to mail you a personal illustration with figures for a policy issued at your age. We'll also send the Life Insurance Guide describing other TIAA policies.

ELIGIBILITY

Eligibility to apply for this or other TIAA life insurance is limited to persons employed at the time of application by a college, university, private school, or other non-profit educational or scientific institution that qualifies for TIAA eligibility.

TEACHERS INSURANCE AND ANNUITY ASSOCIATION
730 Third Avenue, New York, N. Y. 10017

Please mail the Life Insurance Guide and a personal illustration.

Name _____ Your Date of Birth _____

Address _____ Street _____

City _____ State _____ Zip _____

Dependents' Ages _____

Nonprofit Employer _____ college, university, or other educational or scientific institution

FIGHTING SHIPS AND PRISONSThe Mediterranean Galleys of France in the Age of Louis XIVPaul W. Bamford*

As fighting ships, the galleys of Louis XIV had little value. Rather, they were maintained mainly as prisons and propaganda tools, mirroring many of the characteristics of society and the monarchy of their period. This history of the fleet up to its dissolution in 1748 deals primarily with the lawbreakers, vagabonds, misfits, Protestants, and infidel slaves who worked out their lives in the service of Louis XIV. Illustrations. $16.50

THE FRENCH CAMPAIGN IN PORTUGAL, 1810-1811An Account by Jean Jacques Pelet*Edited, translated, and annotated by Donald D. Howard

Here is a remarkable eyewitness account, by a French aide-de-camp, of the Peninsular War. Pelet's detailed and colorful narrative introduces a vast new body of information as well as original interpretation of the events in the campaign and the individuals who took part in it. Illustrations, maps. $18.50

THE MINNESOTA MESSENIER EXPEDITIONReconstructing a Bronze Age Regional Environment*Edited by William A. McDonald and George R. Rapp, Jr.

This multi-disciplinary research project, whose various aspects and findings are reported here, seeks to explain the interaction of the ancient settlers of Mesenia with their environment. Illustrations, maps. $22.50

MEROVINGIAN MILITARY ORGANIZATION, 481-751Bernard S. Bachrach*

An examination of the period of the Merovingian dynasty in what was then Gaul, studying the forms of military organization and their relation to political power. "This book will cause a commotion in the scholarly world."—Joseph R. Strayer, Princeton University. $7.50

CAPITAL CITIES OF ARAB ISLAMPhilip K. Hitti*

The highlights of Islamic history are viewed through the windows of the cities in which the events occurred: Mecca, Medina, Damascus, Baghdad, Cairo, and Cordova. These cities influenced not only the Arab and Moslem civilizations but the development of civilization at large. Illustrations. $7.95

THE SETTLEMENT OF POLYNESIAA Computer SimulationMichael Levison, R. Gerard Ward, and John W. Webb*

Providing new answers to the riddle of the settlement of the Polynesian islands, this research is also an innovative demonstration of how computer technology may be applied to a wide variety of research in the social and physical sciences. Maps. $10.75

university

of MINNESOTA

press Minneapolis 55455

“...clearly one of the most important books ever to be written by an American historian.”*

Toward the Scientific Study of History

Selected Essays of Lee Benson,
University of Pennsylvania

These eight essays written between 1957 and 1971 reveal with disarming logic the development of Professor Benson's theory of scientific history. A variant form of his main theme runs through all essays: that historians have lacked a good conception of science and have been immensely indifferent to methodology, clarification of concepts, and development of theory. Professor Benson's argument culminates in his latest essay in which he writes that in order to develop a genuinely scientific historiography and a genuinely powerful social science, historians must break down disciplinary walls in order to focus on enduring social problems.

352 Pages / 1972 / Paperbound $3.95 / Clothbound $8.75

*“More than any other book, these essays specify the necessary steps for making the study of history a social science. Because of its revolutionary implications, this is clearly one of the most important books ever to be written by an American historian.”

—J. Rogers Hollingsworth

---

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY

---

“What an impressive book it is,
and what a major contribution...”

—Ray A. Billington

American Convictions

Cycles of Public Thought, 1600-1850
Charles A. Barker,
Johns Hopkins University

An intellectual history of America from its beginnings to 1850, this book takes as its focus those ideas which concern public affairs, institutions, and policies. Among those ideas, Professor Barker finds recurrences, or “cycles,” in the loyalties and purposes of the people. His book demonstrates that more individualistic, protestant and innovative convictions emerge in certain periods; that more consolidating and conservative ones develop in other times. This outstanding work is an incisive analysis of the derivation of American thoughts and attitudes.

1971 Ralph Waldo Emerson Award,
Phi Beta Kappa

632 Pages/1970/Text Edition, $11.25

“A remarkable achievement—one of those magisterial books which appear most infrequently, and which will win immediate recognition as a classic in American Studies.”

—Robert D. Cross

---

College Department
East Washington Square, Philadelphia, Pa. 19105

---

DRYDEN PRESS TEXTS ON HISTORICAL ISSUES

---

A HISTORY OF COLONIAL AMERICA

3rd Edition

prepared by Max Savelle and Darold Wax

This is a substantially new text in the history of the foundation and growth of American society in the colonial and revolutionary periods, from 1492 to 1791. It provides a mature, detailed, and interpretative history of events, institutions, ideas and ideals from the foundation of the earliest English colonies to the achievement of independence and constitutional organization.

It traces the roots of the American way of life in the Europe of the Renaissance and the Reformation, and follows the development of that way of life from its origins in America through the eighteenth century. It surveys the beginnings, diversification, and growth of economic life and institutions, of political practices, institutions and ideals, of society—including the unique American phenomenon of many minorities and diverse races—of religion, with its multiplicity of sects and the advance of religious toleration, of intellectual life, and of the international history of the colonies, including the origins of a distinctly American outlook upon international affairs.

The climax of the early development of the American society came with the eventual conflict of thirteen of the British-American societies with their mother-country, their secession from the British Empire, and the revolutionary re-creation of their political and social institutions within the framework of a new federative national state.

The book has a series of fine, clear maps, and contemporary illustrations to give visual documentation to the narrative. All the reading lists, including easily available source materials, have been updated and placed at the end of the chapters to which they are relevant.

Publication 3/1/73

AN OFFER YOU CANNOT REFUSE:

THE HERITAGE OF WESTERN CIVILIZATION TO 1715

Stewart C. Easton

Hardcover 861 Pages

Dr. Easton's highly readable text.

Now available at $7.95

Also, for the course that breaks at 1500, Dr. Easton's,

THE HERITAGE OF THE PAST

Earliest Times to 1500

Hardcover 791 Pages

Also Priced at $7.95

The Dryden Press Inc.
901 North Elm Street
Hinsdale, Illinois 60521

AVAILABLE FOR FURTHER IN-DEPTH STUDY

---

| AmericanProblemStudies   | Under the editorial direction ofPaul R. BakerNew York University,Washington Square |
|--|--|
| Forging the American CharacterPuritanism in Seventeenth-Century MassachusettsPolitics and Society in Colonial AmericaBenjamin Franklin | James W. HallDavid D. HallMichael G. KammenWilbur R. JacobsJohn R. Howe, Jr.   |
| The Role of Ideology in the American RevolutionThe American Revolution, 2nd Ed.The Formation of the Constitution                           | George Athan BilliasRobert F. Jones  |
| The Federalists vs. the Jeffersonian RepublicansThe Causes of the War of 1812  | Paul GoodmanBradford Perkins   |
| The Monroe DoctrineJacksonian Democracy  | Armin RappaportJames L. Bugg, Jr.  |
| The AbolitionistsThe Mexican War   | Richard O. CurryRamon Eduardo Ruiz   |
| The Frontier ThesisThe Causes of the Civil War   | Ray Allen BillingtonHans L. Trefousse  |
| The Civil WarLincoln and Civil War Politics  | William E. ParrishJames A. Rawley  |
| ReconstructionThe South  | Seth M. ScheinerMonroe L. Billington   |
| Black Americans and the Supreme CourtSince Emancipation  | Arnold M. PaulFrancis Paul Prucha  |
| The Indian in American HistoryRacism in the United States  | David M. ReimersJ. Rogers Hollingsworth  |
| American Expansion in the Late Nineteenth CenturyThe Robber Barons   | Thomas B. BrewerTheodore Saloutos  |
| PopulismAntisemitism in the United States  | Leonard DinnersteinArthur Mann   |
| The Progressive EraEnvironment and Americans   | Roderick NashRoy Lubove  |
| Poverty and Social Welfare in the United StatesAmerica's Entry into World War I  | Herbert J. BassRalph A. Stone  |
| Wilson and the League of NationsThe Social and Cultural Life of the 1920s  | Ronald L. DavisMorton Keller   |
| The New DealThe Roosevelt Diplomacy and World War II   | Robert DallekPaul R. Baker   |
| The Atomic BombThe Evolution of the Cold War   | Richard H. MillerThomas C. Reeves  |
| McCarthyismThe American Sexual Dilemma   | William L. O'NeillJ. Joseph Huthmacher   |
| The Truman Years   |  |

---

The Dryden Press Inc.
901 North Elm Street
Hinsdale, Illinois 60521

New from Yale

Dimensions

The Dimensions of the Past

Materials, Problems, and Opportunities for Quantitative Work in History

edited by Val R. Lorwin and Jacob M. Price

The thirteen papers in this innovative collection were designed to increase awareness in the historical profession of the possibilities and problems of quantitative work in fields other than U.S. history. The contributors, all leading figures in their fields, confronted four major issues: the kinds of quantitative data available for the problems, periods, and areas under discussion; the chief uses already made of these data; the most important problems in utilizing such data; and the most promising directions for further work, both substantive and methodological. As a result, this volume provides a remarkably wide bibliographical, methodological, and critical guide to current quantitative work in European, Asian, and Latin American History. $17.50

Ratios

Economic Opportunity and White American Fertility Ratios, 1800-1860

by Colin Forster and G. S. L. Tucker

The role of economic factors in fertility behavior has attracted growing interest among economists, historians, economic historians, and demographers. The point of departure for this new study is the discussion of population density as an important causal factor in fertility patterns in Yasukichi Yasuba's Birth Rates of the White Population in the United States, 1800-1860. Forster and Tucker shift the statistical analysis of the census data from rank correlations by state, which Yasuba had done, to more refined regression analysis. In doing so, they show much more clearly than anyone else has yet shown that high fertility ratios were related to the thinness of settlement. $6.50

Systems

The Fiscal System of Renaissance France

by Martin Wolfe

In this volume Martin Wolfe coordinates a large body of existing information, offering a fresh view of the French fiscal system within the contexts of royal, economic, military, political, and religious affairs. Looking at the entire sweep of fiscal change from the Middle Ages to the Old Regime, he brings into focus developments overlooked by scholars who have concentrated on only one facet of the subject or only one episode. Since the absolutist tax power of Renaissance France became the model for several other countries, this comprehensive analysis of its fiscal history provides an indispensable understanding of European government in early modern times. $17.50

History of Science

Wallace and Natural Selection

by H. Lewis McKinney

Alfred Russel Wallace was one of the founders of modern evolutionary biology and was the co-discoverer, with Charles Darwin, of the principle of natural selection. Mr. McKinney's study, based on a wide assortment of published and unpublished sources, follows the course of Wallace's evolutionary ideas to 1859. The author contends that Wallace was not accorded full credit for his major contribution to the theory of natural selection. This original piece of research will be the standard work on Wallace's career up to 1859 and is an important addition to the rapidly developing field of the history of evolutionary biology. $12.50

Charles Lyell The Years to 1841: The Revolution in Geology

by Leonard G. Wilson

The first of three volumes that will be the definitive study of a giant of Victorian science, this book follows Lyell's career to the eve of his departure for America in 1841. It brings to the reader an intimate account of Lyell's early life and discoveries, leading up to the publication of Principles of Geology in 1833. Mr. Wilson has utilized sources never before consulted and amply illustrates the text with maps, photographs, and sketches from Lyell's writings. The result is a richly detailed picture of the development of Lyell as a man and as a scientist against the background of his times. $17.50

Yale University Press New Haven and London

in Canada: McGill-Queen's University Press

---

Announcing a new edition

of the leading textbook for American history

THE NATIONAL EXPERIENCE

A History of the United States

THIRD EDITION

John M. Blum, Yale University

Edmund S. Morgan, Yale University

Willie Lee Rose, University of Virginia

Arthur M. Schlesinger, Jr., City University of New York

Kenneth M. Stampp, University of California at Berkeley

C. Vann Woodward, Yale University

Like its two distinguished predecessors, the new Third Edition of this extraordinarily successful textbook provides an authoritative, comprehensive, and up-to-date survey of the social, political, economic, and intellectual developments in American history. Thoroughly revised to incorporate the most recent scholarship in the field, this edition offers many special features, including:

- greater emphasis on minority groups in the United States
- thoughtful coverage of the role of women in American history
- three completely rewritten chapters on the 1850's, the Civil War, and Reconstruction
- a detailed study of the Nixon administration, including an analysis of the Vietnam War, Nixon's economic policies, and recent changes in the social and moral aspects of American life

The Third Edition contains approximately 130 charts, 130 maps, and 530 halftones interspersed throughout the text, including a 32-page full-color insert. An Instructor's Manual with test questions and learning objectives will be available.

928 pages (probable)
Publication: January 1973

Also available in a two-volume paperbound format:

Part One: TO 1877

Paperbound. 464 pages (probable)

Part Two: SINCE 1865

Paperbound. 464 pages (probable)

HARCOURT BRACE JOVANOVICH, INC.

New York • Chicago • San Francisco • Atlanta

Vital American History Books

BUILDING THE ORGANIZATIONAL SOCIETY

Essays on Associational Activities in Modern America

Edited by Jerry Israel, Northern Illinois University

With an Introduction by Samuel P. Hays

Professor Israel introduces new evidence of the search for an "organized" society in modern America. Within the book's four categories—The Professional Membership, The Social Institution, The Policy Group, The Governmental Department—a broad range of topics is covered: American labor and religion; lawyers in the Progressive period; blacks at the turn of the century; the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace; and the bureaucratization of the State Department.

1972

341 pages

$9.95

THE RISE AND FALL OF THE PEOPLE'S CENTURY

Henry A. Wallace and American Liberalism, 1941-1948

Norman D. Markowitz, Rutgers University

This volume describes in depth the wartime liberal program for a world New Deal and an American social service state, and contrasts that program with the anti-communist liberalism of postwar America. It analyzes the strengths and weaknesses of Wallace the political actor and Wallace the political theorist, and deals with the controversial events surrounding his career in the 1940s.

1972

416 pages

$8.95

THE AMERICAN HABITAT

A Historical Perspective

Edited by Barbara Butmann Rosencrantz, Harvard University, and

William A. Koelsch, Clark University

By means of carefully selected contemporary essays, the editors make dramatically clear our present environmental crisis. They argue that this crisis is explicable in terms of historical development, and contend that our present crisis can only be understood and altered if one understands the relevance of the past.

1972

416 pages

$9.95

THE NAVAL ARISTOCRACY

The Golden Age of Annapolis and the Emergence of Modern American Navalism

Peter Karsten, University of Pittsburgh

"Peter Karsten makes a valuable contribution to the social and institutional history of the American military."—Morris Janowitz, author of The Professional Soldier. "The book will probably stand for a long time as the definitive study of the naval officer corps."—Ronald Spector

1972

426 pages

$10.95

From The Free Press

---

Now Available in Paperback

THE INVENTION OF THE AMERICAN POLITICAL PARTIES

A Study of Political Improvisation

Roy F. Nichols, Professor Emeritus, Columbia University

One of America's most distinguished historians analyzes the extremely complex evolution of the American political party machine. With grace, wit, and profound scholarship, he describes the various kinds of factors that operate on state and federal levels to shape the two-party system as we know it today.

|      |           |        |
|------|-----------|--------|
| 1972 | 416 pages | $3.95 |
|------|-----------|--------|

---

INTERPRETATIONS OF AMERICAN HISTORY

Patterns and Perspectives

Second Edition

Volume I: To 1877 Volume II: Since 1865

Edited by Gerald N. Grob, Rutgers University, and George Athan Billias, Clark University

Bringing together scholarly selections that approach American history from an analytic rather than factual point of view, these volumes show that the interpretation of American history has been a constantly changing one. The selections, chosen to reflect both scholarly and literary excellence, deal not only with how but why these interpretations have changed. Fifty percent of the material in this Second Edition is new.

|      |                   |        |
|------|-------------------|--------|
| 1972 | Vol I: 544 pages  | $4.95 |
|      | Vol II: 532 pages | $4.95 |

Also available in a new three-volume edition:

From Puritanism to the First Party System;

From Jacksonian Democracy to the Gilded Age;

From Progressivism to the Cold War      $3.95 each

THE FREE PRESS

A DIVISION OF THE MACMILLAN COMPANY

Department F, Riverside, New Jersey 08075

The Microbook® Library of American Civilization.

A complete, definitive collection...at a fraction of the usual cost!

Approximately 50% of this country's four-year colleges and 82% of the two-year colleges fall below accepted standards in the number of volumes in their libraries, according to testimony before Congress.

Small wonder. With the escalating costs and reduced incomes faced by many institutions, few libraries can afford to keep up with new books much less acquire the older books and periodicals that are so important in serving the total educational function.

In today's changing world, learning to learn is becoming a primary need for all students. For this they must have an adequate library facility—one that provides, through its resources, the broadest and most objective record of our cultural heritage, and the most efficient and accurate means of access to that record.

Now, the Microbook Library of American Civilization—the result of refined microform technology combined with the 200-year-old editorial know-how of Encyclopaedia Britannica—makes it possible for every college to acquire a fully-systematized collection of the important works that recorded the growth of America. It provides, at low cost, an augmentation of library resources usually confined to large, long-established and well-endowed institutions.

The approximately 19,000-volume Library covers more than three centuries of Americana up to 1914. It includes the collected writings of distinguished Americans as well as personal records. There are biographies, essays, speeches, collections of original source material, and significant runs of more than sixty periodicals. The Library supports every aspect of American studies: history, literature, economics, sociology, the arts, law, and more.

The Microbook System. Each Library is in Microbook form—a system that involves precision photographic reproduction of entire libraries on 3" x 5" film cards, or fiche. Up to 1,000 pages can be reproduced on a single card, although any book of more than 100 pages is on its own fiche for greater convenience.

The Microbook Library of American Civilization comes complete with five sets of book-form Author, Title, and Subject Catalogs, ten sets of the same Catalogs in fiche form, and...

The revolutionary BIBLIOGUIDE™ Index. The Biblioguide Index is one of the most remarkable access tools ever devised for library use. It indexes the entire collection under 565 topics or themes of special interest to students of American history and related studies. Each theme is introduced by a descriptive headline, followed by an average of 220 citations of whole books, parts of books and relevant periodical literature... roughly 125,000 references to help the user identify the material he needs. Five book-form Biblioguide Indexes, and ten in fiche form, accompany each Library.

Catalog cards are available as an optional extra.

Convenience, as with no other library. A Microbook Desk Reader, which clearly projects the fiche image on an 8½" x 12" screen in normal room light, is provided at no additional charge with each Library.

A lightweight Portareader is also available. This reader, with a bright 7" x 10" screen, can be used in the library, in the dormitory, or in a professor's office.

Space saving? Again, remarkable. The entire Microbook Library of American Civilization will fit into a standard 30-drawer card catalog file cabinet.

So there you have it. A complete basic library for your American studies programs, at a price you can afford, fully cataloged and indexed and ready to use the day you receive it.

For a free copy of the 20-page booklet, The Microbook Library Series, please mail the coupon below.

Library Resources Inc.

an ENCYCLOPAEDIA BRITANNICA COMPANY

To: Library Resources Inc., Dept. 325
301 East Erie Street
Chicago, Illinois 60611

Please send your booklet, The Microbook Library Series, containing information on the Library of American Civilization and other Microbook Libraries.

Name _____
Title _____
Institution or Organization _____
Address _____
City _____
State _____ Zip Code _____

---

now in paperback ...

MAKERS OF MODERN STRATEGY*Military Thought from Machiavelli to Hitler

Edited by Edward Mead Earle

No. 260 $3.95

THE TOADSTOOL MILLIONAIRES*A Social History of Patent Medicines in America before Federal Regulation

James Harvey Young

No. 272 $2.95

NAPOLEON III AND THE REBUILDING OF PARIS

David H. Pinkney

No. 273 $3.95

THE CHINA TANGLE*The American Effort in China from Pearl Harbor to the Marshall Mission

Herbert Feis

No. 276 $3.95

---

new cloth titles available in limited paperback editions ...

HITLER AND THE BEER HALL PUTSCH

Harold J. Gordon, Jr.

LPE-1 $8.95

PACIFISM IN EUROPE TO 1914

Peter Brock

LPE-7 $8.75

THE SOCIAL FOUNDATIONS OF GERMAN UNIFICATION, 1858-1871*Struggles and Accomplishments

Theodore S. Hamerow

LPE-8 $7.95

DECENTRALIZATION AND SELF-GOVERNMENT
IN RUSSIA, 1830-1870

S. Frederick Starr

LPE-9 $8.95

---

princeton university press

princeton, new jersey 08540

*NewMao's WayEdward E. Rice

"An exciting and vivid study of Mao, the man and the leader, that climaxes in one of the best accounts of the Cultural Revolution to appear to date. . . . In the years to come all serious scholarship concerning the Cultural Revolution will be in some way indebted to it."—Lucien W. Pye

LC: 70-186116 690 pages $12.95

Scholars, Saints, and Sufis

Muslim Religious Institutions since 1500

Edited by Nikki R. Keddie

This collection of papers on the function of religious groups in Muslim society and politics deals with two main groups: the learned orthodox religious scholars and jurists known as the ulama, and the more popular, generally less learned, religious groups called sufis, mystics, or saints. The essays demonstrate the importance of religion in the Muslim world, particularly among the common people.

LC: 77-153546 416 pages $17.50

The Pampangans

Colonial Society in a Philippine Province

John A. Larkin

The Pampangan people, a lowland Christian group living beyond the immediate influence of Manila, reflect a distinctive historical development. Tracing the gradual evolution of socio-economic institutions, Mr. Larkin employs anthropological and sociological techniques in considering such matters as ecology, kinship, and changing class relationships within an agrarian society.

LC: 74-165232 360 pages illustrations maps $13.50

*Violence and Civil Disorder in Italian Cities, 1200-1500*Edited by Lauro Martines

Late medieval and renaissance Italian cities in their heyday were astonishingly vital, bellicose, and enormously complex in their social, legal, and political institutions. The contributors to this volume deal with urban violence in these cities through a multiplicity of approaches and methods of analysis.

LC: 71-145791 368 pages $12.00

*TiberiusRobin Seager

This biography of Tiberius Claudius Nero, the second Roman emperor, does full justice to his complex life and character: his considerable virtues and early promise, his genuine reluctance to rule, his traumatic relations with Augustus, and his gradual degeneration during his own reign. It becomes clear how a man like Tiberius can move from a republican spirit to complete autocracy, his sense of reality destroyed.

LC: 74-18551 325 pages 16 pages of plates 5 maps $12.95

*Roger of Salisbury, Viceroy of EnglandEdward J. Kealey

In this biography of a man who has been described as medieval England's greatest administrator, Mr. Kealey brings together all of the known material relevant to Roger of Salisbury's life (d. 1139), including some not previously published.

LC: 78-92681 328 pages illustrations $13.50

from California

University of California Press • Berkeley 94720

A New Democratic Experience

The Democratic Experience

Third Edition

Carl N. Degler, Stanford University/Thomas C. Cochran, University of Pennsylvania/Vincent P. De Santis, University of Notre Dame/Holman Hamilton, University of Kentucky/William H. Harbaugh, University of Virginia/Arthur S. Link, Princeton University/David M. Potter/Clarence L. Ver Steeg, Northwestern University

© 1973, approx. 608 pages, illustrated, softbound $6.95 (tent.)

This widely acclaimed text has been extensively revised and updated, adding new information on minorities and social history and stressing the significance of past historical periods in relation to the nation's present-day problems.

American Urbanization: A Comparative History

Blake McKelvey, City Historian, Rochester, New York

© 1973, approx. 160 pages, softbound $2.75 (tent.)

Compares the growth of American urbanization to European and Latin American stages of urbanization.

Environmental Decay in Its Historical Context

Robert Detweiler, California State University, San Diego/Jon N. Sutherland, California State University, San Diego/Michael S. Werthman

© 1972, approx. 140 pages, softbound $2.50 (tent.)

A volume in the "Scott, Foresman Topics in Comparative History Series."

The Meanings of American History

Interpretation of Events, Ideas, and Institutions

Edited by Marvin Meyers, Brandeis University/J. R. Pole, Cambridge University/Thomas C. Cochran, University of Pennsylvania/T. Harry Williams, Louisiana State University/Charles B. Dew, University of Missouri

Volume I: Colonial Origins to the Civil War

© 1971, 460 pages, illustrated, softbound $5.95

Volume II: The Civil War to the Present

© 1972, 504 pages, illustrated, softbound $5.95

American Civilization

Readings in the Cultural and Intellectual History of the United States

Edited by Eugene C. Drozdowski, Appalachian State University

© 1972, 417 pages, softbound $5.95

For Further information

write to Jim Shorr, Advertising Department

Scott, Foresman College Division

1900 East Lake Avenue Glenview, Illinois 60025

The Meiji Restoration

W. G. Beasley. For Japan the Meiji Restoration of 1868 is the point from which modern history begins. A complicated affair, it was difficult to understand at the time and has been subject to controversy ever since. This work offers the first modern, full-scale account of the origins, development, and immediate aftermath of the Restoration in any Western language. In it the author sees the Restoration's origins not in economic distress or class struggle, but in a growing sense of national danger and national pride spurred by Japan's contacts with the West. Nationalism provided the impetus for overthrowing the Tokugawa. Only when the Tokugawa were gone did their successors turn of necessity to the making of modern Japan, seeking strength and stability in new social patterns. $17.50

Every Fifth Child The Population of China

Leo A. Orleans. It is generally accepted that China has about one-fifth of the world's population within her borders. Considering how little reliable information is available, this is as definitive a statement as one can make. And yet more precise estimates of the size, structure, and rate of growth of this population are essential to an understanding of China's current problems and policies. This study tries to tell the story of China's population: a little about what it was, but mostly about what it is and what we know and don't know about it. The author follows his subject into areas where policy and daily life coincide: the schools, farms, and factories of a nation that faces gigantic problems of urbanization, technological education, and manpower. $8.50

Stanford University Press

---

Chicago

HISTORICAL WRITINGS

Lord Bolingbroke

Edited and with an Introduction by Isaac Kramnick

One of the last humanistic historians concerned with history as a source of exemplary moral behavior, Bolingbroke was also an early figure in the development of Enlightenment historiography, with its skeptical attitude toward the validity of history. Classics of British Historical Literature series.

1972

440 pages

Cloth $13.50

HISTORICAL ESSAYS AND LECTURES

François Guizot

Edited and with an Introduction by Stanley Mellon

Using history as a political mediating force, Guizot rescued the European past from two prevailing distortions: the total rejection of history by the sons of the French Revolution, and the worship of a particular segment of the past by the conservatives. Classic European Historians series.

1972

xlvi, 442 pages

Cloth $15.00

HISTORY OF THE KINGDOM OF NAPLES

Benedetto Croce

Edited and with an Introduction by H. Stuart Hughes

"One of Benedetto Croce's outstanding historical works—in a masterful translation by Frances Frenaye—gives English-speaking students a hitherto unavailable opportunity to become acquainted with the philosopher's approach to the main trends in Southern Italy from the Middle Ages to the late nineteenth century."—Italian Quarterly Cloth edition (1970), $9.50. Classic European Historians series.

1972 xxiv, 260 pages Paper $2.95

ESSAYS IN MODERN EUROPEAN HISTORIOGRAPHY

Edited and with an Introduction by S. William Halperin

"Sixteen outstanding modern European historians, representing a wide variety of approaches to historical scholarship, are the subjects of these concise and perceptive essays by a number of similarly distinguished scholars. . . . These essays are well written, and demonstrative of the rich diversity of contemporary historical inquiry."—Library Journal Cloth, $12.50. Classic European Historians series.

1972 xxii, 378 pages Paper $3.45

MAPS

A Historical Survey of Their Study and Collecting

R. A. Skelton

Edited by David Woodward

In this history of map collecting, the late R. A. Skelton has provided a history of cartography from the Middle Ages to the twentieth century, a discussion of how maps have disappeared from the historical record, and a tribute to those who have salvaged and preserved maps. The author proposes a program of ten tasks that would make early maps more available as well as provide more sophisticated methods for their study.

1972

xvii, 138 pages

Cloth $5.95

The University of Chicago Press
Chicago 60637

A Short History of Ireland

R. DUDLEY EDWARDS

A fascinating reassessment of the traditional version of Irish History from the earliest times up to the present day by a distinguished historian. $11.50

The Purchase of Paradise

JOEL T. ROSENTHAL

A social study scrutinizing charitable functions and the myths and misconceptions surrounding the character of medieval noble families as philanthropists. $8.50

An Imperial War and the British Working Class

Working Class Attitudes and Reactions to the Boer War 1899-1902

RICHARD NORMAN PRICE

Clichéd assumptions about working class attitudes are closely examined to give new insights into the pattern of working-class history. $11.50

Race and Nationalism in Trinidad and Tobago

A Study of Decolonization in a Multi-racial Society

SELWYN RYAN

This unbiased, scholarly account—the first to treat the Caribbean area as more than a pawn of conflicting European power struggles—traces the evolution of these West Indian Islands from colonial to independent status. $15.00

Crime and Public Order in England in the Later Middle Ages

JOHN BELLAMY

An informative and entertaining account of crime and public order, the structures of medieval legal institutions and their procedures, that employs hitherto unpublished information in this area. Included are accounts of some well-documented crimes and careers of several law-breakers that trace the treatment of the suspect from his arrest to his final punishment or pardon.

$10.00

The Lordship of Ireland in the Middle Ages

J. F. LYDON

This new thematic approach to Irish history investigates the beginnings of the conflicting Gaelic and Anglo-Irish interests which initiated the decline of the lordship and continued to influence that country's development to the present day.

$12.50

University of Toronto Press

33 East Tupper Street

Buffalo, N. Y. 14203

Peaceable Kingdoms

New England Towns in the Eighteenth Century

Michael Zuckerman. Charting the course of daily town life in colonial America, Zuckerman argues that the true concern of these towns was not individual rights or liberties but rather the homogeneity and tranquillity of the community. "A remarkable book."—Bernard Bailyn. "Must be accorded a place among the essential works of early American history."—Jack P. Greene, Johns Hopkins University. $2.45

America in 1750

A Social Portrait

Richard Hofstadter. "A brilliant interpretation of colonial society on the eve of the Revolution and a fascinating glimpse into the mind of one of the most gifted, influential American historians."—David Donald, Commentary.

Feb. 1973 $1.95

Black Women in White America

A Documentary History

Edited by Gerda Lerner. Writings of Black women, from 1811 to the present, on slavery, the struggle for education, marriage and the family, feminism, prejudice and Black pride. "A timely, powerful, and usable collection, emphasizing the magnificent role of Black women in the struggle of Black people."—Nat Huggins, Columbia University. "Material which can change images whites have had of blacks, and possibly even those which we, as blacks, have of ourselves."—Maya Angelou, Life Magazine. Feb. 1973 $3.95

Puerto Rico

A Socio-Historic Interpretation

Manuel Maldonado-Denis. Attacking the myth that the island is a contented "showcase of democracy," the author traces five hundred years of imperialism and charges that Commonwealth leaders have betrayed their people and frustrated a genuine indigenous movement for complete political independence. $2.45

The Imperial Self

An Essay in American Literary and Cultural History

Quentin Anderson. "Although this book appears to be an academic study of Emerson, Hawthorne, Whitman, and Henry James, it may well prove a turning point in our understanding of American culture, for it is Anderson's purpose to describe a tendency in American culture that has long been thought of as a native variant of romanticism, but is in fact crucially different."—Richard Locke, The New York Times. $2.45

In Red and Black

Marxian Explorations in Southern and Afro-American History

Eugene D. Genovese.

$2.95

Exploration and Empire

The Explorer and the Scientist in the Winning of the American West, 1805-1900

William H. Goetzmann. Winner of the Pulitzer Prize in History

$3.95

VINTAGE BOOKS

a division of Random House

INDEX OF ADVERTISERS

| Advertiser                         | Pages            | Advertiser   | Pages                     |
|------------------------------------|------------------|--|---------------------------|
| American Historical Association    | 46, 84           | Oxford University Press                            | 2nd Cover, 38, 39, 40, 41 |
| Arno Press                         | 18, 19, 20, 21   | Praeger Publishers                                 | 54                        |
| Barnes & Noble Books               | 9                | Princeton University Press                         | 4th Cover, 75             |
| Basic Books, Inc.                  | 30, 31           | Schocken Books                                     | 4, 5                      |
| Bobbs-Merrill                      | 10, 11           | Scott, Foresman                                    | 77                        |
| Cambridge University Press         | 28               | Stanford University Press                          | 78                        |
| Canfield Press                     | 8                | Statement of Ownership, Management and Circulation | 83                        |
| Charles Scribner's Sons            | 42, 43, 44, 45   | St. Martin's Press                                 | 32, 33                    |
| Columbia University Press          | 63               | Teachers Insurance and Annuity Assn.               | 64                        |
| Cornell University Press           | 14, 15           | Temple University                                  | 50                        |
| D. C. Heath                        | 25, 26, 27       | Temple University Press                            | 6                         |
| Doubleday & Co.                    | 7                | The Centre d'Etude du Quebec                       | 29                        |
| Encyclopaedia Britannica           | 51               | The Dorsey Press                                   | 34                        |
| Fortress Press                     | 48               | The Dryden Press                                   | 68, 69                    |
| Harcourt Brace Jovanovich, Inc.    | 52, 53, 71       | The Free Press                                     | 72, 73                    |
| Harper & Row                       | 56, 57, 62       | Thomas Y. Crowell Company                          | 47                        |
| Harvard University Press           | 3rd Cover, 3, 58 | U. S. Capitol Historical Society                   | 13                        |
| Hoover Institution Press           | 22, 23, 24       | University of California Press                     | 76                        |
| Houghton Mifflin Company           | 55, 59           | University of Chicago Press                        | 79                        |
| Index of Advertisers               | 82               | University of Minnesota Press                      | 65                        |
| J. B. Lippincott Co.               | 66, 67           | University of North Carolina Press                 | 60                        |
| Kraus Reprint Co.                  | 49               | University of Toronto Press                        | 80                        |
| Library Resources Inc.             | 74               | Vintage Books                                      | 81                        |
| Louisiana State University Press   | 12               | Yale University Press                              | 70                        |
| Macmillan Company                  | 35, 36, 37       |  |                           |
| Microfilming Corp. of America      | 61               |  |                           |
| Northern Illinois University Press | 16, 17           |  |                           |

| U. S. POSTAL SERVICESTATEMENT OF OWNERSHIP, MANAGEMENT AND CIRCULATION(Act of August 12, 1970: Section 3685, Title 39, United States Code)  |  | SEE INSTRUCTIONSON PAGE 2 (REVERSE)                                  |
|---|--|--|
| 1. TITLE OF PUBLICATIONAmerican Historical Review  |  | 2. DATE OF FILING  |
| 3. FREQUENCY OF ISSUEFive times per year - February, April, June, October and December   |  |  |
| 4. LOCATION OF KNOWN OFFICE OF PUBLICATION (Street, city, county, state, ZIP code) (Not printers)2901 Byrdhill Road, Richmond, Virginia 23228  |  |  |
| 5. LOCATION OF THE HEADQUARTERS OR GENERAL BUSINESS OFFICES OF THE PUBLISHERS (Not printers)400 A Street, S.E., Washington, D.C. 20003   |  |  |
| 6. NAMES AND ADDRESSES OF PUBLISHER, EDITOR, AND MANAGING EDITOR  |  |  |
| PUBLISHER (Name and address)American Historical Association, 400 A Street, S.E., Washington, D.C. 20003  |  |  |
| EDITOR (Name and address)R. K. Webb, 400 A Street, S.E., Washington, D.C. 20003  |  |  |
| MANAGER EDITOR (Name and address)R. K. Webb, 400 A Street, S.E., Washington, D.C. 20003  |  |  |
| 7. OWNER (If owned by a corporation, its name and address must be stated and also immediately thereunder the names and addresses of stockholders owning or holding 1 percent or more of total amount of stock. If not owned by a corporation, the names and addresses of the individual owners must be given. If owned by a partnership or other unincorporated firm, its name and address, as well as that of each individual must be given.)  |  |  |
| NAME ADDRESS  |  |  |
| The American Historical Association 400 A St., S.E., Washington, D.C. 20003  |  |  |
| The American Historical Association has no ownership. It is a nonprofit membership corporation created by Act of Congress on January 4, 1889, for the promotion of historical studies and kindred purposes.  |  |  |
| 8. KNOWN BONDHOLDERS, MORTGAGEES, AND OTHER SECURITY HOLDERS OWNING OR HOLDING 1 PERCENT OR MORE OF TOTAL AMOUNT OF BONDS, MORTGAGES OR OTHER SECURITIES (If there are none, so state)  |  |  |
| NAME ADDRESS  |  |  |
| None   |  |  |
| 9. FOR OPTIONAL COMPLETION BY PUBLISHERS MAILING AT THE REGULAR RATES (Section 132.121, Postal Service Manual)  |  |  |
| 39 U. S. C. 3626 provides in pertinent part: "No person who would have been entitled to mail matter under former section 4359 of this title shall mail such matter at the rates provided under this subsection unless he files annually with the Postal Service a written request for permission to mail matter at such rates."In accordance with the provisions of this statute, I hereby request permission to mail the publication named in Item 1 at the reduced postage rates presently authorized by 39 U. S. C. 3626.(Signature and title of editor, publisher, business manager, or owner)R. K. Webb |  |  |
| 10. FOR COMPLETION BY NONPROFIT ORGANIZATIONS AUTHORIZED TO MAIL AT SPECIAL RATES (Section 132.122, Postal Manual)  |  |  |
| (Check one)   |  |  |
| The purpose, function, and nonprofit status of this organization and the exempt status for Federal income tax purposes <input checked="" type="checkbox"/> Have not changed during preceding 12 months <input type="checkbox"/> Have changed during preceding 12 months (If changed, publisher must submit explanation of change with this statement.)  |  |  |
| 11. EXTENT AND NATURE OF CIRCULATION  | AVERAGE NO. COPIES EACH ISSUE DURING PRECEDING 12 MONTHS | ACTUAL NUMBER OF COPIES OF SINGLE ISSUE PUBLISHED NEAREST TO FILING DATE |
| A. TOTAL NO. COPIES PRINTED (Net Press Run)   | 25,577   | 24,542   |
| B. PAID CIRCULATION   |  |  |
| 1. SALES THROUGH DEALERS AND CARRIERS, STREET VENDORS AND COUNTER SALES   | --   | --   |
| 2. MAIL SUBSCRIPTIONS   | 21,892   | 20,232   |
| C. TOTAL PAID CIRCULATION   | 21,892   | 20,232   |
| D. FREE DISTRIBUTION BY MAIL, CARRIER OR OTHER MEANS  |  |  |
| 1. SAMPLES, COMPLIMENTARY, AND OTHER FREE COPIES  | 152  | 142  |
| 2. COPIES DISTRIBUTED TO NEWS AGENTS, BUT NOT SOLD  | -0-  | -0-  |
| E. TOTAL DISTRIBUTION (Sum of C and D)  | 22,044   | 20,374   |
| F. OFFICE USE, LEFT-OVER, UNACCOUNTED, SPOILED AFTER PRINTING   | 3,533  | 4,168  |
| G. TOTAL (Sum of E & F—should equal net press run shown in A)   | 25,577   | 24,542   |
| (Signature of editor, publisher, business manager, or owner)R. K. Webb   |  |  |
| I certify that the statements made by me above are correct and complete.  |  |  |

If you are planning to move, please let us know six weeks before changing your address. Attach address label and fill in your name and new address below. This will ensure prompt service on your subscription.

Attach Label Here
(address label found on AHR wrapper) Send label with your name and new address to American Historical Association, Membership Department, 400 A St., S.E., Washington, D. C. 20003. If a label is not available, be sure to attach your OLD address, including Zip Code number.

Name _____

New address _____

City _____

State _____ Zip _____